They diſpute alſo about the hour of their reſurrection. Some maintain that they did not riſe till after our Saviour, who is called the firſt fruits of thoſe that ſlept. 1 Cor. xv. 20. Origen, St. Jerom, Gregory the Great, Raban-Maur, Paſchaſius, Radbert, Bede, Drutmar, Liran, the common gloſs, and ſeveral others, are of this opinion. But St. Chryſoſtom, and the Greek authors who generally follow him, Hilary, and many others, believe, that they aroſe at the moment of our Saviour's death; and that Jeſus Chriſt raiſed them before he raiſed himſelf, to diſplay his triumph over death more remarkably. It muſt be allowed, that the text of the evangeliſt St. Matthew, is not deciſive for either opinion.

But theſe ſaints being thus raiſed, did they die again, and re-enter their graves, after the aſcenſion of Jeſus Chriſt, or did they aſcend with him into heaven? Thoſe who think Jeſus Chriſt led them with him into heaven, as it were in triumph, quote thoſe words of Hoſea, xiii. 14. I will ranſom them from the power of the grave, I will redeem them from death; O death, I will be thy plague; O grave, I will be thy deſtruction. And thoſe of the Pſalmiſt, lxviii. 18. Thou haſt aſcended on high, thou haſt led captivity captive. And St. Paul; When he aſcended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. Eph. iv. 8. Is it probable, that after having reſtored life to theſe ſaints and illuſtrious dead, God ſhould think fit to ſubject them again to death and the grave? Would not this be to plunge them again into pain and bitterneſs, after giving them a taſte of happineſs? Laſtly, would it not be agreeable to the juſtice, the goodneſs, and the majeſty of their divine deliverer, to compleat his work, and to lead them with him into heaven, after he had reſtored them to life upon earth?

We might produce a great number of the fathers, who have been of this opinion. Ignatius the Martyr, to the Magneſians. Origin, on Matt. xxvii. and on the Canticles. The author of the Orthodox Queſtions, Queſt. 84. Clemens Alexandrinus, Strom. lib. vi. Euſebius of Ceſaræa, in his Goſpel-Demonſtration, cap. xii. Hilary on Pſalm ii. Venerable Bede, Raban-Maurus, Drutmar, Paſchaſius, Radbertus, and a multitude of modern interpreters, maintain poſitively, that the holy patriarchs raiſed with Jeſus Chriſt, enjoy with him the happineſs of heaven, and were the partners of his triumphant aſcenſion.

But the contrary opinion is maintained with not leſs authority, nor fewer proofs. St. Paul ſays expreſsly, Heb. xi. 39, 40. that the holy patriarchs, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promiſe: God having provided ſome better thing for us, that they without us ſhould not be made perfect. Therefore he did not think them yet raiſed, nor in poſſeſſion of the glory of heaven. He ſays elſewhere, that Jeſus Chriſt is the firſt-fruits of thoſe that ſlept the ſleep of death, and were to ariſe one day, not to ſleep any more. Beſides, if any one had been to riſe with our Saviour, doubtleſs it would have been the holy king David, John the Baptiſt, the patriarchs and the prophets buried at Jeruſalem, and in Paleſtine. But St. Peter, ſpeaking to the Jews of Jeruſalem, ſays expreſsly, Acts ii. 29. That David's tomb was ſtill to be ſeen among them; that David had foretold the reſurrection of our Saviour, but ſays nothing at all of his own. What ſtrength has St. Peter's reaſoning, if David had been raiſed, and had aſcended into heaven with Jeſus Chriſt?

The fathers that have treated this ſubject with the greateſt care, have declared for this opinion. Tertullian, de Animâ, cap. 55. purpoſely confutes thoſe who thought, that the patriarchs and prophets aſcended into heaven after the reſurrection of our Saviour. St. Chryſoſtom ſays, Homil. 40. in 1 Cor. that they who aroſe while Jeſus Chriſt was on the croſs, died again. And writing on the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, Homil. 28. in Heb. xi. he owns with the apoſtle, that the juſt men of the Old Teſtament have not yet received their reward. Theodoret expreſſes himſelf in the ſame manner. Theophylact and Euthymius, explaining Matthew xxvii. acknowledge, that the holy patriarchs aroſe as proofs of the reſurrection of Chriſt; but that they afterwards died again, to riſe a ſecond time at the end of the world. St. Auſtin, in his Epiſtle to Evodius, expreſsly treats this queſtion, and explains himſelf clearly enough for the temporary reſurrection of theſe ſaints. Thomas Aquinas, iii part, art. 53. art. 3. having produced the reaſons on which each of theſe opinions is founded, declares himſelf for thoſe who hold, that they died again; and this opinion ſeems to us to be beſt ſupported, by Scripture and by the fathers. [If Lazarus died again, why not theſe?]

REU, רעו, his friend, his ſhepherd: or his misfortune; from רעה rehah, or roheh, ſociety; or from רוע ruah, evil, or bruiſing.

REU, or Ragau, or Retui, ſon of Peleg, born A. M. 1787. His father was then thirty years old. He begat Serug, being thirty-two years old, A. M. 1819, and died at the age of two hundred and thirty-nine years, A. M. 2026, ante A. D. 1976. It is not impoſſible, that the city of Ragæ, and the plain of Ragau, might take their names from Reu, Rehu, or Ragau; for theſe are the ſame in the Hebrew. The difference depends on the pronunciation of the letter ע ain or gnain. Gen. xi. 18. 1 Chron. i. 25.

REUBEN, ראובן, who ſees the ſon, or viſion of the ſon; from ראה rahah, to ſee, and בן ben, a ſon.

REUBEN, or Ruben, eldeſt ſon of Jacob and Leah; born A. M. 2246, ante A. D. 1758. Gen. xxix. 32. One day Reuben went into the field, being yet young, and found a fruit called in Hebrew, dudaim, (generally interpreted by mandrakes) which he brought to his mother Leah. Gen. xxx. 14. Rachel was deſirous of having them, and aſked them of Leah, who bargained with her for Jacob's company the night following. Long after this, Jacob being returned into the land of Canaan, Reuben defiled his father's concubine Bilhah; for which he loſt his birth-right, and all the privileges of primogeniture. Gen. xxxv. 22. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CLXXXVI, p. 181.

When Joſeph's brethren had taken a reſolution to deſtroy him, Reuben endeavoured by all means to deliver him. He propoſed to them, to let him down into an old water-pit, which had now no water, that afterwards he might take him up again, and reſtore him to his father Jacob. His brethren took the advice; but while Reuben was at ſome diſtance from them, they ſold Joſeph to a party of Iſhmaelites. Reuben going to the pit, and not finding him there, tore his cloaths, and ſaid to his brethren; "The child is not to be found, and whither ſhall I go?"

Jacob, when dying, warmly reproaches Reuben with his crime committed with Bilhah; ſaying, Reuben, thou art my firſt-born, my might,—but, unſtable as water, thou ſhalt not excel, becauſe thou wenteſt up to thy father's bed; then defiledſt thou it. Moſes, before his death, ſaid of Reuben, Deut. xxxiii. 6. let Reuben live, and not die, yet let his number be but ſmall, ſays the Vulgate: [our Engliſh reads, "let not his men be few."] The tribe of Reuben was never very numerous, nor very conſiderable in Iſrael. They had their inheritance beyond Jordan, between the brooks Arnon ſouth, and Jazer north, having the mountains of Gilead eaſt, and Jordan weſt. The time of Reuben's death is unknown.

We read in the apocryphal book, called, The Teſtament of the Twelve Patriarchs, a particular account of Reuben's crime. But it is well known that this book is the work of an impoſtor, who would aſſert, as genuine, the ſpurious book of Enoch, and other Jewiſh traditions.

REUEL, רעואל, ῥαγαὴλ, ſhepherd, or friend of God; from from רעה rahah, ſhepherd, friend: otherwiſe, bruiſing of God; from רוע ruah, and אל el, God. See RAGUEL.

REUEL, or Rahuel, ſon of Eſau and Baſhemath, the daughter of Iſhmael. Reuel was father of Nahath, of Zerah, of Shammah, and of Mizzah. Gen. xxxvi. 4, 17.

REVELATION, in Greek, Apocalypſis. See APOCALYPSE, for the book of the Revelations.

REVELATION, is when God, in an extraordinary and ſupernatural manner, diſcovers any thing to man; whether by dream, viſion, ecſtacy, or otherwiſe. St. Paul ſpeaking of his viſions and revelations, 2 Cor. xii. 1, 7. ſpeaks of them in the third perſon out of modeſty, and declares, that he could not tell whether he was in the body, or out of the body. Elſewhere he ſays, that he had received his goſpel by a particular revelation from God, Gal. i. 12; again, that he did not go to Jeruſalem after his converſion by the mere motion of his own mind, but in conſequence of a revelation. Gal ii. 2.

Revelation is uſed to expreſs the manifeſtation of Jeſus Chriſt to the Jews and Gentiles, Luke ii. 32. the manifeſtation of the glory with which God will glorify his elect, and faithful ſervants, at the laſt judgment, Rom. viii. 19. and the declaration of his juſt judgments, in his conduct both towards the elect, and towards the reprobate. Rom. ii. 5.

The Latin words revelatio and revelare, ſignify barely a diſcovering of what was before concealed.

REVENGE, as it includes a ſenſe of ſorrow and trouble for injuries ſuffered by us, cannot by any means belong to God. None of his creatures can diſturb his peace, or cauſe him any trouble, or reſentment. Ultio doloris confeſſio eſt, ſays Seneca, de ira. lib. iii. cap. 5. Man has recourſe to revenge only becauſe he is ſenſible of injuries. When therefore Scripture ſays, that God revenges himſelf, it ſpeaks after a popular manner: he vindicates the injuries done to his juſtice and his majeſty, and to the order eſtabliſhed by him in the world, yet without any emotion of pleaſure or diſpleaſure. He revenges the injuries done to his ſervants, becauſe he is juſt, and becauſe order and juſtice muſt be preſerved. Men revenge themſelves out of weakneſs; becauſe they are offended; becauſe they are too much influenced by ſelf-love. A great ſoul deſpiſes injuries; a gracious ſoul leaves the revenge of injuries to God.

In the Old Teſtament God tolerated revenge in certain caſes, to avoid greater evils: an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, &c. Exod. xxi. 24. the relations of a man who had been killed might take revenge on the murderer. Numb. xxxv. 16, 17, 11, &c. The relations thought it their duty to purſue to vengeance ſuch murderers, and the Hebrews called goel or revengers, thoſe to whom this ſort of vengeance appertained.

God has ſufficiently declared, that vengeance belongs only to him; Deut. xxxii. 35. He forbids malice and revenge in expreſs terms; he will not allow us to keep any reſentment in our hearts againſt our brethren; Levit. xix. 17, 18. And when God ſeems to have eſtabliſhed the lex talionis, he does not thereby allow of revenge, but ſets limits to it. Non fomes, ſed limes furoris eſt, ſays St. Auſtin, cont. Fauſt. lib. xix. cap. 25. He does not intend to provoke to anger, but to ſtop the progreſs and conſequences of it. Non ut id quod ſopitum erat, hinc accenderetur; ſed ne id quod ardebat, ultra extenderetur.

The day of revenge, or of vengeance, ſometimes expreſſes the day of judgment, in which God will take vengeance on all his enemies; and ſometimes the day of vengeance ſtands for the puniſhment God exerciſes on his enemies, when their iniquities have attained their full meaſure. See Exod. xxxii. 34. Iſai. xxxiv. 8. lxi. 2. lxiii. 4. Luke xxi. 22.

Vengeance is often expreſſed in the Hebrew by the word conſolation; and though St Jerom has generally put the word revenge, yet he has ſometimes uſed the words comfort and conſolation, in the ſenſe of revenge.

In Scripture ſometimes revenge is taken for the mere action of aſſault, or for injury committed againſt another; yet not without a colour and pretence of juſt revenge. By theſe expreſſions we muſt underſtand their hatred, their ill-will.

When it is ſaid, that God grants his revenge to any one; Pſalm xviii. 47. Deus qui dat vindictas mihi; this intimates, either that God gives up his enemies into his hands, to take vengeance of them; or, that they having afflicted his ſervants, he puniſhes them himſelf, by ſome terrible effects of his juſtice.

REVENGER, or Revenger of Blood. This name is given in Scripture to the man who had the right, according to the Jewiſh polity, of taking revenge on him who had killed one of his near relations: ultor ſanguinis. If a man had been guilty of manſlaughter, involuntarily and without deſign, he fled to a city of refuge. Vide REFUGE: and FRAGMENT, No. X, page 23.

REUMAH, ראומה, ῥημὰν, lofty, ſublime; from רום ramam: otherwiſe, rhinoceros; from ראם rehem.

REUMAH, or Roma, concubine to Nahor, the brother of Abraham: mother to Tebah, Gaham, Thahath, and Maachah. Gen. xxii. 24.

REZEPH, Reſeph, Reſiph, Reſapha, or Riſapha, a city of Syria, 2 Kings xix. 12. Iſaiah xxxvii. 12. noted in Ptolemy, in the tables of Peutinger, and in the eaſtern Notitia. Vide RESEPH.

REZIA, רציא. See RESA.

REZIA, or Reſia, daughter of Ulla, of Aſher. 1 Chron. vii. 39.

REZIN, רצין, ῥασσὼν, voluntary, or good-will; from רצה ratſa: otherwiſe, runner; from רץ rats.

REZIN, or Raſin, king of Syria. He agreed with Pekah, ſon of Remaliah, king of Iſrael, to invade Ahaz, king of Judah, and to make an irruption into his kingdom. 2 Kings xv. 37, 38. xvi. 5, 6. A. M. 3262, ante A. D. 742. See alſo 2 Chron. xxviii. 5, 6, 7. The firſt year of his reign they beſieged Jeruſalem: but not being able to take it, they waſted the country round about, and went away. The year following they returned into Judah, and the Lord delivered up to them the army and the country of Ahaz. After this, they ſeparated their armies; and that of Rezin plundered every where, and carried away captives to Damaſcus.

About the ſame time, Rezin took Elath, or Ailat, on the Red Sea; he drove out the Jews, and ſettled the Idumeans in their room, who, probably, had engaged him to undertake this war. The Hebrew and the Vulgate ſeem to intimate, that Rezin, king of Syria, made a conqueſt of Elath for the Syrians. But the tenor of the diſcourſe ſufficiently ſhews, that it ought to be read, for the Idumeans; and that in the Hebrew it ſhould be read Edom, inſtead of Aram. The difference between theſe two words in the original, is hardly to be perceived. 2 Kings xvi. 6. את אילת לארם, read לאדם, Leedom, inſtead of Learam. [Eng. tranſ. Syria.]

Ahaz finding himſelf not ſtrong enough to withſtand Rezin and Pekah, applied to Tiglath-pilneſer, king of Aſſyria, and with a very large ſum of money bought his aſſiſtance. Tiglath-pilneſer marched againſt Damaſcus, took the city, and ſlew Rezin: he alſo carried away his people to Kir; probably the river Cyrus in Iberia. 2 Kings xvi. 9.

REZON, רזון, ῥεζὼν, lean, or ſmall; from רזה razah, to grow lean: otherwiſe ſecret; from רז raz: otherwiſe, prince; from רזן razon.

REZON, or Razon, ſon of Eliadah: he revolted from his maſter Hadadezer, king of Zobah, while David made war againſt him, and heading a band of robbers, he made excurſions into the country about Damaſcus. 1 Kings xi. 23. He at laſt became maſter of this city, and was acknowledged king. It ſhould ſeem that he could not ſettle here, till toward the end of Solomon's reign; for David conquered Damaſcus, as well as the reſt of Syria; and Solomon maintained his command over all the provinces David had ſubjected. But if Rezon did not rule at Damaſcus till toward the end of Solomon's reign, he muſt have lived very long: for, from David's war with Hadadezer, about A. M. 2960, to the end of Solomon's reign, who died A. M. 3029, muſt be ſixty-nine years. Rezon muſt at leaſt be five-and twenty or thirty years of age at the time of the firſt wars; ſince he was then a general of Hadadezer's army, and preſently became head to a troop of freebooters: ſo that he muſt have been about ninety years of age when he began to govern at Damaſcus. If this ſeems hardly credible, it may be allowed, that Rezon might have reigned at Damaſcus under David and Solomon, as a tributary to theſe princes; and that he did not begin to revolt till towards the end of Solomon's reign.

RHEGIUM, ῥήγιον, rupture, or fracture; from the Greek ῥηγὴ.

RHEGIUM, a city of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples. St. Paul landed here when he went to Rome, A. D. 61. Acts xxviii. 13, 14. St. Luke being then of his company, and having ſaid nothing of thoſe miracles that are pretended to have been performed by St. Paul in this place; his ſilence ought at leaſt to render them very much ſuſpected; or rather, to put a total negative upon them.

RHINOCEROS, an animal thus called, becauſe he has an horn on his ſnout. The name rhinoceros occurs in the Vulgate, Numb. xxiii. 22. & xxiv. 8. Deut. xxxiii. 17. Job xxxix. 9, 10. The Hebrew word ראם reem is rendered in the Septuagint by monoceros, unicornis, or rhinoceros.

The Arabians and Perſians name that animal kerkhedan, which the Hebrews call rehem, and we rhinoceros. Vide UNICORN.

Father le Compte ſays, that the rhinoceros is of the length of an elephant; but its legs are ſhorter, and its hoofs are cloven. It is ſomething like a boar, but is much larger; its feet are thicker, and its whole body more unwieldy: its legs appear as if they had boots on; and its head ſeems to be covered behind with a kind of hood, whence the Portugueſe name it, the monk of the Indies.

Its head is thick; its mouth not wide; its muzzle long, and armed with a thick and long horn; which makes it terrible even to the very tygers, the buffaloes, and the elephants. Its tongue is covered with ſo hard a membrane, that it differs but little from a file: thus it fleas every thing it licks, and eats with great facility the rough branches of trees, though defended all round with ſharp thorns: it bends them eaſily upon its tongue, and breaks them in its mouth without any trouble. Vide FRAGMENT, No.

RHINOCOLURA, ῥινοκόλυρα, a city.

RHINOCOLURA, or Rhinocorura; but the firſt reading is the moſt correct. This word ſignifies the cutting of the noſtrils, becauſe the ancient inhabitants of this city were thus mutilated. Strab. lib. xvi. Ῥινοκόλυρα, ἀπὸ τῶν εἰτωκισμένων τὰς ῥῖνας ἄτω καλεμένη. Diodorus Siculus relates the matter thus, lib. i. cap. 60: Actiſarus, king of Ethiopia, being deſirous to clear his kingdom of robbers, yet unwilling to put them to death, he apprehended as many as he could, ſlit their noſes, and baniſhed them into a deſart and barren place, where they built a city, which, becauſe of their ſlit-noſes, was called Rhinocolura. Seneca, de Ira, lib. iii. cap. 20. ſays, it was a king of Perſia, probably Cambyſes, who made them undergo this ignominious puniſhment. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXXI. p. 30.

Near the city of Rhinocolura is a river which ſeveral have taken to be the river of Egypt. But we take the river of Egypt to be the Nile; and the ſtream that runs near Rhinoculara, we think to be the brook Beſor, or the river of the Wilderneſs, of Scripture. This city of Rhinocolura is aſcribed ſometimes to Syria, and ſometimes to Paleſtine, and ſometimes to Egypt, on which it afterwards depended. Its biſhop was a ſuffragan of Peluſium. It is unknown what the ancient name of Rhinocolura was, I mean the Hebrew name of this place, before the Grecians named it Rhinocolura, and before the ſtory of the ſlit-noſes was invented.

RHODA, ῥόδη, a roſe.

RHODA, Acts xii. 13, 14. a young maid of the houſehold of Mary, the mother of John-Mark, who coming to open the door to a perſon that knocked at it, was ſo tranſported with joy, at hearing Peter's voice, whom ſhe thought to be in priſon, and who had but juſt then been miraculouſly delivered from it by an angel, that, without ſtaying to open the door, ſhe ran back to acquaint the believers with it, who were then aſſembled in the houſe. They looked on her as viſionary or mad, but ſhe ſtill maintained ſhe heard Peter's voice. The apoſtle continuing to knock, ſhe returned, and opened the door to him. We know no other circumſtance of the life of Rhoda; for, as to her exile and martyrdom, which, it is pretended, ſhe ſuffered in the Iſle of Sardinia, we place them in the number of apocryphal ſtories. One Helcias, biſhop of Auſburg, is quoted for this; but I do not find Rhoda's name in any martyrology.

RHODES, ῥόδος, roſe; from ῥοδὴ.

RHODES, an iſland and famous city of the Levant: its ancient name was Aſteria, Ophiuſa, and Etheria. The name Rhodes is from the great quantity and beauty of the roſes that grew there. This city is chiefly famous for its brazen Coloſſus, which was one hundred and five feet high, and was made by Chares of Lyndus: it continued perfect only fifty-ſix years, being thrown down by an earthquake, under the reign of Ptolemy III. Euergetes, king of Egypt, who began to reign A. M. 3758, ante A. D. 244. When St. Paul went to Jeruſalem, A. D. 58, he went from Miletus to Coos, from Coos to the Iſle of Rhodes, and from thence to Patara in Lycia. Acts xxi. 1.

The Septuagint, Gen. x. 4. put the Rhodians among the children of Javan. They, probably, read Rhodanim, inſtead of Dodanim, in the Hebrew. Gen. x. 4. דדנים, Dodanim. רדנים Rhodanim. LXX. Ῥοδίοι. 1 Chron. i. 7. The Samaritan reads alſo Rhodanim in Geneſis; Euſebius, St. Jerom, and Iſidore, follow the Septuagint, and think the Iſle of Rhodes to have been peopled by the Rhodanim, the poſterity of Javan. Bochart does not reject the reading Rhodanim; but maintains, that the Rhodians are too modern to have been planted there by any immediate ſon of Javan: he thinks that, in Geneſis, Moſes rather intended to mark the Gauls, on the Mediterranean, toward the mouth of the Rhone, near Marſeilles, where we find a diſtrict called Rhodaniſia, and a city of the ſame name.

The Septuagint, tranſlate Ezekiel xxvii. 15. בני דדן Filii Dedan, υἱοὶ Ῥοδίων, the children of the Rhodians, inſtead of the children of Dedan, as the Hebrew. Probably, they read the children of Redan, or Rodan; but in Gen. x. 7. they read Dedan, as the Hebrew. In the Hebrew nothing is eaſier than to confound ד Daleth and ר Reſh. If the text of Geneſis did not determine us to Dedan, we might admit the Rhodians in this paſſage of Ezekiel; for, in the time of this prophet, it is very probable that this iſland was well-peopled.

RHODOCUS, Ῥόδοχος, a chariot of roſes; from ῥοδὴ, a roſe, and ὄχος, a chariot.

RHODOCUS, a traitor in the army of Judas Maccabæus, who went to the camp of Antiochus Eupator, Eupator, king of Syria, to betray the counſels of his party, 2 Mac. xiii. 21. He was afterwards diſcovered, convicted, and impriſoned, A. M. 3841, ante A. D. 163.

RIBAI, ריבי, that multiplies; from רבה rabah, or רבב rabab: otherwiſe, that diſputes, or reproves; from ריב rub.

RIBAI, father of Ittai, of Benjamin, one of the heroes of David's army, 2 Sam. xxiii. 29.

RIBLAH, רבלה, or Reblathah, quarrel, or greatneſs to him; from רבב rabab, greatneſs, or ריב rub, quarrel, and the prepoſition ל l, to, and the pronoun ה ah, him: otherwiſe, quarrel that increaſes, or that ſpreads; from ריב rub, quarrel, and לויה liviah, to increaſe. This is no Hebrew word.

RIBLAH, Rebla, Riblata, or Reblata, a city of Syria, in the country of Emath. Its ſituation is unknown. St. Jerom, in Iſai. xiii. & in Amos vi. 2. Item in locis, in Reblata; & in Ezek. xlvii. has taken it for Antiochia of Syria, or for the country of Emath, or Emmas, which was ſtill in his time, the firſt ſtage of thoſe who travelled from Syria into Meſopotamia. We know not the ancient name of the city of Antioch; but we know, the name it bore after the reign of the Seleucidæ, and what it ſtill bears, is a new name. St. Jerom had, probably, ſome particular knowledge of this matter, ſince he aſſures us ſo poſitively, and in ſo many places, that the ancient Riblah was Antioch.

However, this lies under great difficulties. Antioch was at a diſtance from Emeſa, or Emath; it was not on the road from Judea to Meſopotamia. When Moſes deſcribes the eaſtern limits of the Land of Promiſe, Numb. xxxiv. 10. he ſays, And ye ſhall point out your eaſt border from Hazarenan to Shepham. And the coaſt ſhall go down from Shepham to Riblah, on the eaſt-ſide of (the fountain) Ain; and the border ſhall deſcend, and ſhall reach unto the ſide of the ſea of Chinnereth, (or, of Tiberias) eaſtward. And the border ſhall go down to Jordan; and the goings out of it ſhall be at the Salt-ſea (or, the Dead-ſea). The name of Daphne is not in the Hebrew: but the Chaldee paraphraſts and St. Jerom explain the fountain of Riblah by that of Daphne, near to Antioch. Ezekiel puts the northern bounds of the Land of Promiſe from the Mediterranean Sea to Hazar-enan, or Atrium Enan. He ſays, that Emath is the city that limits the Holy Land toward the north; and that its ſouthern limits go through the middle of Auran, Damaſcus, and the mountains of Gilead. He makes no mention of Riblah; but he marks out Emath, in the territory of which Riblah was ſituate.

Riblah, as a reſidence, was one of the moſt agreeable of all Syria; whence it was a favourite abode of the kings of Babylon. Pharaoh Necho, king of Egypt, made a ſtop here, at his return from the expedition of Carchemiſh, 2 Kings xxiii. 33; and having ſent for Jehoahaz, king of Judah hither, he deprived him of the royal dignity, and put Jehoiakim in his place. Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, continued at Riblah, while his general Nebuzaradan beſieged Jeruſalem; and after the reduction of this place, king Zedekiah, and the reſt of the priſoners were brought to Nebuchadnezzar at Riblah, where Nebuchadnezzar cauſed Zedekiah's eyes to be put out, &c. 2 Kings xxv. 6, 20, 21. Jer. xxix. 5. & lii. 9.

RIGHT HAND The right-hand denotes power, ſtrength. Scripture generally imputes to God's right-hand, the effects of his omnipotence, Exod. xv. 6. See Pſal. xxi. 8. xliv. 4, & alibi paſſim.

To ſit down at the right-hand of God, is generally put for obtaining an equality of glory and power. The Son of God is often repreſented as ſitting at the right hand of his heavenly father, Pſal. cx. 1. And hereafter ſhall ye ſee the Son of Man ſitting on the right-hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven, Matt. xxvi. 64. Coloſ. iii. 1. Hebr. i. 3. x. 12, &c.

The right-hand commonly denotes the ſouth, as the left hand denotes the north. For the Hebrews ſpeak of the quarters of the world in reſpect of a perſon, having his face turned to the eaſt, his back to the weſt, his right hand to the ſouth, and his left-hand to the north. Thus Kedem, which ſignifies, before, ſtands alſo for the eaſt; and Achor, which ſignifies, behind, marks the weſt; Jamin, the right-hand, is the ſouth; and Shemol, the left-hand, is the north. For example; doth not David hide himſelf with us in ſtrong holds in the wood, in the hill of Hachilah, which is on the ſouth of Jeſhimen? Heb. on the right-hand of Jeſhimen. 1 Samuel xxiii. 19, 24.

The accuſer was commonly at the right-hand of the accuſed; Pſalm cix. 6. And in Zechariah, the devil was at the right-hand of the high-prieſt Jeſhua to accuſe him, Zech. iii. 1.

Often, in a quite contrary ſenſe, to be at any one's right-hand, ſignifies to defend, to protect, to ſupport him, Pſal. xvi. 8. I have ſet the Lord always before me: becauſe he is at my right-hand, I ſhall not be moved. And Pſal. cix. 31. For he ſhall ſtand at the right-hand of the poor, to ſave him from thoſe that condemn his ſoul. Pſalm cviii. 6.

To depart from the law of God, neither to the right-hand, nor to the left, is a frequent Scripture expreſſion, meaning that we muſt not quit it, neither by attempting to go beyond it, and doing more than it requires, nor by doing leſs: we muſt obſerve it cloſely, conſtantly, invariably, as a traveller, who does not quit his way, either to the right, or left, leſt he ſhould loſe it intirely.

Our Saviour, in the Goſpel, to ſhew with what privacy we ſhould do good works, ſays, Matt. vi. 3. That our left-hand ſhould not know what our right-hand does. Above all things we ſhould avoid vanity and oſtentation in doing good.

Dextralia, or Dextraliola, are bracelets which men, as well as women, uſed as ornaments. Of theſe bracelets Moſes ſpoke, Exodus xxxv. 22. Numbers xxxi. 50. when he enjoined the Iſraelites to have always the law of God in their minds; and that it ſhould be for a ſign unto thee upon thine hand, as a ſeal faſtened to their ring or bracelet. Compare this paſſage with Ecclus. xlix. 13. Quomodo amplificemus Zerobabel? Nam & ipſe quaſi ſignum in dextra manu.

To give the hand, dare dexteram, is a mark of ſociety and friendſhip. St. Paul ſays, that James, Cephas, and John, gave him the right-hand of fellowſhip, Gal. ii. 9. In the Books of the Maccabees this expreſſion occurs very often.

In taking an oath they lifted up their right-hand, Iſaiah lxii. 8. Gen. xiv. 22. Deut. xxxii. 40.

RIMMON, רימון, See Remmon. Exalted, pomegranate.

RIMMON, Remmon, or Remmona, a city of Zebulun, 1 Chron. vi. 77. Perhaps the Dimnah, or Dimona, or Damna, Joſh. xxi. 35.

II. RIMMON, a rock to which the children of Benjamin retreated. Judg. xx, 45. xxi. 13.

III. RIMMON, an idol of the people of Damaſcus. Naaman the Syrian, confeſſes to Eliſha, that he had often been in the temple of Rimmon with the king of Damaſcus his maſter, who leaned on his arm, while he paid his adorations to Rimmon, 2 Kings v. 18. It is thought this god was the ſun, and that the name of Rimmon, or high, was given to him, becauſe of his elevation. Grotius, in loc. takes it for Saturn, becauſe this planet is the moſt elevated. Selden de Diis Syris, Syntag. 2. cap. 10. will have it to be the God moſt-high, the god Elion of the Phœnicians. Serrarius believes it to be the goddeſs Venus. We know no other god, in all antiquity, but this, by the name Rimmon [q. Baal with the pomgranate?

RIMMON-PAREZ, or Remmon-phares, an encampment of Iſrael in the wilderneſs; from Rithmah they went to Rimmon-parez, and from hence to Libnah, Numb. xxxiii. 19.

RIMMON of Beroth; the father of Baanah and Rechab, the murderers of king Iſhboſheth. 2 Sam. iv. 5, 9.

RINGS. The antiquity of rings appears from Scripture and from profane authors. Judah left his ring with Tamar, Gen. xxxviii. 18. When Pharaoh committed the government of Egypt to Joſeph, he took his ring from his finger, and gave it to Joſeph, Gen xli. 42. After the victory of the Iſraelites over the Midianites, they offered to the Lord the rings, the bracelets, and the golden necklaces, taken from the enemy, Numb. xxxi. 50. The Iſraelitiſh women wore rings, not only on their fingers, but alſo in their noſtrils and their ears. St. James diſtinguiſhes a man of wealth and dignity by the ring of gold on his finger, James ii. 2. At the return of the prodigal ſon, his father orders him to be dreſſed in a new ſuit of cloaths, and to have a ring put on his finger, Luke xv. 22. When the Lord threatened king Jeconiah with the utmoſt effects of his anger, he tells him, that though he were the ſignet or ring upon his finger, yet he ſhould be torn off, Jer. xxii. 24.

The ring was uſed chiefly to ſeal with, and the Scripture generally puts it in the hands of princes and great perſons; as the king of Egypt, Joſeph, Ahaz, Jezabel, king Ahaſuerus, his favourite Haman, Mordecai, who ſucceeded Haman in his dignity, king Darius, 1 Kings xxi. 8. Eſther iii. 10, &c. Dan. vi. 17. The patents and orders of theſe princes were ſealed with their rings or ſignets, and this ſecured their authority.

The ring was one mark of ſovereign authority. So Pharaoh gave his ring to Joſeph, as a token of authority. When Alexander the Great gave his ring to Perdiccas, this was underſtood as nominating him his ſucceſſor, Quint. Curt. lib. x. cap. 5. When Antiochus Epiphanes was at the point of death, he committed to Philip, one of his friends, his diadem, his royal cloak, and his ring, that he might give them to his ſon and ſucceſſor young Antiochus, 1 Macc. vi. 15. Auguſtus being very ſick of a diſtemper which he thought mortal, he gave his ring to Agrippa, as to a friend of the greateſt integrity. Xiphilin. in Aug.

We read of certain magical rings, to which ſeveral extraordinary effects were aſcribed, either as preſervatives againſt certain evils, or for procuring certain advantages and good fortune.

The rings and pendants for the ears, ſo frequent in Paleſtine and Africa, were alſo probably ſuperſtitious rings, or taliſmans. When Jacob arrived at the land of Canaan, on his return from Meſopotamia, he ordered his people to deliver to him, all the ſtrange gods which were in their hand, and all their ear-rings which were in their ears. Gen. xxxv. 4. This ſeems to inſinuate, that thoſe ſtrange gods were ſuperſtitious or magical figures, figures, engraven upon their rings, their bracelets, and the pendants in their ears. Or, according to ſome commentators, that theſe rings and pendants were upon the hands, and in the ears of theſe falſe gods. St. Auſtin, qu. cxi. in Gen. inveighs very pathetically againſt theſe phylacteries of falſe gods, which his countrymen the Africans faſtened to their ears, and to which they imputed a thouſand ſupernatural and ſuperſtitious virtues; intending by this kind of ornament, not ſo much to dreſs themſelves out to pleaſe men, as to pleaſe and ſerve dæmons. Execranda ſuperſtitio ligaturarum, in quibus etiam in aures virorum in ſummis ex una parte auriculis ſuſpenſæ deputantur; non ad placendum hominibus, ſed ad ſerviendum dæmonibus, adhibetur, Aug. Ep. ad Poſſidium. 73. Vide FRAGMENT "Of SEALS," No. , p.

RINNAH, רנה, ῥενὰ, ſong; from רנן ranan.

RINNAH, or Rinna, ſon of Shimon, of Judah. 1 Chron. iv. 20.

RIPATH, ריפת, remedy, or medicine, or releaſe, or pardon; from רפא, or רפה raphah: otherwiſe, ſtable; from רפת raphath.

RIPHATH, or Riphat, ſecond ſon of Gomer, and grandſon of Japhet, Gen. x. 3. ריפת. He is called Diphath, 1 Chron. i. 6. דיפת. The reſemblance of the two Hebrew letters ר Reſh and ד Daleth is ſo cloſe, that they are very often confounded. The learned are not agreed what country was peopled by the deſcendants of Riphath. The Chaldee and Arabic take it for France; Euſebius for the country of the Sauromatæ; the Chronicon Alexandrinum for that of the Garamantæ; Joſephus for Paphlagonia. Mela, lib. i. aſſures us, that anciently the people of this province were called Riphatæi, or Riphaces: and in Bithynia, bordering on Paphlagonia, is the river Rhebeus, a people called Rhebantes, and a diſtrict of the ſame name. For theſe reaſons Bochart believed, that Riphath peopled Paphlagonia. Others think he peopled the Montes Riphei, and this opinion ſeems the moſt reaſonable; becauſe the other ſons of Gomer peopled the northern countries towards Scythia, and beyond the Euxine ſea.

RISSAH, רסה, watering, diſtillation, or dew; from רסס raſas.

RISSAH, or Reſſa, an encampment of Iſrael in the wilderneſs. They came from Libnah to Riſſah, and from Riſſah they went to Kehelathah. Numb. xxxiii. 22.

RITHMAH, רתמה, juniper; from רתם rothem: otherwiſe, ſound, noiſe, according to ſome.

RITHMAH, or Rethma, an encampment of Iſrael in the deſart. From Hazeroth they arrived at Rithmah, from whence they went to Rimmon-parez. This ſtation muſt be in the wilderneſs of Paran, not far from Kadeſh-barnea. Numb. xxxiii. 18.

RIVER. The Hebrews give the name of the river, without addition, ſometimes to the Nile, ſometimes to the Euphrates, and ſometimes to the Jordan. The tenor of the diſcourſe muſt determine the ſenſe of this uncertain and indeterminate way of ſpeaking. They give alſo the name of river to brooks and rivulets that are not very conſiderable.

The principal rivers or brooks of Paleſtine, were the following:

The Jordan.
The Arnon, } beyond Jordan.
The Jabok, }
The Karith, }
The Sorek.
The Beſor.
The Kiſhon.
The Belus.
The brook of Jezreel, which falls into the Jordan, near Scythopolis.
The Eleutherus.
The Sabbation.
The brook of reeds, or of Kanah.
The Barrady, otherwiſe Abanah and Pharphar, rivers of Damaſcus.

See their proper articles.

The name of river is ſometimes given to the ſea; Jonah ſays, ii. 5. he was ſurrounded by the rivers, i. e. by the waters of the ſea. And Habakkuk iii. 8, 9. ſpeaking of the paſſage through the Red Sea, ſays, the Lord divided the waters of the rivers. And the Pſalmiſt, lxxiv. 15. that the Lord dried up the rapid rivers, or the rivers of ſtrength. And Pſal. xxiv. 2. that the Lord had founded the earth upon the ſea, and eſtabliſhed it upon the rivers: which ſignifies the ſame in both places. Herodotus relates, that when king Xerxes caſt bonds into the Helleſpont, and ordered it to be whipped, he ſaid to it: It is with good reaſon that no body offers ſacrifices to thee, O thou deceitful and turbulent river. Herodot. lib. vii. ὡς ἔοντι καὶ δολερῷ τε καὶ ἀλμυρῷ ποταμῳ. Vide SEA.

RIZPAH, רצפה, bed, or extenſion, or coal, or fire-ſtone; from רצף ratzaph.

RIZPAH, or Reſpha, the daughter of Aiah, concubine to king Saul.

Saul having put to death a great number of the Gibeonites, on what occaſion is not known; God, to puniſh this maſſacre, ſent a famine into the land of Iſrael, which laſted three years: 2 Sam. xxi. 1, 3, &c. from A. M. 2983, to 2986, ante A. D. 1011. Saul had been now dead 34 years, having been killed in 2949. To expiate this David gave up to the Gibeonites Armoni and Mephiboſheth, two ſons of Saul by Rizpah, the daughter of Aiah; alſo five ſons of Michal, the daughter of Saul, by Adriel, the ſon of Barzillai; or rather by Phaltiel, vide 1 Sam. xxv. 44. Theſe they hanged on the mountain near Gibeah, at the beginning of barley-harveſt.

Rizpah, the daughter of Aiah, took a ſackcloth and ſpread it upon the rock; and continued there from the beginning of harveſt, till water from heaven fell on them; or till the Lord ſent his rain on the earth, and reſtored its former fertility. She hindered the birds from tearing the bodies by day, and the ravenous beaſts from devouring them by night. When this action of Rizpah was related to David, he was moved with compaſſion, and ſent to fetch the bones of Saul and Jonathan, which were at Jabeſh-gilead, brought them to Gibeah, and put them in the tomb of Kiſh, the father of Saul; together with the bones of the ſeven men who had been executed by the Gibeonites.

On this occaſion they acted contrary to the law of Deuteronomy xxi. 23. which orders that they ſhould take the bodies down from the croſs or gibbet, before the ſetting of the ſun. But theſe unhappy remains of the family of Saul were left there, probably from the beginning of the ſpring to autumn: whether becauſe the crime of their father deſerved this ſevere treatment, or becauſe the Gibeonites, being only proſelytes of habitation, were not obliged to the obſervation of this law of Moſes. Laſtly, whereas God had ordered David to give ſatisfaction to the Gibeonites, this prince thought fit to leave the management of it to themſelves.

[I think this ſtatement may be doubted; and that it might not be long before their bodies were wetted by rain; if the phraſe "waters from heaven" may not ſignify copious dews.]

Soon after the death of Saul, Abner, the general of his army, fell in love with Rizpah, and took her. Iſhboſheth, ſon of Saul, who reigned at Mahanaim beyond Jordan, and who was ſupported in his regal ſtate, only by the credit of Abner's valour, reſented this; and upbraided him with it. Abner was ſo nettled at this reproach, that he vowed the ruin of Iſhboſheth, and leagued with David, to bring over to his intereſt all the adherents of Iſhboſheth. 2 Sam. iii. 7, 11.

ROCK. Paleſtine being a mountainous country, had many rocks; which rocks were part of the ſtrength of the country, for in times of danger the people retired to them, where they found refuge againſt ſudden irruptions of their enemies. When the Benjamites were overcome and almoſt exterminated by the other tribes, they ſecured themſelves in the rock of Rimmon, Judg. xx. 47. Samſon kept garriſon in the rock Etam, Jud. xv. 8. When David was perſecuted by Saul, he often concealed himſelf in caverns, in rocks; Joſhua ſhut up five kings of the Canaanites in the cave of Makkedah, Joſh. x. 16, 17, &c. During the oppreſſion of Iſrael by the Midianites, they were forced to hide themſelves in cavities of the rocks, Judg. vi. 2. St. Jerom ſays, that the ſouthern parts of Judah are full of caves under ground, and of caverns in the mountains, to which people retired in time of danger. The Kenites dwelt in the hollow places of the rocks, Numb. xxiv. 21. Even at this day, the villages of this country are ſubterraneous, or in the rocks. Bellon. Obſervat. lib. ii. cap. 61. Joſephus in ſeveral places ſpeaks of hollow rocks, where thieves and robbers had their haunts; and travellers find a great number of them in Paleſtine, and in the adjoining provinces.

The name of rock is alſo given to God, metaphorically becauſe God is the ſtrength, the refuge, and the aſylum of Iſrael; as the rocks were, of thoſe who retired thither in caſe of attack or irruption of the enemy. This way of ſpeaking is very common in the Hebrew.

The Hebrews alſo give in general the name of rock to all places of retreat and ſecurity, to which they might retire.

Moſes ſays, that the Lord had ſettled his people in a high country, and made him to ſuck honey out of the rock, and oil out of the flinty rock, Deut. xxxii. 13. i. e. he brought them out of Egypt, which was a flat country, ſubject to inundations, and placed them in Paleſtine, which was a mountainous country, of great fertility, whoſe hills were loaded with vines and olive-trees; and the very rocks with ſwarms of bees, whoſe honey added not a little to the plenty of the land.

Rock is alſo uſed for a quarry; and figuratively, for the patriarch of a nation, or the firſt father, who is the original from whom the men of that nation have proceeded, as ſtones from a quarry. For example, Iſai. li. 1. Look unto the rock whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence ye are digged. Look unto Abraham your father, and unto Sarah that bare you. And Moſes, ſpeaking to the Jews, ſays, Deut. xxxii. 18. Of the rock that begat thee thou art unmindful; i. e. of the quarry from whence thou waſt taken.

Scripture mentions ſeveral rocks. As,

The rocks of Arnon: Numb. xxi. 14, 15. probably theſe were rocks on the banks of the river or brook brook Arnon, eſpecially at the place where Iſrael paſſed over it. They uſed to ſay, as it were, proverbially, that the Lord had broke down or made plain the rocks of Arnon, to make a paſſage for his people. Scopuli torrentium inclinati ſunt.

The rocks Bozez and Seneh, 1 Sam. xiv. 4. between Michmaſh and Gibeah.

Sela-hammah-lekoth, or the rock of diviſions. 1 Sam. xxiii. 2. This was in the deſart of Maon, and was ſo named, becauſe Saul was here obliged to quit his purſuit after David, to return to the aſſiſtance of his country, then invaded by the Philiſtines.

The rock of Horeb. There are three rocks denoted by this name in Scripture.

1. That from whence Moſes cauſed the waters to guſh out, to ſupply the people, when they were encamped at Rephidim. Exod. xvii. 6.
2. That on the top of mount Horeb, where God manifeſted a part of his glory to Moſes, and afterwards to Elijah. Exod. xxxiii. 21, 22, 23. xxxiv. 6, 7. 1 Kings xix. 10, 11, 12, &c.
3. Oreb, where the prince of the Midianites was put to death. Judg. vii. 25. Iſa. x. 26. But this is rather written Oreb, whereas the other two are written Horeb.

The rock Adullam, in the neighbourhood of the city Adullam, in Judah.

The rock Etam; Judg. xv. 8, 11, 13. probably near the city of this name, in the Greek. Joſh. xv. 60. 1 Chron. iv. 32. 2 Chron. xi. 6. They were in Judah, ſouth of Jeruſalem. See ETAM.

The rock Jekticl. This, according to ſeveral interpreters, is Petra, the capital of Arabia Petrea. See PETRA.

The rock or ſtone of Zoheleth, 1 Kings i. 9. See ZOHELETH.

The rock of the waters of Meribah, or ſtrife. Here the faith of Moſes failed; and Scripture reproaches him with having heſitated in his heart, and not honouring God as he ought to have done, before Iſrael. Numb. xx, 10, 11. It was named the rock of ſtrife; and the waters, the waters of ſtrife, becauſe of the murmurings of the children of Iſrael, and their ſedition againſt Moſes. For other rocks ſee their articles; or that of cities adjacent to them.

ROD, Virga. This word is uſed variouſly,

(1) For the branches of a tree: Gen. xxx. 37. And Jacob took him rods of green poplar, and of the haſel and cheſnut-tree.

2. For a ſtaff or wand: Exod. iv. 17, 20. And thou ſhalt take this rod in thine hand, wherewith thou ſhalt do ſigns. And Moſes took the rod of God in his hand.

3. For a ſhepherd's crook: Levit. xxvii. 32. And concerning the tythe of the herd, or of the flock, even of whatſoever paſſeth under the rod; the tenth ſhall be holy unto the Lord.

4. For a rod, properly ſo called, which God uſes to correct men. 2 Sam. vii. 14. If he commit iniquity, I will chaſten him with the rod of men, and with the ſtripes of the children of men. Job ix. 34. Let him take his rod away from me.

5. For a royal ſceptre: Eſth. iv. 11. Pſalm xlv. 6. Heb. i. 8. The empire of the Meſſiah is repreſented by a rod of iron, to ſhew its power and its might. Thou ſhalt break them with a rod of iron. Pſalm ii. 9 Rev. ii 27. xii. 5. xix. 15.

6. For a young ſprout, or branch, to point out the miraculous birth of the Meſſiah, from a virgin mother. Numb. xxiv. 17. There ſhall come a ſtar out of Jacob, and a ſceptre (or rod) ſhall riſe out of Iſrael. And Iſaiah ſays, xi. There ſhall come forth a rod out of the ſtem of Jeſſe, and a branch ſhall grow out of his roots. In Jeremiah, the watchful rod (Virgam vigilantem ego video. Jerem. i. 11. Vulgat.) according to the Hebrew, is a branch, or rod, of an almond-tree. This tree flouriſhes the earlieſt of any; and the Lord intended to denote by it Nebuchadnezzar, who was juſt then ready to pour his forces upon Judea. Vide ALMOND.

7. Rod is ſometimes put to ſignify a tribe, or people; Pſalm lxxiv. 2. Remember thy congregation which thou haſt purchaſed of old, the rod of thine inheritance which thou haſt redeemed. Jer. x. 16. Iſrael is the rod of his inheritance.

The rod of Moſes was the ſtaff or wand that Moſes generally uſed for driving his flock, and which God commanded him to take with him, for working of miracles before Pharaoh, and his people. Exod. iv. 2, 3, &c. This rod Moſes kept while he lived, and it became the inſtrument of performing many miracles. Scripture does not inform us what became of it after his death; probably it devolved to Joſhua, as Moſes's ſucceſſor. The Muſſulmen ſay, it was laid up in the ark of the covenant; but they confound this rod with that of Aaron.

The rabbins relate many wonderful things of this famous rod. As that it was firſt created by God for the uſe of Adam; that it came by ſucceſſion to Abraham, then to the patriarch Joſeph, who left it to the kings of Egypt, as a pledge of his acknowledgment. Jethro coming into Egypt, ſtole it from thence, and carried it into his own country. He there planted it, in a garden, where it took ſuch root, that no one could pluck it up. Jethro, who knew the virtue of it, promiſed his daughter in marriage to whoſoever could pull it up. Many young men offered themſelves, themſelves, and attempted the taſk; but no one could accompliſh it, till Moſes undertook it, and plucked up the rod without difficulty: Zipporah was the reward of his ſucceſs. The name of God was written on this rod, and this communicated all its virtue and merit. [I ſuſpect, the rabbins mean by this myſtical deſcent, the true religion; or perhaps the power of government; Vide the deſcription which Achilles gives of the deſcent of his ſceptre in Homer, Iliad, book i. If they mean the true religion, they do great honour to Jethro, which N.B.]

The rod of Aaron, is the ſtaff that high-prieſt commonly uſed. In the conſpiracy of Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, againſt Moſes and Aaron, God directed Moſes, to receive a rod from each of the heads of the twelve tribes, and to add that of Aaron to the number, that the Lord might ſhew by a miracle which tribe he choſe, for the exerciſe of the prieſt's office. They wrote on each of theſe rods the name of its tribe; and put them in the tabernacle of the congregation; the day following, they obſerved, that in the interval the rod of Aaron had put forth buds, had bloſſomed, and that the bloſſoms were thoſe of the almond-tree. Numb. xvii. 1, 2, 3.

There was no room for any ſuſpicion, that the rods had been changed. Every one had wrote his name on his own, and that of Aaron was very well known; and no human induſtry could produce ſo great a change. Thus the prieſthood was confirmed to Aaron and his poſterity. To preſerve the memory of this miraculous event, God commanded Moſes to lay up this rod in the tabernacle of the congregation. Some think it preſerved its leaves and fruits ſo long as it continued in this holy place. And indeed it was neceſſary, that it ſhould preſerve ſome marks of the miracle, for the conviction of poſterity.

It is inquired, whether this rod was put within the ark of the covenant, or only by the ſide of it. God commands Moſes only to put it in the tabernacle to be preſerved there. Numb. xvii. 20. But St. Paul ſays, Heb. ix. 4. it was within the ark, with the urn full of manna, and the tables of the law. Others affirm, it was not put within, but only at the ſide of, the ark. They alledge for this opinion, 1 Kings viii. 9. which intimates, that there was nothing in the ark but the tables of the law; others contend, that this paſſage of St. Paul ſhould be underſtood literally; that there could be no hindrance to the putting of Aaron's rod into the ark, ſince the ark was five feet long. This rod was ſanctified by the miracle; and when Scripture ſays, that there was nothing in the ark, but the tables of the law, it may be underſtood that nothing elſe was originally there, the ark being only intended for this uſe. But this need not hinder its containing, afterwards, ſome other things.

Artapanus in Euſebius, lib. ix. informs us, that the rod of Moſes, which Aaron uſed in performing ſo many prodigies, before Pharaoh, became in after ages the object of idolatrous worſhip to the Egyptians; who kept it in the temple of Iſis, and paid adoration to it.

Some learned men have thought, that the Thyrſus, carried by Bacchus, and the Bacchanals, (which was a rod incircled with vine-branches) was an imitation of Aaron's rod that flouriſhed. Gerard Voſſ. de Idolat. cap. 12. p. 86. Bochart. Phaleg. lib. i. p. 2. cap. 16. p. 431. Euripides relates, that one of the prieſteſſes of Bacchus ſtruck one of the rocks of Mount Cytheron with her Thyrſus, and that a ſpring of water immediately guſhed out; another imitation, ſay they, of the miracle at Horeb.

[ROLL, upon this ſubject, Vide the article BOOKS: and the FRAGMENTS, No. LXXIII. p. 127, "On Ancient Books." ROLL is taken for RECORD Ezra vi. 2. "Search was made in the houſe of the Rolls"—(ſo we have among ourſelves the Office of the Rolls): and a roll was found, containing Cyrus's decree in favour of the Jews. Ezekiel was commanded to eat "a roll," or ſmall volume of a book; to ſignify the information about to be communicated to his mind:—but it muſt be owned that foreknowledge in general, is like the roll of this prophet in the foregoing chapter, "written within and without: full of lamentation, and mourning, and woe"—which makes the author of the Revelations ſay, the book which he ate, was in his mouth ſweet as honey, i. e. in its firſt taſte, or knowledge communicated; but in his belly, bitter as gall, i. e. in digeſtion and rumination, foreknowledge is little but the anticipation of evils.

The prophet Zechariah chap. v. 1. ſaw a flying roll, in length twenty cubits, or thirty feet, in breadth ten cubits, or fifteen feet; it appears alſo alſo to have been written on both ſides: "for every one that ſtealeth ſhall be cut off according to the curſe,—or penalty of the law,—written on this ſide: and every one that ſweareth according to the curſe, or penalty, written on that ſide." That curſes, when written, &c. were metaphorically very efficacious, ſee the inſtances of the curſes waſhed into water and drank by the woman under the ordeal on account of jealouſy. Numb. v. 14, &c.]

ROMAMTI-EZER, רממתיעזר, elevation of help; from רמם ramam, to lift up, and עזר hezer, help.

ROMANS, כתים, κήτίοι, Heb. Chittim. That break or bruize; from כתת cathath, to bruiſe: otherwiſe, breaking of the ſea; from cathath, to break, and ים jam, the ſea: otherwiſe, of the fineſt gold, or diadem, or ſtaining; from כתם cethem. The Latin word Romani ſignifies ſtrong, powerful, the Greek ῥωμὴ, ſtrength.

ROMANS. St. Jerom ſeems to have thought, that Chittim was put for Italy, Numb. xxiv. 24. Balaam ſays, And ſhips ſhall come from the coaſts of Chittim, and ſhall afflict Aſhur, and Eber. St. Jerom tranſlates, ſhips ſhall come from Italy. But this ought rather to be referred to the Greeks, who under Alexander the Great, invaded the Hebrews, then under the Perſian government. They overthrew the Perſian empire, but were afterwards themſelves overthrown by the Romans. St. Jerom ſays, in Ezekiel xxvii. 6. that the workmen of Tyre uſed what came from the iſles of Italy, to make lodgings (or cabins) for the captains of the Tyrian ſhips. Prætoriola de inſulis Italiæ. (Vulgate) But what rarities could there be in theſe iſlands of Italy, that were not in Phœnicia and the neighbouring provinces? Vide IVORY and CHITTIM.

St. Jerom alſo tranſlates the Hebrew Tubal by Italy, Iſaiah lxvi. 19. which according to ſome ſignifies Spain, according to others the Tibarenians. See TUBAL.

He has alſo rendered the Hebrew Chittim by Romans, which elſewhere he has tranſlated by Italy, and which, as far as we can judge, ſignifies Macedonia. See Gen. x. 4. and the commentators on Dan. xi. 30. True it is, in this place the prophet ſpeaks of the Romans; but it is becauſe the Romans he alludes to ſailed from Delos in a Macedonian fleet, which they found in the harbour of Delos. Vide Liv. lib. xliv. xlv. Bochart, Phaleg. lib. iii. cap. 5. has diſplayed all his learning to ſupport the opinion of the Rabbins, who by Chittim underſtand Rome and Italy. He ſhews, that in this country are found cities named Cethim and Echetia, and a river called Cethus; but he alſo brings very good proofs that Chittim imports Macedonia.

The Jews generally call the Romans, Idumeans; and the Roman empire, the cruel empire of Edom. It is difficult to gueſs their reaſon, ſince Italy and Rome are far from Idumea, and have never had any communication with the Idumeans. When the more learned Rabbins are aſked their reaſons, they maintain with great aſſurance and obſtinacy, that the Idumeans embraced Chriſtianity, ſettled themſelves in Italy, and there extended their dominions.

Abravanel, who paſſes among them for a man of ſenſe, pretends that the Romans, and all Chriſtians, may be called Idumeans, in the ſame ſenſe as Iſaiah called the wicked Jews of his time by the name of Sodom and Gomorrah, becauſe they followed their manner, and eſpouſed their ſentiments. As Eſau brought many ſtrangers into the family of Jacob; ſo in the Roman empire, and in the Chriſtian church, are to be found a confuſion of all ſorts of nations that provoke God. Eſau hated Jacob, and endeavoured to rob him of his birth-right and other privileges; the Chriſtians do the ſame thing by the people of Iſrael, &c. Vide ESAU, EDOM.

Joſeph the ſon of Gorion relates this affair in a more hiſtorical, or rather more fabulous manner. Tſepho the grandſon of Eſau, being impriſoned by Joſeph in Egypt, eſcaped to Æneas, then king of Carthage, who made him commander of his forces. Æneas went from Africa into Italy, where he twice defeated Turnus king of Beneventum, and took Lavinia for his own wife.

The Africans under the command of Tſepho, often made incurſions into Italy, and committed great havoc. In one of theſe expeditions, loſing a young heifer, he found it again in a cave, where it was devoured by a monſtrous beaſt, half a goat and half a man, whom he killed. The inhabitants being delivered from this monſter, honoured Tſepho as an hero, and made offerings and libations to him. They gave him the name Janus, which was the name of the monſter ſlain by him, and alſo that of Saturn, which was the name of a ſtar that was then worſhipped. Such therefore was Tſepho, the grandſon of Eſau.

Latinus ſucceeded him, then Æneas the Trojan; and a long time after, Romulus, the founder of Rome. At this time David made war with the Idumeans; then Adarezer, and his grandſon Zir, officers of king David, revolted from him, and fled into Italy, where they built old Alba. Here they reigned, and their poſterity, down to the times of Joſeph ſon of Gorion, the contriver of all theſe whimſies. I paſs over a great many circumſtances, that I may not treſpaſs too much on the patience of the reader. And thus he ſhews, how the Idumeans by means of Tſepho, and the Jews by means of Adarezer, and Zir, ſettled in Italy. It is not amiſs now and then to ſhew ſomething of the genius of the Jews, by the traditions and hiſtories of their invention. See Baſnages's Hiſt. Jews, tom. 1. lib. ii. cap. 5.

But this tradition is not peculiar to the Jews; it has paſſed from them to the Arabians, and we read in almoſt all the Muſſulman authors, ſays D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 80. that Eſau had a ſon called Roum, from whom deſcended all the Grecian and Roman emperors. Laſtly, a tradition is common to almoſt all the nations of the Levant, who have any knowledge of the ſacred writings; that in the time of Abdon, judge of the Hebrews, a colony of Idumeans paſſed into Italy, and ſettled there. That Latinus reigned among them, and that Romulus the founder of Rome derived his original from them. There is great probability, that theſe fables were firſt invented with deſign to give a pretence to the Jews, among themſelves, to apply to the Chriſtians all thoſe curſes which they find in their holy writings againſt Edom, and the Idumeans. And when theſe ſtories once got footing, they became the common belief of the Jews, and Orientals.

The Roman empire is denoted in Daniel ii. 40. by the kingdom of iron, which bruiſes and breaks in pieces all other kingdoms: this is the explication of almoſt all interpreters. But we think it is rather the empire of the Lagidæ in Egypt, and of the Seleucidæ in Syria.

In the books of the Old Teſtament written in Hebrew, I find no mention of the names Rome, Romans, or Italy. But in the books of the Maccabees, and in the New Teſtament, they are often mentioned. So 1 Macc. viii. 1, 2. we read, that Judas had heard of the fame of the Romans, that they were mighty and valiant men, and ſuch as would lovingly accept all that joined themſelves unto them, and make a league of amity with all that came unto them. And that they were men of great valour. It was told him alſo of their wars and noble acts, which they had done among the Galatians, and how they had conquered them, and brought them under tribute. Judas had alſo been informed of their conqueſts in Spain, &c. that they had conquered Philip and Perſeus, kings of Macedonia, or of the Chittim, and Antiochus the great king of Syria; that they had deprived him of a great part of his provinces; that they had alſo reduced the Greeks, who had attempted to reſiſt them; and in a word, that they confirmed in their kingdoms all whom they deſired ſhould reign, or deprived thoſe of their crowns whom they diſliked. Nevertheleſs, that none of them wore the diadem or the purple, but that they had a ſenate, conſiſting of three hundred and twenty ſenators, who conſulted every day about the affairs of the republic; that they committed every year the ſovereign magiſtracy to one perſon, who had the whole command through all their territories, and thus all were obedient to one, without envy or jealouſy.

This is what fame reported in Judea concerning the Romans; and what inclined Judas Maccabeus to ſend two ambaſſadors to Rome, to make friendſhip and alliance with them, &c.

The firſt alliance of the Jews was made with the Romans, A. M. 3842, ante A. D. 162. Some years after this, A. M. 3860, ante A. D. 144, Jonathan, the brother of Judas Maccabeus, finding the opportunity favourable, ſent a deputation to Rome, to renew their alliance with the ſenate. Laſtly, Simon Maccabeus, brother to Judas and Jonathan, ſent to Rome upon the ſame errand, an ambaſſador called Numenius, with a preſent of a great golden buckler. 1 Macc. xiv. 24, ante A. D. 149.

Before this, A. M. 3841, ante A. D. 163, 2 Macc. xi. 34, 35, 36. Quintus Memmius and Titus Manilius, the Roman legates, being ſent into Syria to ſettle ſome affairs with king Antiochus Eupator, intereſted themſelves in promoting the tranquillity of the Jews.

The Romans took the city of Jeruſalem three times: firſt by the arms of Pompey, A. M. 3941, ante A. D. 63. Secondly by Soſius, A. M. 3967, ante A. D. 37. The third and laſt time was under Titus, A. M. 4070, A. D. 70; when both the city and the temple were deſtroyed.

They reduced Judea into a province; that is, they took from it the privilege of being a kingdom, and of having kingly government. Firſt, after the baniſhment of king Archelaus, ſon of Herod the Great, A. D. 16. and this ſtate continued to A. D. 37. It was again reduced to a province after the death of king Agrippa, A. D. 43; and it remained in this condition till it was intirely overthrown.

Roman governors. See GOVERNORS.

Epiſtle to the Romans. This was placed before the other epiſtles of St. Paul, not becauſe it was firſt in order of time, but, becauſe of the dignity of the imperial city, to which it is directed, or becauſe of the excellence of the matter which it contains; contains; or, becauſe of the magnificence and ſublimity of the myſteries, which are herein treated of, and explained. It paſſes for the moſt exalted, and the moſt difficult, of all St. Paul's epiſtles. St. Jerom, Epiſt. 151, cap. 8. was of opinion, that not one book only, but many volumes were neceſſary, for a full explanation of it. And ſome have thought, that St. Peter had chiefly this epiſtle in his eye, when he ſaid, 2 Pet. iii. 15, 16, As our beloved brother Paul alſo, according to the wiſdom given unto him, hath written unto you. As alſo in all his epiſtles, ſpeaking in them of theſe things; in which are ſome things hard to be underſtood, which they that are unlearned and unſtable, wreſt, as they do alſo the other Scriptures, unto their own deſtruction. But others with good reaſon think, St. Peter rather refers to St. Paul's epiſtle to the Hebrews,

St. Paul's deſign, in his Epiſtle to the Romans, is to heal certain domeſtic diſputes, which then prevailed among the believers at Rome, and divided the converted Jews and Gentiles. The Jews were opinionated concerning their birthright, and the promiſes made to their fathers; and becauſe of this, they pretended to a certain priority or preference over the converted Gentiles, whom they looked on as foreigners and interlopers, out of pure favour admitted into the ſociety of the faithful; and to the participation of the prerogatives of Chriſtianity. The Gentiles on the other hand, irritated by theſe reproaches of the Jews, maintained the merit of their ſages and philoſophers, the prudence of their legiſlators, the purity of their morality, their exactneſs in following the law of nature. They accuſed the Jews with infidelity toward God, and with violation of his laws. They aggravated their faults, and thoſe of their fathers, which had excluded the greater part of them from the inheritance of the ſaints, and from the faith, &c.

To end theſe contentions, St. Paul applies himſelf to reſtrain the preſumption of both parties. He ſhews that neither of them could pretend to any merits, or had any reaſon to glory, or boaſt, of their vocation; which proceeded from the mere grace and mercy of God. He proves, that even if the Jews had obſerved the law of Moſes, and the Gentiles the law of nature, this could not have merited for them the grace of their vocation, nor of juſtification. That nothing but faith in Jeſus Chriſt, enlivened by charity, and good works, can juſtify us: without which, all ſignifies nothing. He anſwers ſome objections in his way, by arguments taken from theſe principles. E. gr. The gratuitous vocation, and abſolute reprobation, of both Jews and Gentiles; the inſufficiency of the works of the law, without faith; the ſuperiority of the Jews above the Gentiles; the infallibility of the promiſes of God. This leads him into a diſcuſſion of predeſtination and reprobation, which makes a principal part of this epiſtle, and contains ſome of the greateſt difficulties in it.

In chapters xii. xiii. xiv. xv. he gives excellent rules of morality, concerning mutual harmony; mutual forbearance; and condeſcenſion for one another's infirmities, for fear of ſcandalizing or offending one another, by indiſcreet liberties. He deſcribes the falſe apoſtles, and exhorts the faithful to avoid them. Chap. xvi. contains civilities and recommendations, which he addreſſes to particular perſons.

This letter was writ A. D. 58, in the city of Corinth, from whence St. Paul was immediately to depart, to carry to Jeruſalem ſome collections made for the ſaints. Phœbe, a deaconeſs of the church of Cenchrea, near Corinth, was bearer of this letter. No doubt has ever been made of its being authentic, and though it was addreſſed to the Romans, yet it was written in Greek. Tertius was St. Paul's ſecretary on this occaſion.

The Marcionites made great defalcations in the epiſtles of St. Paul, eſpecially in this to the Romans, of which they ſuppreſſed the two laſt chapters. There is ſome likelihood that St. Paul's firſt deſign was to finiſh this epiſtle at the end of the fourteenth chapter; but afterwards, he added the two laſt chapters. At the end of the fifteenth chapter, we find this concluſion. Now the God of peace be with you all. Amen; which ſeems to ſhew that the letter was then finiſhed. We ſee the ſame concluſion no leſs than three times in the ſixteenth chapter, verſes 20, 24, 27. which leads us to imagine that it was compoſed at ſeveral intervals of time.

ROME, Ῥωμη, ſtrength, power; from ῥώμη.

ROME. The city of Rome was founded by Remus and Romulus, according to Uſher, A. M. 3966 of the Julian period, in A. M. 3256, ante A. D. 748, towards the cloſe of the reign of Hezekiah, king of Judah. This city is ſo well known, that it is needleſs to give any account of it here. The ſacred authors of the Old Teſtament have never mentioned it, that we know of; but it is well known in the Books of the Maccabees, and in the New Teſtament. St. Peter, 1 Epiſt. v. 13. has denoted it by the figurative name of Babylon. The church that is at Babylon elected together with you, ſaluteth you. St. John in his Revelation, xiv. 8. xvi. 19. xvii. 5, xviii. 2, 10, 21. points it out by the ſame name, and deſcribes it in ſuch a manner, as can only agree to Rome; 1. by its command over all nations, 2. by its cruelty towards the ſaints, and 3. by its ſituation upon ſeven hills. Rev. xvii. 9.

Some proteſtants have denied, that St. Peter ever was at Rome. They pretend that Babylon, mentioned by him, is the Babylon of Chaldea, or that of Egypt. They reject as ſo many fables, the voyages of St. Peter to Rome, his oppoſition to Simon Magus, and his martyrdom in this city. But we have all antiquity to atteſt this fact; we have monuments, tombs, ſtatues, paintings, public places, which witneſs the impriſonment and martyrdom of St. Peter at Rome.

St. Paul came twice to Rome. Firſt, A.D. 61, when he appealed to Cæſar. And, ſecondly, A.D. 65, a year before his martyrdom, which happened in A.D. 66.

St. Peter was alſo at Rome more than once. It has been thought he went thither A.D. 42; he might return thither again about A.D. 45, 58, and 65. He ſuffered martyrdom there A.D. 66.

St. John the Evangeliſt was baniſhed from Epheſus, and ſent to Rome, during the perſecution of Domitian, A.D. 95. He was there plunged into boiling oil, without receiving any hurt, but on the contrary, came out more hale and vigorous than before. Tertull. lib. de præſcription. cap. 36. Hieronym. in Jovin. lib. i. cap. 14.

[ROMAN is uſed, 1. as denoting a perſon native or inhabitant of the city of Rome: or, at leaſt, of the country around that metropolis: as in the Epiſtle to the Romans.

2. For the power of the Roman government: John xi. 48. "The Romans ſhall come and take away both our place and nation." Acts xxv. 16. "It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, till we have heard his defence." Vide chap. xxviii. 17, &c.

3. For a perſon who poſſeſſed the privileges attached to the citizenſhip of Rome: Acts xxii. 25. "Is it lawful for you to ſcourge as man who is a Roman, he being as yet uncondemned?" Now, St. Paul who pleads this privilege, was not actually a Roman, by having been born at Rome, or in Italy; but ſome think, that being born in a city which had been favoured with the communication of the privileges of the imperial city, St. Paul was competent to claim Roman exemptions by his birth-right: he being born in a municipium — a city thus favored, and of parents thus entitled. But others think, that St. Paul's father had been rewarded with this privilege, for ſome ſervices he had rendered to the Romans; whether of a military or other nature, which would render it ſo much the more diſgraceful, to degrade by the treatment of a ſlave, a man entitled to eſpecial marks of honour. And this might be the fact, as ſuch a reward was received by many Jews, about this time.

The Valerian law forbad that a Roman citizen ſhould be bound: the Sempronian law forbad that he ſhould be ſcourged, or beat with rods.—If any man falſely claimed the privileges of a Roman citizen, he was ſeverely puniſhed. By the emperor Claudius with death. Suet. Claud. cap. 25.]

II. ROOB, a village four miles from Scythopolis. Euſeb.

[ROOF. See the FRAGMENT "On Eaſtern Houſes." The roof of a houſe was ordered to be made flat, and to be well ſecured all around its edge, that no perſon might fall from it, "to bring blood upon that houſe," Deut. xxii. 8. The roof was the place for walking on, Joſh. ii. 6. Judg. xvi. 27. Idolaters burned incenſe on the roofs of their houſes, Jer. xix. 13. In fine weather the roof of the houſe was ſlept upon. It is uſed for the whole habitation—reſidence, Gen. xix. 8. "do no injury to theſe men, for therefore came they under the ſhadow of my roof"—under my protection; under my hoſpitality: under the ſecurity of my reſidence. Vide Matt. viii. 8.]

ROOT. Covetouſneſs is the root of all the evils, and of all ſins; 1 Tim. vi. 10. The root, i. e. the fountain, the cauſe, the occaſion. Leſt any root of bitterneſs trouble you, Heb. xii. 15. Let there not be ſeen among you peſtilential men, who draw down upon you the effects of the anger of God. Deut. xxxix. 18. Roots of gall and bitterneſs. Job xix. 28. Radicem verbi inveniamus contra eum. Let us ſeek againſt him occaſions of diſcourſe and reproof; or let us find opportunities to accuſe him. The Hebrew ſays, [and Eng. tranſ.] the root of the word is in me. I am always in a condition of defending myſelf ſufficiently. [Rather my integrity the principle of rectitude, grace, &c.] Deus evellet radicem tuam de terra viventium. God will pluck up thy root out of the land of the living. He will ſnatch you out of the world, and deſtroy you.

The root may alſo denote the race, the poſterity, Prov. xii. 3. The root of the juſt ſhall not be diſturbed, ſhall not fail. And Jeremiah, xii. 2. Whence do the wicked proſper in all things? Thou haſt planted them, and they have taken root. In Daniel, and in the Maccabees, Antiochus Epiphanes, the perſecutor of the Jews, is repreſented preſented as a young ſprout or ſucker, or root of iniquity, proceeding from the kings, the ſucceſſors of Alexander the Great. And Jeſus Chriſt, in his paſſion, is deſcribed as a root ill-nouriſhed, planted in a dry and barren ſoil, Iſaiah liii. 2. And Iſaiah xi. 1, 10. he is called a root of Jeſſe. Vide Rom. xv. 2.

In a contrary ſenſe St. Paul ſays, Rom. xi. 16, 17, 18. that the Jews are, as it were, the root that bears the tree, on which the Gentiles are ingrafted. And that the patriarchs are the pure and holy root, of which the Jews are, as it were, the branches. And, that Jeſus Chriſt is the root, on which Chriſtians depend, and from whence they derive their life, and ſubſiſtence. Col. ii. 7.

ROSH, ראש, the head, or the top, or the beginning; from ראש roſh, the head.

ROSH, or Ros, ſon of Benjamin, Gen. xlvi. 21.

We find in the Hebrew of Ezekiel xxxviii. 2, 3. a people called Roſh, which is not in the Vulgate. St. Jerom has taken it in an appellative ſenſe, as the head, or the prince. The Engliſh verſion takes it in the ſame ſenſe. Principem capitis Moſoch & Thubal. Whereas the Hebrew reads, נשיא ראש משך ותובל principem Roſh, Meſech & Thubal. In Gen. x. 2. תבל משך ותירס where mention is made of Tubal and Meſhech, we find alſo Tiras, which has ſome relation to Roſh. The Septuagint have followed the Hebrew in Ezekiel, and the beſt interpreters make no queſtion, but that Roſh is the name of a people. But they are not agreed about the country they inhabited, nor their preſent name.

The Orientals hold, ſays D'Herbelot, Bibl. Orient. p. 722, that Japheth had an eighth ſon called Rous, who is not mentioned in Moſes, and who peopled the Ruſſia we now call Moſcovy. They add, that Rous was of a very uneaſy and turbulent diſpoſition. He poſſeſſed the country beyond the Eſel, or the Volga, and often made inroads into his brother's territories, called Khozar, who, to live in peace with him, was forced to make a ceſſion of all the iſlands of this great river, which empties itſelf into the Caſpian Sea. In all theſe iſlands Rous cauſed to be ſown Turkey wheat, which the Turks to this day, in their own tongue, call wheat of Rous, or of Bulgaria. He cauſed very unjuſt laws to be proclaimed, to which he forced all his ſubjects to ſubmit. One amongſt others there was, which excluded the male heirs from ſucceeding to their father's eſtates, and made them devolve intirely to the females. He likewiſe introduced the cuſtom, of putting a ſword into the hands of the boys, as ſoon as they were able to manage it, with theſe words; This is your inheritance.

The ſame authors relate, that Japheth had a ſon called Seclab, who chiefly turned his mind to building of houſes and cities, becauſe of the number of his children. When theſe were increaſed to a great multitude, they deſired lands for cultivation, of their brethren the children of Rous, but they would not grant their requeſt. They afterwards addreſſed themſelves to the deſcendants of Khozar and Gomari, their brethren alſo, but not with better ſucceſs; ſo that they thought themſelves obliged to take poſſeſſion by force. But then all their neighbours entered into a confederacy againſt them, ſo that they were obliged to deſiſt from their enterprize, and to retire into a very cold country, beyond the ſeventh climate. Mirkond ſays, that the Seclabs inhabit the country of the Hyperboreans even to this day, where they are forced to live under ground during the winter ſeaſon. M. D'Herbelot thinks, that theſe are the Samoiedes, or the Laplanders.

The ſame Mirkond ſays, that Seclab had a ſon, whoſe mother died when ſhe brought him into the world; ſo that they were obliged to feed him with the milk of a hare. And this was the reaſon, that when the child grew up, he could leap and run with an incredible nimbleneſs and ſwiftneſs, which qualities continued hereditary in the whole family. The name of Seclab has ſo much relation to that of Sclaves, or Sclavonians, and to what M. D'Herbelot ſays elſewhere of the Sclaves, that I am much inclined to think it is of theſe that Mirkond ſpeaks. See Bibl. Orient. p. 470.

To return: we queſtion not but Roſh, or Ros, ſignifies Ruſſia, or the people that dwell on the Araxes, called Roſch by the inhabitants; which is the ancient habitation of the Scythians.

RUE, Rutha; a well-known garden herb. Jeſus Chriſt reproaches the Phariſees with their ſuperſtitious affectation of paying the tythe of rue, which was not in reality ſubject to the law of tythe. He did not blame, however, this ſcrupulous exactneſs, but their neglect of the more eſſential parts of the law. Luke xi. 42.

Joſephus, de Bello, lib. vii. relates, there was in the caſtle of Macheron, beyond Jordan, a plant of rue of ſuch extraordinary magnitude, that no fig-tree was equal to it, either in height or extent. It was ſaid to have been in that place ever ſince the time of Herod the Great; i. e. at leaſt ſeventy-three years before the end of the Jewiſh war, when it periſhed.

RUFUS, ſon of Simon the Cyrenean, which Simon aſſiſted assisted our Saviour in carrying his cross, Mark xv. 21. Rufus probably was famous among the first Christians, since St. Mark names him with distinction. Is this the Rufus whom St. Paul salutes with his mother? Rom. xvi. 13. St. Polycarp in his letter to the Philippians, written A. D. 107, proposes St. Ignatius, and St. Rufus, as models and patterns of patience. Usuard, Ado, and other ancient martyrologists, place St. Rufus the martyr, December 18, and insinuate, that he was the son of Simon the Cyrenean; since they say he was one of the ancient disciples, by whom the first churches were founded. The Chronicon of Lucius Dexter, a work of no credit, speaks of St. Rufus, bishop of Tortosa, in Catalonia, honoured November 11, and of St. Alexander, his brother, martyred at Carthagena March 11.

II. RUFUS, of whom St. Paul speaks, Rom. xvi. 13. is, perhaps, the same as Rufus, son of Simon, the Cyrenean. The ancient martyrologies of Bede, Usuard, Ado, and the Roman, put his feast November 21. The false Dorotheus makes him bishop of Thebes. We have seen, in the foregoing article, what the Spaniards say of him.

III. RUFUS (Annius) was made governor of Judea, about A. D. 13. He succeeded Ambivius, and was succeeded by Valerius Gratus, A. D. 15 or 16.

IV. RUFUS (Terentius) or, as the Jews call him, Turnus Rufus; was left by Titus at Jerusalem with the tenth legion, after the destruction of that city. Joseph. de Bello, lib. vii. cap. 17. A. D. 70. The Jews assure us, that Rufus caused the plough to go over it. He sent prisoner to Titus a chief Jew called Simon Gioras, who had hid himself in one of the common sewers of the temple. [N. B. It is thought Rufus passed the ploughshare rather over the area of the temple, than over the city, at least, generally speaking.]

[RULE, and RULERS. These words are applied to different stations of authority: God ruleth over all, and the proud Nebuchadnezzar is degraded from his throne till he acknowledges this truth, Dan. iv. 26. The Messiah rules among the sons of men, and even rules, in power, over his enemies, Psalm cx. 2. but in goodness over his people. Adam ruled over the creatures, in paradise, as being their superior: over his wife, after the fall, as being the guardian sex, and the regulator of propriety, and restraint. He reigned also over his posterity, as their king and judge, governing their social conduct as their common father.

Husbands rule their wives; and their own families. Pastors rule the churches, whom they teach. Princes and nobles rule to wherever their power extends; and sovereign rule is supreme for the benefit and advantage of those who are under its authority. In proportion as the sphere of regulating authority is enlarged, it requires greater energy of mind, greater capability of apprehension, greater fortitude, and greater rectitude, to discharge the duties attached to its importance, its dignity, and its influence.

Nothing can be greater unhappiness than to be subject to the rule and caprice of babes, Isaiah iii. 4. of servants, Lam. v. 8. of women, Isaiah iii. 12. of the wicked, Prov. xxviii. 15. xxix. 2.

The ruler of Joseph's house, Gen. xliii. 16. is his house steward: his domestic inspector and regulator: the ruler of the people is the civil the judiciary magistrate, Exod. xxii. 28. thou shalt not revile the ruler of thy people: especially in the discharge of his office. For the ruler of the synagogue vide ARCHISYNAGOGUS.]

RUMA, רומה, a city, Judg. ix. 41. exalted, sublime, or rejected; from רום rum, elevated, &c. and from רמה ramah, rejected. Heb. has דמה dumah, Josh. xv. 52. [Arumah. Eng. transl.]

RUMA. Josephus speaks of Ruma a village of Galilee. De Bello, lib. iii. cap. 9. In 2 Kings xxiii. 36. there is mention of Ruma; but Josephus there reads Abuma.

RUMP of the sacrifices. Moses ordained, that the rump and fat of the sheep, offered for peace-offerings, should be put on the fire of the altar. Vide Exod. xxix. 22. Levit. iii. 9. vii. 3. viii. 25. ix. 19. The rump was esteemed the most delicate part of the animal, as being the fattest. Travellers, both ancient and modern, speak of the rumps of some breeds of sheep in Syria and Arabia, as weighing some, twenty or thirty pounds. Herodotus says, lib. iii. cap. 113. that some may be seen three cubits long, or four foot and an half: they drag upon the ground; and for fear they should be hurt, or the skin torn, the shepherds put under the tails of these sheep certain little carriages, which these animals draw after them. The Pagans had also this regard for the rumps or tails, that they always made them a part of their sacrifices. Aristophan, in pace, & Acharnes, act. 3. scen. 3. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXLVIII. p. 110, and Plate of SYRIAN ANIMALS.

[To RUN is to pass very swiftly, to make rapid progress. It is used metaphorically not only for rapidity, but for perseverance; "So run that ye may obtain" the crown of rewards. "I therefore fore ſo run, as not incorrectly"—not paſſing over the boundaries, the limits, of the courſe. Heb. xii. 1. "let us run with patience"—perſeveringly—ſteadily—the race ſet before us." To run to exceſs of riot, 1 Peter iv. 4. is to purſue with avidity, and to follow with prolonged attention ſenſual gratifications and indulgencies, &c.

As men when running, eſpecially when running for a prize, labour with great diligence, earneſtneſs, intention, and intenſity, the apoſtle uſes this word to run to expreſs the courſe of his conduct among his Chriſtian converts; his continued behaviour towards them, Gal. ii. 2. "leſt by any means I had run, or ſhould hereafter run in vain"—leſt my miniſterial labours ſhould ſuffer under the imputation of improper motives, conduct, or management. The ſame apoſtle alſo tells his Galatian converts, chap. v. 7. "Ye did run well; who did hinder you?" Ye did run with ſpeed and vigour, who came acroſs your courſe, and ſo drove you back in your Chriſtian race, your profeſſion of godlineſs?]

RUTH, רות, drunk, ſatisfied.

RUTH, a Moabiteſs, who having married Chilion the ſon of Elimelech and Naomi, who had ſettled in Moab, dwelt ſome time with him, without having children. Naomi having loſt her huſband and two ſons, and deſiring to return to Bethlehem, her own country, her two daughters-in-law being now widows, offered to attend her. But ſhe aſſuring them of her inability to provide for them there, Orpah was perſuaded to continue in the land of Moab, but Ruth would accompany Naomi to Bethlehem. This happened at the cloſe of the time of the Judges, and under the government of Eli, if we may believe Joſephus, Antiq. lib. v. cap. 11. The rabbins pretend that Boaz, who married Ruth, was the ſame as Ibzan judge of Iſrael, who governed ſeven years, about A. M. 2823, between Jephthah and Elon. The greater chronology of the Hebrews places this hiſtory in the time of Ehud, and of the ſervitude of the Iſraelites under Eglon, king of Moab. Others place it under Barak and Deborah; others, under Gideon; others, under Abimelech. Uſher, whom we follow, places it under Shamgar, about one hundred and twenty years after Joſhua.

When Naomi came to Bethlehem, Ruth went to gleaning for their ſupport. By chance ſhe entered the field of a rich citizen of Bethlehem, named Boaz, who was related to Elimelech her father-in-law. When Boaz came to ſee his harveſters, he found Ruth, commended her, and favoured her. Ruth returned home at evening, told Naomi of the civilities of Boaz, who had alſo bid her glean only in his field. Naomi bleſſed God, who had put ſuch ſentiments of humanity in Boaz's heart, and acquainted Ruth that this was their kinſman.

At the end of harveſt Naomi ſaid to Ruth, go this night, and lie at the feet of Boaz, who winnows his corn; and do what he adviſes you. Ruth went accordingly, in the night, and lay down at his feet. Boaz awaking, was alarmed. But Ruth ſaid, I am Ruth thine handmaid; ſpread therefore thy ſkirt over thy thine handmaid, for thou art a near kinſman. Boaz acknowledged, that indeed he was a near kinſman, yet there was another nearer than himſelf; but if he ſhould refuſe to marry her, he himſelf would take her to wife. Riſing very early, before it was daylight, he filled Ruth's kerchief with corn, and ſent her to Naomi.

Boaz went to the gate of Bethlehem, and before the elders of the city, cited him to appear, who was the neareſt kinſman to Elimelech; that he might marry Ruth, the widow of Chilion, his ſon. This perſon declining it, Boaz then inſiſted, that he ſhould renounce his right to it: this he willingly did; and then Boaz declared, that he intended to marry her himſelf. Thus Ruth became the wife of Boaz, by whom ſhe had a ſon called Obed, who was father to Jeſſe, and grandfather to king David.

The book of Ruth, which contains this hiſtory, is placed, in our Bibles, between the book of Judges and the books of Samuel, as being the ſequel of the former, and an introduction to the latter. St. Jerom inform us, Prolog. Galat. that the Jews added it to the book of Judges, becauſe the tranſactions it relates happened in the time of the judges of Iſrael: Judg. i. 1. And ſeveral of the ancient fathers make but one book of the Judges and Ruth. But the modern Jews commonly place in their Bibles, after the Pentateuch, the five Megilloth; 1. The Song of Songs; 2. Ruth; 3. The Lamentations of Jeremiah; 4. Eccleſiaſtes; 5. Eſther. Sometimes Ruth is placed the firſt of the five, ſometimes the ſecond, and ſometimes the fifth.

The ſcope of the author of this book, is to relate the genealogy of David; and, in all probability, he was the ſame author as compoſed the firſt book of Samuel; in which, becauſe he could not conveniently place this genealogy of David, he choſe rather to give it by itſelf. The writer obſerves, at the beginning of his work, that the hiſtory he was going to relate, happened when the judges governed Iſrael; therefore they ceaſed to govern it when he wrote. Alſo, he ſpeaks of David at the end of his book; which ſhews, that, at ſooneſt, it muſt have been written in the time of David. Beſides, I have obſerved two ways of ſpeaking in it, or particular phraſes, which are only found in the books of Samuel and of the Kings: the firſt is, The Lord do ſo to me, and more alſo: Ruth i. 17. Compare 1 Sam. iii. 17. xiv. 44. xx. 23. 2 Sam. iii. 9. 35. xix. 13. 1 Kings ii. 23. xix. 2. xx. 10. 2 Kings vi. 31. the ſecond, I have diſcovered to your ear; for I have told you; Ruth iv. 4. Compare 1 Sam. xx. 2. 2 Sam. vii. 27.

The canonicalneſs of this book was never diſputed. Ruth the Moabiteſs is in the genealogy of our Saviour, Matt. i. 5.

RYDDA, a city which the Jews conquered from from the Arabians, under Alexander Jannæus. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiv. cap. 2.

SABACON, king of Egypt. Herodotus relates, lib. ii. that Sabacus, or Sabacon, king of Ethiopia, having made an incurſion into Egypt, Anyſis, who then reigned, being blind, eſcaped into the marſhes, and abandoned his kingdom to Sabacon, who reigned there fifty years. Vide FRAGMENT, No. , page . His maxim was, never to put any perſon to death, but to condemn all offenders to work upon the banks of the Nile. He withdrew into his kingdom of Ethiopia, having had a dream, which commanded him to cut aſunder in the middle all the prieſts of Egypt. He choſe rather to quit the country; and this the readier, becauſe the number of years was compleated, which the oracle had told him he ſhould reign in Egypt. After he was withdrawn, Anyſis came out of his retreat, and reſumed the government. He had Sethon for his ſucceſſor, who lived under Sennacherib.

It is probable, that Sabacon is the ſame whom the Scripture calls So. 2 Kings xvii. 4. After this uſurper had, in a ſhort time, rendered himſelf very powerful, Hoſhea, king of Iſrael, made an alliance with him; thinking, by his aſſiſtance, to ſhake off the yoke of the Aſſyrians; and he refuſed to pay the Aſſyrians their tribute. 2 Kings xviii. 9. To revenge this, Shalmaneſar marched againſt him, and beſieged Hoſhea in Samaria. He was forced to ſurrender, after a ſiege of three years, A. M. 3283, ante A. D. 721.

SABACHTHANI, שבקתני, thou haſt forſaken me; from שבק ſhabac, The Hebrew, Pſalm xxii. 1. reads עזבתני, aſabtani, thou haſt forſaken me; but it might be read זבחתני, Zabachthani, thou haſt ſacrificed me. [It appears to be a Chaldee-iſm.]

SABACHTHANI, or Sabactani. We read in the goſpel, that Jeſus Chriſt upon the croſs, cried out, Eli, Eli, lama ſabachthani? My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? Mat. xxvii. 46. Mark xv. 34. This is a corrupt reading of the word Azabthani, or Gnazabthani; thou haſt forſaken me, Pſal. xxii. 1.

SABAOTH, צבאות, armies, flocks, fights; from צבא tſaba. Jer. xi. 20.

SABAOTH, or rather Zabaoth, an Hebrew word, ſignifying hoſts or armies, יהוה צבאות Jehovah Sabaoth, The Lord of Hoſts. Whether we underſtand the hoſt of heaven, or the angels and miniſters of the Lord; or the ſtars and planets, which as an army ranged in battle array, perform the will of God; or, laſtly, the people of the Lord, both of the old and new covenant, which is truly a great army, of which God is the general and commander.

The Hebrew word Zaba is often uſed alſo, to ſignify the ſervice his ſacred miniſters perform to God in the temple; becauſe they are there, as it were, ſoldiers, or guards, attending the court of their prince, Numb. iv. 3, 23, 30, &c. This word is alſo uſed, to expreſs the duty of the women who watched at the door of the tabernacle, and kept guard there in the night-time, Exodus xxxviii. 8. במראות הצבאות.

SABEANS, שבא, captivity; from שבה ſhabah: otherwiſe, converſion, reſt, old-age; from שוב ſhub.

SABEANS, Iſai. xlv. 14. The Sabeans, men of ſtature. Probably the Sabeans of Arabia Fœlix, or of Aſia. They ſubmitted to Cyrus.

The Sabeans of Arabia, were deſcended from Saba: but as there are ſeveral of this name, who were all heads of peoples, or of tribes; we muſt diſtinguiſh ſeveral kinds of Sabeans.

(1) Thoſe Sabeans who ſeized the flocks of Job, i. 15, were, probably, a people of Arabia Deſerta, about Bozra; or, perhaps, a flying troop of Sabeans which infeſted that country. We ſhall hereafter mention Saba, or Sheba, the ſon of Jockſhan, who might be the father of theſe Sabeans.

(2) Sabeans, deſcendants from Sheba, ſon of Cuſh, Gen. x. 7. are probably of Arabia Fœlix: they are famous for ſpices; the poets give them the epithet of ſoft and effeminate, and ſay they were governed by women.

CLAUD. IN EUTROP. lib. ii.

Several are of opinion, that from hence came the queen of Sheba, 1 Kings x. 1, 2. and that of theſe Sabeans the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks, lxxii. 10. The kings of Arabia and Sheba ſhall give gifts. And Jeremiah vi. 20. What are the perfumes of Sheba to me? And Iſaiah lx. 6. All who come from Sheba ſhall offer gold and perfumes.

(3) Sabeans, ſons of Shebah, ſon of Rheumah, probably alſo dwelt in Arabia Fœlix. I imagine it is of theſe Ezekiel ſpeaks, xxvii. 22, who came with their merchandiſe to the fairs of Tyre: and Joel iii. 8. I will deliver up your children to the tribe of Judah, who ſhall ſell them to the Sabeans, a very diſtant nation.

(4) Sabeans, deſcendants from Joktan, may very well be thoſe mentioned by Ezekiel xxvii. 23. Saba, Aſſur, and Chelmad, thy dealers. We believe they inhabited beyond the Euphrates; from whence they are connected with Aſſur and Chelmad.

(5) Sabeans are alſo placed in Africa, in the iſle of Meroe. Joſephus, Antiq. lib. ii. cap. 5. brings the queen of Sheba from hence, and pretends that it had the name of Shebah, or Saba, before that of Meroe. [Mr. BRUCE is of this opinion.]

Sabeans, or Sabians, or Zabians, is a name of the ancient idolaters, or image-worſhippers, in Perſia. See ZABIANS.

SABBATH, שבת, σάββατον, ſabbatum, or ſabbathum, Vulgat. ceſſation from labour, reſt, repoſe.

SABBATH. This word, in Hebrew, ſignifies reſt. God having created the world in ſix days, reſted on the ſeventh; Geneſ. ii. 2, 3. i. e. he ceaſed from producing new beings, in this creation; and becauſe he had reſted upon it, he bleſſed this day, i. e. ſanctified it, and appointed it in a peculiar manner for his worſhip. The Hebrews, afterwards, in conſequence of this deſignation, and to preſerve the memory of the creation, ſanctified, by his order, the Sabbath-day, or the ſeventh day of the week, abſtaining from all work, labour, and ſervile employments, and applying themſelves to the ſervice of the Lord, to the ſtudy of his law, and to prayer.

Sabbath (or ſabathum) is ſometimes taken merely for reſt; ſometimes, for eternal reſt and felicity in heaven. See Hebrews iv. 4, &c.

The days of Sabbath (ſabbatha) are taken, ſometimes, for all the Jewiſh feſtivals. Keep my ſabbaths, Lev. xix. 3, 30. i. e. my feaſts; as, the Paſſover, Pentecoſt, Feaſt of Tabernacles, &c.

Sabbathum is alſo taken for the whole week. Jejuno bis in ſabbatho, Luke xviii. 12. Vulgate. I faſt twice a week. Una ſabbathi the firſt day of the week, John xx. 1, 19, Luke xxiv. 1. Acts xx. 7. 1 Cor. xvi. 2.

On occaſion of the ſabbath, it is diſputed, whether God created the whole world by one ſingle fiat, all at once, by a ſimultaneous action, and by a ſimple act; or at ſix diſtinct operations, and in ſix days ſucceſſively, ſo that the ſeventh day was really and truly a day of reſt to the Lord, at the end of his ſucceſſive creation. Philo, Alleg. lib. i. & de Mundi Opificio. Origen, lib. vi. cont. Celſ. St. Auſtin, lib. iv. de Geneſ. ad Litter, cap. 18, &c. lib. xi. de Civit. lib. vii. lib. xii. Conf. cap. 29. Procopius, Cajet. Canus, and ſome moderns, maintain, that God not only created all matter in the ſame inſtant, but, that at the ſame time he diſpoſed it in order, and gave every thing its proper form, without waiting for a courſe of ſix days. That the account Moſes gives, and the diſtribution of the works of the Creator into ſix days, is not a ſucceſſion of time, but only a ſucceſſion of order and reaſon, propoſed by way of accommodation to the comprehenſion of the people, and to impart a diſtinct notion of the material creation, by diſtributing it into parts, and into a certain diſpoſition or order.

But the greater part of the fathers and commentators maintain a ſucceſſive creation, agreeably to the account of Moſes. And indeed, there is no neceſſity of departing from the literal ſenſe of Scripture in this place. The reiterated acts, and the different operations mentioned by Moſes, ought indeed to be explained conſiſtently with the infinite power, and perfect ſimplicity of the acts of the Creator, and ſo as to exclude the notion of any weakneſs, wearineſs, or imperfection in him. But all this may be done, without denying a ſucceſſive creation. God, by his infinite power, drew forth, out of nothing, all the matter of the univerſe; by his wiſdom, he gave every part all the motions neceſſary to arrange the Chaos, whoſe parts being diſentangled from one another, and re-united with others more appropriate, might compoſe what we call the world, in its preſent condition. This motion, conducted by the Spirit and wiſdom of God, might continue ſix days; after which, God reſted; i. e. he ceaſed from producing any new being; but he continued ſtill to act by his Providence, and his concurrence, and to preſerve his work, in the ſtate of beauty and perfection to which he had brought it.

As to thoſe particular beings, that could not be produced by a continuation of the general laws of motion communicated by God to matter, as men, plants, and animals, it muſt neceſſarily be acknowledged, that God formed them ſucceſſively, as Moſes acquaints us, by applying, forming, animating matter, agreeably to the deſigns of of his wiſdom; by inſpiring into man a reaſonable ſoul; by giving to animals their ſeveral inſtincts, for their preſervation and re-production; by communicating to plants thoſe qualities that diſtinguiſh them from each other, and their ſeeds and grains proper for their renovation.

Another great queſtion, about the Sabbath, is, Whether, from the beginning of the world, God gave the law of the Sabbath? and, whether this day was always obſerved, at leaſt among the more pious of the firſt men, as the patriarchs, before the promulgation of the law? Whether this be the ſenſe of thoſe words, Gen. ii. 2. And God bleſſed the ſeventh day, and ſanctified it. Some fathers, Clem. Alex. lib. v. Strom. Euſeb. Præpar. lib. xiii. cap. 12. and ſome Jewiſh doctors, de Creat. Prob. 8. have aſſerted the affirmative; and Menaſſeh Ben-Iſrael, apud Selden de Jure Nat. & Gent. lib. iii. cap. 13, &c. aſſures us, that, according to the tradition of the ancients, Abraham and his poſterity having preſerved the memory of the creation, obſerved the Sabbath alſo, in conſequence of the natural law to that purpoſe. Some alſo believe, that the religion of the ſeventh day is preſerved among the Pagans, and that the obſervation of this day is as old as the world itſelf. Vide FRAGMENT, No. XX. page 42.

Philo ſays, de Mundi Opificio, that the Sabbath is not a feſtival peculiar to any one people or country, but is common to the whole world; and that it may be named the general and public feſtival, and that of the nativity of the world. Joſephus, contr. Appion, lib. ii. advances, that there is no city, Greek or Barbarian, nor any nation, where the religion of the Sabbath was not known. Ariſtobulus, in Euſebius, lib. xiii. cap. 12. Præp. quotes Homer and Heſiod, who ſpeak of the ſeventh day as of a day ſacred and venerable. Clemens Alexandrinus, Strom. lib. v. ſpeaks of the Sabbath in the ſame terms as Ariſtobulus, and he adds ſome paſſages from the ancients, which celebrate the ſeventh day.

Some believe, that Job obſerved the ſabbath-day; becauſe at the end of ſeven days he offered a ſacrifice to the Lord on account of his children, Abenezra apud Boulduc. in Job i. 2, 5. Some Rabbins inform us, that Joſeph alſo obſerved the ſabbath in Egypt, Bechai ad Bereſith. fol. 37.

But the contrary opinion is not without its proofs. The greater part of the fathers and commentators hold, that the benediction and ſanctification of the ſabbath, mentioned by Moſes in the beginning of Geneſis, ſignifies only that appointment then made of the ſeventh day, to be afterwards ſolemnized and ſanctified by the Jews. It does not appear from any paſſage of Scripture, that the ancient patriarchs obſerved the ſabbath; or that God deſigned to oblige them thereto, before the law. Philo ſays, Vit. Moſ. lib. i. that the Hebrews having forgotten the day of the creation of the world, were again reminded of it, when God having cauſed it to rain manna all the other days of the week, withheld it on the Sabbath-day. The ſeventh day, which was honoured by ſome Pagans, and of which they have ſpoken, as of an holy day, was either dedicated to Apollo; or, it was an imitation of the Jewiſh Sabbath, which ſome Pagans held in honour heretofore, either out of ſuperſtition or devotion.

Ezekiel xx. 12, 20. ſays expreſsly, that the Sabbath, and the other feaſts of the Jews, are ſigns given by God to his people, to diſtinguiſh them from other nations. I gave them my Sabbaths, to be a ſign between me and them, that they might know that I am the Lord that ſanctify them. And again, Hallow my Sabbaths, and they ſhall be a ſign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the Lord your God. And Moſes, Deut. v. 15. The Lord hath brought thee out of Egypt, therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath-day, Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXXIX. page 51. Juſtin Martyr, Dial. cum Tryph. Tertullian, lib. iv. cont. Jud. cap. 4. Euſebius, Hiſt. Eccl. lib. i. cap. 4. Præp. lib. vii. cap. 3. Dem. lib. i. cap. 6. in Pſalm. xci. 1. St. Bernard, in Cantic. ſerm. 50. advance, as a matter not to be doubted, that neither the patriarchs before the deluge, nor thoſe after, obſerved the *Sabbath. God gave the precept of the Sabbath to the Hebrews, at Marah, one month after their coming out of Egypt, Abib 15, which anſwers to our March, A. M. 2513, ante A. D. 1491. Manna began to fall, according to ſeveral of the fathers, on the Sunday, ſix days before the Sabbath. Origen. homil. 7. in Exod. Synod. Cæſar. apud. Bed. Ambroſiaſter in 1 Cor. x. 5. Athanaſ. ſerm. 25. de temp. apud Aug. According to others, it fell on the very eve of the Sabbath. However this be, it was probably on occaſion of the manna, that God commanded the Hebrews to obſerve the ſeventh day; and not to go out to gather any on that day, for none would fall. The ſame command of celebrating the Sabbath occurs ſeveral times in the law. Exod. xx. 8, 9, 10, 11. Levit. xxiii. 3. Deut. v. 12.

In Exod. xxxi. 13. xxxv. 2. it is ſaid, that God eſtabliſhed his Sabbath among the children of Iſrael, as a ſign to make them remember, that he is the Lord who ſanctifies them. Adding, that whoſoever ſhall prophane the Sabbath ſhall be puniſhed with death; and we ſee the execution of this law on the man, who having gathered wood on the Sabbath day, was ſtoned by the people. Numb. xv. 32, 35. On other holy days it was allowed to light a fire, and to dreſs victuals; but this was expreſsly forbid on the Sabbath day. Exod. xxxv. 2, 3. The rabbins confine this prohibition to ſervile works only; as to bake bread, to dreſs meat, to forge metals, &c. They ſuppoſe that for ſuch ſort of works it is forbid to light a fire, but not for one to warm himſelf. On the Sabbath days the miniſters of the temple entered on their week; and thoſe who had attended the foregoing week went out. They placed on the golden table new loaves of ſhew-bread, and took away the old ones. Levit. xxiv. 8. Alſo, on this day were offered particular ſacrifices, of two lambs for a burnt-offering, with the wine and the meal. The Sabbath was celebrated, as the other feſtivals, from evening to evening.

Let us inquire what has been the practice of the Jews, in conſequence of this inſtitution.

The firſt obligation of the Sabbath expreſſed in the law, is, to ſanctify it. Numb. xxviii. 9, 10. Exod. xx. 8. Remember to ſanctify the Sabbath day. It is ſanctified by doing good works in it; by prayer, by praiſes and thankſgivings, by public and private worſhip of God, by the ſtudy of his law, by juſtice, innocence, and tranquillity of mind.

The ſecond obligation is that of reſt. Thou ſhalt do no work on the Sabbath. Meaning any ſervile or laborious work, that might fix the mind, and interrupt that attention which was due to God, and which is neceſſary when we pay acceptable worſhip to him. The Jews have varied about the manner, in which they ought to obſerve the reſt of the Sabbath. In the time of the Maccabees, they durſt not ſo much as defend themſelves from an enemy on this day, even in the moſt preſſing neceſſity. 1 Mac. ii. 32, 33, &c. Since that time they have not ſcrupled to take arms, and ſtand on their neceſſary defence. But it may be ſeen by Joſephus, that they would not attack their enemies, nor hinder them from advancing their works; nor would they march with their armies, even in time of war, or in the enemies country, on the Sabbath day. Antiq. lib. xii. cap. 3. xiii. cap. 1, 16.

In the time of our Saviour, they would water their cattle, or take out of a ditch a beaſt that had happened to fall in, on the Sabbath day: but by a falſe delicacy they could not bear with our Saviour's healing the ſick on that day. Matt. xii. 11, 12. Since that time they have determined, that a man might give food to a beaſt, that ſhould happen to fall into a pit, but muſt not take him out on that day. The Jews complained of our Saviour's diſciples, who paſſing through the corn-fields on the Sabbath day, gathered ſome ears of corn, and rubbed them between their hands, in order to eat the grains. This action of his apoſtles, our Saviour excuſed from the neceſſity of the thing, and becauſe they had need of nouriſhment; adding, that the prieſts themſelves in the temple do work, which every where elſe would be eſteemed violation of the Sabbath; that the ſon of man was Lord of the Sabbath; and, that the Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath.

The rabbins reckon thirty-nine primary prohibitions, which ought to be obſerved on the Sabbath, and ſeveral other ſecondary ones dependant on them. Their number is ſo great, that it is almoſt impoſſible to keep them all; and the rabbins affirm, that if the people of Iſrael could keep but two Sabbaths as they ought to be kept, they ſhould ſoon ſee themſelves delivered from the evils under which they groan. Vide Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. 11. Their ſcrupuloſity even forbids to peel, or to roaſt, an apple, to kill a flea, a fly, or any other inſect, if it is ſo big, that the ſex may be diſtinguiſhed; to ſing, or to play on an inſtrument, ſo loud as to awaken a child. Yet notwithſtanding all this, the Samaritans pretend, that the Jews are not religious enough in their obſervation of the Sabbath. As for them, they will not light a fire on this day, they abſtain from the uſe of marriage, they do not ſtir from their places, ſave only to go to the houſe of the Lord. They employ themſelves wholly on that day in reading the law, in prayers, and thankſgivings. (Letter of the Samaritans to Mr. Huntington.)

Of all the feſtivals God has enjoined, there are none of which the Jews are ſo jealous, or of which they ſpeak ſo magnificently, as of the Sabbath. They call it their Spouſe, becauſe God has given it to them alone, excluſive of all other nations. Leo of Modena, who alone is equivalent to all the modern Jews, ſays, the rabbins have reduced all that is forbid on the Sabbath day, to theſe thirty-nine heads, each of which

which have their circumſtances, and dependences: —— to till the ground; to ſow; to reap; to make hay; to bind ſheaves of corn; to threſh; to winnow; to grind; to ſift meal; to knead dough; to bake; to ſhear; to whiten, comb, or card wool; to ſpin; to twine, or twiſt; to warp; to dye; to tye; to untye; to ſew; to tear, or pull in pieces; to build; to pull down; to knock with a hammer; to hunt, or fiſh; to kill a beaſt; to flay it; to dreſs it; to ſcrape the ſkin; to tan it; to cut leather; to write; to ſcratch out; to rule paper for writing; to light a fire, to extinguiſh a fire; to carry any thing from place to place; to expoſe any ing to ſale.

Other things are forbidden, as conſequences from theſe. E. gr. to file, is comprehended under grinding; to curdle milk, under boiling, and ſo of others. They muſt neither light, nor put out, a fire or a lamp; and, commonly, they keep Chriſtian ſervants in their houſes, to do ſuch offices for them on the Sabbath day. They not only forbear from carrying burdens, but on this day they will not dreſs themſelves; and carry their exactneſs ſo far, as to inſpect the ornaments and cloaths of their women, children, and ſervants. They ſpeak of no buſineſs, or ſecular affairs; they neither give nor receive; neither ſell, nor buy, or make any bargain. They handle no tool, nor any thing heavy; they touch no money, neither go on horſe-back, nor in a boat. They neither bathe, nor uſe any chirurgical operations, but in caſes of great neceſſity. They may walk as much as they pleaſe within the city, or ſuburbs, where they inhabit; but they muſt not go out of the city or ſuburbs, above the diſtance of two thouſand cubits.

They undertake no work on the Friday, but ſuch as may eaſily be finiſhed before the evening. About an hour before ſun-ſet, they put into a warm place what they have prepared to eat the day following; and about half an hour before ſun-ſet all work is quitted, and the Sabbath is ſuppoſed to be begun. Then the women light a lamp in their chambers; which lamp commonly has ſix wicks, or, at leaſt, four, and it burns during great part of the night. They alſo ſet out a table covered with a fair table-cloth, whereon they put bread, which they cover with another long, narrow cloth. Some, to begin the Sabbath well, put on clean linen, and waſh their hands and face. They all go to the ſynagogue, where they rehearſe certain prayers, from their books; after which they return to their houſes, and ſalute one another by wiſhing a good Sabbath.

Being come home, the fathers bleſs their children, and the maſters their diſciples; then ſitting down to table, the maſter of the family pronounces certain bleſſings on the bread and wine, and makes mention of the inſtitution of the Sabbath. He drinks a little of the wine he hath bleſſed, and gives it round to all at table. He does the ſame by the bread; and then they entertain themſelves. On the Sabbath day morning they riſe later than on other days. At the ſynagogue, they rehearſe ſeveral pſalms and prayers, in commendation of the Sabbath, intermingled with ſinging, and the ordinary prayers. Then they bring out the Pentateuch, and ſeven perſons read the ſection that ſtands next in order. Then they read out of the prophets a ſection, which has ſome relation to what was read out of the law. Laſtly, he who holds the book in his hands, lifts it up on high; and gives his bleſſing to all preſent. They pray afterwards for thoſe princes under whoſe juriſdiction and protection they live; and they make a ſermon, or exhortation, in the morning or afternoon, according to the cuſtom of the place.

When night comes, and they can diſcern in the heaven three ſtars of moderate magnitude, then the Sabbath is ended, and they may return to their ordinary employments. Thoſe who go to the ſynagogue, add to the common evening prayers, certain leſſons and benedictions, in relation to the Sabbath; and as they think, that the puniſhment of the ſouls in purgatory is ſuſpended on this day, they prolong its continuance as much as they can. When each is returned home, they light a taper or a lamp, which has, at leaſt, two wicks, the maſter of the houſe takes in a cup wine and ſweet-ſcented ſpices, and after pronouncing ſome benedictions, he bleſſes the wine and the ſpices; then he flavours the ſpices, and throws the wine upon the ground, in token of chearfulneſs, and pronounces ſome bleſſings. Thus the ceremony of the Sabbath is ended. Thoſe who meet compliment one another, by wiſhing each other a happy week.

Some ancient fathers quote the law which enjoins the reſt of the Sabbath, with this exception; you ſhall do nothing on this day, except what is for the health of the ſoul, or the ſupport of life; or except in ſuch things wherein life is in danger. Omne opus ſervile non facietis in eo, præterquam quod ad animam pertinet, as Tertullian reads it; adv. Judæo, cap. 4. or, as he ſays, cont. Marcion. lib. iv. cap. 12. niſi quod fiat omnis animæ. Or laſtly, as St. Jerom reads it, in Iſ.

xxviii. lege præceptum eſt, ne in Sabbatho opus ſervile faciamus—ut illa tantum faciamus, quæ ad animæ ſalutem pertinent. A very ancient gloſs this, and authoriſed by the practice of the primitive Jews, who uſed to allow the taking of a beaſt out of a ditch, that ſhould happen to fall in on the Sabbath, and was in danger of loſing its life.

Such prophane authors as have ventured to ſpeak of the origin of the Sabbath, have only ſhewed their ignorance of Jewiſh affairs. Tacitus, Hiſt. lib. v. thought they obſerved the Sabbath in honour of Saturn, to whom Saturday was conſecrated in the pagan religion. But Plutarch aſſerts, Sym. lib. iv. it was kept in honour of Bacchus, who is called Sabbos; and becauſe in the feſtivals of this falſe deity they uſed to cry Saboi. Appion the grammarian maintained, that the Jews celebrated the Sabbath in memory of their being cured of a ſhameful diſeaſe, which in the Egyptian language was called Sabboſis. Pagan authors ſpeak pretty frequently of the faſt of the Sabbath; as if the Jews had ordinarily faſted on this day. Recutitaque Sabbatha palles, ſays Perſius, Sat. 5. And Petronius, Et non jejuna Sabbatha lege premet. They were not aware, that faſting was utterly forbid the Jews on the Sabbath; but they either very groſsly miſtook the Sabbath for the whole week, in which ſome of the Jews faſted two days; or they took it in too general a ſenſe, for all ſorts of feaſts; and becauſe they uſed to faſt on the day of ſolemn expiation, they very improperly concluded that they faſted on all Sabbath days.

A Sabbath Day's Journey. We have explained from Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 16. that John Hircanus, in an expedition he made beyond Euphrates, with the king of Syria, was the occaſion that the whole army halted on a Sabbath day; which proves that long journeys were forbidden the Jews on that day. We ſee the ſame thing 2 Macc. viii. 25, 27. where Judas could not purſue his victory over Nicanor, becauſe of the interpoſition of the Sabbath. Pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day, ſays our Saviour, Matt. xxiv. 20. And Ovid ſays, fear not the rain, and let not the Jewiſh Sabbath hinder you.

Nec pluvias vites, nec te peregrina morentur Sabbatha.
OVID. DE REMED. AMOR.

However, it is evident the Jews were allowed to walk a certain ſpace on the Sabbath day, ſince we know they went, at leaſt, to the temple or tabernacle, from the remote parts of the city or camp. And St. Luke informs us, Acts i. 12. that the Mount of Olives was diſtant from Jeruſalem about a Sabbath day's journey. The rabbins generally fix this diſtance at two thouſand cubits. Joſephus ſays, Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 6. that the Mount of Olives was five ſtadia from Jeruſalem, which make ſix hundred and twenty-five paces. Thus the journey that was allowable on a Sabbath day, was about ſix or ſeven hundred paces, or ſomething more: for the ſame Joſephus, de Bello, lib. vi. cap. 3. puts the Mount of Olives at ſix ſtadia from Jeruſalem. Origen, quoted by Oecumenius on the Acts, ſays, that the journey of a Sabbath day is one mile, or two thouſand cubits. The Jews alſo uſed to make a mile conſiſt of two thouſand cubits: Reland. Palæſt. lib. ii. cap. 1. p. 397. ſo that their cubit muſt be two feet and a half, ſince their mile contains a thouſand paces, or five thouſand feet, taking their paces at five feet each. Maimonides, in Hilcoth. Sab. cap. 27. §. 4. will have it, that he who does not know exactly the diſtance of a place, may walk on the Sabbath day two thouſand moderate paces, which makes a thouſand geometrical paces of five foot each. Epiphanius ſays, hæreſ. 66. that the Jews believe they are forbid from walking on the Sabbath day above ſix ſtadia, or ſeven hundred and fifty paces. The Syriac tranſlator of the Acts of the Apoſtles, puts about ſeven ſtadia for a Sabbath day's journey; which is according to what ſome rabbins ſay, that a mile is ſeven ſtadia and an half. See Selden de Jur. Nat. & Gent. lib. iii. cap. 9.

The ſecond Sabbath after the firſt. Luke vi. 1. This expreſſion has much divided commentators. Some (Iſidor. Peluſ. lib. iii. Ep. 110. Euthym.) have taken it for the ſecond, others (Epiphan. hæreſ. 51. n. 31. Oſiand. not. ad Harmon. Evang. Vat. Priſc. Druſ. Bez.) for the laſt day of unleavened bread; and ſome, as Maldon. Mercat. for the day of Pentecoſt. The paſſover was the firſt Sabbath, according to them, and Pentecoſt the ſecond. Others have thought, that the firſt grand Sabbath was the firſt Sabbath of the civil year, in the month Tizri; and that the ſecond grand Sabbath was the firſt of the holy year, or of the month Niſan. But Joſeph Scaliger, de emend. Temp. lib. vi. who is followed in this by a great number of able writers (Lightfoot in Luc. Caſaubon. Exercit. 13. in Baron. alii paſſim.) thinks that to have been the firſt Sabbath, which followed the ſecond day of unleavened bread.

The Jews thus reckoned their Sabbaths from the paſſover to Pentecoſt; the firſt was called the ſecond after the firſt; i. e. the firſt (Sabbath) after the ſecond day of unleavened bread. The ſecond was called the ſecond Sabbath day after the the ſecond day of unleavened bread. The third was called the third Sabbath day after the ſecond day of unleavened bread. And ſo of the reſt, as far as ſecundo-ſeptimum, i. e. the ſeventh Sabbath day after the ſecond day of unleavened bread. This ſeventh Sabbath immediately preceded Pentecoſt, which was celebrated the fiftieth day after the ſecond day of unleavened bread. [Our Rubic has ſomething like this, "the firſt, &c. Sunday after Eaſter—Trinity," &c.]

The preparation for the Sabbath, is the Friday before; for, as it was forbid to make a fire, to bake bread, or to dreſs victuals, on the Sabbath day, they provided on the Friday, every thing needful for their ſuſtenance on the Sabbath.

The Sabbath transferred to Sunday. The obligation of devoting a portion of our time to God to be employed in his worſhip and ſervice, is founded on natural right and reaſon. The law had fixed this to the ſeventh day, i. e. the Sabbath, for the nation of the Jews. The apoſtles of Jeſus Chriſt, to honour the day of his reſurrection, alſo determined it to every ſeventh day, and fixed it on the Sunday, i. e. the firſt day of the week among the Hebrews; and the day dedicated to the ſun among the pagans. This day, among Chriſtians, is known by the name of the Lord's-Day.

[The change of the day of public devotion from the Sabbath day of the Jews (Saturday) to the Lord's day of the Chriſtians (Sunday) is rather to be gathered from the practice of apoſtolic times, than is clearly enjoined in the New Teſtament. It appears, that believers came together on this day to break bread, that collections for the poor were made on this day, and put into the general treaſury of the church (as I underſtand 1 Cor. xvi. 2.); that on this day exhortations, and diſcourſes, were made to the people; and, in ſhort, we have the various parts of public worſhip noted, as being performed on this day. It will follow, that we may ſafely imitate thoſe examples which the apoſtles and primitive Chriſtians have left us: and whatever obligations the Jews might lie under to the obſervance of the Saturday Sabbath, they do not bind Chriſtians; becauſe, thoſe obligations were national, not general; and were commemorative in ſome degree of Iſraelitiſh events, in which others have no intereſt: whereas the reſurrection Sabbath commemorates an event in which all Chriſtians throughout the world are intereſted, and for which no equal mode of commemoration can be deviſed. We have then good example and ſtrong propriety in behalf of our obſervation of the Lord's day, and the ſame principles influenced the Chriſtians of early ages, as we learn from what follows.]

It is mentioned Rev. i. 10. I was in the ſpirit on the Lord's day. From the very beginning the day of the reſurrection of our Saviour, i. e. the day after the Sabbath, was honoured by Chriſtians very particularly. To preſerve the remembrance of this day, ſo glorious to Jeſus Chriſt, and ſo beneficial to his church, the apoſtles thought fit to transfer to the Lord's day, that reſt which had been obſerved by the Jews on their Sabbath. Barnabas in his Epiſtle ſays, p. 56. that we joyfully celebrate the eighth day, in memory of the reſurrection of our Saviour, becauſe it was on this day he roſe again, and aſcended into heaven. Ignatius the martyr, in his letter to the Magneſians, would have us honour this day of the Lord, this day of the reſurrection, as the firſt and moſt excellent of days. Juſtin Martyr, Apolog. 2. ad finem, ſays, that the Chriſtians aſſemble together on this day, becauſe it was the day of the creation of the world, and of the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt. The ſame thing may be ſeen in Irenæus, apud Author. Reſp. ad Orthodox, Tertullian, Apologet. & de Anima, Origen, Homil. 6. in Exod. and in the conſtitutions aſcribed to the apoſtles.

[Beſide this, it is thought the Jews at the giving of the law miſſed the true Sabbath day, and that the true day, from the creation, is now recovered by the reſurrection of Chriſt: ſo that we now keep the correct creation Sabbath as well as the reſurrection Sabbath: but the arguments in ſupport of this opinion are too long for this place; and the reaſons already given are ſufficient: and leſs liable to controverſy.]

Sabbatical year was to be celebrated among the Jews from ſeven years to ſeven years, when the land was to reſt, and be left without culture. Exod. xxiii. 10. Levit. xxv. 2, 3, &c. They were to ſet ſlaves at liberty, and each was to re-enter into his inheritance that had been alienated.

God appointed the obſervation of the Sabbatical year, to preſerve the remembrance of the creation of the world; to enforce the acknowledgment of his ſovereign authority over all things, particularly over the land of Canaan, which he had given to the Hebrews, by delivering up the fruits of their fields to the poor and the ſtranger. It was a kind of tribute which they paid to the Lord for it. Beſides, he intended to inculcate humanity to his people, by commanding that they ſhould reſign to the ſlaves, to the poor, to ſtrangers, and to brutes, the produce of their fields, of their vineyards, and of their gardens. Levit. xxv. 2, 3, 4, &c.

It has been much diſputed, at what ſeaſon of the year the Sabbatical year began. Some have been of opinion, that it began on the firſt month of the ſacred year, i. e. Niſan, or in the ſpring. Others think it began at the firſt month of the civil year, or Tizri (September.) Moſes does not explain himſelf on this matter very clearly. He ſays only, that the land ſhall not be cultivated, and that there ſhall be no harveſt that year. In Paleſtine, the time of ſowing wheat and barley was in autumn; barley-harveſt began at the paſſover, and wheat-harveſt at Pentecoſt. Therefore, to enter into the ſpirit of the law for obſerving the reſt of the Sabbatical year, that the land may not remain two years without cultivation, we muſt neceſſarily begin it at autumn, after the crops were gathered in: they did not till the land in autumn, and they had no harveſt after the winter; but the autumn following they began again to cultivate the land, that they might reap their harveſts in the ſpring and ſummer following.

In the Sabbatical year all debts were remitted, and ſlaves were ſet at liberty. Deut xv. 12. Exod. xxi. 2. But were debts abſolutely forgiven, or was the payment of them only ſuſpended? Several think, that this remiſſion was abſolute, and that all debts were totally extinguiſhed in the Sabbatical year. Hebr. Druſius. Eſtius, alii. The caution of rich men, noticed by Moſes, Deut. xv. 9. who would not lend to their brethren at the approach of the Sabbatical year, ſeems to prove, that after this year nothing was to be hoped for from their debtors. For if the payment of debts was only ſuſpended till this year was over and paſt, it would not have been a ſufficient motive to hinder them from lending. As there was no lending for intereſt in the caſe, which was forbid to the Hebrews toward their brethren, as it could be only a ſimple loan, the creditor might require it again either before, or after, the Sabbatical year, on the ſuppoſition of thoſe who think that the remiſſion was not abſolute. Cajet. Burg. Piſcat. in Deut. xv. Baſnage Antiquities of the Jews, tom. i. p. 29.

Others, as the rabbins, and Grotius, diſtinguiſh between debts mortgaged on ſecurity, (the contracts of which included a clauſe of perpetual debts) and ſimple contracts: theſe laſt were for ever acquitted on the Sabbatical year, but not the others. Menochius alſo thinks, that the remiſſion of debts was general and abſolute, but not of loans or depoſits. This regarded only the natural Hebrews, or proſelytes to Judaiſm, but not ſtrangers.

It is alſo inquired, whether debts were remitted, and ſlaves ſet at liberty, at the beginning, or at the end, of the Sabbatical year. The Hebrew ſays literally, Deut. xv. 1. מקץ שבע שנים LXX. Δι ἑπτὰ ἐτων, At the end of every ſeven years thou ſhalt make a releaſe. This has given occaſion to ſome to think, that debts were not remitted, nor ſlaves ſet at liberty, till the end of the Sabbatical year. But moſt are of the contrary opinion, that it was at the beginning of the Sabbatical year. The original text explains it very naturally of the end of the week of the year; after which came the Sabbatical year, with which it concludes.

SABEC. In Geneſis xxii. 13. האיל נאחז בסבך LXX. κατεχόμενος ἐν Φυτῷ σαβὲχ, inſtead of what we read in the Vulgate, and in the Engliſh verſion, "Abraham ſaw a ram intangled by its horns in a thicket," the Septuagint and Theodotion read, he ſaw a ram caught by its horns in the buſh Sabec. Philo, Eucherius, Diodorus, as well as the Septuagint and Theodotion, have taken the Hebrew word Sabec for a particular ſpecies of ſhrub. Euſebius of Emeſa thinks, that Sabec ſignifies a goat, becauſe of its upright horns. But the beſt interpreters tranſlate this word by, branches of thorns and briars entangled in one another.

SABINUS, Auguſtus's procurator in Syria. After the death of Herod the Great, and the departure of Archelaus from Rome, he attempted to ſeize the fortreſs of Jeruſalem, and the treaſure that Herod had left: but he found a vigorous reſiſtance from the people. After a great ſtruggle with the Jews, wherein they ſuffered much, he cauſed fire to be put to the doors of the ſacred treaſure, and took away four hundred talents, for his own ſhare; permitting his officers and ſoldiers to diſtribute the reſt among themſelves. This ſo provoked the people, that they beſieged Sabinus in the royal palace, and preſſed him ſo hard, that if he had not ſpeedily ſent for ſuccour from Varus, governor of Syria, neither he, nor his ſoldiers, would have eſcaped out of their hands. Varus, with his troops, came to Jeruſalem; but Sabinus knowing himſelf guilty, durſt not appear in his preſence, but retired toward the ſea-ſide, to avoid puniſhment. This happened A. M. 4001, ante A. D. 3. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xvii. cap. 12.

SABTAH, or Sabatha, third ſon of Cuſh. Gen. x. 7.

x. 7. He peopled part of Arabia Fœlix, where is found a city called Sabta, and a people called Sabtheans.

SABTECHA, סבתכא, that ſurrounds, or cauſes wounding; from סבב ſabab, to ſurround: otherwiſe, from סבה ſubah, to cauſe, and נכה nacah, or כאה caah, to ſtrike, to wound: or, according to the Syriac and Hebrew, wounding of old-age, or old-age beaten.

SABTECHA, or Sabathaca, fifth ſon of Cuſh. He alſo peopled, as is thought, part of Arabia, or ſome country toward Aſſyria, or Armenia, or Carmania. For in all theſe regions are found traces of the name Sabtecha. Gen. x. 7.

SACK. Sack-cloth. This is a pure Hebrew word, and has ſpread into almoſt all languages. Beſide the common ſignification of it, which is well known, it imports alſo a ſuit of mourning, worn at the death of a friend or relation. In great calamities, in penitence, in trouble, they wore ſack-cloth about their bodies. 2 Sam. iii. 31. Gird yourſelves with ſack-cloth, and mourn for Abner. Let us gird ourſelves with ſack-cloth; and let us go and implore the clemency of the king of Iſrael. 1 Kings xx. 31. Ahab tore his cloaths, put on a ſhirt of hair-cloth next to his ſkin, faſted, and lay upon ſack-cloth. 1 Kings xxi. 27.

When Mordecai was informed of the misfortune threatened to his nation, he put on ſack-cloth, and covered his head with aſhes. Eſth. iv. 1, 2, 3. Job ſays, that he ſewed a ſack over his fleſh. Job xvi. 15.

On the contrary, in the time of joy, or on the hearing good news, thoſe who were clad in ſack-cloth, tore it from their bodies, and caſt it from them. Pſalm xxx. 11.

The prophets were often cloathed in ſack-cloth: [and generally in coarſe clothing.] The Lord bids Iſaiah to put off the ſack-cloth from about his body, and to go naked. Iſaiah xx. 2. Zechariah ſays, xiii. 4. that the falſe prophets ſhould no longer propheſy in ſack-cloth, to deceive the ſimple. St. John, Rev. xi. 3. ſays, that the two prophets of God ſhould propheſy 1260 years, cloathed in ſack-cloth. Baruch intimates, that this habit of ſack-cloth, was that in which good people cloathed themſelves when they went to prayers. Baruch iv. 20.

SACRAMENT, Sacramentum; in Greek, Myſterion. The word ſacramentum, is taken, in the Latin Vulgate, 1. for a ſecret: ſacramentum regis abſcondere bonum eſt; it is good to keep the king's ſecret. Tob. xii. 7. And, neſcierunt ſacramenta Dei; the wicked know not the ſecrets of God: Wiſ. ii. 22. 2. For a myſtery; Nebuchadnezzar's myſterious dream, which he had forgot, was revealed to Daniel, with its interpretation: Ut quærerent miſericordiam Dei ſuper ſacramento iſto. Tunc Danieli myſterium per viſionem nocte revelatum eſt, &c. 3. For a ſacrament of the new law, and for the myſteries of our holy religion. All this agrees with the general ſenſe of myſtery and ſecret. Vide MYSTERY.

Sacraments of the old law. Theſe, were all the ceremonies, ſacrifices, expiations, unctions, benedictions, conſecrations, &c. under the law of Moſes. All theſe were myſterious and figurative, of things to come, 1. in the Chriſtian diſpenſation; 2. in heaven, and the future world, of which St. Paul has diſcovered the myſtery, in his Epiſtle to the Hebrews, chap. ix, &c.

The ſacraments of the new law. Theſe have infinitely the preference before thoſe of the old law. St. Paul ſays, thoſe of the Jews were weak and beggarly elements, which of themſelves had no grace or efficacy: Gal. iv. 9. And that the prieſthood and ceremonies of the law were abrogated and annulled, becauſe of their weakneſs and inſufficiency: Hebr. vii. 18, 19. For there is verily a diſannulling of the commandment going before, for the weakneſs and unprofitableneſs thereof. For the law made nothing perfect. But thoſe of the new law are much fewer in number, more excellent, and more eaſily practiſed, than thoſe of the law of Moſes. *Sacramentis numero pauciſſimis obſervatione facillimis, ſignificatione præſtantiſſimis, Chriſtus ſocietatem novi populi colligavit. It has been much diſputed, at what ſeaſon of the year the Sabbatical year began. Some have been of opinion, that it began on the firſt month of the ſacred year, i. e. Niſan, or in the ſpring. Others think it began at the firſt month of the civil year, or Tizri (September.) Moſes does not explain himſelf on this matter very clearly. He ſays only, that the land ſhall not be cultivated, and that there ſhall be no harveſt that year. In Paleſtine, the time of ſowing wheat and barley was in autumn; barley-harveſt began at the paſſover, and wheat-harveſt at Penteceſt. Therefore, to enter into the ſpirit of the law for obſerving the reſt of the Sabbatical year, that the land may not remain two years without cultivation, we muſt neceſſarily begin it at autumn, after the crops were gathered in: they did not till the land in autumn, and they had no harveſt after the winter; but the autumn following they began again to cultivate the land, that they might reap their harveſts in the ſpring and ſummer following.

In the Sabbatical year all debts were remitted, and ſlaves were ſet at liberty. Deut xv. 12. Exod. xxi. 2. But were debts abſolutely forgiven, or was the payment of them only ſuſpended? Several think, that this remiſſion was abſolute, and that all debts were totally extinguiſhed in the Sabbatical year. Hebr. Druſius. Eſtius, alii. The caution of rich men, noticed by Moſes, Deut. xv. 9. who would not lend to their brethren at the approach of the Sabbatical year, ſeems to prove, that after this year nothing was to be hoped for from their debtors. For if the payment of debts was only ſuſpended till this year was over and paſt, it would not have been a ſufficient motive to hinder them from lending. As there was no lending for intereſt in the caſe, which was forbid to the Hebrews toward their brethren, as it could be only a ſimple loan, the creditor might require it again either before, or after, the Sabbatical year, on the ſuppoſition of thoſe who think that the remiſſion was not abſolute. Cajet. Burg. Piſcat. in Deut. xv. Baſnage Antiquities of the Jews, tom. i. p. 29.

Others, as the rabbins, and Grotius, diſtinguiſh between debts mortgaged on ſecurity, (the contracts of which included a clauſe of perpetual debts) and ſimple contracts: theſe laſt were for ever acquitted on the Sabbatical year, but not the others. Menochius alſo thinks, that the remiſſion of debts was general and abſolute, but not of loans or depoſits. This regarded only the natural Hebrews, or proſelytes to Judaiſm, but not ſtrangers.

It is alſo inquired, whether debts were remitted, and ſlaves ſet at liberty, at the beginning, or at the end, of the Sabbatical year. The Hebrew ſays literally, Deut. xv. 1. מקץ שבע שנים LXX. Δι' ἑπτὰ ἐτῶν, At the end of every ſeven years thou ſhalt make a releaſe. This has given occaſion to ſome to think, that debts were not remitted, nor ſlaves ſet at liberty, till the end of the Sabbatical year. But moſt are of the contrary opinion, that it was at the beginning of the Sabbatical year. The original text explains it very naturally of the end of the week of the year; after which came the Sabbatical year, with which it concludes.

SABEC. In Geneſis xxii. 13. ראיל נאחז בסבך LXX. κατεχόμενος ἐν Φυτῷ σαβὲχ, inſtead of what we read in the Vulgate, and in the Engliſh verſion, "Abraham ſaw a ram intangled by its horns in a thicket," the Septuagint and Theodotion read, he ſaw a ram caught by its horns in the buſh Sabec. Philo, Eucherius, Diodorus, as well as the Septuagint and Theodotion, have taken the Hebrew word Sabec for a particular ſpecies of ſhrub. Euſebius of Emeſa thinks, that Sabec ſignifies a goat, becauſe of its upright horns. But the beſt interpreters tranſlate this word by, branches of thorns and briars entangled in one another.

SABINUS, Auguſtus's procurator in Syria. After the death of Herod the Great, and the departure of Archelaus from Rome, he attempted to ſeize the fortreſs of Jeruſalem, and the treaſure that Herod had left: but he found a vigorous reſiſtance from the people. After a great ſtruggle with the Jews, wherein they ſuffered much, he cauſed fire to be put to the doors of the ſacred treaſure, and took away four hundred talents, for his own ſhare; permitting his officers and ſoldiers to diſtribute the reſt among themſelves. This ſo provoked the people, that they beſieged Sabinus in the royal palace, and preſſed him ſo hard, that if he had not ſpeedily ſent for ſuccour from Varus, governor of Syria, neither he, nor his ſoldiers, would have eſcaped out of their hands. Varus, with his troops, came to Jeruſalem; but Sabinus knowing himſelf guilty, durſt not appear in his preſence, but retired toward the ſea-ſide, to avoid puniſhment. The ſacraments of the new law, are viſible ſigns of an inviſible grace; they were inſtituted by Jeſus Chriſt. The church of Rome reckons ſeven: 1. Baptiſm: 2. Confirmation: 3. Penance: 4. The Euchariſt: 5. Extreme Unction: 6. Orders: 7. Marriage: but Proteſtants reckon only two, Baptiſm, and the Euchariſt.

Baptiſm was inſtituted by Jeſus Chriſt, when he ſaid to his apoſtles, Go, and teach all nations, baptiſing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt. Matt. xxviii. 19. The natural water, is the matter of this ſacrament; its form, are the words now recited; its effects, are the Chriſtian badge and character, which it communicates to thoſe who receive it: and its hopes are the remiſſion of ſins, and purification of the ſoul of him who receives it.

The Euchariſt, is the ſacrament of the body and blood of Jeſus Chriſt; repreſented under the elements of bread and wine. Our Saviour inſtituted this at his laſt ſupper, which he ate with his apoſtles, the evening before his paſſion, when, taking bread, he ſaid, Take and eat, this is my body: and taking the cup, he ſaid, Take and drink, this is my blood. Matt. xxvi. 26, 27, 28. Mark xiv. 22, 23, &c. Luke xxii. 17, 18.

SACRIFICE, an offering made to God on his altar, by the hand of a lawful miniſter. Sacrifice differs from oblation, in this, in a ſacrifice there muſt be a real change or deſtruction of the thing offered; whereas an oblation is but a ſimple offering, or a gift. As men have always been under an obligation of acknowledging the ſupreme dominion of God over them, and over whatever belongs to them, and as there have always been perſons who have conſcientiouſly acquitted themſelves of this duty; we may affirm, that there have always been ſacrifices in the world.

Adam and his ſons, Noah and his deſcendants, Abraham and his poſterity, Job and Melchiſedech, before the Moſaic law, offered to God real ſacrifices. The law did nothing more than aſcertain the quality, the number, and other circumſtances of ſacrifices. Before that, they offered the fruits of the earth, the fat, or the milk, of animals; the fleeces of ſheep; or the blood, and the fleſh, of victims. Every one purſued his own acknowledgment, his zeal, or his devotion: but among the Jews, the law appointed what they were to offer, and in what quantities. Before the law, every one was prieſt and miniſter of his own ſacrifice; at leaſt he was at liberty to chooſe what prieſt he pleaſed, ſhould offer his victim. Generally this honour belonged to the moſt ancient, or head of a family, to princes, or men of the greateſt virtue and integrity. But after Moſes, this was, among the Jews, confined to the family of Aaron.

It is diſputed, whether, at firſt, there were any other ſacrifices than burnt-offerings: no other appear in Scripture. The Talmudiſts aſſure us, that Abel offered only holocauſts, conſuming the fleſh of the victim by fire; becauſe it was not allowed to eat it. Grotius is of opinion, that this patriarch did not offer a bloody ſacrifice. The text of Moſes informs us, Gen. iv. 4. מבכורות עאנו ומחלבהו that he offered of the firſtlings of his flocks, and of the fat thereof. But Grotius thought the Hebrew might be tranſlated of the firſt-fruits, and the milk. We are told, that the ancients offered to God only fruits of the earth, herbs, flowers, honey, milk, wheat, wool:

> Lacte mero veteres uſi narrantur, & herbis,
> Sponte ſuâ ſi quas terra ferebat.
> OVID. FAST. lib. iv.

We are told alſo, by Servius, on Æneid, xii. Vide & Solin. Polyhiſtor. cap. 11. that the ancients put no fire to their ſacrifices, but obtained it by their prayers; and moſt of the fathers think, it was thus God accepted the ſacrifices of Abel: he conſumed them, ſay they, by fire from heaven; which favour was not vouchſafed to Cain's ſacrifices. In the ſame manner he ſet fire to the ſacrifices offered at Aaron's conſecration, to thoſe offered by Gideon, to thoſe offered by Solomon at the dedication of his temple, to thoſe of Elijah on Mount Carmel, and to thoſe offered by the Maccabees at reſtoring the worſhip of the temple, after it had been prophaned by Antiochus Epiphanes.

The Hebrews had properly but three ſorts of ſacrifices, 1. the burnt-offering, or holocauſt; 2. the ſacrifice for ſin, or ſacrifice of expiation; 3. the pacific ſacrifice, or ſacrifice of thankſgiving. Beſide theſe, were ſeveral kinds of offerings, of corn, of meal, of cakes, of wine, of fruits; and one manner of ſacrificing, which has no relation to any now mentioned, i. e. the ſetting at liberty one of the two ſparrows offered for the purification of leprous perſons; Levit. xiv. 4, 5, 6, 7, 51, 52, 53. and the ſcape-goat, which was taken to a diſtant and ſteep place, from whence it was thrown: Levit. xvi. 10, 26. theſe animals, thus left to themſelves, were eſteemed as victims of expiation, loaded with the ſins of thoſe who offered them.

The holocauſt was offered and burnt up, on the altar of burnt-offerings, without any reſerve to the perſon who gave the victim, or to the prieſt who killed and ſacrificed it; only the prieſt had the ſkin: for, before the ſacrifices were offered to the Lord, their ſkins were flayed off, and their feet and entrails were waſhed. Philo de Præmiis Sacerdot. & Levit. vii. 8. See HOLOCAUST, and Lev. i.

The ſacrifice for ſin, or for expiation, or the purification of a man who had fallen into any offence againſt the law, was not entirely conſumed on the fire of the altar. No part of it returned to him who had given it, but the ſacrificing prieſt had a ſhare of it. If it were the high-prieſt who had offended through ignorance, he offered a calf without blemiſh: he brought it to the door of the tabernacle, put his hand on the head of the ſacrifice, confeſſed his ſin, aſked pardon for it, killed the calf, &c. Vide Levit. chap. iv. v.

If it were the whole people which had offended, they were to offer a calf, in like manner. The elders ſhall bring it to the altar of the tabernacle, ſhall put their hands upon its head, and confeſs their offence, &c.

If it be a prince of the people, who had offended, he ſhall offer a goat, ſhall bring it to the door of the tabernacle, ſhall put his hands upon its head, and ſhall confeſs his ſin, &c. I believe, that though Moſes orders a goat, it is to be underſtood, that they might offer a ram. See Levit. vii. 1, 2, 3, 4. and compare Levit. v. 6, 7.

If it be a private perſon who has committed an offence, he ſhall offer a ſheep, or a ſhe-goat without blemiſh, ſhall preſent it to the prieſt at the door of the tabernacle, ſhall put his hands upon the head of the ſacrifice. The prieſt ſhall ſacrifice it, &c. See Levit. chap. iv. v.

But if he is not of ability to offer a ſheep, or a ſhe-goat, he ſhall offer two turtles, or two young pigeons; one for his ſin, the other for a burnt offering. That which is for the burnt-offering, ſhall be entirely conſumed on the fire of the altar. That which ſhall be offered for his ſin, ſhall be preſented to the prieſt, who ſhall kill it, &c.

If the perſon was extremely poor, he might offer the tenth part of an ephah of meal, i. e. a little more than a gallon of meal, without oil or ſpice. He preſented it to the prieſt, who took a handful of it, and threw it on the fire; the reſt was for himſelf. There are ſome other circumſtances belonging to this ſubject, which ſee Leviticus, v. 15, 16. and chap. vi. 1, 2, 3. concerning the faults in which, beſides the ſin-offering and ſacrifice of expiation, there is a kind of amends to be made, or obligation of reſtitution to the Lord, or to the perſons offended, according to the nature of the offence: for as to the reſt, the ceremonies were always the ſame.

As to the ſacrifice for ſin, when a ram was offered, his rump, or tail, was burnt alſo, which was very fat, along with the reſt of the fat. But if it was a goat, the fat only was burnt. Levit. vii. 2, 3. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CX. p. 111, and Plate

The peace-offering was offered, to return thanks to God for benefits; or to ſolicit favours from him; or to ſatisfy private devotion; or, laſtly, for the honour of God, only. The Iſraelites offered this when they pleaſed, and no law obliged them to it. They were free to preſent what animals they would, provided they were ſuch as were allowed to be ſacrificed. In theſe ſacrifices no diſtinction was obſerved, either of age, or ſex, of the victim, as was required in the burnt ſacrifices, and the ſacrifices for ſin. Lev. iii. The law only required, that the victim ſhould be without blemiſh. He who preſented them came to the door of the tabernacle, put his hand on the head of the victim, and killed it. The prieſt poured out the blood about the altar of burnt ſacrifices; he burnt on the fire of the altar the fat which is in the lower belly, that which covers the kidneys, the liver, and the bowels. And if it were a lamb, or a ram, he added to it the rump of the animal, which, in that country, is very fat.

Before theſe things were ſet in order on the fire of the altar, the prieſt put them into the hands of the perſon who provided the victim, then made him lift them up on high, and wave them toward the four quarters of the world, the prieſt ſupporting and directing his hands. The breaſt and the right ſhoulder of the ſacrifices belonged to the prieſt that performed the ſervice; and it appears, that each of them were put into the hands of him who offered them; though Moſes mentions only the breaſt of the animal. After this, all the reſt of the ſacrifice belonged to him who preſented it, and he might eat it with his family and friends, as any other meat. Levit. viii. 30, 31, &c.

The ſacrifices or offerings of meal, or liquors, which were offered for ſin, were in favour of the poorer ſort, who could not afford ſacrifices of oxen, of goats, or of ſheep, Levit. vi. 14, 15, &c. They contented themſelves with offering meal or flour, ſprinkled with oil, with ſpice (or frankincenſe) over it. And the prieſt taking a handful of this flour, with all the frankincenſe, ſprinkled them on the fire of the altar; and all the reſt of the flour was his own: he was to eat it without leaven in the tabernacle, and none but the prieſts were to taſte of it. As to the other offerings wherein they preſented fruits, wine, meal, wafers, or any thing elſe, the prieſt always caſt a part of it on the altar, the reſt belonged to him, and the other prieſts. Theſe offerings were always accompanied with ſalt and wine, but without leaven. Levit. ii. 1, 2, 3, &c.

Thoſe ſacrifices, in which they ſet at liberty a bird or a goat, were not properly ſacrifices; becauſe there was no ſhedding of blood, and the victim remained alive. It was thus they ſet at liberty the ſparrow offered for the purification of a leper, or of a houſe ſpotted with leproſy, Levit. xiv. 4, 5, &c. They preſented to the prieſt a couple of ſparrows, or two clean birds, with a bundle of cedar-wood and hyſſop, tied with a ſcarlet ſtring. The prieſt killed one of the birds over running water, which was in a clean and new earthen veſſel; afterwards, tying the living ſparrow to the bundle of cedar and hyſſop, with the tail turned towards the handle of the veſſel, he plunged it in the water drenched with the blood of the firſt ſparrow, ſprinkled the leper, or the houſe, with it; and then ſet the living ſparrow at liberty, to go where it pleaſed.

The other animal ſet at liberty was a goat; and this was done on the day of ſolemn expiation. The multitude of the children of Iſrael preſented to the high-prieſt at the door of the tabernacle, two goats for a ſin-offering. The high-prieſt then caſt lots on the two goats, which of them ſhould be ſacrificed to the Lord, and which ſhould be ſet at liberty, or be the ſcape-goat, the Azazel, as the Hebrews call it. That which was determined by lot to be ſacrificed was ſlain, and offered for the ſins of the people. That which was to be ſet at liberty, was brought alive before the Lord. The high-prieſt ſaid over him certain prayers, laid both his hands on his head, confeſſed the ſins of the whole congregation, loaded therewith the head of the goat, with correſponding imprecations, then ſent him into the wilderneſs by a man appointed to that office. See AZAZEL, and SCAPE-GOAT.

The ſacrifices of birds, were offered on three occaſions. Firſt, for ſin, when the perſon offering was not rich enough to provide an animal for a victim, Levit. v. 7, 8, &c. Secondly, for the purification of a woman after her lying-in, Levit. xii. 6, 7. When ſhe could offer a lamb and a young pigeon, ſhe gave both; the lamb for a burnt-offering, and the pigeon for a ſin-offering. But if ſhe was not of ability to offer a lamb, ſhe gave a pair of turtles, or a pair of young pigeons, to be offered, one for a burnt-offering, and the other for a ſin-offering. Thirdly, they offered two ſparrows for thoſe who were purified from the leproſy; one as a burnt-offering, and the other was a ſcape-ſparrow, as we have ſaid. Levit. xiv. 4, &c. 49, 50, 51.

For the ſacrifice of the paſchal lamb, ſee PASSOVER.

The perpetual ſacrifice, called in Hebrew, thamid: the Lord had appointed, Exod. xxix. 38, 39, 40. Numb. xxviii. 3, that they ſhould offer every day two lambs on the altar of burnt-offerings; one in the morning, the other in the evening. They were burnt as holocauſts, but by a ſmall fire, that they might continue burning the longer. The lamb of the morning was offered about ſun-riſe; after the incenſe was burnt on the golden altar, and before any other ſacrifice. That in the evening was offered between the two evenings, i. e. at the decline of day, and before night. With each of theſe victims was offered half a pint of wine, half a pint of the pureſt oil, and an aſſaron, or about three pints, of the fineſt flour.

Such were the ſacrifices of the Hebrews: ſacrifices, indeed, very imperfect, and altogether incapable of themſelves to purify the ſoul! St. Paul has deſcribed the ſacrifices, and other ceremonies of the law, as weak and beggarly elements, Gal. iv. 9. They repreſented grace and purity, but they did not communicate it, ſays St. Auſtin. They convinced the ſinner of the neceſſity to purify himſelf, and make ſatisfaction to God; but they did not impart holineſs to him. Sacrifices were only prophecies and figures of the true ſacrifice, which eminently includes all their virtues and qualities; being, at the ſame time, an holocauſt, a ſacrifice for ſin, and a ſacrifice of thankſgiving; containing the whole ſubſtance and efficacy, of which the ancient ſacrifices were only repreſentations. The paſchal lamb, the daily burnt-offerings, the offerings of flour and wine, and all other oblations, of whatever nature, promiſed and repreſented the death of Jeſus Chriſt.

The ſacrifice of an humble and contrite heart, is that ſacrifice, which, on our part, conſtitutes the whole merit of all we can offer to God. Pſalm li. 17. The ſacrifices of God are a broken ſpirit; a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not deſpiſe. The Jews, without theſe diſpoſitions, could not offer any offering agreeable to God; and God often explains himſelf on this matter in the prophets. Pſalm xl. 6; Iſai.

Iſai. i. 11, 12, 13, 14. Jerem. xxxv. 15. Amos v. 21, 22. Hoſ. xiv. 2, 3, 4. Joel ii. 12, 13, &c. Pſal. li. 16.

Human ſacrifices. The natural notion common to mankind, that we muſt offer to God whatever we moſt value, has prevailed on ſeveral nations ſo far, as to induce them to offer human ſacrifices. It is not agreed, who firſt introduced this cuſtom. Some aſcribe it to Ilus, or Saturn, who, they ſay, practiced it among the Phœnicians. He offered up to the gods his own ſon Jehoud, whom he had by the nymph Anabreth. Sanchoniat. apud Euſeb. præparat. lib. iv. cap. 16. Philo inſinuates, lib. de Abraham, that the cuſtom of offering ſuch ſacrifices was known in Canaan before Abraham; and ſome learned men think, that the example of theſe people took off much of that horror Abraham would otherwiſe have had, at the intention of ſacrificing his own ſon. Marſham Canon Ægypti. chronol. Johan. le Clerc in Gen. xxii. 2. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CLVI. page 146.

But it is much more probable, that Abraham was the firſt who attempted to ſacrifice his own ſon; and that his example miſunderſtood, and ill applied, gave riſe to this cuſtom. Philo does not deny indeed, that human ſacrifices might obtain in Paleſtine before Abraham's time; but he maintains, that this patriarch had no intention to imitate theſe people; whoſe manners and idolatry he abhorred. What motive could prompt him to this action? Was it fear, hope, vanity, oſtentation, deſire of praiſe, or of riches? Iſaac was every thing to him.

Human ſacrifices were cuſtomary in Paleſtine, Africa, Gaul, and almoſt all the world over; it muſt be owned too, they were very ancient, and that men really were ſacrificed to their falſe gods. I know ſome learned men have thought, that among the Canaanites and Moabites, they contented themſelves with making the children to paſs through the flames, or between two fires, which they called, luſtrare per ignem; and I doubt not, but ſometimes they did ſo. But often they really conſumed them in the flames.

Moſes in Leviticus xviii. 21. forbids making children to paſs through the fire in honour of Moloch: this ſome underſtand of a luſtration only, like what is mentioned in prophane authors,

> Moxque per ardentes ſtipulæ crepitantis acervos,
> Trajicias coleri ſtrenua membra pede;
> Omnia purgat edax ignis.
> OVID. Faſt. lib. iv.

Beſides, the Scripture mentions a ſon of king Ahaz, who had been offered to Moloch, and yet reigned after his father. 2 Kings xvi. 3. compared with 2 Kings xviii. 1.

But there are many other evidences, that they burned their children in honour of falſe gods. Thus Levit. xx. 1, 2, 3. Whoſoever he be of the children of Iſrael, or of the ſtrangers that ſojourn in Iſrael, that giveth any of his ſeed to Moloch; he ſhall ſurely be put to death, the people of the land ſhall ſtone him with ſtones. And I will ſet my face againſt that man, and will cut him off from among his people: becauſe he hath given of his ſeed unto Moloch, to defile my ſanctuary, and to prophane my holy name. And if the people of the land do any ways hide their eyes from the man, when he giveth of his ſeed unto Moloch, and kill him not, then I will ſet my face againſt that man, and againſt his family, and will cut him off, and all that go a whoring after him, to commit whoredom with Moloch, from among their people. Moſes again repeats theſe prohibitions, Deut. xviii. 10. And it appears from Amos v. 26. that notwithſtanding theſe prohibitions, the people did not forbear even in the deſart, to carry with them a tent conſecrated to the god Moloch.

It is beyond all doubt, that the Canaanites put their children to death in honour of their gods, Pſal. cvi. 37. Jeremiah xix. 5. ſays, They have built alſo the high places of Baal, to burn their ſons with fire, for burnt offerings unto Baal. See alſo chap. xxxii. 35. For theſe crimes God drove out the Canaanites. See Deut. xviii 10, 12. and Wiſdom xii. 5.

The Phœnicians, who were a remnant of the Canaanites, continued this barbarous cuſtom, which they juſtified by the example of Ilus or Saturn, as above: they carried this cuſtom with their colonies into Africa, where it continued for a long time. When Gelo, king of Sicily, conquered the Carthaginians, by the treaty he made with them, he obliged them to renounce this cuſtom of ſacrificing their children to Saturn. Plutarch Apophth. Juſtin, lib. xviii. aſſures us, that Darius impoſed the ſame commands on them by an embaſſy; to leave off human ſacrifices. Notwithſtanding this, they continued theſe practices till the proconſulate of Tiberius, who cauſed the prieſts of Saturn to be hanged on trees around their temples. Tertull. Apologet. Diodorus Siculus, apud Euſeb. præpar. lib. iv. cap. 16. gives us a deſcription of Saturn, as adored by the Carthaginians: the figure was of braſs; the hands of which were turned backward, and bending toward the ground; ſo that when they put upon his arms a child, to be conſecrated to him, he immediately fell into a pan of burning coals beneath; and died miſerably at the feet of the ſtatue.

It would be to little purpoſe to aſſemble examples of human victims. Porphyry aſſures us, that the book of Sanchoniathon was full of them. Theſe ſacrifices were frequent, not only in Phœnicia, in Paleſtine, in the countries of Ammon and Moab, in Idumea, in Arabia, and in Egypt, but alſo in Gaul, among the Scythians, the Thracians, in the iſlands of Rhodes, Chios and Cyprus, even among the Athenians; and finally, alſo in America. Porphyr. de abſtin. lib. ii. p. 202, & ſeq.

As to what is affirmed, that Ahaz had the ſame ſon for his ſucceſſor, whom he had made to paſs through the fire in honour to Moloch, no proof can be given of this. It is true, his ſucceſſor was Hezekiah; but he might have had ſeveral other ſons. We know another of his ſons, whoſe name was Maaſiah, who was put to death at the command of the king of Iſrael, 2 Chron. xxviii. 7. Vide FRAGMENT, No. LI. page 100.

SACRILEGE. The action of prophaning holy things, or committing outrage againſt holy things or perſons. Theft, or abuſe, or prophanation of ſacred things, is ſacrilege. Scripture gives the name of ſacrilege to idolatry, and to other crimes that more directly inſult the deity. And he is called ſacrilegious, who commits an impiety, a prophanation of holy things; who uſurps ſacred offices; who approaches the ſacraments unworthily; who plunders or pillages things dedicated to God, &c.

SADOC, Σαδὼκ. See ZADOK.

I. SADOC, ſon of Azor, and father of Achim, anceſtor of Jeſus Chriſt. Matth. i. 14.

II. SADOC, founder of the ſect of the Sadducees: this is what almoſt all have ſaid, who have treated of this ſect; but they inform us little concerning his perſon. It is ſaid, Sadoc ſucceeded Antigonus Socchæus, as a diſciple ſucceeds his maſter, in the tradition of his doctrine; which Antigonus had ſucceeded Simon the Juſt, the high-prieſt. Vide Bartholocci Bibliot. Rabinnic. tom. i. p. 376. Alios in Thiſbi. Author Cozri, Pirke-avoch. Alios plures. But Simon the Juſt died A. M. 3711, ante A. D. 293. So that Sadoc may have lived about A. M. 3740.

Antigonus, maſter to Sadoc, was, it is thought, the head of a ſect, who, from exceſs of ſpirituality, taught, that we muſt give to the Lord a pure and diſintereſted worſhip. His diſciple Sadoc unable to conform to ſuch diſintereſted morality, yet unwilling to abandon his maſter, gave his maxim a quite contrary turn: inferring, that there was no recompence to be hoped for, nor puniſhment to be feared, after this life; and that good was to be done, and evil to be avoided, without any view either to hope or fear.

Some Rabbins make Sadoc a diſciple of Doſitheus, and pretend that he withdrew to Samaria; that he made a ſchiſm from the other Jews, and worſhipped on mount Gerizim. Vide Epiphan. hæreſ. 14. But this ſentiment cannot be ſupported, ſince Doſitheus the Samaritan lived long after Sadoc, and after Jeſus Chriſt. Others ſay, that Alexander the Great having permitted the Samaritans to build a temple on mount Gerizim, Sadoc, Boethus, and ſeveral other prevaricating Jews, worſhipped on Gerizim, and thus ſeparated themſelves from Simon the Juſt, and Antigonus Socchæus, who continued ſtedfaſt to the temple at Jeruſalem. Origen. in Matt. tract. 27. Rab. Abraham Levi, in Cabbala Hiſtorica. Laſtly, ſome, without recurring to Sadoc at all, think that the word Saducees comes from the Hebrew Sedec, which ſignifies juſtice; and that they took this name to diſtinguiſh themſelves; being deſirous to paſs for great lovers of juſtice. Epiphan. hæreſ. 14. Hieronym. in Mat. xxii. Toſtat. & Jun. ibidem. Joſephus obſerves, de Bello, lib. ii. cap. 12. that they were very ſevere in puniſhing faults.

SADUCEES, Σαδδυκαῖοι, juſt, or juſtified.

SADUCEES, diſciples of Sadoc. They conſtituted one of the four principal ſects of the Jews. They were chiefly diſtinguiſhed from other Jews, by their opinion concerning angels, and the ſoul. They did not deny that we had reaſonable ſouls; but they maintained that this ſoul was mortal; Joſeph. lib. ii. de Bello, cap. 12. and, by a neceſſary conſequence, they denied the rewards and puniſhments of another life. They pretended alſo, that the exiſtence of angels, and a future reſurrection, are illuſions, Acts xxiii. 8. Matth. xxii. 23. Mark xii. 18. Luke xx. 27. Epiphanius, hæreſ. 14. and after him St. Auſtin, ſerm. 70. de Verbis Domini, cap. 3, n. 5. advanced, that they denied the Holy Ghoſt. But neither Joſephus, nor the evangeliſts accuſe them of this error. It has been alſo imputed to them, that they thought God to be corporeal; and that they received none of the prophecies.

It is difficult to conceive how they could deny the being of angels, and yet receive the books of Moſes, where frequent mention is made of angels, and of their appearances. The ancients do not acquaint us how they ſolved this difficulty. It is likely they conſidered angels, not as individual beings, and ſubſiſting of themſelves, but but as powers, emanations, or qualities inſeparable from the Deity, much as the ſun-beams are inſeparable from the ſun. [This was the opinion of ſome Jews in the time of Juſtin. Dialog. cum Tryphone. p. 358. See Grotius on Matth. xxii. 23. and M. Le Clerc on Acts xxiii. 8.] Or perhaps they held angels to be mortal; juſt as they thought of human ſpirits.

As the Saducees acknowledged neither puniſhments nor recompences in another life, they were inexorable in chaſtiſing the wicked. Joſeph. de Bell. lib. ii. cap. 22. They obſerved the law themſelves, and cauſed it to be obſerved by others, with the utmoſt rigour. They admitted none of the traditions, explications, or modifications of the Phariſees; they kept only to the text of the law; and maintained, that only what was written was to be obſerved. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 18.

The Saducees are accuſed of rejecting all the books of Scripture, except thoſe of Moſes; Vide Serrar. trihæreſ. cap. 21. n. 1. Elian. in Thiſbi. Origen. in Matth. tract. 21. Tertul. præſcript. cap. 49. Hieronym. in Matth. cap. 22. and to ſupport this opinion it is obſerved, that our Saviour uſes no Scripture againſt them, but paſſages out of the Pentateuch. But Scaliger, Elenchus trihæreſ. cap. 16. produces good proofs to vindicate them from this. He obſerves, that they did not appear in Iſrael till after the number of the holy books were fixed, and that if they had been to chooſe out of the Canon, the Pentateuch was leſs favourable to them than any other book, ſince it often mentions angels and their appearances. Beſides, the Saducees were preſent in the temple, and at other religious aſſemblies, where the books of the prophets were read, as well as thoſe of Moſes. They were in the chief ſtations of the nation; many of them were even prieſts. Would the Jews have ſuffered in theſe employments perſons who rejected the greater part of their Scriptures? Menaſſeh-ben-Iſrael ſays expreſsly, de Reſurrect. mort. lib. i. cap. 6. that indeed they did not reject the prophets, but that they explained them in a ſenſe very different from that of the other Jews.

Joſephus aſſures us, Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 9. that they denied deſtiny, or fate, alledging, that theſe were only ſounds void of ſenſe, and that all the good, or evil, that happens to us, is in conſequence of the good or evil ſide we have taken, by our free choice: that God was far from doing or from knowing evil; and that man was abſolute maſter of his own actions. This was roundly to deny a Providence, and on this footing I know not what could be the religion of the Saducees; or what influence over things below they could aſcribe to God. However, as it is certain they were not only tolerated, but were admitted to the high-prieſthood itſelf, this ſhews the then ſtate of religion among the Jews.

John Hyrcanus, high-prieſt of the nation, ſeparated himſelf in a ſignal manner from the ſect of the Phariſees, and went over to that of Sadoc. It is ſaid alſo, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 18. he ſtrictly commanded all Jews, on pain of death, to receive the maxims of this ſect. Ariſtobulus and Alexander Jannæus, ſon of Hyrcanus, continued to favour the Saducees, Abraham ben dior. Cabbala. and Maimonides aſſures us, Halac. Sanhedrin, cap. 11. that under the reign of Alexander Jannæus, they poſſeſſed all the offices of the Sanhedrim, and that there remained of the party of the Phariſees, only Simon the ſon of Secra. Caiaphas, who condemned Jeſus Chriſt to death, was a Saducee, Acts iv. 1. v. 17. as was Ananus the younger, who put to death St. James, the brother of our Lord. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 88. p. 698. At this day, the Jews hold as heretics, that ſmall number of Saducees which are found among them. Vide Serrar. Trihæreſ. Menaſſe ben-Iſrael, lib. i. de Reſurrectione mortuorum; Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, lib. iii. cap. 5, 14, &c.

The ſect of the Saducees is not extinguiſhed; it was much reduced by the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and by the diſperſion of the Jews; but it revived afterwards. At the beginning of the third century it was ſo formidable in Egypt, that Ammonim, Origen's maſter, thought himſelf obliged to write againſt them; or rather againſt the Jews who tolerated the Saducees, though they denied the fundamental points of their religion. The emperor Juſtinian mentions the Saducees in one of his edicts, baniſhes them out of his dominions, and condemns them to the ſevereſt puniſhments, as people that maintained atheiſtical and impious tenets; denying the reſurrection, and the laſt judgment.

Annus, or Ananus, a diſciple of Juda, ſon of Nachman, a famous Rabbin about A. D. 755, declared himſelf, it is ſaid, in favour of the Saducees, and ſtrenuouſly protected them againſt their adverſaries. They had alſo a celebrated defender in the twelfth century, in the perſon of Alpharag, a Spaniſh Rabbin. Ganz, Tzemach David. p. 125. This doctor wrote againſt the Phariſees, the declared enemies of the Saducees; and maintained that the purity of Judaiſm was only found among the Saducees; that the traditions avowed by the Phariſees were uſeleſs, and that the ceremonies which they had multiplied without end, were insupportable. Rabbi Abraham-ben-David Italleri replied to Alpharag, and supported the sect of the Pharisees by two great arguments; that of their universality, and that of their antiquity. He proved their antiquity, by a continued succession from Adam down to A. D. 1167; and their universality, because the Pharisees are spread all the world over, and are in all the synagogues.

There are still Saducees in Africa, and other places. They deny the immortality of the soul, and the resurrection of the body; but they are rare, or at least, there are but few who declare themselves for these opinions. Some have confounded the Saducees with such as hold the metempsychosis, and with the defenders of the two principles, i. e. the Manichees; but it is certain these sects are different from the Saducees.

SAFRON, Crocus; in Hebrew כרכם carcos. LXX. Κρόκος, or corcos; a well known flower: of a blue colour, in the midst of which are small yellow threds, of a very agreeable smell. Solomon in Canticles iv. 14. joins it with other aromatics: nardus & crocus, & fistula, &c. Jeremiah speaks of cloths of a safron colour. Lament. iv. 5. האמנים עלי תולע. But the Hebrew of Jeremiah rather signifies purple or crimson.

SAGAN, סגן, deputy.

SAGAN. סגן. The Rabbins call him אב בית הדין. Ab-beth-din, father of the house of judgment. The Hebrews thus call the deputy of the high-priest, who supplied his office, and who performed the functions of it, in the absence of the high-priest; or when any accident had disabled him from officiating in person; of which we have examples in Josephus. The Jews think this office of Sagan was very ancient. They hold that Moses was Sagan to Aaron. I do not find the word Sagan in this sense in Scripture, but it is frequent in the Rabbins. Vide Selden de Synedriis, lib. iii. cap. 8. & Authores de Repub. Hebræor.

Sagan is also put for princes, or the chief officers of a kingdom; and it often occurs in this sense, in Ezra, Nehemiah, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Daniel. Sagan is rather Chaldæan than Hebrew, and it is very likely that the Hebrews learned it from the Chaldees, to express princes, and great courtiers; magistrates and men in power, not only among the Babylonians, but also among the Hebrews. Jerom generally translates this word by magistrates, and the LXX. by Satraps, princes, nobles, governors.

SAINT, sanctity, to sanctify, &c. These words are used in different senses in Scripture. Vide SANCTIFY.

1. Saint signifies pure, free from defilements and sins, which render a man unfit for approaching holy things. To sanctify, signifies to purify, and to put one's self in a condition to appear before the Lord, and to partake of holy things, Exod. xix. 22. And let the priests also which come near to the Lord, sanctify themselves, lest the Lord break forth upon them. And verses 10, 11. And the Lord said unto Moses, Go unto the people, and sanctify them to-day and to-morrow, and let them wash their cloaths, and be ready against the third day, to receive the law. Job. i. 5. Job sent and sanctified his children.

2. To sanctify, is put for appointing to any holy use. Gen. ii. 3. God sanctified the seventh day. Exod. xiii. 2. He sanctified all the first-born. Exod. xix. 23. Set bounds about the mount, and sanctify it. Exod. xxviii. 41. Sanctify them, that they may minister unto me in the priest's office. There were in the temple at Jerusalem, many rich spoils that David and his successors had sanctified to the Lord.

3. To sanctify, is sometimes put for preparation for an action, that does not require extraordinary holiness. Numb. xi. 18. Sanctify yourselves against to-morrow, and ye shall eat flesh. Josh. iii. 5. And Joshua said unto the people, Sanctify yourselves, for to-morrow the Lord will do wonders among you. Joel ii. 15, 16. Blow the trumpet in Sion, sanctify a fast, call a solemn assembly, gather the people, sanctify the congregation, i. e. prepare it, or publish a fast, a congregation.

4. Saint, sanctity, sanctification. These epithets in a sovereign manner are ascribed to God, the author of all sanctity and holiness. So the cherubim and seraphim cry to him incessantly, Holy, Holy, Holy. Isai. vi. 3. He is eminently the Holy One of Israel, Isai. x. 20. 2 Kings xix. 22. & alibi passim. All our holiness is before him nothing but pollution, his name is Holy, or, the saint, or rather sanctity itself. We sanctify and hallow his name, and we pray that his name be hallowed, when we praise him, when we acknowledge his majesty, when we worship him, and when we endeavour to make him known, adored, praised, and beloved, by all who are capable of it.

5. The saint, the sanctum, the holy place, expresses that particular part of the temple, which was between the porch and the sanctuary; and in which were the golden candlestick, the altar of incense, and the table of shew-bread.

6. The sanctum, or sancta, is taken for the whole temple, or for heaven. Psal. xx. 6. He will hear him from his holy heaven. Psal. cii. 19. For he hath looked down from the height of his sanctuary; from heaven did the Lord behold the earth.

Pſalm cl. 1. Praiſe God in his ſanctuary, praiſe him in the firmament of his power.

7. The ſanctum ſanctorum, holy of holies, or the ſanctuary, ſignifies the moſt inward and ſacred part of the temple, where was the ark of the covenant; and where nobody entered but the high-prieſt, and that only once a year, on the day of ſolemn expiation.

8. Saints, is ſometimes put for the people of Iſrael; ſometimes for Chriſtians. The faction of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, ſaid to Moſes and Aaron; Numbers xvi. 3. Ye take too much upon you, ſeeing all the congregation are holy (or ſaints) every one of them, and the Lord is among them. And in ſeveral places of Scripture, the Hebrews are called a holy nation. Ye ſhall be unto me a kingdom of prieſts, and an holy nation, Exod. xix. 6. 1 Pet. ii. 9. Deut. vii. 6. xiv. 2, 21. Nothing is more frequent in St. Paul, than the name of ſaints given to the Chriſtians. See Rom. i. 7. viii. 27, 28. xii. 13. xv. 25, 26. xvi. 2, &c.

9. Saints ſtands for the prieſts of the Lord. Numbers xvi. 5, 7. Even to morrow the Lord will ſhew who are his, and who is holy; and will cauſe him to come near unto him, even him whom he hath choſen, will he cauſe to come near unto him. Aaron is called in Deuteronomy, the holy one, or the ſaint, of God. Deut. xxxiii. 8. Let thy thummim and thy urim be with thy holy one. And in Pſalm cvi. 16. They envied Moſes alſo in the camp, and Aaron the ſaint of the Lord.

10. Saints ſignifies in particular good men, and the ſervants of God. Prov. ix. 10. The knowledge of the holy (or ſaints) is underſtanding. Prov. xxx. 3. I neither learned wiſdom, nor have the knowledge of the holy, or ſaints. Pſalm xxxiv. 9. O fear the Lord, ye his ſaints, for there is no want to them that fear him. Pſalm xvi. 2, 3. My goodneſs extendeth not to thee, but to the ſaints that are in the earth, and to the excellent, in whom is all my delight.

11. Saints is often put for angels. Job v. 1. To which of the ſaints wilt thou turn? And, Behold he putteth no truſt in his ſaints, yea the heavens are not clean in his ſight. Job iv. 17, 18. Shall mortal man be more juſt than God? Shall a man be more pure than his maker? Behold, he put no truſt in his ſervants, and his angels he charged with folly. Daniel ſays, iv. 13, 23. An holy one (or ſaint) came down from heaven. And Moſes, Deut. xxxiii. 2, 3, the Lord ſhined forth from mount Paran, and came with ten thouſands of ſaints.

12. Saints and ſainteſſes. The Hebrews give theſe names, by way of Antiphraſis, to men and women that proſtituted themſelves in honour (as they thought) of ſome prophane deity, according to the blind and polluted notions of their falſe religion. Moſes ſays, Deut. xxiii. 17. לא תהיה קדשה מבנות ישראל ולא יהיה קדש מבני ישראל, There ſhall be no whore of the daughters of Iſrael, nor a ſodomite of the ſons of Iſrael. Literally, there ſhall be no ſainteſs, or ſaint, &c. See 1 Kings xiv. 24. xv. 12. xxii. 46. 2 Kings xxiii. 7. Job xxxvi. 14. Hoſea iv. 14. [Separated perſons, i. e. to the idol; which is the import of (kadeſh-ſaint) in this acceptation.]

SALAH, שלח, σαλὰ, miſſion, ſending: otherwiſe, branches, or dart; from שלח ſhalach: according to the Syriac, that ſpoils, or is ſpoiled.

SALAH, or Saleh, ſon of Cainan, and grandſon of Arphaxad; rather, by leaving out Cainan, who is not in the Hebrew copies, Salah was born in the thirty-fifth year of his father Arphaxad, A. M. 1693. He begat Eber at thirty years old, A. M. 1723. He died aged 433 years, A. M. 2126, ante A. D. 1878. Gen. xi. 12, &c. The orientals have preſerved ſeveral traditions concerning Salah; but we read in ſome Arabian authors, that this Salah, is more modern than Salah the ſon of Arphaxad.

SALAMIS, Σαλαμὶς, or Salamina, Acts xiii. 5. ſhaken, toſt, beaten; from the Greek σαλεύω, I beat, I toſs.

SALAMIS, a city of the iſle of Cyprus. St. Paul came hither with St. Barnabas, A. D. 44, and there converted Sergius Paulus, Acts xiii. 5. Salamis is now called Famagouſta. A. D. 488, the body of St. Barnabas was found here. He was a native of Cyprus.

SALAMPSO, daughter of Herod the Great, and of Mariamne the Aſmonean. Salampſo was firſt contracted to Pheroras; afterwards ſhe married Phazael her couſin-german, the ſon of Phazael, her uncle by the father's ſide, by whom ſhe had three ſons, Antipater, Herod, and Alexander; and two daughters, Alexandra and Cypros. [Vide the Plate of Herod's genealogy.]

SALATHIEL, שאלתיאל, I have aſked of God, or loan of God; from שאל ſhaal. Ezra iii. 2. [Shealtiel, Engliſh tranſlation.]

I. SALATHIEL, or Shealtiel, ſon of Jeconiah, and father of Zerubbabel, 1 Chron. iii. 17. He died at Babylon during the captivity. Salathiel was alſo ſon of Neri, according to St. Luke, iii. 27. He deſcended from Solomon by Rehoboam, according to St. Matthew, i. 12; and from Solomon by Nathan, according to St. Luke. In Salathiel were united the two branches of this illuſtrious genealogy; ſo that Salathiel was ſon to Jeconiah, according to the fleſh, as appears from the Chronicles, which ſay, that Jeconiah had two ſons, Aſſir and Salathiel, at Babylon.

And he might be ſon of Neri by adoption, or by having married the heireſs of Neri's family; or, as proceeding from the widow of Neri, he being dead without children. For in any one of theſe caſes he would paſs for the ſon of Neri according to the law. St. Luke does not tell us in what ſenſe he was ſon to Neri. Vide FRAGMENT, No.

The Jews pretend, that Salathiel was titular prince of the Jews, during their captivity. That he had ſucceſſors, of the houſe of David, called princes of the captivity, who were appointed by the kings of the country. They give us a ſucceſſion of them for ſeveral ages; and ſome Jewiſh authors maintain, that the heads of the captivity are ſtill in being beyond the Euphrates. Vide Selden, de Synedriis, lib. ii. cap. 7. §. 5. Jacob Alting. lib. Shilo lib. i. cap. 3. All this is in anſwer to our objection, when we urge the prophecy of Jacob, Gen. xlix. 10. that a law-giver ſhould not depart from between the feet of Judah, till the coming of the Meſſiah. To which they anſwer, that the ſcepter and the law-giver are ſtill in being among them, in the perſons of theſe princes of the captivity.

II. SALATHIEL, of Reuben, ſon of Simeon; anceſtor of Judith. Judith viii. 1. Vulg.

SALCHAH, סלכה, your baſket; from סלל ſalal: otherwiſe, that treads you under foot, or thy treading under foot; from סלה ſalah, and the pronoun ך ka, thee, you.

SALCHAN, Salecha, or Salcha, a city of the kingdom of Og, in the country of Baſhan, beyond Jordan, toward the northern extremity of the portion of Manaſſeh, Deut. iii. 10. 1 Chron. v. 11. Joſh. xii. 5. xiii. 11.

SALEM, שלם, σαλὴμ, compleat, perfect; from שלם ſhalam: according to the Septuagint, peace; from ſhalam.

I. SALEM. This name is given to Jeruſalem, Pſalm lxxvi. 2. In Salem alſo is his tabernacle, and his dwelling place in Zion. The Vulgate reads, Factus eſt in pace locus ejus. But the Hebrew requires, Factus eſt in Salem locus ejus. The common opinion is, that Melchiſedech, king of Salem, was king of Jeruſalem. Gen. xiv. 18. Hebr. vii. 1, 2.

II. SALEM, or Shalem, a city of the Shechemites, where Jacob arrived at his return from Meſopotamia, Gen. xxxiii. 18. Euſebius and Jerom notice this city; but ſome commentators tranſlate the Hebrew, Jacob came ſafe and ſound to a city of Shechem. Shalem, in Hebrew, may ſignify ſafe, in health, in peace, &c.

III. SALEM. Jerom ſays, in Salem, that there was a place near Jeruſalem called Salem, to the weſt.

IV. SALEM, otherwiſe Salumias, in the country of Scythopolis, eight miles from this city. Hieronym. ibid.

V. SALEM, or Salim, where John the Baptiſt baptized on the Jordan, John iii. 23. Manuſcripts are very indifferent as to Salem, or Salim.

VI. SALEM, the city where Melchiſedech reigned. St. Jerom, the author of the Chronicon Paſchal, p. 50, and M. Reland, Palæſt. lib. iii. think this city was different from Jeruſalem. St. Jerom places it in the territory of Scythopolis, where ruins were ſeen in his time, of what was ſaid to have been the palace of Melchiſedech.

VII. SALEM. The LXX. have ſometimes called the city of Shilo by this name. See Jerem. xli. 5. xlviii. 5.

SALIS, or Sallis, a village of Idumea, whither the Jews retired who had been beaten by the Romans in the plains of Aſkalon. Joſeph. de Bello, lib. iii. cap. 1.

SALISSA, שלישה, three, or the third; from שלש ſhaloſh: otherwiſe, prince, captain; from שלש ſhaliſh.

SALISSA, Saliſa, Baal ſaliſa, or Shaliſha. Mention is made of Shaliſha, 1 Sam. ix. 4. and of Baal-ſhaliſha, 2 Kings iv. 42. It was fifteen miles from Dioſpolis, in the diſtrict of Thamnitica, north of Jeruſalem. See Euſebius and St. Jerom in Beth-Schaliſa.

SALLAI, סלי, σηλοεὶ, my riſing, my way, my baſket.

SALLAI, or Celai, of the race of the prieſts. Nehem. xii. 20.

SALLU, סלוא, σαλοεὼ, σαλὼμ, baſket; from סלל ſalal: otherwiſe, contempt, or that treads under foot; from סלה ſalah: otherwiſe, elevation; from מסול maſſul.

SALLU, or Salo, ſon of Meſhullam, of Benjamin. 1 Chron. ix. 7.

SALMA, שלמא שלמה, the ſame as Salmon, habit; from שלמה ſhalmah. 1 Chron. ii. 11.

SALMON, שלמון, peaceable, perfect: or that rewards; from שלם ſhalam.

SALMON, Salmona, or Salma, ſon of Nahſhon; he married Rahab, by whom he had Boaz. In A. M. 2553, ante A. D. 1451. 1 Chron. ii. 11, 51, 54. Ruth iv. 20, 21. Matth. i. 4. He is named the father of Beth-lehem; i. e. his deſcendants peopled Beth-lehem. [or, he greatly improved and adorned it; he was, as we ſay, "the making of that town:" or, he was the chief man—by office; the Abyſſinian Shum of a town.]

SALMONE, or Salmona, a city and ſea-port in the iſle of Crete, Acts xxvii. 7.

SALOME,

SALOME, Σαλώμη, peaceable, perfect; or, that rewards; from שלם ſhalam. [fem. of Solomon.]

I. SALOME, daughter of Antipater, and ſiſter of Herod the Great; one of the wickedeſt of women. She firſt married Joſeph, whom ſhe accuſed of familiarities with Mariamne, the wife of Herod. That ſuſpicious prince put Joſeph to death, without hearing his defence; having found, by the confeſſion of Mariamne, that Joſeph had diſcovered a ſecret to her, which Herod had confided to him. Salome afterwards married Coſtobarus; but being diſguſted with him, ſhe put him away; a licence till then unheard-of among the Jews, whoſe law (ſays Joſephus) allows men to put away their wives, but does not allow women equal liberty. After this, ſhe accuſed him of treaſon againſt Herod, who put him to death. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xv. cap. 9.

She cauſed much diviſion and trouble in Herod's family, by her calumnies and miſchievous informations; and ſhe may be conſidered as the chief author of the death of the princes Alexander and Ariſtobulus, and of their mother Mariamne. Salome conceived a violent paſſion for an Arabian prince called Sillæus; whom ſhe would have married, againſt her brother Herod's conſent. She uſed to ſee him with ſo little caution, that every body was offended. And when Herod made her marry one Alexas, ſhe ſtill continued her inclination for Sillæus. Salome ſurvived Herod, who left her, by will, the cities of Jamnia, Azoth, and Phaſaelis, with 50,000 pieces of money. She favoured Antipas againſt Archelaus, and died A. D. 9, a little after Archelaus had been baniſhed to Vienne in Dauphine. A few days before Herod died, he ordered his ſiſter Salome, and Alexas, that, directly as he was dead, they ſhould ſlay the chief men of Judea, whom he had recently brought together to Jericho, where he lay ſick. But Alexas and Salome ſent all the men away, when Herod had given up the ghoſt. Salome had five children by Alexas; Berenice, Antipater, Calleas; and one ſon and daughter more, whoſe names are not mentioned. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xvii. cap. 8.

II. SALOME, a daughter of Herod the Great and Elpide. She married one of the ſons of Pheroras. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xvii. cap. 1.

III. SALOME, the Dancer, the daughter of Herodias, and of Herod-Philip the tetrarch. She firſt married Philip the tetrarch, her uncle, and afterwards Ariſtobulus, the ſon of Herod, king of Chalcis, by whom ſhe had three ſons, Herod, Agrippa, and Ariſtobulus. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 7. When Herodias left Philip the tetrarch, her daughter Salome accompanied her. As John the Baptiſt exclaimed againſt this inceſtuous marriage of Herodias and Antipas, one day, when this prince was celebrating his birth-day, or the day of his inauguration, Salome came into the banqueting room, and danced before the king, and the nobles, his company. Antipas was ſo delighted, that he promiſed to give her whatever ſhe ſhould aſk, even to the half of his kingdom. She inſtantly went to adviſe with her mother Herodias, who bid her aſk the head of John the Baptiſt. Salome returning to the king, ſaid, Give me in a diſh the head of John the Baptiſt. The king ſent immediately, and had the head of John the Baptiſt cut off, and given to Salome. Vide FRAGMENTS, No. L. p. 93. CLXXXII. p. 180.

Nicephorus, lib. i. cap. 20. and Metaphraſtes relate, that Salome accompanied her mother Herodias, and her father-in-law Herod, in their baniſhment to Vienne in Dauphine; and that the emperor having obliged them to go into Spain, as ſhe paſſed over a river that was frozen, the ice broke under her feet, and ſhe ſunk in up to her neck; when the ice uniting again, ſhe remained thus ſuſpended by it, and ſuffered the ſame puniſhment ſhe had made John the Baptiſt undergo. But none of the ancients mention this; and it is contrary to Joſephus, who tells us, that ſhe was firſt married to Philip the tetrarch, ſon of Herod the Great and Cleopatra, who died about A. D. 33 or 34; and that afterwards ſhe married Ariſtobulus, ſon of Herod, king of Chalcis, her couſin-german, by whom ſhe had ſeveral children. Thus ſhe lived above thirty years after the exile of her father-in-law Herod.

IV. SALOME, mother of the ſeven brethren Maccabees. The book called The Government of Reaſon, aſcribed to Joſephus, gives her no particular name. The Greeks, in their calendar, call her Salome. The ſon of Gorion calls her Anne; others name her Maccabæa. Eraſmus, in his Paraphraſe on the Government of Reaſon, calls her Salome.

V. SALOME, wife of Zebedee, and mother of St. James Major, and St. John the Evangeliſt. One of thoſe holy women who attended our Saviour in his journies, and miniſtered to him, Matt. xxvii. 56. She requeſted of Jeſus, that her two ſons, James and John, might ſit one on his right hand, the other on his left hand, when he ſhould poſſeſs his kingdom. Confer. Matth. xxvii. 56, cum Marc. xv. 40. But the Son of God anſwered her, and her two ſons, Ye know not what ye aſk; to ſit on my right hand, and on my left, is not mine to give, but it ſhall be given to them for whom it is prepared by my father.

Salome gave a great proof of her faith, when ſhe followed Jeſus Chriſt to Calvary, and did not forſake him, even at the croſs, Mark xv. 40. Matt. xxvii. 55, 56. She was alſo one of thoſe holy women who brought perfumes to embalm him, and who came, for this purpoſe, to the ſepulchre on Sunday morning early, Mark xvi. 1, 2. Entering into the tomb, they there ſaw an angel, who informed them, that Jeſus Chriſt was riſen. Returning to Jeruſalem, Jeſus appeared to them on the way, and ſaid to them, Be not afraid; go tell my brethren, that they go into Galilee, and there ſhall they ſee me. This is what the Scripture informs us of Salome the mother of the ſons of Zebedee.

Some give her the name of Mary Salome; but there is no good proof of her being called Mary: and what ſome frivolous hiſtories relate of the three Maries, Mary the mother of Jeſus, Mary the mother of James, and Mary Salome, deſerves no conſideration. Others make her the daughter of Joſeph. Epiphan. Hæreſ. 78. cap. 8. Græci recent. Auctuar. Bibl. PP. 3. 481. 1. Menæ. 8. Maii. The Latin martyrologies place her feaſt October 22. The Roman martyrology fixes her death at Jeruſalem: others ſay ſhe died in Provence, and that her body is ſtill there.

VI. SALOME, according to ſome, was the third huſband of St. Anne. John Gerſon, chancellor of Paris, quotes ſome verſes, which make him father to the Salome laſt mentioned. Vide ANNA. But as this ſyſtem of genealogy has no foundation in antiquity, we but little regard it.

SALT, Sal; in Greek, Ἅλς hals; in Hebrew, מלח melach. God appointed ſalt to ſeaſon all the ſacrifices that were offered to him, Lev. ii. 13. Jeſus Chriſt alludes to this, when, ſpeaking of the ſufferings of the damned, he ſays, Every one ſhall be ſalted with fire, and every ſacrifice ſhall be ſalted with ſalt, Mark ix. 49. See alſo Deut. xxix. 23. The whole land thereof is brimſtone, and ſalt, and burning.

We ſee from Ezekiel xvi. 4. that anciently they rubbed new-born children with ſalt: Quando nata es . . . . . aquâ non es lota in ſalutem, nec ſale ſalita. St. Jerom thought, this was meant to dry up the humidity that abounds in children; and to cloſe up the pores. Galen, de Sanit. lib. i. cap. 7. ſays, that ſalt hardens the ſkin of children, and makes them more firm. Avicenna acquaints us, that they bathed children with water in which ſalt had been diſſolved, to cloſe up the navel, and to harden the ſkin. Others think, it was to hinder any corruptions that might proceed from cutting off the navel-ſtring.

The prophet Eliſha being deſired to ſweeten the waters of the fountain of Jericho, required a new veſſel to be brought to him, and ſalt therein, 2 Kings ii. 21. He threw this ſalt into the ſpring, and ſaid; thus ſaith the Lord, I have healed theſe waters; and in future they ſhall not occaſion either death or barrenneſs. And in reality, the waters became good for drinking. Naturally the ſalt muſt have increaſed the brackiſhneſs of this fountain; but the prophet purpoſely ſelected a remedy that ſeemed contrary to the effect he would produce, that the miracle might become the more evident.

The Wiſeman reckons ſalt in the number of things the moſt neceſſary for life, Ecclus. xxxix. 31. Job aſks if any one could eat that which is not reliſhed with ſalt? [metaphorically, vigour of ſentiment, underſtanding, Vide IV. below.]

II. The Salt of the Earth, is, probably, marl, with which they manure the land in ſome countries, inſtead of dung. See our Commentary on Matth. v. 13.

III. Mineral Salt, or ſalt dug out of mines, in form of a hard ſtone. It is thought Lot's wife was changed into a ſtatue of ſuch mineral ſalt; i. e. that ſhe became as a rock, or ſtone, of ſalt, Gen. xix. 26.

IV. Salt is the ſymbol of wiſdom: Let your ſpeech be always with grace, ſeaſoned with ſalt, ſays St. Paul, Col. iv. 6. And our Saviour ſays, Have ſalt in yourſelves, and have peace one with another. [Hence we read of attic ſalt, i. e. attic wit, or ſharpneſs, mental intelligence, &c.]

V. Salt is the ſymbol of perpetuity, and incorruption. Thus they ſaid of a covenant, It is a covenant of ſalt for ever, before the Lord, Numb. xviii. 19. And elſewhere, The Lord God of Iſrael gave the kingdom over Iſrael to David for ever, even to him and to his ſons, by a covenant of ſalt, 2 Chron. xiii. 5. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXXX. page 52.

VI. Salt is the ſymbol alſo of barrenneſs, and ſterility. When Abimelech took the city of Shechem, he deſtroyed it, and ſowed the place with ſalt, that it might always remain deſart, Judg. ix. 45. Zephaniah ii. 9. threatens the Ammonites and Moabites, from the Lord; Moab ſhall be as Sodom, and the children of Ammon as Gomorrha, even the breeding of nettles, and ſalt-pits, and a perpetual deſolation. See Job xxxiv. 6. Pſal. cvii. 34. Jer. xvii. 6.

VII. Salt is likewiſe the ſymbol of hoſpitality; alſo of that fidelity due from ſervants, friends, gueſts, and domeſtics, to thoſe who maintain them, or who receive them at their tables. The governors of the provinces beyond the Euphrates, writing to king Artaxerxes, tell him, Becauſe we have maintenance from the king's palace, &c. which, which, in the Chaldee, is, Becauſe we are ſalted with the ſalt of the palace. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXXX, pages 53, 54.

The Salt-ſea: the Dead-ſea, or the lake Aſphaltites. Scripture and profane writers ſometimes call Aſphaltus or Bitumen—ſalt; whence Moſes, ſpeaking of a burning or parching ſalt, Deut. xxix. 23. Vulg. Salis ardore conſumentur, means aſphaltus, bitumen, or pitch. Herodotus alſo mentions certain lamps in Egypt, in which were put ſalt, i. e. bitumen, or ſuch like combuſtible matter.

The valley of Salt. Interpreters generally place it ſouth of the Dead-ſea, towards Idumea; becauſe it is ſaid, 2 Samuel viii. 13. that Abiſhai killed there 18,000 Idumeans; that Joab killed there 12,000; 1 Chron. xviii. 12. Pſal. lx. title; and that long after, Amaziah, king of Judah, killed 10,000, 2 Kings xiv. 7. 2 Chron. xxv. 11. Galen, de Simpl. Medicam. Facult. lib. iv. cap. 19. informs us, that they uſed the ſalt of the lake Aſphaltites to ſeaſon meat; that it was a ſtronger cauſtic, and digeſted much more than other ſalts; becauſe (ſays he) it is more boiled. We ſee alſo by Maccabees xi. 35. & x. 29. that the kings of Syria had brine-pits in Judea. Ezekiel xlvii. 11. ſays, that the ſhores and marſhes on the Dead-ſea ſhould be aſſigned for the making of ſalt. Dr. Halifax, in his account of Palmyra, ſpeaks of a great plain covered with ſalt, from whence the country round about is ſupplied. This plain is about a league from Palmyra, and extends toward the eaſtern parts of Idumea, whoſe capital city was Bozra. David beat the Idumeans in the Valley of Salt, as he returned from Syria of Zobah. It is very probable, that this plain of ſalt is the Valley of Salt of Scripture.

SALU, סלוא, σαλὼ, baſket, or treading of feet, or elevation; from סלל ſalal.

SALU, or Salomi, father of Zimri, of Simeon. Numb. xxv. 14. Zimri was killed by Phinehas, in the abomination of Peor. 1 Macc. ii. 26. calls him Salom.

SALUMIAS, or Salomias, a village in the country about Scythopolis. The ſame as Salem, where, St. Jerom ſays, were to be ſeen the ruins of the palace of Melchiſedech. See SALEM. VI.

SALVATION, ſalus. This word is taken in ſeveral ſenſes in Scripture:

I. For eternal happineſs and ſalvation, which is the object of our hopes and deſires. Thus it is ſaid, To give knowledge of ſalvation to his people. Luke i. 77. The goſpel of your ſalvation. Eph. i. 13. Godly ſorrow worketh repentance to ſalvation, 2 Cor. vii. 10. i. e. which leads to eternal life.

II. Salus is put for life, Gen. xlii. 15, 16. Vulgat. Per ſalutem Pharaonis; by the life of Pharaoh. Gen. xlvii. 25. Salus noſtra in manu tua eſt: our life is in your hands, &c.

III. For deliverance, or victory. 1 Sam. xi. 9. Vulg. Cras erit vobis ſalus, cum incaluerit ſol; you ſhall be relieved to-morrow, ere the ſun be hot. 1 Sam. xiv. 45. Shall Jonathan die, who hath wrought this great ſalvation in Iſrael? 2 Kings xiii. 17. Sagitta ſalutis Domini contra Syriam; the arrow of victory, or deliverance.

IV. Salvation is put for the praiſe and benediction that is given to God. Alleluiah, ſalvation, and glory, and honour, and power unto the Lord our God. Salvation to our God which ſitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb, Rev. vii. 10. xix. 1.

V. Salus, is put for the ſalutation given to perſons whom we ſalute, or to whom we write; a ſalutation of civility and friendſhip: James i. 1. To the twelve tribes that are ſcattered abroad, greeting, or health. 1 Macc. x. 18. King Alexander to his brother Jonathan ſendeth greeting, or wiſheth health.

The Hebrews rarely uſe concrete terms, as they are called, but often abſtract. Thus, inſtead of ſaying, God ſaves them, and protects them; they ſay, God is their ſalvation. Thus, Vox ſalutis, gaudium ſalutis, rupes ſalutis, ſcutum ſalutis, ſagitta ſalutis, veritas ſalutis, cornu ſalutis, verbum ſalutis, arx ſalutis, &c. is equivalent to a voice declaring deliverance; the joy that attends the eſcaping a great danger; a rock where any one takes refuge, and is in ſafety; a buckler that ſecures from the attack of the enemy; an arrow that procures ſafety and liberty to a people; a truth that ſaves us; a horn or ray of glory, of happineſs, and ſalvation; the glory that attends thoſe who have eſcaped out of ſome great danger, &c.

Thus, to work great ſalvation in Iſrael, ſignifies, to deliver Iſrael from ſome imminent danger; to obtain a great victory over their enemies. Pſal. xviii. 50. Fieri, or, eſſe in ſalutem, is, to ſave, to protect any one. Magnificans ſalutes Regis, Pſal. cvi. 4. to bring a very powerful ſuccour to the king. Pſal. cxlix. 4. Viſita nos in ſalutari tuo; viſit us and ſave us. Exaltabit manſuetos in ſalutem; he will repleniſh them with glory, and bring them out of danger. Pſal. xliii. 5. Salutare vultus mei; the ſalvation of the face of the Lord; i. e. his favour done us, in beholding us with a kind aſpect, or, a merciful countenance; or rather, "the ſalvation of my face," the ſalvation which is before me, in which I hope, which I wait for. Pſal. xliv. 4. Qui mandas ſalutes Jacob;

Jacob; who commandeſt with authority, and ſayeſt, Let Jacob be ſafe; thou who ſaveſt him, and powerfully protecteſt him. Pſal. xxii. 1. רחוק מישועתי דברי שאגתי. Longè à ſalute meâ verba delictorum meorum; my ſins cry againſt me, and prevent my ſalvation. The Hebrew ſays, Thou art far from my ſalvation, and from the words of my crying; thou refuſeſt to ſuccour me, and to deliver me, or even to hear me.

A victim or ſacrifice for ſalvation; theſe were pacific ſacrifices offered to God, either to return him thanks for his benefits, or to aſk favours, protection, or aſſiſtance from him. Pſal. xxxiii. 17. Fallax equus ad ſalutem; it is in vain that you put your confidence in horſes; they cannot ſave you from danger, without the aſſiſtance of God. I preferred wiſdom before ſafety or beauty: Wiſd. vii. 10. Super ſalutem & ſpeciem dilexi eam: before life, health, and beauty. Divitiæ ſalutis, ſapientia & ſcientia; the treaſures of ſalvation; or, according to the Hebrew, the ſtrength of ſafeties, wiſdom and knowledge, ſhall adorn the kingdom of the Meſſiah. He ſhall ſave, protect, defend, and deliver his elect, by his infinite power: he ſhall enrich them with the gifts of wiſdom and knowledge.

The Lord hath clothed me with the garments of ſalvation; Iſai. lxi. 10. Theſe garments of ſalvation, may ſignify the habits of joy and feſtivity, worn on feſtival days, and after receiving a ſignal favour from God; after deliverance from great danger. Erit tibi anima tua in ſalutem. Jer. xxxix. 18. & xlv. 5. The Hebrew ſays literally, Erit tibi anima tua in ſpolium; you ſhall eſcape danger, and you ſhall ſave your life, but not without danger: your life ſhall be ſaved, but as a part of the prey is reſcued; or, it ſhall be your part of the booty. Happy that you are delivered, even upon theſe terms! You ſhall loſe every thing but your life. Ezekiel ſays, xvi. 4. Aquâ non eſt lota in ſalutem. He ſpeaks of a new-born child, not waſhed, nor ſalted, and whoſe navel-ſtring had not been cut. Probably, they imagined this contributed to health, ad ſalutem. The Hebrew reads; You have not been waſhed with water, for ſolacing, for refreſhing, and cleaning you.

SAMAEL. This name the Rabbins, in their myſtical commentaries on the Pentateuch, Rabboth. in Deuter. cap. ult. fol. 303. give to the prince of the devils, who expected, with great impatience, the hour of Moſes's departure, that he might ſeize him, and carry him to the place where the dead are detained. But St. Michael reproved him, and ſaid to him; O wretch! ſhouldſt thou be joyful, while I ſhed tears? He quotes to him that paſſage of Micah vii. 8. Rejoice not againſt me, O mine enemy: when I fall, I ſhall ariſe; when I ſit in darkneſs, the Lord ſhall be a light unto me. He added; I fell when Moſes died; but I roſe again when Joſhua ſucceeded him, and led the Hebrews into the Land of Promiſe. Probably this Samael is the ſame as—

SAMMAEL, an evil angel, of which the Rabbins ſay, he deceived Eve, mounted on the old ſerpent; that he is the angel of the dead, the prince of the air, the chief of the demons. Other Rabbins look on him as the prince of the angels, and believe he is to preſide at the laſt judgment; for which reaſon, they make him offerings on the day of ſolemn expiation, to appeaſe his anger. Buxtorf. Lexicon. Rabinic. in Samael.

SAMARIA, שמרון, σωμερὼν, Heb. Shomeron. His lees, his priſon, his guard, his thorn, or his diamond; from שמר ſhamar, &c. and the pronoun ן an, his.

SAMARIA, the capital city of the kingdom of Samaria, i. e. of the ten tribes. It was built by Omri king of Iſrael, who began to reign A. M. 3079, and died 3086, 1 Kings xvi. 24. He bought the hill Samaria of Shemer, or Shomeron, for two talents of ſilver, [f. 684.] It took the name of Samaria, from Shemer: though ſome think there were already ſome beginnings of a city, becauſe before the reign of Omri mention is made of Samaria, 1 Kings xiii. 32. A.M. 3030, ante A. D. 974, and conſequently 49 years before the reign of Omri. Others take this for a prolepſis, or an anticipation, in the diſcourſe of the man of God, who ſpeaks of Samaria under the reign of Jeroboam.

However, Samaria was not conſiderable, and did not become the capital city of the kingdom of Iſrael until after the reign of Omri. Before him the kings of Iſrael dwelt at Shechem, or at Tirzah. Samaria was built on an agreeable and fruitful hill, in an advantageous ſituation, twelve miles from Dothaim, twelve from Merrom, and four from Atharoth. Euſeb. in Dothaim. Merro, & Atharo. Joſephus ſays, it was a day's journey from Jeruſalem, Antiq. lib. xv. cap. 11. Beſides, though built on an eminence, yet it muſt have had water in abundance; ſince we find medals ſtruck in this city, whereon is repreſented the goddeſs Aſtarte, at whoſe feet is a river. Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 18. obſerves, that when it was taken by John Hyrcanus, the prince of the Jews, he entirely demoliſhed it, and cauſed even the brook to flow over its ruins, to obliterate all traces of it.

The kings of Samaria omitted nothing to render this this city the ſtrongeſt, the fineſt, and the richeſt, poſſible. Ahab built here a palace of ivory, i. e. in which were many ornaments of ivory, 1 Kings xxii. 39. Amos, iii. 15. & iv. 1, 2. deſcribes Samaria under Jeroboam II. as a city ſunk into all exceſſes of luxury and effeminacy: I will ſmite (ſays he) the winter-houſe with the ſummer-houſe, and the houſes of ivory ſhall periſh, and the great houſes ſhall have an end, ſays the Lord. Hear this word, ye kine of Baſhan, that are in the mountain of Samaria, which oppreſs the poor, which cruſh the needy; which ſay to their maſters, Bring, and let us drink, &c.

Ben-hadad, king of Syria, built public places or ſtreets in Samaria, probably, for traffic, where his people dwelt, to promote trade, 1 Kings xx. 34. Vide FRAGMENT, No. XLII, page 74. His ſon Ben-hadad beſieged this place, under the reign of Ahab, A. M. 3103, ante A. D. 901, but was defeated by a handful of young men.

What is very remarkable, and yet very common, is, that the king of Syria's flatterers would aſcribe the ſhame of their defeat, not to the pride and drunkenneſs of their king, but to the interpoſition of the gods of the Jews: their gods are gods of the hills, ſay they, therefore they were ſtronger than we; but let us fight againſt them in the plain, and ſurely we ſhall be ſtronger than they.

The following year Ben-hadad brought an army into the field, probably, with deſign to march againſt Samaria; but his army was again deſtroyed. 1 Kings xx. 26, 27. Some years after this, 2 Kings vi. 24. vii. 1, 2, 3, 4. A. M. 3119, ante A. D. 885, Ben-hadad came again before Samaria, and reduced it to ſuch neceſſities by famine, that a mother was forced to eat her own child; but the city was relieved by a ſenſible effect of divine Providence. It was beſieged by Shalmaneſer, king of Aſſyria, in the ninth year of Hoſhea king of Iſrael, which was the fourth of Hezekiah, king of Judah, A. M. 3280. It was taken three years after, A. M. 3283, ante A. D. 724. 2 Kings xvii. 6, 7, &c. The prophet Hoſea x. 4, 8, 9. xiv. 1. ſpeaks of the cruelties exerciſed by Shalmaneſer; and Micah ſays, i. 6. this city was reduced to a heap of ſtones. The Cuthites ſent by Eſar-haddon to inhabit the country of Samaria, did not think it worth their while to repair the ruins of this city; they dwelt at Shechem, which they made their capital. They were on this footing, when Alexander the Great came into Phœnicia and Judea.

However, the Cuthites had rebuilt ſome part of Samaria, from the time of the return from the captivity, ſince Ezra ſpeaks of the inhabitants of Samaria, Ezra iv. 17. Nehem. iv. 2. the Samaritans being jealous of the favours Alexander the Great conferred on the Jews, revolted from him, while he was in Egypt, and burnt alive Andromachus, whom he had left governor. Q. Curtius, lib. iv. cap. 21. Alexander took Samaria, and ſettled Macedonians to inhabit it, Euſeb. Chronic. & Cedren. giving the country around it to the Jews, and to encourage them to cultivate it, he granted them an exemption from tribute. The kings of Egypt and Syria, who ſucceeded Alexander, deprived them of this country. Hecatæus, apud Joſeph. lib. ii. cont. Appion. p. 1063.

But Alexander Balas, king of Syria, reſtored to Jonathan Maccabæus the cities of Lydda, Ephrem, and Ramatha, which he ſeparated from the country of Samaria. And the Jews reſumed the full poſſeſſion of it under John Hyrcanus, who took Samaria, and ruined it, according to Joſephus, ſo that he made the river run through its ruins. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 18. A. M. 3995, ante A. D. 109. It continued in this condition to A. M. 3947, when Aulus Gabinius, proconſul of Syria, rebuilt it, and named it Gabiniana. But it was very inconſiderable, till Herod the Great reſtored it to its ancient luſtre, and gave it the Greek name of Sebaſte, (in Latin Auguſta) in honour of the emperor Auguſtus, who had given him the propriety of this place. Syncell. Chronic. p. 308. Uſſer. ad an. 3979, ante A. D. 25. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xv. cap. 11.

The New Teſtament ſpeaks but little of Samaria; and when it does mention it, it is rather in reſpect of the country about it, than of the city. When it is ſaid, Luke xvii. 11. John iv. 4. He paſſed through the midſt of Samaria; the meaning is, through the midſt of the country about Samaria. And again, Then cometh he to a city of Samaria called Sychar. Here Jeſus had a converſation with a woman of Samaria, i. e. with a Samaritan woman of the city of Sychar. After the death of Stephen, when the diſciples were diſperſed through the cities of Judea and Samaria, Philip the deacon withdrew into the city of Samaria, where he made converts, Acts viii. 1, 2, 3. When the apoſtles heard that this city had received the word of God, they ſent Peter and John thither, to communicate the Holy Ghoſt. Here Simon Magus offered money to the apoſtles, in hopes of buying this power of communicating the Holy Ghoſt. Samaria is never called Sebaſte in the New Teſtament, though ſtrangers hardly knew it by any other name. St. Jerom ſays, in Abdiam. 1. it was thought Obadiah diah was buried at Samaria. They alſo ſhewed there the tombs of Eliſha and of St. John the Baptiſt. There are many ancient medals, ſtruck at Sebaſte or Samaria; and ſome biſhops of this city ſubſcribed to the Acts of ancient councils.

SAMARITANS, שמרין, people of Samaria, Luke ix. 52. See SAMARIA.

SAMARITANS. We have ſpoken of the Samaritans under the title Cuthites. The Samaritans are the inhabitants of the city of Samaria, and of that province, of which Samaria was the capital. In this ſenſe it ſhould ſeem, that we might give the name of Samaritans to the Iſraelites of the ten tribes, who lived in the city and territory of Samaria. However, the ſacred authors commonly give the name of Samaritans only to thoſe ſtranger people, the Cuthites, whom the kings of Aſſyria ſent from beyond the Euphrates, to people the kingdom of Samaria, when they carried captive the Iſraelites who inhabited there before. Thus we may fix the epoch of the Samaritans, at the taking of Samaria by Shalmaneſer, A. M. 3283.

After Shalmaneſer, Eſar-haddon being informed, that the people ſent to Samaria, were infeſted by lions, which he imputed to their ignorance of the manner of worſhipping the god of the country, he ſent a prieſt of the god of Iſrael, to teach them the rites of the Hebrews. They thought they might blend this religion with that they profeſſed before; ſo they continued to worſhip their idols in conjunction with the God of Iſrael, not perceiving how incompatible theſe two religions were.

It is not known how long they continued in this ſtate: but at the return from the captivity of Babylon, it appears they had quitted the worſhip of idols; and when they aſked permiſſion of the Iſraelites to aſſiſt them in rebuilding the temple of Jeruſalem, they affirmed, that from the time that Eſar-haddon had brought them into this country, they had always worſhipped the Lord, Eſr. iv. 1, 2, 3. And, indeed, after the return from the captivity, Scripture does not reproach them with idolatrous worſhip, though it does not diſſemble either their jealouſy againſt the Jews, or the ill offices they did them at the court of Perſia, by their calumnies, or the ſtratagems they contrived to hinder the repairing of the walls of Jeruſalem. See Nehem. ii. 10, 19. iv. 2, 7, &c. vi. 1, 2, &c.

It does not appear there was any temple in Samaria, common to all thoſe people who came from beyond the Euphrates, before the coming of Alexander the Great into Judæa. But every one had been left to his own diſcretion, and worſhipped where he thought fit. But they preſently comprehended, from the books of Moſes which they had in their hands, and from the example of the Jews their neighbours, that God was to be worſhipped in that place only which he had choſe. Therefore ſince they could not go to the temple of Jeruſalem, from which the Jews forbad them, they thought of building a temple of their own on mount Gerizim, near Shechem, then their capital. Therefore Sanballat, governor of the Samaritans, applied to Alexander, and told him he had a ſon-in-law, called Manaſſes, ſon to Jaddus the high-prieſt of the Jews, who had retired to Samaria with many other perſons of his own nation; that he deſired to build a temple in his province, where he might exerciſe the high-prieſthood; that this would be advantageous to the king's affairs, becauſe hereby the nation of the Jews, who are a turbulent and ſeditious people, would be divided, and by ſuch a diviſion would be made weaker, &c.

Alexander readily conſented to Sanballat, and the Samaritans preſently began building the temple of Gerizim, which from that time they have always frequented, and ſtill frequent, as the place where the Lord intended to receive the adoration of his people. Of this mountain, and of this temple, the Samaritan woman of Sychar ſaid to our Saviour, John iv. 20. Our fathers worſhipped in this mountain, and ye ſay, that in Jeruſalem is the place where men ought to worſhip. See GERIZIM.

The Samaritans revolted from Alexander the very next year; Alexander drove them out of Samaria, put Macedonians in their room, and gave the province of Samaria to the Jews. This contributed not a little to increaſe the hatred and animoſity between theſe two people. When any Iſraelite had deſerved puniſhment, for the violation of ſome important point of the law, he preſently took refuge in Samaria or Shechem, and embraced the worſhip at the temple of Gerizim. When the Jews' affairs were proſperous, the Samaritans did not fail to call themſelves Hebrews, and of the race of Abraham. But were the Jews in diſcredit or perſecution, the Samaritans immediately diſowned them, and acknowledged themſelves to be Phœnicians, originally, or deſcended from Joſeph, and Manaſſeh his ſon. This was their practice in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xii. cap. 7. A. M. 3836, ante A. D. 168.

When

When this prince would have compelled the Jews to renounce their religion, they withſtood him with great reſolution. But the Samaritans wrote in another ſtrain to Antiochus; that being "originally Sidonians or Phœnicians, and being now ſettled at Shechem, they found themſelves under a neceſſity, by reaſon of many misfortunes, to conform to certain cuſtoms and uſages of the Jews (as the obſervation of the ſabbath); that they had built a temple on mount Gerizim, which had not been dedicated to any particular deity; (literally, that it was dedicated to "the god without a name;" or rather, that the temple was without a name, Ἱδρυσάμενοι ἀνώνυμον ἱερὸν) that ſince he had thought fit to chaſtiſe the Jews for their wickedneſs, they beſought him not to confound them with that people; ſince they were ready to obey his commands, and to conſecrate their temple to the Grecian Jupiter." Antiochus admitted their plea, and wrote to the governors of Samaria, to give the Samaritans no diſturbance on account of their religion.

Alexander the Great carried with him into Egypt ſix thouſand Samaritans, which Sanballat had ſent him from Tyre, as auxiliary troops. He appointed them lands in the Thebais, and truſted them with the ſecurity of that province. Theſe Samaritans retained their ancient antipathy againſt the Jews, maintaining that mount Gerizim was the true place where God was to be worſhipped: as the Jews, on the contrary, maintained that it was only at the temple of Jeruſalem. This diſpute was managed with ſuch warmth, that it grew into a kind of ſedition, and king Philometor himſelf examined the affair. It was argued in his preſence, and it was agreed between the contending parties, that no proofs ſhould be admitted but from the books of the law, and that the advocates who loſt the cauſe ſhould be put to death. Sabæus and Theodorus defended the Samaritans; and Andronicus, the ſon of Meſſalami was advocate for the Jews. The Jews gained their ſuit, and the king condemned to death the advocates of the Samaritans.

We do not warrant the truth of this fact; though it is affirmed by Joſephus, in a very circumſtantial manner. But we give ſtill leſs credit to what the Samaritans relate to their own advantage in their Chronicon, which was compoſed ſince Conſtantine's time, and under the Chriſtian emperors. Liber Jeſhue, ſeu Chronic. Samarit. apud Hottinger exercit. Antimorin.

They imagine that Joſhua cauſed a temple to be built on Gerizim, and appointed Rus, one of the houſe of Aaron, to perform divine ſervice. They produce a ſucceſſion of high-prieſts, who, ſay they, officiated here, quite from the time of Joſhua, to the preſent, without interruption. They will not admit that Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, was the firſt author of their ſchiſm; nor own the tranſplantation of the Iſraelites by Tiglath-pileſer and Shalmaneſer. They tell us, that the kings of Syria in confederacy with the king of Jeruſalem, revolted againſt Bachtnezer, king of the Perſians (for ſo they call Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon.) This prince brought an army, took Jeruſalem, paſſed from thence to Shechem, gave the inhabitants but ſeven days to quit the country, and threatened with the ſevereſt puniſhment thoſe who ſhould dare to continue in it beyond that time.

Then he ſent other people into Samaria and Judea, to inhabit the cities thus forſaken. But theſe new inhabitants could not live there, becauſe the fruits, which otherwiſe appeared fair, contained a poiſon, mortal to all who ate of them. When Bachtnezer was informed of this, he conſulted the original inhabitants; who declared that this evil would not be remedied, till the Hebrews were returned, who had been unjuſtly driven away. They obtained an edict that they ſhould all aſſemble together at one place, and all depart together for their own country. Then aroſe a diſpute among the Samaritans, ſons of Joſeph and Aaron, and the Jews, whether they ſhould return to Jeruſalem, and rebuild the temple of mount Sion; or to Shechem, to rebuild that of mount Gerizim. Zerubbabel, who eſpouſed the part of the Jews, maintained, that Jeruſalem was the place expreſſed in the writings of the prophets. Sanballat, who ſtood up for Gerizim, alledged, that thoſe writings had been corrupted. The determination of this difference was referred to the fire. The copy of Zerubabbel was conſumed in an inſtant; whereas that of Sanballat reſiſted the fire in three trials. For this reaſon the king honoured Sanballat, made him preſents, and ſent him back at the head of the ten tribes, who went to take poſſeſſion of mount Gerizim and Samaria.

We give ourſelves no trouble to refute this hiſtory, which is inconſiſtent with itſelf. The hiſtories of the Kings, the Chronicles, the books of Ezra and Nehemiah, and the writings of the prophets, inform us of the time, the cauſe, the circumſtances of the coming of the Cuthites into Samaria; the cauſe and the manner in which they embraced the law of the Jews. And Joſephus has acquainted us with the hiſtory and origin of the temple of Gerizim. The documents produced by the Samaritans are too modern, they have too much the appearance of fiction, and are contradicted by accounts of too undoubted authority, to deſerve credit.

The Rabbins have added to the hiſtory of Nehemiah, circumſtances much to the diſadvantage of the Samaritans. They tell us that theſe people, to the number of 180,000 men, going to beſet Jeruſalem; Ezra and Nehemiah aſſembled three hundred prieſts, who excommunicated them, according to the greater excommunication. Theſe prieſts were attended by three hundred young boys, each carrying a copy of the law in one hand, and a trumpet in the other. They ſounded the trumpet, at the ſame time that the Cuthites were excommunicated by the prieſts. They curſed whoever ſhould eat bread with them, with as heavy a curſe as if they ſhould eat pork. They aſked of God, that they might have no part in the future reſurrection, and that they might never be allowed to become proſelytes. This terrified the Cuthites in ſuch a manner, that they all betook themſelves to flight.

The Samaritans having received the Pentateuch, or the five books of Moſes, from the prieſt ſent by Eſar-haddon, have preſerved it to this day, in the ſame language and character as it was then, i. e. in the old Hebrew or Phœnician character; which we call the Samaritan, to diſtinguiſh it from the modern Hebrew character, now uſed in the books of the Jews: which it is wrong to call the Hebrew character; for that can be ſaid properly, only of the Samaritan text. Critics have noticed ſome variations between the Pentateuch of the Jews and that of the Samaritans; but theſe chiefly regard the word Gerizim, which the Samaritans ſeem to have introduced, to favour their pretenſions, that mount Gerizim was the place in which the Lord was to be adored. The other various readings are of ſmall importance.

The religion of this people was at firſt Pagan. Each worſhipped the deity he had been uſed to in his own country, 2 Kings xvii. 25. The Babylonians worſhipped Succoth-benoth; the Cuthites, Nergal; the Hamathites, Aſhima; the Avites, Nibhaz & Tartak; the Sepharvites, Adrammelech and Anammelech. If we would enumerate all the names of falſe gods, to whom the Samaritans paid a ſacrilegious worſhip, we ſhould have enough to do. This matter is ſufficiently perplexed, on account of the different names by which they were adored among different nations, inſomuch that it would be almoſt impoſſible to clear up this affair. We ſhall content ourſelves to relate thoſe only which are mentioned in Scripture, and of which we find ſomething in ancient monuments. 2 Kings xvii. 30, 31, & alibi. Vide their Articles: and FRAGMENTS, Nos. CCXII. CCXIII. and others.

All the gods worſhipped by the Samaritans, are included in theſe four verſes:

Numina, quæ Samaria colat, vis ſcire? tuere,
Semi-hominemque aſinum, ſemi-hominemque canem.
En Capriceps, Gallina, Pavo, ſaxumque Trigonum,
Et ſidus cœli: Numinis illa loco.

Afterwards, to this prophane worſhip the Samaritans added that of the Lord, the God of Iſrael. 2 Kings xvii. 29, 30, 31, 32. They gave proof of their little regard to this worſhip, when under Antiochus Epiphanes, they conſecrated their temple at Gerizim to Jupiter Argivus. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xi. cap. ult. In the time of Alexander the Great, they celebrated the ſabbatical year, and conſequently the year of Jubilee alſo: but we do not know whether they did it at the ſame time as the Jews. Under the kings of Syria they followed the epoch of the Greeks, or that of the Seleucidæ, as other people did who were under the government of the Seleucidæ. Petit. Ecl. Chronol. lib. ii. cap. 4. After Herod had reeſtabliſhed Samaria, and had given it the name of Sebaſte, the inhabitants of this city, in their medals, and public acts, took the date of this new eſtabliſhment. But theſe inhabitants of Samaria, of which the greater part were Pagans or Jews, were no rule to the other Samaritans, who probably reckoned their years according to the reigns of the emperors they were ſubject to, till they fell under the juriſdiction of the Mahometans, under which they live at this day; and they reckon their year by the Hegira, or, as they ſpeak, according to the reign of Iſhmael, or the Iſhmaelites.

Some of the ancients, as Epiphanius, hæreſ. 9. and St. Auſtin, lib. de hæreſ. have placed the Samaritans on the foot of heretics; but they were rather ſchiſmatics in reſpect to the Jews. They have no more relation to the Chriſtian religion than the Jews have, ſince they do not acknowledge Jeſus Chriſt as the Meſſiah, and are in expectation of another. As to their belief, it is objected to them, that they receive only the Pentateuch, and reject all the other books of Scripture, eſpecially the prophets, who have more expreſsly declared the coming of the Meſſiah. However, they ſay, in their letter to Ludolph, that they admit the book of Joſhua; but probably, by this name they mean their own Chronicon.

Chronicon. They have alſo been accuſed of believing God to be corporeal, of denying the Holy Ghoſt, and the reſurrection of the dead. Epiphan. hæreſ. 9. Greg. Mag. Moral. in Job, lib. i. cap. 6. lib. ii. cap. 19, &c. Jeſus Chriſt reproaches them with worſhipping what they know not. John iv. 22. Epiphanius ſays, they worſhipped the teraphim that Rachel brought away from Laban, and which Jacob hid under ground. Laſtly, it is ſaid, they paid a ſuperſtitious worſhip to a pigeon, or to the repreſentation of one, and that they even gave circumciſion in the name of a pigeon. Ita Rabb. quidam in Talmud. Ganz, Tzemach David. p. 106. Reland, in his letter to M. Baſnage, maintains, that they deny the exiſtence of angels; and Leontius among the ancients, had already aſſerted, that they denied angels, and the immortality of the ſoul.

The Samaritan woman, John iv. 25. is ſufficient teſtimony that the Samaritans expected a Meſſiah, who, they hoped, would diſſipate all doubts. Several of the inhabitants of Shechem believed at the preaching of Jeſus Chriſt, and many of Samaria believed at that of St. Philip; but it is ſaid, they ſoon fell back to their former errors, being perverted by Simon Magus: Vide Lightfoot in Mat. x. 5.

Joſephus informs us, Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 5. A. D. 36. that a certain impoſtor having perſuaded the Samaritans, that he would make a diſcovery of ſome ſacred veſſels which Moſes, [this is a groſs error, becauſe Moſes never entered into the Land of Promiſe; the Chronicon of the Samaritans ſay, that Oziz, the fifth high-prieſt from Aaron, had hid ſome ſacred veſſels.] had hid in a hollow place of the mountain; the credulous people followed him, and in a pretty large town called Tirataba, ſtaid for the reſt of the nation, who were to be ſpectators of this diſcovery. But Pilate, jealous of ſome intended inſurrection, ſent troops againſt the multitude, and the ringleaders of this aſſembly were puniſhed with death.

As to the preſent Samaritans, we may ſee by their letters written to their pretended brethren of England, and to Scaliger, that they believe in God, in his ſervant Moſes, the holy law, the mountain Gerizim, the houſe of God, the day of vengeance and of peace; that they value themſelves on obſerving the law of Moſes, in many points, more rigidly than the Jews themſelves. They keep the Sabbath with the utmoſt ſtrictneſs, never ſtirring from the place they are in, but to the ſynagogue. They go not out of the city, and they abſtain from marriage, on that day. They never delay circumciſion beyond the eighth day. They ſtill ſacrifice in a temple on mount Gerizim, and give to the prieſt what is enjoined by the law. They do not marry their own nieces, as the Jews do, nor allow themſelves a plurality of wives.

Their hatred for the Jews may be ſeen throughout the hiſtory of Joſephus, and in ſeveral places of the New Teſtament. The Jewiſh hiſtorian informs us, Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 3. that under the government of Coponius, one paſſover-night, when the gates of the temple were opened, ſome Samaritans ſcattered the bones of dead men there, to inſult the Jews, and to interrupt the devotion of the feſtival. The evangeliſts ſhew us, that the Jews and Samaritans held no correſpondence together, John iv. 9. And the Samaritan woman of Sychar was much ſurprized, that Jeſus talked with her, and aſked drink of her, who was a Samaritan. When our Saviour ſent his apoſtles to preach in Judea, he forbad them to enter into the Samaritan cities, Mat. x. 5. One day when he ſent his diſciples to provide him a lodging in a city of the Samaritans, they would not entertain him, becauſe his face was as though he would go to Jeruſalem, Luke ix. 52, 53. And when the Jews were provoked at Jeſus Chriſt, they called him a Samaritan, thinking they could call him nothing worſe, John viii. 48. Joſephus relates, that ſome Samaritans having killed ſeveral Jews as they were going to the feaſt at Jeruſalem, this occaſioned a kind of war between them. The Samaritans continued their fealty to the Romans, when the Jews revolted; yet they did not eſcape from being involved in ſome of the calamities of their neighbours. See Joſephus de Bello, lib. iii. cap. 22.

The Chronicon Samaritanum, apud Hotting. p. 116, ſays, that the emperor Adrian having razed Jeruſalem, paſſed on to Naplouſe, otherwiſe Shechem, and took all their books from them, not leaving ſo much as their genealogies and hiſtories. They were forbid to circumciſe their children; but they ſent them directly as they were born, into the caverns of the earth, where they received the ſign of the covenant, and they did not return till they were cured. The Romans mingled hog's-fleſh in the feaſts of the Samaritans, who were forced to uſe great induſtry to avoid eating of it. They placed a pigeon on mount Gerizim, to hinder them from going thither to worſhip; and they poſted troops at the foot of the mountain, to ſtop thoſe who would go up notwithſtanding the prohibition. Some of them were bold enough to attempt going up, and cunning enough to eſcape the watch; but the bird diſcovered them, and cried out, The Hebrews! The guards at this awoke, and ſlew thoſe who were coming up.

This calamity continued till Babar-raba ſent one of his nephews, called Levi, to go through a courſe of ſtudy at Conſtantinople. This young man made ſo great a progreſs in learning, that he was made patriarch, and obtained of the emperor the liberty of returning to Gerizim. His deſign was to free his nation from the yoke of the Romans, and to reſtore its former liberty. We are not told what became of him afterwards, for here ends the Chronicon of the Samaritans. What it ſays of the city of Conſtantinople, is a ſufficient proof that this Chronicon cannot be ancient. Juſtin Martyr aſſures us, that when the emperor Antoninus Pius granted the Jews the liberty of circumciſing their children, he excepted the Samaritans. This holy man being himſelf of Shechem, might be well informed of this fact. Symmachus, the famous tranſlator of the holy Scriptures out of the Hebrew into Greek, was a Samaritan. He left his country, and became a Jew; and for this received a ſecond circumciſion.

Under the empire of Zeno, the Samaritans made themſelves a king in the city of Naplouſe, and killed many Chriſtians. But Zeno puniſhed them ſeverely, and put their king to death. They revolted again under the empire of Juſtinian, burnt the churches of the Holy Land, and maſſacred many Chriſtians; among others the biſhop of Naplouſe. Juſtinian was forced to ſend regular troops againſt them, who deſtroyed moſt of the rebels.

The Chronicon of the Samaritans, called Tarik Samari, intimates, that the Samaritans ſeparated from the ancient Jews after the death of Samſon, under the pontificate of Eli; becauſe, they ſay, it was then that the preſence and favour of the Lord, which they call Redhat, and Red-honan, departed from them, and that then darkneſs expelled the light, and involved all in Paleſtine, except thoſe who then withdrew to mount Gerizim, where they have conſtantly had prieſts ſince that time, and afterwards kings of their own to govern them. D'Herbelot, Bibl. Orient. p. 753.

There are at this day ſome Samaritans at Shechem, otherwiſe Naplouſe. They have prieſts there, who ſay, they are of the family of Aaron. They have a high-prieſt at Shechem, or at Gerizim, who offers ſacrifices there, and who declares the feaſt of the paſſover, and all the other feaſts, to the diſperſed Samaritans. Some are found at Gaza, ſome at Damaſcus, and ſome at Grand Cairo. Scaliger received a letter from the Samaritans of Shechem, printed in 1676. They have alſo written ſince to their pretended brethren in England, and M. Ludolf printed a letter in 1688, which he received from them.

Samaritan-Pentateuch. This is the five books of Moſes written in Samaritan characters, or the Hebrew characters uſed before the captivity of Babylon. Vide PENTATEUCH, and SAMARITAN. Copies of the Samaritan Pentateuch were unknown in Europe till the ſixteenth century. The famous archbiſhop Uſher was the firſt, or at leaſt one of the firſt, who procured it out of the Eaſt. This learned man having obſerved, that Euſebius of Cæſarea, Diodorus of Tarſus, Jerom, Cyril of Alexandria, Procopius of Gaza, Georgius Syncellus, and others, had quoted the Samaritan Pentateuch; he could not reſt till he had procured five or ſix copies out of Syria or Paleſtine. By examining theſe copies carefully, he thought he could diſcover that they had been corrupted by one Doſitheus, of whom Origen makes mention in his firſt book againſt Celſus: an opinion in which the learned do not agree with him.

Pietro della Valle bought a very neat copy at Damaſcus, A. D. 1616, for M. de Sanci, then ambaſſador of France to Conſtantinople, and afterwards biſhop of St. Maloes. This book was preſented to the fathers of the Oratory, Rue St. Honoré, where it is preſerved. From this copy father Morinus printed the Samaritan Pentateuch in 1632, which is in M. le Jay's Polyglot, which was the firſt printed copy. It has been ſince printed more correctly in Walton's Polyglot, from three Samaritan manuſcripts that belonged to Uſher.

Critics are much divided about the Samaritan Pentateuch. Father Simon in his Critical Hiſtory of the Old Teſtament, lib. i. cap. 10. is of opinion, that the prieſt ſent by king Eſar-haddon, to the Cuthites, did not carry with him the books of the law of Moſes, which would have been uſeleſs to a people that did not underſtand Hebrew, and to himſelf alſo, ſince without this book, he could practice the ceremonies of the law, in which he had been inured from his infancy. Therefore it was a long time after this, viz. when Manaſſeh undertook to build a temple on mount Gerizim, that they carried thither the copy of the law, as it was made, or reformed, by Eſdras, and which the Jews read in their temple at Jeruſalem.

M. Vandal

M. Vandale maintains, epiſt. ad Morin. in tract. de Idolatr. that we muſt diſtinguiſh between the law and the Pentateuch. The volume of the law, contained only ſuch ordinances, the obſervation of which was neceſſary for ſecuring the people from the anger of God; but the Pentateuch comprehended the hiſtory of the creation of the world, of the bondage of the Jews in Egypt, of their deliverance, of their wanderings in the wilderneſs, and the body of laws compiled by Moſes. The prieſt ſent by Eſar-haddon, brought to the Samaritans only that law which was neceſſary for the obſervation of the rites of the Hebrews; but the Pentateuch that was loſt or buried under the ruins of Jeruſalem, was reſtored and reformed by Eſdras, and could not be communicated to the Samaritans till a long time afterwards.

Another critic (underſtood to be Le Clerc) thinks, that he has diſcovered in the Pentateuch of the Jews and the Samaritans, traces of an author that had lived beyond the Euphrates, who was acquainted with that country, and who mentions ſome particulars of it, which Moſes could not have any knowledge of. He therefore imagines, that the Pentateuch was compoſed by the prieſt who was ſent to the Cuthites or Samaritans. This man, who came from Chaldea to inſtruct thoſe idolaters, thought proper to write them a hiſtory of the creation of the world, and of Hebrew affairs, till the delivery of the law: that he might ſhew them there was but one God. As he wrote this exactly in the eighteenth year of Joſiah, in which the copy of the law was found in the temple, he inſerted this piece into his own work, as being very eſſential to it. He wrote the whole in Hebrew, becauſe he had not had time enough to learn the Chaldee tongue. The Jews made no difficulty of receiving this work; becauſe the author was not ſuſpected by them, and becauſe the book contained only their hiſtory and their law. Surely this is chooſing difficulties, in order to avoid ſuppoſed inconveniencies!

The generality of divines believe, that the Samaritan Pentateuch, and that of the Jews, are but one and the ſame work, written in the ſame language, but in different characters; and, that the differences between them proceed only from the inadvertency or inaccuracy of copiers; or from the affectation of the Samaritans, who have added ſome things favourable to their own intereſts and pretenſions; that the additions were inſerted afterwards; but that, originally, theſe two copies were the ſame. According to this opinion, it muſt be allowed, that the Pentateuch of the Jews is preferable to that of the Samaritans, as being exempt from the alterations made in the latter. But, on the contrary, others prefer the Samaritan Pentateuch, as an original, preſerved in the ſame character, and the ſame condition, in which Moſes compoſed it.

Dr. Prideaux, Connect. tom. ii. lib. vi. ante A. D. 409. who eſpouſes M. Simon's ſyſtem, maintains, that the Pentateuch of the Samaritans, is only a copy, in other characters, from the text compoſed, or reformed, by Eſdras; that even this copy has been altered by variations, tranſpoſitions, and remarkable additions. To prove, that the Samaritan code is only a copy, he ſays (1) It has all the interpretations of the edition of Eſdras; which it would not have, if it were more ancient. (2) There are ſeveral variations in the Samaritan Pentateuch, which evidently proceed from miſtaking one Hebrew letter for another that is like it; though, in the Samaritan alphabet, thoſe two letters have no reſemblance. This inconteſtably proves, ſays he, that it was Manaſſeh the ſon-in-law of Sanballat, who brought the Pentateuch with him, when he took refuge among the Samaritans. And as the Samaritans were then accuſtomed to the Phœnician letters, the Pentateuch was written in thoſe characters, for their uſe.

As to the variations, the additions, and tranſpoſitions found in the Samaritan Pentateuch, when compared with the Hebrew, they are all carefully collected, with the utmoſt exactneſs, in the book written by Hottinger againſt father Morinus, and in the confronting of the two texts, which is inſerted in the laſt volume of the Engliſh Polyglot. Of theſe interpolations, ſome are for the better underſtanding of the text; others are a kind of paraphraſe, expreſſing at length, what was only hinted at in the original: others are ſuch changes as the Samaritans have purpoſely made, to favour their pretenſions againſt the Jews; as when, for example, they put Gerizim inſtead of Ebal. Other variations are only pure lapſes of tranſcribers.

Beſide the Hebrew Pentateuch in Phœnician characters, of which we have been ſpeaking, the Samaritans have another, in the language which they ſpoke at the time when Manaſſeh took ſhelter among them. This language is a mixture of the Chaldee, the Syrian, and the Hebrew, or Phœnician. And, juſt as the Jews were obliged, in favour of thoſe who did not underſtand the pure Hebrew, to make verſions or paraphraſes in Chaldee; ſo the Samaritans had their Pentateuch in the vulgar Samaritan tongue. This is called the Samaritan Verſion, which differs from the Jewiſh paraphraſes, they being gloſſes and explications; plications; whereas the Samaritan Verſion is literal, and expreſſes the text word for word: it is printed with the Samaritan text in the polyglot of Paris, and alſo in that of London; and becauſe of its great conformity with the text, they have only given one Latin verſion for both.

SAMEGA, a city of Judea, taken by Hyrcanus. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 17. He calls it Samæa, lib. i. cap. 2. de Bello. Perhaps it is the Shema, Joſh. xv. 26. שמע Shemeſh.

SAMOS, Σάμος, ſand; from the Greek, Ἄμμος, ſand.

SAMOS, an iſland of the Archipelago, on the coaſt of Aſia Minor. The Romans wrote to the governor of Samos in favour of the Jews, in the time of Simon Maccabæus, A. M. 3865, ante A. D. 139. 1 Macc. xv. 23. St. Paul went aſhore in the ſame iſland, as he went to Jeruſalem, A. D. 58. Acts xx. 15. Iſaiah, xlv. 9. ſpeaks of the veſſels of clay of Samos; according to the Vulgate, Væ qui contradicit fictori ſuo, teſta de Samiis terræ; woe to the man who diſputes againſt him that has formed him; man, who is but a potſherd of an earthern veſſel of Samos. But the Hebrews reads only, a veſſel of clay in the midſt of veſſels of clay.

SAMOTHRACIA, Σαμοθράκη, an iſland: ſo called becauſe it was peopled by Samians and Thracians, Acts xvi. 11.

SAMOTHRACIA, an iſland of the Ægean Sea. St. Paul, departing from Troas, for Macedonia, arrived firſt at Samothracia, then landed in Macedonia. Acts xvi. 11.

SAMSON, שמשון, his ſun; from שמש ſhemeſh, the ſun, and the pronoun ן an, his: according to the Syriac, his ſervice, or his miniſtry; from שמש.

SAMSON, ſon of Manaoh, of the tribe of Dan, and of a mother whoſe name we do not find in Scripture, Judg. xiii. 2, 3, 4, &c. A. M. 2848, ante A. D. 1156. This woman had been long barren; and an angel of the Lord appeared to her, telling her ſhe ſhould have a ſon; but ſhe muſt take care, not to drink intoxicating liquor, or to eat any impure food: that ſhe muſt take the ſame care, with regard to her ſon: and muſt conſecrate him to God from his infancy, as a Nazarite, and not let a razor come upon his head; for, ſays the angel, he ſhall begin to deliver Iſrael from the hands of the Philiſtines. Samſon was born the year following; and the ſpirit of God gave him extraordinary ſtrength of body. One day, as Samſon went to Timnath, a city of the Philiſtines, he ſaw a young woman, whom he deſired his father and mother to obtain for his wife. They remonſtrated that ſhe was not of their own nation, but he perſevered; and the young woman was agreed to be given in marriage to Samſon.

As he was going to Timnath, Samſon ſaw a young lion, whom he ſeized, and tore in pieces, as if he had been a kid. Some time after, returning thither, to celebrate his marriage there, he went to ſee the carcaſe of the lion. He found it dried up, and a ſwarm of bees lodged in it, which had there formed an honey-comb. When his wedding-feaſt was kept at Timnath, the inhabitants provided thirty young men for Samſon, to do him honour.

Samſon propoſed to theſe companions a riddle, to this effect:

["The greedy eater yields to others meat,
"And ſavage ſtrength now offers luſcious ſweet."]

They continued to the ſeventh day, conjecturing the meaning of his riddle. Then, partly by threats, partly by entreaties, they urged the bride to get the ſecret from her huſband, which ſhe told again to them. Before ſun-ſet they came to Samſon, ſaying, ["What ſweeter flows than honey o'er the tongue?

"Whoſe ſtrength exceeds a lion's, wild and young?"]

He told them, that if they had not ploughed with his heifer, they could never have expounded his riddle. Meaning by that, that they had abuſed him, in their too great familiarity with his wife, and that ſhe had been unfaithful to him. We have a ſimilar phraſeology in the poets,

Ἐχθαίρω . . . . . ἄνδρα ξεῖνον μαργὸν,
Ὃς τὴν ἀλλοτρίην βουλεῖ ἀρῆσθαι ἀρόσσαν.
THEOGNID. Sent. 58.

Milo domi non eſt, peregrè ac Milone profecto,
Arva vacant, uxur non minus inde parit.
MARTIAL. lib. vii.

He paid the fine expected on account of the riddle, but left his wife, and returned to his father. Some time after, the woman married the bride-man of Samſon at his wedding. Samſon's anger being ſubſided, he returned to ſee his wife, bringing a kid with him. But her father would not let him go in, ſaying, I thought you had hated her, and therefore I have given her to another. Samſon then went and caught three hundred hundred foxes (Jackalls, vide FRAGMENT, No. CCIX. page 38), which he tied tail to tail, and each pair had a fire-brand between. He ſet fire to the fire-brands, and turned the foxes into the corn-fields of the Philiſtines; the flame made a great havoc, not ſparing even the vines and the olive-trees. When the Philiſtines knew it was Samſon who had done this, to revenge the affront received from his father-in-law at Timnath, they burned that man and his daughter. Samſon ſlew a great number of Philiſtines. The Hebrew ſays, יד אותם שוק על ירד He beat them, the thigh upon the leg. As we ſay, hip and thigh, or back and belly. The Vulgate ſays, He made ſo great a ſlaughter of them, that putting the leg upon the thigh, they remained quite ſlain. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXLIII. page 85. and then retired into the cave of Etam, in Judah. When the Philiſtines knew this, they came in great numbers into the land of Judah; and the people of Judah bound him, and brought him, by his ſufferance, to the Philiſtines. No ſooner did they ſee him thus bound, but they ſet up loud ſhouts, and were about to ſeize him. But the ſpirit of the Lord animating Samſon, he ſnapt the cords which bound him, and happening to find the jaw-bone of an aſs, he, with this weapon, ſlew a thouſand of the Philiſtines. Throwing away the jaw-bone, he gave that place the name of Ramath-lehi, i. e. the lifting up of the jaw-bone. Being overcome with extreme thirſt; and crying to the Lord, the Lord opened a rock which was in that place (called Makteſh, i. e. the jaw-tooth) from whence water guſhed out to aſſuage his thirſt. Vide LEHI, and MAKTESH.

After this Samſon went to Gaza, a city of the Philiſtines, and having there ſeen a harlot, or a woman who kept a public houſe, he went to lodge with her. The Philiſtines ſet a guard about this houſe, and another at the gates of the city, to kill him as he went out in the morning. But Samſon riſing at midnight, went off, and took away the two gates of the city, and the gate-poſts, bar and chain, and carried them up the hill which is near Hebron.

Some time afterwards he fell in love with a woman called Dalilah, who dwelt in the valley of Sorek. Many of the antients thought, that Samſon had taken her as his wife; but moſt maintain, that ſhe was never married to Samſon, but was a public woman. The Philiſtines bribed this woman, to diſcover in what his extraordinary ſtrength conſiſted. He amuſed her for a conſiderable time, pretending his ſtrength conſiſted ſometimes in one thing, and ſometimes in another; and when the Philiſtines were ready to ſeize him, he burſt his bonds aſunder. At laſt Dalilah teized him ſo much, that he told her his ſtrength lay in his hair, which had never been ſhorn, becauſe he was a Nazarite from his mother's womb. Dalilah then cut off his hair as he lay ſleeping in her lap; and the Philiſtines fell upon him, bound him, and put out his eyes. They took him to Gaza, ſhut him up in priſon, and made him grind at the mill, as a baſe and contemptible ſlave. Some take the word here rendered by grinding in an obſcene ſenſe; as alſo in Job xxxi. 10. and Lam. v. 13. Vide Hieronym. in Iſai. xlvii. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CIX. page 16.

It is inquired, whether Samſon's hair was the natural and phyſical cauſe of his ſtrength; or whether it was only the moral cauſe, and, as it were, the pledge of the aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit, who thought fit to endue him with this prodigious ſtrength, as a permanent quality, ſo long as he ſhould obſerve the laws of Nazariteſhip, and ſhould keep his hair untouched, which was the viſible token of it. This laſt opinion, ſeems to be the moſt probable: for though a ſtrong and thick head of hair, may be a token of natural ſtrength, yet that ſtrength will not be the leſs after the hair is cut off. But it was not ſo with Samſon: therefore his hair was neither the cauſe nor the natural ſign of his great ſtrength; his ſtrength was ſupernatural and miraculous, and God thought fit to connect it with Samſon's hair; or with his due obſervance of the Nazariteſhip that had been injoined him.

[The preſervation of his hair was a ſign of the OBEDIENCE maintained on his part, and his conſtant compliance with the divine orders: while his compliance laſted unbroke, God's fulfilment of his part, i. e. the communication of ſupernatural ſtrength, continued unbroke alſo: but when Samſon had, by the loſs of his hair, evidently betrayed his truſt, and forfeited his diſtinction, God thought proper to ſuſpend his conditional donation, becauſe the condition was broke by Samſon: he had loſt the viſible pledge of it on his part, and had now nothing to ſhew in proof of his obedience, and to alledge, as any reaſon to expect, or to hope, wherefore that gift ſhould be continued to him.]

Samſon continued in priſon at Gaza about a year. His hair growing again, [Judg. xvi. 22. the Hebrew ſays literally, The hairs of his head began to put forth as they were ſhaved: which ſome explain, as if they were reſtored to the ſame condition they were in before. Vat. Jun.] God reſtored him his ſtrength. The princes of the Philiſtines met in a general aſſembly, in the temple of their god Dagon, to return him thanks for having delivered to them this their formidable enemy. After they had ended their feaſt, they ordered Samſon to be ſent for, that they might make ſport with him, and be diverted by him: after they had inſulted him as long as they thought fit; he deſired him who led him, to let him lean againſt the pillars that ſupported the temple, that he might reſt himſelf. The temple was then full of people, both above and below the galleries. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CCIV. page 22. Samſon calling upon the name of the Lord, and laying hold of the two pillars, by which the temple was ſupported, one in his right-hand, and the other in his left, he ſaid; let me alſo die with the Philiſtines. Then violently ſhaking the pillars, the temple fell on the princes and people, and killed about three thouſand perſons. He lived in the whole about thirty-eight years; and was judge of Iſrael about twenty years. Judges xvi. 20. from A. M. 2867 to 2887.

Ought Samſon to have put himſelf to death? And ſhould he have ſought revenge for the loſs of his eyes? St. Bernard maintains, that if he had not a particular inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt to move him, he could not without ſin be the author of his own death. St. Auſtin alſo, does not excuſe him, but on the ſuppoſition, that he was urged by the inward motions of him, who is maſter of life and death. Others maintain, that this action of Samſon might be vindicated from his office, as being the judge and defender of Iſrael; and therefore, without conſidering the danger he expoſed himſelf to, he might have nothing in view but the deliverance of his people. St. Paul places him among thoſe whoſe faith was commended and recompenſed, Heb. xi. 32.

SAMUEL, שמואל. See Shemuel.

SAMUEL, ſon of Elkanah, and of Hannah, of the tribe of Levi, and of the family of Kohath; he was a prophet and judge of Iſrael for ſeveral years, 1 Sam. i. 1, 2, 3, &c. 1 Chron. vi. 23. His father dwelt at Ramathaim-Zophim, or the city of Ramatha, inhabited by Levites of the family of Zophai or Zuph, a deſcendant of Kohath. Samuel dwelt there himſelf the greater part of his time. See RAMATH. It is diſputed whether Samuel was a prieſt or no. Some of the ancients believed, he was of the race of Aaron, and excerciſed the function of high-prieſt. He wore the ephod, 1 Sam. ii. 18; he conſecrated two kings, Saul and David; he offered ſacrifices, and that out of the tabernacle. The Pſalmiſt, xcix. 6. places him in the rank of prieſts; Moſes and Aaron among his prieſts, and Samuel among them that call upon his name. Joſephus, Antiq. lib. vii. cap. 15, ſays, that Samuel appeared to Saul in a ſacerdotal habit. We find no one of the family of the high-prieſt Eli, after the death of Hophni and Phinehas, who could exerciſe the high-prieſt's office. It is therefore very probable, that Samuel performed the duties of this office, till the grandſons of Eli were of age to take it.

But, it is replied, that Samuel not being of the race of Aaron, it is unlikely he ſhould have been high-prieſt. His wearing an ephod, his anointing kings, and even his ſacrificing in extraordinary caſes, will not prove him to be a prieſt. David wore the ephod; Gideon and Saul had ſacrificed; ſome of the prophets conſecrated kings; Samuel is put in the number of thoſe who call upon the Lord, i. e. the Levites. As to the age of the children of Hophni and Phinehas, we have nothing certain; and if any one was to be employed to perform the functions of the high-prieſt, they choſe rather a prieſt than a mere Levite. Upon the whole, therefore, it is beſt to conſider Samuel as an extraordinary prophet, but not as intruding into an office which did not appertain to him.

Elkanah, father of Samuel, had two wives, Peninnah, and Hannah. Peninnah had children; but Hannah was barren. Elkanah loved Hannah tenderly, and was much concerned that ſhe had no children. One day when he went with his family to Shiloh, where the ark of the Lord then was, he there offered peace-offerings, and made an entertainment for his wives and children. Hannah ſeeing herſelf alone, while Peninnah was ſurrounded with a troop of children, began to lament; riſing from table, ſhe went to the tabernacle, where ſhe poured out her heart before the Lord, and made a vow, that if God would give her a ſon, ſhe would dedicate him to his ſervice all his life; that ſhe would make him a Nazarite, and would ſuffer no razor to come on his head.

Hannah, being returned to Ramatha, conceived, and had a ſon, whom ſhe named Samuel, ſaying: Becauſe I have aſked him of the Lord. [Samuel is put for Saul-me-el: שאול מאל aſked of the Lord.] When the child was ſomewhat grown, ſhe brought him to Shiloh, to the houſe of the Lord, with an offering, &c. See HANNAH. Young Samuel officiated in the temple, and was clothed with a linen ephod, 1 Sam. ii. 18, 19, 20.

Eli was now become very old, and his eye-ſight was ſo dim, that he could hardly ſee. He had heard heard of the irregularities of his two ſons Hophni and Phinehas, but had not courage to reſtrain them, nor power to remove the ſcandal they cauſed to Iſrael. One morning, when Samuel was in bed, near the tabernacle of the Lord, he heard a voice, calling him by his name, very early. Samuel thinking it was Eli, ran to him, and ſaid, here am I. Eli bid him return, and lie down to ſleep, for he had not called him. The ſame thing happened three times. The third time Eli, judging there muſt be ſomething extraordinary in the matter, ſent Samuel back, and ſaid to him, go and ſleep, but if you are called any more, ſay; ſpeak, Lord, for thy ſervant heareth.

Samuel obeyed: and received a threatening prophecy againſt Eli, and his houſe. When day was come, Eli called Samuel, and obliged him to diſcover what the Lord had ſaid. Samuel told him the whole; to which Eli anſwered, it is the Lord, let him do what is pleaſing in his own eyes.

The battle in which the ark of the Lord was taken by the Philiſtines; the death of the high-prieſt Eli, and that of his two ſons Hophni and Phinehas; the manner in which the ark of the Lord was ſent back to Beth-ſhemeſh, and from thence placed at Kirjath-jearim: may be ſeen at length in the firſt book of Samuel, chap. iv. v. vi. Vide alſo the articles ELI, HOPHNI, and PHINEHAS, the ARK and DAGON.

After the death of Eli the high-prieſt, Samuel was acknowledged as judge and governor by all Iſrael. He inſiſted on the reformation of the people; and they renounced all their ſtrange gods, and applied themſelves wholly to ſerve the God of their fathers. Afterwards, Samuel convened another aſſembly at Mizpeh, where all the people met in arms. Samuel prayed for them; they faſted and prayed, poured out water before the Lord; confeſſed their ſins, and Samuel judged them. The Philiſtines hearing that Iſrael was aſſembled at Mizpeh, took the alarm, and came into the field againſt them, but were defeated ſo ſignally, that for a long time they durſt not appear on the frontiers of Iſrael; but were obliged to reſtore ſuch cities as they had taken.

Samuel was about forty years of age when he began to judge Iſrael. He judged them the whole of his life; for under the reign of Saul he preſerved a great deal of authority, as well in reſpect of Saul himſelf, as of the whole people. He went yearly to Bethel, then to Gilgal, then to Mizpeh; aftewards he returned to his houſe at Ramah, and ſo diſtributed juſtice to all Iſrael. He alſo built an altar at Ramah, as well for his private devotion, as for the religion of the people, who flocked to him from all parts, to conſult him, and to have their cauſes decided. When he grew old, he appointed his ſons judges over Iſrael, and they diſcharged this office in Beer-ſheba, a city lying on the ſouthern limits of the land of Canaan. But they, inſtead of walking in the ſteps of their father, ſuffered themſelves to be corrupted by bribery.

Then the elders of Iſrael came to Samuel, and ſaid, ſet a king over us, as all other nations have, who may judge us. This propoſal was not agreeable to Samuel, and he addreſſed himſelf to God by prayer. The Lord ſaid to him; hear the voice of the people, and give them what they aſk for, for it is not you, but me, they have rejected, that I may not reign over them. But declare to them what they may expect under a king, that they may commit this folly after full information.

A little while after, Saul, the ſon of Kiſh, of the tribe of Benjamin, being ſent by his father to ſeek ſome aſſes that were ſtrayed, came to adviſe with Samuel about them; the prophet told him, that God had appointed him king over his people; and he gave Saul the royal unction. Vide SAUL. After which Samuel held an aſſembly of the people at Mizpeh, that they might proceed to elect a king. The lot was caſt, and fell upon Saul, the ſon of Kiſh. He was ſought for immediately, but was not to be found. They ran therefore to where he had hid himſelf, and brought him forth among the people. Samuel then ſaid, you ſee the man whom the Lord hath choſen. After this he wrote down the laws and conſtitutions of this new kingdom, and publiſhed them.

A month was ſcarcely paſſed after Saul's election, when a war broke out between the Ammonites and the city of Jabeſh, in Gilead. Saul, with all Iſrael, marched againſt the Ammonites, and relieved Jabeſh. At their return from this expedition, Samuel ſaid to the people, let us go to Gilgal, and there confirm the election of the king. They did ſo; offered peace-offerings, and made great rejoicings. Then Samuel addreſſed himſelf to the people, and aſked them, whether they had had any fault to find with his conduct? The people anſwered, no. Samuel proceeded, and ſaid to them, the Lord is therefore my witneſs to day, and ſo is alſo the king he has appointed, that you have nothing to reproach me with. To which the people anſwered, they are witneſſes. Samuel then exhorted them to loyalty and to obedience. To which he added, is it not now wheat-harveſt? (A ſeaſon in which rain is very rare in Paleſtine)—yet I ſhall call upon the Lord, and he will ſend out his thunder, and ſhower down his rain, that you may know how great an evil it is in the eyes of the Lord, that you have preſumed to aſk for a king. After which tempeſt every one returned to his own houſe.

In the ſecond year after his election, Saul being in arms againſt the Philiſtines, ſtaid at Gilgal ſix days expecting Samuel, but ſeeing he did not come, on the ſeventh day, he had the victims brought to him, and offered a burnt-ſacrifice.

He had hardly compleated his ſacrifice when Samuel came. Saul went out to meet him, and ſaluted him; Samuel enquired, what have you been doing? Saul replied, that ſeeing himſelf preſſed by the Philiſtines, and almoſt abandoned by his ſoldiers, he had offered a burnt-offering. Samuel told him, that he had committed folly. If, ſays he, you had obeyed the commandment of the Lord, the Lord would have confirmed your kingdom over Iſrael for ever; but now your reign will not long continue. From thence Samuel went to Gibeah, and Saul followed him.

After this Samuel came to Saul, by order from God, to bid him make war againſt the Amalekites. Spare none, ſays he, but deſtroy all; they are all devoted to the curſe of extirpation, both man, woman, and child, even thoſe that ſuck the breaſt; even their oxen, camels, ſheep, and aſſes. Saul therefore marched againſt Amalek, deſtroyed them, and ravaged the whole country; but he thought fit to preſerve the better part of their goods and cattle. Then God ſaid to Samuel, I repent that I have made Saul king. Samuel was much afflicted at this, and cried to the Lord all night. The day following he viſited Saul at Gilgal, where he was offering a ſacrifice of the flocks taken from Amalek. Saul ſaluted him, and told him, he had performed the commands of the Lord. Whence then, ſays Samuel, is this lowing of oxen, and bleating of ſheep, in my ears? Saul anſwered him, the people brought away the prime, to offer in ſacrifice to the Lord. Samuel upbraided him vehemently with his want of obedience; and Saul threw all the blame on the people.

Then ſays Saul to Samuel, I have ſinned in having had too great complaiſance for the people; but come with me, that we may worſhip the Lord. Samuel refuſed, and turned haſtily away from him to be gone; and Saul taking hold of Samuel's garment, it tore in his hands. On which Samuel ſaid to him; thus has the Lord torn the kingdom out of your hands, to give it to another, who is better than you. Saul replied, I confeſs I have ſinned, but however, do me the credit of appearing with me before the elders of the people, and before all Iſrael: and let us worſhip the Lord. Samuel complied, and they returned to the camp at Gilgal. There Samuel cauſed Agag, king of the Amalekites, whoſe life had been ſaved, to be brought out, and Samuel hewed him pieces, and told him, that, as his ſword had made many mothers childleſs, ſo likewiſe ſhould his mother be made childleſs among women. Vide FRAGMENT, No. LIII, page 102. Then Samuel returned to Ramah. From this time Samuel ſaw Saul no more; nevertheleſs he continually bewailed him.

Some years after this, the Lord ſaid to Samuel, how long will you mourn for Saul? Ariſe and go to Bethlehem, and give the royal unction to one of the ſons of Jeſſe, whom I have choſen to be king of my people. Samuel anſwered, how ſhall I go? Saul will be informed of it, and will put me to death. The Lord ſaid to him, go thither as if to ſacrifice; invite Jeſſe to partake of the ſacrifice, and there I will ſhew you him whom you are to anoint. Samuel went therefore to Bethlehem, and all the elders of the place came to ſhew their reſpect to him, and he invited them to the ſolemnity of the ſacrifice. When he went into Jeſſe's houſe, all the ſons of this venerable old man came to ſalute him. Samuel ſeeing Eliab the eldeſt, ſaid within himſelf, ſurely this is he whom the Lord hath choſen as his anointed. But the Lord anſwered, have no regard to a good appearance, or an advantageous ſtature; for this is not he whom I have choſen. Jeſſe cauſed his ſeven ſons, one after another, to pay their reſpects; but Samuel found God had not choſen either of theſe. Jeſſe ſaid, he had ſtill a younger ſon, but he was keeping the ſheep. Send for him, ſays Samuel, for we will not ſit down to table till he comes. The eighth ſon of Jeſſe was David, who was fetched out of the field; and when he came in, the Lord ſaid to Samuel, anoint him, for this is he. Samuel poured on his head the oil he had brought with him; and from that time the ſpirit of the Lord departed from Saul, and reſted on David.

Samuel returned to Ramah, and dwelt there the reſt of his life, among the prophets, who lived under his conduct in a kind of community. Several years after, when David was in diſgrace with Saul, and had with difficulty eſcaped out of his hands, he took refuge with Samuel at Ramah. He acquainted him with Saul's behaviour towards wards him; and they went together to Naioth. Saul had intelligence of this, and ſent a party to ſurprize David. But the meſſengers finding Samuel, who was then propheſying in the midſt of the prophets, they were alſo ſeized by the ſpirit, and began to propheſy among them; i. e. they were ſurprized with certain irregular motions and agitations, and pronounced certain words, as the prophets were uſed to do in their fits of enthuſiaſm. [Perhaps, rather—finding theſe prophets at their devotions, they were ſeized by a ſpirit of devotion, and united their praiſes, &c. with thoſe of the prophets.] Saul ſent a ſecond, and a third, company of meſſengers, who were ſeized in like manner. Laſtly, he went himſelf, and was ſeized with the ſpirit of God [rather—of devotion, for the time being], and propheſied among the reſt. This delay gave David an opportunity to eſcape.

Samuel died at the age of ninety eight, about two years before Saul; A. M. 2947, ante A. D. 1057. All Iſrael mourned for him, and he was buried at his own houſe at Ramah, 1 Sam. xxv. 1. The author of Eccleſiaſticus, has conſecrated an eulogy to his memory, Ecclus. xlvi. 13, 17, 20.

About two years after the death of Samuel, the Philiſtines, having invaded the territories of Iſrael with a powerful army, Saul, with his troops, took poſſeſſion of the eminencies of Gilboa. This prince being in great conſternation at the multitude of his enemies, reſolved at laſt to conſult ſome witch or ſorcereſs, to foreknow the event of this war. He was informed of an enchantreſs at En-dor, about two or three leagues from mount Gilboa. He diſguiſed himſelf, and viſited her, with a ſmall attendance, that the witch might not know him; becauſe, ſome years before, he had drove all of her profeſſion out of the country.

This woman he deſired to raiſe the ghoſt of Samuel. She had recourſe to her charms and ſpells, and when ſhe ſaw Samuel appear, ſhe made a great cry, and ſaid to Saul, why have you deceived me, for you are Saul? Saul encouraged her, and aſked her, what ſhe ſaw? I ſee, ſaid ſhe, gods [elohim, in the ſenſe of a magiſtrate, or prince, &c.] coming out of the earth. Saul aſked her what ſort of a man? She ſaid, an old man covered with a mantle. Saul knew it to be Samuel, and bowed himſelf to the earth. Samuel ſaid, why have you diſturbed me? Saul anſwered, that being in great ſtraights, and not knowing whom to addreſs, becauſe God gave him no anſwer, he found himſelf neceſſitated to have recourſe to him, by magic. Samuel told him, that the Lord would deal with him as he had already predicted, that the kingdom ſhould be taken from him, and given to David his ſon-in-law; that God would deliver Iſrael into the hands of their enemies the Philiſtines. To which he added, to-morrow you ſhall be with me, you and your ſons, and the Lord ſhall abandon Iſrael to the Philiſtines.

Upon this hiſtory, a queſtion has been moved, that has divided both antients and moderns, i. e. whether the ghoſt of Samuel did really appear to Saul? or whether this was only a trick of the ſorcereſs, who herſelf ſpoke to Saul, and feigned the voice of Samuel? It is aſked alſo, whether this was done by the power of the devil, and by art magic; or, whether God permitted that Samuel ſhould appear, by the miraculous effect of his power. Juſtin Martyr, Dial. cum Tryphon. Origen, Anaſtaſius of Antioch, believed the demons had ſome power over the ſouls of the ſaints, before Jeſus Chriſt deſcended into hell, and delivered them out of the hands of that prince of darkneſs. St. Auſtin finds no greater inconvenience in ſaying, that the devil cauſed the ſoul of Samuel to appear, than in ſuppoſing him to preſent himſelf before the Lord among the children of God, Vide FRAGMENT, No. CLIII, page 131, or in ſuppoſing him to place our Saviour upon a pinacle of the temple. Vide FRAGMENT, No.

Manaſſeh-ben-Iſrael, lib. ii. cap. 6. de Reſurrect. Mort. according to the principles of the book Zohar, believes, there are demons which have ſo much power over the ſouls of the dead, during the firſt year after their death, that they do with them almoſt what they pleaſe, and oblige them to take whatever bodies they think fit. However, we cannot agree that this happened the ſame year as Samuel died, but think it was about two years after his death: and beſides, the principles of this Rabbi are by no means ſupportable. On the other hand, it is hard to oppoſe the Scripture, which expreſsly affirms, that Samuel appeared, that he ſpoke, foretold the death of Saul, &c.

Thoſe who maintain that Samuel did not really appear to Saul, are divided among themſelves. Some think that a dæmon aſſumed the form of Samuel, and ſpoke to Saul. Auth. qu ad Orthodox. qu. 52. Tertull. lib. de anima, cap. 57. Baſil. in cap. 8. Iſai. Nyſſen. Epiſt. ad Theodoſ. Epiſc. Others affirm, that the witch ſaw nothing, but pretended to ſee the true Samuel, and ſpoke in his name, and ſo impoſed upon Saul. Euſtat. Antioch. de Engaſt. Hieronym. in cap. 7. Iſai. & in Matth. vi. Cyril. Alex. lib. vi. de adorat. in Spirit. & veri. Alii plures. Others maintain, that God, of his own will and power, and independently of the art of magic, took occaſion from this invocation of the enchantreſs, to make the figure of Samuel appear to the eyes of Saul, to pronounce to this prince the ſentence of his death, and deſtruction. Vide Aug. lib. xv. de cura pro mort. Ambroſ. in Luc. cap. 1. Zeno Veron. ſerm. de reſurrect. D. Thom. 2. 2. q. 174. art. 5. ad. 4. alii plures, ad 1 Sam. xxviii. Rabbi Levi-ben-Gerſon will have it, that all this paſſed only in the imagination of Saul. He ſays, that this prince being ſtruck with apprehenſion of his preſent danger, and of the threats God had made to him, believed he ſaw Samuel appear to repeat theſe threats, and to foretel his approaching deſtruction.

Of all theſe opinions, the moſt probable is, that Samuel really appeared to Saul: not by the magical charms of the ſorcereſs, or by the power of the devil; but by the Almighty power of God, who, to puniſh Saul, might permit the real Samuel to appear, and diſcover to him his laſt and greateſt calamity. Conſult Allatius, Notes on the Treatiſe of Euſtathius, De Engaſtrimytho, &c. [The Editor differs from father Calmet.]

To Samuel are aſcribed the book of Judges, that of Ruth, and the firſt book of Samuel. There is, indeed, great probability that he compoſed the twenty-four firſt chapters of the firſt of Samuel, ſince they contain nothing but what he might have wrote, and in which he had not a great ſhare. However, in theſe twenty-four chapters there are ſome ſmall additions, probably inſerted after his death. We read, 1 Chron. ix. 22. that he aſſiſted in regulating the diſtribution of the Levites made by David for the ſervice of the temple. This may be explained by ſaying, that David purſued the order ſettled by Samuel, during his adminiſtration, after the death of the high-prieſt Eli. We read alſo 1 Chron. xxvi. 28. that Samuel enriched the tabernacle of the Lord, by magnificent preſents, and by rich ſpoils, taken from the enemies of Iſrael. Alſo 1 Chron xxix. 29. that he wrote the hiſtory of David, in conjunction with the prophets Nathan and Gad. Probably he might write the beginning of his hiſtory, and the other prophets might write the concluſion of it; for Samuel was dead before David came to the throne. The two firſt books of Kings bear the name of the books of Samuel; but it muſt be allowed that he could not be the author of the ſecond of theſe books, which contains tranſactions after his death. Neither could he write the latter end of the firſt, ſince his death is mentioned in ch. xxv. It is ſaid, chap. x. 25. of the firſt book of Samuel, that this prophet wrote in a book, the manner of the kingdom, which was the rights, prerogatives, and revenues of the king, and the limits of his power and authority: a repetition of what he had propoſed, vivâ voce, a little before to the people. Rabbi Levi ben-Gerſon affirms, that when he had finiſhed it, he put it into the ark; and Bodin de Repub. lib. i. cap. 10. aſſures us, on the credit of the Rabbins, that the kings deſtroyed and ſuppreſſed this book, that they might reign afterwards with leſs reſtraint.

Samuel began the chain of the prophets, which was never broke from his time, to that of Zechariah and Malachi. See Acts iii. 24. All the prophets from Samuel, and thoſe that follow after, as many as have ſpoken, have likewiſe foretold of theſe days. The body of Samuel was tranſported from Paleſtine to Conſtantinople, in the time of the emperor Arcadius. St. Jerome ſays, cont. Vig. they carried the aſhes of this prophet in a golden veſſel, wrapped up in ſilk: that the biſhops and people every-where received them in multitudes, with a joy beyond expreſſion, and with honours almoſt infinite. The Roman martyrology places his feſtival Auguſt 20.

Beſides the true hiſtory of Samuel, there are ſeveral traditions concerning this prophet, among the Orientals, D'Herbelot, Bibl. Orient. p. 735, & 1021. They relate, for example, that Samuel having made his report to God, that the Hebrews were reſolved to have a king; God gave him a veſſel or horn full of oil, and a ſtaff; revealing to him, that the man in whoſe preſence the oil ſhould boil in the veſſel, and whoſe ſtature ſhould be equal to that ſtaff, was appointed for their king. No ſooner was this determination publiſhed among the people, but all the chiefs of the tribes came with great eagerneſs to meaſure themſelves by the ſtaff, and to try if the oil would boil in their preſence; but in vain.

Saul alſo, otherwiſe called Sharek, and ſurnamed Thalout, i. e. the Tall, who was no more than a carrier of water, or dreſſer of leather, came to the prophet among the reſt, and immediately the oil began to boil in the veſſel, and he was found to be juſt the height of the miraculous ſtaff. On theſe tokens Samuel declared him king; but the heads of the tribes, eſpecially that of Judah, to whom the royal dignity had been promiſed, expoſtulated, ſaying; how can this man be our king, who has no eſtate? how can he ſupport the expence and dignity of the royal ſtate? Samuel replied, the Lord has choſe him, who diſpoſes of kingdoms without controul, to whomſoever he pleaſes.

The

The Iſraelites would not yet ſubmit, but inſiſted upon having a ſign from Samuel, that they might be aſſured from God, that this was his will. Samuel anſwered them, this is the miracle that God gives you to confirm this choice, the ark of the Lord, which was taken away by the Philiſtines, ſhall be brought back to you by angels.

When therefore the election of Saul was proclaimed, the Philiſtines being reſolved to conceal the ark of the Lord, which had cauſed them ſo many misfortunes by its preſence, they hid it in a dunghill. But they were ſmote with a ſhameful diſeaſe in their ſecret parts, which made them reſolve to ſend it back to the confines of the land of Iſrael. It was no ſooner arrived at this place, but the angels of the Lord took it up, and carried it to the tabernacle at Shiloh; and this miracle ſecured Saul in his kingdom.

It is convenient ſometimes even to know ſuch things that deſerve neither eſteem nor credit, if it were only by that, to obtain a right of contemning them. Vide FRAGMENT, No. XXXIV, page 57.

SANBALLAT, סנבלט, buſh in ſecret; from סנה ſene, a buſh, and the prepoſition ב be, in, לוט lut, to hide; or, according to the Hebrew and the Syriac, the enemy in ſecret. This name is foreign to the Hebrew language.

SANBALLAT, chief, or governor, of the Cuthites, or Samaritans; a great enemy to the Jews. He was a native of Horon, or Horonaim, a city beyond Jordan, in the country of Moab. When Nehemiah came from Shuſhan to Jeruſalem, Nehem. ii. 10, 19. A. M. 3550, ante A. D. 454. and began to rebuild the walls of Jeruſalem, Sanballat, Tobiah, and Geſhem taunted him, and ſent to know on what authority he undertook this enterprize, and whether this was not a revolt againſt the king, &c. But Nehemiah proceeding with vigour in his undertaking, Sanballat was extremely provoked, and ſaid, What are theſe poor Jews a-doing? Will the people let them go on? Will they finiſh their work, and dedicate it one day? Will they build with theſe ſtones that the fire has deſtroyed and reduced to duſt? Nevertheleſs, at laſt, the walls of Jeruſalem were compleated.

Then Sanballat, Tobiah, and Geſhem, ſent to Nehemiah, to deſire him to meet them in the field, that they might make an alliance and ſwear inviolable friendſhip. A. M. 3550, ante A. D. 454. But Nehemiah perceived this was only a ſtratagem; and declined it. At laſt, Sanballat writ to him in ſuch terms as theſe, "There is a report ſpread among the people, and Geſhem confidently affirms it, that you and the Jews intend a revolt, &c. Now as all theſe things are to be repreſented to the king, it will be convenient for you to give us a meeting, that we may confer together about them." Sanballat alſo gained over to his intereſt a certain falſe prophet called Shemaiah, who would have intimidated Nehemiah. But Nehemiah, by prudent boldneſs, avoided the ſnare.

Nehemiah being obliged to return to king Artaxerxes to Shuſhan, Nehem. xiii. 6, 28. A. M. 3563, ante A. D. 441. in his abſence, the high-prieſt Eliaſhib married his grandſon Manaſſeh, the ſon of Joiada, to a daughter of Sanballat, and he allowed one Tobiah, a kinſman of Sanballat's, an apartment in the temple. But Nehemiah at his return to Jeruſalem, (the exact year of which is not known,) drove Tobiah out of the temple, and would not ſuffer Manaſſeh, the high-prieſt's grandſon, to continue in the city, nor to perform the functions of the prieſthood. Manaſſeh being thus expelled, retired to his father-in-law Sanballat, who provided him the means of exerciſing his prieſtly office on mount Gerizim, on the following occaſion.

When Alexander the Great came into Phœnicia, and inveſted the city of Tyre, Sanballat quitted the intereſts of Darius king of Perſia, and went at the head of 8,000 men, to offer his ſervice to Alexander. This prince readily entertained him, and gave him leave to erect a temple on mount Gerizim, where he conſtituted his ſon-in-law Manaſſeh the high-prieſt. Sanballat muſt at this time be very old, for one hundred and twenty years before, A. M. 3550, he was governor of the Samaritans. Indeed, ſome have been of opinion, that the Sanballat who lived in the time of Alexander, was different from that Sanballat who ſo eagerly oppoſed Nehemiah; but we ſee no abſolute neceſſity of admitting this. However, Joſephus makes Sanballat a Cuthite originally, and makes no mention of him who withſtood Nehemiah. The wife of Manaſſeh he calls by the name of Nicaſo, and ſays, that Sanballat died nine months after he had ſubmitted to Alexander.

[Dr. Prideaux in his Connection of the Hiſtories of the Old and New Teſtament, rejects the ſolution of this difficulty, by two Sanballats, and endeavours to reconcile the hiſtory to truth and probability, by ſhewing it to be a miſtake of Joſephus. This author makes Sanballat to flouriſh in the time of Darius Codomannus, and to build his temple upon mount Gerizim by licence from Alexander the Great; whereas it was performed by leave from Darius Nothus, in the fifteenth year of his reign. This takes away the difficulty culty arising from the great age of Sanballat, and brings him to be cotemporary with Nehemiah, as the Scripture history requires.]

SANCTIFY. To sanctify is often put instead of to prepare. Thus Joshua says to the people, iii. 5. Sanctify yourselves, for to-morrow the Lord will do wonders among you. Prepare yourselves to pass over Jordan. In Isaiah xiii. 3. the Lord calls the Medes his sanctified. I have appointed, and, as it were, consecrated them to be the executioners of my vengeance against Babylon. See also Numb. xi. 18. Sanctify yourselves against to-morrow, and ye shall eat flesh. And Joshua vii. 13. Up, sanctify the people, and say, sanctify yourselves against to-morrow, for thus says the Lord God of Israel, There is an accursed thing in the midst of thee, O Israel. Jerem. vi. 4. Prepare ye war against her, or sanctify the war against Jerusalem; prepare yourselves to make war against her. And xii. 3. Pull them out like sheep for the slaughter, and prepare them for the day of slaughter. Heb. sanctify them. And li. 27, 28. Assemble the troops against Jerusalem, prepare the nations against her—sanctify them. And Joel i. 14. Sanctify a fast. Mich. iii. 5. The false prophets sanctify (or prepare) war against those who will not give them something: they declare war, or denounce evils against them. Zeph. i. 7. The Lord hath prepared his victims for the day of vengeance, he hath bid his guests: Heb. sanctified them.

We desire of God, that his name may be sanctified, or hallowed; i. e. honoured, praised, and glorified throughout the world, and especially by those who have the happiness of knowing him. Let them sanctify it by their good lives, their fidelity, their submission to his orders; and they that know him not, that they may come to the knowledge of him, may hear his word, may become obedient to his instructions, &c. We may apprehend yet better what is meant by sanctifying the name of God, by the opposite to it; i. e. profaning the name of God, by vain swearing, blaspheming, ascribing his name to idols; by furnishing wicked men and infidels with occasion of blaspheming it by our bad lives, and scandalous conversation, &c.

It is said, I will be sanctified in them that come nigh me; Levit. x. 3. in his priests, when by the terrible and exemplary punishment of Nadab and Abihu, the Lord shewed what purity he required in his servants, what punctual exactness he expected in his service. The Lord complains in another place, that Moses and Aaron did not sanctify him before the people of Israel. Because ye believed me not, to sanctify me in the eyes of the children of Israel, therefore ye shall not bring this congregation into the land which I have given them. Numb. xx. 12. And how did they not sanctify him? By shewing some distrust in his words. Because ye believed me not. God sanctified the seventh day, i. e. consecrated it in his service, Gen. ii. 3. He sanctified all the first-born, Exod. xiii. 3. he commands that they should be offered to him; as it were, consecrated to his service. Moses sanctifies the Israelites, and by bathing, by abstinence from the use of the marriage-bed, by the purity of their cloaths, he prepares them for appearing before the Lord, for receiving him, and entering into a covenant with him. Exod. xix. 10. xiv. 12.

Those who approach to holy things are sanctified; for example, it is allowed to the priest only to offer sacrifices at the altar, Exod. xxix. 37. If one of the laity should approach thereto, he would have contracted an uncleanness, which must have been expiated. So that to sanctify here is equivalent to defile, or to contract a pollution, which would require to be purified by sacrifices, or, at least, by bathing and washing of the cloaths. See also Exod. xxx. 29. Levit. vi. 18, 27. Compare Levit. xxii. 15, 16. where God expressly forbids that the laity should eat of the sanctified things. Vide SAINT.

SANCTUARY. By this name was called that part of the temple of Jerusalem, which was the most secret and most retired: in which was the ark of the covenant, and wherein none but the high-priest might enter, and he only once a year, on the day of solemn expiation. The same name was also given to the most sacred part of the tabernacle, set up in the wilderness, which remained till some time after the building of the temple. Vide TABERNACLE, and TEMPLE.

Sometimes the word sanctuary is used generally for the temple, or the holy place, the place appointed for public worship of the Lord. It should seem also, that Moses uses it instead of the Holy Land. Exod. xv. 17. Thou shalt bring them in, and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance, in the place, O Lord, which thou hast made for Thee to dwell in; in the sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands have established.

And Levit. xx. 3. of those who offer their children to the god Moloch, he says, they defile my sanctuary, and profane my holy name. He forbids the high-priest to go out of the temple, to mourn for his relations, Levit. xxi. 12. Neither shall he go out of the sanctuary, nor prophane the sanctuary of his God. The temple is here denoted by its principal principal part. It is believed that ſanctuary is put for heaven, Deut. xxvi. 15. Look from the dwelling of thy ſanctuary, from the high heaven.

SAND. A ſimilitude taken from the aggregate ſand of the ſea is often uſed, to expreſs a very great multitude, or a very great weight; or from a ſingle ſand, ſomething very mean and trifling. God promiſes Abraham and Jacob to multiply their poſterity as the ſtars of heaven, and as the ſand of the ſea, Gen. xxii. 17. xxxii. 12. Job vi. 3. compares the weight of his misfortunes to that of the ſand of the ſea. And Solomon ſays, Proverbs xxvii. 3. that though ſand and gravel are very heavy things, yet the anger of a fool is much heavier. And Eccleſiaſticus ſays, that a fool is more inſupportable than the weight of ſand, lead, or iron, Ecclus. xxii. 18.

We have noticed under the article GLASS, that the ſand of Paleſtine was uſed for making glaſs. See Deut. xxxiii. 19.

The prophets magnify the omnipotence of God, who has fixed the ſand of the ſhore for the boundaries of the ſea, and has ſaid to it; Hitherto thou ſhalt come; but here thou ſhalt break thy foaming waves, and ſhalt paſs no further. Jer. v. 22.

Our Saviour tells us, Matt. vii. 26. that a fool lays the foundations of his houſe on the ſand; whereas a wiſe man founds his houſe on a rock.

Eccleſiaſticus ſays, xviii. 8. that the years of the longeſt life of man are but as a drop of water, or as a grain of ſand. And Wiſdom ſays, vii. 9. That all the gold in the world, compared to wiſdom, is but as the ſmalleſt grain of ſand.

SANDALS. We find ſandals in three paſſages. When Judith went to the camp of Holofernes, ſhe put ſandals on her feet, Judith x. 4. And xvi. 9. Her ſandals raviſhed his eyes. They were a magnificent kind of buſkins, proper only to ladies of condition, and ſuch as dreſſed themſelves for admiration. They had generally ſlaves to carry their ſandals, which were ſometimes of gold; and they had often caſes or boxes to put them in. Theſe caſes in Menander are called ſandalothecæ; and the ſlaves that carried the ſandals are called Pueri ſandali-geruli, or Puellæ ſandali-gerulæ. Plaut. in Trinum. Act. ii. ſcen. i. John the Baptiſt ſays of himſelf, that he was not worthy to be ſandali-gerulus to our Saviour, whoſe ſhoes I am not worthy to bear, Mat. iii. 11. Writers ſay, that when Hercules became ſlave to Omphale, ſhe uſed to give him correction with her ſandal. Lucian. lib. de ſcribenda hiſtoria. Terent. Eunuch. Act. v, ſcen. 8.

But there were ſandals alſo belonging to men, and of mean value. Jeſus Chriſt allows the uſe of them to his diſciples, Mark vi. 9. and whole nations wore them, as the Nabatheans: Strabo. Geograph. lib. 16.

At firſt ſandals were only ſoles tied to the feet with ſtrings, or thongs; afterwards, they were covered, and at laſt they called even ſhoes ſandals. Vide FRAGMENTS, No. , pages .

In authors that ſpeak of eccleſiaſtical rites and ornaments, we find the word ſandals to ſignify a valuable kind of ſhoes, worn by the prelates at ſolemnities. Benedictus Baudouinus, de Calceo antiquo. M. Du Cange, Gloſſar. Sandalia, Saumaiſe on Tertullian, de Pallio, &c.

SANHEDRIM; from συνέδριον, an aſſembly.

SANHEDRIM, or Sanhedria, a corrupted word, from the Greek Synedrion, which ſignifies an aſſembly,—ſuch as thoſe of a parliament, or a ſovereign court, where many judges and counſellors meet, to conſult on, and to determine, great affairs. The Jews call Sanhedrim, or Beth-din (the houſe of judgment) a council of ſeventy ſenators, who aſſembled in a hall of the temple of Jeruſalem, and there determined the moſt important affairs of the nation. The chief of this aſſembly was called נשי Naſi, or prince; his deputy was called אב בית דין Ab-beth-din, father of the houſe of judgment, and the ſub-deputy was called חכם Chacam, the Wiſe. The reſt were called זקנים tzekanim elders, or ſenators. The room they met in was a rotunda, half of which was built without the temple, and half within; i. e. one ſemicircle of the room was within the compaſs of the temple, and as it was never allowed to ſit down in the temple, they tell us this part was for thoſe who ſtood up; the other half, or ſemicircle, extended without the holy place, and here the judges ſat.

The Naſi, or prince, ſat on a throne at the end of the hall, having his deputy at his right-hand, and ſub-deputy at his leſt. The other ſenators were ranged in order on each ſide. This hall was called לשכת חגזית Liſhcath-Haggazith, or the hall paved with ſtones; and ſome think it to be the ſame called, John xix. 13. Λιθόστρωτος Lithoſtrotos, or paved with ſtones. They ſuppoſe, what to me is very improbable, that when the Jews accuſed Jeſus Chriſt before Pilate, they would not enter into the Prætorium, that they might not be defiled, but prevailed with Pilate to come into the Sanhedrim, there to hear their accuſations againſt our Saviour. Caſaubon. in Sueton. lib. i. cap. 46. Selden. de Synedriis, lib. ii. cap. 13, § 4. Lightfoot. Hor. Hebr. in Joan. alii.

The Rabbins pretend, that the Sanhedrim has always ſubſiſted in their nation from the time of Moſes, down to the deſtruction of the temple by the Romans. They date the eſtabliſhment of it from what happened in the wilderneſs, ſome time after the people departed from Sinai, Numb. xi. 16. when ſeventy men were choſen as judges of leſſer matters. The Sanhedrim was compoſed of ſeventy counſellors, ſix out of each tribe, and Moſes, as preſident, made up the number ſeventy-one. Six ſenators out of each tribe make in all ſeventy-two perſons, which, with the preſident, conſtitute a council of ſeventy-three; and accordingly the Sanhedrim conſiſted of ſeventy-three counſellors, according to ſome. To prove the uninterrupted ſucceſſion of the judges of the Sanhedrim, there is nothing unattempted by the partiſans of this opinion. They find a proof where others cannot ſo much as perceive any appearance, or ſhadow, of it. Grotius may be ſeen in many places of his commentaries, and De jure belli & pacis, lib. i. cap. 3. art. 20. and Selden, de Synedriis veterum Hebræorum.

As to the perſonal qualifications of the judges of this court; their birth was to be untainted: they were often of the race of the prieſts or Levites, or of the number of the inferior judges; or from the leſſer Sanhedrim, which conſiſted of twenty-three judges. See JUDGES. They were to be ſkilful in the law, as well traditional as written. They were obliged to ſtudy magic, divination, fortune-telling, phyſic, aſtrology, arithmetic, and languages. The Jews ſay, they were to know to the number of ſeventy tongues, i. e. they were to know all the tongues, for the Hebrews acknowledged but ſeventy in all, and perhaps this is too many. Eunuchs were excluded from the Sanhedrim, uſurers, decrepid perſon, players at games of chance, thoſe who had any bodily deformity, thoſe who had brought up pigeons to decoy others to their pigeon-houſes, and thoſe who made a gain of their fruits in the ſabbatical year. Some alſo exclude the high-prieſt and the king, becauſe of their too great power; but others inſiſt, that the king always preſided in the Sanhedrim, while there was a king in Iſrael. Laſtly, it was required, that the members of the Sanhedrim ſhould be of mature age, rich, of good countenance and body. Such are the notions of the Rabbins: we pretend not to warrant their opinions.

The authority of the great Sanhedrim was very extenſive. This council decided cauſes brought before it by appeal from inferior courts. The king, the high-prieſt, the prophets, were under its juriſdiction. If the king offended againſt the law, e. gr. if he married above eighteen wives, if he kept too many horſes, if he hoarded up too much gold and ſilver, the Sanhedrim had him ſtripped and whipped in their preſence. But whipping, they ſay, among the Hebrews, was not ignominious; and the king bore this correction by way of penance, and himſelf made choice of the perſon who was to exerciſe this diſcipline. Alſo, the general affairs of the nation were brought before the Sanhedrim. The right of judging in capital caſes belonged to this court; and this ſentence could not be pronounced in any other place, but in the hall called Liſhchat-haggazith; from whence it came to paſs, that the Jews were forced to quit this hall, when the power of life and death was taken out of their hands, forty years before the deſtruction of their temple, and three years before the death of Jeſus Chriſt.

In the time of Moſes this council was held at the door of the tabernacle of the teſtimony. As ſoon as the people were in poſſeſſion of the Land of Promiſe, the Sanhedrim followed the tabernacle. It was kept ſucceſſively at Gilgal, at Shiloh, at Kirjath-jearim, at Nob, at Gibeon in the houſe of Obed-edom; and laſtly, at Jeruſalem, till the Babyloniſh captivity. During the captivity it was kept at Babylon. After the return from Babylon, it continued at Jeruſalem, to the time of the ſicarii, or aſſaſſins. Then, finding that theſe profligate wretches, whoſe number increaſed daily, ſometimes eſcaped puniſhment by favour of the preſident or judges, it was removed to Hanoth, which were certain abodes ſituated, ſay the Rabbins, on the mountain of the temple. From thence they came down into the city of Jeruſalem, withdrawing themſelves by degrees from the temple. Afterwards they removed to Jamnia, thence to Jericho, to Uzzah, to Shepharvaim, to Bethſanim, to Sephoris, laſt of all to Tiberias, where they continued till their utter extinction. This is the account the Jews give of their Sanhedrim.

But the learned do not agree with them: father Petau, de Doctrin. temp. lib. ii. cap. 26, fixes the beginning of the Sanhedrim not till Gabinius was governor of Judea, who erected tribunals in the five principal cities of Judea; at Jeruſalem, at Gadara, at Amathus, at Jericho, at Sephora or Sephoris, a city of Galilee, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xix. cap. 10. p. 476. gr. & de Bello, lib. i. cap. 6. p. 722, P. Grotius places the beginning under Moſes, as the Rabbins do, but he makes it determine determine at the beginning of Herod's reign. Mr. Baſnage, in his hiſtory of the Jews, at firſt thought that the Sanhedrim began under Gabinius; but afterwards he places it under Judas Maccabæus, or under his brother Jonathan. We ſee indeed, 1 Macc. xii. 6. under Jonathan Maccabæus, A. M. 3860, that the ſenate with the high-prieſt ſent an embaſſy to the Romans. The rabbins ſay, that Alexander Janneus, king of the Jews, of the race of the Aſmoneans, appeared before the Sanhedrim, and claimed a right of ſitting there, whether the ſenators would or no. Joſephus informs us, that when Herod was governor of Galilee, he was ſummoned before the ſenate, where he appeared. It muſt be therefore acknowledged, that the Sanhedrim was in being before the reign of Herod. It was in being afterwards, as we find from the goſpels, and from the Acts. Jeſus Chriſt, in Matthew v. 22. diſtinguiſhes two tribunals. Whoſoever is angry with his brother without a cauſe, ſhall be in danger of the judgment. i. e. they ſay, the tribunal of the twenty-three judges. And whoſoever ſhall ſay to his brother, Raca, ſhall be in danger of the council: i. e. of the great Sanhedrim, which had the right of life and death, at leaſt generally, and before this right was taken away by the Romans. Some think that the juriſdiction of the council of twenty-three extended to life and death alſo; but it is certain that the Sanhedrim was ſuperior to that council. See alſo Mark xiii. 9. xiv. 55. xv. 1. Luke xxii. 52, 66. John xi. 47. Acts iv. 15. 21, where mention is made of the Synedrion.

From all this may be concluded, that the origin of the Sanhedrim is by no means to be depended on; for the council of the ſeventy elders eſtabliſhed by Moſes, was not what the Hebrews underſtood by the name of Sanhedrim. Beſides, we cannot perceive this eſtabliſhment either under Joſhua, the Judges, or the Kings. We find nothing of it after the captivity, till the time of Jonathan Maccabæus. The tribunals erected by Gabinius were very different from the Sanhedrim. This was the only one of its kind, and fixed at Jeruſalem; whereas Gabinius eſtabliſhed five tribunals at five different cities, which tribunals do not appear to be ſubordinate one to another. Laſtly, it is certain, that this ſenate was in being in the time of Jeſus Chriſt, and when St. Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John wrote their goſpels; ſince it is mentioned in their writings: But the Jews inform us themſelves, that they then had not the power of life and death. John xviii. 31.

SANSANNAH, סנסנה, σανσαννὰ, provinces, branches, the buſh of the buſh; from סנה ſenah, a buſh; or, according to the Syriac and the Hebrew, the buſh of the enemy.

SANSANNAH, or Senſenna, a city of Judah. Joſh. xv. 31.

SAOSDUCHINUS. We think him to be the Nebuchodonoſar of the book of Judith. He ſucceeded Eſarhaddon, A. M. 3336, ante A. D. 668. He reigned twenty years, and died A. M. 3356, ante A. D. 642. His ſucceſſor was Chinaladanus, or Saracus. Vide NEBUCHADNEZZAR I. and HOLOFERNES.

SAPH, סף ruſhes, or ſea-moſs, end, conſummation; from סוף ſuph: otherwiſe, veſſel, flat, threſhold; from סף ſaph.

SAPH, or Sippai, of the race of the giants: killed by Sibbechai the Huſhathite. See 2 Sam. xxi. 18. and 1 Chron. xx. 4. In Samuel it is ſaid, the battle in which Sippai was killed, was fought at Gob; in the Chronicles it is ſaid to be fought at Gezar.

SAPHEC. Perhaps it ſhould be Aphek. This city is mentioned in the Greek of 1 Sam. xxx. 29.

SAPHIR. The Greek of Joſhua xv. 48. places a city called Saphir in the mountains of Judah: But the Hebrew reads Shamir. Micah, i. 11, ſpeaks alſo of the inhabitants of Saphir שפיר ישבי Paſs ye away, into a ſtrange country, thou inhabitant of Saphir. Perhaps the prophet intends the city of Sephoris, or Sephora in Galilee. Euſebius mentions a city named Saphir, between Eleutheropolis and Aſkalon.

SAPPHIRA, Σαπφείρη, that relates or tells: otherwiſe, that writes or compoſes books; from סבר ſaphar, or ſepher, according to different readings; otherwiſe, handſome; from שבר ſhaphar: or reading it ſephora, an hen, a bird; from צפורה.

SAPPHIRA, a Chriſtian woman, and wife of Annanias. They having conjointly ſold a field, which was their property, brought a part of the price of the field, and laid it at the feet of the apoſtles, as if it had been the whole price; reſerving the reſt for their own uſe. For this prevarication they were both ſtruck with ſudden death. Acts v. 1, 2, 3, &c. Vide ANNANIAS.

SAPPHIRE, Σάπφιρος, a ſtone. [q. Sapphira?]

SAPPHIRE, a precious ſtone, in Hebrew alſo named Saphir. שפיר Shaphir. Exodus xxviii. 18. and xxxix. 11. The Greeks and Latins write it Sapphirus, and it is often mentioned in Scripture. Job ſays, xxviii. 6. there are places whoſe ſtones are Sapphires; i. e. Sapphires are very common in ſome countries. Pliny ſays, lib. xxxvii. cap. 9, that the beſt come out of Media; perhaps, out of the country of the Sapires, or from the Mount Sephar mentioned by Moſes.

Gen. x. 30. Ezek. i. 26. and x. 1. The oriental Sapphire is of a blue ſky-colour, or a fine azure; whence it is, that the prophets deſcribe the throne of God, as it were of the colour of a Sapphire; i. e. of a celeſtial blue or azure. Exodus xxiv. 10. Shaphir, in Hebrew, alſo ſignifies Beauty.

To expreſs the beauty and value of the tablets of Moſes, and of the wonderful rod of this legiſlator, the Hebrews ſay they were of Saphir. The orientals had an extraordinary eſteem for this ſtone; thoſe who wore it about them, thought it to be the occaſion of their happineſs and good fortune.

SARABATHA, or Sabaratha. Epiphanius, de Vita & Morte Prophet, ſays, that this was the country of the prophet Zephaniah.

SARAC, or Saracus, otherwiſe Chinaladanus, ſucceeded Saoſduchinus, in the kingdom of Aſſyria, A. M. 3356, ante A. D. 648: He reigned two and twenty years, and died A. M. 3378, ante A. D. 626. His reign is famous in hiſtory, becauſe in his time Nabopolaſſar and Aſtyages, (the firſt a Babylonian general of Saracus's army, the latter, ſon of Cyaxares, king of the Medes) conſpired againſt him, beſieged Nineveh, took it, deprived Saracus of the kingdom, and divided his dominions. Aſtyages reigned in Media, and Nabopolaſſar in Aſſyria. This event is a famous Epocha among chronologers. We place it with Uſher, A. M. 3378, ante A. D. 626.

SARAH, שרה, lady, or princeſs; from שר ſhar, a prince.

SARAH, שרה, lady of ſcent; from שרר ſharar, to rule, and the Chaldee ריה riac, a ſcent: otherwiſe, ſong; from שור ſhur: otherwiſe, the morning, the morning-ſtar; from the inverted word שחר ſhacar.

I. SARAH, or Sarai, or Sara, wife of Abraham, daughter of Terah, father of Abraham, but by a mother different from Abraham's; ſince Abraham himſelf aſſerts, Gen. xii. 13, and xx. 12, that ſhe was really his ſiſter, the daughter of his father, but not the daughter of his mother. Terah might have had ſeveral wives at once, according to the cuſtom of the country; or might have married again, after the death of Abraham's mother, by which laſt wife he might have had Sarai, Ita Eutyc. Alex. in Chronic. This opinion ſeems to us better than that which makes Sarah the ſame as Iſcah the daughter of Haran, the niece of Abraham, and grand-daughter of Terah, Gen. xi. 29. However, this is the opinion of Joſephus, Antiq. lib. i. cap. 8. of Jerom, quæſt. Heb. in Geneſin, of Auſtin, contra Fauſt, lib. ii. cap. 35. of Toſtat, of Genebrard, and of a great number of commentators.

Sarai was born A. M. 2018, ante A. D. 1986. She married Abraham before this patriarch left the city of Ur; and when Abraham quitted his country, he agreed with Sarah, that ſhe ſhould call herſelf his ſiſter. For, being a woman of exquiſite beauty, he was afraid ſhe ſhould be taken away from him, and that he might be put to death on her account if ſhe was known to be his wife. When the famine prevailed in Canaan, which was the year after Abraham came into this country, he was obliged to withdraw to Egypt, where the famine did not reach, Gen. xii. 10, 11, 12, &c. A. M. 2084, ante A. D. 1920. When Abraham came into that country, Sarah was taken from him, and carried to Pharaoh's palace. But the Lord viſited this prince, and all his family, with great plagues, becauſe of Sarah. And Pharaoh at length knowing that ſhe was Abraham's wife, reproved him very ſharply. He reſtored her to Abraham, and ſent them out of Egypt.

This conduct of Abraham and Sarah has occaſioned many ſpeculations among the learned. Abraham ſeems to expoſe Sarah to the danger of adultery; and ſhe ſeems too eaſily to conſent to it, by paſſing only for the ſiſter of Abraham, and not his wife. In Abraham, there ſeems to have been lying, diſguiſe, and too great eaſineſs, in hazarding his wife's chaſtity; and in her, too great forwardneſs in conſenting to it. Origen, homil. 6. in Geneſ. ſpeaking of what happened to Abraham, in reſpect of Abimelech King of Gerar, where he was in the ſame circumſtances, ſays, that this patriarch not only told a lie, but even betrayed and expoſed his wife's chaſtity. Fauſtus the Manichean, apud Auguſt. lib. xxii. cap. 33. contra Fauſt. calls Abraham an infamous barterer of his wife's modeſty, which he ſold to two kings, to gratify his own avarice and gluttony. St. Chryſoſtom, who ſeriouſly endeavours to excuſe Abraham and Sarah, acknowledges, however, that this patriarch expoſed Sarah to the danger of committing adultery; and that Sarah conſented to be expoſed to this danger, to ſave the life of her huſband. Laſtly, Some moderns have very loudly declared, that in this matter they could not approve the conduct of Abraham and Sarah.

St. Auſtin makes an apology for Abraham, ſaying, 1*ſt*, That he did not tell a lie, by affirming Sarah to be his ſiſter, as indeed ſhe was: He concealed a truth which he was not obliged to diſcover, by not telling that ſhe was his wife.

2*dly*, That being expoſed at the ſame time to two dangers, one of loſing his life, and the other of having his wife taken from him, or diſhonoured, and not being able to avoid either, by owning her for his wife, but thinking it at leaſt probable that he ſhould eſcape death, if he only owned her for his ſiſter; of two evils, he choſe what ſeemed to him the leaſt, leaving to providence the care of his wife's chaſtity, and knowing beſides her virtuons diſpoſition. Vide ABRAHAM III.

Sarah, knowing on the one hand, that God had promiſed a numerous poſterity to Abraham, and on the other, finding herſelf barren, ſhe thought, that, poſſibly the promiſes of God were to be performed by the medium of ſome other woman; ſhe therefore deſired Abraham to take her ſervant Hagar, that, by her means, ſhe might ſee iſſue from Abraham. He complied, and took Hagar as a wife of the ſecond order. But when Hagar found herſelf with child, ſhe began to deſpiſe her miſtreſs; who, in conſequence, uſed her harſhly. Hagar fled from her; but returned ſome time after.

Some years after, God appeared to Abraham, made a covenant with him, inſtituted circumciſion; changed his name; and changed the name of Sarai, or My Princeſs, into that of Sarah, or Princeſs; and promiſed Abraham that he ſhould have a ſon by Sarah. The ſame year three angels, whom he entertained in his tent, in the form of men, repeated to him the promiſe, of the birth of a ſon, and aſſured him, that a full year ſhould not expire, before he ſaw the completion of this promiſe. Sarah was behind the door of her tent, and hearing this, began to laugh within herſelf, ſaying, After I am now become old, and my Lord is old alſo, ſhall I receive pleaſure? Then the Lord ſaid to Abraham, Why did Sarah laugh? Is there any thing impoſſible to God? Sarah ſhall indeed have a ſon within a year's time. Sarah denied that ſhe had laughed; but the Lord ſaid to her, It is not ſo, for you ſurely did laugh.

A little while after, Abraham went to dwell at Gerar a city of the Philiſtines; and Abimelech, king of this city, took away Sarah, who, though now fourſcore and ten years old, and then with child of Iſaac, was ſtill a very handſome woman. But the Lord appeared to Abimelech in a dream, and threatened to puniſh him, if he did not reſtore her to her huſband. The day after, early in the morning, this prince came to Abraham, and brought him his wife, reproaching his diſſimulation, in pretending ſhe was his ſiſter. Abraham excuſed himſelf, by explaining that ſhe was indeed his ſiſter, being born from the ſame father, though not from the ſame mother. Abimelech made great preſents to Abraham, and offered a thouſand pieces of ſilver to Sarah, that ſhe might purchaſe a veil to cover her face, and be no more expoſed to ſimilar dangers.

The year following ſhe brought forth a ſon, to whom ſhe gave the name of Iſaac, i. e. Laughter, in alluſion to her laughing, when God promiſed her a ſon, and to ſhew the great joy that his birth produced in her: She ſuckled the child herſelf; and when it was to be weaned, about three years after, as the moſt probable opinion is, Abraham made a great feaſt for his friends. Sarah ſaw Iſhmael at play with Iſaac, (or, according to St. Paul, Gal. iv. 29. Iſhmael then perſecuted or teazed Iſaac,) and ſhe ſaid to Abraham, Caſt out this ſervant, with her ſon, for Iſhmael ſhall not inherit with Iſaac. Abraham made ſome difficulty at this requeſt, but God ordered him to comply.

The Scripture tells us no more of Sarah till her death, Gen. xxiii. 1, 19, which happened ſome years after the famous trial that God made of Abraham's faith, by commanding him to ſacrifice Iſaac. Sarah was an hundred and twenty-ſeven years old when ſhe died: She was then in the valley of Hebron, and Abraham came to Beerſheba to mourn for her. We know not the occaſion of this abſence of Abraham; but Scripture ſays expreſsly, he went into this valley to mourn for her; and that after he had paid this laſt duty to her, he bought a field of Ephron the Ammorite, in which was a cave hewn into the rock, where were new tombs. The Vulgate calls this cave double; but the Hebrew text calls it Machpelah, מכפלה duplex; which perhaps might be the name of the field where this cave was. See MACHPELAH.

Some have thought, that Sarah knew nothing of Abraham's intention of ſacrificing his ſon, and that ſhe was not acquainted with it till after they were returned from Moriah. Others have maintained, that ſhe died with grief, when ſhe was told that Abraham had really ſacrificed Iſaac, which was a falſe report made to terrify her. Joſephus ſays, ſhe died ſoon after this event: But, according to his calculation, ſhe muſt have lived twelve years after that; ſince, he ſays, Iſaac was five and twenty years old when his father would have ſacrificed him, and Sarah was ninety years old when ſhe bore Iſaac, and one hundred and twenty-ſeven when ſhe died. Uſher alſo puts eleven or twelve years between Abraham's trial, and the death of Sarah. The Talmudiſts and St. Epiphanius put Sarah in the catalogue of propheteſſes of the Old Teſtament.

Sarah, Abraham's wife, according to the Orientals, was daughter of Nahor, and grand-daughter of Terah, and conſequently, neice to this patriarch. Sarah's mother was another Sarah, daughter of Terah and Tahouiah his ſecond wife; for his firſt wife, whoſe name was Jounah, was mother to Abraham. D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 759.

II. SARAH, daughter of the patriarch Aſher. Numb. xxvi. 46.

III. SARAH, daughter of Raguel and of Anna of the tribe of Napthali, and of the kindred of Tobit. Sarah was an only daughter, and her father had married her to ſeven huſbands ſucceſſively; but God had ſmote them all with death, before they conſummated their marriage. Tob. iii. 7, 8, 9. About A. M. 3322, ante A. D. 682. It was ſaid, that an evil ſpirit called Aſmodæus hindered them from coming near her. One day, when Sarah was reproving one of her maids for ſome fault, ſhe upbraided Sarah, ſaying, let us never ſee either ſon or daughter from you! you that have murdered your huſbands! Sarah went up into a chamber at the top of the houſe, and there continued in prayer three days and three nights faſting.

This prayer of Sarah was offered to the Lord at the ſame time with that of Tobit, whom God had afflicted by the loſs of his ſight; and the Lord ſent the angel Raphael to relieve them both. Vide TOBIT. Young Tobias being on his journey to Rages, under the conduct of Raphael, in a human ſhape, they came to the city of Ecbatana. The angel told him, here is a man called Raguel, who is one of your relations; he has an only daughter called Sarah; you being his neareſt kinſman, according to the law, ought to marry his daughter: Tobias demanded Sarah in marriage, and obtained her without difficulty.

When the evening was come, Tobias was introduced into the chamber of Sarah; expelled the demon Aſmodæus, who retired from thence; and the angel Raphael ſeized him, and chained him down in the Upper Egypt. Vide ASMODEUS.

Tobias having taken Sarah to wife, brought her with him to Nineveh, where his Father Tobit dwelt: ſhe was there the mother of a numerous poſterity; and after the death of old Tobit, Tobias took her back to her parents at Ecbatana, with all their children and grandchildren; becauſe his father Tobit, before his death, had told them, that the deſtruction of Nineveh was at hand, and that they ought to leave it as ſoon as poſſible, that they might not be involved in its approaching calamity. The year of Sarah's death is unknown; but ſhe lived after A. M. 3363, ante A. D. 641.

SARAMEEL, שרמל, σαραμεὴλ. The prince from the Lord. The place Millo in Jeruſalem. Happineſs of the people of God; from אשר aſhar to be happy, and אום om, people, and אל el, God: otherwiſe, footſtep of circumciſion; from אשר aſhor, footſtep, and מול mul, to cut off, to circumciſe.

SARAMEL, or Aſamarel. 1 Macc. xiv. 28. We think it to be the Millo of 2 Sam. ver. 9. Aſhar-millo ſignifies the court of Millo. Others, as Vatablus and Tirinus, have imagined, that Saramel was put for Jeruſalem. Serrarius tranſlates this word the prince of the Lord, or, the prince of the people of the Lord; and he explains it by the high-prieſt Simon, who then governed.

SARAPH, Burning. See Seraph.

SARAPH, the name of a man, 1 Chron. iv. 22. which, the Vulgate tranſlates Incendens, burning; Securus & Incendens, qui fuerunt principes in Moab. The Hebrew ſays, Joab and Saraph, who have ruled in Moab. It is thought theſe two perſons are the ſame as Chilion and Mahlon, ſons of Elimelech, who married in the country of Moab, one Ruth, and the other Orpah. See Ruth, chap. i. ii. iv.

SARAPH alſo ſignifies a kind of ſerpent, which God ſent among the Hebrews, to puniſh them: Numbers xxi. 6. Vide SERPENT.

SARDANAPALUS king of Aſſyria, he is not known in Scripture under this name; but there is great probability that it is he who repented at the preaching of Jonah chap. iii. 6. and who was overcome by Arbaces Governor of Media, and Beleſus governor of Babylon. We think that Pul king of Aſſyria, who came to aſſiſt Menahem king of Iſrael, 2 Kings xv. 19. 1 Chron. v. 26. was father to Sardanapalus: as if it were ſaid Sardan-pul: ſee PUL. Beleſus governor of Babylon is probably the Baladan of Iſai. xxxix. 1. and 2 Kings xx. 12. in profane authors called Nabonaſſar. Uſher places the firſt year of the reign of Sardanapalus A. M. 3237, ante A. D. 767. He reigned twenty years at Nineveh, according to Euſebius and Julius Africanus. The wealth, the luxury, and the effeminacy of this prince were exceſſive, to a proverb. Being ſhut up with his women in his palace, he hardly ever appeared in public, but neglected the affairs of his kingdom, ſays Juſtin, lib. i. Diodor. Sicul. lib. ii. Cteſiam, Athenæum, lib. xii. Two of his nobles, Arbaces and Beleſus, aſhamed of his weakneſs, revolted againſt him

A. M. 3254, ante A. D. 750. They attacked him with 400,000 men, compoſed of Medes and Perſians, Babyſonians and Arabians.

This army was beat in three engagements; but in the fourth, the Bactrian troops deſerting to their ſide it became victorious. Sardanapalus left the command of his army to a brother-in-law, called Salæmen, and he himſelf retired to Nineveh. Salæmen was defeated in two battles, and loſt almoſt his whole army. Then the confederates prepared to beſiege Sardanapalus in Nineveh. Not caring to truſt to the events of war, he ſent his three ſons and two daughters into Paphlagonia, to Cotta the governor of that province for ſecurity. He made great levies of ſoldiers, and laid up ſtore of proviſions in Nineveh, to ſuſtain a long ſiege. The city was beſieged three years, and might have held out much longer, if the Tigris had not overflowed its banks, being ſwelled by an extraordinary fall of rain, which overthrew the city wall for twenty Stadia: or three thouſand five hundred paces.

Sardanapalus finding he could reſiſt no longer, made a funeral pile in the midſt of his palace, wherein he gathered all his immenſe riches, and wherein he burnt himſelf, with his concubines and eunuchs, by ſetting fire to his palace. Thus ended the Aſſyrian empire. Arbaces was proclaimed king of the Medes; and Beleſus, or Nabonaſſar, or Baladan, was made king of Babylon.

SARDIS, Σαρδεῖς prince of joy, or ſong of joy; from שרר ſharar, to rule, or from, שור, a ſong, and דוץ duts, to leap for joy: otherwiſe that which remains; from שרד ſharad, to remain: or, according to the Syriac, a pot, a kettle. Its Greek etymology is unknown.

SARDIS, a city of Aſia Minor, formerly the capital of Cræſus king of the Lydians. St John Rev. iii. 1, 2, 3, &c. writes in behalf of Jeſus Chriſt, to the angel or biſhop of Sardis.

We know not the name of the then biſhop at Sardis. Some moderns have thought it was Melito, a famous biſhop of this city, and apologiſt for our religion, who wrote in the time of Marcus Aurelius, about A. D. 170, or 175. If this were ſo we muſt allow him to have been biſhop above ſeventy five years; which is not eaſy to believe: for none of the antients have ſaid that he was a diſciple of the apoſtles, or that he lived very long. We ought not therefore to impute to him this great age without proof; which beſides is not very honourable to him, ſince St. John ſpeaks of the angel of Sardis in terms not at all advantageous.

SARDIUS, or Ruby: Sardius Lapis; in Hebrew אדם Odem. This word ſignifies redneſs; wherefore ſome tranſlate it by Ruby, or by Pyropus. The Sardius is reddiſh, approaching to white, as a man's nail. Exod. xxviii. 17, xxxix. 10. and Ezek. xxviii. 13. Rev. xxi. 20.

SARDONYX; q. a Sardius united to an Onyx. The Onyx is a precious ſtone often called Cornelian. The baſis of the Cornelian is white, as the nail growing under the fleſh. The Hebrew שוהם Shohem, has been tranſlated Sardonichus lapis; which rather ſignifies an emerald.

SARERA. Epiphanius ſays, that Ezekiel was of the country of Sarera.

SARGON, שרגון who takes away protection; from סור ſur, to take away, and גן gan, protection: otherwiſe, that takes away the garden: from the ſame word גן gan: otherwiſe, according to the Syriac, nets, ſnares. This word is not Hebrew.

SARGON king of Aſſyria. We believe him to have been Eſar-haddon. Iſai. xx. 1. See ESAR-HADDON.

SARID, שריד, refreſhed, or reſted; from שרד ſharad: otherwiſe, the hand of the prince, or the ſong of the hand; from שרר ſharar, to govern, and שור ſhur, a ſong and יד jad the hand.

SARID, a city of Zebulun. Joſh. xix. 10. 12. We read of Saridim, Joel ii. 32. and Theodotion has taken it for a proper name. But Jerom tranſlates it by reliquæ, a remnant. He owns, however, that the Jews take it for the name of a place. [Eng. Tranſ. the remnant.]

SARSECHIM, שר־סכים, ναβϐσαρσαχὶμ from שרר ſharar, to rule, and ככך ſacac, to cover: otherwiſe, of the perfumes; from סוך ſuc, ointment, or perfume. This word being Babyloniſh its true etymology is not in the Hebrew.

SARSECHIM, a chief of the Babylonian army. This is a name of dignity, and ſignifies, the chief of the cup-bearers. Jerem. xxxix. 3. שר שקים princeps pincernarum.

SARTHAN, צרתן, pain, or tribulation, or chaining, or what is placed; otherwiſe, figure; from צרר tſarar, pain, trouble, ſnares, chains, and from צורה tſurah, to place, to put: or from צור tſur, to figure; otherwiſe, giving, or lying in ambuſh; from נתן nathan, to give, and זור zur, ambuſh.

SARTHAN, or Sarthana, a city which ſome place eaſt of Jordan, but it was rather to the weſt. The waters retired as far as Sarthan, or Zaretan, when Iſrael paſſed over Jordan. Joſh. iii. 16. Between Succoth and Zarthan king Solomon had the great brazen veſſels caſt, which were for the temple. 1 Kings vii. 46. Sarthan is the ſame as Zeredathah, 2 Chron. iv. 17. and perhaps alſo the ſame as Zereda, 1 Kings xi. 26. which was the country of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat.

SATAN, this is a Hebrew word. It is often tranſlated adverſary, in the Septuagint, and in the Vulgate. 1 Samuel xxix. 4, the princes of the Philiſtines ſay to Achiſh, ſend back David, leſt in the battle he be an adverſary (Satan) to us, and turn his arms againſt us. And the Lord ſtirred up adverſaries (Satans) to Solomon, in the perſons of Hadad and Rezon. 1 Kings xi. 14, 23, 24.

Sometimes Jerom has preſerved the word Satan in the ſenſe of an adverſary; as 1 Kings, v. 4. non eſt Sathan, neque occurſus malus. I have neither enemy nor misfortune. 2 Sam. xix. 22. Cur efficiami mihi hodie in Sathan? Ye children of Zeruiah, why are ye become my enemies? At other times Satan is put for the devil; Job i. 6, 7, 11, &c. Satan preſented himſelf among the ſons of God And Pſalm cix. 6. Let Satan ſtand at his right hand. And in Zechariah iii. 1, 2. Satan ſtanding at his right hand. And the Lord ſaid unto Satan, the Lord rebuke thee, O Satan.

In the New Teſtament, the word Satan is taken, both in the ſenſe of an adverſary, and for the devil; Jeſus Chriſt ſays to Peter, Get thee behind me, Satan, thou art an offence unto me; Matt. xvi. 23. Mark viii. 33. i. e. begone O my adverſary, you that withſtand what I moſt deſire. But commonly Satan is taken for the devil. Matt. xii. 26. Mark iii. 23. If Satan caſt out Satan, he is divided againſt himſelf. And in the Revelations, xx. 2. He laid hold on the dragon that old ſerpent, which is the devil and Satan, and bound him a thouſand years. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CLIII. p. 130.

The word Satan in ſcripture often denotes an accuſer, a plaintiff in a ſuit, and I think this to be the moſt literal ſignification of the word. Zechariah ſays iii. 1. and he ſhewed me Joſhua the high-prieſt ſtanding before the angel of the Lord, and Satan ſtanding at his right-hand to reſiſt him. The Septuagint have tranſlated this word by Diabolus, which alſo ſignifies an adverſary, a ſlanderer, an accuſer. Satan, or the accuſer, is at the right-hand of Joſhua: (alſo, in Pſal. cix. 6. let Satan ſtand at his right hand. Hebrew, Sathan ſtet à dextris ejus.) Zechariah goes on; And the Lord ſaid unto Satan, The Lord rebuke thee, O Satan. Let him deſpiſe thy accuſations, let him contemn thy malice.

To this paſſage is referred what is ſaid in St. Jude 9, Yet Michael the arch-angel when contending with the devil, he diſputed about the body of Moſes (which the devil would have diſcovered to the children of Iſrael, in order to ſeduce them to pay it a ſuperſtitious worſhip) durſt not bring againſt him a railing accuſation, but ſaid, the Lord rebuke thee. Diabolus in this paſſage is the ſame as Satan in Zechariah.

Angel of Satan. See ANGEL before.

Kingdom of Satan. In the goſpel, Matt. xii. 26. Mark iii. 23. Jeſus Chriſt repreſents Satan as a monarch, who has ſubordinate devils obedient to him. Beelzebub is, as it were, their king. If Beelzebub, ſays he, expells devils, his kingdom is divided againſt itſelf; he labours for his own ruin, which is not credible. St. Paul acknowledges, Acts xxvi. 18. that all who are not in the religion of Jeſus Chriſt, are under the empire and power of Satan. St. John in the Revelations ſays, that after a thouſand years Satan ſhould be unbound, ſhould iſſue from hell, and ſeduce the nations. Rev. xx. 7.

The Synagogue of Satan, Rev. ii. 9, 13. are probably the unbelieving Jews, the falſe zealots for the law of Moſes, who at the beginning were the moſt eager perſecutors of the Chriſtians. They were very numerous at Smyrna, where Polycarp was bithop, to whom St. John writes in this paſſage.

The heights, or the depths, of Satan, St. John writes to the chriſtians of the church of Thyatira, and ſays to them, Rev. ii. 24, which have not known the depths of Satan; τα βάθεα τῦ σατάνε, i. e. the myſteries of the Nicolaitans, and of the Simonians, who concealed their errors under myſterious abſtruſeneſs; they ſpoke of certain intelligences which created the world, but were in oppoſition to the creator. They taught a profound knowledge concerning the nature of angels, and their different degrees. They had ſecret books written in an abſtruſe and myſterious manner; and theſe St. John calls Depths of Satan.

To be delivered up to Satan, is to be excommunicated and ſurrendered to the devil for a ſeaſon, who viſibly poſſeſſed people, that had deſerved this puniſhment. St. Paul delivered up to Satan, Hymenius and Alexander, that they might learn not to blaſpheme. 1 Tim. i. 20. He alſo ſurrendered up to him the inceſtuous perſon of Corinth, for the deſtruction of the fleſh, that the Spirit may be ſaved in the day of the Lord Jeſus 1 Cor. v. 5. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CLIII. "Of Satan."

When Jeſus Chriſt ſent his diſciples to preach in the cities and villages of Judea, they returned back with joy, ſaying, Lord, even the devils are ſubject unto us through thy name. Luke x. 17, 18. Jeſus tells them, I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven. He ſeems to allude to that paſſage of Iſaiah

Iſaiah xiv. 12, How art thou fallen from Heaven, O Lucifer, ſon of the morning! By which he inſinuated, that the kingdom of the devil was coming to a period. He ſays, Luke xxii. 31, to Peter, Simon, Simon, behold Satan hath deſired to have thee, that he may ſift thee as wheat, but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not, ſhewing thereby what efforts the devil would make to deſtroy the church.

We have obſerved elſewhere, that the Hebrews aſcribed to the operation of Satan, great part of bodily diſtempers. Thus, Luke xiii. 16. Ought not this woman, being a daughter of Abraham, whom Satan hath bound, lo theſe eighteen years, to be looſed from this bond on the Sabbath-day?

By collecting all the paſſages where Satan (or the devil) is mentioned, it may be obſerved, that he fell from Heaven, with all his company; that God caſt him down from thence for the puniſhment of his pride; and by his envy and malice, death, and all other evils came into the world; that by the permiſſion of God he exerciſes a ſort of government in the world over his ſubordinates, over apoſtate angels like himſelf; that God makes uſe of him to prove good men, and to chaſtiſe bad ones; that he is a lying ſpirit in the mouth of falſe prophets, ſeducers, and hereticks; that it is he, or ſome of his, that torment, obſeſs, or poſſeſs men, that inſpire them with evil deſigns, as he did David, when he ſuggeſted to him to number his people, and to Judas to betray Jeſus Chriſt, and to Ananias and Sapphira to conceal the price of their field. That he roves about full of rage, like a roaring lion, to tempt, to betray, to deſtroy, and to involve us in guilt and wickedneſs.

That his power and malice are reſtrained within certain limits, and controuled by the will of God; that he ſometimes appears to men to ſeduce them; that he can transform himſelf into an angel of light; that he ſometimes aſſumes the form of a ſpectre, as he appeared to the Egyptians while they were involved in darkneſs in the days of Moſes; that he creates ſeveral diſeaſes to men; that he chiefly preſides over death, and bears away the ſouls of the wicked to hell; that at preſent he is confined to hell, as in a priſon, but that he will be unbound and ſet at liberty in the time of Anti-Chriſt; that hell-fire is prepared for him and his; that he is to be judged at the laſt day. But I cannot perceive very clearly from ſcripture, that he torments the ſouls of the wicked in hell, as we generally believe.

SAVARAN, Σαῦρα or Saura, father of Eleazar; or the ſur-name of Eleazar, 1 Macc. vi. 43. A Greek word, ſignifying, Salamander, or a kind of Lizard.

SAVARAN, or Saura. The ſur-name of Eleazar, brother of Judas Maccabæus, 1 Macc. vi. 43. Ἐλεάζαρ ὁ Σαυαράν Some think that Saura, or Savaran, was the ſur-name of Mattathias father of Eleazar, becauſe the Vulgate reads, Eleazar filius Saura. But the Greek has it, Eleazar ſurnamed Savaran; and the Syriac, ſurnamed Horam. It is not known whence he had the ſurname of Saura. In Macc. xi. 5, he is ſurnamed Avaran, Avaron, or Abaron.

SAVIOUR, Salvator, Soter. This name is appropriated to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Saviour of the world, who was prefigured by all to whom the Old Teſtament gives the name of Saviour, as Joſhua, the Judges of Iſrael, the kings David, Solomon, Joſiah, and the great men raiſed up to deliver the people of God, as Mattathias, Judas Maccabæus, and the reſt. The prophets had deſcribed Jeſus Chriſt, under the name of Saviour; e. gr. Iſai. xii. 3. With joy ſhall ye draw water out of the wells of ſalvation, or of the Saviour. The Lord ſhall ſend them a Saviour, and a great one, and he ſhall deliver them. Iſai. xix. 20. I, even I am the Lord, and beſide me there is no Saviour. Iſai. xliii. 11. The apoſtles and ſacred writers of the New Teſtament, generally give to Jeſus Chriſt the name of Saviour by way of eminence. When the angel foretold his birth, he ſaid he ſhould be called Jeſus, i. e. a Saviour; for he ſhall ſave his people from their ſins. Matth. i. 21. See alſo John iv. 42. Acts xiii. 23. Philipp. iii. 20, &c.

SAVIOUR, to ſave, Salvation. We have already noticed the ſeveral acceptations of the word Salvation under its article. The name Saviour is given to the patriarch Joſeph. Pharaoh changed his name, when he took him into his ſervice, and called him in the Egyptian tongue, the Saviour of the world. Gen. xli. 45. צפנת פענח Zaphnat Phaanach. LXX. Ψονδομ-φανηχ Sym. Σαφαθφανή. The Hebrew reads Zaphnath-phaneah; and theſe words are rather Hebrew than Egyptian. Jerom himſelf acknowledges, in his Hebrew queſtions on Geneſis, that they ſignify in Hebrew, he that diſcovers ſecrets. But in Egyptian they may have another ſignification. And thoſe who were conſulted by Jerom on this point, might probably tell him, that they ſignified the Saviour of the world. Nevertheleſs, Philo, Joſephus, and others, who thought them to be Egyptian, maintain, that in this language Zaphnath-phaneah ſignifies, one that diſcovers ſecrets, or that interprets dreams. The Syriac or Chaldee paraphraſts, and two or three ancient Greek interpreters, are quoted for this; who explain it in the ſame ſenſe.

Greek

God often takes to himſelf the name of Saviour of Iſrael, 1 Sam. xiv. 39. David alſo calls him his ſtrength and his Saviour. 2 Sam. xxii. 3. There is no Saviour beſides me, ſays the Lord in the prophet Hoſea, xiii. 4. And Iſaiah, xvii. 10. Thou haſt forgotten the God of thy Salvation, or thy Saviour. And in truth, God is the Saviour of ſaviours, the God of gods; without him there is neither ſalvation, nor deliverance, nor ſuccour. He raiſes up ſaviours to his people: he raiſed them a ſaviour in the perſon of Othniel, ſon of Kenez, againſt the king of Meſopotamia, who oppreſſed them: Judges iii. 9. Another, in Ehud, ſon of Gerah, againſt Eglon, king of the Moabites. Judg. iii. 15. Obadiah 21, promiſes that the Lord will ſend ſaviours on the mountain of Sion, to judge the mountain of Eſau. Probably he means the Maccabees, who ſubdued the Idumeans.

To ſave is commonly taken for defending any one when in danger; alſo for flying. Save yourſelf (or eſcape) on this mountain. I cannot ſave myſelf (or eſcape) upon the mountain. Gen. xix. 17, 19. To ſave is alſo put for preſerving, e. gr thoſe who have eſcaped any danger, who have fled from a rout or defeat, thoſe who have eſcaped the ſword of the conqueror. Salvatæ ſunt reliquiæ populi, ſays Deborah in her ſong, Judg. v. 13. God has preſerved his people, and defended them from the hand of king Jabin. David fled and was ſaved. 2 Sam. xvii. 22, 12, 18.

To ſave one's ſoul, to ſave one's life. The ſeed of the righteous ſhall be delivered, or ſaved. Prov. xi. 21. To ſave the ſouls, is to ſave and preſerve the perſons. Thou haſt kept me alive (or ſaved me) that I ſhould not go down to the pit. Pſ. xxx. 3. thou haſt not ſuffered me to be reduced to the condition of the dead. Save me from bloody men; Pſ. lix. 2. deliver me out of their hands. I will ſave thee from afar. Jer. xxx. 10. I will bring thee back from a diſtant country, I will deliver thee out of captivity. Thou preſerveſt (or ſaveſt) man and beaſt, Pſ. xxxvi. 6. Thou giveſt them their ſubſiſtence; thy providence is exerted over both, though after a different manner. Save thyſelf. He ſaved others, himſelf he cannot ſave. Mat. xxvii. 40. 42. Thus ſaid the Jews to Jeſus Chriſt. Let him deliver himſelf out of this danger; let him deliver himſelf from death, as he has delivered others.

SAUL, שאול demanded, or lent, ditch, ſepulchre, death, or hell; from שאל ſhaal, or ſheol, according to different ways of reading.

I. SAUL, king of Idumea, Gen. xxxvi. 37. This Saul was of Rehoboth, and ſucceeded Samlah of Maſrekah.

II. SAUL, the ſon of Kiſh, of the tribe of Benjamin, the firſt king of the Iſraelites. Kiſh having loſt his ſhe-aſſes, ſent his ſon Saul to ſeek them. After he had in vain travelled over a conſiderable country, and was on the point of returning to Gibeah to his father, a ſervant who was with him, ſaid, Here is a very famous prophet, hard by, let us conſult him; ſo they went to Ramah, where they learned that the prophet Samuel was. Saul aſked him where the ſeer or prophet, lived? Samuel anſwered, "It is I who am the ſeer;" and Samuel made Saul and his ſervant enter the room where the feaſt was kept, placed them at the head of the table, and by way of diſtinction, ſerved up to Saul the ſhoulder of a ſacrifice. After ſupper Samuel conducted Saul to his lodging on the terrace of the houſe, and on the morrow morning he brought him down, and came with him below the city of Ramah.

Afterwards he anointed him, kiſſed him, and told him of the kingdom to which he was divinely appointed; of the certainty of which he gave him ſeveral ſigns. All that Samuel had foretold him was fulfilled that ſame day, and God changed him into another man. All thoſe who ſaw him, ſaid with wonder, What has happened to the ſon of Kiſh? Is Saul alſo among the prophets? and this afterwards became a kind of proverb.

Some time after this, Samuel aſſembled the people at Mizpeh, to give them a king, as they had deſired. He caſt lots on all the tribes of Iſrael, and the lot fell on the tribe of Benjamin. He caſt them on all the families of this tribe, and it fell on the family of Matri. Laſtly, he caſt them on the family of Kiſh, and the lot fell on the perſon of Saul. He was immediately ſought for, but could not be found: they took him, however, from his concealment, and when he was among the people, he appeared taller than the reſt by the whole head. The people ſhouted, and cried, "God ſave the king!" and Samuel declared before the people, the laws and conditions of the kingdom, and then diſmiſſed the aſſembly. Saul returned to Gibeah, accompanied by a part of the army, conſiſting of men whoſe hearts the Lord had inclined to his intereſts. Others deſpiſed Saul, and ſaid, How ſhall this man ſave us? But Saul affected not to hear them.

About a month afterwards, Nahaſh, king of the Ammonites, beſieged the city of Jabeſh-Gilead; and and meſſengers were ſent from Jabeſh to Gibeah, to acquaint the people, that the king of the Ammonites had attacked the city, and threatened to put out every man's right eye, and to make it a reproach to Iſrael. Saul happening to return from the field with his oxen, and ſeeing the people weep, he aſked the reaſon of it. Then he took his oxen and cut them in pieces, and ſent them into all Iſrael, ſaying, Thus ſhall it be done to the oxen of whoever will not follow Saul and Samuel. Saul attacked the Ammonites in three places at once, killed a great number of them; and ſo diſperſed them, that hardly two could be found together. After this, all the people returned to Gilgal, where they renewed the inauguration of king Saul. This happened in the firſt year of Saul. 1 Sam. xiii. 1, 2, 3, &c. The Vulgate has it, Filius unius anni erat Saul cum regnare cœpiſſet, duobus autem annis regnavit ſuper Iſrael. But the Hebrew is, Saul was the ſon of a year in his kingdom; and he reigned two years over Iſrael, and he choſe,—or, in the ſecond year of his reign over Iſrael he choſe,—The commentators on 1 Sam. xiii. 1, may be conſulted, for the different ſenſes given to this paſſage. Vide FRAGMENT, No.

Two years afterwards Saul choſe three thouſand men out of Iſrael, of which he gave one thouſand to his ſon Jonathan, and kept two thouſand about his perſon. Jonathan defeated the Philiſtines at Gibeah, on the news of which the people took courage, and thought of ſhaking off the yoke of the Philiſtines. They aſſembled therefore in great numbers, in arms, before Saul, in Gilgal. The Philiſtines having intelligence of this, with a prodigious army, encamped at Michmaſh, eaſt of Bethel. When the Iſraelites ſaw themſelves thus incloſed, they began to withdraw themſelves, ſome one way and ſome another. Saul continued ſeven days at Gilgal, expecting the arrival of the prophet Samuel: ſeeing he did not come, he began to offer ſacrifices to God. But he had barely finiſhed when Samuel arrived, and told him he had done ill: So that, added he, your reign will not continue long.

Samuel and Saul, and ſix hundred men with them, went from Gilgal to Gibeah; and the Philiſtines from Michmaſh came and encamped at Gibeah. One day as Jonathan and his armour-bearer went towards the camp of the Philiſtines, (Vide JONATHAN,) ſuddenly the camp of the enemy was in confuſion, and the centinels of the army of Saul ſaw the ground covered with dead bodies. Saul with his people then began to purſue the enemy; and the Iſraelites who had fled away before, rallying, they killed a great number of the Philiſtines.

Saul on this day had denounced a malediction, and ſaid, "Curſed be he that ſhall eat any thing till evening". Now Jonathan being abſent, knew not what had paſſed; as he went through a wood he found ſome honey, and taking ſome upon the end of his ſtaff, he ate it. In the evening, when the people were gathered together after the victory, Saul diſcovered that God was offended by ſome crime committed among them; he ordered the lot to be caſt on all the army; and the lot fell on Jonathan. Saul told him, that on this neceſſity he muſt die for his inadvertence; but the people oppoſed it, and delivered him.

When Saul had ſtrengthened himſelf in the kingdom of Iſrael, he carried his arms abroad, among the enemies of his nation; againſt Moab, Ammon, Edom, againſt the kings of Zobah in Syria, and againſt the Philiſtines; and which way ſoever he turned himſelf, he remained victorious. The times and circumſtances of theſe wars are unknown.

After this, Samuel brought him orders from the Lord, that he ſhould utterly exterminate the Amalekites, that he ſhould ſpare neither man nor beaſt, nor any valuable thing whatever. Saul therefore took the field againſt the Amalekites, and defeated them; but he ſaved their king, and the beſt of the cattle, and the beſt of the booty. Afterwards he returned to Gilgal; but as he paſſed Mount Carmel, (ſouth of Judah, and very different from Carmel on the Mediterranean) he there erected a triumphal arch. Vide FRAGMENT, No. p. and 1 Sam. xv. 12. Et ecce erexit ſibi manum. Confer 2 Reg. xviii. 18. Abſalom erexit ſibi manum. He ſet him up a hand, or monument. Eng. (He ſet him up a place.) Samuel alſo coming to Gilgal, Saul went to meet him, and ſaid, I have fulfilled the word of the Lord. Samuel replied, Whence then is this lowing of oxen, and bleating of ſheep, that ſounds in my ears? Saul anſwered him, The people have brought of the beſt of the flocks of Amalek, to offer ſacrifices to the Lord. But Samuel told him, It is not ſacrifice that the Lord requires, but implicit ſubmiſſion to his commands: Obedience is better than burnt-offerings, &c.

Samuel was about to leave Saul, but Saul laying hold of his garment, it tore in his hands. Then Samuel ſaid to him, Thus hath the Lord torn away the kingdom from you. The ſtrength (or victory) of Iſrael will not lie nor repent; for he is not a man that he ſhould repent. (Some apply theſe words to Saul; as if Samuel, by a bitter irony, ſhould ſay, that a prince like him that could erect triumphal arches, was not a man to repent: But it ſeems moſt eligible to refer them to God, who would not revoke the ſentence pronounced againſt Saul.) However, Samuel returned with him to the camp at Gilgal.

Some years afterwards Samuel went by order from the Lord, to give the royal unction to David; the ſpirit of the Lord withdrew from Saul, and God ſuffered an evil ſpirit to take occaſion from the bad diſpoſition of the humors of this prince, and his melancholy temperament, to move and agitate him, or poſſeſs him. Ita Rab. & Interpret. plures. Then his courtiers cauſed David to attend him, to ſoothe his diſtemper by the ſound of muſical inſtruments, on which David could play very ſkilfully. Saul took an affection for David, and made him his armour-bearer. About eight years afterwards, the Philiſtines came and encamped between Shocoh and Azekah, Saul with the army of Iſrael took their ſtation in the vale of Elah. Now, in the army of the Philiſtines was a giant, by name Goliah, who came daily to inſult the army of Iſrael, to challenge it. Saul had promiſed his daughter in marriage to any man who ſhould overcome him, David who had retired from court, and lived with his father at Bethlehem, was ſent by him into the camp about this time; and being offended at theſe inſults of Goliah, he undertook to fight with him, which he did, and ſlew him. Vide DAVID.

But Saul took a grudge againſt David, becauſe, at his return, the women who ſung and danced before the victorious army, chanted, that Saul had killed his thouſands, and David his ten thouſands. He ſeveral times attempted the life of David. He afterwards gave him the command of a thouſand men, and promiſed him Merab, his eldeſt daughter; though at the ſame time he had no intention to let him have her. He only ſought an occaſion of putting him to death by the hand of the Philiſtines. He afterwards married his daughter Merab to another, and promiſed him his ſecond daughter Michal; then he acquainted David, that he required no other dowry for his daughter than an hundred foreſkins of the Philiſtines. David ſoon performed this condition, and married Michal.

Saul ſeeing that David by his valour acquired reputation every day, reſolved to put him to death. Jonathan for a time diverted him from his purpoſe; but afterwards, when Saul relapſed into his uſual melancholy, he attempted again to pierce David with the lance he held in his hand. David eſcaped this alſo, and retired to his own houſe, which Saul ordered to be beſet. In the night-time Michal let him down out of a window, by which means he eſcaped and withdrew to Samuel at Naioth in Ramah. Saul ſent meſſengers thither to apprehend him, but they were ſeized there by a prophetic ſpirit, and when Saul, at laſt, came thither himſelf, he alſo began to propheſy. Vide SAMUEL.

David then came to Nob, and received a ſword and ſome refreſhments from the high-prieſt Ahimelech. Saul was informed of this ſome time afterwards by Doeg the Idumean, who happened to be at Nob when David came thither. Saul immediately ſent to Nob, to fetch all the prieſts before him; he ſeverely reproached them with having ſupported his enemy; and had them ſlaughtered before his face, to the number of fourſcore and five perſons. He went himſelf afterwards to Nob, and put all the inhabitants to the ſword, man, woman, and child; not ſo much as ſparing the ſucking infants, nor the cattle.

Saul afterwards purſued David, who at length retired into the wilderneſs of En-gedi, and Saul went after him with his troops; but finding himſelf conſtrained by a neceſſity of nature, he entered a cave, where David and his people were hid. David coming ſoftly behind him, cut off the lappet of his coat, without his perceiving it. When he went out, and was at a diſtance, David went after him, ſhewed him the lappet of his coat, which he had cut off, and told him, it had been in his power to have killed him, but that he would never lift his hand againſt the Lord's anointed. Saul, moved with the generoſity of David, could not forbear ſhedding tears; acknowledging himſelf to be unjuſt. After this, he went back to his own houſe, and David retired into the wilderneſs of Ziph. When the Ziphites knew it, they went preſently and gave Saul notice, who came with his army on the hill of Hachilah. While he was encamped in this place, David went by night into his camp, and penetrated even into the king's tent, where having found every body aſleep, he took the king's lance and cup, and then withdrew out of the camp: and thus he again reproved Saul, whom he forced to juſtify his integrity.

Some years after this, the Philiſtines invaded Iſrael. Saul and his troops took the field alſo, and encamped on the mountains of Gilboa. But when Saul ſaw the army of the Philiſtines, which was very formidable, his heart began to fail. He conſulted the Lord by his prieſts and prophets, but the Lord returned him no anſwer; not knowing whom to addreſs, he found out a witch, or enchantreſs at Endor.

Some time before, Saul had baniſhed all wizards and magicians out of his dominions; and that he might not be known by this witch, he diſguiſed himſelf, and went with two ſervants. He deſired her to raiſe up Samuel. Saul bid her fear nothing, and aſked, who ſhe ſaw aſcending? She anſwered, I ſee Gods, or a great man, a prince, a judge of Iſrael. (1 Sam. xxviii. 13. אלהים ראיתי. In Heb. Elohim, which name is given to princes, and great men.) Saul fell down at his feet; and Samuel ſaid to him; The Lord is withdrawn from you, and to-morrow you ſhall be with me, you and your ſons, and the Lord will deliver Iſrael into the hands of the Philiſtines. Saul ſunk immediately, extended on the earth, for he had eat nothing all that day.

The next day the battle was fought, in which Iſrael was put to flight before the Philiſtines; and the ſons of Saul, Jonathan, Abinadab, and Malchiſhua, were ſlain. Saul himſelf was preſſed very hard, the archers ſhooting at him, and wounding him dangerouſly. Seeing his ſtate was deſperate he ſaid to his armour-bearer; draw your ſword and kill me: but his armour-bearer refuſed. Saul then took his own ſword and fell upon it; and his armour-bearer followed his example. Thus died Saul the firſt king of Iſrael, after a reign of forty years.

An Amalekite, who by chance was near, took off his crown and bracelet, and brought them to David. He told David that he himſelf had ſlain Saul, but we think he falſly boaſted that he had ſlain the king of Iſrael. Vide FRAGMENTS, No. p.

The day after the battle, when the Philiſtines came to take the ſpoils of the dead, they found Saul and his three ſons extended upon the plain. They cut off Saul's head, and took away his armour, which was carried to the temple of Aſhtaroth; and they hung up his body againſt the walls of Beth-ſhan, which probably were oppoſite to the chief ſtreet, becauſe it is ſaid 2 Sam. xxi. 12. that his body was hung up in the ſtreet of this city. And we read 1 Chron. x. 10. that his head was faſtened in the Temple of Dagon. When the inhabitants of Jabeſh-Gilead were informed of theſe indignities they went by night and took down the bodies, and brought them into their city beyond Jordan, where they burnt the remains of the fleſh and buried the bones. They faſted and mourned for the king ſeven days, in commemoration of the ſervice he had done their city at the beginning of his reign. Several years afterwards David had theſe bones removed from the grave at Jabeſh, and put into the ſepulchre of Kiſh the father of Saul, at Gibeah, 2 Sam. xxi. 12, 13, 14. Iſh-boſheſh, the fourth ſon of Saul, ſucceeded him in the kingdom, and reigned at Mahanaim beyond Jordan, over the eleven tribes; for David then began to reign over the tribe of Judah.

It has been matter of inquiry, whether Saul, on this occaſion, could put himſelf to death, without being guilty of a crime? The Rabbins commend Saul for his ſubmiſſion to the orders of God, and exalt the obedience of this prince, who notwithſtanding the terrible denunciations of Samuel, and the certainty of his own and his ſons' deaths in the battle, yet did not endeavour to avoid it. They add, that what induced him to put himſelf to death was, his fear that the name of God ſhould be blaſphemed by the Philiſtines, if the king of his people ſhould come alive into their hands. In the laſt actions of Saul, equally as in the firſt, there appears no mark of certain and ſolid repentance. We do not ſee that he had recourſe to God, or any view to his glory, when he put himſelf to death. St. Paul tells us, that we muſt not do evil that good may come of it. But ſelf-murder is certainly a very great evil. Beſides, Saul by his death could not prevent the blaſphemy of the Philiſtines, ſince they would equally blaſpheme the name of the Lord, whether Saul fell into their hands dead or alive. Laſtly, the ſcripture ſays, So Saul died for his tranſgreſſion which he committed againſt the Lord, even againſt the word of the Lord, which he kept not; and alſo for aſking counſel of one that had a familiar ſpirit, to enquire of it: and enquired not of the Lord. Therefore he ſlew him, and turned the kingdom unto David the ſon of Jeſſe. 1 Chron. x. 13, 14. Vide RAZIA. Alſo SAMUEL, DAVID, &c.

II. SAUL, ſurnamed Paul. See PAUL.

SAW. The puniſhment of the Saw was not unknown among the Hebrews. I imagine this puniſhment came originally from the Perſians, or the Chaldeans. I am aſſured that it is ſtill in uſe among the Switzers, and that they practiſed it not many years ago, on one of their countrymen, guilty of a great crime, in the plain of Grenelles near Paris. They put him into a kind of coffin, and ſawed him at length, beginning at his head, as a piece of wood is ſawn. Pariſatis king of Perſia, cauſed Roxana to be ſawn in two alive. Cteſias, in Perſia. Valerius

Maximus ſays, that the Thracians ſometimes made living men undergo this torture. The laws of the twelve tables, which the Romans had borrowed from the Greeks, condemned certain crimes to the puniſhment of the ſaw. But the execution of it was ſo rare, as Aulus Gellius ſays, Noct. Att. lib. 12. cap. 2. that none remembred to have ſeen it practiſed. Herodotus lib. 6. relates, that Sabacus, king of Egypt, received an order in a dream, to cut in two all the prieſts of Egypt. Caius Caligula the emperor, often condemned people of condition to be ſawn in two through the middle; aut medios ſerrâ diſſecuit. Sueton. in Caio.

St. Paul in his epiſtle to the Hebrews xi. 37. (ἐπρίσθησαν. Serrâ ſecti ſunt.) ſpeaking of the calamities ſuffered by ſaints of the Old Teſtament, ſays, ſome were "ſawn aſunder." Origen, Juſtin Martyr, Dialog. cum Tryphone. Jerom, in Iſai. lib. 15. ad finem. the author of the poem againſt Marcion, printed under the name of Tertullian, and ſeveral other ancients, have explained this paſſage concerning the death of Iſaiah, who is ſaid to have been put to death by king Manaſſeh, with a wooden ſaw. This circumſtance of a ſaw of wood is perplexing; for no ſaws are made of wood; and beſides, a man could not be cut in two with ſuch a ſaw. Our conjecture on this matter is by ſuppoſing this ſaw of wood was a ſledge loaded with ſtones and iron ſpikes, with which they threſhed the ears of corn, to get out the grain. Or might it not be underſtood more ſimply of a wood-ſaw, i. e. a ſaw fit for cutting wood, there being ſaws of ſeveral kinds, for ſtone, for iron, for wood, &c.

Daniel alſo ſpeaks of the puniſhment of the ſaw. Suſan. 55. Even now the angel of God hath received the ſentence of God, to cut thee in two. St. Matthew ſays that the wicked ſervant ſhall be cut in two and thruſt among the hypocrites. Matthew xxiv. 51. Luke xii. 46. The Old Teſtament alludes to this cuſtom, when it uſe the word, to cut in two, to divide, for putting to death.

SCANDAL. This word in antient Greek authors, according to Pollux, ſignifies that part of a mouſe-trap, which is ſuſpended; or the bended piece of wood that ſupports what they call the hammer, according to the ſcholiaſt of Ariſtophanes. In general, according to Heſychius, ſcandalum ſignifies a ſnare, an incumbrance. In Scripture and in eccleſiaſtical authors, ſcandal is put for any thing that a man finds in his way, which may occaſion him to fall. Thus Moſes, Levit. xix. 14. apud LXX. forbids to put a ſtumbling block (or Scandal) before the blind; i. e. neither wood, ſtone, nor any thing elſe, that may make him ſtumble or fall. Exod. xxiii. 33. he forbids the Iſraelites to make a covenant with the Canaanites, for fear they ſhould be perverted to idolatry, which would be a great ſnare, or ſcandal, to them. Saul gave David his daughter Michal in marriage, hoping this match might prove a ſnare and ſcandal to him. 1 Sam. xviii. 21. The Lord ſhall be the happineſs and the ſanctification of thoſe that fear him; but for a ſtone of ſtumbling, and for a rock of offence (a ſcandal) to both the houſes of Iſrael; for a gin, and for a ſnare to the inhabitants of Jeruſalem. Iſaiah viii. 14. Jeſus Chriſt ſays to St. Peter, when he would perſuade him againſt his paſſion; Get thee behind me Satan thou art an offence unto me. Matt. xvi. 23. Laſtly, he ſays of himſelf; Bleſſed is he whoſoever ſhall not be offended (or ſcandalized) in me; Matt. xi. 6. or to whom I ſhall not be an occaſion of ſcandal; to whom my life, my poverty, my birth, my death, my croſs, ſhall not give or adminiſter ſcandal.

The Greek word Scandal Σκάνδαλον, or πρόσκομμα, or σκῶλον, anſwers to the Hebrew משכול Maſhcul which ſignifies fall, ruin, ſin, what hinders from walking, and makes one fall:—which comes from the root ſhacal, to fall, to tumble; and in the conjugation Hiphil ſignifies, to make to fall, to overthrow, to lay ſnares, &c. In a moral ſenſe there is an active and a paſſive ſcandal. The firſt is that which our words or actions may occaſion to others; from their evil tendency, or their pernicious influence. Jeſus Chriſt affirms, It muſt needs be that offences come; or, ſcandals muſt of neceſſity ariſe. But he adds, Woe to that man by whom the offence cometh. If your hand or foot are a cauſe of ſcandal to you, cut them off, and caſt them from you; you had better enter the kingdom of God without hand or foot, than be caſt into outer darkneſs with all your limbs entire. Mark ix. 43. He ſays moreover, have a care of offending (or ſcandalizing) one of theſe little ones that believe in me; it were better for him who gives a ſcandal to ſuch, that a mill-ſtone were hung about his neck, and he were caſt into the ſea. Jeſus Chriſt, in reſpect of the Jews, was a ſcandal, and a rock of offence, againſt which they ſtruck; and on which they have fallen, and are broken.

The mountain of ſcandal. Mons offenſionis, was the mountain of olives, upon which Solomon built temples and erected altars to his falſe gods, to pleaſe his ſtrange wives. 1 Kings xi. 4. 2 Kings xxiii. 13

SCEPTRE, Sceptrum, in Greek, Skeptron, in Hebrew, Shebet. This word properly ſignifies,

I. A Rod of command, a ſtaff of authority, a ſceptre, which is placed in the hand of the gods, of kings, of governors of a province, of the chief of a people. Jacob foretold to Judah, that the ſceptre ſhould not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come, and unto him ſhall the gathering of the people be. Gen. xlix. 10. And Balaam alſo, foretelling the coming of the Meſſiah, ſays, A ſceptre ſhall riſe out of Iſrael. Numb. xxiv. 17. Baruch ſpeaks of the ſceptre that the Babylonians put into the hands of their gods. Bar. vi. 13. Sceptrum habet ut homo, ſicut Judex regionis. They are given alſo to ſcribes, to commiſſaries, who keep a liſt of the troops. Judges v. 14. Alſo the prophets often ſpeak of the ſceptre of dominion; Iſai. xiv. 5. xix. 11, 14. and Amos repreſents the ſovereign power by him that holds the ſceptre. Amos i. 5, 8. Ahaſuerus carried in his hand a golden ſceptre, &c. Eſther viii. 4. Vide FRAGMENTS No. CXXIII. p. 36.

II. The ſceptre is put for the rod of correction, for the ſovereign authority that puniſhes and humbles. Pſalm ii. 9. Thou ſhalt break them with a rod of iron, or an iron ſceptre. The wiſe man often uſes the Hebrew word Shebet, to expreſs the rod with which the diſobedient ſon, and the intractable ſervant, are diſciplined. Prov. xxii. 15.

III. The ſceptre is very often taken for a tribe; probably, becauſe the princes of each tribe carried a ſceptre, or a wand of command, to ſhew their dignity. The LXX, and Vulgate, generally tranſlate this Hebrew word by tribe; but ſometimes they preſerve the word ſceptre. For the LXX, ſee 1 Sam. ix. 21. x. 19, 20, 21. xv. 17. 1 Kings viii. 16. xi. 13, 32, 35. xii. 20, 21. For the Vulgate, ſee Numb. xviii. 2. Jerem. li. 19.

IV. The ſceptre, or the Hebrew word Shebet, ſignifies a ſhepherd's wand, Lev. xxvii. 32. the truncheon of a warrior, or any common ſtaff; 2 Sam. xxiii. 21. the dart, javelin, or lance of a ſoldier, 2 Sam. xviii. 14. the rod or flail with which they threſh the ſmaller grain, Iſaiah xxviii. 27.

SCEVA, Σκίυα, diſpoſed, prepared: from the Greek σκευάζω, I diſpoſe, I prepare.

SCEVA chief of the prieſts; Acts xix. 14, 15, 16. i. e. either chief of the ſynagogue at Epheſus, according to ſome, or rather, chief of one of the twenty-four ſacerdotal families, who waited, each in their turn, in the temple at Jeruſalem. 1 Chron. xxiv. 7, 8, &c. Laſtly, they gave the name of chief of the prieſts to the high-prieſts who had been depoſed, and were no longer in office. Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xvii. cap 15. ſpeaks of the high-prieſt, Jeſus the ſon of Siah, who lived nine or ten years after the birth of Jeſus Chriſt. The ſame author ſpeaks alſo in another place, (de vita ſua, cap. 1008, 1009, 1020, 1021. & de Bello, lib. 2. cap. 25.) of another prieſt called Jeſus the ſon of Sapha, or Saphia, who had a great ſhare in the affairs of the Jews, during the laſt war againſt the Romans. This might be the ſon of one, or the other, of theſe prieſts, who went from city to city, as ſeveral Jews did, to exorciſe the poſſeſſed. Theſe exorciſts being at Epheſus, pretended to invoke the name of Jeſus over the poſſeſſed; ſaying, "we conjure thee by Jeſus, whom Paul preaches." But the evil ſpirit anſwered, "Jeſus I know, and Paul I know, but who are ye?" at the ſame time the poſſeſſed perſon, threw himſelf upon two of theſe exorciſts, and handled them ſo rudely, that they were forced to run out of the houſe naked and wounded.

SCHISM, from the Greek Schiſma, which ſignifies rupture, or diviſion. St. Paul exhorts the Corinthians, 1 Cor. i. 10. to live in union together, that there be no ſchiſms—no diviſions among you. St. John ſays, chap. ix. 16. that the Jews were divided among themſelves concerning Jeſus Chriſt, ſome affirming, that he was a true prophet, others, that he was a deceiver. And there was a diviſion (or ſchiſm) among them. When Jeroboam revolted againſt Rehoboam, and was acknowledged king by the ten tribes, he made a ſchiſm, ſeparated from the religion of the Lord, forſook the communion of Judah, and no longer frequented the temple, which was the choſen and appointed place, to offer worſhip to the Lord. The Cuthites, otherwiſe called Samaritans, who came from beyond the Euphrates, to ſettle in the cities of the ten tribes, continued in ſchiſm. The Jews at this day look upon the Caraites as ſchiſmaticks, becauſe they do not receive their traditions.

We have ſeveral ſchiſms in the hiſtory of the Chriſtian church. The difference made between ſchiſm and hereſy, is, that hereſy is founded on capital errors, which the heretick maintains obſtinately, and in contempt of the cenſures of the church. Schiſm, is not merely founded on the errors of him who ſeparates from the church, but on his obſtinacy in continuing ſeparate from its communion.

SCHOOLS, of the Jews. The Hebrews always diligently taught and ſtudied the laws received from Moſes. The father of the family ſtudied, and taught them in his own family: the Rabbin taught taught them in the temple, in the ſynagogues, and in the academies. They pretend that even before the deluge there were ſchools of which the patriarchs had the direction. They place Adam at their head, then Enoch, and laſtly Noah. Melchizedek ſay they, kept a ſchool in the city of Kiriath-zepher, otherwiſe Hebron, in Paleſtine. Abraham, who had been inſtructed by Heber, taught in Chaldea and in Egypt. Joſ. Antiq. lib. i. cap. 8. Jacob ſucceeded Abraham in the office of teaching. In Gen. xxv. 27. ſcripture ſays, he was a plain man dwelling in tents; which according to the Chaldee paraphraſt, is, that he was a perfect man, and a miniſter of the houſe of doctrine.

All this indeed, muſt needs be very precarious. It cannot be doubted, but that Moſes, Aaron, and the elders of Iſrael, inſtructed the people in the wilderneſs; and that many good Iſraelites were very induſtrious to inſtruct their families in the fear of God. But all this does not prove, that there were ſuch ſchools as we are now inquiring after. Under Joſhua we ſee a kind of academy of the prophets, where the children of the prophets, i. e. their diſciples, lived in retired life, in ſtudy, in meditation, and reading of the law of God. There were ſchools of the prophets at Naioth in Ramah; David and Samuel withdrew thither. 1 Sam. xix. 19, 20, &c. Saul ſent meſſengers thither to apprehend David, &c.

We find others alſo under the prophets Elijah and Eliſha at Bethel, 2 Kings ii. 3. and in the plain of Jericho: and a great number of them in the kingdom of Iſrael, 2 Kings ii. 5. Some have thought, that Elijah had alſo a ſociety of them on mount Carmel, 1 Kings xviii. 4, 13. xix. 1. xx. 35, &c. Theſe prophets were conſulted on affairs of importance: people went to hear their leſſons, as appears from the hoſteſs of Eliſha. Her huſband aſks her, why ſhe went to ſee the prophet, ſeeing that day was neither the Sabbath nor the new-moon? Lightfoot, centur. p. 661. 2 Kings iv. 23. Theſe ſchools continued down to the captivity of Babylon; and it ſhould ſeem, that the captives went there to hear the prophets, when there were any, in the places where they reſided. Ezekiel relates ſundry converſations with the elders of Iſrael, who came to ſee him, and to conſult him, ſeveral times. The people alſo aſſembled about him, as if to hear him, and be inſtructed by him; but they were not very careful to put his inſtructions in practice. Ezekiel xx. 1, 2, 3, &c. xiv. 1, 2. viii. 1.

Theſe ſchools, or ſocieties, of the prophets were ſucceeded by ſynagogues. It is doubted whether there were any ſuch before the captivity of Babylon. Yet we read in the Pſalms that Nebuchadnezzar burnt all the ſynagogues of the country. The elders of Iſrael paſſed the night in prayer in the place of aſſembly, Judith vi. 21, 22. aſking the aſſiſtance of the Lord againſt Holofernes. The Greek of Eſther, iv. 16. inſinuates, that there were alſo ſynagogues at Suſa, in the time of Eſther and Mordecai. We are aſſured, that they were become ſo numerous in Judea, after the return from the captivity, that in the city of Jeruſalem only, there were four hundred. Every trading company had its own, and the ſtrangers had ſeveral alſo. Vitringa, de Synagog. veter. lib. i. p. 2. cap. 10. Franc. Burman.

It was only after the return from the captivity that there was in Iſrael that diſtinction of ſects, Phariſees, Sadducees, Eſſenians, &c. Each ſect had its particular ſchool.

The method of teaching in the ſynagogues and in the ſchools, is plainly obſervable in the goſpels, and in the Acts. When Jeſus Chriſt was twelve years of age, he was found in the temple, in the midſt of the doctors, hearing them, and aſking them queſtions. Luke ii. 46. Entering one day into the ſynagogue of Nazareth, his own country, they preſented to him the volume of the prophet Iſaiah. Luke iv. 16, 17. He unrolled and opened it, and having read a paſſage out of the prophet, he rolled it up again, and ſat down to ſpeak. He read it therefore ſtanding, juſt as we now read the goſpel. St. Paul ſays, Acts xxii. 3. that he had ſtudied at the feet of Gamaliel. Philo, (quod omnis probus liber) relates, that among the Eſſenes, the children ſat at the feet of their maſters, who interpreted the law, and explained the figurative and allegorical ſenſe of it, after the manner of the antient philoſophers. The author publiſhed under the name of St. Ambroſe, on the epiſtles of St. Paul, in 1 Cor. xiv. ſays, that among the Hebrews the Rabbins ſat on chairs that were raiſed, thoſe ſcholars, who were the greateſt proficients, were on benches juſt below their maſters, and the younger ſort ſat on the ground, on haſſocks. But the authors of the Talmud, tit. Megillah, teach us, that antiently the maſters ſat down, and the ſcholars ſtood up. But this cuſtom was changed before the deſtruction of the temple by the Romans; and from that time, the maſter ſat in the firſt place, and the ſcholars ſat round about him, in chairs, or on the ground. The maſter taught either by himſelf, or by an interpreter. If he uſed an interpreter, he ſpoke

Hebrew

Hebrew to him, and the interpreter explained it in the vulgar tongue. If the ſcholars deſired to propoſe any queſtion to the maſter, they addreſſed themſelves to the interpreter, who propoſed it to the Rabbin, and reported his anſwer to the ſcholars. [Vide 1 Cor. xiv. 27.]

Jerom, in Iſaiah cap. 8. lib. 3. ſays, that a little before the birth of Jeſus Chriſt, two famous Rabbins, Shammai and Hillel, the heads of two celebrated ſchools, formed two parties among the Jews; and were maſters of the Scribes and Phariſees. Akiba ſucceeded them, and was maſter of the famous Aquila, the tranſlator of the ſcriptures of the Old Teſtament. Akiba had Meir for his ſucceſſor, after whom appeared Joanan ſon of Zachai, than Eliezer, afterwards Delphon, Joſeph the Galilean, and laſtly Joſhua, who preſided over this ſchool at the taking of Jeruſalem. Thus the Jews made out the ſucceſſion of their doctors in the time of Jerom.

The Rabbins affirm, that after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, they ſet up a ſchool at Japhne in Galilee, called afterwards Iveline, and another at Lydda, or Dioſpolis. Akiba firſt profeſſed at Dioſpolis, then at Japhne. Gamaliel ſucceeded him at Dioſpolis, and he ſucceeded Gamaliel at Japhne. But the moſt famous academy, was that of Tiberias on the ſea of Galilee. There Juda the holy, a diſciple of Meir, Chinina, and Johanan, were profeſſors ſucceſſively. After ſome time, Juda withdrew from Tiberias, and opened a ſchool at Sephoris, and there profeſſed for ſeventeen years. But it is proper to obſerve, that, all this ſucceſſion of maſters and ſchools is very uncertain. See F. Morin, Exercitationes Biblicæ, lib. ii. exer. 2. cap. 1, 3.

After the fall of the ſchools in Paleſtine, about the middle of the third century, the Jews are conſtrained to ſeek the ſucceſſion of their doctors beyond the Euphrates, at Sora, at Pundebita, at Nahardea, and at Perutzſhibbur; places little known, and whoſe very ſituations are doubtful. They think it was the doctors Rab and Samuel, diſciples of Judah the holy, who founded them about the year 220. They ſubſiſted, they ſay, 800 years, till about A. D. 1030, when they were deſtroyed by the Saracens.

On the ruins of theſe ſchools were formed thoſe of Egypt and Europe. Their doctors chiefly made their appearance in Spain. Moſes ſon of Maimon, or Maimonides, was born at Cordova, he was a diſciple of Averroes, he withdrew into Egypt, and there died about A. D. 1205. Rabbi Nathan, chief of the ſchool of Rome, died A. D. 1106. Abenezra, another famous Rabbi, died at Rhodes A. D. 1174. Rabbi Solomon, otherwiſe called Raſchi or Jarchi, a native of Lunel in Provence, or of Troyes in Champagne, died at Treves A. D. 1180. Kimchi was born at Narbonne, he flouriſhed from A. D. 1200, till towards 1250. Theſe are the principal Rabbins, and the times in which they lived. From this one may form a notion of their ſchools, and of the ſucceſſion of their doctors.

SCOPAS, an Etolian, general of the armies of Ptolemy Epiphanes, king of Egypt, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xii. cap. 3. Polyb. hiſt. lib. 16. he was ſent by the king his maſter into Judea, and into Celeſyria in A. M. 3806, ante A. D. 198. to recover the cities and provinces that Antiochus the Great had conquered from him. Scopas had at firſt the advantage, probably becauſe his expedition was in the winter; but the ſummer following he was beat by Antiochus near Paneas, about the ſources of Jordan. St. Jerom, on chap. xi. of Daniel, ſays, that Scopas retiring into the city of Sidon, was there beſieged by Antiochus; that Ptolemy Epiphanes attempted to deliver him from thence, and ſent three very experienced captains, Æropus, Menocles, and Damoxenus; but they being unable to raiſe the ſiege, Scopas was forced to ſurrender, happy enough in ſaving his life, with the remainder of his troops. He returned into Egypt, but did not long remain quiet; for two years afterwards, he took it in his head to be made king of Egypt, with the aſſiſtance of the Etolians whom he commanded; but his irreſolution ruined him. Polyb. lib. xvii. Ariſtomenes and Polycrates accuſed him of high treaſon; and he was become ſo ſtupefied, that not knowing what defence to make, he was unanimouſly condemned to die, by all preſent. The following night Ariſtomenes put him to death in priſon, by making him ſwallow poiſon.

SCOPOS, a place ſeven furlongs, or eight hundred and ſeventy-five paces north of Jeruſalem, where Titus poſted two legions, when he attacked Jeruſalem. Joſeph. de Bello, lib. vi. cap. 3.

SCORPION. The Scorpion is a ſmall animal which has a bladder full of a dangerous poiſon. The head appears to be joined and continued to the breaſt: it has two eyes in the middle of its head, and two towards its extremity, between which come out, as it were, two arms, like the claws of a lobſter. It has eight legs proceeding from its breaſt, each divided into ſix parts, covered with hair, at the end of which are ſix talons or claws. The belly is divided into ſeven rings, from the laſt of which the tail proceeds, which is divided into ſeven little beads, of which the laſt is armed with a ſting. Some have ſix eyes, others others eight. The tail is long, and formed after the manner of a ſtring of beads tyed end to end, the laſt bigger than the others, and longer, at the end of which are, ſometimes, two ſtings, which are hollow, and filled with a cold poiſon, which it ejects into the part which it ſtings.

The ſcorpion is of a blackiſh colour like ſoot; it waddles as it goes, and fixes violently with its ſnout, and by its feet, on ſuch perſons as it ſeizes, ſo that it cannot be plucked off but with difficulty. Some have wings like locuſts, which fly from one region to another; and are ſomething like bats, ſay Pliny and Strabo. There are alſo of ſeveral colours: the ancients mention black, yellow, aſh-coloured, red, green, white, wine-coloured, of the colour of ſoot.

They tell us, that in cold countries ſcorpions are not venomous, neither are thoſe that are of a whitiſh colour. The beſt and the ſureſt remedy againſt the bite of a ſcorpion, is, to ſqueeze it to pieces on the wound. Moſes tells us, (Deut. viii. 15. עקרב Hakarab. LXX Σκορπίων.) that the Hebrews paſſed through great and terrible wilderneſſes, where were ſcorpions; and the ſerpent called Dipſas. Tertullian, at the beginning of his book called Scorpiacum, has well deſcribed the ſcorpion. The Hebrew reads Hakarab, or Akrab; from whence Acrabatene, a name given to a diſtrict of Paleſtine, and, the aſcent of Akrabbim or Scorpions.

In ſcripture ſcorpions are uſed in a figurative ſenſe, for wicked men; Ezek. ii. 6. Thou doſt dwell among ſcorpions; thou liveſt with wicked and rebellious people. He that hath hold of her, (an evil wife) is as though he held a ſcorpion, ſays Ecclus. xxvi. 7. He runs a hazard of being infected by her poiſon: ſhe will ſting him to death. The ſame author places ſcorpions among the inſtruments of God's vengeance. Ecclus. xxxix. 36. St. John Rev. ix. 3, 5. very well deſcribes the qualities of the ſcorpion, and the pain that proceeds from its biting:

II. SCORPIONS were alſo a kind of whip armed with points. When the Iſraelites complained to Rehoboam, of the weight of the yoke wherewith Solomon had loaded them, he returned them this anſwer; 1 Kings xii. 11, 14. 2 Chron. x. 11, 14. My Father hath chaſtiſed you with whips, but I will chaſtiſe you with ſcorpions; (בעקרבים LXX. Ἐν σκορπίοις.) i. e. with rods or whips armed with points, or pointed thorns, like the tail of a ſcorpion. Iſidor.

The mountains called the Scorpions, Akrabbim, or Acrabim, were towards the extremity of the Red Sea, ſouth of the tribe of Judah. Numbers xxxiv. 4. Joſh. xv. 3. As for Acrabatene, lying in the country of Samaria, and which alſo took its name from ſcorpions, or from a place called Akrabbim, ſee that word, and ACRABATENE.

III. SCORPIONS were alſo machines of war, from which arrows were thrown. 1 Macc vi. 51. The name of Scorpion was alſo given to the arrows themſelves. This machine is thus deſcribed by Tertullian, at the beginning of his book called Scorpiacum: Bellicam machinam, & retractu tela vegetantem, de ſcorpio nominant. Id ſpiculum et fiſtula eſt, patula tenuitate in vulnus & virus, quâ figit, effundit. And Vegetius, lib. 4. cap. 22. Scorpiones dicebantur quos nunc manubaliſtas vocant: ideò ſic nuncupati, quod parvis ſubtilibuſque ſpiculis, inferant mortem. See Juſtus Lipſius, lib. 3. Poliorcetic. Dialog. 4. Vide Plate of "Antient Military Machines".

SCOURGE, or whip. This puniſhment was very common among the Jews. Moſes ordains, Deut. xxv. 1, 2, 3. That if there be a controverſy between men, and they come unto judgment, that the judges may judge them. And, if the wicked man be worthy to be beaten, the judge ſhall cauſe him to lie down, and to be beaten before his face, according to his fault, by a certain number. Forty ſtripes he may give him, and not exceed; leſt if he ſhould exceed, and beat him above theſe with many ſtripes, then thy brother ſhould ſeem vile unto thee. There were two ways of giving the laſh; one, with thongs or whips, made of ropes-ends, or ſtraps of leather; the other, with rods, twigs, or branches of ſome tree.

The Rabbins think, that ordinary faults committed againſt the law, and ſcourged, were puniſhed not with blows from a rod, but from a whip. They reckon up one hundred and ſixty-eight faults liable to this penalty; Vide, ſi lubet, Selden, lib. 2, cap. 15. de Synedriis, & Schikard, de Jure Reg. cap. 2. Theor. 7. And they hold that all puniſhable faults, to which the law has not annexed the penalty of death, muſt be puniſhed by the ſcourge. The offender was ſtript from his ſhoulders to his middle, and he was tied by his arms to a pretty low pillar, that he might lean forward, and the executioner might more eaſily come at his back. Some maintain, that they never gave more or leſs than thirty-nine ſtrokes, but that in greater faults they ſtruck with proportionate violence. Others think, that when the fault and circumſtances required it, they might increaſe the number of blows. St. Paul informs us, 2 Cor. xi. 24. that at five different times he received thirty-nine blows from the Jews; which ſhould inſinuate, that this was a fixed number, which they never exceeded.

The

The ſame apoſtle clearly ſhews in the ſame place, that the correction with rods, was different from that with a whip; for he ſays "thrice was I beaten with rods." And when he was ſeized by the Jews in the temple, the tribune of the Roman ſoldiers ran, and took him out of the hands of the Jews; and deſiring to know the reaſon of the tumult, he ordered him to be tied and ſtretched on the ground, to put him to the queſtion, and be beat with rods; Acts xxii. 24, 25. for ſo commonly, the Romans put to the queſtion.

The baſtinado, ſometimes given on the back, and which at this day, among the eaſtern people, is given on the ſoles of the feet raiſed aloft, while the patient lies down on his belly; this puniſhment is different from that of the ſcourge, or the whip.

The Rabbins teach, that the penalty of the Scourge was not ignominious; and that it could not be objected as a diſgrace to thoſe who had ſuffered it. They pretend, that no Iſraelite, not even the king, or high-prieſt, was exempted from this law; but this muſt be underſtood of the puniſhment of whipping inflicted in their ſynagogues, which was rather a legal and particular penalty, than a publick and ſhameful correction. Philo, in Flacc. & de ſpecialibus legib. ſpeaking of the manner in which Flaccus treated the Jews of Alexandria, ſays, he made them ſuffer the puniſhment of the whip, which (ſays he) is not leſs inſupportable to a free-man, than death it ſelf. Our Saviour, ſpeaking of the pains and ignominy of his paſſion, commonly puts his Scourging in the ſecond place. Mat. xx. 19. Mark x. 34. Luke xviii. 32.

SCRIBE, in Hebrew, ספר Sepher; in Greek, LXX. Γραμματεὺς, Grammateus. The word Scribe is very common in ſcripture, and has ſeveral ſignifications.

I. A clerk, writer, or ſecretary. This was a very conſiderable employment in the court of the kings of Judah, in which ſcripture often mentions the ſecretaries, as the firſt officers of the crown. Seraiah was Scribe or ſecretary to king David, 2 Sam. viii. 17. Shevah and Shemaiah exerciſed the ſame office under the ſame prince. 1 Chron. xxiv. 6. In 1 Kings iv. 3. in Solomon's time we find Elihoreph and Ahiah ſecretaries to the king: Shebna under Hezekiah, 2 Kings xix. 2. and Shaphan under Joſiah, 2 Kings xxii. 8, 9, 10. As there were but few in thoſe times who could write well, the employment of a Scribe, or writer, was very conſiderable. [It is ſo ſtill.]

II. A SCRIBE, is put for a commiſſary or muſter-maſter of an army, who reviews the troops, keeps the liſt or roll, and calls them over. It is ſaid, Judg. v. 14. that in the war of Barak againſt Siſera, Out of Machir came down governors, and out of Zebulun they that handle the pen of the writer. In the reign of Uzziah king of Judah, is found Jeil the Scribe, who had under his hand the king's armies. 2 Chron. xxvi. 11. Jeremiah ſpeaks of a Scribe, as prince or chief of the ſoldiers, who made the new-liſted ſoldiers perform their exerciſe. Jer. lii. 25. 2 Kings xxv. 19. Heb. The Scribe, prince of the army, who made the people of the country go to war. In the books of Maccabees, Judas gives orders to the Scribes, to ſtand on the banks of the brook that the army was to paſs over, and bids them let no one remain beyond the water, but cauſe them all to paſs over to the war. 1 Macc. v. 42.

III. SCRIBE, is put for an able and ſkilful man, a doctor of the law, a man of learning, one who underſtands affairs. Jonathan, David's uncle by the father's ſide, was a counſellor, a wiſe-man, and a Scribe. 1 Chron. xxvii. 32. Baruch the diſciple and ſecretary of Jeremiah, is alſo called a Scribe; ſo is Gemariah the ſon of Shaphan; and Jonathan, who lived under the reign of Joſiah. Jer. xxxvi. 10, 12, 20, 26. Jeſus the ſon of Sirach ſays, Ecclus. x. 5. In the hand of God is the proſperity of man, and upon the perſon of the Scribe ſhall he lay his honour. It is known what commendation ſcripture gives to Ezra, who is celebrated as a ſkilful Scribe in the law of God; He was a ready Scribe in the law of Moſes. Ezra vii. 6. The Scribe of the people, frequently mentioned in the goſpel, were publick writers, and profeſſed doctors of the law, which they read, and explained, to the people.

Some place the origin of Scribes under Moſes; but their name does not appear 'till under the Judges, Judg. v. 14. Others think that David firſt inſtituted them, when he eſtabliſhed the ſeveral claſſes of the prieſts and levites. 1 Chron. xxiv. 6. Epiphanius places their origin at the ſame time with the ſect of the Sadducees. Mention is made in Acts xxiii. 9. of Scribes that were of the party of the Phariſees; which has made ſome believe, that all the Scribes were Phariſees. But they did not eſpouſe any particular ſect, there were ſome of all ſects.

Scribes, and doctors of the law, in ſcripture-phraſe, mean the ſame thing. He that in Matthew xxii. 35. is called a doctor of the law, in Mark xii. 28, is named a Scribe, or, one of the Scribes. As the knowledge of the Jews, at that time, chiefly conſiſted in phariſaical traditions, and in the uſe of them to explain ſcripture, the greater number of the doctors of the law, or of the Scribes, were Phariſees; and we almoſt always find them united in ſcripture. They all valued themſelves on their knowledge of the law, on their ſtudying and teaching it: they had the key of knowledge, and ſat in Moſes's chair. Luke xi. 52. Mat. xxiii. 2. Epiphanius, and the author of the Recognitions, imputed to St. Clement, reckons the Scribes among the ſects of the Jews; but it is certain, they made no ſect by themſelves; they were only diſtinguiſhed by their ſtudy of the law.

SCRIPTURE, or Writing. There is great diverſity of opinions concerning the firſt inventor of letters, and writing. Some maintain, that writing was practiſed before the Deluge, and that Adam was its inventor. Others, that Moſes is the firſt author of whom we have any writings, and that before him there were no written documents. Through the whole lives of the Patriarchs, we ſee no traces of writing. Moſes does not quote any writing extant before his own; for the book of the wars of the Lord, Numb. xxi. 14. may be a paſſage added to the text of Moſes, or, that book might be a writing compoſed in his time. They talk of a book compoſed by Adam, and another by Enoch, and certain other writings are aſcribed to the firſt man, and to Enoch. Joſephus alſo, Antiq. lib. 1. ſpeaks of pillars with inſcriptions made before the Deluge; they mention alſo, certain writings ſaid to be compoſed by Abraham: but all this is fabulous and apocryphal. [Vide Gen. xxiii. 17.]

It is agreed, that there is nothing extant, either more ancient, or more authentick, than the books of Moſes; but it will not follow from hence, that there was no writing before him. It appears, on the contrary, by his own account, that writing was common enough, at that time, both in Egypt, which the Hebrews had juſt quitted, and alſo among the Hebrews. This people ſeem prepared, and accuſtomed, to expreſs their thoughts and ſentiments after this manner. The chief of the nation, without doubt, read the tables of the law. Moſes had been inſtructed in all the knowledge of the Egyptians, and doubtleſs, in their manner of writing. See LETTERS. Vide FRAGMENT, No. XIX. p. 39, alſo No. Vide SEIRATH.

The word Scripture taken abſolutely, generally ſtands for the ſacred books of the Old and New Teſtament. Did ye never read in the Scripture? Mat. xxi. 42. How then ſhall the Scriptures be fulfilled? Ibid. xxvi. 54. All Scripture is given by inſpiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for inſtruction in righteouſneſs. 2 Tim. iii. 16.

Canonical Scriptures. See the Articles BOOKS and CANON OF SCRIPTURES. They generally aſcribe the forming of the canon of the ſacred books of the Old Teſtament, to Eſdras, who ranged them in a convenient order. Firſt, the law: ſecondly, the prophets: thirdly, the Ketubim, or Hagiographa, i. e. ſacred writings.

Our Saviour ſeems to have had regard to this old manner of dividing the bible, when he ſays; Luke xxiv. 44. All things muſt be fulfilled which were written in (1) the law of Moſes, and (2) in the prophets, and (3) in the Pſalms, concerning me. The Pſalms are at the head of the Hagiographa. Joſephus, againſt Appion, lib. 1. acknowledges the ſame diſtribution. We have, ſays he, two and twenty books that are of divine authority, of which five are of Moſes; the prophets that ſucceeded Moſes compoſed thirteen of them; the other four are hymns to the honour of God, and rules for the conduct of life.

We muſt however obſerve, that the Jews have varied in their diviſion of the holy books; and at this day, inſtead of twenty-two they reckon twenty-four. But this difference is only in name; and when it is ſaid, that the canon was fixed by Eſdras we muſt underſtand it with ſome reſtriction; for he could not inſert Malachi into it, nor Eſther, nor even Nehemiah, where are mentioned the high-prieſt Jaddus, and Darius Codomannus, king of Perſia, who lived after Eſdras.

SCYTHIANS, Σκύθαι, in Greek, tanners, or leather-dreſſers; from σκύτεις. Others tranſlate it drinkers; from the Greek σκύτος, a kind of pot or glaſs. Some derive it from the Hebrew word כוש cuſh, or כות cuth, or כותה chuthah. Col. iii. 11.

SCYTHOPOLITÆ, Σκυθοπολίται, that inhabit the city of the tanners, or of the Scythians; from the ſame Greek word Scytha, and Polis, a city.

SCYTHOPOLIS, ſee the article BETH-SHAN, and 2 Macc. xii.

SEA, in Latin, Mare; in Hebrew ים Jam; in Greek, θαλασσα Thalaſſe. The Hebrews give the name of Sea to all great collections of water, to lakes, or pools. The ſea of Galilee, or of Tiberias, or of Cinereth, is the lake of Tiberias, or Genezareth, in Galilee. The Dead Sea, the Sea of the wilderneſs, the Sea of the Eaſt, the Sea of Sodom, the Salt-ſea, the Sea Aſphaltites, or of Bitumen, is the lake Aſphaltites, or the lake of Sodom. The Sea of Semechon is the lake of that name. The Sea of Jazer is the Lake near the city Jazer, beyond Jordan. The Sea of Suph, or Zuph, is the Red-ſea. The weſtern Sea, or the great Sea, or hindermoſt Sea, is the Mediterranean.

II. SEA was alſo the name given to a very great brazen baſin, that Solomon cauſed to be made for for the temple, for the conveniency of the prieſts, who there waſhed the feet and bowels of the ſacrifices, and the inſtruments they uſed in ſacrificing.

The Arabians, and Orientals, ſometimes give the name of Sea to the great rivers, as the Nile, the Euphrates, the Tigris, and others, which by their magnitude, and by the extent of their overflowings, ſeem as little Seas, or great lakes. Herbelot. Bib. Orien. p. 672. There are ſeveral paſſages in ſcripture, whoſe explication would be almoſt impoſſible without this principle. Iſaiah xi. 15. ſays, the Lord ſhall utterly deſtroy the tongue of the Egyptian Sea, and with his mighty wind ſhall he ſhake his hand over the river, and ſhall ſmite it in the ſeven ſtreams, and make men go over dry-ſhod. The Nile is here called the Egyptian Sea: and the whole deſcription of the prophet marks out the Nile, and its ſeven mouths: Septemplicis oſtia Nili.

The ſame prophet denotes the Nile by the name of Sea. Iſaiah xviii. 1, 2. Woe to the land ſhadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia. (He calls here the Red-ſea by the name of the rivers of Ethiopia, or of Cuth; becauſe the people of Cuth inhabited on the eaſtern ſhore of this Sea.) That ſendeth ambaſſadors by the Sea, even in veſſels of bulruſhes upon the waters. Here he means the Nile by the word Sea. Theſe veſſels of bulruſhes were peculiar to Egypt, as Pliny obſerves, lib. vi. cap. 22. Ex ipſo papyro navigia texunt, & ex libro vela. The prophet Iſaiah goes on to addreſs thoſe ambaſſadors, who ſailed on the Nile in veſſels of bulruſhes. Go, ye ſwift meſſengers to a nation ſcattered and peeled, to a people terrible from their beginning hitherto; a nation meted out and trodden down, whoſe land the rivers have ſpoiled. This deſcription could only agree to Egypt, which was then torn in pieces by domeſtick diviſions. Egypt is known and waſted by the inundations of the Nile; it is a country meted out and trodden down becauſe the mud being often ſpread over the land, and concealing the bounds and limits, they are often obliged to meaſure it again, &c.

The country of Babylon, which was watered by the Euphrates, is called by the ſame prophet, the deſart of the Sea, Iſaiah xxi. 1. Whether becauſe of that ſolitude and devaſtation to which it was to be reduced; or by way of irony, or antiphraſis, becauſe Babylon was then a much frequented and populous city: q. This city ſituate on great waters, on the Sea, and which is the habitation of ſuch a multitude of people. Jeremiah li. 36, 42. ſpeaks of it in the ſame manner. The Sea is come up upon Babylon, ſhe is covered with the multitude of the waves thereof. And a little before; I will dry up her Sea, and make her ſprings dry. And Iſaiah xxvii. 1. ſpeaking of the king of Babylon, calls him Leviathan, or the dragon that is in the Sea. Ezekiel gives the ſame name to the king of Egypt; Ezek. xxxii. 2. Thou art as a whale in the Seas, becauſe his habitation was on the banks of the Nile.

Daniel xi. 45. ſpeaking of Antiochus, who carried his army beyond the Euphrates, and who encamped in the plains of Meſopotamia, ſays, that he encamped at Padan, between the Seas, i. e. between Tigris and Euphrates. Hoſea xi. 10. (Vulgate) calls the Babylonians and Egyptians, children of the Sea. Nahum iii. 8. ſpeaking of the city of No, or No-ammon, which many think to be Thebes, or Dioſpolis, ſays, that the Sea is its treaſure, and that the waters ſerve it for a rampart. This Sea, and theſe waters, certainly, can mean nothing but the Nile.

The great Sea, or the weſtern Sea, the hindermoſt Sea, the Sea of the Philiſtines, generally expreſſes the Mediterranean, which lay weſt of the land of Promiſe, and was conſidered as behind a man who ſhould look toward the ſunriſing, having his left-hand to the north, and his right-hand to the ſouth. The Sea is often put for the weſt, as the right is put for the ſouth. Gen. xii. 8. xiii. 14. & paſſim. On the Mediterranean Jonah embarked, and on this Sea they floated the timber cut down from mount Libanus, which was brought to Joppa, for building the temple.

The Sea of Suph or Zuph; i. e. the Sea of ruſhes, is what we call the Red-ſea. It is called the Sea of Suph, becauſe of the great quantity of ruſhes or Sea-wrack found at its bottom, and on its ſhores. It is ſtill, at this day, called Bahrſuf, and the weed that grows there is called Sufo. Diodorus Siculus ſays, Bibl. lib. iii. that it appears all over green, becauſe of the weeds that grow beneath its waters. Thoſe that have ſailed on this Sea tell us, that it appears red in ſome places, becauſe of a red ſand at the bottom. In other places the water ſeems to be white, becauſe of the white ſand that is there: but it appears green where the Sea-wrack grows. But this is only obſerved in places where the water is low; and the colour of the ſand or weeds appears through the water, only becauſe it is very clear and tranſparent. Don John de Caſtro, viceroy of the Indies for the king of Portugal, believes, that it was named the Red-ſea, becauſe there is a great quantity of coral found in this Sea. Certain it is, that the Old Teſtament never names this the Red-ſea, but the Sea of Zuph. Pliny ſays, that it obtained the name of the Red-ſea, in Greek Erythrea, becauſe of a certain king called Erythros, who reigned in Arabia, and whoſe tomb was ſeen in the iſland Tyrine or Agyris.

Several learned men believe, that this king Erythros is no other than Eſau, or Edom. Edom, in Hebrew, ſignifies red or ruddy, as Erythros does in Greek. But I cannot be perſuaded that Edom ever dwelt, either on the ſhore of the Red-ſea, or the Perſian Gulph, which is ſometimes alſo called the Red-ſea. His dwelling was eaſt of the land of Canaan, towards Bozra. Thoſe who have obſerved the reddiſh parts of this Sea tell us, that there were none at the place where the Iſraelites paſſed over, nor a great deal lower. That is, there were none from Tor, over-againſt mount Sinai, as far as Suez, to the northern extremity of this Sea. So that I am inclined to believe, that the name of the Red-ſea was not given it till after the Idumeans deſcended from Edom, had ſpread themſelves from eaſt to weſt as far as the Red-ſea. Then it might receive the name of the Sea of Edom, which the Greeks rendered by the Red-ſea, or Thalaſſa Erythrea. In the books of the Kings and Chronicles, I find the Sea of Suph in the land of Edom, which may be brought as a confirmation of this conjecture. 1 Kings ix. 26. 2 Chron. viii. 17.

Every one knows the famous miracle of the paſſage over the Red-ſea, when the Lord opened this Sea, dryed it up, and made the Iſraelites paſs through it, dryſhod, to the number of 600,000, without reckoning old men, women, or children. The Rabbins, and many of the antient fathers, relying on Pſalm cxxxvi. 13. To him which divided the Red-ſea into parts. Qui diviſit mare rubrum in diviſiones, have maintained, that the Red-ſea was ſo divided as to make twelve paſſages; that each of the twelve tribes paſſed through a different paſſage. But other authors have advanced, that Moſes having lived long near the Red-ſea, in the country of Midian, had obſerved that it kept its regular ebbing and flowing like the ocean; ſo that taking the advantage of the time of the ebb, he led the Hebrews over; but the Egyptians not knowing the nature of the Sea, and raſhly entering it juſt before the return of the tide, were all ſwallowed up and drowned, as Moſes relates. Thus the prieſts of Memphis explained it, according to Artapanus, apud Euſeb. præpar, lib. iv. cap. 17. alii quidam ex Chriſtian. Which opinion has been adopted by a great number of moderns. Vide FRAGMENT, No. XXXIX. p.

Joſephus, Antiq. lib. ii. cap. ult. having related the hiſtory of the paſſage through the Red-ſea, as it is told by Moſes, adds, that this ought not to be looked on as impoſſible, ſince God might as well open a paſſage for the Iſraelites through the waters, as long afterwards he opened one for Alexander and his Macedonians, through the Sea of Pamphilia. But hiſtorians, Strabo. lib. xiv. Arrian. lib. i. de expedit. Alex. who have mentioned this paſſage of the Macedonians, aſſure us, that they entered the Sea, and coaſted the ſhore where it was not deep; ſo that the ſoldiers marched all day in the water, which was not above their middle. Arrian ſays, that this is impaſſable when the ſouth winds blow; but the wind having changed ſuddenly, gave the ſoldiers an oportunity of paſſing without danger. Perhaps this reflection of Joſephus gave occaſion to ſome antients to think, that the Iſraelites did not paſs over the Red-ſea from ſhore to ſhore, but only coaſted it, and during the time of the flux aſcended a little from the place they left toward the ſhore upon the higher ground; ſo that they made a kind of ſemicircle in the Sea. This opinion is eſpouſed by Thomas Aquinas, Toſtat, Paul de Burgos, Grotius, Genebrard, Vatablus, and ſome Rabbins.

But not to enter into a nice diſcuſſion of all theſe opinions, nor to undertake to refute them particularly, nor to deny that the Red-ſea may have its ebbing and flowing; we need only alledge the text of Moſes and other ſacred authors, who have mentioned this miraculous paſſage: we may ſee plainly that no other account is ſupportable, but that which ſuppoſes the Hebrews to croſs over the Sea from ſhore to ſhore, in a vaſt ſpace of dry ground, which was left void by the waters at their retiring. Exodus xiv. 16, 17, &c.

Iſaiah ſays, lxiii. 11, &c. the Lord divided the waves before his people, that he conducted them through the bottom of the abyſs, as a horſe is led through the midſt of a field. Habakkuk ſays, iii. 15. that the Lord made himſelf a road to drive his chariot and horſes croſs the Sea, acroſs the mud of great waters. Laſtly, Wiſdom ſays, xix. 7, 8. x. 17, 18. that the dry land appeared all on a ſudden in a place where water was before: that a free paſſage was opened in a moment through the midſt of the Red-ſea; and that a green field was ſeen in the midſt of the abyſs, &c. It is thought the place where the Hebrews paſſed the Red-ſea, is two or three leagues below its northern point, at the place called Kolſum, or Cly ſma.

The Dead-ſea, Salt-ſea, Eaſtern-ſea, Sea of Sodom, Sea of the Wilderneſs, or of the Plain. This is the lake Aſphaltites, to which Joſephus allows 580 furlongs in length, and 150 furlongs in breadth, i. e. about twenty-five leagues long, and five or ſix broad. The Jordan falls into the Dead-ſea, ſea, and we are aſſured, that the ſalt and bitumen, with which the waters are impregnated, render them ſo pungent and briny, that no fiſh can live in them. This Sea has taken poſſeſſion of that part of the country which was formerly occupied by the cities of Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, and Zeboim. This Sea is properly a lake, having no communication with any other Sea. See ASPHALTITES. The name of Dead-ſea is not in the text of ſcripture; it is probable this name was given to it, becauſe nothing can long continue in it alive. The name of Salt-ſea is of the ſame ſignification as Aſphaltites; for under the word SALT the Hebrews comprehend Aſphaltus, Bitumen, and Nitre. The name of the Eaſtern-ſea is given it becauſe of its ſituation, being oppoſite to the Weſtern-ſea, or the Mediterranean. Laſtly, the name of the Sea of the Wilderneſs, or of the Plain, in Hebrew Arabah, comes from Araboth, deſart plains beyond Jordan, weſt and north of that Sea.

The Sea of Jazer; is only a lake or pool near this city. See JAZER.

The Sea of Egypt, Iſaiah xi. 15. means that part of the Mediterranean along the coaſts of Egypt.

The Tongue of the Sea. The Hebrews and Arabians call that a tongue of the Sea which runs into the land; as we call that a tongue, or neck of land, which advances into the Sea. See Joſhua xv. 5. xviii. 19. Iſaiah xi. 15.

The brazen or molten Sea that Solomon made for the temple; it had ten cubits in diameter from ſide to ſide, and therefore about thirty cubits in circumference. Taking the Hebrew cubit at twenty inches and an half, the ten cubits make ſeventeen feet and an inch; and the thirty cubits make fifty one feet and three inches. This veſſel was round, and in depth five cubits. The brim was adorned with an edging, and embelliſhed with lilies, and knobs, and oxe's heads in demi-relief. It contained three thouſand baths, as is ſaid 2 Chron. iv. 5. or two thouſand baths, as mentioned 1 Kings vii. 26. This may be reconciled, by ſaying, that the cup or bowl contained two thouſand baths, and the foot, which was hollow, contained a thouſand more. Thus this great veſſel was but of one capacity within, though it ſeemed without to be double. This Sea was ſupported by its foot now mentioned, which was as a thick hollow column; beſides which it was ſupported by twelve oxen of braſs, diſpoſed into four groups, by three in a group, and leaving four paſſages between, by which the prieſts went to draw water by three cocks fixed to the foot of this veſſel. See 1 Kings vii. 23, &c. 2 Chron. iv. 2, 3, 4, 5, &c. Vide FRAGMENTS, No. , p. . and Plates.

SEAH, סאה Seah. LXX. Σάτον, Satum, or Μέτρον, Metron, Menſura, or Οἶφι, Ephi. A kind of meaſure among the Hebrews. Its capacity was about two gallons and a half, liquid meaſure; or about a peck, dry meaſure.

SEAL, ſigillum, ſignum, ſignaculum. The antient Hebrews wore their Seals, or ſignets, in rings on their fingers; or in bracelets on their arms. (As is now the cuſtom in the Eaſt.) Haman ſealed the decree of king Ahaſuerus againſt the Jews with the king's Seal. Eſth. iii. 12. The prieſts of Bel deſired the king to ſeal the door of their temple with his own Seal. The ſpouſe in the Canticles viii. 6. wiſhes, that his ſpouſe would wear him as a ſignet on her arm.

Pliny obſerves, lib. xxxiii. cap. 1. that the uſe of Seals, or ſignets, was rare at the time of the Trojan war, and that they were under the neceſſity of cloſing their letters with ſeveral knots. But among the Hebrews they are much more antient. Judah left his Seal, as a pledge with Tamar, Geneſis xxxviii. 25. Moſes ſays, Deut. xxxii. 34. that God keeps ſealed up in his treaſuries, under his own Seal, the inſtruments of his vengeance. Job ſays, ix. 7. that he keeps the ſtars as under his Seal; and allows them to appear when he thinks proper. He ſays alſo, My tranſgreſſion is ſealed up in a bag. Job xiv. 7.

When they intended to ſeal up a letter, or a book, they wrapped it round with flax, or thread, then applied the wax to it, and afterwards the Seal. The Lord commanded Iſaiah to tie up or wrap up the book wherein his prophecies were written, and to ſeal them till the time he ſhould bid him publiſh them. Iſaiah viii. 16, 17.

He gives the ſame command to Daniel xii. 4. The book that was ſhewn to St. John the Evangeliſt, Rev. v. 1. vi. 1, 2, &c. was ſealed with ſeven Seals. It was a rare thing to put ſuch a number of Seals; but that inſinuated the great importance and ſecrecy of the matter.

In civil contracts they generally made two originals, one continued open, and was kept by him for whoſe intereſt the contract was made: the other was ſealed, and depoſited in ſome publick office. It was ſealed up to prevent any fraud or falſification. Jeremiah, xxxii. 10, 11, 14. bought a field in his country of Anathoth, of one called Hananeel; he himſelf wrote the contract, called witneſſes, and ſealed it up: he put it into the hands of his diſciple Baruch, and ſaid, take theſe evidences, this evidence of the purchaſe, both which is ſealed, and this evidence which is open, and put them in an earthen veſſel, that they may continue many days. The Grecians did in the ſame manner with their writings: they preſerved the originals of their contracts, and other inſtruments of any conſequence, in veſſels of braſs or earth.

earth. See the Scholiasts on Aristophanes, in Vespis, on the word ECHINOS. Vide FRAGMENTS, No. LXXX. p. 138.

SEAT. The Seat of Moses, on which the scribes and pharisees sat, expresses the authority of the doctors of the law, and their office of teaching. Our Lord commanded that they should be heard, and respected; but he forbad that their actions should be made precedents, and examples.

The Seat of the scorner, or the pestilent, mentioned in the first Psalm, stands for the scandalous discourse, the licentious manners, of libertines, who corrupt equally by their scandalous example and conduct, as by their loose principles. Instead of pestilent, the Hebrew says scorners, revilers, those pretended free-thinkers, who deride the simplicity of plain and honest minds. Solomon often speaks of them in his Proverbs, and takes great care to secure his pupil against their dangerous tongues. Proverbs i. 22. iii. 34. ix. 7, 8, 12. xiii. 1. xiv. 6. xv. 12. xix. 25. xx. 1, &c.

The Seat of honours, mentioned, Ecclus. vii. 4. the chief places in the Synagogues, which the pharisees assumed themselves, Matthew xxiii. 6. the Seat that was prepared for Job in the assemblies, Job xxix. 7. the Seat or throne of the king, and of God, are clear enough. The throne belongs to God, and to the king; the Seat of honour to the friends of the king, and to great men. Vide FRAGMENT, No. XII.

SEBA, סבא, drunkard; from סבא saba: otherwise, that turns, or surrounds; from סבב sabab: otherwise, old-man, according to the Syriac.

SEBA or Saba, the son of Cush. Gen. x. 7. Josephus, Antiq. lib. ii. cap. 5. collat. cum lib. i. cap. 7. thinks he dwelt in the island of Saba, since called Meroe. Jerom, Bochart, and others, place him in Arabia Fœlix.

SEBASTE. See SAMARIA.

SECACAH, סככה, σοχολὰ, shade, covering, protection; from סכך sacac: otherwise, unction; from סוך soc, to anoint: otherwise, speculation, sight, look; according to the Syriac.

SECACAH, Sechacha, or Sachacha, a city of Judah, Josh. xv. 61. situate at the southern limit of this tribe; in the desart.

SECT. This Latin word has the same signification as the Greek word Hæresis, though the sound be not so odious to us. Among the Jews were four Sects, distinguished by their practices and opinions, yet united in communion with each other, and with the body of their nation, viz. the Pharisees, the Sadducees, the Essenians, and the Herodians. At the beginning of christianity they would have had the religion of Jesus Christ to pass as a new Sect of Judaism. Tertullus the advocate for the Jews, accusing St. Paul before Fœlix, says, that he was chief of the seditious Sect of the Nazarenes; Acts xxiv. 5. and the Jews of Rome said to St. Paul, when he arrived in this city, that as to this Sect, it was every where spoke against. Acts xxviii. 22. St. Peter, 2 Peter ii. 1—10. foretels to the faithful, that false teachers should arise among them, who privily shall bring in damnable Heresies (or Sects) even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction. He adds, that these people being great lovers of themselves, are not afraid to introduce new Sects; here the word Sect is taken in the same sense as heresy.

Among the Greeks, the philosophers were divided into different Sects: the Academics, the Stoics, the Peripatetics, the Cynics, the Epicureans, &c. The Jews, in imitation of the Greeks, began to divide themselves into Sects, about the time of the Maccabees. It seems as if the Corinthians had a mind to introduce something like this into christianity, when they boasted, I am a disciple of Peter, I of Paul, I of Apollos. 1 Cor. i. 12. iii. 22, &c. Even at this day the christian church, labours under a kind of Sects in philosophy, and in divinity; thus we see in philosophy Peripatetics, Scotists, Nominals, Cartesians, Gassendists, &c. and in divinity, Thomists, Augustinians, Scotists, Molinists, Congruists, &c. &c.

SECUNDUS, a disciple of St. Paul, Acts xx. 4. We know no particulars of his life. He was of Thessalonica, and followed St. Paul out of Greece into Asia, A. D. 58. The Spaniards acknowledge a St. Secundus, who they pretend was sent into their country by the apostles St. Peter and St. Paul. Boland. 15 Mai.

SEEING, to See. This is said, not only of the sense of vision, by which we perceive external objects; but also of inward perception, of the knowledge of spiritual things, and even of the supernatural sight of hidden things, of prophecy, of visions, of ecstasies. Whence it is that they were formerly called seers, who afterwards were called Nabi, or prophets: and that prophecies were called visions.

The verb to see, is used to express all kinds of sensations. It is said Exod. xx. 18. that the Israelites saw voices, thunder, lightning, the sound of the trumpet, and the whole mountain of Sinai covered with clouds, or smoke. And St. Austin observes, Ep. 167. that the verb to see, is imputed to all the five natural senses; to see, to hear, to smell, to taste, to touch: he says, non enim tantum dicimus, vide quid luceat, sed etiam, vide quid sonet, vide quid oleat, vide quid sapiat, vide quid caleat.

To see good, or goods, is, to enjoy them: "I believed lieved to ſee the goodneſs of the Lord in the land of the living," Pſalm xxvii. 13. I hope that God will bring me back into my own country, into the land of Judæa, where I ſhall live in peace and proſperity. Job ſays, vii. 7. I ſhall die, and ſee no more; I ſhall no longer enjoy the good things of this world. And the Pſalmiſt ſays, Pſalm iv. 6. There be many that ſay, who will ſhew us any good? i. e. to enjoy any happineſs in this life?

To ſee the face of the king, is to be of his houſhold, to approach him. The kings of Perſia, to maintain the reſpect and majeſty due to them, ſeldom permitted their ſubjects to ſee them, and hardly ever ſhewed themſelves in public: none but their moſt intimate friends, or their familiar domeſtics, had the advantage of beholding their faces, Eſth. i. 10, 14. Frequent alluſion is made to this cuſtom in Scripture, which mentions the ſeven principal angels that ſee the face of the Lord, and appear in his preſence. Tobit xii. 15. Rev. i. 4. Vide FRAGMENT, No.

I. SEGUB, ſon of Hezron, father of Jair, 1 Chron. ii. 21, 22.

II. SEGUB. Hiel of Bethel having undertaken to rebuild Jericho, God puniſhed him for it, by the death of Abiram, his firſt born ſon, who died as he was laying the foundation; and by the death of Segub his younger ſon, when he hung up the gates of the city, 1 Kings xvi. 34. Vide FRAGMENT, No. V. p. 15.

SEIR, שעיר, hairy, goat, demon, tempeſt; from שער ſhahar, or שעיר ſhehir: otherwiſe, barley; from שערה ſheorah.

I. SEIR, or Sehir, the Horite, whoſe dwelling was eaſt and ſouth of the Dead-ſea, in the mountains of Seir, where at firſt reigned the deſcendants of Seir the Horite Gen. xxxvi. 20, 21, — 30. 1 Chron. 38, 39, &c.

The poſterity of Eſau afterwards poſſeſſed the mountains of Seir, and Eſau himſelf dwelt there when Jacob returned from Meſopotamia. Gen. xxxii. 3. & xxxiii. 14. & xxxvi. 8, 9. Moſes acquaints us, Deut. ii. 12. that Eſau made war with the Horites, and deſtroyed them: but we know no particulars. Seir, the father of the Horites, muſt needs be very ancient, ſince his children were already a powerful and numerous people in the time of Abraham, before the birth of Iſaac, when Chedorlaomer, and his confederates came to make war againſt the kings of Pentapolis. Gen. xiv. 6. It is without good reaſon, what ſome have advanced, that Eſau himſelf had borne thee name of Seir, or the hairy, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. i. cap. 18, 19; for he was never known by this name, though his country is often called the country of Seir, becauſe of its original inhabitants.

II. SEIR, or, the mountains of Seir: they were eaſt and ſouth of the Dead ſea. Moſes tells us, there were eleven days' journey between Horeb and Kadeſh-barnea, by the way of Seir; or rather, going round the mountains of Seir, Deut. i. 2, 4, 5, 8, &c. Deborah ſays, that the Lord is come forth from Seir, Judges v. 4. Moſes affirms, that the Lord appeared to his people at Seir, at Sinai, and at Paran, Deut. xxxiii. 2. This proves, that the mountains of Seir were ſouth of the Dead ſea inclining toward Elath and Eſiongeber, on the Red-ſea.

Jacob, at his return from his journey to Meſopotamia, Gen. xxxii. 3. & xxxiii. 16, fearing that Eſau ſhould injure his company, ſent to him at Seir; and Eſau came to meet him, between Peniel and Jordan, and returned the ſame day to Seir. Therefore he muſt have lived not far off, in the mountains eaſt of the Dead-ſea. Joſhua, xi. 17. & xii. 7. ſeems to ſay, that they ſtretched out ſtill farther north, ſince he relates, that he made a conqueſt of all the country, from Seir, to Baal-gad, at the foot of Libanus, and of mount Hermon, and that he diſtributed this country among the children of Iſrael. But it is known, that the Iſraelites had no poſſeſſions beyond the country of Moab eaſt, or ſouth. 2 Chron. xx. 10, 22, 23. Ezek. xxv. 8. Laſtly, Moab and mount Seir are frequently mentioned together; but Moab inhabited eaſt of the Dead-ſea. See IDUMEA.

III. SEIR, a mountain on the frontiers of Judah and Dan, Joſh. xv. 10.

SEIRATH, שעירתה, σειραθὰ, hairy, elevated.

SEIRATH. After Ehud had killed Eglon, king of Moab, who oppreſſed the Iſraelites, Judges iii. 26, he went to Seirath, which probably was towards Bethel or Gilgal, near a place where were images or idols: פסלים peſilim, ſculpturæ. Pertranſivit locum idolorum, undè reverſus fuerat, venitque in Seirath. [Our tranſlation reads this paſſage thus; and Ehud eſcaped while they tarried, and paſſed beyond the quarries, and eſcaped unto Seirath.] There is ſome likelihood, that theſe engravings or inſcriptions at Seirath, are thoſe Joſephus hints at, when he ſays, Antiq. lib. i. cap. 2. that in Syria there were pillars full of inſcriptions, which had been there from before the time of the Deluge, and which had been made by the children of Seth. This conjecture is propoſed and admitted by ſeveral learned men.

This is what Joſephus relates, concerning the pillars ſet up in this place: "The poſterity of Seth, having heard that Adam had foretold, that the world ſhould one time be deſtroyed by a deluge of water, and at another time by fire; they reſolved to preſerve the diſcoveries they had made in aſtronomy, and in the knowledge of heavenly things: therefore they erected two columns, one of ſtone, and the other of brick, that if the deluge ſhould deſtroy that of brick, at leaſt that of ſtone might remain, to inform mankind of what they would tranſmit to poſterity. And it is ſaid, ſays Joſephus, that the column of ſtone which they erected is ſtill in being in Seirath, or Syrias."

This relation of Joſephus is confirmed by Manetho, apud Euſeb. & Syncell. ἐν Συριαδικῇ γῇ, who ſays, that the ſecond Mercury, king of Egypt, ſurnamed Triſmegiſtus, tranſlated, or rather tranſcribed into the ordinary letters, what the firſt Mercury, or Thoth, had formerly cauſed to be engraved in hieroglyphic characters, upon columns that he had erected in Syriad. If Joſephus took what he related from Manetho, he has plainly corrupted it, ſince both the Thoths, or Mercuries, are much later than the Deluge; but he might have had this tradition by ſome other channels. Monſ. de Valois, in his notes upon Ammianus Marcellinus, lib. xxiii. conjectures, that inſtead of Syriadike ge, as read in Manetho, it ought to be read Syringice, the ſame as in Ammianus Marcellinus, who ſays, that the ancients, foreſeeing the approaching Deluge, and fearing that the knowledge of their ceremonies would then be loſt, dug ſubterraneous places which they called Syringas, with vaſt labour, and in different places; and, upon the rocks of theſe cavities they engraved figures of animals, which they called hieroglyphical letters. Pauſanias ſays, that there were Syringas, or ſubterraneous caverns, at Thebes in Egypt, on the other ſide of the Nile, not far from that ſtatue of Memnon, which ſounded at ſun-riſing.

From all theſe paſſages thus ſet together, and compared one with another, it is a very hard matter to obtain a diſtinct knowledge of theſe ancient hieroglyphic inſcriptions, mentioned by Ammianus Marcellinus and Manetho, which one places in Syrias, the other in the Syringas in Thebais. The invention of letters, and particularly of the hieroglyphics in Egypt, is doubtleſs more modern than the Deluge; the two Thoths alſo lived after that famous event; but what Joſephus relates, muſt have happened before the Deluge. And if it be true, that the ſtone pillars he mentions were in Paleſtine, and at Seirath, they muſt be different from thoſe of Manetho.

[The Syringas of Pauſanias being ſtill extant in Egypt, juſtify his relation reſpecting them: and whoever recollects the hiſtorical, or emblematical, or hieroglyphical baſſo-relievos in the temple at Elephanta, and in many other places of India, can be at no loſs to underſtand the Syringice of Ammianus Marcellinus: as to the pillars of Joſephus, they are probably partly of the ſame nature, partly different; and more reſembling thoſe aſcribed to Thoth in Sanchoniatho. Where Seirath was may be doubted: was it the name of a country? or of a place? or was it deſcriptive of a claſs of places, called Seirath? or, of tablets of ſtone prepared receiving inſcriptions?]

SELAH, סלה, LXX. Διάψαλμα, a reſt, or pauſe. This Hebrew word is found ſeventy times in the Pſalms, and thrice in Habakkuk. The LXX. read it ſtill oftener, ſince they put Diapſalma in places where we do not find Selah in the Hebrew. Symmachus, and Theodotion, generally tranſlate Selah by Diapſalma, which ſignifies a reſt or pauſe in ſinging; Diapſalma interpoſitum in canendo ſilentium, ſays St. Auſtin: or, a change of tone, according to Theodoret, Præf. in Pſalm. and to Suidas, Μέλους ἐναλλαγή. Others will have it, that it marks the beginning of a new ſenſe, or a new meaſure of verſes: Quidam Diapſalma dixerunt eſſe commutationem metri, alii pauſationem ſpiritûs, nonnulli alterius ſenſûs exordium, ſunt qui rythmi diſtinctionem, ſays Jerom, ad Marcellam. He adds, that Selah joins what follows to what goes before, and expreſſes alſo that this paſſage deſerves to be always remembered: Ex quo animadvertimus hoc verbum ſuperiora pariter & inferiora connectere, aut certè dicere ſempiterna eſſe quæ dicta ſunt. He follows Aquila, in the fifth and ſixth edition, in tranſlating Selah by for ever.

Some ancients, as Euſeb. in Pſalm. iv. p. 28. Præf. in Pſalm. p. 8. Quidam apud Theodoret. Præf. in Pſalm. thought, that Selah ſhewed the intermiſſion or ceſſation of the actual inſpiration of the Pſalmiſt, or of the internal motions of his devotion. Nyſſem. Præfat. in Pſalm. Hilary and Caſſiodorus think, Præf. in Pſalm. that Diapſalma denotes a change of the voice, the perſon, or the tune, in the Pſalms. Some moderns pretend, Vide Geier. Ham. Forſter, Buxtorf, that Selah has no ſignification, but is only a note of the ancient muſic, whoſe uſe is now loſt. And indeed, Selah may be taken away from all the places where it is found, without interrupting the the ſenſe of the Pſalm: it rather perplexes the text. Others ſay, as Kimchi, Muis, Grot. Genebr. Mariana, &c. it was a note which ſhewed the elevation of the voice of the reader in theſe places. Abenezra teaches, that it is like the concluſion of a prayer, and anſwers nearly in ſignification to Amen, or, So be it. At the end of their epitaphs, and books, the Jews generally put Selah, Finis, So be it.

We make no doubt but Selah intimates the end, or a pauſe, and that this is its proper ſignification: but as we do not always find it at the end of the ſenſe, or at the end of a canticle, we gueſs that the ancient muſicians ſometimes put Selah in the margin of their Pſalters, to ſhew where a muſical pauſe was to be made, and where the tune ended. Juſt as in the old books of the goſpels, (See M. Simon's Critical Hiſtory of the New Teſtament, chap. xxxiii.) which were read ſolemnly in the church, they wrote on the margin, either at length, or with a contraction, the Greek word telos, or the Latin word finis, to ſhew the place where the deacon was to end the leſſon: for at that time the text was written at length, without diviſion of chapter and verſes. Or elſe, the ancient Hebrews ſung pretty nearly as the Arabians do at this day, (M. D'Arvieux's Cuſtoms of the Arabians, p. 59, 60.) with great pauſes, ending all at once, and beginning all at once. For this reaſon, it was neceſſary, in public ſervices, to mark in the margin of the pſalm the place of the pauſe, and of the end, that the whole choir might ſuſpend their voices, or recommence their ſinging, at the ſame time.

SELED, סלד, affliction: according to the Syriac, burning, or heat. This word is found but once in the Bible, in the form of a verb; and ſignifies, to be burnt, to be hot: otherwiſe, to ſtrengthen, to be ſtrong.

SELEUCIA, Σελεύκεια, ſoaken or beaten by the waves, or that runs as a river; from the Greek σαλεύω.

I. SELEUCIA. This name king Seleucus gave to the city of Gadara, ſituate beyond and eaſt of the city of Tiberias. Stephan. in Gadara. See GADARA.

II. SELEUCIA, a city of Gaulanitis, lying on the lake Semechon. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 23. lib. xviii. cap. 3. de Bello, cap. 25. lib. iv. cap. 1.

III. SELEUCIA, a city of Syria, on the Mediterranean, near where the river Orontes falls into this ſea. Paul and Barnabas arrived at Seleucia, where they imbarked for Cyprus, Acts xiii. 4. This is the Seleuſia which is mentioned 1 Macc. xi. 8.

SELEUCUS, Σέλευκος, floating, beaten by the waves.

I. SELEUCUS, king of Syria, ſurnamed Nicanor, chief of the race of the Seleucidæ. He began to reign A. M. 3682, one year after the death of Alexander the Great, and reigned forty two years, dying A. M. 3724, ante A. D. 280. In his time Judea was under the juriſdiction of Ptolemy the ſon of Lagus, king of Egypt. Yet Joſephus ſays, Antiq. lib. xii. cap. 3. that he ſhewed great favour to the Jews in his territory, granted them freedom in ſuch cities as he built, and particularly in Antioch, the capital of Syria.

II. SELEUCUS, ſurnamed Callinicus, or Pogon: he reigned twenty years, from A. M. 3759, to 3779.

III. SELEUCUS, ſurnamed Ceraunos, or Thunder: he reigned three years, from A. M. 3779, to 3781.

IV. SELEUCUS Philopator, or Soter, ſon of Antiochus the Great: he reigned twelve years, from A. M. 3816, to 3828, ante A. D. 176. He ſent Heliodorus to Jeruſalem, to take away the treaſures of the temple. Vide HELIODORUS, and 2 Macc. iii. 3, &c. where it is ſaid, that under the reign of this prince Judea enjoyed a profound peace, inſomuch that Seleucus himſelf furniſhed the ſacrifices of the temple at his own coſt.

V. SELEUCUS, ſon of Demetrius Nicanor: reigned one year, A. M. 3880. His ſucceſſor was Antiochus Gryphus.

VI. SELEUCUS, ſon of Antiochus Gryphus: made war againſt his uncle Antiochus Cyzicenus, took him priſoner in battle, and put him to death. Some time after, Antiochus ſurnamed Pius, ſon of Antiochus Cyzicenus, came to Aradus, aſſumed the diadem, defeated Seleucus, and drove him out of Syria. Seleucus retired to Cilicia, where endeavouring to raiſe large tributes from the people, they revolted againſt him, and burned him and all his friends in his palace. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 21. A. M. 3910, ante A. D. 94.

SELLING. The Hebrews might ſell their own liberty; fathers might ſell that of their children, Lev. xxv. 39. If your brother ſells himſelf to you becauſe of his poverty, you ſhall not oppreſs him, nor ſell him again as a ſlave: he ſhall abide with you only as a workman for hire. Maimonides ſays, that an Hebrew could not ſell his liberty, but in extreme neceſſity. Exod. xxi. 7.

If a man ſell his daughter to be a maid-ſervant, ſhe ſhall not go out as the men-ſervants do. Her maſter ſhall not diſmiſs her, as another ſlave is diſmiſſed at the Sabbatical year. He ſhall take her as his wife, or ſhall marry her to his ſon. If he cares to do neither of theſe, he ſhall ſet her at liberty.

They ſold alſo inſolvent debtors, and their children, as we find, Mat. xviii. 25, and 2 Kings, iv. 1. Sometimes they ſold free-men for ſlaves, as Joſeph was ſold by his brethren. This crime is called Plagium: the law puniſhed it with death, Exod. xxi. 16. Deut. xxiv. 7. The Jews confine this to the theft of a man of their own nation. Eſau ſold his birthright; and for this, it appears St. Paul calls him profane, Heb. xii. 16. It is ſaid in the prophets, that the Lord had ſold his people to their enemies; as a maſter parts with a vicious ſlave, to puniſh him for his infidelity.

Thou haſt ſold thyſelf to work evil in the ſight of the Lord, ſaid the prophet Elijah to Ahab, 1 Kings xxi. 20. 25. And the wicked Iſraelites mentioned in the Maccabees, Macc. i. 16. They ſold themſelves as ſlaves to ſin, being ſubject to their evil inclinations, as ſlaves are to their maſters. Theſe expreſſions were familiar to the Hebrews. See Judith vii. 13.

St. Paul, ſpeaking of himſelf, or rather of mankind in his own perſon, ſays, Rom. vii. 14. I am carnal, ſold under ſin; the ſlave of concupiſcence and of ſin by nature, but ſet at liberty by the grace of Jeſus Chriſt. [But obſerve, Ahab ſold himſelf, i. e. freely, voluntarily; whereas St. Paul was ſold, i. e. againſt his will, by force, by conſtraint of circumſtances, not of choice.]

SEMACHIAH, סמכיהו, σαμαχία, that adheres or unites with the Lord; from סמך ſamach, to unite, to join, to ſupport, and יה jah, the Lord.

SEMACHIAH, or Samachias, ſon of Shemaiah, a Levite, a porter belonging to the temple, 1 Chron. xxvi. 7.

SEMECHON, or Samechon, a lake through which the Jordan paſſes; it is ſixty furlongs long, and thirty broad; i. e. 7500 paces long, and 3750 broad. Some think this lake is called in Joſhua xi. 5, 7, the Waters of Merom, or, the Upper Waters; and in Judges, v. 18, the Canton of Merome. [In our tranſlation, the high Places of the Field.] But we think Merom to be near Dothaim, and far enough from Semechon. It is not known whence the name Semechon is taken: ſome derive it from Samach, in Arabic a fiſh; others, from the Chaldee, ſamak, red, as if the waters were reddiſh and turbid. Certain it is, that there was marſhy ground about this lake, Joſeph. de Bello, lib. iii. cap. 18. The city of Hazor, where Jabin, a king of the Canaanites reigned, was on the ſide of the lake Semechon; afterwards the city of Seleucia was here, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. v. cap. 6. The lake Semechon muſt be pretty near the city of Dan, and the fountains of Jordan, 120 furlongs from the lake of Tiberias, ſouth. Joſephus ſays, de Bello, lib. iv. cap. 1, that the marſhes of this lake extended even to Daphne. But there is great probability, that, inſtead of Daphne, it ſhould be read Dané; for he ſays in the ſame place, that the waters of Jordan fall into this pool, below the temple of the Golden Calf. Now the temple of the Golden Calf was at Dan. It is extraordinary that this lake ſhould never be mentioned in Scripture, that we know of. It is thought Pliny intended this lake, when he mentions a lake 150 furlongs diſtant from the Mediterranean, not far from Libanus, where the ſweet-ſcented reed grows, Plin. lib. xii. cap. 24.

SEMIRAMIS, daughter of Dercetis, or of the Syrian Venus, a famous queen of Aſſyria, wife of Ninus, who long governed the empire of Aſſyria, during the minority of her ſon Ninias. She undertook ſeveral wars, which ſhe conducted very fortunately, and executed many great works at Babylon, and elſewhere. Herodotus, lib. i. cap. 184, ſpeaks of ſeveral ramparts and moles conſtructed by her near Babylon. Diodorus Siculus, lib. i. Biblioth. Trogus, ſeu Juſtin, Strabo, Geograph. lib. ii. 16; and others, aſcribe to her the honour of building the walls of Babylon; but more exact chronologers believe, that Semiramis did nothing at Babylon; and it is very probable, that her other actions have been extravagantly exaggerated. She began to reign at Nineveh A. M. 2789, ante A. D. 1215, about the beginning of the high prieſt Eli's adminiſtration; and reigned 42 years.

SENNAH, סנאה, buſh; from סנה ſene: or enemy, according to the Syriac.

SENNAH, or Senna: the inhabitants of Sennah to the number 3630, contributed very much to the rebuilding of Jeruſalem, after the return from captivity, Ezra ii. 35.

SENECA: Lucius Annæus Seneca, a native of Corduba, preceptor to Nero, and famous for his writings, would have no place in this Dictionary, but on account of certain letters, which bear the title of St. Paul to Seneca, and of Seneca to St. Paul. St. Jerom makes mention of them, in Catal. Script. Eccleſ. St. Auſtin alſo mentions theſe epiſtles, Ep. 153, and ſeveral modern authors after him. [They are printed in Jones's Apochryphal Canon.] James le Fevre of Eſtaples thought them genuine, publiſhed them with thoſe of St. Paul, and wrote a comment on them. Sixtus Sinenſis, in his Bibliotheca Sacra, has wrote in defence of them, as alſo Antonius Poſſevinus, Alphonſus Salmeron, Franciſcus Bivarius, Jacobus Pamelius, Margarin de la Biggue. Others, as Lipſ. de Vita Senec. cap. 10. Tillemont, Hiſt. des Emper. tom. i. p. 560, have ſuſpected, that perhaps antiently there might have been true epiſtles of St. Paul to Seneca, and of Seneca to St. Paul, which were known to St. Jerom and St. Auſtin; but thoſe being loſt, ſome impoſtor has compoſed others in their place, which are what we now have. But as no proof is given of this conjecture, we readily admit that the Epiſtles we now have, are the ſame that were known to the antients, however, they are not the better for that; nor do they deſerve any conſideration; [being utterly unworthy both of Paul and of Seneca.]

SENEH, כנה, σενὰ buſh. See Sennah.

SENNACHERIB, סנחריב, buſh of the deſtruction of the ſword, of ſolitude, of drought; from סנה ſene, buſh, and חרב charab, to deſtroy, to dry up, to make deſolate, deſert, or ſword: otherwiſe, according to the Hebrew and Syriac, the ſword, or the deſtruction of the enemy. This word is ſtrange to the Hebrew language.

SENNACHERIB, king of Aſſyria, ſon and ſucceſſor of Shalmaneſer; he began to reign in A. M. 3290, ante A. D. 714. He reigned but four years, being killed by his own ſons A. M. 3294. Hezekiah, king of Judah, having ſhook off the yoke of the Aſſyrians, by which king Ahaz, his father, had ſuffered under Tiglath-pilneſer, king of Aſſyria; Sennacherib, on notice of this revolt, marched againſt him, and took all the ſtrong cities of Judah. Hezekiah ſeeing he had nothing left but Jeruſalem, which, perhaps he found difficulty enough to ſecure, ſent ambaſſadors to Sennacherib, then at the ſiege of Lachiſh, ſaying, "I have committed a fault; but withdraw your army out of my territories, and I will bear whatever you ſhall impoſe upon me." Sennacherib demanded three hundred talents of ſilver, and thirty talents of gold; which Hezekiah remitted to him ſoon after; yet the king of Aſſyria would not leave his dominions.

He ſent from Lachiſh to Jeruſalem three of his chief officers, Tartan, Rabſaris, and Rab-ſhakeh, to ſummon Hezekiah: Rab-ſhakeh uttered many blaſphemies againſt God, and many inſults againſt Hezekiah. (See RAB-SHAKEH and HEZEKIAH.) In the mean time Sennacherib quitted the ſiege of Lachiſh, and applied himſelf to that of Libnah. Rab-ſhakeh having reported what he had ſaid to Hezekiah, and that he returned no anſwer, Sennacherib wrote a letter to Hezekiah, urging him to return to his duty, and to follow the example of ſo many other nations that had ſubmitted. At the ſame time he went with all his army to meet Tirhakah, king of Ethiopia, who was marching towards him. But the Lord ſent a deſtroying angel againſt the army of Sennacherib, who ſlew in one night 185,000 men, 2 Kings, xix. 35. Sennacherib was forced to return with all ſpeed to Nineveh; where, while he was paying his adorations to his god Niſroch, in his temple, his two ſons Adrammelech and Sharezer ſlew him with their ſwords, and fled into Armenia. Eſarhaddon his ſon reigned in his ſtead, A. M. 3294, ante A. D. 710. 2 Chron. xxxii. 21.

Tobit, i. 21. acquaints us, that when Sennacherib returned to Nineveh, he began to perſecute the captive Iſraelites, whom he conſidered as the cauſe of his diſgrace. But after forty-five days, according to the Latin text, or fifty-five according to the Greek, this prince was ſlain by his own ſons. The Rabbins think, that what determined Sennacherib's ſons to kill him, was a reſolution he had made, as they were informed, of ſacrificing them to his idol: wherefore they thought it beſt to prevent him.

As to the defeat of his army by the deſtroying angel, the Rabbins believe, that fire fell upon them from heaven, and reduced their bodies to aſhes, without doing any harm to their cloaths, which fell to the poſſeſſion of the Iſraelites, as they pretend. They found this tradition upon Iſai. x. 16. therefore ſhall the Lord, the Lord of hoſts, ſend among his fat ones leanneſs, and under his glory he ſhall kindle a burning, like the burning of a fire. By glory, they ſay, is meant their magnificent habits. Other Hebrews had told St. Jerom, that the angel Gabriel was ſent among the Aſſyrians to deſtroy them. Some fancy it was the plague, or ſome internal diſtemper, that killed them all in one night, Beroſ. apud Joſeph. Antiq. lib. x. cap. 2. Vid. Toſt. & Salian. Others will have it, that this vaſt army was diſturbed by a tempeſt, that being ſeized by a panick fear, and miſtaking each other for enemies, they turned their arms againſt themſelves, and killed one another.

Herodotus, lib. ii. cap. 141, ſpeaking of Sennacherib, relates his diſaſter in a very different manner. He quotes the Egyptian prieſts, who ſaid that Sethon, king of Egypt, and prieſt of Vulcan, being attacked by Sennacherib, king of the Arabians and the Aſſyrians, and ſeeing himſelf deſerted by his own ſoldiers, begged of Vulcan ſome ſpeedy aſſiſtance. Vulcan appeared to him the night following, and promiſed help. Sethon therefore marching with a few troops, advanced to Peluſium. The ſame night a body of field-rats came into the camp of the Aſſyrians, and gnawed the thongs of their bucklers, and the ſtrings of their bows; ſo that, next morning they found themſelves in no condition to uſe their arms, but fled.

Moſt commentators are of opinion, that the army of Sennacherib was deſtroyed before Jeruſalem, preparing for the ſiege of this city. But it appears plainly from Iſaiah x. 24, 25, 26. that Sennacherib did not form the ſiege of Jeruſalem, and that in his march againſt Tirhakah this calamity befell him. Beroſus, apud Joſeph. Antiq. lib. x. cap. 1. tells us, that Sennacherib had carried the war into Egypt, and had ſubdued all Aſia. Joſephus relates that this prince having ſpent a long time in the ſiege of Peluſium, when his works were advanced, and he was on the point of becoming maſter of the place, he was obliged to raiſe the ſiege, leſt the king of Ethiopia ſhould ſurprize him, who came with a vaſt army to aſſiſt the Egyptians. The Rabbins pretend, that the angel which deſtroyed the Aſſyrians, cut off the hair and beard of Sennacherib himſelf, and ſent him home into his own country loaded with ignominy and diſgrace, Author. Tradit. in Reg. & Paral. They found this tradition upon theſe words of Iſaiah, vii. 20. In the ſame day ſhall the Lord ſhave with a razor that is hired, namely, by them beyond the river, by the king of Aſſyria, the head and the hair of the feet, and it ſhall alſo conſume the beard.

The Babylonian Talmud will have it, that the army of Sennacherib was deſtroyed by thunder. The Targums, or Chaldee paraphraſes, are quoted, which affirm the ſame thing. Others believe, that they periſhed by means of a hot wind, which God cauſed to blow againſt them; a wind very common in thoſe parts, (Thevenot. Voyage, Part i. lib. ii. cap. 20. Part ii. lib. i. cap. 20. lib. ii. cap. 16.) and which makes great ravages there, ſtifling thouſands of perſons in a moment, as often happens to thoſe great caravans of Mahometans, that go yearly pilgrimages to Mecca. Jeremiah li. 1. calls this wind a deſtroying wind. The threatening made by Iſaiah, xxxvii. 7. to Sennacherib; behold I will ſend a blaſt upon him, and he ſhall hear a rumour, ſeems alſo to inſinuate this great wind. Vide FRAGMENTS, No. IV. p. 10.

SENSE of the Scripture. Theſe five ſenſes may be diſtinguiſhed in Scripture.

I. The Grammatical Senſe.
II. The Hiſtorical, or Literal Senſe.
III. The Allegorical, or Figurative Senſe.
IV. The Anagogical Senſe.
V. The Tropological, or Moral Senſe.

I. The Grammatical Senſe is what the words of the text preſent to the mind, according to their proper and uſual ſignification. Thus when it is ſaid that God repents, is angry, aſcends, or deſcends, has his eyes open, or ears attentive, &c. the grammatical ſenſe of theſe expreſſions might ſuggeſt, that God is corporeal, and ſubject to the ſame weakneſſes as ourſelves. But as juſt reaſon and ſound faith aſſure us, that he has none of our infirmities and imperfections; upon ſuch paſſages we are not to abide by the grammatical ſenſe.

II. The Literal and Hiſtorical Senſe is what belongs to the hiſtory, or fact, to the ſenſe which the rehearſal and terms of the Scripture immediately preſent to the mind. Thus when it is ſaid, that Abraham married Hagar; that he afterwards ſent her away; that Iſaac was born of Sarah; that he received circumciſion: theſe facts, in the hiſtorical and literal ſenſe, mean nothing but what is expreſſed in the hiſtory; i. e. the conjugal marriage of Abraham with Hagar, the natural birth of Iſaac, &c.

III. The Allegorical and Figurative Senſe, examines what may be concealed under the terms, or under the events of a hiſtory. Thus the marriage of Abraham with Hagar, who was afterwards repudiated becauſe of her inſolence, and that of her ſon; is a figure, or repreſentation [PRE-figuration] of the ſynagogue, which was only a ſlave, and which was divorced and rejected becauſe of its infidelity and ingratitude. Sarah is the figure of the Chriſtian church; and Iſaac of the people choſen by God.

IV. The Anagogical Senſe, or ſenſe of analogy and agreement, refers certain expreſſions of Scripture to eternal life and happineſs; becauſe of the conformity, or ſimilitude between the terms uſed to expreſs ſomething happening in this world, and what ſhall happen hereafter in heaven. For example, on occaſion of the Sabbath, or ſeventh-day's reſt, enjoined the people of God, a tranſition may be made to that repoſe, or reſt, which the ſaints enjoy in heaven. On occaſion of the Iſraelites entering the land of Promiſe, we naturally advert to the entering of the elect into the land of the promiſed heaven, &c.

V. The Moral, or Tropological Senſe, deduces moral reflections for the conduct of life, and manners, from what is related hiſtorically and literally in Scripture. So from thoſe words, Deut. xxv. 4. thou ſhalt not muzzle the ox, when he treadeth out the corn, St. Paul infers that preachers, and inſtructors, ought to be ſupplied with the neceſſaries of life, 1 Cor. ix. 10.

The objects of the literal ſenſe are facts and hiſtory;

tory; of the allegorical, what we believe, or myſteries of our faith; of the anagogical, eternal happineſs, and what relateth thereto; of the moral or tropological, the regulation of our manners; all which is comprehended in this diſtich.

Litera geſta docet, quid credas Allegoria,
Moralis quid agas, quò tendas Anagogia.

Theſe five ſenſes may be obſerved in this one word, Jeruſalem. In the grammatical ſenſe, it ſignifies the viſion of peace; in the literal and hiſtorical ſenſe, the capital city of Judea; in the allegorical ſenſe, the church militant; in the anagogical ſenſe, the church triumphant; in the moral ſenſe, a faithful ſoul, of which Jeruſalem is a kind of figure.

SENUA, סנואה, buſh; from סנה ſenah: otherwiſe enemy, according to the Syriac.

SEORIM, שערים, barley, goats, hair, whirl-winds, eſtimations, tempeſts; from שער ſhoher, or ſhahar, according to different readings; otherwiſe, goats, demons, hairy men; from שעיר ſhahir: otherwiſe, barley; from שערה.

SEORIM. The family of Seorim was the fourth in order of the twenty-four ſacerdotal families, 1 Chron. xxiv. 8.

SEPHAR, ספרה, σωφηρὰ, book, letter, or ſcribe, narration, or enumeration; from ספר ſaphar, or ſepher, according to different readings.

SEPHAR, a mountain of the eaſt, probably about Armenia. The ſons of Joktan had their dwelling from Meſha, as thou goeſt unto Sephar, a mount of the eaſt, Gen. x. 30. We believe theſe mountains to have been the dwelling of the Sepharvaim, (See that Article below), and of the Suſpires, of whom geographers ſpeak.

SEPHARAD. Vide BOSPHORUS and OBADIAH.

SEPHARVAIM, ספרוים, σεπφαυιν, the two books, or the two ſcribes.

SEPHARVAIM. When Shalmaneſer, king of Aſſyria, carried away Iſrael from Samaria to beyond the Euphrates, he brought other people in their ſtead into Paleſtine, among whom were the Sepharvaim, 2 Kings xvii. 24. 31. A. M. 3283, ante A. D. 1721. The place of their former habitation is not exactly known: ſome pretend they inhabited the city of Siphera, on the Euphrates. We think their dwelling to have been in the mountains of Sephar, Gen. x. 30. and that the Saſpires, who, according to Herodotus, lib. i. cap. 103. lib. iii. cap. 94. lib. vii. cap. 79, were the only people that inhabited between the Colchians and the Medes, are the Sepharvaim. Strabo, lib. x. places the Sarapares in Armenia. In Ezra, iv. 10. the tranſportation of the nations is imputed to the great and noble Aſnappar, probably Eſarhaddon. But in the enumeration there made of thoſe nations, we do not find the Sepharvaim, or Sepharvaites; except they are expreſſed by the name of the Tarpelites, which may be put for the Tapyres, or Sapires, according to the Chaldean pronunciation.

The Scripture ſpeaks, Iſa. xxxvii. 13. 2 Kings, xix. 13. of the city of Sepharvaim, which probably was the capital of this people; and the king of Sepharvaim is, the God of theſe people. This appears pretty plainly from comparing theſe paſſages, 2 Kings xviii. 34. Where are the Gods of Hamath and of Arpad? Where are the GODS of Sepharvaim, Hena, and Ivah? And Iſa. xxxvii. 13. 2 Kings xix. 13. where is the King of Hamath, and the KING of Arpad, and the King of the city of Sepharvaim, of Hena, and Ivah? Laſtly, 2 Kings xvii. 31. the Sepharvites burnt their children in the fire to Adrammelech and Anammelech, the Gods of Sepharvaim. There is therefore great probability that Hena and Iva are the ſame as Anammelech and Adrammelech, the Gods of the Sepharvites. But Anammelech apparently ſtands for the moon, and Adrammelech for the ſun. Vide their Articles; and FRAGMENTS, No. CVIII. [For Melek, king, ſhould we not read Moloch, in the places quoted?]

SEPHET, that judges; from שפט ſhaphat, to judge: or that ordains; from שפת ſhaphat.

SEPHIROTH, ספרות, brightneſſes.

SEPHORIS, a famous city of Zebulun, and the capital of Galilee: afterwards named Diocæſarea. The Jews place it eighteen miles from Tiberias, though others ſay but ten miles. Rabb. in Echa Rabbati, fol. 75. 2. It was not far from Tabor, and the great plain. I do not find it in Joſhua, or in the ſacred authors; but Joſephus often ſpeaks of it. He ſays, Antiq. lib. 14. cap. 10. that Gabinius placed here one of his five tribunals; that Sephoris was in the midſt of Judea; that it was the largeſt and beſt city in this country, and that it became the capital of it, after Nero had given Galilee to the younger Agrippa; that mount Aſamon is pretty near Sephoris, which is as it were the center of Galilee. The firſt city of Galilee that one came to from Ptolemais, was Sephoris, Joſeph. de Bello, lib. ii. cap. 23. lib. iii. cap. i.

SEPTUAGINT, or Seventy Interpreters. By this name are generally underſtood the ſeventy, or rather ſeventy-two interpreters, who, it has been thought tranſlated from Hebrew into Greek the books of the Old Teſtament, or, at leaſt, the Pentateuch, if we believe St. Jerom, in Ezekiel v. & in Mich. ii. and others.

This is the hiſtory of this tranſlation; as Ariſtæas relates it. Demetrius Phalareus, librarian to Ptolemy Philadelphus, king of Egypt, having uſed his utmoſt induſtry to collect books in the library at Alexandria, king Philadelphus aſked him, one day, how many books he had? Demetrius anſwered 200,000; but he hoped in a ſhort time to have 500,000; and, ſays he, I have been informed, that the laws of the Jews well deſerve a place here, but they ought to be firſt tranſlated out of Hebrew into Greek. The king replied, he would write to the high-prieſt of the Jews about it.

Then Ariſtæas, author of this narration, who was preſent, and who had the honour of being of the life guard to this prince, thought of a matter which he had had a good while in his mind, and which he had communicated to Soſibius of Tarentum and to Andreas, two of his friends, that were chief officers in the king's guards; which was, to procure the liberty of a great number of Jews, whom king Ptolemy, father of Ptolemy Philadelphus had brought captive into Egypt. Ariſtæas, Soſibius, and Andreas took therefore this opportunity to tell the king, that ſince he deſired a tranſlation of the ſacred books of the Jews, it would become his liberality and magnificence, to free from ſervitude a great number of Jews now in his territories, that the whole nation being obliged by this favour, might the more readily ſend him the books he deſired.

The king aſking how many theſe captives might be? was anſwered, about one hundred thouſand. This large number did not diſcourage Philadelphus, and he promiſed them liberty. At the ſame time he gave orders, that twenty drachmas a head ſhould be diſtributed to all perſons who had Jewiſh ſlaves, who were forthwith to be made free. He publiſhed an edict in their favour, in which he reſtored to liberty, not only all the Jews which his father, or himſelf, had brought into Egypt, but all others who might happen to be in ſervitude there on any account. The king's expence on this occaſion was above ſix hundred talents, (136,875*l.*) taking the talent to be the Egyptian, Attick, or Eubœan talent of ſilver, of 228 $\frac{1}{8}$ pound.

After this Philadelphus wrote to the high-prieſt Eleazar, to deſire of him the books of the law, and tranſlators capable of rendering them out of Hebrew into Greek. This letter was carried by ambaſſadors, with rich preſents: and Andreas and Ariſtæas were of the number.. Eleazar readily complied with the king's requeſt, and ſent him the book of the law, together with ſeventy-two Jews, ſkilful in the Greek and Hebrew tongues, to tranſlate thoſe ſacred books. He wrote alſo to the king, with thanks for his rich preſents, and to commend his piety towards God, and his generoſity to the Jews in his dominions.

Philadelphus received Eleazar's commiſſioners with great humanity, expreſſed great reſpect for the holy books they had brought; worſhipped them, and bowed himſelf before them ſeven times; admired the beauty of the vellum, and the writing in golden letters; alſo the variety of the colours, and embelliſhments, of the leaves. He aſſured theſe deputies, that he ſhould always look upon the day of their arrival as a feſtival. And as this day fell on the ſame on which this prince had overcome Antigonus in a ſea-fight, he did them the honour of making them eat with him. At dinner he put ſeveral queſtions to them, to which they returned anſwers intirely to his ſatisfaction. And the king was ſo pleaſed with their converſation, that he treated them ſeven days together, that he might hear them all one after another.

Three days after this, Demetrius Phalereus took theſe ſeventy-two Hebrews into the iſle of Pharos, and led them into a very fine houſe, at the northern part of the iſland, on the ſea-ſhore, and far from any noiſe, that they might with the greater tranquility apply themſelves to the tranſlation of the holy books. They began therefore their work, and diſcuſſing among themſelves what difficulties they might meet with, when they had fixed on any thing, and brought it to a condition of being entered fair, they reported it to Demetrius, who had it fairly writ down by his copyers. They laboured thus from morning to the ninth hour, i. e. till three hours before the ſun-ſet; then they returned into the city, where they were plentifully furniſhed with neceſſaries. This they continued for ſeventy, or rather ſeventy-two days together, Ita Ariſtæas apud Joſeph. ex Verſione Rufini. Euſeb. Cyrill. Alexand. Cedren.

When the work was finiſhed, they put it into the hands of Demetrius, who read it in an aſſembly of the Jews at Alexandria, that they might judge of its agreement with the original. They were much pleaſed with it, and greatly extolled, as well Demetrius who had procured this verſion, as the interpreters who had made it. After which they pronounced an anathema againſt any one who ſhould make any alteration in this verſion in any manner. The king being informed of what had paſſed, expreſſed much ſatisfaction. He had the law of Moſes read to him, and greatly admired the wiſdom of it. He aſked Demetrius, why no hiſtorian, or poet, had made any mention of ſo divine a work? Demetrius replied, it was from that reſpect which had always been paid to this divine book. That Theopompus having inſerted inſerted ſomething of it in his hiſtory, had been ſtruck with a diſeaſe, which deprived him of his underſtanding; and that Theodotus, a tragic poet, endeavouring to put ſomething of it in his poems, had been ſtruck with blindneſs; but that both had been miraculouſly cured, after having acknowledged and confeſſed the fault.

Philadelphus therefore received the work of the interpreters with great veneration, and cauſed it to be laid up in his library, to be kept with great care. He greatly careſſed the ſeventy tranſlators, invited them to come often to ſee him, and ſent them back into Judea with ample rewards, and rich preſents for Eleazar.

This is the ſubſtance of the hiſtory of Ariſtæas, which this author addreſſes to his brother Philocrates, to whom he gives an account of all this, as an eye-witneſs, and one who was perfectly well informed of every thing that paſſed. The ſame ſtory we read in Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xii. cap. 2. who has taken it out of Ariſtæas. Philo alſo, ſpeaks of the Verſion of the Septuagint, as having been performed by inſpired writers; but he makes no mention either of Ariſtæas or Demetrius Phalereus, Philo, de vit. Moſ. lib. ii.

Juſtin Martyr's account is very different, Exhort. ad Græcos. He ſays that Ptolemy, king of Egypt, being informed that the Jews had antient hiſtories written in Hebrew, he ſent for ſeventy men from Jeruſalem to tranſlate theſe works into Greek. He had theſe men put into the iſle of Pharos, into ſeventy different cells, that they might ſtudy without interruption, and without communicating with each other; ſo that he might be the more ſecure of the faithfulneſs of their tranſlation. God himſelf ordered it ſo, that they ſhould tranſlate in ſo uniform a manner, as not only to uſe the ſame words, but alſo in the ſame number. This cauſed in the king ſo vaſt admiration, that he gave them great rewards, and ſent them back with honour into their own country. Juſtin adds to this, that when he was at Alexandria, they ſhewed him, in the iſle of Pharos, the ruins of thoſe cells in which theſe interpreters had been ſhut up.

The ſame Juſtin, in his ſecond apology, relates this in another manner; he ſays, that Ptolemy having a deſign to collect a very ample library, wrote to Herod, king of the Jews, to ſend him the books of the prophets. Herod ſent them; but as theſe books were written in Hebrew, Ptolemy ſent again to Herod, to deſire him to ſend ſome who were able to tranſlate them into Greek: this being done, the books were put into the king of Egypt's library, where they are at preſent, ſays Juſtin, in the hands of all the Jews. St. Irenæus, St. Cyril of Jeruſalem, St. Chryſoſtom, and St. Auſtin, ſpeak alſo of the ſeventy-two cells of the ſeventy-two interpreters, Iren. lib. iii. contr. adv. hæreſ. cap. 25. ſeu 21. nov. edit. Cyrill. Jeroſol. Cathech. iv. p. 36, 37; but Epiphanius allows but thirty-ſix: thus he relates the ſtory, de ponderibus & menſuris, n. 9, 10, 11.

He ſays, that Ariſtæas, in his hiſtory of the ſeventy interpreters, informs us, that Ptolemy Philadelphus erected a library at Alexandria, in the place called Bruchium, and committed the care of it to Demetrius Phalereus. One day as the king was aſking Demetrius how many books he had, Demetrius anſwered about 54,800, but that there might eaſily be a much greater number, if tranſlations were made of ſuch books as were among the Ethiopians, the Indians, the Perſians, the Elamites, the Babylonians, the Aſſyrians, the Chaldeans, the Romans, the Phenicians, the Syrians, and thoſe that inhabited Greece, ſays he, formerly called Latins, and not Romans. In all appearance he meant the Greeks of Italy, or of great Greece. He added, that in Judea, and at Jeruſalem, there were ſeveral divine books written by prophets, which might be obtained if they were deſired of the Jews.

The king wrote therefore a letter to the Jews, which is to be ſeen in Epiphanius, by which he deſired theſe books. The Jews ſent him the two and twenty books of the Old Teſtament, written in golden letters; as alſo ſeventy-two Apocryphal books. But theſe works being in Hebrew, the king deſired them to ſend him interpreters, to render them into Greek. They ſent him ſeventy-two choſen men, ſix out of each tribe; and in order that the tranſlation might be as exact as poſſible, and that the interpreters might have no communication with each other, the king cauſed to be built, in the iſle of Pharos, thirty-ſix cells, in each of which he ſhut up two tranſlators, that they might ſtudy together; and he allowed them ſervants to attend them, and tranſcribers to write down in notes or ſhort-hand, what ſhould be dictated. Theſe cells had no windows; but each had a ſky-light. Each two interpreters had a book given them, and when they had tranſlated it, it paſſed through the hands of thoſe in the next cell, and ſo on till all the books were tranſlated thirty-ſix times.

They laboured thus from morning to evening, and at night were fetched away in thirty-ſix boats, and brought to the palace, where they ate with the king. Then they were put into ſix and thirty chambers, where they lay two in a chamber. The day following, early in the morning, they were carried back in the like manner to their cells. When the whole work was finiſhed, the king ſate upon his throne, and had the work read to him. Thirty-ſix readers held the thirty-ſix copies of the tranſlation, and a thirty-ſeventh held the Hebrew original. In confronting all theſe verſions, it was found, they were ſo perfectly alike, that what one had added or retrenched, had alſo been added or retrenched by every one; and that what was retrenched was really uſeleſs and ſuperfluous. This convinced all the aſſembly that the interpreters had been inſpired by the Holy Ghoſt. The king laid up the tranſlation in the library called Bruchium, which was as the mother of the ſecond library, called Serapæum.

The Talmuds of Jeruſalem and Babylon ſay, that king Ptolemy having made the ſeventy-two elders come to him, without informing them what he deſired of them, he ſhut them up in ſeventy-two cells. Then he told them he would have them tranſlate the Holy Books into Greek. They complied with the king's deſire, and with ſuch ſucceſs, and God ſo happily directed them, that they all tranſlated in the ſame manner.

The Samaritans have alſo laid claim to the honour of this tranſlation; they relate, that the king of Egypt having cauſed the high-prieſt of the Samaritans to come to him, and alſo that of the Jews, with other aſſiſtants on both ſides to tranſlate the Holy Scriptures into Greek; the tranſlation of the Samaritans was preferred before that of the Jews, and laid up in the library of Alexandria.

Philo, de vit. Moſ. lib. ii. relates, that the Jews of Egypt were ſo tranſported on making this tranſlation of the law into Greek, that they appointed an annual feaſt to perpetuate the memory of it. They went every year into the iſle of Pharos, accompanied by ſeveral ſtrangers, who came thither out of devotion, as well as themſelves; they refreſhed themſelves with entertainments of piety, ſome under tents, others on the ſhore, and on the ſand, being filled with reſpect for a place which had been ſanctioned by the preſence of the ſeventy interpreters. The Hebraizing Jews, on the contrary, conceived ſo much contempt and abhorrence for this verſion, that they made a faſt on the eighth day of Thebet, (December) Scaliger Notis in Chronic. Euſeb. ad an. 1134. p. 134. To ſhew how much they diſapprove the liberty the Helleniſtical Jews had taken in tranſlating the laws into a foreign and impure language, they ſay, in Maſſechet Sopherim, that the day on which this tranſlation was made, was as fatal to Iſrael, as that on which Jeroboam, the ſon of Nebat made the golden calves; and that then the heavens were covered with darkneſs for three days together.

Many of the antient fathers of the church had ſo great a reſpect for this verſion of the Septuagint, that they looked on it as infallible and inſpired; St. Auſtin even thinks that in thoſe paſſages where the Septuagint differs from the Hebrew, we ought to believe that the Holy Ghoſt, who inſpired them, as well as he inſpired the firſt authors, conducted their pen; ſo that each of them tells us nothing but what is abſolutely certain, though ſometimes they appear contrary to each other. Thus he preſerves the authority of the Septuagint, without derogating from that of the original. St. Hilary, in Pſalm cxxxi. n. 24, will have it, that in ſuch places where different interpreters vary from each other, upon any paſſage of the Old Teſtament, we ought to adhere to the Septuagint as the moſt antient verſion, and which has been moſt authorized by uſe in the church.

This ſentiment of the fathers, concerning the inſpiration of the Septuagint, was founded on that ſurprizing agreement among the ſeveral copies of thoſe interpreters, though ſhut up ſeparately in thirty-ſix, or in ſeventy-two, cells. But as this fact itſelf is very doubtful, it could not ſerve as a foundation for an article of ſuch conſequence. Therefore the church has never admitted the inſpiration of theſe interpreters; and Jerom, præfat. in Pentateuc. ad Deſiderium, ſays Neſcio quis primus Autor ſeptuaginta Alexandriæ mendacio ſuo extruxerit, and very much inveighs againſt the firſt who invented the fable of the ſeventy cells. He maintains, that theſe interpreters conferred together, and aſſiſted each other in their tranſlations. In a word, that they were mere tranſlators, and not prophets. In una Baſilica congregatos contuliſſe, non prophetaſſe; aliud eſt enim eſſe Vatem, aliud Interpretem. He ſhews there are many faults in their tranſlation, and he thinks that they did not tranſlate the whole Scripture, but only the five books of Moſes. He ſays, that Joſephus and Philo, and the whole ſchool of the Hebrews, affirm the ſame; and Ariſtæas, who is the firſt author of the ſtory of the verſion of the ſeventy, ſays only, that they read to the king the books of the law, Hieron. in Ezech. v. & in Mich. ii.

The greateſt part of modern critics undertake to ſhew the falſity of what has been ſaid, concerning the manner in which the verſion of the Septuagint was made; and it muſt be owned, that their reaſons have great appearance of truth. They ſhew, Firſt, the diverſity of opinions, in this matter. Secondly, Ariſtæas, ſaid to be the author of the oldeſt account we have of this matter, ill ſupports the part he acts. He would paſs for a Pagan, yet ſpeaks and acts like a zealous Jew. Thirdly, he ſpeaks of Ptolemy Philadelphus, as of a wiſe and religious prince, full of reſpect for the true God, for his temple, and his Scriptures; yet it is known from hiſtory that he was a very corrupt and wicked prince. Fourthly, he tells us, that Demetrius Phalareus was friend, and library-keeper, to king Philadelphus; whereas it is known, (Hermippus apud Laert. lib. v. in Demetrio. Ita & Suidas.) that Demetrius having adviſed Ptolemy, the ſon of Lagus, to exclude his ſon Ptolemy Philadelphus from the kingdom, Philadelphus was ſo provoked at this advice, that when he came to the throne, he exiled Demetrius, till he ſhould determine farther about him: But Demetrius not being able to bear the tireſomeneſs of this baniſhment, put himſelf to death by the bite of an aſp. Fifthly, they obſerve the ſame ſtyle, and that a ſtyle full of Hebraiſms, throughout the hiſtory of the pretended Ariſtæas; in the letters of Philadelphus to the high-prieſt Eleazar; in thoſe of Eleazar to the king; and in the petition of Demetrius to Philadelphus. Other remarks are made on the hiſtory of Ariſtæas, which render it very ſuſpicious, and give reaſon to conſider it as the work of ſome Jew, who has borrowed the name of Ariſtæas, the better to diſguiſe the forgery. Vide alſo PRIDEAUX, CONNECT. Part 2.

What then are we to think of the ancient Greek verſion of the Bible, that we have in our hands, under the name of the Septuagint? It is agreed that this muſt be an ancient verſion, and it might well have been made in the time of Ptolemy Philadelphus; at leaſt the five books of Moſes, the tranſlation of which is more faithful, and exact, than that of the other books; but we do not know preciſely, either the time or the authors of it. The tranſlations of the other books ſeem to have been done by other hands, which are as much unknown as the former, and the authors might live at different times. The diverſity of ſtyle, and of the manner in which the ſame word is tranſlated, give reaſon to judge that they were done by ſeveral hands. Neither can it be known whether it proceeds from the tranſlators, or the copiers, that ſo many variations are found in the Greek, from the Hebrew original; and the alterations in Geneſis, concerning the ages of the patriarchs who lived before and after the flood, to the building of Babel. Theſe changes and additions could not be the effect of chance, they are ſo numerous; eſpecially in Job, in the Proverbs, in the greater prophets, in the books of Samuel, and in the Kings.

The critics who have expreſsly handled this matter, are Scaliger, Uſher, Walton, Fraſſen, M. du Pin, Vandal, Hoddy, &c.

SEPULCHRE. The Hebrews were always very careful about the burial of their dead. Many of their Sepulchres were hewn in rocks; for example, that bought by Abraham for the burying of Sarah, Gen. xxiii. 4. 6; thoſe of the kings of Judah and Iſrael; and that wherein our Saviour was laid in mount Calvary. Sometimes alſo, their graves were dug in the ground; and commonly without their towns, in burying-places ſet apart. Generally they put ſome hewn ſtone, or other preſervative over a grave, to ſhew it was a burying-place, that paſſengers might be warned to avoid it, that they might not be polluted.

Jeſus Chriſt, Mat. xxiii. 27. ſays, that the Phariſees were like whited ſepulchres, which appeared fine without, but inwardly were full of rottenneſs and corruption. Lightfoot ſhews, that every year, on the 15th of February, they whitened them anew. In Luke xi. 44. our Saviour compares the Phariſees to graves which appear not, and men that walk over them are not aware of them; or, know not that theſe places are unclean; ſo that they contract an involuntary impurity. Sepulchre of Moſes. After the death of this famous law-giver, the arch-angel Michael, Jude 9. diſputed with the devil about his body. What was the ſubject of this diſpute has been much conteſted. Some have thought, that the devil withſtood the burial of Moſes, maintaining, that he had not deſerved this honour, having unjuſtly killed an Egyptian in Egypt, Oecum. in Ep. Judæ, ex antiquor. traditione. Glyca, parte 2 Annal. &c. Others have maintained, that Moſes was buried by the hands of angels, without letting the Hebrews have any knowledge of it, for fear they ſhould be tempted to pay him divine honours after his death, Philo de Vita Moſ. ad fin. Epiphan. hæreſ. 9. 84, &c.

Others pretend, that the devil would have had him be buried with public ſolemnity, that the people might thence take occaſion of frequenting his tomb, and worſhipping him as a God. Some think he did not die like other men, but was tranſlated out of this world into the earthly paradiſe, Clem. Alex. lib. 1. Strom. Hil. in Mat. xx. Vide & Ambroſ. in lib. 1. de Cain & Abel. cap. 1. & Hieronym. in Amos viii.

The text of Deuteronomy xxxiv. 6. ſays expreſsly, that no one knows the place of his burial to this day. Yet, for all this, it is related that in Octo- ber 1655, as ſome Maronite ſhepherds were feeding their goats in the mountains of Nebo and Abarim, they diſcovered it. Vide Horn. hiſt. Eccleſ. Sæcul. 17. art. 31.

Sepulchre of Eliſha. This is diſtinguiſhed by a very remarkable circumſtance, 2 Kings xiii. 20, 21. In the year of the death and burial of this prophet, ſeveral parties of Moabites invading the territories of Iſrael; it happened that ſome Iſraelites being engaged in burying a man, threw him haſtily into the tomb of this prophet, that they might eſcape with more expedition. But the corpſe had no ſooner touched the dead body of Eliſha, 'ere the man revived. It is not agreed where the tomb of this prophet was: St. Jerom, in Epitaph. Paulæ, Epiphan. ſeu alius, Vita Prophet. Iſidor. Doroth. and ſeveral others, have told us, that it was at Samaria, or thereabouts, concluding, that as he, probably, died at Samaria, it may be preſumed he was alſo buried there. Others will have him to have been buried at Abel-meula his own country; others, on mount Carmel. See ELISHA.

Sepulchre of David. This is a magnificent edifice, now without the walls of Jeruſalem, but probably, antiently within the walls. You firſt enter a large court, about twenty ſix foot ſquare cut out of the rock, which is marble. On the left-hand is a gallery, cut out of the rock likewiſe, as alſo the pillars that ſupport it. At the end of the gallery is a little opening, through which you paſs, by creeping on the ground, into a large chamber of about twenty four foot ſquare, round about which are other ſmaller chambers, which communicate one with the other, by doors of ſtone. The ceiling, the doors, as well as the reſt, their hinges, their poſts, their frames, &c. are all cut out of the ſame rock. In the ſides of the ſmall chambers are ſeveral niches, within which the bodies of the kings were depoſited in ſtone coffins. This work is perhaps the only real one that now remains of ancient Jeruſalem. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXXXVI. and Plate.

Sepulchre of the Kings of Judah. See DAVID.

Sepulchre, or tomb, of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. This was on mount Calvary, north-weſt of Jeruſalem, and was hewn out of a rock, as John xix. 41. informs us. It is a kind of ſmall chamber, almoſt ſquare within; its heighth from bottom to top eight feet one inch, its length ſix feet one inch, its breadth fifteen feet ten inches. The entrance which looks towards the eaſt is but four feet high, and two feet four inches wide: this door was ſhut up by a ſtone of the ſame rock: to this ſtone the chief prieſts affixed their ſeal, Mark, xvi. 3. and on this ſtone the angel ſat, after Jeſus Chriſt was come out of the tomb, Matthew xxviii. 2. The place where the body of our Saviour was laid takes up one ſide of this cave; it is a ſtone raiſed from the ground to the height of two feet four inches; its length is five feet eleven inches, and its breadth two feet eight inches, placed lengthwiſe from eaſt to weſt. It remains to this day, but is now incruſted with white marble. Voyage of Paul Lucas, in Aſia Minor, t. 2. p. 12, &c. Vide FRAGMENTS, No. CXXXVIII. and Plates.

Sepulchre of the Holy Virgin. There are two traditions concerning the burial of the Holy Virgin, as there are two concerning the place of her death. Thoſe who affirm, that ſhe followed St. John the Evangeliſt to Epheſus, and died there, pretend, that her tomb was ſtill to be ſeen there, A. D. 431, when the council of Epheſus was held: and this opinion is expreſsly noticed in a letter of this council's. Concil. t. 3. p. 561, 574. According to another opinion, ſhe died at Jeruſalem, where her tomb is to be ſeen; which opinion is as much followed as the other. Juvenal biſhop of Jeruſalem, who could not be ignorant of what had paſſed at the council of Epheſus, ſince he himſelf was preſent at it, wrote to the empreſs Pulcheria, and to the emperor Marcian, that her tomb was ſhewn at Gethſemane near to Jeruſalem, but that it was empty. Niceph. Hiſt. lib. ii. cap. 32. and lib. xv. cap. 14.

Yet ſince that time they have not deſiſted from ſhewing the tomb of the Virgin at Jeruſalem. Adamnan. de locis ſanctis, ſays, it was ſeen in the valley of Jehoſhaphat near this city. Bede lib. iii. lib. de loc. SS. cap. 3. teſtifies that it might be ſeen at Jeruſalem in his time, but empty. Travellers aſſure us, that it may ſtill be ſeen in the valley of Jehoſhaphat, wherein the brook Kedron runs, but on the other ſide of this brook, over-againſt Gethſemene and the mount of Olives; that the part of the monument which appears above-ground is very little raiſed; that they deſcend into the Sepulchre by fifty ſteps; that it is made in the form of a cell, or ſmall grotto, where is ſeen ſomething like an altar of ſtone, upon which the coffin, or the body, might have been placed; that both the cell and the altar are hewn out of the rock: but this is not authority enough to convince us, that this is the real Sepulchre of the Holy Virgin. Thevenot, Voyage, part i. lib. ii. cap. 40. Maundrel's journey from Aleppo to Jeruſalem. *Brocard de locis SS. VII. SERAIAH, ſon of Neriah, and brother of Baruch, the companion and ſecretary of Jeremiah. Baruch i. 1. Jerem. xxxii. 12. Seraiah was ſent to Nebuchadnezzar at Babylon, in the fourth year of the reign of Zedekiah, A.M. 3409, ante A.D. 595. Seraiah was head of the prophecy, שר המנוחה Princeps Prophetiæ, or chief of the embaſſy, appointed to carry the denunciations againſt Babylon. The Hebrew reads, prince of Menucha; which may be underſtood of a city or diſtrict of Benjamin; 1 Chron. ii. 52, 54. viii. 6. or prince of reſt, guard of the king's chamber, or bed; or prince of the preſents, diſtributor of the king's liberalities, his almoner, or intendant of his offerings made to the temple; or rather, in this deputation Seraiah was charged with the tributes, or preſents, ſent by Zedekiah to Nebuchadnezzar; and this acceptation of the words returns to that of the Vulgate, Princeps Prophetiæ, head of the embaſſy, or deputation.

When Seraiah was ſent to Babylon, by king Zedekiah, Jerem. li. 59. the Vulgate inſinuates, that Zedekiah went himſelf to Babylon, and that Seraiah only accompanied him; but the Hebrew will admit of another ſenſe, which is followed by ſeveral good interpreters. Seraiah went to Babylon on the behalf of Zedekiah: בלכתו את צדקיהו, as if it had been מאת צדקיהו. We know את is ſometimes put for מאת. See Gen. iv. 1. xliv. 4. xlix. 25. Exod. ix. 29, &c. Jeremiah ſent a letter by him, which was to be read to the captives there. This letter contained a prophecy of the fall of Babylon; and after it was read, Seraiah was ordered to tie it to a ſtone, and to throw it into the Euphrates, ſaying, thus ſhall Babylon ſink, and ſhall not riſe, from the evil that I will bring upon her. Baruch accompanied his brother Seraiah. Baruch l. 1.

SERAPHIM, שרפים, burning, full of fire; from שרף ſharaph, to burn: or flying ſerpent.

SERAPHIM, or Zeraphim. From the Hebrew Zaraph, which ſignifies to burn, to melt metal, to purify. Vide FRAGMENTS, No. "Of TERAPHIM."

I. ZERAPHIM, צרפים, is uſed to ſignify goldſmiths or founders. Aurifices, Conflatores.

II. SERAPHIM, or Saraphim, is the name given to thoſe fiery ſerpents, which deſtroyed the Iſraelites in the deſart, Numbers xxi. 6. Vide SARAPH, and SERPENTS.

III. SERAPHIM, Iſaiah, vi. 2. שרפים Sheraphim, denotes a kind of angels, who were around the throne of the Lord: each had ſix wings; with two of which he covered his face, with two he covered his feet, and flew with the two others. They cried to one another, and ſaid; Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of Hoſts! the whole earth is full of his glory! The word Seraphim, in this place, is wrote with ש ſhin; but the ſignification is the ſame as if it had been wrote with צ tzade. In the diſtinction of angels, Seraphim is put firſt; above Cherubim.

SERED, סרד, Suppreſſion of government; from סור ſur, to diſperſe, and רדה radah, power: otherwiſe, cutting off the deſcent; from ירד jarad.

SERED, or Sared, eldeſt ſon of Zebulun, and head of a family. Gen. xlvi. 14. Num. xxvi 26.

SERGIUS, Σέργιος. The etymology of it is unknown.

SERGIUS PAULUS, proconſul, or governor, of the Iſland of Cyprus, converted by St. Paul, A.D. 44, or 45. Acts xiii. 7. This proconſul was a man of prudence; but had a magician about him, whom he conſidered as a man favoured by God. Having heard of the arrival of Paul and Barnabas in the iſland of Cyprus, he ſent for them, and deſired to hear the word of God. Elymas did what he could to hinder him from it: but was ſtruck by Paul with blindneſs; when Sergius Paulus beheld this, he embraced the Chriſtian faith. Vide PAUL.

SERON. Σήρων, prince of grief, or ſong of ſorrow: otherwiſe, plain, or champain; from שרר ſharar, to govern, or שור ſhur, to ſing, or ישר iſhor, or מישור miſhor, plain.

SERON, general of the army of Antiochus Epi- phanes. 1 Macc. iii. 14, 23. Having heard of the defeat of Apollonius, and that Judas Maccabæus had gathered an army, he fancied that he ſaw an opportunity of acquiring great glory by fighting with Judas; but he was defeated, A. M. 3838, ante A. D. 166.

SERPENT; ſerpens; in Greek Ὄφις, Ophis; in Hebrew, נחש Nachaſh.

Interpreters have much ſpeculated concerning the nature of that ſerpent which tempted Eve. Some have thought, that then the ſerpent had feet. But there is no probability that this animal was otherwiſe than what it is now. And it cannot be doubted, but that under the name of ſerpent, (Nachaſh) we are to underſtand the devil, who made uſe of a real ſerpent to ſeduce the firſt woman, Gen. iii. 13. In the curſe that God gave the ſerpent, (Nachaſh) he told him, that the ſeed of the woman ſhould bruiſe his head, (Roſh); becauſe, the ſerpent having his heart under his throat, and near his head, the readieſt way to kill him, is to cruſh, or cut off, his head. Many have ſuppoſed that his chief ſubtilty, or wiſdom, as the goſpel calls it, conſiſts in this, that he chooſes to expoſe his whole body to danger, that he may ſave his head, Matth. x. 16. Vide Epiphan. hæreſ. 37. & Phyſiolog. Chryſoſt. in Pſal. cxiv. Iſidor. Hiſpan. Orig. lib. xii. cap. 4. Peluſiot. lib. i. Ep. 126. alii.

Jeſus, the ſon of Sirach, ſays, Eccleſ. xxv. 15. There is no head above the head of a ſerpent; but by the word head in this place, we ſhould underſtand venom: for the Hebrew word Roſh, which ſignifies the head, ſignifies alſo the venom of a ſerpent. See Deut. xxxii. 33. Scripture expreſſes itſelf, ſometimes, as ſuppoſing the gall of the ſerpent to be its venom, Job xx. 14. His meat in his bowels is turned; it is the gall of aſps within him. David, Pſal. cxl. 3. ſeems to place it in the tongue, They have ſharpened their tongues like a ſerpent; and Solomon in the teeth, Proverbs xxiii. 32. At the laſt it biteth like a ſerpent, and ſtingeth like an adder. Vide FRAGMENT, No. "Of the Serpent's Head, &c."

Another curſe that God gave the ſerpent was, it ſhould feed on duſt. Duſt ſhalt thou eat all the days of thy life, Gen. iii. 14. Iſaiah ſays alſo, lxv. 25. Duſt ſhall be the ſerpent's meat. And Micah, vii. 17. They ſhall lick the duſt like a ſerpent. It is true, however, that ſerpents eat fleſh, birds, frogs, fiſh, fruits, graſs, &c. But as they continually creep on the earth it is impoſſible but that their food muſt often be defiled with duſt, and dirt. Some may really eat earth, out of neceſſity, or earth-worms, which they cannot ſwallow without much dirt with them. Nicander, Theriac. v. 372. & Phil. cap. 59. Vide Bochart. de animal ſacr. p. 1. lib. i. cap. 4.

The craft, the wiſdom, the ſubtilty of the ſerpent, are inſiſted on in Scripture, as qualities diſtinguiſhing this animal from others. Moſes intending to prepare the mind of his reader for the relation of Eve's temptation, begins with affirming, Gen. iii. 1. Now the ſerpent (Nachaſh) was more ſubtil than any beaſt of the field which the Lord God had made. And Jeſus Chriſt himſelf recommends to his apoſtles, the wiſdom of the ſerpent, Matt. x. 16. They bring ſeveral proofs of this ſubtilty of the ſerpent: They tell us, that the Ceraſtes hides himſelf in the ſand, in order to bite the horſe's foot, that he may throw his rider. Jacob alludes to this in the bleſſing of Dan, Gen. xlix. 17. Dan ſhall be a ſerpent by the way, an adder in the path, that biteth the horſe's-heels, ſo that his rider ſhall fall backward.

Epiphanius, Phyſiolog. brings four proofs of the wiſdom of the ſerpent. 1. When he is old, he has the ſecret of growing young again, and of ſtripping off his old ſkin, or ſlough, by ſqueezing himſelf between two rocks. 2. He aſſaults a man if he ſees him naked, but flees if he finds him cloathed. (But it is probable there is a fault in this paſſage of Epiphanius, and that he intends the contrary: for it is generally affirmed, that the ſerpent is afraid of a naked man, but attacks him if cloathed. Euſtath. in Hexaemer. Hieronym. ſeu alius, Ep. ad Præſidium. Iſidor. lib. xii. cap. 4. Origen. &c.) 3. When he is aſſaulted, his chief care is to ſecure his head. This is atteſted by a great number of writers. 4. When he goes to drink at a fountain, he firſt vomits up all his poiſon, for fear of poiſoning himſelf as he is drinking. This obſervation is not generally aſſented to.

They relate other inſtances of the ſerpent's ſubtilty; E. gr. it ſtops up its ears that it may not hear the voice of the charmer, or inchanter. The Pſalmiſt notices this piece of ſubtilty, Pſ. lviii. 4. Like the deaf adder that ſtoppeth her ear, which will not hearken to the voice of the charmer, charming never ſo wiſely. It is ſaid it applies one of its ears cloſely to the ground, and ſtops up the other with the end of its tail. Vide ASP. See Bochart, de Animal ſacr. par. 2. lib. iii. cap. 6. Others ſay, the ſubtilty of the ſerpent conſiſts in its agility and ſuppleneſs; or in a ſecret it has of recovering its ſight by the juice of fennel. But, every one propoſes his own conjecture in this matter.

We

We have ſpoken of the ſerpents mentioned in Scripture, under their proper articles. There were eleven kinds of ſerpents known among the Hebrews.

1. Ephe, אפעה the viper.
2. Chephir, כפיר a ſort of aſpick, or a lion.
3. Acſhub, עכשוב the aſpick.
4. Pethen, פתן the aſpick.
5. Tzeboa, צבוע a ſpeckled ſerpent, called Hyena by the Greeks and Egyptians.
6. Tzimmaon, צמאון according to St. Jerome.
7. Tzepha, צפע or צפענו Tziphoni, a baſiliſk: (not the fabulous cockatrice, but a ſerpent like others)
8. Kippos, קפון which the LXX. St. Jerome, and the Chaldee underſtand of the urchin, or hedgehog; but Bochart thinks it to be the ſerpent called by the Greeks Acontias, the dart, becauſe it darts itſelf far and high, after its prey.
9. Shephiphon, שפיפון which Jerom has tranſlated Ceraſtes, Gen. xlix. 17. This ſerpent is of the colour of ſand, in which it hides itſelf, and where it watches for prey. It has the name of Ceraſtes from a ſort of fleſhy horns, or two bunches, like grains of barley over its eyes.
10. Shachal, שחל LXX. ασπις. Pſ. xci. 13. Thou ſhalt tread upon the lion and adder; the young lion and the dragon ſhalt thou trample under feet. The LXX. the Syriac, and the Arabic underſtand it here; Bochart ſupports their opinion, and ſhews, that the name of black, (the ſignification of ſhacal) agrees to ſeveral ſerpents, particularly to the aſpick, the dipſas, the hydra, &c. But the greater part of the more knowing interpreters, are of opinion, that the word ſhacal, in this place, ſignifies a lion, and not a ſerpent. And this ſentiment ſeems much more probable. It is certain that this Hebrew word generally ſignifies a black lion.
11. The Saraph שרף is a flying ſerpent, and is the only ſerpent we know that has wings. The word ſaraph properly ſignifies to burn, and it is thought this name was given it, either becauſe of its colour, or becauſe of that heat and thirſt it creates by its biting. Herodotus, who had ſeen theſe ſerpents, ſays, lib. ii. cap. 75, 76. they had great reſemblance to thoſe which the Greeks and Latins called Hydræ. Bochart endeavours to prove they were real hydræ. The ſame Herodotus tells us, he went on purpoſe to the city of Butus, to ſee thoſe flying ſerpents of which he had heard. He ſaw near this city great heaps of bones, and the ſpines of thoſe animals, that had been killed and devoured by the Ibis. The place, ſays he, is a narrow neck of ground that widens towards Egypt. When therefore, at the beginning of ſpring, theſe ſerpents come out of Arabia into Egypt, the Ibis attacks them, and deſtroys great numbers of them. The wings of theſe ſerpents are not feathers, like the wings of birds, but membranes rather like thoſe of bats.

He ſays, lib. iii. cap. 107, 108, 109, 110. that theſe ſerpents are not large; they are ſpeckled, or of ſeveral colours; and are in ſuch great quantities in Arabia, that the inhabitants could not ſubſiſt for them, if Providence had allowed them to multiply according to the uſual laws of nature. But the Arabians affirm, that the female puts the male to death when they engender; and that the young ones at their birth kill their mother. They love ſweet ſmells, and frequent ſuch trees as bear ſpices, and the marſhes where the aromatic reed (or caſſia) grows. The Arabians drive them from the trees by the ſmoke of ſtyrax; and when they go to gather the reed (or caſſia) they cloath themſelves with ſkins, and cover their heads, all but their eyes; then they go into theſe marſhes, from whence they drive the winged ſerpents, whoſe flight has ſomething terrible, and whoſe biting is very dangerous.

We have a little enlarged on theſe ſerpents, called ſaraph, Numbers xxi. 9. Iſaiah xiv. 29. xxx. 6. becauſe it was theſe that made ſo great a deſtruction among the Iſraelites in the Deſart. One of theſe ſaraphs Moſes erected in the wilderneſs, at the ſight of which the Iſraelites were healed. Read Bochart de Animal. ſacr. p. 2. lib. iii. cap. 13. and Cicero, lib. i. de Natura Deorum; Mela, lib. iii. cap. 9. Lucan, lib. vi. Solinus, cap. 32. Ammianus Marcellinus, cap. 22. Ælian, lib. ii. cap. 38. and the moderns, quoted by Bochart, who ſpeak of theſe flying ſerpents.

Brazen ſerpent, Numbers xxi. 9. This was a figure of the ſerpent, ſarach, which Moſes elevated on the top of a pike, promiſing the Hebrews, that all who were bit by ſerpents, and who ſhould look toward this image, ſhould be healed: as the event proved. Our Saviour, John iii. 14. informs us, that this ſerpent was a repreſentation of his crucifixion. This brazen ſerpent was preſerved in Iſrael to the time of Hezekiah, who being informed the people paid a ſuperſtitious worſhip to it, had it broke in pieces, and in contempt gave it the name of Nehuſhtan, [a play on the word Nachaſh] a brazen bawble, or trifle, 2 Kings xviii. 4. See NEHUSHTAN.

The arrow ſerpent, in Greek, Aconſias, is a flying ſerpent, known to the Turks by the name of Ocilan, Bibl. Orien. p. 684. They are often ſeen in the Archipelago, and chiefly in the iſland of Meteline, they fight with one another in the air, but do men no harm. It was this kind of ſerpent that attacked Iſrael in the wilderneſs. A learned Engliſhman pretends, (Abp. Tenniſon, Diſcourſe of Idolatry, cap. 14. p. 354.) that the activity and ſplendor of theſe animals, may ſerve for an emblem to expreſs the zeal and purity of thoſe angels, whom Scripture calls Seraphim; which name the Hebrews gave to theſe ſerpents. He thinks that the angels, when they appeared to men, aſſumed the form of ſeraphs, or flying ſerpents; that the devil ſpoke to Eve in this appearance; that this deceived her, imagining him to be a ſeraph, or angel.

In the church of St. Ambroſe at Milan they pretend to keep a brazen ſerpent, which they ſhew for that of Moſes; but every one may believe of this as he pleaſes. The ſerpent that is always repreſented with Eſculapius; and with the goddeſs Salus; and often with the Egyptian deities; is a ſymbol of healing, or health, which perhaps is derived from the brazen ſerpent of Moſes.

The worſhip of the ſerpent is obſerved through all Pagan antiquity. The devil who tempted the firſt woman under the ſhape of a ſerpent, takes a pleaſure to deify this animal, as a trophy of his victory over mankind. The Babylonians in Daniel's time worſhipped a dragon, which was demoliſhed by this prophet. Bel and Dragon. It is well known what worſhip was paid to the ſerpent at Epidaurus, and the manner in which it was pretended he was brought to Rome. The Egyptians ſometimes repreſented their gods with the bodies of ſerpents; and they paid an idolatrous worſhip to thoſe odious and dangerous animals. They called them their good genius's, and regarded them as the ſymbol of medicine, of the ſun, of Apollo. They were committed to the charge of Ceres and Proſerpine. Herodotus ſays, lib. ii. cap. 74. that in his time, near Thebes, were to be ſeen tame ſerpents conſecrated to Jupiter. They did nobody any harm, and after their death they were buried in Jupiter's temple. They were but ſmall, of the Ceraſtes kind, and had two horns.

Elian de anim. lib. xi. cap. 22. ſpeaks of a ſacred dragon, kept in Phrygia, in a wood dedicated to Diana. He alſo ſpeaks of domeſtic ſerpents, in the houſes of the Egyptians, which were fed, and looked on as houſhold-gods; and lib. xi. cap. 17. of another ſerpent worſhipped in a tower at Melitus in Egypt. He had a prieſt and officers to attend him. He was ſerved every day on a table, or altar, with meal kneaded up with honey, which the next day was found to be eaten up. At this day ſerpents are honoured in Calicut; the kings, and the Bramins, look on them as ſacred animals, created by God to afflict men, and to puniſh them for their ſins.

The Ophites took their name from Ophis, which, in Greek, ſignifies a ſerpent. Theſe ancient heretics worſhipped the ſerpent that betrayed Eve, and aſcribed all ſorts of knowledge to theſe animals, of which they thought them to be maſters and inventors: (Epiphan. de hæreſ. 37. tren. lib. i. cap. 34. Origen. lib. vi. contra Ceſ. Tertull. de præſcript. cap. 47.) In a word, they believed the ſerpent that tempted Eve was the Chriſt, which afterwards came down, and was incarnate in the perſon of Jeſus. That it was Jeſus, but not the Chriſt, that ſuffered. For which reaſon they made all proſelytes to their ſect renounce Jeſus. When their prieſts celebrated their myſteries, they made one of theſe creatures to come out of his hole, and after he had rolled himſelf on the things that were to be ſacrificed, they ſaid that Jeſus Chriſt had ſanctified them, and then gave them to the people to be worſhipped.

Serpent croſſing like a bar; ſerpens vectis, Vulgate. This ſerpent is noticed in two paſſages of Scripture: firſt, in Iſaiah xxvii. 1. In die illa viſitabit Dominus in gladio ſuo—ſuper Leviathan ſerpentem vectem, [in our tranſlation, the piercing ſerpent.] & ſuper Leviathan ſerpentem tortuoſum. The Hebrew ſays, נחש ברח, Nachaſh beriach, and Nachaſh aktalon. Job xxvi. 13. ſpeaks of the ſame ſerpent; but St. Jerome has tranſlated the Hebrew by ſerpentem tortuoſum. Some render the Hebrew נחש ברח Nachaſh beriach, by flying ſerpent, or ſhutting ſerpent, as a bar that ſhuts a door. Bochart, de animal. ſacr. p. ii. lib. v. cap. 13. thinks this ſerpens vectis is the Baratell, a fiſh known in Oppian, Elian, Galen, Suidas, under the name of Zygæna. Its head is neither round, nor high, nor flat, nor pointed, but on the two ſides ſtretching out tranſverſly like a bar: [the HAMMER-HEADED ſhark.] The Hebrews reckoned fiſhes in the tribe of reptiles, and ſerpents; alſo the crocodile, or leviathan.

Serpent is alſo taken for the devil. The inviſible ſerpent which tempted Eve by the organs of the ſenſible ſerpent, was the devil, as Scripture and commentators allow. Some alſo explain of the devil what Job ſays of the crooked ſerpent, and what Iſaiah ſays of the ſerpent like a bar: as in the foregoing article. St. John, Rev. xii. 9, 14. obſerves plainly, that the old ſerpent is, the devil and ſatan; which deceiveth the whole world. The Jews alſo call the devil, the old ſerpent. Vide FRAGMENT, Nos. , and PLATES.

SERUG, or Sarug, ſon of Reu, and father of Nahor. Gen. xi. 20, 21, 22. 1 Chron. i. 26.

It is pretended that Serug was the firſt after the Deluge, deluge, who began to worſhip creatures. Clem. Alex. Euſeb. Epiphan. Theodor. In his time men formed a multitude of idols, by which the devil performed many prodigies. Serug thought he might adore the images of men, who had diſtinguiſhed themſelves by their virtues, and by their good deeds performed for mankind. This introduced the worſhip of the dead, and by conſequence, idolatry and polytheiſm.

I. SERVANT. This word generally ſignifies a ſlave: becauſe formerly among the Hebrews, and the neighbouring nations, the greater part of ſervants were ſlaves; they belonged abſolutely to their maſters, who had a right to diſpoſe of their perſons, their bodies, goods, and even of their lives, in ſome caſes.

II. SERVANT. The Hebrews had two ſorts of ſervants, or ſlaves. Levit. xxv. 44, 45, &c. Some were ſtrangers, bought, or taken in war, and their maſters kept them, exchanged them, or ſold them; as their goods. The others, were Hebrew ſlaves, who being poor, ſold themſelves, or were ſold to pay their debts; or were delivered for ſlaves by their parents, in caſes of neceſſity. This ſort of Hebrew ſlaves continued in ſlavery only to the year of Jubilee; when they might return to liberty, and their maſters could not detain them againſt their wills. If they deſired to continue with their maſters, they were brought before the Judges; here they made a declaration, that for this time they diſclaimed the privilege of the law, and had their ears bored with an awl againſt the door-poſts of their maſter's houſe; after which they had no longer any power of recovering their liberty, till the next year of Jubilee after nine and forty years. Exod. xxi. 2, 5, 6, 7, &c.

III. SERVANT, a man who dedicates himſelf to the ſervice of another, by his own choice, will, and inclination. Thus, Joſhua was the ſervant of Moſes, Eliſha of Elijah, Gehazi of Eliſha, St. Peter, St. Andrew, St. Philip, &c. were ſervants of Jeſus Chriſt.

IV. SERVANT, the ſubjects [rather the officers] of a prince. The ſervants of Pharaoh, the ſervants of Saul, of David, i. e. their ſubjects in general; and their domeſtics in particular. In like manner, the Philiſtines, the Syrians, and other nations, were ſervants of David; i. e. they obeyed him, they paid him tribute.

V. SERVANTS of God, the ſervants of the Lord, the prieſts, the prophets, thoſe who make profeſſion of a particular piety The name Man of God, and ſervant of God, is often given to Moſes by way of eminence; and St. Paul often takes the ſame character. He gives excellent rules of morality to Chriſtian ſlaves. 1 Cor. vii. 21, 22, &c. Epheſ. vi. 5, 6, 7. Coloſ. iii. 22. 2 Tim. ii. 9.

VI. SERVANTS, or ſlaves, as oppoſed to thoſe who are free, and to the Children of the Promiſes, repreſent the Jews, in contradiſtinction from the Chriſtians. The Jews were the ſlaves, repreſented by Hagar and Iſhmael; Chriſtians are the children of liberty, repreſented by Sarah and by Iſaac. Vide the epiſtle to the Galatians.

SESOSTRIS, king of Egypt. We ſhould not have mentioned this prince, but that ſeveral have pretended he is the Shiſhak, or Seſac, who invaded Rehoboam, ſon of Solomon king of Judah. Herodotus ſays, lib. 2, that from Mœris to Seſoſtris, there was no king whoſe actions deſerved notice. When this prince had reduced the people beyond the Gulph of Arabia, or the Red-ſea he turned his arms againſt the nations on the continent, and ſubjected them. Thoſe whom he found warlike, and who valiantly fought for their liberties, he diſtinguiſhed by honourable inſcriptions, ſet up in their countries, which mentioned their valour and brave reſiſtance; thoſe, on the contrary, who did not gallantly defend themſelves, he marked with infamy, by erecting monuments in their country, which ſhewed they had behaved like women. And this was expreſſed on the monuments after a manner equally ſhameful and ignominious; not only by letters, but alſo by figures engraven thereon: [i. e. The ſexual parts; which among the Egyptians was expreſſed by an upright triangle: Δ] Herodotus aſſures us, that in Paleſtine he had ſeen theſe inſcriptions and monuments of Seſoſtris, with diſgraceful figures.

Herodotus thinks, that from thence he paſſed into the country of the Colchians, of which he has no certain proof, except that the Colchians, as well as the Egyptians, received circumciſion; that their language is the ſame, and that they make linen after the ſame manner.

This is the ſubſtance of what Herodotus informs us concerning Seſoſtris, wherein he mentions but one word about the conqueſts of this prince in Paleſtine; yet this is all the foundation that they have, who make Shiſhak to be Seſoſtris.

SESTERTIUS, a Roman money. Its name is not in Scripture. Its value was about three half pence; ten Seſtertii made one ſhilling and five pence; one hundred Seſtertii made fourteen ſhillings and three-pence; and a thouſand Seſtertii made ſeven pounds, two ſhillings and ſixpence.

The Roman Seſtertius, according to Dr. Arbuthnot, was in value ſomething more than is determined by by our author. He makes it one penny three farthings, and three quarters of a farthing, of our money.

A great Seſtertius, unum Seſtertium, was a thouſand ſmall Seſtertii.

SETH, שת, put, or who puts; from שות ſhuth, to put.

SETH, ſon of Adam and Eve, born A. M. 130. Gen. v. 3, 6, 10, 11. Seth at the age of one hundred and five years begat Enos, A. M. 235. He lived after this eight hundred and ſeven years; in all nine hundred and twelve years: and died A. M. 1042, ante A. D. 2962. Seth was the chief of the race of the ſaints, and of the Children of God, as Scripture calls them, Gen. vi. 2, who preſerved the true religion and piety, when the deſcendants of Cain had abandoned themſelves to wickedneſs.

An apocryphal book, called the Leſſer Geneſis, pretends, that when Seth was forty years of age, he was rapt up into Heaven by the angels, and was there told of the crime that the watchers, or angels ſhould commit; the deluge that ſhould drown the world; and the coming of our Saviour into the world: of which events he informed his parents Adam and Eve. That the poſterity of Seth continued for a thouſand years after the creation of the world, in the country juſt above Eden, where they lived in profound peace and quiet; but the Devil being envious of their happineſs and innocence, ſeduced them by the charms and beauty of the daughters of men: or, as Moſes ſays, The ſons of God ſaw the daughters of men, that they were fair; and they took them wives of all which they choſe. Laſtly, the ſame book tells us, that Seth at the age of one hundred and ninety one years, took to wife his own ſiſter called Azura. Epiphanius calls her Orea; and Irenæus, or rather the Gnoſticks in Irenæus, call her Norea. Irenæ. lib. 1. cap. 34, ex Gnoſt. Syncell. Chronic. p. 10, ex parva Geneſi.

The heretics called Sethians, believed, that Seth was the Chriſt, and that Jeſus Chriſt was this patriarch, who after having been tranſported out of the world, at laſt returned into it again in a miraculous manner, and was named Jeſus. They did not acknowledge his birth of the virgin Mary. They ſaid he had the name of God given him before the deluge; for it was of his ſons that it was ſaid, The ſons of God ſaw the daughters of men. Theodoret. qu. 47 in Geneſ. Suidas in Seth. And this was either becauſe of his eminent piety, or becauſe he invented the uſe of letters and writing, and the names of the ſtars and planets. An ancient chronicle ſays, Vide Rador. animadvers. in Chronic. Alex. p. 18. that this patriarch being ſnatched up into Heaven, as we have ſaid before, his face ever after appeared luminous, like Moſes's face after he had converſed with the Lord on Mount Sinai.

Several impertinent books have been aſcribed to Seth. It is known what Joſephus ſays of the two columns erected before the deluge by the children of Seth: one was of brick, to withſtand the fire; and the other was of ſtone, to withſtand the water: upon which they inſcribed their diſcoveries in aſtronomy. Vide SEIRATH. Lambecius cites a manuſcript in the Emperor's library, called, The Aſtronomy delivered by an angel to the patriarch Seth. The author of the imperfect work on St Matthew, ſpeaks of a book that bore the name of Seth, which mentioned the ſtar that appeared to the Magi, and the preſents they made to our Saviour. Epiphanius ſays, Hæreſ. 28. Gnoſtic. cap. 8, & hæreſ. 39. cap. 5, that the Gnoſtics and Sethians had ſeveral books that bore the name of Seth. The Mahometans aſſure us, that God ſent Seth not leſs than fifty volumes, which were brought him from Heaven. The Arabians, the Ethiopians, and the Samaritans pretend alſo to have the books of this antient patriarch. See Fabricius, Apocrypha V. T. Art. SETH.

The Muſſulmen hold by a fabulous tradition, that thoſe who are called in ſcripture, the children of God, were of a peculiar ſpecies, between men and angels. They made a continual war with the Dives or giants, which were the children of Cain. The patriarch Seth had made a law, which was contained in a book called, the book of Seth, wherein were the pretended revelations he had received to confirm his miſſion; and his deſcendants uſually ſwore, by the true law of the prophet Seth. The ſame Muſſulmen believe, that when this patriarch had viſited the ſepulchre of Adam, which was in the midſt of the earth, in the place where afterwards was built Jeruſalem, and the temple; he came into Arabia Fœlix, and there built the city Medinath al-Scheith, the city of Seth; and Medinath al-Jemen, the capital city of Jemen; which ſtill bear thoſe names.

SETHON, king of Egypt, reigned at the time Sennacherib invaded Hezekiah king of Judah. Herodotus lib. 2, ſays, Sethon ſucceeded King Amaſis, who was blind. Sethon committed a great fault in government, by neglecting warlike men, as uſeleſs, diſgracing them on all occaſions, and taking from them thoſe eſtates that had been given them by the kings his predeceſſors. This was the reaſon that in the war, which was declared againſt him by Sennacherib king king of Aſſyria and Arabia, they refuſed to obey him. In this perplexity Sethon addreſſed himſelf to his God, and with tears in his eyes laid before him the danger he was in. After prayer he fell aſleep, and while he ſlept his God commanded him in a dream, to march out boldly to meet his enemy, and he would ſupply him with auxiliary troops. He therefore took with him what ſoldiers he had, and went to encamp at Peluſium, which is, as it were, the key of Egypt. His little army was compoſed only of citizens and merchants, men without experience in affairs of war; for thoſe who had made war their profeſſion would not follow him. The ſame night that he arrived at Peluſium, a multitude of field rats invaded the camp of the enemy, gnawed their bows and quivers, and the thongs of their bucklers; ſo that the day following, finding themſelves unable for war, they betook themſelves to flight, after loſing many of their men. To preſerve the memory of this event, they repreſented Sethon in the temple of Vulcan, in a ſtatue of ſtone, holding a rat in his hand, with this inſcription; Thoſe that look upon me, let them remember to be pious. This figure was to be ſeen in Herodotus's time.

Thus the Egyptians prieſts related the defeat of Sennacherib. Vide SENNACHERIB.

SETHUR, סתור, That hides, that deſtroys; from סתר ſathar, to hide, to deſtroy. Numb. xiii. 13.

SEVEN. This number is conſecrated, as it were, in the holy books, and in the religion of the Jews, by a great number of events, and myſterious circumſtances. God created the world in ſeven days, and conſecrated the ſeventh day to repoſe. This reſt of the ſeventh day, according to St. Paul, Heb. iv. 4, intimates eternal reſt. Not only the ſeventh day was honoured among the Jews, by the repoſe of the ſabbath, but every ſeventh year was alſo conſecrated to the reſt of the earth, as a ſabbatical year; alſo the ſeven times ſeventh year, or after forty-nine years, as the year of Jubilee. In the prophetic ſtile, a week, i. e. ſeven days, often ſignifies ſeven years. Dan. ix. 24, 25, 26. Jacob ſerved his father-in-law Laban ſeven years for each of his daughters. Pharaoh's myſterious dream repreſented to his imagination ſeven fat oxen, and ſeven lean ones; ſeven full ears of corn, and ſeven empty and ſhrivelled. Theſe denoted ſeven years of plenty, and ſeven of ſcarcity. The number of ſeven days is obſerved in the octaves of the great ſolemnities—of the Paſſover; of the feaſt of Tabernacles; the dedication of the Tabernacle and the Temple; obſerve alſo, the ſeven branches of the golden candleſtick; the number of ſeven ſacrifices, appointed on ſeveral occaſions; Numbers xxviii. 11. xxix. 17, 21, &c. ſeven trumpets, ſeven prieſts that ſounded them; ſeven days to ſurround the walls of Jericho, Joſh. vi. 4, 6, 8. In the Revelations, —the ſeven churches, ſeven candleſticks, ſeven ſpirits, ſeven ſtars, ſeven lamps, ſeven ſeals, ſeven angels, ſeven phials, ſeven plagues, &c. In a word, we may ſay we find the number ſeven throughout Scripture.

The number ſeven is ſometimes put for many, a great number. Iſaiah ſays, iv. 1. ſeven women ſhall lay hold on one man, to aſk him to marry them. Hannah the mother of Samuel ſays, ſhe who was barren had ſeven children, 1 Sam. ii. 5. (Peperit plurimos, Vulgate.) Jeremiah xv. 9, uſes the ſame expreſſion. God threatens his people, to ſmite them ſeven times for their tranſgreſſions, Lev. xxvi. 24, i. e. ſeveral times.—The Pſalmiſt ſpeaking of very pure ſilver, ſays it is purified ſeven times Pſalm xii. 6. And Pſalm lxxix. 12, Render unto our neighbours ſevenfold into their boſom. Puniſh them ſeverely. The ſlayer of Cain was to be puniſhed ſeven times; but the ſlayer of Lamech ſeventy times ſeven times, Gen. iv. 15, 24. The wiſe man ſays, Ecclus. vii. 3, Sow not upon the furrows of unrighteouſneſs, and thou ſhalt not reap them ſevenfold; i. e. many times. The ſlothful man thinks himſelf wiſer than ſeven men, that ſet forth Proverbs: many wiſe men. Prov. xxvi. 16, St. Peter aſks our Saviour, Matt. xvii. 21, 22, How many times ſhall I forgive my neighbour? ſeven times? Chriſt anſwers him, not only ſeven times, but ſeventy times ſeven times. Amos often repeats, I will not pardon the ſeven—i. e. numerous—ſins of Damaſcus, of Edom, of Gaza, of Tyre, of Ammon, &c. but I will puniſh them with rigour. Amos i. 3, 6, 9. ii. 13.

See WEEK, SABBATH, SABBATICAL YEAR, JUBILEE, &c.

The ſeventy weeks of Daniel. Vide WEEK. Dr. Prideaux, Connexion tom. 1, p. 13, 14, &c, begins them from the ſeventh year of king Artaxerxes Longimanus; the year of his decree in favour of Eſdras, for his returning to Jeruſalem.

SEVENTY Interpreters. See SEPTUAGINT.

SEVENTY Diſciples. This name is given to thoſe ſeventy two diſciples who were choſen by Jeſus Chriſt, and ſent to preach before him. Luke x. 1, 17. See DISCIPLE.

SEXTARIUS, a Roman meaſure for liquids. It contained two Heminæ, or ten Roman ounces, according to Fannius.

Heminas recipit geminas Sextarius unus.

Budeus, lib. v. de aſſe, thinks the Sextarius was nearly the same as the pint of Paris. St. Jerome on Ezekiel says, that a man may be supported, by only drinking two Sextarii a day.

SHAALABBIM, שעלבים, That beholds the heart; from שעה ſhahah, to ſee, and לבב lebab, the heart: otherwiſe, fiſt, or hand, or fox of the ſea; from שעל ſhoal, the hand, or שועל ſhual, a fox, the preposition ב beth, in, and ים jam, the ſea. Jud. i. 35.

SHAALABIN, שעלבין, The underſtanding of the fox; from שועל ſhual, a fox, and בן bun, underſtanding. Joſh. xix. 42.

SHAALABBIN, Shaalabin, Salebim, or Selebin. A city of Dan, Joſh. xix. 42. adjoining to Ajalon and Heres, Judg. i. 35, and near the cities of Makas, and Bethſhemeſh: which circumſtances pretty nearly ſhew its ſituation. The preſent Hebrew text reads Shaalabim. Euſebius in locis Hebr. calls it Salaba, and places it in Samaria. St. Jerom calls it Salebi, and joins it to Ajalon and to Emmaus. The Septuagint call it Salamin, or Talamin. Hieron. Con. in Ezekiel xlviii. LXX. in Græc.

SHAALBON, שעלבני, σαλαβὼνίτης, The underſtanding, the ſon, the building of the fox, of the fiſt, or of the path; from בן bun, the underſtanding, בן ben, a ſon, and בנה banah, a building, and שעל ſhual, the hand, the fiſt, or שועל ſhual, a fox, or from בשעל.

SHAALBON, or Salabon, the name of a place in Judea. We read of Eliahba of Shalbon, one of the heroes of David's army, 2 Sam. xxiii. 32, and 1 Chron. xi. 33. Shaalbon is doubtleſs the ſame as Selbon beyond Jordan. This muſt have been a conſiderable place, ſince Joſephus notices it as giving name to the diſtrict Selbenite, which limits Perea eaſt, with Philadelphia and Gerar. Joſeph. de Bello, lib. 3, cap. 2.

SHAAPH, שעף, That thinks; from שוף ſhahaph: otherwiſe, that flies away; from עוף huph, to fly, a bird. Son of Jahdai, 1 Chron. ii. 47.

SHAARAIM, שערים, σαρεὶμ. Gates, valuations, hairs, barley, tempeſts, goats, hairy, demons; from שער ſhahar, or שעיר ſhahir, or שערה ſhorah, according to different readings.

SHAARAIM, or Saarim, a city of Simeon, 1 Chron. iv. 31, apparently the Sharaim, or Saraim, of Judah, Joſh. xv. 36. Several cities of Judah were afterwards transferred to Simeon.

SHADDAI, Sadai, or Saddai, שדי Shadai. אל שדי אני Ego Dominus omnipotens. This is one of the Hebrew names of God, which the LXX. and Jerom generally tranſlate Almighty. It is moſt commonly put alone, as Numbers xxiv, 4. 16. Who ſaw the viſion of the Almighty, (Shadai.) Ruth i. 21. The Almighty (Shadai) hath afflicted me. Job vi. 4. The arrows of the Almighty (Shadai) are within me. Job more frequently uſes this word, than any other of the ſacred writers. It is not found in the books of Solomon. Sometimes it is joined with El, which is another name of God, El-Shadai, God-Almighty. Gen. xvii. 1.

It ſhould ſeem that Sadai or Shadai is from the Hebrew Sadad, or Shadad, which ſignifies to ravage, to ruin, to pillage; q. God the deſtroyer, the God of devaſtation: but according to another derivation, it may be rendered the God of the fields, or the God of nipples: [rather, the God of bounty: the SHEDDING God.]

SHAASHGAZ, שעשגז, He that preſſes the fleece; from עשה haſhah, to ſqueeze, and גז gazaz, a fleece: otherwiſe, he that performs the ſhearing of the ſheep; from עשה haſhah, to perform, to make, and גזי gazazi, the ſheep-ſhearing. This word is Perſian or Mediſh, its true etymology cannot be had from the Hebrew.

SHABBETHAI, שבתי, σαββαθαῖος, My Sabbath, my reſt; from שבת ſhabath, repoſe, and the pronoun י i, my. Nehem. xi. 16.

SHACHIA, שכיה, protection, incloſure, branch of the Lord; from שוך ſhuc: otherwiſe, reſt of the Lord; from שכך ſhacac, to reſt, and יה jah, the Lord. Son of Shaharaim. 1 Chron. viii. 13.

SHADRACH, שדרך, tender nipple, or field ſoft and tender; from שד ſhod, nipple, or שדה ſhadah, field, and רכך racac, tender. This is a Babylonian word, whoſe etymology is hardly to be found in the Hebrew tongue.

SHADRACH, or Sidrach: The Chaldean name given to Ananias, a companion of Daniel, at the court of King Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. i. 7. See ANANIAS.

SHAGE, שגא, σαγαὶ, that is ignorant, or in error; from שגג ſhagag: otherwiſe, that increaſes and multiplies; from שגא ſhaga.

SHAGE, or Sage, father of Jonathan, who was a hero of David's army, 1 Chron. xi. 34, Jonathan the ſon of Shage, the Hararite. But 2 Sam. xxiii. 33, reads Jonathan, Shammah, the Hararite.

SHAHARAIM, שחרים, blacks, troubles, or that riſe early; from שחר ſhachar.

SHAHARAIM, or Saharaim, ſon of Uzzah, and father of Jobab, Zibia, Meſha, &c. of Benjamin. 1 Chron. viii. 8.

SHAHAZIMAH, שחצימה, humiliations of the faſt; from שחח ſhachach, to be humble: otherwiſe, pit of the faſt; from שחוח ſhechuth: or meditation of the faſt; from שוח ſhuach, and צום tſum, faſt: otherwiſe, pride of the ſea; from שחץ ſhachats, pride, and ים jam, the ſea. A city Joſh. xix. 22.

SHALIM,

SHALIM, or Salim. See SALEM, and 1 Sam. ix. 4, where Shalem may ſtand for Jeruſalem.

SHALISHA, שלישה, three, or the third; from שלש ſhaloſh: otherwiſe, prince, captain; from שליש.

SHALISHA, or Saliſſa, or Baal-ſaliſa. Shaliſha is mentioned 1 Sam. ix. 4; and Baal-ſaliſha, 2 Kings iv. 42. Shaliſha was fifteen miles from Dioſpolis, in the canton Thamnitica, north of Jeruſalem. See Euſebius, and St. Jerom, in Beth-ſchaliſa.

SHALLUM, שלם, perfect, pacific; from שלם ſhalam, peace.

II. SHALLUM, ſon of Jabeſh, or perhaps a native of Jabeſh. He treacherouſly killed Zechariah, king of Iſrael, and uſurped his kingdom, but held it only one month. Menahem the ſon of Gadi killed him in Samaria. The Scripture ſays, that Shallum was the executioner of the threatnings of the Lord, againſt the houſe of Jehu. 2 Kings xv. 10, 11, 12. A. M. 8232, ante A. D. 772.

V. SHALLUM, ſon of Shaul, and father of Mibſam, of Simeon, 1 Chron. iv. 25.

VI. SHALLUM, fourth ſon of Joſiah, king of Judah, 1 Chron, iii. 15. Jer. xxii. 11. The ſame as Jehoahaz; made king after the death of Joſiah; the king of Egypt carried him priſoner into Egypt, 2 Kings xxiii. 30, 31, 34. See JEHOAHAZ.

VII. SHALLUM, ſon of the high prieſt Zadok, and father of Hilkiah the high prieſt, 1 Chron. vi. 12, 13. Shellum is called Meſhellum, 1 Chron. ix. 11. He lived in the time of Hezekiah, or of Ahaz; and was the immediate father of Azariah, and only uncle to Hilkiah. He ſeems to be the Salom of Baruch, i. 7.

VIII. SHALLUM, ſon of Korah, 1 Chron. ix. 19, 31. He was ſpared in the deſart, when the earth opened and ſwallowed up his father. Numb. xxxi. 11. The deſcendants of Shallum had an office in the Temple; which was to take care of the cakes that were fried there.

IX. SHALLUM, ſon of Colhoſeh, chief of the town of Mizpah; he rebuilt, at his own charge, the fountain-gate at Jeruſalem, after the return from Babylon. Nehem. iii. 15.

SHALMAI, שלמי, My garment; from שלמה ſhalmah, a garment, and the pronoun י i, my.

SHALMAN, שלמן, peaceable, perfect, or that rewards; from שלם ſhalam. See Salma, or Salmon.

SHALMANESER, שלמנאסר, peace tied or chained, or perfection and retribution, or peace taken away, or that withdraws; from שלם ſhalam, peace, perfection, and retribution, and אסר aſar, to tie, or יסר jazar.

SHALMANESER, or Salmanaſar, king of Aſſyria, ſucceeded Tiglath-pileſer, and had Sennacherib for his ſucceſſor. He began to reign A. M. 3276, reigned fourteen years, and died A. M. 3290, 2 Kings xvii. 3. It is very probable he is called Enemeſſar in the Greek of Tobit, i. 2. and Shalman in Hoſea x. 14. The Scripture tells us of Shalmaneſer, that he came into Paleſtine, ſubdued Samaria, and obliged Hoſhea the ſon of Elah, to pay him tribute; but in the third year, being weary of paying tribute, Hoſhea took ſecret meaſures with So, king of Egypt, to remove this ſubjection. Shalmaneſer brought an army againſt him, ravaged Samaria, beſieged Hoſhea in his capital city; and notwithſtanding his long reſiſtance, (for he held out three years, 2 Kings xvii. 1, 5, 6, 7, &c. and xviii. 9, 10) he took the city, put Hoſhea into bonds, carried away the people beyond the Euphrates; and thus he ruined the city and kingdom of Samaria, which had ſubſiſted two hundred and fifty-four years, from A.M. 3030, to 3283, ante A D. 721. Tobit was among the captives carried away by Shalmaneſer, but afterwards got into the good graces of this prince, who gave him liberty to do what he pleaſed, and to live where he would. According to the Greek, he even made him his purveyor, which was an officer to furniſh proviſions to the king's houſhold.

Profane authors tell us, that this prince made war alſo with the Tyrians, Menander apud Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 9. cap. 14, & cont. Apion, lib. 1. Eleleus, king of Tyre, ſeeing the Philiſtines were much weakened by their war with Hezekiah, king of Judah, took this opportunity of recovering to his obedience, the city of Gath, which had revolted from him. The Gittites fearing the power of the king of Tyre, had recourſe to Shalmaneſer, who marched with all his forces againſt the Tyrians. At his approach, the city of Sidon, Acce, afterwards Ptolemais, (now Acre,) and the other maritime cities of Phenicia ſubmitted to Shalmaneſer.

But the Tyrians, with only twelve ſhips, having in a ſea-fight defeated the united fleet of the Aſſyrians and Phenicians, acquired by this victory ſo great a reputation at ſea, and became ſo formidable, that Shalmaneſer durſt no more engage them by ſea. He withdrew therefore into his own dominions, but left a great part of his army to beſiege Tyre. The beſiegers made but a ſlow progreſs, by reaſon of the brave reſiſtance of the beſieged, the troops of Shalmaneſer ſtopt up the aqueducts, and cut the pipes that brought the water into the city, which reduced the Tyrians to the laſt extremity, but the Tyrians dug wells in their city, and, by this means held out five years longer. In the mean time, Shalmaneſer dying, they were delivered from the ſiege. Uſher places this ſiege A.M. 3287, ante A.D. 717.

SHAMA, שמע, שמא, that hears, or obeys; from מע, to hear. 1 Chron. ii. 43.

SHAMA, or Samma, ſon of Hothan the Aroerite, 1 Chron. xi. 44. Called Shammah the Harodite 2 Sam. xxiii. 25. and Shammoth the Harorite, 1 Chron. xi. 27.

SHAMARIAH, שמריה, See SHAMER, and יה jah, the Lord. Son of Rehoboam. 2 Chron. xi. 19.

SHAME, Ignominia. To uncover the ſhame, ignominy, or nakedneſs of a perſon, are ſynonymous terms. Lev. xviii. 15, 17, &c. Iſaiah xx. 4. threatens the Egyptians, that they ſhould be led away captive, ſtark naked, without any thing to cover their ſhame, or nakedneſs. The golden calf worſhipped by the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, is called by Moſes, Exod. xxxii. 25. a filthy ſhame, an idol of droſs and filth. St. Paul, Rom. i. 26. calls ſhameful, or vile affections, thoſe ignominious and brutiſh paſſions, which were indulged by the carnal pagans. Prov. iii. 35. Shame ſhall be the promotion of fools. The promotion of fools ſhall be their own ſhame, and the diſgrace of thoſe who promote them. [Perhaps, as wiſe men are promoted to greater honour, fools ſhall be promoted to greater ſhame.]. Prov. ix. 7. He that reproveth a ſcorner, getteth to himſelf ſhame: he loſeth his labour, and ſhall only get diſcredit by it. Pſalm lxxxiii. 16. Fill their faces with ſhame, reprove them, O Lord, and then let them fall into diſgrace. Vide FRAGMENT No. 305. When the Syrians took king Joaſh captive, they executed ſhameful judgments againſt him; they treated him ſhamefully, or made him ſuffer corrections that were ſhameful, and not befitting the dignity of a king. 2 Chron. xxiv. 24.

SHAMGAR, or Samgar, ſon of Anath, the third judge of Iſrael, after Ehud, and before Barak. Judg. iii. 31. The ſcripture only ſays that he defended Iſrael, and killed ſix hundred Philiſtines with an ox goad. From the peace obtained by Ehud A.M. 2679, to whom Shamgar ſucceeded, till the ſervitude under the Canaanites, A.M. 2699, are twenty years.

SHAMGAR-NEBO, סמגר־נבו perfume, or odour of the ſtranger; from סם ſam, oil, or perfume, and גר ger, a ſtranger: otherwiſe, perfume of him that ruminates, or that fights; from גרר garar, to ruminate, or from גרה garah, to fight. See NEBO.

SHAMGAR-NEBO, or Semegar-nabu, a great man or general officer of Nebuchadnezzar's army. Jer. xxxix. 3.

I. SHAMIR, or Samir, ſon of Micah, a Levite, 1 Chron. xxiv. 24.

III. SHAMIR, a city of Ephraim, in the mountains belonging to this tribe, where dwelt Tola the judge of Iſrael, Judg. x. 1.

IV. SHAMIR: שמיר ſhamir. Spinæ, adamas, lapis ſmiris. This word is found in ſeveral places of the Hebrew text of the Old Teſtament, and ſignifies ſometimes thorns, briars, Iſai. v. 6. vii. 23, 24, 25. ix. 18. x. 17. xxvii. 4. xxxii. 13. or the place where they grow; and ſometimes a ſtone, Jerem. xvii. 1. Ezek. iii. 9. Zech. vii. 12. or an inſtrument of extraordinary hardneſs, proper to poliſh precious-ſtones; from whence it is ſometimes tranſlated by diamond. The Rabbins have much amuſed themſelves about the marvellous properties of the Shamir.

Bochart having examined what is ſaid of the Shamir, has proved that it was neither a worm, nor a rock, nor a diamond, but a ſtone, ſo hard, that lapidaries commonly uſed it to poliſh their precious-ſtones. Bochart. de animal, ſacr. p. 2, lib. 6. cap. 1. This author ſhews, againſt the opinion of Cardan, that the ancients knew it, and and applied it to this uſe. Heſychius ſays, it was a kind of ſand; but this is, becauſe it is reduced to powder, which powder is uſed in poliſhing gems. [q? emery, frit, or &c.]

SHAMLAI, שמלי, my garment.

SHAMMAH, שמה, σαμαὰ, loſs, deſolation, aſtoniſhment; from שמם ſhamam, otherwiſe, name, or named, or put; from שם ſham, or ſhem, here, there, or named, according to different readings.

SHAMMAI, שמי, my loſs, or my deſolation, or my aſtoniſhment: from שמם ſhamam, and the pronoun י i, my: otherwiſe, the heavens; from שמים ſhamaim.

SHAMMAI, Sammai, or Sameas, ſon of Rekem, and father of Maon, 1 Chron. ii. 44. Rekem is Petra, the capital of Arabia Petrea. Maon is a city of the ſame diſtrict. Maon is near Beth-ſhur, another city on the ſouth of Judah. Theſe genealogies of cities, ſhew the people that firſt inhabited them.

SHAMMOTH, שמות, names, deſolations, &c. from שמם ſhamam.

SHAMMUA, שמוע, σαμυ, he that is heard, or obeyed; from שמע ſhamah.

I. SHAMMUA, Sammua, Simmaa, or Samua, ſon of Zaccur, of Reuben, Numb. xiii. 4. One deputed to view the land of promiſe.

II. SHAMMUA, or Shimea, ſon of David and Bathſheba, 1 Chron. iii. 5. Vide FRAGMENT No. 333. page 70.

SHAMSHERAI, שמשרי, the name of him that ſings, or the name of my prince; from שם ſhem, to name, and שור ſhur, to ſing, otherwiſe, here is he that governs, or ſings; from שם ſham, here or there, and שור ſhur, to ſing, or שרר ſharar, to rule.

SHAPHAM, שפם, σαφὰν, Vulgate, Saphan, beard, whiſkers; from שבם ſhapham: otherwiſe, their beard, their lip, their brink: from שפה ſhaphah: or their breaking, their retreat; from שוף ſhuph, to break, to hide, and the pronoun מ am, theirs.

I. SHAPHAM, Shaphan, or Saphan, ſon of Azaliah, ſecretary of the temple in the time of king Joſiah. 2 Kings xxii. 12. 2 Chron. xxxiv. 20. Jer. xxix. 3. and xxxvi. 10. Ezek. viii. 11. Shaphan informed that prince of the diſcovery of the book of the law of the Lord in the temple. We find ſeveral ſons of Shaphan, viz. Ahikim, Elaſa, Gamariah, and Jezoniah; but we cannot ſay, they are all ſons of the ſame Shaphan.

SHAPHAN, שפן, rabbit, or wild rat; from שפן ſhaphan: otherwiſe, their brink, their lip, their breaking; from שפה ſhaphah, or שוף ſhuph, and the pronoun ן an, theirs.

I. SHAPHAN, an animal often mentioned in ſcripture, ſometimes tranſlated by Chærogrillus, at other times by Lepuſculus, or by Herinacium. Moſes declares it to be unclean, though a ruminating animal, becauſe it does not divide the hoof. Lev. xi. 5. Vulgat. Prov. xxx. 26. Pſal. civ. 18. Deut. xiv. 7. Prov. xxx. 26. [In all the texts here quoted, our interpreters render Shaphan by Coney.] Solomon, in his Proverbs, ſays, that the Shaphan keeps among rocks; and he inſinuates, that it is gregarious. Bochart thinks it to be a kind of great rat common in Arabia, and edible, called Aliarbuho. It is not ſo large as a ſquirrel; is of a greyiſh colour, with the fore-feet and tail of a rat: the end of its tail, the eyes, and the head, are like thoſe of a rabbit: its hind-legs are longer than thoſe before: it chews the cud, loves to be among the rocks, and they herd together in flocks. Theſe qualities agree with the Shaphan. [Mr. BRUCE thinks it is his Aſhkoko, which is rather a rabbit than a rat.]

II. SHAPHAN, ſon of Gad, who dwelt in Baſan, 1 Chron. v. 12.

SHAPHAT, שפט, that judges.

I. SHAPHAT, or Saphat, ſon of Hori, of Simeon, one deputed to view the land of Canaan, Numb. xiii. 5.

II. SHAPHAT, of Abelmeholah: father to the prophet Eliſha, 1 Kings xix. 16, 19. 2 Kings iii. 11.

III. SHAPHAT ſon of Shemaiah, 1 Chron. iii. 22. of the royal family of David, by Jechoniah.

SHAPHER, שפר, ἀρσαΦὰρ, beauty, trumpet; from שפר ſhaphar, or ſhophar, according to different readings.

SHARAI, שרי, σαροὰ, my lord, my prince; from שרר ſharar, to govern, or שור ſhur, a ſong, and the pronoun י i, my.

SHARAI, or Sarai: one who, after the captivity, diſmiſſed his ſtrange wife, Ezra x. 40.

SHARAIM, שערים, σεαρειμ, gates, eſtimations, &c. See Shaarim.

SHARAIM, or Saraim, a city of Judah. Joſh. xv. 36. 1 Sam. xvii. 52. 1 Chron. ii. 54. Dimidium requietionis Sarai. Vide Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 8 cap. iii. See ZORA.

ſarar, according to different readings: otherwiſe, thought, conſideration, ſong; from שור ſhur.

SHARESER, שראצר, σαραζὰρ, prince of the treaſure; from שר ſhar, a prince, and אוצר atſar, treaſure.

I. SHARESER, or Saraſar, ſecond ſon of king Sennacherib; he aſſaſſinated his father while worſhipping his god Niſroch. 2 Kings xix. 37. Tob. i. 21.

II. SHARESER, or Sereſer, or Sar-ezer, a lieutenant, or officer, of Nebuchadnezzar, Jer. xxxix. 3. His name ſignifies the Prince of the Treaſure; probably he had the care of the king's treaſures.

SHAREZER, שרצר, overſeer of the treaſury, or of the ſtore-houſe; from שרר ſharar, that rules or governs, and from אצר atſar, treaſury, or ſtore-houſe: or the treaſure of him that ſings; from שור ſhur, to ſing: otherwiſe, that ſees the ambuſhes; from שרר ſharar, to ſee, and צר tſar, ambuſh: and, according to the Hebrew and Syriac, encampment of him that beſieges. This name is Aſſyrian, and its etymology cannot be had from the Hebrew.

SHAREZER, and Regem-melech, Jews of Babylon, who conſulted the prophet Zechariah concerning the faſt of the fifth month, Zech. vii. 2. See REGEM-MELECH.

SHARON, שרוני, his plain, his ſong; from שור ſhur, a ſong, or צורה tſurah, a plain, and the pronoun ן an, his.

SHARON, or Saron, or Sarona. There are three diſtricts of Paleſtine known by this name: which was almoſt proverbial, to expreſs a place of extraordinary beauty and fruitfulneſs. See Iſaiah xxxiii. 9. and xxxv. 2.

I. SHARON, a diſtrict between mount Tabor and the ſea of Tiberias, Euſeb. & Hieron. in Saron.

II. SHARON, a diſtrict between Cæſarea of Paleſtine and Joppa.

III. SHARON, a diſtrict beyond Jordan, in the country of Baſan, and in the tribe of Gad, 1 Chron. v. 16. Mr. Reland maintains, that there was no Sharon beyond Jordan; and that thoſe of the tribe of Gad came to feed their flocks as far as the country about Joppa, Cæſarea, and Lydda: which to us ſeems incredible, becauſe of the diſtance of the places: beſides, the country of Baſan itſelf was very fine and fruitful, Reland. Palæſt. lib. i. cap. 55. & lib. iii.

IV. SHARON. Modern travellers give this name to the plain between Ecdippe and Ptolemais.

V. SHARON, or Laſharon, a city whoſe king was ſlain by Joſhua, Joſh. xii. 18. St. Luke, Acts ix. 35. ſeems to notice a city by the name of Sharon or Saron; and 1 Chron. xxvii. 29. we find one called Shitrai the Shoronite: but theſe paſſages may well enough be ſuppoſed to denote a country, and not a city.

SHARUHEN, שרוחן, prince of grace, or the grace of the prince; from שרר ſharar, to govern, and חן chen, grace; or the ſong of grace; from שור ſhur.

SHARUHEN, or Saruhen, a city of Simeon, Joſh. xix. 6. probably Saharem.

SHASHAK, ששק, bag of linen; from שק ſhak, a bag, and שש ſheſh, linen: otherwiſe, the ſixth bag; from שש ſheſh, ſix, and ſhak, bag, or ſack.

SHASHAK, or Seſac, of the poſterity of Benjamin, who dwelt at Jeruſalem with his children, 1 Chron. viii. 25.

SHAVEH, שוה, σαυὴ, plain: or that puts, or makes equality; from שוה ſhavah.

SHAVEH, or Save, the valley of Shaveh, otherwiſe, the valley of the king, Gen. xiv. 17. was probably pretty near Jeruſalem, becauſe Melchiſedech king of this city, with the king of Gomorha, came to meet Abraham at his return from the defeat of the five kings, as far as the valley of Shaveh. Vide FRAGMENT, "on Melchiſedeck."

SHAVEH-KIRIATHAIM. See KIRIATHAIM.

SHAVEH-KIRIATHAIM. The Emim, an ancient people beyond Jordan, dwelt at Kiriathaim. Gen. xiv. 5. Chedorlaomer and his confederates defeated them when they attacked the five kings of Pentapolis. Afterwards the Moabites drove out the Emim, and deſtroyed them, Deut. ii. 10. Shaveh-kiriathaim is probably a plain near the city of Kiriathaim: but this city was beyond Jordan, ten miles from Medaba weſt, as Euſebius ſays, in locis. It was given to the tribe of Reuben; but was afterwards poſſeſſed by the Moabites, Numbers xxxii. 37. Joſh. xiii. 19. See Ezek. xxv. 9.

SHAVING. The practice of ſhaving the beard and hair, and ſometimes the whole body, was common among the Hebrews, Numbers viii. 7. Lev. xiv. 8, 9. The Levites on the day of their conſecration, the lepers at their purification, ſhaved all the hair of their bodies. A woman taken priſoner in war, when ſhe married a Jew, ſhaved the hair of her head, Deut. xxi. 12. The Hebrews, and nations bordering on Paleſtine, ſhaved themſelves when they mourned, and in times of great calamity, whether public or private, Jer. xlviii. 37. & xli. 5. Baruch vi. 32. Iſai. vii. 20. & xv. 2. God commanded the prieſts not to cut their hair, or beards, in their mournings, Lev. xxi. 5. The Nazarites alſo did not cut their hair during the whole time of their nazariteſhip, Numb. vi. 9, 18. But if it happened that, during this time, any man ſhould die die in their preſence, they were to ſhave their hair, and begin the exerciſes of their nazarite-ſhip anew. The ſtrength of Samſon was in his hair, which he wore without cutting it, in the manner of a Nazarite; for no ſooner was he ſhaved, but he became feeble.

To ſhave the whole beard, and all the hair, or, but half the beard and hair, was an inſult and mockery, 2 Sam. x. 4. 1 Chron. xix. 4. Hanun, king of the Amorites, having thus treated David's ambaſſadors, David attacked and conquered the Ammonites: God ſaid, he would uſe a borrowed razor, to ſhave off all the hair from the body of his people: i. e. he would take vengeance againſt Judah, by the ſword of a people inhabiting beyond the Euphrates. In mourning, ſometimes, they ſuffered their beards to grow long, 2 Sam. xix. 24. Mephiboſheth did not ſhave his beard during the whole time king David was expelled from Jeruſalem by Abſalom. Jeremiah ix. 26. deſcribes the Arabians bordering on Judea, by their manner of ſhaving their heads: they cut their hair in a circle, in honour of their deity. God prohibits the Iſraelites from imitating them, Levit. xix. 27.

SHAUL, or Saul, ſon of Simeon, and grandſon of Jacob, Numb. xxvi. 13.

SHAVSHA, שושא joy, or elevation; from שוש ſhuſh, joy.

SHAVSHA, or Suſa, one of David's ſecretaries, 1 Chron. xviii. 16.

SHEAF, Lev. xxiii. 10, 11, 12. The day after the feaſt of the Paſſover they brought into the temple a ſheaf of corn, as the firſt-fruits of the barley-harveſt; with theſe ceremonies. On the fifteenth of Niſan, in the evening, when the feaſt of the firſt day of the Paſſover was ended, and the ſecond day was begun, which was a working day; the houſe of judgment deputed three men to go in ſolemnity, and gather the ſheaf of barley. The inhabitants of the neighbouring cities aſſembled, to be preſent. The barley was gathered in the territory of Jeruſalem. The deputies demanded, three times, if the ſun was ſet? They were as often anſwered, that it was. Afterwards, they demanded three times, if they might have leave to cut the ſheaf? Leave was as often granted. They reaped it out of three different fields, with three different ſickles, and put the ears into three boxes, to carry them to the temple.

The ſheaf, or rather the three ſheaves, being arrived in the temple, were threſhed in the court; and they took a full omer, i. e. about three pints of the grain: after it had been well winnowed, parched, and bruiſed, they ſprinkled over it a log of oil, i. e. near a pint.

To this they added an handful of incenſe; and the prieſt who received this offering waved it before the Lord, toward the four quarters of the world, croſs-wiſe; he caſt part of it on the altar, and the reſt was his own. After this, every one might begin their harveſt, God. Menæchot. vi. 3. Vide Maimonid. in Temidim & Moſaphim.

SHEAL, שאל, that aſks, that prays; otherwiſe, low and ſubterraneous places, hell; from שאל ſhaal, or ſheol, according to different readings.

SHEAL, or Saal, ſon of Bani: one who quitted his foreign wife, Ezra x. 29.

SHEALTIEL, שאלתיאל, I have aſked of God; from שאלתי, I have aſked, and אל el, God.

SHEALTIEL. See SALATHIEL.

SHEARIAH, שעריה, hairs, or gate of the Lord; from שער ſhahar, gate, hair, and יה jah, the Lord; or from שעיר ſhahir, a goat: otherwiſe, tempeſt of the Lord.

SHEBA, שבא, captivity; from שבה ſhabah: otherwiſe, converſion, repoſe, old-age; from שוב ſhub.

I. SHEBA, ſon of Raamah, Gen. x. 7. It is thought he inhabited Arabia Fœlix; where his father Raamah dwelt.

II. SHEBA, ſon of Joktan, Gen. x. 28. Bochart places him in Arabia Fœlix; but we rather think he ſhould be placed in Perſia or Armenia: where are traces of his name; and his father Joktan, with his other children, had ſettlements about theſe countries.

III. SHEBA, ſon of Jokſhan, Gen. xxv. 3. Probably he dwelt in Arabia Deſerta, or thereabouts. We think, with Bochart, that they were the deſcendants of this Sheba, who took away Job's cattle.

IV. SHEBA, QUEEN OF, 1 Kings x. 1, 2, &c. 2 Chron. ix. 1. and who, Matth. xii. 42, Luke xi. 31, is called Queen of the South, was according to ſome, a queen of Arabia, (Raban, Hugo. Dionyſ. Toſt. Janſen. Maldon. Cornel. alii;) according to others a queen of Ethiopia, (Hieronym. in Iſai. lx. Theodor. & Procop. in 3 Reg. Vatab. Sanct. &c.) Joſephus ſays, that Sheba was the ancient name of the city of Meroe, before Cambyſes gave it that of his ſiſter Meroe, and that from hence the queen came, of whom we are ſpeaking. This opinion has much prevailed. The Ethiopians at this day maintain, that this princeſs was of their country, and that her poſterity reigned there for a long time. See Ludolph, and Jerom Almeida, Hiſt. of Ethiopia, [and BRUCE.] They preſerve the catalogue of them, their names, and ſucceſſions. The eunuch nuch of queen Candace, who was converted and baptized by St. Philip, Acts viii. 27. was an officer belonging to a princeſs of the ſame country. The ancients acknowledge, that women uſed to govern in this country. Strab. lib. xvi. cap. 17. Plin. lib. vi. cap. 26. The iſle of Meroe is ſometimes comprehended in Ethiopia; and this country, as well as Egypt, is ſouth of Paleſtine.

Thoſe who would have this princeſs to come from Arabia, rely, firſt, on the general conſent, that there are Sabeans and Cuſhim, or Ethiopians, in Arabia. This princeſs was queen of Sheba, or of Cuſh, and Ethiopia. Secondly, Arabia is ſouth from Judea. Thirdly, Arabia Fœlix may well be ſaid to be at the uttermoſt parts of the world, Matth. xii. 42. becauſe it borders on the ſouthern ocean, and formerly they knew no land beyond it: Terra, fineſque, quæ ad orientem vergunt, Arabiâ terminantur, ſays Tacitus, lib. v. Fourthly, Arabia abounds in gold, ſilver, ſpices, and precious ſtones, which are the preſents this princeſs made to Solomon; which cannot be conveniently ſaid of the iſland of Meroe. Laſtly, ſeveral underſtand theſe verſes of Claudian, of the Sabeans in Arabia Fœlix, where he ſays, the women are uſed to govern:

> Medis, levibuſque Sabæis
> Imperat hic ſexus, Reginarumque ſub armis
> Barbariæ pars magna jacet.
> CLAUDIAN IN EUTROP. lib. xi.

And if popular tradition may be any thing relied on, that of the Arabians may be produced, who think that queen Balkis came from the city of Sheba, otherwiſe called Marib or Mareb, in Yemen, Candaule is the name that Joſephus, and ſeveral others give to the queen of Sheba: ſhe came to ſee Solomon about A. M. 3012, ante A. D. 992.

[Mr. BRUCE has given us the hiſtory of the queen of Sheba and her deſcendants, from the Abyſſinian hiſtorians: but, he thinks the eunuch of Candace (Chandake) was an officer of the queen Hendaqui, whoſe territories lie beyond the great deſart, ſouth of Syene in Upper Egypt. It is probable, at leaſt, that the Sheba of Solomon's viſitor, and the Ethiopia of the Acts, are diſtinct places: and Sheba the furtheſt off; which adds to the force of our Lord's compariſon, as probably this viſitor travelled from the greateſt diſtance, &c. of any that ever came to Jeruſalem. But what if the Ethiopians, i. e. Abyſſinians, at that time ruled in Arabia, alſo? then ſhe might come from Arabia, yet be queen of Ethiopia, which is only acroſs the Red-ſea: and which ſeems to have been the fact. This ſubject may be reſumed in the FRAGMENTS.]

SHEBA, or SHEBO, שבע, ſeven, or the ſeventh: fulneſs, or oath; from שבע ſhabah, or ſhibah, according to different readings.

III. SHEBA, ſon of Abihail, of Gad, who dwelt in Baſhan, 1 Chron. v. 13.

IV. SHEBA, ſon of Bichri, of Benjamin, a turbulent fellow, who was near engaging Iſrael in a civil war. After the defeat of Abſalom, when the tribe of Judah came to king David, and brought him over the river Jordan, on his way to Jeruſalem; the other tribes reſented the little notice taken of them: there was provoking language given on both ſides; inſomuch that Sheba, the ſon of Bichri, ſounded a trumpet, and proclaimed; "We have no ſhare in David." Thus Iſrael forſook David, and followed Sheba. 2 Sam. xx. 1, 2, 3, &c.

When David came to Jeruſalem, he ſent Abiſhai, with what troops were at hand, in purſuit of this traitor. Joab alſo took ſoldiers, and croſſing over the country north of Jeruſalem, he arrived at Abel-beth-maacha, a city lying at the entrance of the paſs between Libanus and Antilibanus, whither Sheba was retired. Joab beſieged the place; when a woman of the city, wiſer than the reſt, perſuaded the people to cut off Sheba's head, and to throw it to Joab; upon which Joab and his army retired.

SHEBNAH, or Sebna: ſecretary under king Hezekiah, 2 Kings xviii. 18. This prince ſent Shebnah, Joah, and Aſaph, to hear what Rabſhakeh had to propoſe. Some have pretended, that Shebna had been high-prieſt; but Scripture only gives him the title of treaſurer, or Præpoſitus Templi, which is very different from high-prieſt, Iſai. xxii. 15. Go, ſays the Lord, get thee unto this treaſurer (Sochen), even unto Shebna, who is over the houſe, or the temple. (The word Sochen, ſignifies one that has the overſight of the king's magazines, a treaſurer.) What haſt thou here; that thou haſt hewed thee out a ſepulchre here? Behold, the Lord will carry thee away with a mighty captivity (as a cock with the feet tied together, ſays St. Jerom) and will ſurely cover thee. [The Hebrew ſays, The Lord will tranſplant you elſewhere, O mighty man, powerful warrior, &c. יהוה מטלטלך גבר. In tranſlating this paſſage, St. Jerom has followed the ſenſe that Gibbar ought to have here, according to the opinion of the Jew that taught him Hebrew. Elſewhere it ſignifies a ſtout man; but here he pretended it ſignified a cock.] Or, he will fall upon you, as a bird of prey falls upon his game. He will ſurely violently turn and toſs thee, like a ball, into a large country, &c. It is thought this happened to Shebna, under the reign of Manaſſeh, and that he was carried captive with this prince to Babylon, A. M. 3328, ante A. SHECHEM, שכם, σιχὲμ, συχὲμ, part, portion, the back, ſhoulders, early in the morning; from שכם ſhekem, according to different readings.

I. SHECHEM, Sechem, or Sichem, ſon of Gilead, and chief of a family. Numb. xxvi. 31.

II. SHECHEM, ſon of Hamor, prince of the Shechemites: he took Dinah the daughter of Jacob, as ſhe went to ſee a feſtival of the Shechemites, and diſhonoured her. Gen. xxxiv. A. M. 2265, ante A. D. 1739. Afterwards, aſking her in marriage, he obtained her, on condition, that he, and all the men of Shechem, ſhould be circumciſed. This was agreed to; but on the third day after, when the wounds of the circumciſion were at the ſoreſt, Simeon and Levi, the two brothers of Dinah by the ſame mother, entered Shechem, and ſlew all the males. After which, the other ſons of Jacob, and their domeſtics, plundered the city.

Mabartha; perhaps becauſe of the vale of Moreh, hard by. Joſhua xvii. 7. xx. 7. appoints this city to Benjamin; it was in the mountains of this tribe. Jacob bought a field in the neighbourhood of this city, which by way of overplus he gave to his ſon Joſeph, who was buried here, Gen. xlviii. 22. Near the ſame city was Jacob's well or fountain, at which Jeſus Chriſt diſcourſed with the woman of Samaria, John iv. 5. After the ruin of Samaria by Shalmaneſer, Shechem was the capital of the Samaritans; and Joſephus ſays, Antiq. lib. xi. cap. 8. it was ſo in the time of Alexander the Great. It was ten miles from Shiloh, Euſeb. & Hieron. in locis; forty from Jeruſalem, and fifty-two from Jericho, Vide Reland. in Sichem. Jerom ſays, that Paula viſited the church built on Jacob's fountain. Antoninus Martyr, Adamnanus, and Villibaldus, who wrote in the eighth century, ſpeak of this church. Phocas, who wrote in the twelfth century, makes no mention of it.

SHEDEUR, שדיאור, field, pap, all-mighty, or deſtroyer of fire, or of light; from שדי ſhaddai, all-mighty, and אור or, fire, or light. [light of Shaddai.]

SHEDEUR, or Sedeur, father of Elizur, of Reuben, Numb. i. 5.

SHEEP. The ſheep or lamb was the common ſacrifice of the old law. When Moſes ſpeaks of this kind of victim, he never omits to appoint, that the rump be laid whole on the fire of the altar. This was the moſt delicate part of the animal. In the Eaſt there are ſheep, whoſe tails or rumps are all fat, and weigh ſometimes, twenty-five pounds, or more. Thoſe of Tartary, according to John Kinſon, weigh ſometimes eighty pounds. Thoſe of Indoſtan have alſo tails large and heavy, and their wool very ſhort and fine. The tails of the Madagaſcar ſheep weigh fifteen or ſixteen pounds. Herodotus ſays, lib. iii. cap. 113. that in Arabia are two ſorts of ſheep; ſome having tails three cubits in length; which were they ſuffered to draw them along the ground, would be bruiſed. Therefore the ſhepherds of that country make little carriages, on which they lay the tails of theſe ſheep, which thus draw them about with them. The other ſheep have tails two cubits long, or about three feet. Buſbequius tells us in his voyage, Ep. iii. that ſome of this ſort are found in Aſia Minor. In eam aliquando magnitudinem accreſcit, ut duas rotulas cum media tabella ſubjici neceſſe ſit. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXLVIII, page 110, and Plate of "SYRIAN ANIMALS."

When Jacob was employed in Meſopotamia, in feeding the ſheep of his father-in-law Laban, Gen. xxxi. 12, 13, 14. the angel of the Lord appeared to him, and ſaid: See, all the rams which leap upon the cattle are ring-ſtreaked, ſpeckled, and griſled. At the ſame time he diſcovered to him a mode of making the lambs of different colours, by means of branches of trees, half peeled; which were to be placed near the troughs at which the ſheep drank. We ſhall content ourſelves with examining, firſt, whether the artifice of Jacob were natural, or miraculous. Secondly, in what Jacob's requeſt conſiſted, for the text does not clearly explain it. Thirdly, whether this artifice of Jacob may be eſteemed fair, and allowable.

Firſt, it is agreed, that the females of all animals, have a great power of communicating to their offſpring certain inclinations, antipathies, figures, marks, and colours. We have evidence in every day's obſervation; it cannot be doubted: women have experience of this; and we ſee it in domeſtic animals, which are more ſubject than others to receive impreſſions, from objects preſented to their view. Horſes, dogs, cats, pigeons, fowls, tame rabbits, are often of different colours, and their young generally take the colour of what moſt forcibly ſtrikes the imagination of the dam at the time of conception. This is obſerved both by ancient and modern philoſophers; Ariſtot. prob. ſect. x. Pliny, lib. vii. cap. 12. Oppian. de Venal. lib. i. and this is what St. Jerom, quæſt. Hebr. in Geneſ. and St. Auſtin, qu. 93. in Geneſ. & lib. xiii. cap. 5. de Civ. Dei. and the greater part of the commentators acknowledge on the preſent queſtion. Therefore there was nothing miraculous in what Jacob did, but the miracle conſiſted in the appearance of the angel, who diſcovered to him in a dream, a natural method of propagating ſheep of different colours.

As to the ſecond difficulty, we think that Jacob required of Laban, 1*ſt*, Every youngling which ſhould be born ſpotted, and of ſeveral colours, whether of the ſheep or goats. 2*ndly*, Thoſe quite black, or with ſome white ſpots. He left to Laban whatever ſhould be quite white, both ſheep and goats. After this, Laban and he ſeparated whatever was wholly white, goats and ſheep, and Laban left all theſe animals to Jacob, expecting that ſheep, or goats, would be produced from them only of one colour. This was to render Jacob's condition the leaſt favourable to him as was poſſible, and would certainly have proved ſo, had he not prevented it. The party-coloured branches of trees, laid at the watering-places, had the ſame effect on the imaginations of of the ſheep, and goats, as party-coloured ſheep and goats themſelves would have had. As to Laban, he took under his own care all the animals of different colours, that might naturally be expected to produce young of different colours.

A ſecond artifice of Jacob was, not to expoſe the party-coloured branches at all times, nor to all ſorts of ſheep, or goats; but only in the ſpring, that he might have his young in autumn; and, to let nature proceed in her ordinary courſe in autumn, that Laban might have the lambs yeaned in the ſpring. According to Bochart de animal. ſacris, he expoſed his branches only to the beſt and ſtrongeſt ewes in the flock. Beſides, it is thought, that when the number of lambs and kids of ſeveral colours was ſufficient, inſtead of the ſtriped branches he expoſed theſe lambs and kids, which would produce the ſame effect.

As to the third difficulty, it is objected, that Jacob uſed a kind of trick to out-wit Laban. No doubt but Laban underſtood the bargain between him and Jacob in the moſt obvious and natural ſenſe, in which Jacob was to yield to him all lambs and kids, produced white, and reſerve to himſelf only the black ones, or party-coloured; and inſtead of honeſtly purſuing this intention, he has recourſe to an artifice unknown to Laban, and of which he had no ſuſpicion, to make the greater part of the young fall to his own ſhare. This appears directly contrary to the rules of honeſty. It ſignifies nothing to ſay, that Jacob had a right to do himſelf juſtice againſt the incroachments and iniquity of Laban, who during ſo many years had made him no recompence for the ſervices he had done him; becauſe according to true morality, no-body is to make himſelf judge in his own cauſe, nor to aſſume the office of doing himſelf juſtice. Beſides, in ſtrictneſs, what did Laban owe to Jacob? Had he not obliged himſelf to ſerve Laban fourteen years for his two daughters? After this term was ended, Jacob might withdraw..... But the beſt argument in Jacob's vindication is, that God himſelf approved his conduct, and ſuggeſted this method to him by an angel. This Judge, infinitely juſt, ſaw Laban's injuſtice, and intimated to Jacob a ſure (but not obvious) method of growing rich, without giving Laban juſt cauſe of complaint, if he conſidered the matter juſtly. Is not every one allowed to uſe his own induſtry, and to advance his intereſts by good management, eſpecially, when he has to deal with perſons of Laban's character.

By the name of ſheep, the Scripture often underſtands the people; Pſalm lxxix. 13. We are thy people, and the ſheep of thy paſture. And, Pſ. lxxx. 1. O ſhepherd of Iſrael, thou that leadeſt Joſeph like a flock. Jeſus Chriſt ſays, that he was ſent only to the loſt ſheep of Iſrael, Matth. xv. 24. The righteous are often compared to ſheep, expoſed to the violence of the wicked, to the fury of wolves; to ſlaughter. Pſalm. xliv. 22 At the laſt judgment, the juſt, (repreſented by ſheep,) ſhall be at the right hand of the ſovereign judge, and put in poſſeſſion of Heaven. Our Saviour ſays, that deceivers are wolves in ſheep's cloathing. Mat. vii. 15.

SHEHARIAH, שחריה, the morning of the Lord, or the black of the Lord; from שחר ſhahar, morning, or black, and יה jah, the Lord.

SHEKEL, שקל, weight, money; from שקל ſhakal, to weigh.

SHEKEL, Siclus, an Hebrew weight and money. Exod. xxx. 23, 24. 2 Sam. xiv. 26. Shekel is uſed to denote the weight of any thing, as iron, hair, ſpices, &c. Among the different opinions, concerning the weight and value of the Shekel, we ſhall adhere to thoſe of M. Le Pellitier of Rohan, who ſays it weighs half an ounce, or four Roman drachmæ; i. e. nine penny-weights, three grains; and that the Shekel of ſilver was worth two ſhillings threepence farthing and a half. Moſes and Ezekiel ſay, it was worth twenty Oboli, or twenty Gerah. Numb. xviii. 16. Ezek. xlv. 12. See the Tables of weights and meaſures.

The ſhekel of gold was half the weight of the ſhekel of ſilver; and was worth eighteen ſhillings and three pence, Engliſh.

The ſhekel of the ſanctuary, according to ſeveral interpreters, was double the common ſhekel; but this opinion wants proof. We think it was the ſame as the common ſhekel, and the words of the ſanctuary are added, to expreſs a juſt and exact weight, according to the ſtandard kept in the temple, or tabernacle.

SHEKINAH, שכינה, Divine preſence, [tabernacling.]

SHEKINAH. Nothing is more frequently mentioned in the writings of the Jews, than the Shekinah, by which they underſtand the preſence of the Holy Spirit. In the Targums, or Chaldee paraphraſes, we find the names Jehovah, or God; Memar, or the word; and Shekinah, or the Holy Ghoſt. They ſuppoſe the Holy Spirit, ſpeaking and communicating itſelf to men by revelation; firſt, in the prophets; ſecondly, in the Urim and Thummim, of the high prieſt's breaſtplate; thirdly, in what the Hebrews call Bath col, or the daughter of the voice. The Shekinah is the preſence of the Holy Ghoſt, which reſided in the temple of Jeruſalem; and which, ſay the rabbins, drove from thence the princes of the air, and communicated a particular ſanctity to it. See Baſnage, Hiſtory of the Jews, lib. vi. cap. v. art. xix.

They ſay alſo, that it reſts on the mild and the humble, but flies from the fierce and paſſionate man. It reſides with him, whoſe houſe is open to the ſtranger, and is found in the midſt of two or three perſons who meet to ſtudy the law. Echa Rab. fol. 59. 1. They ſay, that the Shekinah has ten times changed its dwelling; and at laſt, going upon the Mount of Olives, it continued there three years and an half, addreſſing the Iſraelites; "Return to me, my children, and I will return to you." But ſeeing they would not be converted, it retired to its own place. This laſt circumſtance ſeems to hint at our Saviour's preaching among the Jews, and his aſcenſion from the Mount of Olives.

The Shekinah was the moſt ſenſible token of the preſence of God, among the Hebrews; and which reſted over the propitiatory, or over the golden cherubim, which adhered to the propitiatory, or covering of the ark. Here the Shekinah abode in a cloud; from hence God gave forth his oracles vocally, as is thought, when conſulted by the high prieſt on account of his people. Hence it is often ſaid in Scripture, that God ſits upon the cherubim, or between the cherubim; i. e. he gives the moſt evident tokens of his divine preſence, by anſwering from hence the inquiries of Iſrael. The Rabbins tell us, that the Shekinah firſt reſided in the tabernacle prepared by Moſes, in the Wilderneſs, and that it deſcended therein on the day of its conſecration, in the figure of a cloud. It paſſed from thence into the ſanctuary of Solomon's temple, on the day of its dedication by this prince; where it continued till the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the temple, by the Chaldeans, and was not afterwards ſeen there.

SHELOMITH, שלמית, my peace, my happineſs, my recompence; from שלם ſhalam.

I. SHELOMITH, Salomith, or Salumith, daughter of Dibri, of the tribe of Dan, was mother of that blaſphemer, who having blaſphemed the name of the Lord in the camp, was condemned to be ſtoned. Scripture tells us that Shelomith had this blaſphemer by an Egyptian; which ſhould be naturally underſtood of an Egyptian who had married her: but the rabbins explain it otherwiſe. They ſay, Shelomith was a very handſome and virtuous woman, who having been ſolicited and tempted to criminal converſation by an Egyptian, who was an overſeer of the Hebrews' labours, without complying with him; he at laſt found an opportunity by night, of ſlipping into the houſe and bed of Shelomith, in the abſence of her huſband; and abuſed her ſimplicity.

The day following, when this woman diſcovered the injury, ſhe bitterly complained of it to her huſband, when he returned. He at firſt, thought of putting her away, but kept her ſome time, to ſee if ſhe ſhould prove with child by the Egyptian. After ſome months her pregnancy becoming evident, he ſent her away, and with words he aſſaulted the officer, who had done this outrage. The Egyptian abuſed him ſtill farther, both by words and blows. Moſes coming hither by chance, and hearing of this injury done by the Egyptian to the Iſraelite, he took up his defence, killed the Egyptian, and buried him in the ſand.

The brethren of Shelomith ſeeing their ſiſter put away like an adultereſs, pretended to call her huſband to account for it, and to make him take her again. He refuſed; and they came to blows. Moſes happened to be there again, and wiſhed to reconcile them; but the huſband of Shelomith aſked him, What he had to do in the matter? Who had made him a judge over them? and, Whether he had a mind to kill him alſo, as yeſterday he killed the Egyptian? Moſes hearing this, fled from Egypt, into the country of Midian.

The blaſphemer ſtoned in the wilderneſs, Lev. xxiv. 10, 11. was, ſay the Jews, the ſon of of Shelomith and this Egyptian. The officer who inſpected the Hebrews' labour, is he of whom Moſes ſpeaks, Exod. ii. 11, 12. And the huſband of Shelomith, is intimated in the ſame place, Exod. ii. 13, 14. Thus the Jews corrupt the Scripture, by ſupplying the text, and refining on its narrations.

II. SHELOMITH, daughter of Zerubbabel, prince of Judah. 1 Chron. iii. 19.

III. SHELOMITH, ſon of Shimei, a Levite of the family of Gerſhom. 1 Chron. xxiii. 9.

SHELOMOTH, or Salemoth, ſon of Izhari, and father of Jahath. 1 Chron. xxiv. 22. perhaps the ſame as Shelomith IV. [Shelomith, Eng. tr.]

SHELUMIEL, שלמיאל, peace of God, or God is my happineſs, retribution, or perfection of God; from שלם ſhalam, peace, &c. and אל el, God.

SHELUMIEL, or Salamiel, ſon of Zuriſhaddai, prince of Simeon. He came out of Egypt at the head of 59,300 men, who carried arms; and made his offering to the tabernacle, in his order, as head of his tribe. Numb. i. 22. vii. 36, 37. x. 19.

SHEM, שם, name, renown: or he that puts, or places, or who is put or placed.

SHEM, or Sem, ſon of Noah. Gen. vi. 10. was born A. M. 1558, before the deluge 98 years, ante A. D. 2446. We think he was younger than Japheth, and older than Ham. [Vide JAPHETH, alſo FRAGMENTS, Nos. XIX,] He entered the ark with Noah his father. Afterwards when the good old man was overtaken with wine, and was naked, in his tent, Shem and Japheth covered him, nor would ſee in him any thing indecent. When Noah awoke, he foretold bleſſings on Shem, ſaying, The Lord God of Shem be bleſſed, [he ſhall dwell in the tents of Shem], and let Canaan be the ſlave of Shem. The great prerogative of Shem, was, that from his race was to proceed the Meſſiah, and the worſhip of the true God was to be preſerved among his poſterity. Being an hundred years of age he begat Arphaxad, and died, aged ſix hundred years, A. M. 2158, ante A. D. 1846. Shem obtained for his portion the beſt provinces in Aſia.

The Jews aſcribe to Shem the theological tradition of what Noah had learned from the firſt of men. Shem communicated this to his children, and by his means the true religion was preſerved. The rabbins think alſo, that Shem ſet up an academy, or ſchool of religion, on mount Tabor. They ſay that Shem is Melchiſedek, and that he, himſelf, had been at the ſchool of Methuſelah, before the deluge, for ſeventy-eight years; that he gave Abraham the whole tradition, the ceremonies of the ſacrifices of religion, according to which this patriarch afterwards offered his ſacrifices. Laſtly, the Hebrews think that he taught men the law of juſtice, the calculation of months and years, and the intercalations of months. They pretend, God gave him the ſpirit of prophecy an hundred years after the deluge, and that he propheſied four hundred years, though with little ſucceſs, becauſe men were become corrupt. Methodius ſays, that he dwelt in the iſland of the Sun, that he invented aſtronomy, and was the firſt king who governed on the earth. They impute to him the foundation of Septa, a maritime city of Africa, of Salernum in Italy, and of Salem in Judea. Thoſe who confound him with Melchizedek, aſcribe to him Pſalm cx. The Lord ſaid unto my Lord, &c. and a Hebrew book of phyſic, M. S. in the library of the Elector of Bavaria. See P. Scipio Sgambat, Archiv. vet. Teſtament, lib. i. p. 165.

Shem had five ſons, Elam, Aſher, Arphaxad, Lud, and Aram, who peopled the fineſt provinces of the Eaſt. See their Articles. The principal deſign of Moſes being, to give the hiſtory and the laws of the Jews; he has carried the genealogy of Shem farther than thoſe of the other ſons of Noah, who were not directly included in his ſubject. It is pretended that Noah committed to Shem the body of Adam, which he ſent and buried on Calvary. It is ſaid alſo, he depoſited his will with him, by which he diſtributed the whole earth among his three ſons. Among the heathen gods, Ham is Jupiter; Japheth is Neptune; and Shem is Pluto. See Bochart, Phaleg. lib. i. cap. i.

The prophet Shemaiah told Rehoboam, and the princes of Judah, who had retired into Jeruſalem, that they had forſaken the Lord, and now he in his turn would forſake them, and deliver them into the hands of Shiſhak, king of Egypt. The king and the princes being in a conſternation, anſwered, "The Lord is juſt;" but, they humbling themſelves, God moderated his anger, and their ſufferings. Vide REHOBOAM. Shemaiah wrote the hiſtory of king Rehoboam. 2 Chron. xii. 15.

roin, and four from Atharoth, upon which king Omri built the city of Samaria. Euſeb. in Dothaim, in Merro, & in Atharo. Before that time this mountain was famous for the battle between Abijah, king of Judah, and Jeroboam, king of Iſrael. Vide 2 Chron. xiii.

SHEMINITH, שמינית, the eighth.

SHEMINITH, or Seminith; this Hebrew word is found before ſome of the Pſalms, and is generally tranſlated by Octava. But it ſignifies, either an inſtrument of eight ſtrings, or the eighth band of the muſicians of the temple.

SHEMIRAMOTH, שמירמות, the heighth of the Heavens; from שמים ſhammaim, the Heavens, and רמם ramam, heighth, elevation: or elevation of the name; from ramam, heighth, and שם ſhem, a name.

SHEN, שן, παλαιὰ, tooth, ivory; from שן ſhen: otherwiſe, change; from שנה ſhanah: otherwiſe, he that ſleeps; from ישן jaſhan.

SHEN, or Sen; שן, this Hebrew word ſignifies a tooth; alſo a ſharp rock, naked and projecting as a tooth. 1 Sam. vii. 12. Samuel erected a ſtone between Miſhpat and Sen, as a monument of the victory of the Hebrews over the Philiſtines, and this ſtone he named, the ſtone of aſſiſtance: Aben Ezer.

SHENE, or Sene; שני, this word is plural, and ſignifies teeth or rocks. Jonathan and his armour-bearer penetrated into the camp of the Philiſtines, by paſſing between two rocks, one called Bozez, the other Seneh. 1 Sam. xiv. 4.

SHENAZAR, שנאצר, σαναασαρ, treaſure of the tooth, or of the ivory; from שן ſhen, a tooth, ivory, and אצר atſar, treaſure: otherwiſe, treaſure of him that ſleeps; from atſar, treaſure, and ישן jaſhan, to ſleep: or change of anguiſh, or diſtreſs; from שנה change, and צרר tſarar, to be in pain or in bonds. This name is rather Babylonian than Hebrew.

SHEPHATIAH, שפטיה, or Saphatias, the Lord that judges, the judgment of the Lord, or God is my judge; from שפט ſhaphat, judgment, and יה jah, the Lord.

SHEPHLAH, Σεφηλὰ, low places, vales, or plains; from שפלה ſhaphaleh.

SHEPHELAH, or Sephela; שפלה. LXX. τὸ πέδιον, or τὰ ταπεινὰ, or τὴν πεδινὴν, Sym. Κοιλάδα, this Hebrew word ſignifies, an open field, or a plain. The Greek and Latin interpreters generally rally tranſlate it by a plain; but the Seventy have ſometimes preſerved the word Sephela. Euſebius and Jerom inform us, that, in their time, the whole flat country, north and weſt about Eleutheropolis, was called Sephela, Hieronym. & Euſeb. in Onomaſt. in Sephela. Simon Maccabæus fortified the city of Adida in Sephela, or in this plain.

SHEPHERDS, or Paſtors. When the patriarch Joſeph invited his father and brethren to ſettle in Egypt, he bid them tell Pharaoh, they were ſhepherds, or breeders of ſheep, that they might have the land of Goſhen aſſigned for their habitation; becauſe, ſays Joſeph, the Egyptians have an abomination to ſhepherds. It is inquired, wherefore had the Egyptians ſuch an abhorrence to ſhepherds?

There are two reaſons generally aſſigned for this: firſt, becauſe the Hebrews, who bred ſheep, alſo killed and ate them, or ſacrificed them to their god. Whereas, the Egyptians worſhipped ſheep and goats, and thought it a great crime to kill, or ſacrifice them. Diodorus Siculus, lib. i. ſays, that ſheep were in great veneration throughout Egypt. And Strabo, lib. xvii. aſſures us, that they ſacrificed them only in the Nome, or province, of Nitria, or in that of Mendeſe, according to Herodotus, lib. ii. cap. 42.

Tacitus obſerves, Hiſt. lib. v. that the Iſraelites ſacrificed ſheep and lambs, as if it were to inſult Jupiter Ammon, the deity of Egypt; and that they killed oxen without ſcruple, to affront the ox Apis. Cæſo ariete velut in contumeliam Ammonis; bos quoque immolatur, quem Ægyptii Apim colunt. But this does not prove, that the employment of ox-keepers, or neat-herds, was of itſelf, odious to the Egyptians, as Scripture inſinuates: on the contrary, this office would have recommended them to the eſteem of the people, if they had not killed theſe animals; as in the nome of Mendeſe, the keepers of goats were honoured, becauſe the goat was the favourite deity of that diſtrict.

We muſt therefore ſeek another cauſe of Egyptian averſion from ſhepherds. In Joſeph. cont. App. lib. i. Manetho relates, that an army of ſtrangers from the coaſts of Arabia, or from the eaſt, invaded Egypt, and finding it defenceleſs, they ſubdued it, and eſtabliſhed a ſucceſſion of kings in lower Egypt, for about five hundred and eleven years. After which, the kings of Thebais, and of upper Egypt, after a long war, at laſt drove them out of the country. Theſe princes were called Hic-ſos, i. e. king-ſhepherds. Some, ſays Manetho, affirm they were Arabians; but we find in other books, that they were not kings but captives. For in Egyptian, the word hic, when pronounced hoc, ſignifies a captive. This reaſon of the hatred of the Egyptians againſt ſhepherds appears to be plauſible. [But, query, what was its date?] See EXODUS, and FRAGMENT, No.

Abel was a keeper of ſheep, Gen. iv. 2. as were the greater number of the antient patriarchs. When men began to multiply, and to follow different employments, Jabal, ſon of Lamech bigamus, and his wife Adah, was acknowledged as father, i. e. founder, of ſhepherds and nomades; Gen. iv. 20. He was the father of ſuch as dwell in tents, and of ſuch as have cattle. God ſometimes takes the name of ſhepherd of Iſrael; Iſaiah xl. 11. and kings, both in ſcripture, and antient writers, are diſtinguiſhed by the title of ſhepherds of the people. And the people forſaken, are compared to a flock without a ſhepherd. Iſaiah ſays, that the Meſſiah ſhall feed his flock. God calls Cyrus his ſhepherd. The prophets often inveigh againſt the ſhepherds of Iſrael, againſt the kings, who feed themſelves, and neglect their flocks; who diſtreſs them, treat them ill, ſeduce them, and lead them aſtray. See Ezekiel xxxiv. 23. Numbers xxvii. 17. 1 Kings xxii. 17. Judith xi. 15. Iſa. xl. 11. Iſa. xliv. 28.

The Lord ſays, Iſa. lxiii. 11., that he brought his people through the Red-ſea, with their ſhepherds; i. e. Moſes, Aaron, and the chief of the people, at their head. Micah ſays, v. 5. that the Lord ſhall raiſe ſeven ſhepherds over his people, and an eighth over the land of Aſſyria, to bring from thence the people of Iſrael. We take theſe ſeven, or eight, ſhepherds, to be the ſeven princes confederate with Darius ſon of Hyſtaſpes, who killed Smerdis the Magian, who had ſeized the empire of Perſia, after the death of Cambyſes.

Zechariah xi. 8. mentions three ſhepherds whom the Lord had cut off in one month. Theſe three ſhepherds were Aaron, Moſes, and Miriam, who died in the wilderneſs; not indeed within the ſpace of one month, but who all had the ſentence of death paſſed on them in a month, and died at a little diſtance of time from one another. This is the explication of the Rabbins. Others think theſe three ſhepherds were David, Adonijah, and Joab, who all died in the ſpace of one month. Others are of opinion, they were the three brethren Maccabees, Judas, Jonathan, and Simeon, who died within a month of years, i. e. within thirty years. We think it may be underſtood of the three Roman emperors who ſucceeded Nero, i. e. Galba, Otho, and Vitellius, who were ſlain by their own ſubjects within the ſpace of a year and ſome days. Afterwards, in the prophet, God ſpeaks in this manner; And I took my ſtaff, even beauty, and cut it aſunder. This rupture happened when the Jews revolted againſt the Romans; which ended in the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, the temple, and the Jewiſh nation.

The ſame Zechary received order from the Lord, ſaying, take unto thee yet the inſtruments of a fooliſh ſhepherd; for, ſays the Lord, I will raiſe up a ſhepherd in the land, which ſhall not viſit thoſe that be cut off, &c. Zech. xi. 14, 15. The ſhepherds having forſaken Jeſus Chriſt, their lawful ſhepherd, (we have no king, ſay they, but Cæſar Tiberius) were delivered up to fooliſh ſhepherds, who plunged them into calamities: theſe are the Roman emperors, ſucceſſors of Tiberius. Caligula ſucceeded Tiberius, Claudius, Caligula; and Nero ſucceeded Claudius. Every one knows the characters of theſe princes; that they were truly fooliſh ſhepherds, mad, wicked, and cruel.

The Meſſiah is often called a ſhepherd. I will ſet up ſhepherds over them, which ſhall feed them. Jer. xxiii. 4, 5. Iſaiah xl. 11. ſpeaks in the ſame manner; He ſhall feed his flock like a ſhepherd, he ſhall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his boſom, and ſhall gently lead thoſe that are with young. And Zechariah xiii. 7. ſays, Awake, O ſword, againſt my ſhepherd, and againſt the man that is my fellow, ſaith the Lord of Hoſts. Smite the ſhepherd, and the ſheep ſhall be ſcattered, and I will turn mine hand upon the little ones. Jeſus Chriſt refers this paſſage to his paſſion. Matt. xxvi. 31. He takes on himſelf the title of the good ſhepherd, who gives his life for his ſheep. John x. 11, 14, 15. St. Paul calls him the great ſhepherd of the ſheep, Heb. xiii. 20.; and St. Peter gives him the appellation of prince of ſheperds. 1 Pet. v. 4.

God gave to his miniſters the tythe of oxen, of ſheep and of goats, which paſſed under the crook of the ſhepherd, i. e. are under his care. Lev. xxvii. 32. Or he alludes to what is done when the tythe was given to the prieſt: the ſhepherd ſtanding with his hook at the entrance of the ſheep-fold, as the young kids, or lambs, come out of the fold, he counts them, and retains the tenth for the prieſt, or the Levite.

Amos ſays, i. 2. that the beauty of ſhepherds is in mourning, during a dry ſeaſon, literally the huts, or abodes, of the ſhepherds are in mourning. Theſe are what are called, 2 Kings x. 12. Cameræ paſtorum, or habitacula paſtorum. Jerom, ſpeaking of the city and deſart of Tekoah, ſays, that one cannot ſo much as ſee there the hovel of the ſhepherds, being like ſubterraneous ovens, which the Africans call by the name of Mapalia. Jerom præf. in Amos.

In the deſcription our Saviour gives of a good ſhepherd, John x. 11, 12, &c. he ſays, that he lays down his life for his ſheep; that he knows them and they know him; that they hear his voice, and follow him; that he goes before them; that no one ſhall force them out of his hands, and that he calls them by their name; [theſe are all incidents taken from the cuſtom of the country: they are by no means ſo ſtriking to us as they muſt have been to thoſe who heard our Lord; and who every day were witneſs to ſuch methods of conducting this domeſticated animal,] whereas the hireling, or bad ſhepherd, forſakes the ſheep; and the thief enters not by the door of the ſheep-fold, but climbs over another way.

SHEPHI, Sephi, or Shepho, ſon of Shobal, of the race of Seir. 1 Chron. i. 38. Gen. xxxvi. 23. an antient king of Idumea.

SHEPHUPHAN, שפופן, σεπφὰμ, ceraſtes, or a kind of ſerpent; from שׁפף ſhaphaph; from whence שפיפן ſhapiphon.

SHEPHUPHAN, or Sephuphan, or Shupham, ſon of Bela, and grandſon of Benjamin. 1 Chron. viii. 5.

SHERAH, שארה, σαρὰ, fleſh, kindred, leaven, or remain; from שאר ſhaar, ſheer, or ſheor, according to different readings.

SHEREBIAH, שרביה, or Sarabias, dryneſs of the Lord; from שרב ſharab, dryneſs, and יה jah the Lord: otherwiſe, that prevails with the Lord; from שׂרר ſharar, to rule, and the conjunction ב beth, in or with: otherwiſe, that ſings in the Lord; from שור ſhur, to ſing.

SHERESH, שרש, σάρος, root, or little chains.

SHERESH, or Sares, ſon of Pereſh, and of Machir. 1 Chron. vii. 16.

SHEREZER, ſee Sharezer.

SHESH, שׁש, flax.

SHESH, Cotton, and Linen. This is a pure Hebrew word, generally tranſlated by flax. Vide Byssus.

SHESHACH, ששׁך, σισὰκ, bag of linen; from שׂק ſhak, a bag, and שׁש ſheſh, flax, or linen; otherwiſe, the ſixth bag; from the ſame word שׁש ſheſh, ſix, and שׂק ſhak, a bag.

SHESHACH, or Seſach; by this name Jeremiah xxv. 26. li. 41. hints at Babylon. Jeremiah was to cauſe all nations to drink of the cup of the Lord's fury, and the king of Sheſhach ſhall drink after them. And elſewhere, how is Sheſhach taken, and how is the praiſe of the whole earth ſurpriſed! How is Babylon become an aſtoniſhment among the nations! But how comes it that he gives this name to Babylon? St. Jerom thinks he does it out of caution, not to provoke Nebuchadnezzar, who then was beſieging Jeruſalem. Hieronym. in Jerem. xxv.

Vide & Jarchi & Kimchi. We take Sheſhach to be a pagan deity, chiefly worſhipped at Babylon. He gives this city the name of its tutelar deity, as he ſays Jer. l. 2. Babylon is taken; Bel is confounded; Merodach is broken in pieces. Bel and Merodach were gods of the country. Sheſhach was probably the moon. At Babylon they celebrated feaſts called Sacæa, which greatly reſembled the Roman Saturnalia. The ſervants then acted the part of maſters. Athenæ. lib. 14. cap. 10. ex Beroſo & Cteſia. Strabo lib. xi. ſays, they were celebrated in honour of Anais, which is Diana or the moon. See Voſſius, de orig. & prog. idol. lib. 2 cap. 22.

SHESHEAI, Seſai, or Saſai, a giant, a ſon, or deſcendant, of Anak, driven from Hebron, with his brethren Ahiman and Talmai, by Caleb ſon of Jephunneh. Joſh. xv. 14.

SHESHBAZZAR, ששבצר, joy in tribulation; from שוש ſhuſh, joy, the preposition ב beth, in, and צרר tzarar, tribulation, pain: otherwiſe, production, or defence of joy; from צור tſur, defence: otherwiſe, joy of the vintage: from בצר batzar, and שוש, ſhuſh, joy. A Chaldee word, in which it ſeems that Sace is included, which was a deity of the Babylonians.

SHESHBAZZAR, or Saſſabaſar. When king Cyrus reſtored to the Jews the ſacred veſſels of the temple of Jeruſalem, which had been carried to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar Ezra i. 8.; he had an account taken of them, and committed them to Sheſhbazzar prince of Judah. The greater part of interpreters think, Sheſhbazzar is Zerubbabel; and that he bore the name of Sheſhbazzar among the Babylonians, as Daniel did that of Belſhazzar. Scripture ſays, that Zerubbabel laid the foundation of the Temple, and it ſays the ſame of Sheſhbazzar, Zec. iv. 9. Ezr. v. 16. Others will have Sheſhbazzar to be a Perſian officer, ſent to govern the Jews. It is not very certain that Zerubbabel had this government conferred on him. The Grecians give to Sheſhbazzar, or (as they call him) Sammanaſer, the quality of governor of Judea. 3 Eſdras ii. Προεςώτη τῆς Ἰδδαίας.

SHETHAR, שתר, that rots; from the Chaldee שתיתא ſhechitha, rottenneſs. This word is Perſian, or Mediſh; and it is difficult to find its true root in the Hebrew.

SHETHAR, or Sethar, a principal officer, of the court of king Ahaſuerus. Eſth. i. 14.

SHETHAR-BOZNAI, שתר־בוזני, that makes to rot or corrupt, or that ſeeks and examines thoſe who deſpiſe me; from בזה bazah, to deſpiſe, and the pronoun י i, me, and תור thur, to ſeek, to examine. This is a Mediſh or Perſian word, and its root not in the Hebrew.

SHETHAR-BOZNAI, or Starbuzania, an officer of the king of Perſia, beyond the Euphrates, who wrote to Court againſt the Jews, Ezr. v. 6.

SHEVA, שוא, σεσὰ, vanity; from שוא ſhova: otherwiſe, elevation, fame; from שאה ſhaah: otherwiſe, tumult; from שאה ſhoah.

SHEVA, or Siva, ſecretary to king David, 2 Sam. xx. 25.

SHEW BREAD. The Hebrew, Exod. xxv. 30, לחם פנים Ἄρτος ἐνωπίος, ſignifies literally, bread of faces, or, of the face. They thus called the loaves of bread, which the prieſt of the week placed every Sabbath-day on the golden table, in the Sanctum, before the Lord.

Theſe loaves were ſquare, and had four faces, as the Rabbins ſay: they were covered with leaves of gold: they were twelve in number, and repreſented the twelve tribes of Iſrael. Each loaf was of conſiderable bigneſs, ſince they uſed two tenth-deals of flour for each, which are about ſix pints, Lev. xxiv. 5, 6, 7. They placed them hot on the Sabbath-day in the preſence of the Lord, when they alſo took away thoſe which had been expoſed the whole week, and which could not be lawfully eaten but by the prieſts. This offering was accompanied with frankincenſe and ſalt. Some commentators think wine was added to it alſo, Villalpand. de Templo, lib. iv. cap. 57. The frankincenſe was burnt on the golden table every Saturday, when they ſet on freſh loaves.

All are not agreed as to the manner in which the loaves of ſhew-bread were ranged on the altar of the Sanctum. Some think they were in three piles, four loaves in each. Others ſay, two piles, ſix loaves in each; and it is hard to conceive how it could be otherwiſe, or how a table two cubits in length, and one in breadth, could allow room enough for twelve loaves, each containing ſix pints of flour. The Rabbins ſay, that between every two loaves were two golden pipes, ſupported by forks of the ſame metal, whoſe ends reſted on the ground, to convey air between the loaves, to hinder them from growing mouldy. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CCXXIX.

Moſes ſeems to ſay, Lev. xxiv. 8. that the Iſraelites furniſhed the loaves preſented before the Lord; but this ought to be underſtood only, as they paid the firſt-fruits and tenths to the prieſts, (which

(which was the chief of their income.) And of these tenths and first-fruits the priests took wherewith to make the shew-bread, and whatever else it was their duty to furnish, in the service of the temple. In the time of David, 1 Chron. ix. 32. the Levites of the family of Kohath had the care of the shew-bread, or, as it is called in the Chronicles, the Bread of Ordering. Probably the Levites baked and prepared it; but the priests offered it before the Lord, as said in another place, 1 Chron. xxiii. 28. Vulg. Jerom on Mal. i. However, St. Jerom says, from a tradition of the Jews, that the priests sowed, reaped, ground, kneaded, and baked the shew-bread: panes propositionis, quos juxta traditiones Hebraicas, ipsi serere, ipsi demetere, ipsi molere, ipsi coquere debeatis,

There are several Rabbinical remarks about these loaves, which commentators take care to glean: they were placed six in a pile one on another, on a salver of gold; and above they were covered with another golden salver, on which stood a golden cup full of the purest incense. They were made without leaven, and kneaded with oil. Tostatus says, that they were baked on a baking-pan of gold. Others maintain, that they were baked in an ordinary oven, but one kept for this use only; and that the wood used on this occasion was chosen on purpose, the soundest and closest that could be got. Beside these loaves stood a vessel full of excellent wine; this vessel was close stopped, that the wine might not grow sour, and it held the fourth-part of an hin; something above two pints.

When the loaves were changed, the wine was poured out as a libation before the Lord. The vessel, or cup, that was filled with salt near these loaves, was of gold, and covered, as well as the vessel of incense, that no dust, &c. should defile it. These loaves were eaten in the temple by the priests of the week; to take them out of the temple to eat them at home was not allowed.

SHIBBOLETH, שבלת, Vulgate, Scibboleth; Judg. xii. 6. Burden, ear of corn; from סבל: or current of water.

SHIBBOLETH, or Sibboleth, an Hebrew word, which signifies an ear of corn, spica. After Jephtha had beat the Ammonites, the men of Ephraim were jealous of this advantage obtained by the tribes beyond Jordan, and complained heavily that they had not been called to this expedition. Jephtha answered with much moderation; but that did not prevent the Ephraimites from using contemptuous words toward the men of Gilead, telling them, they were only fugitives from Ephraim and Manasseh, a kind of bastards that belonged to neither of the two tribes; (This reproach was false, since Machir the father of Gilead, was Manasseh's own son, Numb xxvi. 29) but Vide FRAGMENT, No. 329, p. 57. To fighting they went, and the men of Gilead killed a great number of Ephraim After which, they set guards at all the passes of Jordan; and when an Ephraimite who had escaped, came to the water-side, and desired to pass over, they asked him, if he was not an Ephraimite? If he said, No; they bid him pronounce Shibboleth, which signifies an ear of corn. But he pronouncing it Sibboleth, according to the pronunciation of the Ephraimites, and not well pronouncing the first letter, they killed him on the spot: on this occasion, there were killed forty-two thousand Ephraimites.

SHIBMAH, שבמה, conversion, return, captivity, old-age, rest; from שבה shabah, or שוב shub.

SHIBMAH, or Sabama, or Sibma, a city of Reuben, Numb. xxxii. 38. Josh. xiii. 19. Isaiah xvi. 8, 19. speaks of the vines of Shibmah, which were cut down by the enemies of the Moabites: for that people had taken the city of Shibmah, Jer. xlviii. 32. and others of Reuben, after this tribe was carried into captivity, by Tiglath-pilneser, 1 Chron. v. 26. 2 Kings xv. 29. St. Jerom says, in Isai. xvi. that between Heshbon and Sibmah there was hardly the distance of five hundred paces.

SHICRON, שכרונה, drunkenness: or his gift, or his wages; from שכר Sachar, and the pronoun ינו eno, his.

SHICRON, or Sechrona, a city of Judah, Josh. xv. 11. thought to have been yielded up to Simeon.

SHIELD. In Scripture, God is often called the shield of his people, Gen. xv. 1. I am thy shield, says God to Abraham. The Psalmist says, Psal. v. 12. Thou, Lord, wilt bless the righteous; with favour wilt thou compass him, as with a shield. Princes and great men are also called the shield of the people, 2 Sam. i. 21. Saul is called the shield of Israel. The shields of the earth belong unto God, or are in his dependance, Psal. xlvii 9. The Septuagint have it;—the strong gods of the earth have greatly exalted themselves.

They hung their shields around the towers for ornament, and to use on occasion. The tower of David was adorned with a thousand shields, hung round about it: there were deposited arms of all kinds: Cant. iv. 4. The Maccabees adorned the front of the temple with shields which they hung thereon, 1 Macc. iv. 57. They took them down from thence to march against the enemy: Ezekiel xxvii. 10. says, that the Persians, the Lydians, and the Lybians hung up their ſhields in Tyre, as ornaments to that city. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CCXVII. page 84.

The common materials of a ſhield were wood: it was covered with leather, with plates of gold, or braſs. Sometimes they were all of gold, or braſs. Solomon made ſome of maſſy gold: which Shiſhak king of Egypt took away; and Rehoboam made others of braſs to ſerve in their ſtead. 1 Sam. xvii. 45. Goliath's ſhield was of braſs. Nahum ii. 3. deſcribes the ſhields of the Chaldæans as bright and ſparkling. The Pſalmiſt ſays, that God ſhall cauſe peace to reign among his people, and that they ſhall throw their ſhields into the fire: Pſal. xlvi. 9. Theſe ſhields therefore were of wood.

SHIGGAION, שיגיון, a ſong of trouble, or comfort.

SHIGGAION, Shigionoth, or Sigaion. This word occurs in the Hebrew, Pſalm vii. title, and Habakkuk iii. 1. על שגיונות Vulg. pro. Ignorantiis. Theodot. Ὑπὲρ τῶν ἐκϐσίασμῶν. Pro voluntariis, (ſupple) peccatis. The Septuagint have tranſlated it by Pſalm, or Canticle; but Aquila, and Symmachus, have rendered it by ignorance, or ſins of ignorance. Theodotion, in Habakkuk, has it, for voluntary ſins: but there is reaſon to doubt whether his text be very intire. Some think Shiggaion is an inſtrument of muſic; others, a certain air, or tune, to which this pſalm was ſung. Others tranſlate it, The error of David; the ſecret of David; the delight of David; the diſquiet of David. We think it ought to be tranſlated, a ſong of trouble, or, a ſong of conſolation of David. The Arabic word Schaga, ſignifies to be in trouble; and the Hebrew word Schagah, or Shagah, to rejoice, to be comforted.

SHIHON, שיאון, his ſound; from שאה ſhaah.

SHIHON, or Seon, a city of Iſſachar, Joſh. xix. 19. The Hebrew reads, שיאון Shion, or Sion. Euſebius ſays, that in his time there was a place called Seon, at the foot of Mount Tabor. Onomaſt. in Seon.

SHILHI, שלחי, σελεὶ, miſſion, meſſenger: otherwiſe, branches, or dart, javelin; from שלח ſhalach, or ſhelach, according to different readings: according to the Syriac, that ſpoils, or is ſpoiled.

SHILHI, or Salai, father of Azubah, the mother of king Jehoſhaphat. 1 Kings xxii. 42.

SHILHIM, שלחים, meſſengers, ſuccours, branches, darts; from שלח ſhalach: or that ſpoil, according to the Syriac.

SHILHIM, or Selim, a city of Judah, Joſh. xv. 32.

SHILLEM, or Sallem, or Sellem, or Shallum, fourth ſon of Naphtali, Gen. xlvi. 24. head of a great family. Numb. xxvi. 49.

SHILO, ſent; from שלח, ſhalach.

SHILOH, שלו, שלה, συλὼ, or Silo, peace, or abundance; from שלה ſhalah: otherwiſe, that deceives or mocks, according to the Syriac.

I. SHILOH. This term is famous among interpreters and commentators on Scripture. It is uſed Gen. xlix. 10. to denote the Meſſiah. The patriarch Jacob foretels his coming, in theſe words; The ſceptre ſhall not depart from Judah, nor a law-giver from between his feet, until Shiloh come, and unto him ſhall the gathering of the people be. The Hebrew text reads, עד כי יבא שלה Donec veniat Shilo. All Chriſtian commentators agree, that this word ought to be underſtood of the Meſſiah, of Jeſus Chriſt: but all are not agreed about its literal and grammatical ſignification. Jerom, who tranſlates it by Qui mittendus eſt, manifeſtly read Shiloach, ſent, inſtead of Shilo. The Septuagint tranſlate Ἕως ἀνἔλθῃ τὰ ἀποκείμενα αὐτῷ. Or, Ἕως ἀνἔλθῃ ᾧ ἀπόκειται. As if they had read שלו inſtead of שלה. Until the coming of him to whom it is reſerved; or, till we ſee arrive that which is reſerved for him.

It muſt be owned, that the ſignification of the word Shiloh is not well aſcertained. Some tranſlate, The ſceptre ſhall not depart from Judah, till he comes to whom it belongs, שלה, or שלי, inſtead of שלו. Others, till the coming of the peace-maker, or, the pacific, or, of proſperity, שלה proſperatus eſt. Shalah ſignifies, to be in peace, to be in proſperity. Others, till the birth of him who ſhall be born of a woman, without the knowledge of man, שול, or שליא, Secundina, Fluxus, Arab. Lud. de Dieu. Otherwiſe, the ſceptre ſhall not depart from Judah, till its end, its ruin; till the downfall of the kingdom of the Jews. Some Rabbins have taken the name Silo, or Shilo, for a city of this name in Paleſtine. The ſceptre ſhall not be taken from Judah, till it comes to Shiloh, שאל, or שלה. It has ceaſed, it has finiſhed, ſays Le Clerc in Gen. till it be taken from him, to be given to Saul, at Shiloh. But where is it ſaid, that Saul was acknowledged as king, or conſecrated, at Shiloh? If we would underſtand it of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, the matter is equally uncertain. Scripture mentions no aſſembly at Shiloh, that admitted him king. A modern author, Gouſſet. Comment. Ling. Heb. p. 415. derives Shiloh from Shalah, שלה, Fatigare, which ſometimes ſignifies to be weary, to ſuffer; till his labours, his ſufferings, his paſſion ſhall happen. Vide FRAGMENTS, Nos. 334, 335, page 72.

So much for the grammatical ſignification of Shiloh; it is ſufficient, that the ancient Jews are, in in this matter, agreed with the Chriſtians, that this word ſtands for Meſſiah the king: ſo the paraphraſts Onkelos and Jonathan, the ancient Hebrew commentaries on Geneſis, and the Talmudiſts themſelves explain it. The ſceptre continued among the Jews; they had kings of their own nation, in the perſons of the Herods; but ſoon afterwards, the ſceptre was intirely taken away from them, and has never been reſtored to them ſince.

The Jews ſeek in vain to put forced meanings on this prophecy of Jacob; ſaying, for example, that the ſceptre intimates the dominion of ſtrangers, to which they have been in ſubjection; or, the hope of ſeeing, one day, the ſceptre, or ſupreme power, ſettled again among themſelves. It is eaſy to perceive, that this is contrived, to deliver themſelves out of perplexity. In vain, likewiſe, they take refuge in certain princes of the captivity, whom they pretend to have ſubſiſted beyond the Euphrates, exerciſing an authority over their nation, little ſhort of abſolute; and being of the race of David. This pretended ſucceſſion of princes is perfectly chimerical; and though at certain times they could ſhew a ſucceſſion, it never continued long; and their authority was too obſcure, and too limited, to be the object of a prophecy ſo remarkable as this.

II. SHILOH, or Silo, a famous city of Ephraim, Joſh. xviii. xix. xxi. twelve miles diſtant from Shechem, according to Euſebius; ten miles, according to Jerom: it was in Acrabatene, according to both. In Jerom's time Shiloh was ruined, in Sophon. 1, & in Epitaph. Paulæ. and nothing remarkable was found there, but the foundation of the altar of burnt-offerings, which had been erected when the tabernacle was there. At Shiloh Joſhua aſſembled the people, to make the ſecond diſtribution of the Land of Promiſe. Joſh. xviii. 1, 2, 3. Here the tabernacle of the Lord was ſet up, when the people were ſettled in the country, Joſh. xix. 51. The ark, and the tabernacle of the Lord continued at Shiloh, from A. M. 2560, when it was ſet up by Joſhua, to A. M. 2888, ante A. D. 1116, when it was taken by the Philiſtines, under the adminiſtration of the high-prieſt Eli. At Shiloh Samuel began to prophecy, 1 Sam. iv. 4. Here the prophet Ahijah dwelt, 1 Kings xiv. 2. Jeremiah foretold, that the temple of Jeruſalem ſhould be reduced to the ſame condition as Shiloh was, Jer. vii. 12, 14. & xxvi. 6, 9. After the return of the ark out of the country of the Philiſtines, inſtead of returning it to Shiloh, the ark was taken to Kirjath-jearim, 1 Sam. vi. 21.

Mr. Reland conjectures, that from the name Shiloh, Pauſanias, lib. vi. cap. 24. took occaſion to ſay, that Silenus the companion of Bacchus was buried in Paleſtine. Benjamin of Tudela affirms, that the tomb of Samuel was to be ſeen here. On the medals of Shechem, or Neapolis, we ſee Silenus repreſented; which ſhould make us think, that it was rather at Shechem than at Shiloh, they might expect to find the tomb of this demigod.

SHILONITES, שילוני, that abides; from שלה ſhalah: otherwiſe, peace and abundance; from the ſame ſhalah, or שלי ſheli: or, according to the Syriac, that deceives or mocks.

SHILONITES, or Siloni, 1 Chron. ix. 5. This is taken by ſome, for the name of a man, father of Aſaiah, of Judah. Others derive it from the city of Shiloh, or from Selah, ſon of Judah.

SHILSHAH, שלשה, three, or the third, or prince, or chief; from שלש ſhaloſh, or שליש ſhaliſh. See SHALISHA.

II. SHIMEA, a Levite, ſon of Michael, and father of Berachiah, 1 Chron. vi. 39.

III. SHIMEA, ſon of Uzza, and father of Haggia, a Levite, 1 Chron. vi. 30.

IV. SHIMEA, brother of David, and father of Jonathan and Jonadab. Jonadab was a ſubtle man. Jonathan was a hero of David's army, 2 Sam. xxi. 21.

There were others of this name, of whom nothing particular is known.

SHIMEAM, שמאם, σαμαάμ, Vulg. Samaan, fame, reputation of the mother, or of the nation; from שם ſhem, to name, and אם am, a mother; or from אום om, a nation: otherwiſe, name of fear; from the ſame שם ſhem, to name, and אים am, terror, fear.

IV. SHIMEI, ſon of Libni, a deſcendant of Kohath. 1 Chron. vi. 29.

V. SHIMEI, ſon of Gera, a kinſman of Saul's, who when David was obliged to retire from Jeruſalem, began to curſe him and to throw ſtones, &c. 2 Sam. xvi. 5, 6, 7, 8, &c.

But when David returned to Jeruſalem, after the defeat and death of Abſalom, Shimei haſtened with the men of Judah, and with a thouſand men of Benjamin, to come before David: he threw himſelf at his feet, deſiring him to forgive and forget his fault. Abiſhai the ſon of Zeruiah expoſtulated in an angry manner; but David diſapproved of Abiſhai's zeal, and promiſed Shimei, with an oath, that he would not put him to death. And in truth, he ſuffered him to live in peace while he himſelf lived; but before his death, he recommended to Solomon, not to let Shimei go entirely unpuniſhed, but to exerciſe his diſcretion upon him.

When Solomon therefore aſcended the throne, he confined Shimei to Jeruſalem, where Shimei dwelt three years, till ſome of his ſlaves run away from him, and took ſanctuary with Achiſh king of Gath. Shimei went after them, and brought them to Jeraſalem. The king being informed of this, cauſed Shimei to come before him, and ſaid to him; did not I aſſure you, that the day you quitted your confinement, you ſhould be put to death? So he gave orders to Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada to kill him.

VI. SHIMEI, of Romanthi: had the ſuperintendance of king David's wine cellars. 1 Chron. xxvii 27.

SHIMRATH, שמרת, dregs, or priſon; from שמר ſhamar, or ſhemer; otherwiſe, buſh, thorn, or diamond; from שמיר ſhamir.

SHIMRATH, or Samarath, ſon of Shimhi, or Shema, of Benjamin, 1 Chron. viii. 21.

SHIMRI, שמרי, σαμβρὶ, that keeps, or impriſons; dregs, a buſh, or diamond. See Samaria.

II. SHIMRON, ſon of Iſſachar. Numb. xxvi. 24. Father of the Shimronites. 1 Chron. vii. 1. [Gen. xlvi. 13. Shimrom.]

SHIMSHAI, שמשי, σαμψὰ, my ſun; from שמש ſhemeſh, the ſun, and the pronoun י i, my.

SHIMSHAI, or Samſai, a ſecretary, or ſcribe, who, with Rehum the chancellor, wrote to king Artaxerxes againſt the Jews, lately returned from captivity, Ezr. iv. 8. A. M. 3470, ante A. D. 534. See ARTAXERXES.

SHINAB, שנאב, tooth of the father, or change of the father, or ſleep of the father; from שן ſhen, a tooth, or שנה ſhanah, change, or ישן jaſhan, ſleep, and אב ab, a father..

SHINAB, or Sennaab, king of Admah, one of the four cities burned by fire from heaven, becauſe of the crimes of its inhabitants, Gen. xix. 24. Shinab, with the other kings of Pentapolis, were overcome by Amraphel, and his allies. Gen. xiv. 2.

SHINAR, שנער, watch of him that ſleeps; from עיר hur, watch, and ישן jaſhan to ſleep: otherwiſe, ſpoil of the tooth; from ערה harah, ſpoil, and שן ſhen, a tooth; or change of the city, from שנה ſhanah, change, and עיר hir, a city. Theſe explications are neither natural nor certain, becauſe the word is not Hebrew.

SHINAR, or Sennaar, a province of Babylonia, wherein the tower of Babel was built. Gen. xi. 2. Calneh was built in the ſame country. Gen. x. 10. Amraphel, king of Shinar, was a potent prince in the time of Abraham. Gen. xiv. 1. Daniel ſays, i. 2, that Nebuchadnezzar carried away the ſacred veſſels of the temple of Jeruſalem, and put them in the temple of his god, in the land of Shinar. There is a great probability that the mountains of Singares, or Zagros

Zagras, as well as the city and river of Singare, take their name from Shinar, Sennaar, or Sengar.

SHIPHI, שפעי, σωφεὶ, inundation, or multitude; from שפע ſhephah: otherwiſe, knife; from שפי ſhephi.

SHIPHMITE, שפמי, lip, or margin, or ſhore; from שוף ſhuph, to break, and מים mim, waters.

SHIPHRAH, שפרה, handſome, or trumpet; from שפר ſhaphar, or ſhepher, according to different readings: or that does good, or chicken, little bird, according to the Syriac.

SHIPHRAH, or Sephorah, one of the midwives of Egypt, who preſerved the Hebrew children. Exod. i. 15. Some think ſhe was an Egyptian, but, it is more likely ſhe was an Iſraelite. See PUAH.

SHIPTAN, שפטן, judge, or that judges; from שפט ſhaphat.

SHIPTAN, or Sephtam, father of Kemuel, of Ephraim. Numb. xxxiv. 24.

SHISHA, שישא, ſix, the ſixth; from ששה ſhiſhah: otherwiſe, marble; from שיש ſhaiſh: or lifting up of the gift; from שי ſhi, preſent, gift, and נשה naſhah, to lift up.

SHISHA, or Siſa, father of Ahiah. Ahiah was ſecretary to king Solomon. 1 Kings iv. 3.

SHISHAK, שישק, preſent of the bag, of the pot, of the thigh; from שק ſhac, a bag, and שוק ſhok, a thigh: otherwiſe, of the kiſs; from נשק naſhak. This word is Egyptian, nor is it poſſible to find its etymology from the Hebrew.

SHISHAK, or Seſac, king of Egypt; he declared war againſt Rehoboam king of Judah, in the fifth year of Rehoboam. The king of Egypt had twelve thouſand war chariots, and ſixty thouſand horſe, with an innumerable multitude of people, out of Egypt, the countries of Lubim, of Sachim, and of Cuſh. He entered Judea, and made himſelf maſter of the ſtrongeſt places in the country advancing to Jeruſalem. Then the prophet Shemaiah came to Rehoboam and the princes of Judah, in Jeruſalem, and ſaid, thus ſaith the Lord, "as you have forſaken me, ſo have I delivered you up into the hands of king Shiſhak." But they acknowledging their fault, God ſeeing their humiliation, ſaid to Shemaiah; "ſince they have humbled themſelves under my hand, I will not deſtroy them."

Shiſhak entered Jeruſalem, but ſoon withdrew, taking with him the treaſures of the Lord's houſe, and thoſe of the king's palace. He carried away with him the golden bucklers that Solomon had made. The rabbins are of opinion, that the chief motive of this prince's war againſt Rehoboam, was becauſe he coveted to poſſeſs the ivory throne of Solomon, with which he was charmed. This is the Shiſhak to whom Jeroboam fled, toward the end of Solomon's reign; and when Shiſhak came into Judea, he did no harm to Jeroboam's territories. 2 Chron. xii. 2, 3, 4. 1 Kings xiv. 25, 26, &c. A. M. 3033, ante A. D. 971. Perhaps Jeroboam might invite him to invade Rehoboam's country. Till the time of Shiſhak Scripture mentions the kings of Egypt by the general name of Pharaoh; Shiſhak is the firſt whoſe proper name is mentioned. Chronologiſts are not agreed as to the correct order of Shiſhak in the Egyptian dynaſties. Some will have him to be the ſame as Seſonchis; others Seſoſtris, or Sethoſis. Marſham. Canon. Chronolog. ſæcul. 14 lib. iii. Uſher thinks him to be Seſonchis, and places the beginning of his reign A. M. 3026, ante A. D. 978.

This Shiſhak or Seſac, according to Sir Iſaac Newton, in his chronology of ancient kingdoms amended, was the greateſt conqueror, and the moſt celebrated hero of all antiquity, being the ſon of Ammon, or the Egyptian Jupiter, and known to the Greeks by the name of Bacchus, Oſiris, and Hercules; was the Belus of the Chaldeans, the Mars or Mavors of the Thracians, &c. He made great conqueſts in India, Aſſyria, Media, Scythia, Phœnicia, Syria, Judæa, &c. His army was at laſt routed in Greece by Perſeus; which diſgrace, together with the attempts of his brother Danaus, to uſurp his kingdom in his abſence, obliged him to return into Egypt, in the ninth year of his expedition. From hence he drove his brother Danaus, who took refuge in Greece, and was there celebrated by the name of Neptune, Japetus, Typhon, Python, &c.

SHITRAI, שטרי, σατραὶ, ſteward, head, or judge; from שטר ſhoter: according to the Syriac, obligation, or contract.

SHITRAI, or Setrai, a Sharonite, ſuperintendant of king David's ſhepherds, and flocks. 1 Chron. xxvii. 29.

SHITTIM, שטים, σαττείν, that turn away, or divert; from שטה ſhatah, or ſita: otherwiſe, ſcourges, rods, or thorns; from שוט ſhut.

SHITTIM, or Sethim, LXX. Ξύλα ἀσηπτα, Ligna imputribilia. A valuable kind of wood, of which Moſes made the greater part of the tables, altars, and planks, belonging to the tabernacle. Jerom generally keeps the Hebrew word Shittim, in his tranſlation. The Septuagint have rendered it by incorruptible wood. Jerom ſays, in Joel iii. ad finem, that the ſhittim wood grows in the deſarts of Arabia, that it is like white thorn in its colour and leaves, but not in its ſize; for the tree is ſo large, that it affords affords very long planks. The wood is hard, tough, ſmooth, without knots, and extremely beautiful; ſo that the rich and curious make ſcrews of it for their preſſes. This kind of wood does not grow in cultivated places, nor in any other place of the Roman empire, but only in the deſarts of Arabia. He ſays, likewiſe in Mich. vi. 5. and in Iſaiah xli. 19, that ſhittim wood reſembles white-thorn, and is of admirable beauty, ſolidity, ſtrength, and ſmoothneſs. It is thought he means the black Acacia, which is (they ſay) the only tree found in the deſarts of Arabia. Vide Bellon. obſervat. lib. ii. cap. lvi. and lxxx. Ætius, lib. iv. cap. xi. It is ſo hard and ſolid, as to become almoſt incorruptible. When cut it is of the colour of a Lotos tree, and planks are taken from it, twelve cubits long. Its branches do not riſe up in height; its leaves are round and large, like thoſe of a pear tree; ſoot colour underneath, and green above.

Proſper Alpinus, apud Authores Notarum in Theophraſt. lib. iv. ſays, that the Acacia is called Sant by the Egyptians; that it is found in Egypt, in places diſtant from the ſea; is very common about mount Sinai, on the mountains which border on the Rea-ſea; that it grows about as tall as a mulberry tree; its trunk is of the thickneſs of a plumb tree, its bark is black, rough, and covered with very ſharp thorns. Its leaves are oblong, ſmall, and very ſhort. It bears a pale, yellowiſh, or white, flower. The male bears no fruit, but is cloſe ſet with thorns. The female bears fruit twice a year, and has much fewer thorns. This, they ſay, is the true deſcription of the Acacia of Arabia. Thevenot, Voyage to the Levant, part ii. cap. xxvi. ſpeaking of the Acacia of Arabia, ſays, that it is not thicker, or higher, than our willows, but its leaves are very fine; that it is very thorny, and a gum is taken from it, which the Arabians call Akakia. But it is plain from St. Jerom's deſcription of the ſhittim wood, that it cannot be this Acacia of Proſper Alpinus and Thevenot. Yet very credible authors affirm, that no other trees grow in the deſarts of Arabia.

SHIZA, שזיא, this preſent; from זה this, that, and שי ſhi, preſent: otherwiſe, preſent that expands; from ſhi, and נזה nazah, to water, to ſpread.

SHOBACH, or Sobach, general of the army of Hadarezar, king of Syria. David obtained a compleat victory over him at Helam. 2 Sam. x. 16, 18, &c.

SHOBAI, שובי, captivity; from שבה ſhabah, that ſits down, that reſts, or turns back; from ישב jaſhab.

SHOBAI, or Sobai, of the race of the prieſts: returned from Babylon with Zerubbabel. Ezr. ii. 42.

SHOBAL, שובל, way, ear of corn, thigh; from שבל, ſhobel: otherwiſe, old age, vain; from בלה balah, to grow old, and שוא ſhova, vain.

SHOBEK, שובק, equalled to the vanity, or placed with the void; from שוה ſhavah, to place, to equal, and בוק buk, void: otherwiſe, vain diſſipation; from שוא ſhova, vanity, and בוק buk, diſſipation.

SHOBI, שבי, converſion, captivity, reſt. See Shobai.

SHOBI, or Sobi, ſon of Nahaſh, of the city of Rabbah, otherwiſe Philadelphia. He came with Barzillai to meet David when he fled from Abſalom, and brought him refreſhments. 2 Sam. xvii. 27.

SHOES, vide SANDALS. Pythagoras would have his diſciples wear ſhoes made of the bark of trees; probably, that they might not wear what were made of the ſkins of animals; as they refrained from the uſe of every thing that had life. The ancients had ſhoes which wholly covered their feet, like ours; and others which only defended the ſoles of their feet, with leather bands above, that left a part of the foot uncovered. The firſt ſort was called Calceus, Mulleus, Pero, Phæcaſium; the latter were called Caliga, Solea, Crepida, Baxea, Sandaleum. Anciently among the Romans their ſhoes were generally of crude, or untanned, leather. None but thoſe who had diſcharged the office of Edile, were allowed to wear the Mulleus, which was of leather dreſſed with allum, and of a red colour, [red-morocco.] It is ſaid that the Roman ſenators alſo wore ſhoes of dreſſed leather, of a black colour. The Roman women wore ſhoes pretty much like thoſe of the men. Ælian. var hiſt. lib. vii. cap. xi. Juvenal Sat. 7. ſpeaks of the moon, or Lunula, which was worn upon black ſhoes, Adpoſitam nigræ Lunam ſubtexit alutæ.

Iſaiah iii. 18, ſpeaks alſo of the moons which the Jewiſh women wore on their ſhoes. The emperor Aurelian (Vopiſc. in Aureliano, ad finem.) forbad forbad the wearing of red, yellow, white, or green ſhoes by men, and would allow them to women only. Heliogabalus, by a proclamation, regulated what women ſhould be permitted to wear gold, and precious ſtones, in their ſhoes. Among the Hebrews, women of faſhion, and ſubſtance, wore very valuable ſhoes. But we do not know any of their particular ornaments.

As to the military dreſs, or ſhoes, for the feet, we ſee from Moſes, that it was ſometimes of metal. Thy ſhoes ſhall be iron and braſs, ſays he, ſpeaking of Aſher; Deut. xxxiii. 25. And in the deſcription of the arms of Goliah, we find he had boots of braſs; 1 Sam. xvii. 6. Homer likewiſe gives them to his heroes; ſome had boots of braſs, others of copper, and thoſe of Hercules were tinſel. Vegetius ſays, that the Romans wore iron ſhoes. The Roman ſoldiers alſo put nails under their ſhoes; theſe very ſharp, and in great numbers. Iſidor. origin. lib. 19. cap. ult. Feſtus calls them clavata calceamenta. Joſephus, de Bello. lib. vii. cap. iii. ſpeaks of a Roman ſoldier of ſuch extraordinary boldneſs, as to let himſelf fall along the walls of the temple, becauſe the nails he had under his ſhoes, which the reſt of his comrades had alſo, would make him ſlide down. In the army of Antiochus the Great, luxury was ſo great, that moſt of the ſoldiers had golden nails under their ſhoes. Valer. Maxim. We are aſſured, that in the Eaſt, at this day, all the people, both rich and poor, even the wives of the great Turk himſelf, and of his baſhaws, wear iron plates at the heels, and toes, of their pumps. Bellon. Obſervat. lib. iii. cap. 44.

SHOHAM, שהם, an emerald, or other precious ſtone; from שהם ſhohem.

SHOPHAC, שופך, who ſcatters, or is ſcattered; from שפך ſhaphac.

SHOSHANNIM, ששנים, an inſtrument of ſix ſtrings; from שש ſheſh.

SHOSHANNIM, or Soſanim; ששנים על Aquil. ἐπὶ τοῖς κρίνοις. Sym. ἐπὶ τῶν ἀνθῶν. This title is before Pſalm lxix. and lxxx. The LXX. tranſlate, thoſe that ſhall be changed: St. Jerom and Aquila, the lilies: Symmachus, the flowers. We think Soſhannim to ſignify an inſtrument of ſix ſtrings; or, a ſong of rejoicing.

SHOULDER. To give or lend his ſhoulder, for bearing of a burden, ſignifies to ſubmit to ſervitude. Gen. xlix. 15. Iſſachar bowed his ſhoulder to bear, and became a ſervant unto tribute. The preacher adviſes his pupil to ſubmit his ſhoulder to the yoke of wiſdom. Ecclus. vi. 26. The Meſſiah has delivered his people from the rod, or from the yoke to which they were ſubject. Iſaiah ix. 4. Baruch, ii. 21, adviſes the captive Jews at Babylon to ſubmit their ſhoulders to king Nebuchadnezzar, that they might live at eaſe under his government. In a contrary ſenſe, Scripture calls that a rebellious ſhoulder, Nehem. ix. 29, which will not ſubmit to the yoke; and thoſe who bear the yoke with joint conſent, ſervientes humero uno. Zeph. iii. 9.

Marks of honour and command were worn on the ſhoulder. Job, xxxi. 36, deſires of God to decide his cauſe; Surely I would take it upon my ſhoulder, and bind it as a crown to me. Iſaiah ix. 6, ſays, that the Meſſiah ſhall bear the inſignia of his government on his ſhoulder. God promiſes Eliakim the ſon of Hilkiah, to give him the key of the houſe of David, and to lay it upon his ſhoulder.

To be borne upon ſhoulders, ſometimes ſtands for a kind of honour and diſtinction. God ſays, that when he ſhall bring back his people from the captivity of Babylon, he will give a ſignal to the people, and they ſhall bring thy ſons in their arms, and thy daughters ſhall be carried upon their ſhoulders. Iſai. xlix. 22. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CLXI.

Sometimes, on the contrary, this denotes great weakneſs, great diſgrace. God commanded Ezekiel to make a breach in the wall, and carry out his goods thereby, on his ſhoulder, in the night time; to repreſent the taking of Jeruſalem, and the captivity of the king, and people. Ezek. xii. 6, 7. Iſaiah xiv. 25, and Baruch vi. 3, to ſhew the impotence of idols, ſay, that men are obliged to carry them upon their ſhoulders.

The Jews have a tradition, that Shuah inſpired into her ſons the deteſtable reſolution, of preventing Tamar from becoming a mother by them. See TAMAR and ER. The teſtament of the twelve patriarchs calls this woman Bathſhuah, daughter of Barſhan, king of Adullam.

It was given alſo to the hoſteſs of Eliſha, who entertained that prophet when he came to Shunem. 2 Kings iv. 12, 25, 36. SHUPPIM, שפם, beard, muſtachoes: otherwiſe, their lips, or their brims; from שפה ſhaphah, lip, brim: otherwiſe, their breaking; from שוף ſhuph, to break, and the pronoun מ am, theirs.

SHUR, שור, wall, ox, or that beholds; from שור ſhur, or ſhor, according to different readings.

SHUR, or Sur, a city in Arabia Petræa, which gave name to the deſart of Shur. Gen. xvi. 7. Exod. xv. 22. 1 Sam. xv. 7. xxvii. 8. Ptolemy ſpeaks of the city of Suratte, in Arabia Petræa.

SHUSHAN, שושן, an inſtrument of ſix ſtrings.

SHUSHAN, שושן, σϑσοὶ, a city, Dan. viii. 2. Vulgate, ſuſis. Lilly, or roſe; from שושן ſhoſhan: otherwiſe, joy, from שוש ſhuſh.

I. SHUSHAN, or Suſan: This Hebrew word ſignifies a Lilly. It is read before Pſalm ix. We think Shuſhan to be the name of a muſical inſtrument of ſix ſtrings. The Vulgate reads, Pro his qui immutabuntur.

II. SHUSHAN, Suſan, or Suſes, the capital city of Suſiana, or the country of Elam, i. e. Perſia; Dan. viii. 2. Daniel always calls it the palace.

I was

I was at Shuſhan in the palace: [q. Shuſhan royal?] becauſe the kings of Chaldea had here a royal palace. After Cyrus, the kings of Perſia took up a cuſtom of paſſing the winter here, and the ſummer at Ecbatana. Vide Strab. lib. xv. Xenophon, Cyropæd. lib. viii. Athen, lib. xii. &c. The winter was very moderate at Shuſhan, but the heat of the ſummer was ſo great, that the very lizards and ſerpents if ſurpriſed by it in the ſtreets, were even burned up by the heat of the ſun. Strabo. lib. 15. This city ſtands on the river Ulai. In this city, and on this river, Daniel had the viſion of the ram with two horns, and the goat with one horn, &c. in the third year of the reign of Belſhazzar. Dan. viii. 1, 2, 3, &c. A. M. 3447, ante A. D. 557.

Alſo in this city of Shuſhan, the hiſtory of Eſther happened. Here Ahaſuerus, or Darius, the ſon of Hyſtaſpes, generally reſided and reigned. Eſth. i. 1, 2, 5, &c. Pliny, lib. vi. cap. xxvii. ſays, he rebuilt Shuſhan, enlarged, and adorned it. Nehemiah was alſo at Shuſhan, when he obtained from king Artaxerxes permiſſion to return into Judea, and to repair the walls of Jeruſalem. Nehem. i. 1. Benjamin of Tudela, and Abulfarage, place the tomb of Daniel at Chuzeſtan, which is the ancient city of Shuſhan, the capital of the province of Elam.

This city at this day, among the Perſians, is named Touſter or Schouſther, and is the capital of Kuſiſtan. King Sapor cauſed a bank of a prodigious height to be raiſed here, to make the river Choaſpes to aſcend. D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. p. 464, 829, 896. The Tarikmontekeb ſays, that the tomb of the prophet Daniel was ſtill to be ſeen here in his time. Some Perſian hiſtorians aſcribe the foundation of this city to Huſchenk, ſon of Siamech, the ſecond prince of the firſt dynaſty of Perſia.

Lightfoot ſays, de templo, cap. 3. that the outward gate of the eaſtern wall of the temple, was called the gate of Shuſhan; and that upon this gate was carved the figure of the city of Shuſhan, in acknowledgement of the decree granted at Shuſhan by Darius ſon of Hyſtaſpes, which permitted the rebuilding of the temple. [As I can hardly bring myſelf to admit the repreſentation of a city—a heathen city—carved on, or about, the temple—Query—Whether this was not the arms, or inſignia, of the city Shuſhan?—as, for inſtance, three lilies, proper.]

SHUTHELA, שׁוּתלח, plant or verdure; from שׁוּת ſhuth, and לח lach, verdure: otherwiſe, moiſt pot; from שׁתה ſhuthah, to drink, or drinking-pot, and לח lach, moiſt.

SHUTHELA, or Suthala, ſon of Ephraim, and father of Bared. Head of a family.

SIAHA, כיעהא, motion; from שׁעה ſhahah: or, according to the Syriac, help, or aſſiſtance; from סיע ſiha.

SIBBECHAI, or Sobai-hai, of the city of Huſhathi, a hero of David's army. He killed the giant Saph in the battle at Gob, otherwiſe Gazer.

SIBBOLETH, ſee SHIBBOLETH.

SIBRAIM, or Sabarim; a place which terminated the land of promiſe, north. Ezekiel ſays, xlvii. 16. that this city was between the confines of Hamath and Damaſcus. I imagine it to be that which Iſmael Abulfeda calls Hovvarin a village of the country of Ems, or Hamath, ſouth-eaſt of that city.

SIBYLS. Scripture no where mentions the Sybils; and all that is ſaid of them has ſo little certainty, that we ought not to ſpend much time about them. The word Sybil is Greek, Σιβύλλη, quaſi Σιὸς βέλη, Jovis conſilium; Σιός pro Δίος, Laconicè, according to moſt etymologiſts; and ſignifies the counſel of God. The Sibyls among the pagans were, they ſay, what the prophets, and propheteſſes, were among the Hebrews. They foretold future events; and revealed important truths to the people. There are generally reckoned ten: the Cumæan, the Cumanean, the Perſian, the Helleſpontiacan, the Lybian, the Samian, the Delphian, the Phrygian, the Tiburtine, and the Erythræan.

Clemens Alexandrinus, Strom. lib. vi. quotes theſe words as from St. Paul; take the Greek books in your hands, read the Sibyls, and ſee what they ſay of the unity of God, and how they foretell what is to come, and you will there clearly find the ſon of God. Several of the ancient fathers cited verſes aſcribed to the Sybils, and drew from them arguments in favour of the chriſtian religion. But the more ſkilful criticks of our days are perſuaded, that theſe verſes were compoſed afterwards, and were never known to the Sibyls. See Blondel on the Sibyls, Cauſabon againſt Baron. Exercit. 1. ſec. 10. cap. 11. Eraſm. Schmith. Diſſert. de Sibyllius. M. du Pin. Proleg. to the Bible. Servat. Gallæus, Sibyllina Oracula. Amſtelod. 1689. Item Diſſertationes in Sibyllis, Amſtelod. 1688.

Plato, in Phædro. Ariſtotle, de admirandis. Varro, Dionyſius Halycarnaſſæus, Cicero, Livy, ſpeak of the Sibyls with honour. Virgil without doubt took from the Sibylline verſes, what he ſays concerning the birth of the Meſſiah: for one can hardly apply to any other birth, theſe verſes of his fourth eclogue.

Ultima Cumæi venit jam carminis ætas,
Magnus ab integro ſæclorum naſcitur ordo,
Jam redit & Virgo, rediunt Saturnia regna,
Jam nova progenies cœlo dimittitur alto, &c.

From the ſame ſource Suetonius derived what he ſays, "That in the time of Veſpaſian there was a conſtant and general opinion propagated through the whole Eaſt, that fate had decreed, that about that time ſhould come forth out of Judæa, thoſe who ſhould obtain the empire of the world." Vide FRAGMENT, No. 332. Joſephus who lived in the time of Veſpaſian, quotes in his hiſtory, a paſſage from the Sibyls, that mentioned the deluge. Joſeph Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 5. Clemens Alexandrinus aſſures us, that St. Paul in his preaching ſometimes cited the Sibylline books, and referred the Gentiles to them. Juſtin Martyr, Athenagoras, Theophilus of Antioch, Tertullian, Lactantius. Euſebius, St. Jerome, St. Auſtin, and others, made good uſe of them againſt the pagans; and the frequent uſe they made of them, occaſioned the name of Sibylliſts to be applied to them. Vide Orig. lib. vii. contra Celſum.

This is more than enough to juſtify us, for inſerting this ſhort account of theſe famous and antient propheteſſes. Their lives, and times, are circumſtances not well known. The moſt famous, was ſhe whom the Greeks named Erythrea, becauſe ſhe was born at Erythra in Ionia; and, becauſe ſhe left her country, and came to ſettle at Cuma in Italy, the Latins named her Cumana. Juſtin Martyr, cohortatio ad Græcos, ſays, "that it was pretended ſhe was by extraction of Babylonia, and daughter to Beroſus the Chaldean hiſtorian. Coming it is not known how, into Campania, ſhe there gave forth her oracles, at a city called Cuma, about ſix miles from Baia. I have ſeen the place (adds he) which is a large oratory cut out of a rock, which much have coſt much labour to make; for it is very well worked, and very capacious. There this Sibyl gave her reſponſes, as I was informed by the inhabitants of the place, who preſerve the tradition from father to ſon. In the middle of the grotto they ſhewed me three hollow places, which were alſo cut out of the rock, where they ſaid ſhe uſed to bathe herſelf, when they were filled with water. After ſhe had dreſſed herſelf, ſhe withdrew into the moſt remote apartment of the grotto, which was a kind of cell, cut alſo out of the rock, and there placing herſelf upon an elevated ſeat, which projected into the middle of the cell, ſhe there pronounced her oracles."

This is what Juſtin Martyr ſays of the Sibyl's cave at Cuma. We are aſſured by Onuphrius, lib. de Sibyllis, & carminibus Sibyllinis, it was in the ſame condition till A.D. 1539, at which time a great earthquake ſhook the whole country of Campania, and at Puteoli threw up from the bottom of the ſea great maſſes of ſand, gravel, and bituminous matter, which overwhelmed this cave of the Sibyl. If this, of whom we are ſpeaking, was daughter to Beroſus the Babylonian ſhe muſt have lived after the reign of Alexander the Great. Virgil places her at the time of the ſiege of Troy, ſince he makes Æneas conſult her at his coming into Italy. Others place her in the reign of Tarquinius Superbus, the laſt king of Rome. [This Sibyl's grotto was not ſo utterly ruined in 1539 but what it has been ſhewn to modern touriſts, and anſwers the deſcriptions of Juſtin, as well as the reports of tradition.] Dionyſius Halicarnaſſenſis lib. iv, Aulus Gellius, Noct. Attic. lib. 1. cap. 19. Lactantius, de falſa relig. lib. 1. cap. 6, &c. relate, that under the reign of the laſt Tarquin, there came a ſtrange woman to Rome, who offered the king nine volumes of the Sibylline oracles, for which ſhe aſked three hundred pieces of gold. Tarquin refuſed to give her this ſum, on which ſhe inſtantly burned three of the nine volumes, and for the remaining ſix ſhe aſked the ſame ſum. Tarquin continuing to refuſe her, with great deriſion, ſhe burnt three more of them in his preſence, and ſtill inſiſted on having the three hundred pieces of Gold for the remaining three volumes. A proceeding ſo extraordinary made Tarquin ſuſpect, that there muſt be ſome myſtery in it. He therefore ſent to inquire of the augurs, their opinion about it. They anſwered him, that what he had ſo deſpiſed was a preſent ſent him by the Gods; that it was great pity he had not bought the whole nine volumes, and urged him to give the woman what ſhe aſked, for the remaining three. He did ſo, the woman delivered him the books, and adviſed that they might be carefully preſerved, as containing the future deſtiny of Rome.

After theſe words ſhe withdrew, and it was not known what became of her. Tarquin cauſed theſe three books to be encloſed in a kind of ſtone cheſt, and to be placed in a ſubterraneous vault in the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus, and committed to the care of two perſons of the firſt quality in Rome; who were charged to let no body read them, or to copy them, without expreſs orders from the king. After the abolition of kingly government at Rome, they continued the ſame regard for theſe books as before, and the Romans made them one of their greateſt ſecrets of policy, making the people believe, that whatever they judged proper was taken out of theſe books, which were never conſulted, or opened, but by expreſs order from the ſenate.

While the civil war raged between Marius and Sylla

Sylla, (Plutarch in Sylla. Dionyſ. Halycarn. lib. iv. Appian. de bell. civil. lib. i. Tacit. hiſtor. lib. iii. cap. 72.) an accidental fire took hold of the capitol, and the Sibylline books were conſumed by the flames. After ſome years, when the capitol was rebuilt, Scribonius Curio, the conſul, propoſed to the ſenate to reſtore the verſes of the Sybils. They were informed of ſome verſes of the Erythrean Sibyl extant in the city of Erythra, the place of her nativity. Three ſenators were deputed to go thither, who there collected about a thouſand Greek verſes, which paſſed for the prophecies of this Sibyl. They brought them to Rome; and at the ſame time made other collections from other places. The whole was laid up in the capitol, inſtead of thoſe which the fire had conſumed. Lactant. de falſa Relig. lib. vi. & de ira Dei, cap. xxii. & de falſa Sapient. cap. xvii.

But there being ſeveral copies of theſe verſes in circulation, and as every private perſon made ſuch additions to his own copy as he thought fit; to preſerve the credit of theſe books, the Romans forbad all private perſons on pain of death, from keeping any copies of them. Theſe orders were but ill obſerved, and Auguſtus, at the commencement of his office of Pontifex Maximus, (Tacit. Annal. vi. Juſtin. Martyr. Apolog. ii.) renewed the former prohibitions, and made diligent ſearch after thoſe copies, examined them ſtrictly, and cauſed all thoſe to be burned which were judged to have been corrupted; and he depoſited the others in the capitol; with thoſe that were there before. Afterwards, Tiberius made a new review of them, and condemned ſeveral volumes to the flames. And theſe Sibylline oracles were ſtill in vogue till about A. D. 399, when they were intirely deſtroyed.

What occaſioned their deſtruction was this: ſome time previous a prophecy was handed about in Rome, ſays Aug. de Civit. Dei. lib. xviii. cap. 53. 54. taken, as they pretended, from the books of the Sibyls, which foretold, that the Chriſtian religion being founded on the magical ſorceries of Peter, ſhould not continue above 365 years. This period fell on A. D. 398, which is the year 368, from the aſcenſion of Jeſus Chriſt. Yet the Chriſtian religion continued to be as proſperous as ever. The emperor Honorius therefore, taking occaſion from this piece of Pagan malice, ordered Stilico the year following, to cauſe all the books of the Sibyls to be burned, which was executed in 399: and they pulled down the temple of Apollo to its very foundations, wherein theſe pretended prophecies had been kept.

Yet this has not prevented the appearing of a collection of Greek verſes, in eight books, which is now extant under the title of "Oracles of the Sibyls." But this is neither the old book of the Sibyls, known at Rome from the time of Tarquin; nor the collection made after the civil wars of Marius and Sylla; nor that reformed and purified by Auguſtus. It may include a part of the Sibylline oracles, as in the time of Auguſtus, and afterwards; but the reſt is a rhapſody put together by ſome Chriſtian, with ſo little wit and diſcretion, that the impoſture ſtares one in the face, every moment. He makes the Sibyl ſay, for example, that ſhe was wife to one of the three ſons of Noah, and that ſhe had lived with him in the ark during the whole of the deluge. Lib. Sibyl. lib. iii. in fine. The author ſhews himſelf a Chriſtian, in a paſſage which begins with theſe words; Nos igitur Chriſti de ſtirpe creati. Ibid. lib. viii. He ſpeaks of the incarnation, of the birth, of the circumciſion, of the reſurrection, of the aſcenſion of Jeſus Chriſt, with as much accuracy as the Evangeliſts. He deſcribes the reign of Jeſus Chriſt upon earth, according to the notions of the millinaries. Ibid. lib. ii. iii. He gives a ſucceſſion of the Roman emperors, according to their order, from Julius Cæſar to Antoninus Pius, and to the adoption of Marcus Aurelius and Lucius Verus. Ibid. lib. v. All which proves, that theſe books, in the ſtate in which we now have them, were compoſed about the middle of the ſecond century.

SICAMINUM, otherwiſe Epha, or Kepha, or Caipha, a city at the foot of mount Carmel, on the Mediterranean ſea, over againſt Ptolemais, which is diſtant from it only the extent of its harbour. See CAIPHA.

SICERA, שכר, σικέρα, whatever can intoxicate. Heb. Shechar, Deut. xxix. 6. This word denotes, in particular, the wine of the palm-tree.

SICHAR, Σιχὰρ. St. Jerom pretends this is the fault of the copiers, who read Sichar inſtead of Sichem. From שכר ſhicar, drunkenneſs.

SICHAR, or Shechem, now Naplouſe, a city of Samaria. See SHECHEM.

The Hebrews give the name of Sichar, (i. e. drunkenneſs) to the city of Shechem, by way of mockery. Iſaiah xxviii. 1. calls the Iſraelites of Ephraim, Sicchorim, i. e. drunkards: This gave occaſion to the Jews to change the name of Shechem into Sichar, [or, was, at leaſt, analogous to that change.]

SICHOR, of Aſher. See SIHOR.

SICYON, Σικυὼν. Some Greek copies have σικυόνη Sicyone, a place where cucumbers grow; from σίκυος, a cucumber.

SICYON,

SICYON, a city of Peloponneſus, or of Achaia, to which the Romans wrote in favour of the Jews. 1 Macc. xv. 23.

SIDE, Latus. The evangeliſt St. John tells us, xix. 34. that when Jeſus Chriſt was upon the croſs, his ſide was wounded by a ſoldier, who pierced it with his ſpear, or lance, from which wound proceeded water and blood: This ſoldier is generally called Longinus, and they make a ſaint of him. St. John does not acquaint us which of his two ſides were pierced. The Arabic and Ethiopic verſions, and the Goſpel of the Infancy of Jeſus Chriſt, tranſlated from the Arabic, and ſome of the ancients read the right ſide; Apud Creniam, parte ii. Animadverſ. p. 165. but others think, that he was pierced on his left ſide; Luc. Brugenſ. Franc. Collins, alii. The poet Prudentius ſays, that he was pierced from ſide to ſide; Per utrumque Latus!

SIDE, Σίδη, hunting, nets, ambuſh; from צדה tſadah: otherwiſe, viaticum, proviſion, nouriſhment; from צוד tſud. The Greek word σίδη ſignifies a pomegranate, or the pomegranate tree.

SIDE, a city of Pamphilia. The ſenate of Rome wrote to the inhabitants of Side, in favour of the Jews. 1 Macc. xv. 23.

SIDON, ציידן, hunting, fiſhing, veniſon; from ציד tſid, or צידה tſidah.

I. SIDON, or Tzidon, the eldeſt ſon of Canaan, Gen. x. 15. founder of the very ancient city of Sidon. the capital of Phenecia.

II. SIDON, or Zidon, a very ancient and famous city, founded by Sidon the eldeſt ſon of Canaan. Strabo, lib. xvi. places Sidon four hundred ſtadia from Berytus, and two hundred from Tyre.

The name Sidon is commonly derived from the Hebrew or Tyrian word צדה Zada which ſignifies to fiſh. Joſhua xi. 8, calls it Sidon the Great, by way of eminence. Hence ſome have taken occaſion to ſay, that in his time there were two Sidons, a greater and a leſſer. But no geographer has mentioned any other Sidon, than Sidon the Great. Joſhua aſſigned Sidon to the tribe of Aſher. Joſh. xix. 28. but this tribe could never get poſſeſſion of it, Judg. i. 31. It is ſituated on the Mediterranean, in a fine country, one day's journey from Paneas, or from the fountains of Jordan: Joſeph. Antiq. lib. v. cap. ii. It has a fine habour. Abulfeda places it ſixty-ſix miles from Damaſcus. This city has been always famous for its great trade, and navigation. At preſent it is called Zaide. There are extant ſome ancient medals of Sidon, whereon are ſeen ancient Phenician characters, which are the ſame as the Hebrew characters before the captivity of Babylon. The principal deities of the Sidonians were Baal, and Aſtarte, or, the ſun, and moon: alſo Hercules. The Hebrews often fell into the idolatry of the Phenecians, eſpecially after Ahab, king of Iſrael, married Jezebel, the daughter of Eſhbaal, king of the Zidonians. 1 Kings xvi. 31. There is frequent mention of this city in the Scriptures.

Mearah of the SIDONIANS, Maarah Sidonierum, Joſh. xiii. 4. a city probably very near Sidon. Others think it was a cavern; מערה, as Mearah, in Hebrew may ſignify.

SIENE, vide SYENE.

SIGIONOTH. See SHIGGAION.

SIGN. This word is taken for whatever ſerves to expreſs, or repreſent, another thing; as, when the Lord gave to Noah the rainbow, as a ſign of his covenant; Gen. ix. 12, 13. When he appointed circumciſion to Abraham, as the ſeal of the covenant made with him, and his poſterity, Gen. xvii. 11. The ſun and the moon are appointed by God for ſigns, and ſeaſons. Gen. i. 14. [Often rendered token, Eng. Tr.]

2. SIGN is put for a miracle: Thou ſhalt do theſe ſigns, and wonders, in the midſt of Egypt, ſays the Lord to Moſes; Exod. iv. 7, 8, 9. and, if the Egyptians do not believe the firſt ſign, they will believe the ſecond, &c. The word ſign is very frequent in this ſenſe, in Scripture.

3. SIGN, or token, is often put for the proof, or evidence, of a thing: So Exod. iii. 12. This ſhall be a token (or ſign) unto thee, that I have ſent thee. Judg. vi. 17. Shew me a ſign, that thou talkeſt with me, i. e. a proof. 2 Kings xx. 8. What ſhall be the ſign (or evidence) that the Lord will heal me? This acceptation agrees with the firſt mentioned; alſo Gen. iv. 15. And the Lord ſet a mark (a ſign) upon Cain; he put a token upon him that he might be known, [rather he gave him a ſign of ſecurity to eaſe his mind: ſays SHUCKFORD.] but vide FRAGMENT, No. 341.

4. SIGNS of Heaven; SIGNS of the Magicians; phœnomena of the heavens; impoſtures of magicians, which they uſe to deceive the unwary. The Lord fruſtateth the tokens (or ſigns) of the liars, and maketh diviners mad. Iſaiah xliv. 25. And Jer. x. 2, Be not diſmayed at the ſigns of Heaven, for the heathen are diſmayed at them.

5. SIGN. Iſaiah viii. 18. Behold, I and the children whom the Lord hath given me, are for ſigns and for wonders in Iſrael; i. e. what ſhall happen to me, ſhall be a prophetic ſimilitude of what ſhall happen to the people. See alſo Ezek. iv. 3. The Lord pours down his vengeance upon ſinners, and makes them a ſign, a public and evident proof of his wrath. Ezek. xiv. 8.

SIGNAL, or ſign, ſet up on the mountains in time of danger. See POSTS.

SIHON,

SIHON, סיחון, rooting out; from נסח naſach, otherwiſe, concluſion.

SIHON, or Sehon, king of the Amorites, not only refuſing paſſage to the Hebrews, but coming to attack them, was himſelf ſlain, and his army routed. Numb. xxi. 21, 22. Deut. i. 4, 11, 24, 26, 30. Pſal. cxxxv. 11. & cxxxvi. 19. Heſhbon his capital city was taken, and his dominions were diſtributed among Iſrael. This war happened in the laſt year of Moſes's life, ſome months before the Iſraelites entered the Land of Promiſe; A.M. 2553, ante A.D. 1451, Moſes obſerves, that Sihon had made a conqueſt from the Moabites, of the beſt part of the country he then poſſeſſed, and had ſettled himſelf in their place. On this account, in the time of Jephtha, the Ammonites and Moabites demanded that country which Iſrael had formerly conquered from Sihon, pretending it belonged to them. Judg. xi. 12, 13, 14. But Jephtha anſwered, that Moſes and the Hebrews having taken it from Sihon, who was then in peaceable poſſeſſion of it; and having conquered it in a fair war, it belonged to Iſrael, and that neither Moab nor Ammon had any right to it.

SIHOR, שיחור, συὼρ, black, trouble, or early in the morning; from שחר ſhachar.

I. SIHOR, or Sichor, a name of the Nile, Joſh. xiii. 3. a fluvio turbido. Heb. a fluvio Sihor. שיחור, Sichor. Vide & Jer. ii. 18. Sihor, or Sichor, in Hebrew, ſignifies trouble. The water of the Nile is generally turbid. See NILE.

II. SIHOR. This is thought to be a city in the weſtern part of the tribe of Aſher. It cannot be far from Carmel. M. Reland imagines, (Palæſtin. lib. iii. p. 730.) that this may be the city, or the river, of Crocodiles, which Pliny, lib. v. cap. xix. and Strabo, lib. xvi. place in this country. Strabo ſays, it is between Ptolemais and the tower of Straton, or Cæſarea of Paleſtine. The Hebrew reads Shihor-libnath, Joſh. xix. 26. שיחור לבנת and we think Libnah to be the white promontory between Ecdippe and Tyre, Pliny, lib. v. cap. xix. and that Sihor is a rivulet of this neighbourhood.

SILAS, Σίλας, the third; from שלש ſhalaſh, three, or the third. Is thought to be the ſame as Silvanus, which ſignifies one that loves the woods or foreſts.

SILAS, or Sylvanus, was, according to St. Luke, Acts xv. 22, one of the chief men among the brethren; which gives room to judge, that he was of the number of the ſeventy. When a diſpute was raiſed at Antioch, about the obſervance of the legal ceremonies, they choſe Paul, Barnabas, Judas, and Silas, to go to Jeruſalem, to adviſe with the apoſtles on this queſtion. He is believed by Hieron. Grot. Fromond. to be the ſame Silas, mentioned by the name of Sylvanus, in the two Epiſtles of St. Paul to the Theſſalonians. St. Peter ſent his firſt Epiſtle by him from Rome, wherein he ſtiles him a faithful brother. Silas joined himſelf to St. Paul; and after Paul and Barnabas had parted, on account of John Mark, Acts xv. 37—41. A. D. 51. Silas went with St. Paul, to viſit the churches of Syria and Cilicia. Thence they paſſed into Lycaonia, Phrygia, and Galatia; and laſtly, they croſſed the ſea, and came into Macedonia. Vide PAUL.

At Phillippi, they found a woman who was poſſeſſed with a ſpirit of Python, from which St. Paul diſpoſſeſſed her. Hereupon her maſters ſeized Paul and Silas, dragged them before the magiſtrates, and accuſed them of introducing cuſtoms, contrary to thoſe of the Romans. The magiſtrates ordered Paul and Silas to be publicly whipped, and impriſoned. In the night there was a great earthquake; and the jailor was converted and received baptiſm with his whole family. The day following, the magiſtrates ſent orders to liberate Paul and Silas; but Paul replied, that Roman citizens were not to be uſed thus, and that the magiſtrates themſelves ſhould come and liberate them. Theſe words of St. Paul give room to judge that Silas alſo was a freeman of Rome.

From Phillippi they went to Theſſalonica and Berea; St. Paul proceeding to Athens, he ſent for Silas thither, who however did not join him again till they met at Corinth, in the year of Chriſt, 52; here they wrote the two Epiſtles to the Theſſalonians. Silas was very uſeful to him in preaching the Goſpel. 2 Cor. i. 19. The Roman Martyrology places the feaſt of St. Silas July 13. Ado ſays, he died in Macedonia, and ſeems to hint, by martyrdom. The Greeks improperly diſtinguiſh between Silas and Sylvanus; and put both their feaſts, July 30. Some refer to Silas, what St. Paul ſays to the Corinthians; 2 Cor. viii. 18, 19. And we have ſent with him the brother, whoſe praiſe is in the goſpel, throughout all the churches: And not that only, but who was alſo choſen of the churches to travel with us, with this grace which is adminiſtered by us, to the glory of the ſame Lord, &c. [Some have thought Silas was the ſame as the evangeliſt St. Luke: Silas referring to woods, and Lucus to groves.]

SILAS and CARPUS. It is pretended, that theſe were the two diſciples ſent by John the Baptiſt to Jeſus to enquire whether he were the Chriſt? Matth. xi. 2, 3, &c. Not that he doubted doubted it, but to give theſe two diſciples an opportunity of knowing our Saviour, of being inſtructed by him, and of being ſatisfied who he was. See Gerhard. Comment. ad Matth. xi. & Baron. not. in Martyrol. Rom. Jul. 13. & Octob. 13.

SILENCE. This word does not only ſignify ordinary ſilence, or refraining from ſpeaking; but alſo in the ſtile of the Hebrews, to be quiet, to remain immoveable. Exod. xv. 16. ידמו כאבן, as ſtill as a ſtone. The Vulgate has it, Fiant immobiles quaſi lapis. Lam. ii. 18. Give thyſelf no reſt; let not the apple of thine eye ceaſe, i. e. to ſhed tears. Joſh. x. 12, 13. Sun, ſtand thou ſtill upon Gibeon: Heb. be ſilent. And the ſun ſtood ſtill, and the moon ſtayed, or were ſilent, at the command of Joſhua.

II. SILENCE is taken for an entire ruin and deſtruction, for a total ſubjection, Iſai. xv. 1. ער נדמה. Ar of Moab is laid waſte, and brought to ſilence, or, utterly deſtroyed. The Lord our God hath put us to ſilence, or, has brought great calamities upon us. Jer. viii. 14.

III. SILENCE is taken for death and the grave: Pſal. xciv. 17. Unleſs the Lord had been my help, my ſoul had almoſt dwelt in ſilence.

SILK, Sericum. No mention is made of Silk, in the Latin text, except in three places. (1) Eſth. viii. 15. Mordecai being promoted to Haman's place, was cloathed in a mantle of ſilk [our tranſlation ſays, In royal apparel of blue and white, and with a great crown of gold, and with a garment of fine linen and purple.] (2) Ezekiel xxvii. 16. places ſilk among the merchandiſes brought to Tyre. (3) St. John, in his Revelation, chap. xviii. 12. ſpeaking of the downfall of Rome, ſays, that no longer any ſilk ſhall be ſeen there, nor other rich merchandizes. But the Hebrew word buz בוץ, which in Eſther is tranſlated by Sericum, ſignifies rather the true Byſſus. Vide BYSSUS. The word Ramoth, in ראמות which in the Vulgate is rendered by Sericum, according to the Chaldee ſignifies precious ſtones; according to Aquila, works of ſilk; according to modern interpreters, Coral.

But it is generally thought, that the Hebrew word משי Meſhi, which, in Ezek. xvi 10. St. Jerom has tranſlated by ſubtilia, fine linen, ſignifies ſilk. [משי Meſhi Vulgate Subtilibus, Rabb. Kimchi, Jarchi, Abenezra, Abravanel, Jun. Munſt. Pagn. Mont. Grot. Fuller, alii, Sericam. ſilk] The LXX. have rendered it by Τριχαπλον, Trichapton, which ſome underſtand of a web wove with hair, worn by women on their heads, as [the caul of] a kind of peruke; others of a web of ſilk, which women wore over their hair [a net-work.] Symmachus tranſlated Meſhi by Ὀπένδυμα an head-dreſs; and Aquila, by Ἀνθεμοῦν flouriſhed work; the Syriac, by a woman's dreſs. All which ſhew, that the antients were not ſatisfied that meſhi ſignified ſilk; and that it is very doubtful whether Ezekiel intended it, or that ſcripture has mentioned it; unleſs perhaps, in Iſaiah xix. 9. עבדי פשתים שריקות. LXX. Λίνον χιζὸν. Sym. Λίνον κτενίζον, where we find the Hebrew word Sherikoth, which St. Jerom has tranſlated by ſubtilia; and which others tranſlate by ſilk, or fine flax, or crude flax, of a yellow or whitiſh colour; the LXX. by divided flax; Symmachus, by carded flax. One might trace the word ſericum, ſilk, from ſorek, which ſignifies yellow, Iſaiah v. 7. which is generally the natural colour of raw ſilk. But, in Iſai xix. 9. What is meant by they that work in fine flax? Sherikoth here probably ſignifies the colour of the flax.

The ancient Greeks and Romans had but little knowledge of the nature of ſilk: they imagined it came from the country of the Seres, a people of Scythia; that a kind of ſpider ſpun it out of its own bowels, wound it with its feet about little rods, or branches of trees, and that theſe threads of ſilk were unravelled again by ſprinkling it with water. Seres lanificio ſylvarum nobiles, perfuſam aquâ depertentes ſylvarem canitiem, ſays Pliny cap. 17. The Seres communicated their ſilk to the Perſians, from whom it paſſed to the Greeks, and from them to the Romans. But the Perſians and orientals for a long time kept the ſecret of manufacturing it, among themſelves. It is ſtill unknown by what means it came and how it was worked up in Pliny's time. Its firſt appearance in Europe was after the conqueſts of Alexander the Great: and even then it was uſually ſold for its weight in gold. About the beginning of the reign of Tiberius, a law was made, which prohibited the uſe of ſilk garments to men: Ne veſtis ſeriaca viros fœdaret: Tacit. Annal. lib. ii. cap. 33. None might wear it but women of prime quality. Vopiſcus aſſures us, that the emperor Aurelian refuſed his empreſs a ſilk gown, which ſhe very earneſtly deſired of him.

The Emperor Juſtinian, being curious to know the true method of making ſilk, about A.D. 555, ſent two monks into the Indies, to inſpect the ſilken manufacture. Theſe monks, at their return, reported to the emperor, that it was impoſſible to tranſport the ſilkworms ſo far alive, but that their eggs might be brought ſafely. The emperor ſent them a ſecond time, to procure ſome. This they did; and the managing of them them ſucceeded ſo well at Conſtantinople, that it ſoon ſpread over Europe. Manufactures for them were ſet up at Athens, at Thebes, and at Corinth. Vide Salmaſius, notes on Solinus, Tertullian, and the Hiſtoriæ Auguſtæ Scriptores.

SILLA, סלא, eſtimation; from סלא ſala: otherwiſe elevation, lifting up; from סלל ſalal: or contempt, to be trod under foot; from סלה ſalah, or ſilah, according to different readings: or baſket, according to the Syriac.

SILLA, or Sella. Joaſh king of Judah was aſſaſſinated in or near Jeruſalem, in Beth-millo, or in the houſe of Millo, which goeth down to Silla, 2 Kings xii. 20. It is not exactly known where this Millo was.

SILOAM, שלח, σιλωὰμ, or Shiloah, ſent, or who ſends: otherwiſe, dart, branch, or whatever is ſent; from שלח ſhalach: otherwiſe, according to the Syriac, that ſpoils, or is ſpoiled.

SILOAM, Shiloah, Siloe, or Siloa, a fountain under the walls of Jeruſalem, eaſt, between the city and the brook Kidron. Epiphanius writes (de Vita & Morte Prophet. p. 248,) that God gave this fountain at the interceſſion of the prophet Iſaiah. But it was in being long before this prophet; and there is great likelihood, that it is the ſame as the fountain En-rogel, or the fuller's fountain in Joſhua, Samuel, and the Kings. Joſh. xv. 7. and xviii. 16. 2 Sam. xvii. 17. 1 Kings i. 9. The ſituation of the fountain of Rogel eaſt of, and below, the walls of Jeruſalem, the ſame as the fountain of Siloam, convinces us that it muſt be the ſame fountain; for there was but one on this ſide. Joſephus often ſpeaks of the waters of Siloe, or Siloam: he ſays that when Nebuchadnezzar beſieged Jeruſalem, this fountain increaſed its waters; and that the ſame happened when Titus beſieged the city. So that whereas before, water could hardly be bought for money, during the ſiege it abundantly ſupplied the Roman army, and furniſhed enough beſide for watering the gardens. Joſeph. de bello, lib. v. cap. 26. Vide Map of JERUSALEM. Iſaiah viii. 6. inſinuates, that its waters flowed gently and without noiſe: foraſmuch as this people refuſeth the waters of Shiloah that go ſoftly, &c. St. Jerom, in Jer. xiv. ſays that Jeruſalem has only the fountain of Siloam, from whence to draw water: and beſides, this ſpring did not run always; Uno fonte Siloe, & hoc non perpetuo, utitur civitas. But anciently it was not ſo, at leaſt Scripture does not thus deſcribe it. Monconis ſays, Travels to the Holy Land, part 2. p. 38, that the water of this fountain is a little brackiſh, and has not a good taſte. The Rabbins relate, Rab. Nathan. in Aboth. cap. 35, that the prieſts drank of the water of Siloam, when they had eaten too much fleſh, to aſſiſt their digeſtion. The ſaltneſs that Monconis mentions might contribute to this.

St. John ſpeaks of the pool of Siloam. Our Saviour ſent the man that was born blind, to waſh his eyes in the pool of Siloam, John ix. 7. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXL. page 83.

The Tower of Siloam. Luke xiii. 4. It is ſaid that the tower of Siloam fell upon eighteen men, and buried them in its ruins. It is thought this tower was near the fountain of Siloam.

SILVANUS, Σιλϐανὸς, who loves the woods or foreſts; from the Latin Silva, a wood. See SILAS.

SILVER. This metal does not appear to have been uſed before the deluge; at leaſt, Moſes ſays nothing of it; he ſpeaks only of braſs and iron, Gen. iv. 22. but in Abraham's time it was become common, and traffic was carried on by it. Gen. xiii. 2. Scripture obſerves, that this patriarch was rich in gold and ſilver; that he bought a ſepulchre for his wife Sarah for four hundred ſhekels of ſilver. Gen. xxiii. 15. This ſilver (apparently) was not coined, but was in bars or ingots; in commerce it was always weighed. See MONEY, and FRAGMENT, No. XXVIII. p. 51.

SIMALCUE, Ἐιμαγκϐαὶ, Elmalchuel, God is his king; from מלך melek, a king, and אל el, God: otherwiſe, ſent of God; from מלאך malak, to ſend. A chief Arabian, 1 Macc. xi. 39.

SIMEON, שמעון, that hears, that obeys, or is heard; from שמע ſhamah.

I. SIMEON, ſon of Jacob and Leah: born A.M. 2247, ante A.D. 1757. Gen. xxix. 33. He was brother to Dinah by the ſame mother: and after Shechem the ſon of Hamor had defiled Dinah, Simeon and Levi revenged the affront, entered Shechem, killed all the men they found, and brought away their ſiſter. Gen. xxxiv, 25. A.M. 2265, ante A.D. 1739. It is thought Simeon was one who ſhewed moſt inhumanity to his brother Joſeph: and adviſed his brethren to kill him, Gen. xxxvii. 20. This conjecture is founded on Joſeph's keeping him priſoner in Egypt, Gen. xlii. 24, and treating him with more rigour than the reſt of his brethren. Jacob on his death bed, ſhewed his indignation againſt Simeon and Levi,—curſed be their anger, for it was fierce; and their wrath for it was cruel: I will divide them in Jacob and ſcatter them in Iſrael. Gen. xlix. 5.

In effect, the tribes of Simeon, and Levi, were ſcattered, and diſperſed, in Iſrael: Levi had no compact lot, or portion; and Simeon received for his portion only a diſtrict diſmembered from the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xix. 1, 2, &c. and ſome other lands they over-run in the mountains of Seir, and in the deſart of Gedor. 1 Chr. iv. 24, 39, 42. The Targum of Jeruſalem, and the Rabbins, followed by ſome ancient fathers, believe, that the greater part of the Scribes, and men learned in the law were of this tribe: and as theſe were diſperſed throughout Iſrael, we ſee herein the accompliſhment of Jacob's prophecy, which foretold, that Simeon and Levi ſhould be ſcattered among their brethren. [It is likely that Jacob meant the diſperſion of Simeon and Levi as an evil, a degradation, but Providence over-ruled it to be an honour: ſo Levi had the prieſthood, and Simeon had the learning—or writing-authority, of Iſrael, whereby both theſe tribes were honorably diſperſed throughout Iſrael.] Judith ix. 2. ſeems to vindicate this action of Simeon; but ſhe approved only of his zeal, and not of the other circumſtances of the action.

The Teſtament of the twelve patriarchs intimates, that Simeon died at the age of one hundred and twenty years; that he was a man of an intrepid, implacable, and ſevere temper.

The ſons of Simeon were Jemuel, Jamin, Ohad, Jachin, Zohar, and Shaul. Exod. vi. 15. Their deſcendants amounted to 59,300 men, at the Exodus, Numbers i. 22. but only 22,200 entered the Land of Promiſe, the reſt dying in the Deſert, becauſe of their murmurings, and impiety. Numbers xxvi. 14. The portion of Simeon was weſt and ſouth of that of Judah; having the tribe of Dan, and the Philiſtines, north, the Mediterranean weſt, and Arabia Petræa ſouth. Joſh. xix. 1—9.

II. SIMEON, uncle of Mattathias, father of the Maccabees, of the race of the prieſts, and of the poſterity of Phinehas, 1 Macc. ii. 1.

III. SIMEON, an Iſraelite who put away his foreign wife after the captivity. Ezra x. 31.

IV. SIMEON, an holy old man who was at Jeruſalem, full of the Holy Ghoſt, and expecting the redemption of Iſrael: Luke ii. 25, 26, &c. The Holy Ghoſt had aſſured him, that he ſhould not die, before he had ſeen the Chriſt of the Lord: he therefore came in to the temple, prompted by inſpiration, juſt at the time when Joſeph and Mary preſented Jeſus Chriſt there, in obedience to the law. Simeon took the child into his arms, gave thanks to God, &c. After which, Simeon bleſſed Joſeph and Mary. It is believed, with good reaſon, that he died ſoon after he had given his teſtimony to Jeſus Chriſt.

An ancient author called Celſus, who wrote a preface concerning the diſpute between John and Papiſcus, (inter Opera Cypriani) which is loſt, ſays, that Simeon was blind; but on taking Jeſus Chriſt into his arms, he immediately recovered his ſight, and gave teſtimony to our Saviour, in the preſence of the people. Others think, vide Baron. anno J. C. 1. § 40. that Simeon was the officiating prieſt, and that, as ſuch, he took our Saviour into his arms, as a firſt-born that belonged to the Lord; and afterwards returned him to his parents, when they had redeemed him, according to the law. And indeed, ſeveral of the ancients maintain that he was a prieſt, (Method. Patar. Cyril. Jeroſol. orat. de occurſu Domini. Athanaſ. lib. de Eſſentia communi, &c. Epiphan. de PP.V.T. Leon. Imperat. Orat. de Purific. B. M. V. Sophron. Jeroſolym. Dionyſ. Carthuſ. Franc. Luc. Lyr. Tolet. Cajet. alii plures apud Allatium, de Simeonibus, p. 3.) but others deny it, with great reaſon. Phot. Euthym. Theophylact. Janſen. Barrad. Tillemont. not. 6. ſup. J. C. tom. i. p. 448. The ſilence of Scripture alone is a ſufficient proof, ſince it would hardly have omitted that circumſtance.

Leo Allatius, in his Diſſertation on the writings of the Simeons, relates ſeveral particulars which happened, they ſay, when Simon came into the temple to ſee the Meſſiah. Among the ſeveral mothers who brought their children into the temple, he obſerved the holy Virgin ſhining with rays of light. Then, putting aſide the multitude, he went directly to her, gave her his bleſſing, took the child Jeſus into his arms, &c. Nicephorus relates, that Simeon died as ſoon as he had returned the child Jeſus to his mother. Epiphanius adds, de Vita & Morte Prophetarum, that the Hebrew prieſts refuſed him burial, becauſe he had ſpoke ſo honourably of our Saviour. It is eaſily underſtood, that this kind of traditions are not much to be relied on, [they are often no more than figurative expreſſions groſsly miſunderſtood.]

It has been pretended, that Simeon who received Jeſus Chriſt into his arms, was the ſame as Simeon the Juſt, the ſon of Hillel, and maſter of Gamaliel, whoſe diſciple St. Paul was. It is alſo ſaid, that as Simeon one day was explaining that paſſage of Iſaiah, A Virgin ſhall conceive, and bring forth a ſon, &c. and not being able to penetrate this myſtery, it was revealed to him, that he ſhould not die before he had ſeen the accompliſhment of it. Vide Nicephor. Hiſt. Eccl. lib. i. cap. 12.

The moſt ancient Latin martyrologiſts place the feaſt of St. Simeon, January 5. others, February 2 or 4. Uſuard and Ado place it October 8. which has been followed by the Roman martyrology. The Menologia publiſhed by Caniſius, unite unite his feaſt with that of the Purification of the Virgin. Thoſe of Venice and Hughellus fix it on the day following. His tomb was heretofore ſeen in the valley of Jehoſhaphat, near Jeruſalem. His relics, they ſay, were tranſported from Conſtantinople to Venice, about A. D. 1220. See M. de Tillemont, Not. 6. on Jeſus Chriſt.

V. SIMEON, ſon of Judah, and father of Levi; an anceſtor of Chriſt, Luke iii. 30.

VI. SIMEON, or Simon, couſin-german to Jeſus Chriſt, biſhop of Jeruſalem, ſon of Cleophas, and of Mary, ſiſter of the holy Virgin; probably the ſame whom St. Mark names Simon, Mark vi. 3. It is very likely that Simeon was among the firſt diſciples of Jeſus Chriſt. Epiphanius ſays, hæreſ. 78. cap. 14. that when the Jews maſſacred St. James minor, his brother St. Simeon reproached them with that cruelty. After the death of St. James, A. D. 62, the apoſtles, the diſciples, and the kindred of Jeſus Chriſt aſſembled, to nominate a ſucceſſor in the ſee of Jeruſalem, and unanimouſly elected St. Simeon, Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccl. lib. iii. cap. 32. Probably he withdrew with the reſt of the faithful to Pella beyond Jordan, during the war of the Jews againſt the Romans. After the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, they returned into this city, Epiphan. de menſur. cap. 15. Euſeb. Demonſtr. lib. iii. cap. 5. and the church of Chriſt appeared there with new ſplendor, by a great number of miracles, that God wrought by their means. When the emperor Trajan made ſtrict enquiry for all who were of the race of David, St. Simeon was accuſed before Atticus the governor of Paleſtine. Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccl. lib. iii. cap. 32. He endured ſeveral tortures for many days together, to the great aſtoniſhment of every body, and particularly of Atticus himſelf; for he was then one hundred and twenty years of age. At laſt he was crucified, about A. D. 107. Euſeb. Chronic. He had governed the church of Jeruſalem about forty-three years. The Latins place his feaſt February 18. the Greeks April 27. St. Juſtus was his ſucceſſor in the biſhoprick of Jeruſalem. See M. Tillemont, Hiſt. Eccl. tom. ii. p. 202, &c.

SIMON, Σίμων, that hears, or obeys; from שמע ſhammah, to hear, to obey.

I. SIMON, ſurnamed the Juſt, high-prieſt of the Jews, promoted to this dignity A. M. 3702, or 3703, and died A. M. 3711, before A. D. 293. He was ſon and ſucceſſor of Onias I. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xii. cap. 2. Onias left a ſon, Onias II. who being but a child at the death of his father, and incapable of exerciſing the ſovereign prieſthood, it was committed to Eleazar, his uncle by the father's ſide, who dying, left it to his great uncle Manaſſeh, the brother of Jaddus, to whom Onias II. ſon of Simon the Juſt ſucceeded, A. M. 3771. Several refer to Simon the Juſt the character that Jeſus the ſon of Sirach gives to Simon, ſon of Onias: Ecclus, lib. i. 2, &c. but we rather think it ſhould be referred to Simon II. ſon of Onias II. of whom we ſhall ſpeak in the next article.

The Jews tell us very extraordinary things of this high-prieſt.

1. It is ſaid in the Talmud of Jeruſalem, Vide Miſnah. in Joma, & Maimon. in Jom. Haccipurim. that during the whole of his pontificate, the goat azazel, the ſcape-goat, was daſhed to pieces, before he could fall half way down the precipice, over which he was thrown. Whereas, after the death of this great man, the goat eſcaped into the deſart, where he was caught, and eat by the Saracens; which was conſidered as a great misfortune.
2. During his whole life, when, on the day of ſolemn expiation, the high-prieſt drew lots on the two goats, that which he drew with his right-hand, had always the inſcription, pray to God; and that which he drew with his left-hand was always, for the azazel, or ſcape-goat; whereas after his death this varied, and the high-prieſt ſometimes drew the lot, for azazel with his right-hand: which was taken for an evil omen.
3. The ſcarlet ribbon which was tied to the head of the goat azazel, (this was not appointed in Scripture; but however, cuſtom had given it authority,) always appeared white during the pontificate of Simon the Juſt; which was looked upon as a proof of remiſſion of the ſins of the people; according to thoſe words of Iſaiah i. 18. Though your ſins be as ſcarlet, they ſhall be white as ſnow. But after the death of Simon this alſo varied, and the ſcarlet ribbon appeared ſometimes red, and ſometimes white.
4. While he lived, the weſtern lamp of the golden candleſtick was always burning; but after his death it ſometimes went out.
5. While he lived the fire of the altar burned clear; and after a billet, or two, was put on it in the morning, there was no occaſion for any more wood the whole day; but when he was dead, the fire languiſhed, and required a continual ſupply to keep it in.
6. While he lived, the bleſſing of God multiplied the two loaves of firſt-fruits, offered on the day of Pentecoſt; and the twelve loaves of ſhew-bread ſet upon the golden altar in the Sanctum, and which was left there for the whole week till the ſabbath following, when others were put there in their ſtead. Theſe loaves, they ſay, were multiplied ſo, that when they were diſtributed to all the prieſts that waited in the temple, as a kind of bleſſing, each had, at leaſt, a piece as big as an olive, which was enough for their refreſhment; and ſome had to ſpare. But when he was dead, this bleſſing ceaſed, and the ſhares diſtributed among the prieſts were ſo ſmall, that the more modeſt returned their thanks, and the others ſtill held out their hands.

II. SIMON, high-prieſt of the Jews, ſon of Onias II. advanced to the high-prieſthood A. M. 3785, died A. M. 3805, ante A. D. 199. In his time, A. M. 3787, Ptolemy Philopator came to Jeruſalem, and attempted to enter the interior parts of the temple, where none but the high-prieſt ſhould enter. Simon, with the other prieſts, oppoſed him, and God ſtruck the king of Egypt, and prevented his deſign. See the third book of the Maccabees. We think it is to this Simon, the high-prieſt, that the book of Eccleſiaſticus gives a high encomium, Ecclus. lib. i. ii. iii.

That author repreſents the high-prieſt Simon in all the ſplendor of his dignity, in his prieſtly habit, ſurrounded by his prieſts, and offering a ſolemn ſacrifice of thankſgiving. It is thought, that Jeſus the ſon of Sirach intended to deſcribe the ſacrifice offered by the high-prieſt Simon II. in the preſence of Ptolemy Philopator, as a thankſgiving for his victory over Antiochus the Great, near Raphia. Simon II. had for ſucceſſor Onias III.

III. SIMON MACCABEUS, ſurnamed Thaſſi, ſon of Mattathias, and brother of Judas and Jonathan. He was chief, prince, and pontiff, of the Jews, from A. M. 3860 to 3869, ante A. D. 135. He had for ſucceſſor John Hircanus his ſon. Mattathias the father of the Maccabees, juſt before his death, ſaid to his other ſons, I know that your brother Simon is a man of counſel; give ear unto him alway, he ſhall be a father unto you. He gave proofs of his valour in the battle between Judas Maccabeus and Nicanor, 2 Macc. viii. 22, 23. On another occaſion, 2 Macc. xiv. 17. Simon was ſent into Galilee, to ſuccour the Jews there, who were threatened with deſtruction, by the inhabitants of Tyre, Sidon, and Ptolemais. Simon obtained a great booty, brought into Judea the Iſraelites that were in Galilee, and returned triumphant. He again ſignalized his valour in the battle between his brother Jonathan and Apollonius, the governor of Celoſyria, whom they defeated, and killed above eight thouſand of his men. Simon was made governor of the whole coaſt of the Mediterranean ſea, from Tyre to the frontiers of Egypt, by the young king Antiochus Theos. He alſo took Bethſura, and Joppa, and built Adida, in the plain called Sephela. All theſe things he did while his brother Jonathan was chief, and high-prieſt, of the Jews, 1 Macc. x. 82. xii. 33, 48, &c.

But Jonathan being ſurprized by Tryphon, and a report being ſpread that he was put to death, Simon came to Jeruſalem, and having aſſembled all the people, they choſe him as their chief: Then Simon had the walls of Jeruſalem repaired; and knowing that Tryphon was coming into Judea with a great army, he marched out, reſolving to give him battle.

When Tryphon came to Baſcama, he there ſlew Jonathan and his two ſons, and then returned into Syria. Simon fetched away the bones of his brother, and buried them honourably, at Modin, in the ſepulchre of his fathers; which he adorned with pillars, pyramids, and trophies of ſculpture.

Tryphon coming into Syria, there killed the young king Antiochus, and uſurped his kingdom. Simon Maccabeus would not acknowledge him, but his competitor, Demetrius Nicator, as king of Syria; to whom he applied for confirming the ancient franchiſes of Judea, and for freedom from tribute. Demetrius granted Simon more than he aſked; ſo that this year, which was the hundred and ſeventieth of the Greeks, he began to write on the tables and public regiſters; "The firſt year, under Simon ſovereign pontiff, chief, and prince of the Jews." After this he took Gaza; and the Syrians that were in the citadel of Jeruſalem capitulated to him. He appointed an annual feſtival in commemoration of the reduction of this fortreſs; which had been ſo long in the hands of foreigners.

All Iſrael beheld with pleaſure the prudent adminiſtration of this great man. His whole ſtudy was to advance the happineſs of his nation, and to render it proſperous and ſecure. He took Joppa, and made a harbour of it, to improve the trade of the Jews; and every way extended the limits of his country.

He renewed the alliance of the Jews with the Romans, and with the Lacedemonians. The whole Jewiſh nation concurred in regiſtering a public act, by which they acknowledged their obligations to Simon, and to his family, and recognized him, and his children, as perpetual prince and pontiff of their nation, till a faithful prophet ſhould ariſe from among them. They ordered, that he ſhould be obeyed in all things, that all public acts ſhould paſs in his name, that he ſhould be cloathed in purple, and adorned with gold. This declaration was written upon a table of braſs, and placed in the galleries of the temple.

Antiochus Sidetes, king of Syria, ſon of Demetrius Soter, and brother to Demetrius Nicator, being informed that Demetrius Nicator was taken by the Parthians, wrote to Simon from the iſle of Rhodes, to engage him on his ſide againſt Tryphon. He confirmed to him whatever had been granted by Demetrius Nicator, allowed him the privilege of coining money, remitted to him all debts owing to the kings of Syria, and declared Jeruſalem to be a free, and an holy city. Simon ſent him men and money to aſſiſt him in the reduction of Dora, in which Tryphon had ſhut himſelf up. But Antiochus would not receive them, nor would he confirm the articles of his treaty with Simon. He even ſent Athenobius to him, to demand the ſurrender of ſeveral places, or a thouſand talents of ſilver; threatening, in caſe of refuſal, to enter Judea with troops, and to treat him as an enemy. Simon, not diſcouraged by his threats, anſwered that he had uſurped nothing from him, but had only took poſſeſſion of the inheritance of his fathers. He offered an hundred talents for the cities of Joppa and Gazara, of which he had made himſelf maſter, becauſe they occaſioned great calamities to his country.

Antiochus ſent Cendebeus with an army on the coaſts of the Mediterranean, but Cendebeus was defeated by John Hyrcanus, ſon of Simon. Three years afterwards, Simon viſited the cities of Judea, and came to the caſtle of Docus, or Dagon, where his ſon-in-law Ptolemy, ſon of Ambubus, reſided. Ptolemy made him a great entertainment; but in the midſt of it cauſed him to be maſſacred, with his two ſons Mattathias and Judas, hoping by this to make himſelf maſter of Jeruſalem, and the whole country. But John Hyrcanus was beforehand with him, and came firſt to Jeruſalem. Vide HYRCANUS, and PTOLEMY.

IV. SIMON, of the tribe of Benjamin, ſuperintendant of the temple. 2 Macc. iii. 4, 5. A. M. 3828, ante A. D. 176. He attempted to perform ſome unjuſt enterprize in the city; but not ſucceeding in it, becauſe of the oppoſition of the high-prieſt Onias III; he told Apollonius, ſon of Thraſeas, then governor of Celoſyria, that there were great riches in the temple of Jeruſalem, which might eaſily be ſeized for Seleucus, king of Syria. He prevailed ſo far, that the king ſent Heliodorus to Jeruſalem, to fetch away theſe treaſures: but God prevented him. See HELIODORUS. Simon ſeeing his wicked deſign baffled, publiſhed every-where, that Onias himſelf had diſcovered to the king the treaſures of the temple; and the friends of the high-prieſt oppoſing theſe calumnies, murders were committed by the partiſans of Simon, ſupported by Apollonius, governor of Phenicia. This obliged Onias, the high-prieſt, to vindicate himſelf to king Seleucus, at Antioch.

While this matter was in agitation, king Seleucus died. Antiochus Epiphanes ſucceeding him, Jaſon brother of Onias III. bought the high-prieſthood of this prince; and ſome years after, he ſent Menelaus, brother to Simon now mentioned, to carry to the king, at Antioch, ſome of the money. Menelaus took this opportunity to buy the high-prieſthood for himſelf, and to cheat Jaſon of his money and bargain. This circumſtance gives reaſon to ſuſpect, that neither Simon, nor his brother Menelaus, were of the tribe of Benjamin, ſince it is known that tribe could have nothing to do with the prieſthood; and conſequently Simon could not, regularly, be governor, or captain, of the temple; much leſs could Menelaus be high prieſt. They might, however, pretend to be of the ſacerdotal line. Or, perhaps, the word Benjamin is a corruption of the text. Scripture does not acquaint us what became of Simon.

V. SIMON, ſon of Boethus, high-prieſt of the Jews. He was raiſed to the high-prieſthood, A. M. 3981, and depoſed in 3999, one year before the birth of Jeſus Chriſt, and four years before the vulgar era. Simon was originally of Alexandria, and Herod the Great promoted him to the dignity of high-prieſt, that he might with the better grace marry his ſiſter Mariamne. But this pontiff being ſuſpected of partaking in the conſpiracy of Pheroras and Antipater againſt Herod, he deprived him of the prieſthood, and ſubſtituted Matthias, ſon of Theophilus.

VI. SIMON, ſon of Camithus, high-prieſt of the Jews. He ſucceeded Eleazar, ſon of Ananus, A. M. 4028. He held this office but one year, being removed from it by Gratus, governor of Judea, in 4029. His ſucceſſor was Joſeph, ſurnamed Caiaphas. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 3.

VII. SIMON, ſurnamed Canthara, ſon of Simon Boethus, high-prieſt of the Jews; ſucceeded Theophilus, ſon of Jonathan, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xix. cap. 5. & lib. vi. A. M. 4044, and had for ſucceſſor Matthias, ſon of Ananus, A. M. 4045, A. D. 42. He was again advanced to this dignity in 4048, by Herod, king of Calchis. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. i. This ſecond time he ſucceeded Elioneus; and had for ſucceſſor Joſeph the ſon of Caneus.

VIII. SIMON,

VIII. SIMON, the Galilean. He maintained that the Jews ought not to pay tribute to the Romans, or to acknowledge them as maſters. Joſeph. de Bello, lib. ii. cap. 12. The Latin text calls him Simon, but the Greek reads Judas, which was his true name. Compare Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 2. But Judas had a ſon called Simon, who was crucified in the time of Claudius. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 3.

IX. SIMON, the Cyrenean. When Jeſus Chriſt was going to Calvary, and unable to bear the weight of his croſs, the ſoldiers met a man, a native of Cyrene in Lybia, named Simon, who was father of Alexander and Rufus, whom they compelled to carry the croſs, after Jeſus; i. e. to carry it whole and entire according to ſome; according to others, to carry one end of it with Jeſus, [according to others, to carry the croſs beam.] Matt. xxvii. 32. Mark xv. 21. It is aſked whether Simon was a Jew, or a Pagan? Several fathers thought him a Gentile, and conſidered him as a type of that idolatrous people, which afterwards ſhould be called to the profeſſion of the Goſpel, and to carry the croſs after Chriſt. Ambroſ. in Luc. x. Hilar. in Matth. xxvii. Leo Mag. ſerm. viii. de paſſione. Beda, Druthmar, &c. Others hold that he was a Jew. Maldon. Grot. Brug. Janſen. The Latin of St. Mark intimates, that he was coming from a farm near Jeruſalem. Many Jews dwelt at Cyrene, in Lybia, of which place he was. Some will have him to be the ſame as Simon, ſurnamed Niger, Acts xiii. 1. If ſo, we muſt readily acknowledge him to have been a Jew. Some believe he was biſhop of Boſtra, in Arabia, and that he ended his life by martyrdom; being burned alive by the Pagans. For his ſons Alexander and Rufus, ſee their Articles.

X. SIMON, the Canaanite, or Simon Zelotes, an apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt. It is doubtful whether the name Canaanite were derived to him from the city Cana, in Galilee; or whether it might not be written Chananean, from כנעני Chenani, Chananean, or Canaanite: or, whether it ſhould not be taken according to its ſignification in Hebrew, from the root Kana קנא, from which comes קני or קנני Kani or Kanani; to be zealous. St. Luke gives him the ſurname of Zelotes, the zealot, Luke vi. 15. Acts i. 13. which ſeems to be a tranſlation of the ſurname Canaanite, given him by the other evangeliſts. Matth. x. 4. Mark iii. 18. Some fathers ſay, he was of Cana, of the tribe of Zebulun, or of Naphtali. Theodoret. in Pſalm lxvii. 18. Hieron. in Matth. x. The learned are divided about the ſignification of Zelotes; ſome take it only to denote his zeal in embracing the goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt; others think he was of a ſect called Zealots, mentioned in Joſephus, de Bello, lib. iv. cap. 2. item lib. vi. cap. 1.

The particulars of his life are unknown; nor does it appear where he preached, or where he died. Nicephorus and the modern Greeks ſay, that he travelled through Egypt, Cyrenaica, and Africa; that he preached in Mauritania, and Lybia; that he carried the Goſpel even into the iſles of Britain, and that after an infinite number of miracles, and ſufferings, he was crowned with martyrdom, by the death of the croſs, which he endured with incredible courage. Others, Fortunat. Pictav. Carmin. lib. viii. cap. 4. Beda Retract. in Acta. cap. i. v. 13. Abdias lib. vi. will have it, that he ſuffered martyrdom in the city of Sunir, in Perſia; and the ancient martyrology given by Florentinius, ſets it down ſo, October 28, on which the Latin church celebrates his feſtival. It puts his martyrdom July 1, on which day Abdias ſays he was maſſacred, in a tumult raiſed by the idol-prieſts againſt him and St. Jude, whoſe feaſt is kept on that day. The Greeks honour him June 1, and ſay he was Nathanael, the bridegroom, at the marriage of Cana. Menæa. Jun.

XI. SIMON, brother of our Lord, i. e. his couſin-german, and ſon of Mary, ſiſter of the holy virgin. Matth. xiii. 55. Mark vi. 3. We believe him to be the ſame as St. Simeon, biſhop of Jeruſalem, and ſon of Cleophas. Vide SIMEON VI.

XII. SIMON the Phariſee, with whom Jeſus dined, after he had raiſed the child of the widow of Nain, Luke vii. 36, 37, &c. A. D. 31. While he was at table with Simon, a woman, noted for her ill life, entered the room, poured out a box of perfume on the feet of Jeſus, wiped them with her hair, waſhed them with her tears, &c. Simon ſeeing this, was aſtoniſhed at it, but was reproved by Jeſus: who forgave the ſinner, but condemned the unforgiving Phariſee by a ſimilitude.

XIII. SIMON the Leper; he dwelt at Bethany, near Jeruſalem. Matth. xxvi. 6. Mark xiv. 3. John xi. 1, 2. xii. 3, 4, 5. Jeſus coming thither a few days before his paſſion, was invited by Simon the Leper to eat with him. Lazarus, whom our Saviour had raiſed from the dead ſome time before, was at table with them. Martha, his ſiſter, was very buſy in attending on them; and Mary, his other ſiſter, to ſhew her love and reſpect for our Saviour, brought a box of perfumes, which ſhe poured on on his feet. This entertainment is very different from that at which our Saviour had been about two years before, in the houſe of Simon the Phariſee; as Mary the ſiſter of Lazarus was a different perſon from the ſinner-woman of Nain.

XIV. SIMON, ſon of John, or Jona, ſurnamed Cephas, or Peter. See PETER.

XV. SIMON, father of Judas Iſcariot. John vi. 71. Is known only by the misfortune of having ſuch a ſon.

XVI. SIMON NIGER, or the black. Acts xiii. 1. About A. D. 44. He was among the prophets and teachers, of the Chriſtian church at Antioch; and one who laid his hands on St. Paul and St. Barnabas, for the office to which the Holy Ghoſt had appointed them. Some think he was Simon the Cyrenean; but there is no other proof to this opinion, than the ſimilitude of names; nor is this a very good one, ſince St. Luke always calls Simon the Cyrenean by the name of Simon; but Simon Niger, by the name of Simeon. Epiphanius, hæreſ. xx. cap. iv. reckons one Niger among the ſeventy diſciples. The church makes no mention of Simon Niger.

XVII. SIMON the Tanner. St. Peter lodged ſeveral days at Joppa, with Simon the Tanner, and was in his houſe when the meſſengers from Cornelius the Centurion came to him. Acts x. 6, &c.

XVIII. SIMON Magus, or the Sorcerer; he was, they ſay, of the village of Gitton, in the country of Samaria. Epiphan. hæreſ. xxi. & Juſtin. Apolog. ii. p. 69. Philip the deacon coming to preach at Samaria, Acts viii. 5.—13. converted ſeveral perſons, and this Simon alſo, believed, and was baptized. The apoſtles Peter and John viſiting Samaria, communicated the Holy Ghoſt to thoſe baptized by Philip, at which Simon, full of admiration, offered money to the apoſtles, ſaying, Give me alſo this power. But Peter ſaid to him with great indignation, Thy money periſh with thee, . . . thou art in the gall of bitterneſs, and in the bond of iniquity. Simon made anſwer; Pray ye to the Lord for me.

St. Luke adds, Acts viii. 9, 10, 11. that Simon had addicted himſelf to magic, before Philip came to Samaria, and by his impoſtures and enchantments, had ſeduced the people of this city, who ſaid, This man is the great power of God.

But after St. Peter had rejected, with horror, his propoſal of ſelling the power of imparting the Holy Ghoſt; Simon fell into much greater errors and abominations; applying himſelf to magic more than ever, taking pride in withſtanding the apoſtles, and infecting a great number of perſons with his impious errors. Irenæus. lib. i. cap. 20. For this purpoſe it is ſaid he left Samaria, Theodoret. hæret. fabul. lib. i. cap. i. and travelled through ſeveral provinces; ſeeking places where the Goſpel had not yet reached, that he might prejudice the minds of men againſt it.

At Tyre, in Phenicia, ſays Theodoret. hæreſ. Juſtin. Apol. ii. Iren. lib. i. cap. 20. Tertull. de Anim. cap. xxxiv. he bought a public proſtitute, called Selene, or Helene, and carried her with him, committing crimes in ſecret with her. Having run through ſeveral provinces, and made himſelf admired by vaſt numbers of perſons, for his falſe miracles and impoſtures; he came to Rome in the time of the emperor Claudius, about A. D. 41.

It is ſaid, by Juſtin. Irenæus, Tertull. Euſeb. Cyrill. Auguſt. Theodoret. he was honoured as a deity, by the Romans, and by the ſenate itſelf, who decreed a ſtatue to him, in the iſle of Tyber, with this inſcription,—To Simon, the holy God. Simoni Deo ſancto. Ita Juſtin. Tertull. Cyrill. This fact however is diſputed by able critics, who think Juſtin miſtook a ſtatue dedicated to Semo Sancus, a Pagan deity, for one erected to Simon Magus. And indeed there has been found a ſtatue in the iſle of Tyber, with this inſcription, (nearly approaching to that mentioned by Juſtin.) Semoni Sanco Deo Fideo Sacrum Sext. Pompeius Sp. F. Mutianus—— donum dedit. [But, N. B. It does not appear to have been erected by the ſenate, which Juſtin ſays expreſsly.] On this difficulty, vide Baronius, ann. 44. §. 55. Salmaſius, notes on Spartian, p. 39. F. Halloix, Life of Juſtin, M. du Pin, M. de Tillemont, not, 1. on Simon Magus, tom. ii.

When St. Peter came to Rome, (Euſeb. lib. ii. cap. 14. Hiſt. Eccl. Hieron. de Viris Illuſt. cap. i. Theodoret. Hæret. fab. lib. i. cap. i.) ſome time after the arrival of Simon Magus, he counteracted all what this impoſtor had been doing. Simon, however, did not quit this great city, where was ſo much room for ſpreading his errors. Under the reign of Nero, he acquired great reputation by his inchantments. He pretended to prove that he was the Chriſt, (Arnob. lib. ii. Maxim. Tyrius, homil. liv. Ambroſ. Hexaëmer. lib. iv. Cyril. Catech. vi. &c.) and as the Son of God could aſcend into Heaven: In reality, he cauſed himſelf to be raiſed in the air, in a fiery chariot, by the aſſiſtance of two demons. But St. Peter and St. Paul betaking themſelves to prayer, the impoſtor was deſerted deſerted by his demons, fell down on the ground, and broke his legs: being carried to Brindes, for very grief and ſhame, he threw himſelf headlong from the top of the houſe where he lodged. It is reported, he received his fall in the preſence of Nero; and to this is referred what is ſaid by Dio, Chryſoſtomus, Orat. xxi. that Nero kept a long while at his court, a man who pretended to fly in the air: And alſo what is ſaid by Suetonius, lib. vi. cap. 12. that in the public games, a man undertook to fly in the air, in the preſence of Nero; but, at his firſt flight he fell down on the ground with ſuch violence, that his blood ſpurted up to the gallery where the emperor was ſitting. He died, probably, A. D. 65. [The reader will regard theſe Apocryphal ſtories as he pleaſes.]

As to the hereſies of Simon;—beſide thoſe imputed to him, Acts viii. 10. the fathers, Irenæ. lib. i. cap. 10. accuſe him of pretending to be the great power of God, and that he came down as the Father in reſpect of the Samaritans; as the Son in reſpect of the Jews, and as the Holy Ghoſt in reſpect of the Gentiles: but that it is indifferent which of theſe names he went by. St. Jerom in Matth. xxiv. quotes theſe blaſphemous expreſſions out of one of his books: I am the word of God, I am the beauty of God, I am the comforter, I am the Almighty, I am the whole Eſſence of God. He was the inventor of the Eons, (Nazianz. Orat. xxiii. xxiv. Euſeb. in Marcion. lib. iv. cap. 9.) which were as ſo many perſons, of whom they compoſed their deity. His Helen, ſay Iren. lib. i. cap. 20. Epiphan. Hæreſ. xxi. Aug. de Heræſ. lib. i. he called the firſt intelligence, the mother of all things; he ſometimes called her the Holy Ghoſt, Prunica, or Minerva: He ſaid, that by this firſt intelligence he had originally a deſign of creating the angels; but that ſhe, knowing this will of her father, had deſcended lower, and had produced the angels, and the other ſpiritual powers, to whom ſhe had given no knowledge of her father: That theſe angels and powers had afterwards made angels and men: That Helen had paſſed ſucceſſively into the bodies of women, and among others, into that of Helen, the wife of Menelaus, who occaſioned the war of Troy; and that at laſt ſhe had deſcended into the body of this Helen of Tyre.

He did not acknowledge Jeſus Chriſt as ſon of God, but conſidered him as a rival, and pretended himſelf to be the Chriſt. He believed not the reſurrection of the body, but barely a reſurrection of the ſoul. He taught, that men need not trouble themſelves about good works, for all actions were indifferent, and that the diſtinction of actions into good and evil, was only introduced by the angels, to render men ſubject to them. He rejected the law of Moſes, and ſaid, he was come to aboliſh it. He aſcribed the Old Teſtament to the angels; and though he every-where declared himſelf an enemy to angels, yet he paid them an idolatrous worſhip, pretending, men could not be ſaved, without offering to the ſupreme father abominable ſacrifices, by means of the principalities that he placed in each heaven. He offered them his ſacrifices, not to obtain aſſiſtance from them, but to prevail with them that they might not oppoſe men. Simon formed a ſect of heretics, which were called Simonians. De Tillemont, Hiſt. Eccl. tom. ii. § 5. [What ſtrange errors oppoſed the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt!]

XIX. SIMON, ſon of Gioras: He headed a number of ſeditious people, who began to commit depredations, and even murders in that part of Idumea, called Acrabatene. Ananus ſent troops againſt him, which obliged him to retire into the caſtle of Maſſada, from whence he made excurſions into Idumea. He advanced towards Jeruſalem, which he put into a conſternation, by his many cruelties. The zealots fought with him, but could not ſubdue him. Some time after, the people of Jeruſalem, driven to extremities by the zealots, and ſeeking means of ſkreening themſelves from their violence, called in Simon the ſon of Gioras. Simon was received into the city with the acclamations of the people, and attacked John of Giſcala, and the zealots, in the temple. He exerciſed all ſorts of cruelties againſt the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, who had called him to their aſſiſtance; and cauſed the high-prieſt Mattathias to be killed, who had inſiſted the moſt ſtrenuouſly on his being invited to Jeruſalem. Joſeph. de Bello. lib. v. cap. xxxiii.

When the Romans had taken the city and the temple, Simon concealed himſelf under-ground, in the common ſewers. He remained there hid during ſome months; but, at laſt his proviſions being gone, he was forced to creep out, and appear above-ground, in the place where the temple had been, cloathed in white, with a robe of purple; the Romans were truly ſurpriſed at the ſight of him, and aſked him, who he was? He would not tell his name, but deſired to ſpeak with the commanding officer. This was Terentius Rufus, for Titus was gone from Jeruſalem. He came to him, and knowing him, ſent word to Titus, at Ceſarea, of his priſoner. Titus carried him to Rome, where he ſerved to adorn his triumph, and afterwards was publicly executed.

SIMONIANS,

SIMONIANS, or Simonites, a ſort of heretics, diſciples of Simon Magus. They embraced the principles of their maſter; and as to their practices, they indulged themſelves in all ſorts of extravagancies; which exceeded, ſays Euſebius, all that can be ſaid of them. Iren. lib. 1. cap. 20. Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccl. lib. ii. cap. 13. And they acknowledged in their books, that when firſt their more ſecret myſteries were revealed to others they were filled with horror and amazement at them. Beſide ſhameleſs filthineſs, they abandoned themſelves to ſorcery and witchcraft; and though outwardly they profeſſed a ſort of chriſtianity, yet they did not refrain from worſhipping Simon and Helen, under the ſhapes of Jupiter and Mars, to whom they offered victims and libations of wine. They alſo regarded the worſhip of idols as indifferent; ſo that they were not expoſed to perſecution as the chriſtians were for refuſing incenſe to idols; and the heathen let them continue in quiet, while they tortured the chriſtians.

The ſect of the Simonians continued to the fourth century. Juſtin ſays Apolog. 2. that in his time, i. e. about A.D. 150, almoſt all the Samaritans and ſome few others elſewhere, acknowledged Simon as the greateſt of the gods. Clemens Alexandrinus ſays, Stromat. lib. ii. that his followers worſhipped him and endeavoured to make themſelves as like him as they could. Ireneus ſays, lib. i. cap. 20, they were called Simonians; and Origen aſſures us, in Celſ. lib. v. they went alſo by the name of Helenians, from Helen. He ſays alſo lib. i. cont. Celſ. About the year 249, that the ſect of the Simonians was reduced to about thirty perſons: elſewhere, idem lib. v. that they were quite extinct. But it is known from other teſtimonies, that there were ſome even at the beginning of the fifth century. An author who wrote on baptiſm againſt St. Cyprian about A.D. 256, ſays, that ſome heretics, deſcended from Simon, made fire appear above the water when they gave baptiſm. Euſebius Hiſt. Eccl. lib. ii. cap. 1. ſtill ſpeaks of Simonians that mingled themſelves among the catholics, and received catholic baptiſm; but who afterwards, ſpread in ſecret the venom of their doctrine. Several were diſcovered, and expelled the church about the beginning of the fourth century.

SIMONY, is giving a temporal conſideration for a ſpiritual thing, office, &c. or for ſomething annexed to a ſpiritual thing. We do not read, that Simon or his diſciples profeſſedly taught, that this kind of trading was lawful; but the example of Simon, who offered money to the apoſtles, to receive the power of communicating the Holy Ghoſt, has cauſed the name of Simonians to be given to them, who, in imitation of Simon, would purchaſe for money, or by good offices, or by any other way, a ſpiritual concern, or any thing relating thereto.

SIMONIAS. Joſephus ſpeaks of a village, on the frontier of Galilee, called Simonias; in vita ſua, p. 1007. Probably the Shimron, or Semeron, of Zebulun, Joſh. xix. 15. The LXX. in ſome copies read Symoon; and the Talmudiſts expreſsly ſay, that theſe two names ſtand for the ſame place. Cod. Megil. fol. 70. col. 1. Gemar Jeroſol. But it appears by Joſephus, that Simonias was between Tiberias and Ptolemais, about ſixty furlongs from Gaba, a city at the foot of Carmel.

I. SIMPLE, Simplex, is ſometimes taken in an ill ſenſe. St. Paul Rom. xvi. 19. would have the Romans to be wiſe unto good, and ſimple concerning evil; i. e. diſcerning in their choice of good; but avoiding whatever has the appearance of evil, as children, who, without much reaſoning, fly from every thing that does but ſeem hurtful to them. We read Prov. xxii. 3. "A wiſe man foreſeeth the evil; but the ſimple paſs on and are puniſhed."

2. SIMPLE, is oppoſed to deception, to an unjuſt, or a wicked, perſon. It ſtands for ſincerity, fidelity, innocence, candour. In this ſenſe Jacob is called a plain, or ſimple man, Gen. xxv. 27. Job is called a perfect and upright man, according to the Vulgate, a ſimple man, Job i. 1. 8. Wiſdom is given to the ſimple, Prov. i. 4. xxi. 11.

3. SIMPLE, is ſometimes taken for liberality. The ſingle or ſimple eye, oppoſed to an evil eye, repreſents a liberal diſpoſition, in contradiſtinction to a covetous one, Matth. vi. 22. Luke xi. 34. St. Paul ſays, he that giveth let him do it with ſimplicity; i. e. liberally, frankly, Rom. xii. 8.

SIMRI, שמרי, my guardian, my diamond, my buſh; from שמר ſhamar.

SIMRI, or Semri, ſon of Merari, 1 Chron. xxvi. 10. of whom it is noted, that he was not the firſt born, yet his father made him chief.

SIN, סין, buſh; from סנה ſenah.

SIN, or Zin, a city and deſart ſouth of the Holy Land, in Arabia Petrea: it gave name to the wilderneſs of Sin. Scripture diſtinguiſhes two cities and two deſarts of ſin, one is writ סין, ſin, with ſamech: the other, צין, tzin, with tzade.

The firſt was near Egypt and the Red-ſea. The Hebrews were no ſooner out of this ſea, but they were in the wilderneſs of ſin, which is between Elim and Sinai. Exod. xvi. 1. & xvii. 1. Here God rained manna on them.

The ſecond is alſo ſouth of Paleſtine, but toward the Dead Sea. Kadeſh was in the deſart of Zin: Deuteron. xxxii. 51. from this wilderneſs they ſent out the ſpies. Here Moſes and Aaron offended the Lord, at the waters of ſtriſe, Num. xiii. 21. The Land of Canaan, and the tribe of Judah, had the deſart of Zin, or Zina, for their ſouthern limit. Numbers xxvii. 14. xxxiv. 3. Joſh. xv. 3.

SIN, Peccatum, is any thought, word, deſire, action, or omiſſion of action, contrary to the law of God.

The Hebrews have ſeveral words for expreſſing ſin. They think, for example, 1— חטאת, Chataath, Peccatum, Ἁμαρτία, ἀσέβημα, πλημμελεία, ἀνομία, ſignifies a ſin committed againſt a poſitive precept; 2,— אשמת, Aſhamath, Delictum, Πλημμελεία, ἁμαρτία, ἀγνοία, ἀδικία, ἀνομία, expreſſes a ſin committed againſt a negative precept: 3,— שגגה, Shegaga, Ignorantia, Ἀκουσιως, Involuntary, ſtands for ſins of ignorance, forgetfulneſs, omiſſion, or inadvertency.

But certain it is, that theſe terms are often uſed one for the other, and that ſcripture ſeldom obſerves ſuch a diſtinction: It often calls very great ſins, by the name of ignorance, or folly; at other times it gives the name of ſin to faults of inadvertency.

Sin often denotes the ſacrifice of expiation, or the ſacrifice for ſin. Levit. iv. 3, 25, 29. v. 6. vii. 2. Pſalm xl. 6. Rom. viii. 3. St. Paul ſays, for example, that God was pleaſed that Jeſus Chriſt, who knew no ſin, ſhould be our victim of expiation: for he hath made him to be ſin [a ſin-offering: ſin by analogy of ideas] for us, who knew no ſin; that we might be made the righteouſneſs of God in him. 2 Cor. v. 21.

God was not the author of ſin or of death; but ſin and death entered the world by the malice of the devil. Wiſd. i. 13, 14. and ii. 24. Adam, by his diſobedience, rendered us all guilty before God; his ſin merited death for us; he is the cauſe wherefore we are born children of iniquity, and are inclined to evil from the womb. 1 Cor. xv. 21, 22. Rom. v. 12. & vi. 23. Pſal. li. 5. Rom. iii. 23. Gen. viii. 21. Jeſus Chriſt by his death, hath reſtored life for us; his obedience has reconciled us to God; he has merited for us the character of children of God.

SIN againſt the Holy Ghoſt, is differently explained by the fathers and interpreters. Athanaſius, Ep. 4. ad Serapion, who wrote expreſsly on this matter, relates the opinions of Origen, and of Theognoſtes, who made the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, to conſiſt in crimes committed after baptiſm. But Athanaſius well obſerves, that the Phariſees, whom our Saviour upbraided with this crime, had not received baptiſm, and conſequently were not capable of it. As for himſelf, he thinks it conſiſted in this, that the Phariſees maliciouſly imputed the works of Jeſus Chriſt to the power of the devil; though they could not but be convinced in their own minds, that he acted by a good ſpirit: alſo in this, that they denied the divinity of the ſon, which was ſo clearly proved by his works; which works were performed by the divine power of the Holy Spirit. St. Hilary, in Matth. xii. & xxxi. n 5. and Theophilus of Antioch, comment in Evangel. lib. 1. follow the opinion of Athanaſius.

St. Auſtin ſays lib. 1. Serm. Domini in Monte, cap. 22, that the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, conſiſts in ſubverting brotherly charity from motives of envy and malice; and in his Retractations, lib. 1. cap. 19. that to render this crime really irremiſſible, the ſinner muſt perſevere in it finally. He ſays elſewhere, that though ſeveral ſins may be committed againſt the Holy Ghoſt, yet that none are really irremiſſible, except final impenitence, deſpair, the perſeverance of a hardened ſinner, who ſtands aloof from God during his whole life. St. Chryſoſtom, Homil. 42. in Matth. the author of the imperfect work on St. Matthew, St. Iſidore of Damietta, Ep. lib. 1. Ep. 59. and others think, that this ſin conſiſted in aſcribing the miraculous works of Jeſus Chriſt to a diabolical power; and that its irremiſſibleneſs is not real and abſolute, but only relative, becauſe it is very difficult to obtain the pardon of it.

St. Ambroſe is not altogether conſiſtent with himſelf; in Luk. l. x. n. 94. he makes this ſin conſiſt in denying the deity of the ſon; in the book of the Holy Ghoſt, cap. 3, he ſays it conſiſts in denying the divinity of the Holy Ghoſt, and in imputing his works to the power of the devil. In his book of repentance cap. 24, he extends it to hereſy and ſchiſm. Apoſtolical Conſtitutions, lib. vi. cap. 18. and Philaſtrius, Hæreſi. Rhetorii. alſo, accuſe heretics of the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt. But were the Phariſees guilty of hereſy to whom our Saviour imputes this ſin? Hermas ſays, lib. iii. ſimilit. 6, 8, 9. the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, is the blaſpheming of God: and the author of the Queſtions upon the Old and New Teſtament ſays 9, 102, that it is a renouncing of God. The recognitions, imputed to Clement thinks the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, the irremiſſible ſin, to be that of an hardened and inſolent ſinner. Grotius, in Matth. xii. 31, eſpouſes this opinion, and gives as examples of this crime, Pharaoh, Korah, Simon Magus, Ananias and Sapphira.

Catholic commentators are divided: ſome follow Auſtin, and place the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, and its unpardonableneſs, in final impenitence: others place it in the wilful malice of thoſe who withſtand the evidence of truth, and will not acknowledge the miracles of Jeſus Chriſt to be the finger of God, but, malicioufly, and againſt the conviction of their own conſciences, impute them to the prince of darkneſs. This was certainly the crime of the Phariſees, to whom Jeſus Chriſt directed his diſcourſe; of which thoſe alſo become guilty, who oppoſe a known truth; and who impute good actions in good men, to magic, and diabolical confederacy. This is the opinion of St. Chryſoſtom and St. Jerom in Matth. xii. & Ep. 149. ad Marcellam.

Sin, Original. The catholic church believes that the ſin of Adam has tainted all his poſterity; and that all are born children of wrath; Epheſ. ii. 3. That by his fault alone ſin came into the world, and death by ſin: Rom. v. 12. And this original ſin, is well deſcribed by Job, xiv. 1. 4 Man that is born of a woman, &c. Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Not one. And David ſays, Pſal. li. 5. Behold, I was ſhapen in iniquity, and in ſin did my mother conceive me.

But, notwithſtanding theſe texts, ſeveral learned men have doubted, whether the Hebrews had any diſtinct notion of original ſin.

Joſephus, Philo, and thoſe chriſtians who admitted the pre-exiſtence of ſouls, and that ſouls are born good or bad, according to the good or evil they had done in another life; theſe, could not hold original ſin. Thoſe among the ancient Jews who believed a kind of Metempſychoſis, were ſtill further from it. And if they did not believe that mankind was born corrupt, in the ſight of God, they had no need of ſuppoſing any remedy for original ſin. Accordingly, in the inſtitution of circumciſion, they only mention decency, propriety, or diſtinction of the Jews from other nations.

The greater part of modern Jews, Vid. Manaſſeh Ben-Iſrael, conciliat, in Geneſ. qu. 6. p. 12. & de creatione, probl. 17. p. 61. as well as the antient, maintain the pre-exiſtence of ſouls, and a kind of tranſmigration; conſequently they cannot be much inclined to admit of original ſin: they ſuppoſe their children, who die before they receive circumciſion, to paſs into a ſtate of happineſs; therefore they do not think that circumciſion remits any ſin contracted at or before the birth: yet they acknowledge in man a natural propenſity to evil, which they call Jetzira raah. Maimonides, More Nevoch. part i. cap. 39, maintains, that it is not eaſier to conceive how a man ſhould be born with ſin, or with virtue, than how he ſhould be born a ſkilful maſter in any art or ſcience. Other Rabbins as formally deny Original Sin, and confine the effects of Adam's ſin to the introducing of death over all his poſterity.

However, we muſt allow, that other Rabbins ſtand up for Original Sin, which ſome expreſs by ſaying, that the devil who tempted Eve, caſt upon her ſuch a ſtinking ſmell, that ſhe communicated it to all her poſterity; but that the Iſraelites alone were free from it. Baſnage's Hiſt. of the Jews, cap. 4. lib. vi. cap. 13. Others acknowledge, that the bad inclinations which we find in ourſelves, are an evil: they ſay, with Moſes, that it is the fore-ſkin of the fleſh, which muſt be cut off: they call it with David, a defilement; with Solomon, an enemy; with Iſaiah, an offence; with Ezekiel, a ſtone, which God muſt take away, to give us a heart of fleſh; with Joel, a ſecret thing. They add, that as the fruit is bitter when the ſeed that produces it is bitter, ſo children, born from a corrupt father, muſt partake of his corruption. It is aſked, in the Gemara, titul. ſanhed. cap. xi. ſec. 7, if concupiſcence inſinuates itſelf at the moment of conception, or at the time of the birth? It is anſwered at the birth; for Scripture ſays, ſin lies at the door. But the number of Rabbins who thus ſpeak of Original Sin is ſmall.

The Mahometans admit of Original Sin, as a conſequence of the ſin of Adam: they call this the grain of the heart, or, the black ſeed of the heart, which Mahomet related that Gabriel the Archangel pulled out of his heart: they affirm alſo, that our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and his mother Mary were the only perſons preſerved from it. Bibl. Orient. p. 440, 583.

SINAI, סיני, buſh; from סנה ſenah. According to the Syriac, enmity.

SINAI, or Sina, a famous mountain of Arabia Petræa, on which God gave the law to Moſes, Exod. xix. 1. xxiv. 16. xxxi. 18. xxxiv. 2, 4, &c. Levit. xxv. 1. xxvi. 46. It ſtands in a kind of peninſula, formed by the two arms of the Red-ſea, one extending north, called the gulph of Kolſum; the other extending eaſt, called the gulph of Elan. The Arabs call mount Sinai by the name of Tor, i. e. the mountain, by way of excellence; or Gibel Mouſa, the mountain of Moſes: it is 260 miles from Cairo, which is a journey of ten days. The wilderneſs of Sinai, where the Iſraelites continued incamped almoſt a year, and where Moſes erected the tabernacle of the covenant, is conſiderably elevated above the reſt of the country; the aſcent to it is very craggy, the greater part cut out of the rock; then one comes to a large ſpace of ground, which is a plain ſurrounded on all ſides by rocks and eminencies, whoſe length is nearly twelve miles. Coppin's Voyage to Egypt, cap. 10.

Toward the extremity of this plain, on the north, two high mountains appear, the higheſt is called Sinai, the other Horeb. They are of very ſteep aſcent, and do not ſtand on much ground, in compariſon to their extraordinary height. Sinai is at leaſt one third part higher than the other, and its aſcent more upright, and difficult. The top of the mountain terminates in an uneven and rugged ſpace, which might contain about ſixty perſons. On this eminence is built a little chapel called St. Catherine's, where it is thought the body of this ſaint reſted for 360 years; but afterwards, it was removed into a church at the foot of the mountain. Near this chapel iſſues a fountain of very good freſh water; it is looked on as miraculous, it not being conceivable how water can flow from the brow of ſo high and ſo barren a mountain.

Mount Horeb, ſtands weſt of Sinai; ſo that at ſunriſing the ſhadow of Sinai covers Horeb. Beſide the little fountain at the top of Sinai, there is another at the foot of Horeb, which ſupplies the monaſtery of St. Catherine. Five or ſix paces from thence they ſhew a ſtone, whoſe height is four or five feet, and breadth about three, which, they ſay is the very ſtone from whence Moſes cauſed the water to guſh out: its colour is, of a ſpotted grey, and it is, as it were, ſet in a kind of earth, where no other rock appears. This ſtone has twelve holes or channels, which are about a foot wide, from whence they ſay the water iſſued which the Iſraelites drank. Vide Moses, and Plate, Miscellanies, No.

The Arabians reckon among the children of Iſrael, one called Tor, or Tour, who gave name to mount Sinai, which they call Tour-Sinai. They alſo give the name of Tour to a city below the ſame mountain, on the ſhore of the Red-ſea. Mahomet begins the chapter in his Alcoran, called the fig, by this oath: I ſwear by the fig, by the olive, by mount Sinai, and by the ſure and faithful city. The fig ſtands for a mountain of Paleſtine called Tor-lina, the mountain of the fig: the olive ſtands for the mount of Olives near Jeruſalem: mount Sinai is known: the faithful city is Mecca. Sinai is in great veneration among the muſſulmen, becauſe of the law which God gave on this mountain. D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. p. 501.

At this mountain, is a monaſtery of Greek monks, who had heretofore only a tower built near the burning buſh of Moſes. But, theſe monks finding themſelves expoſed to the inſults of the Arabs, who devoured all their proviſions, even to the conſecrated bread of the euchariſt; they petitioned the emperor Juſtinian to build them a ſtrong monaſtery, to ſecure them from theſe depredations: the emperor complied with their requeſt; but it is ſaid, that he put the architect to death, for pitching on this place for the monaſtery; which he did becauſe of its nearneſs to the burning buſh, and for the conveniency of the water. It is called the monaſtery of St. Catherine.

SINCERITY. Sincerus, Ἀκέραιος, εἰλικρινὴς, ἁπλῆς, &c. This word properly ſignifies truth and uprightneſs, when the heart and tongue agree together. Sincerity is oppoſed to double-mindedneſs, to deceit, when the ſentiments of the heart are contrary to the language of the mouth. The Latin word Sincerus is derived from ſine and cera, without wax; honey ſeparated from the wax, or pure honey. In Scripture ſincere ſignifies pure, or without mixture. Wiſd. vii. 25. Sapienta eſt emanatio quædam claritatis omnipotentis Dei ſincera. St. Paul, Philip. i. 10, would have the Philippians to be pure, their behaviour innocent, free from offence. That ye may be ſincere and without offence till the day of Chriſt. And St. Peter 2 Pet. iii. 1. exhorts the pure—ſincere mind of the faithful: I ſtir up your pure minds. St. Paul ſpeaks 1 Cor. v. 8. of ſincerity and truth, or of purity and truth in oppoſition to the leavened bread of iniquity. He reproaches the falſe apoſtles with not preaching Jeſus Chriſt ſincerely, purely, with upright and diſintereſted ſentiments.

SINDON. This word properly ſignifies a ſhroud, and the evangeliſts uſe it, to denote the linen cloth, in which Joſeph of Arimathea wrapped the body of Jeſus, after he had embalmed it, had winded bandages about it, and had put the napkin upon his head. Matt. xxvii. 59. Mark xv. 46. Luke xxiii. 53. St. John chap. xx. 7. ſupplies thoſe circumſtances which St. Matthew had omitted. The holy napkins, or Sudaria, which are ſhewn in ſeveral places, cannot be all the true Sindon in which Chriſt's body was involved, but are imitations of it.

Sindon is alſo mentioned in the hiſtory of Samſon. Judg. xiv. 12, 13. כדינים וחלפות. He promiſes the young men that were at his wedding; Triginta Sindones & totidem tunicas, if they could explain his riddle. The Hebrew ſays thirty Sedinim, and thirty changes of raiment. By Sedinim or Sindonem, ſome underſtand the Tunica worn next the ſkin; and by changes of raiment, complete ſuits of clothes, a tunic and a coat, for for that was a compleat ſuit; or only thirty coats which, with thirty tunics, made thirty changes of raiment.

The virtuous woman mentioned by Solomon, Prov. xxxi. 24. made ſindons and girdles, which ſhe ſold to the Phenicians. The young women of Jeruſalem wore ſindons, as appears from Iſaiah iii. 23. This was a faſhion peculiar to the Sidonians, and the Phenicians, and perhaps the name was derived from the city of Sidon. Martial ſays, that the ſindon of Tyre, or Phenicia, covers a man all over, and puts him in a condition to deſpiſe rain and wind.

> Ridebis ventos, hoc munere tectus, & imbres,
> Nec ſic in Syriâ Sindone tectus eris.
>
> MART. lib. iv. EP. xix.

The young man who followed Jeſus Chriſt the night of his paſſion, Amictus ſindone ſuper nudo, was probably, by this defended againſt the cold, as by a night-gown. Mark xiv. 51.

SINEW. The Hebrews do not eat the ſinew of the thigh of animals, in memory of the ſinew of Jacob's thigh, which the angel touched, and which contracted ſuch a numbneſs, that, according to ſome interpreters, he went lame of it all his life after. This abſtinence from the ſinew of the thigh of animals, is not commanded to Iſrael by the law; for they muſt have abſtained from it even before the law, according to the obſervation in Geneſis xxxii. 32. Some interpreters think, this forbearance is only voluntary devotion. In ſome places they abſtain wholly from the hind-quarter of animals; in other places they content themſelves with taking away the ſinew. See JACOB.

SINITE, הסיני, or Sinaus, buſh, enmity.

SINITE, Sinæus. Gen. x. 17. The eighth ſon of Canaan. The Sinites dwelt near Arce, in mount Libanus. Hieronym. quæſt. Hebr. in Geneſ. Strabo mentions the fortreſs of Sinnai in the mountains. By Sinæi, the Arabic means the inhabitants of Tripolis, in Phenicia.

SION, שיאן, σηὼν, noiſe, tumult; from יאון ſhaon, or שאה ſhaah.

SION. Deut. iv. 48. שיאן Shion or Sion. This is one of the names of mount Hermon: [rather, of a mountain, or of a chain of mountains: the whole called mountains of Hermon: from mount Hermon, the principal.] Probably of this mountain the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks, cxxxiii. 3. As the dew of Hermon, and as the dew that deſcendeth upon the mountains of Zion. The Hebrew here ſays, Zion, ציון; but it ſeems to be put for Sion, שיאן. The union and the good underſtanding of brethen, is as agreeable as the dew which falls on Hermon and Sion, two contiguous mountains. [Why are theſe two mountains ſelected? did the ſame kind, or cloud, of dew which covered one cover alſo the other, at the ſame time, &c. they being ſo cloſely adjacent?] Jeſus, the ſon of Sirach, ſpeaks alſo of mount Hermon, under the name of Sion. Ecclus. xxxiv. 17. Quaſi Cupreſſus in monte Sion. In the Greek it is, in monte Hermon.

SIPHMOTH, שפמות, the beard or brims.

SIPHMOTH, or Sephamoth. David ſent to Siphmoth the ſpoils taken from the Amalekites. 1 Sam. xxx. 28.

SIRAH, סרה, caldrons, pots, thorns; from סיר ſir: or treaſon, rebellion; from סרר ſarar.

SIRAH, or Sira, a well, or ciſtern, not far from Hebron. 2 Sam. iii. 26.

SIRACH, Σιρὰχ, ſong of the brother; from שיר ſhir, or שור ſhur, a ſong, and אדה achah, brother.

SIRACH, father of Jeſus, who compoſed the book of Eccleſiaſticus; whence he is commonly called, Jeſus the ſon of Sirach.

SIRBON. The lake Sirbon, known to the ancient geographers, was between Paleſtine and Egypt, on the coaſt of the Mediterranean ſea, not far from mount Caſius. It had a communication with the Mediterranean ſea, by a ſmall arm. Sometimes it is reckoned to Egypt, ſometimes to Judea, becauſe it lay between both countries.

SIRION, שריון, called Shenir, Deut. iii. 9. A breaſt-plate; from שריה ſhiriah, or שריון ſhirion: otherwiſe, deliverance, or ſong of the dove; from שרה ſharah, to untie, or from שור ſhur, a ſong, and יונה jonah, a dove.

SIRION, or Sarion; this name the Sidonians give to mount Hermon. Deut. iii. 9. See HERMON.

SISAI, ששי, σεσὶ, ſix, or the ſixth, or fine linen, or cotton; from שש ſheſh: otherwiſe, joy; from שוש ſhuſh.

SISAI, a giant of the Anakim. Numb. xiii. 22.

SISAMAI, סססמי, horſe, or ſwallow of the waters; from סוס ſus, a horſe, &c. מים majim, waters: or blindneſs, according to the Syriac. 1 Chr. ii. 40.

SISERA, סיסרא, that ſees a horſe, a ſwallow; from ראה raah, to ſee, and סוס ſus, a horſe, &c.

SISERA; or Siſara, general of the army of Jabin, king of Hazer. Judg. iv. 2. A. M. 2719, ante A. D, 1285. He was ſent by his maſter againſt Barak and Deborah, who had an army of ten thouſand men on mount Tabor. Siſera marched againſt them with nine hundred chariots armed with ſcythes, and a great number of infantry. Barak with his ſmall army attacked Siſera with ſuch impetuoſity, that he entirely routed him.

Siſera

Siſera himſelf fled; quitted his chariot, and ran on foot towards Haroſheth of the Gentiles. Approaching the tent of Heber the Kenite, Jael, the wife of Heber, deſired him to enter and hide himſelf. She covered him with a mantle; and gave him milk to drink. Siſera ſaid to her; "Stay at the door of the tent, and if any aſk you, who is here? anſwer "Nobody." Jael afterwards returning, and finding him faſt aſleep, ſhe drove a tent nail through his temples with a hammer, and faſtened him to the ground. When Barak arrived, ſhe ſhewed him Siſera weltering in his blood, dead.

SISTER, Soror. In the ſtile of the Hebrews, has equal latitude as brother. It is uſed, not only for a ſiſter by natural relation from the ſame father and mother; but alſo for a ſiſter only by the ſame father, or by the ſame mother; or a near relation only. Sarah is called ſiſter to Abraham, Gen. xii. 13. xx. 12. though only his niece, according to ſome, or ſiſter by the father's ſide, according to others. In Leviticus, xviii. 18. it is forbid to take to wife the ſiſter of a wife; to marry two ſiſters. Or, according to ſome interpreters, to marry a ſecond wife, having one already. Literally, "Thou ſhalt not take a wife over her ſiſter to afflict her;" as if meaning to forbid polygamy. In the Goſpel, the brothers, and ſiſters, of Jeſus Chriſt, are his couſins; children of the ſiſters of the holy virgin. Matth. xiii. 56. Mark vi. 3.

In Cant. iv. 9, 10, 12, v. 1, 2. the name of ſiſter is a name of tenderneſs between the ſpouſes. Sometimes, the word ſiſter expreſſes a reſemblance of conditions, and of inclinations. The prophets call Jeruſalem the ſiſter of Sodom, and Samaria; becauſe it delighted in the imitation of their idolatry and iniquity. Jerem. iii. 8, 10. Ezek. xvi. 45.

Jeſus Chriſt ſays, that thoſe who keep his commandments, are his brothers and his ſiſters. Matth. xii. 50. Job exclaims, I have ſaid to corruption, Thou art my father; to the worm, Thou art my mother and my ſiſter. Job xvii. 14. The wiſe man adviſes his pupil to ſay to wiſdom; Prov. vii. 4. Thou art my ſiſter; i. e. to love her, and become familiar with her. St. Paul aſks, whether it were not as lawful for him as for the other apoſtles, to carry with him in his journies ſome pious Chriſtian ſiſter; 1 Cor. ix. 5. As Chriſtians ſaluted each other by the name of brother, ſo they called Chriſtian women, ſiſters. St. James ſays, ii. 15, 16. If a brother, or a ſiſter, be naked, and deſtitute of daily food, &c. Vide BROTHER, FATHER, MOTHER.

SISTRUM, an inſtrument of muſic, anciently common in Egypt.

Iſiacos agitant mareotica Siſtra tumultus.
AUSON. EP. XXV.

The invention of this inſtrument is attributed to Iſis; and her prieſts generally uſed it in her ceremonies.

Jactantem Phariâ tinnula Siſtra manu.
OVID. DE PONTE.

The ſiſtrum was of an oval figure, with braſs wires acroſs, which played in holes wherein they were ſtopped by their bent heads. They played on it, by ſhaking the ſiſtrum in cadence; whereby the braſs wires made a ſhrill and loud noiſe. This is the deſcription that Apuleius gives of it: Dextrâ quidem gerebat aureum crepitaculum, cujus per anguſtam laminam, in modum balthei recurvatam, trajectæ mediæ paucæ virgulæ, criſpante brachio trigeminos jactus, reddebant argutum ſonum. Apul. Metam. lib. xi. Vide MUSIC and Plate 1. No. 13.

SISUTHRUS, or Xiſuthrus. It is believed that the Babylonians had a knowledge of the deluge, and that Noah was known to them by the name of Siſuthrus. Vide Alex. Polyhiſt. apud Syncell. p. 30. Cyrill. Alex. lib. i. in Julian. Euſeb. præp. lib. ix. cap. 12. They ſay, that Saturn appeared in a dream to Siſuthrus, and informed him, that all mankind was to periſh by a flood. He commanded him to write down the origin, the progreſs, and the completion of all things, and to bury the writing in the ground, in the city of Sipharis,—(probably Kariath-Sepher, or Dabir.)—to build a veſſel; to enter therein with his relations, and friends, and to launch into the deep ſea. Siſuthrus obeyed this order, loaded his veſſel with proviſions, and took in all ſorts of animals. His veſſel was, they ſay, five ſtadia, or 625 paces long, and two ſtadia, or 250 paces wide.

When the deluge came, all were drowned who were not with Siſuthrus. When he perceived the waters to abate, he ſent out a bird, which finding no food, nor reſting-place, returned to him. Some time after, he ſent out others, which returned with their legs dawbed with mud. Laſtly, a good while after, he let others go, which did not return. Then he underſtood that the earth was quite dry; he broke up his veſſel, and went out with his wife, his daughter, and the pilot. He went up into a mountain, where he worſhipped the earth, erected an altar, and ſacrificed to the gods. After this he appeared no longer upon the earth, neither himſelf, nor thoſe who went out of the ark with him. The others that continued in the veſſel, going out likewiſe likewiſe, ſought every where for Siſuthrus, but to no purpoſe. Having called him ſeveral times, they heard his voice, recommending to them piety, and the worſhip of the gods. He alſo told them, that in future he was to have no converſation with men, but was to live with the gods. It is eaſily obſerved, that this has a very great conformity with the hiſtory of Noah. Vide FRAGMENTS, Nos. XIX. XX.

SIVAN, סיון, νισὰν, buſh; from סנה ſene: or thorn; from סן ſin. Theſe etymologies are violent, and uncertain.

SIVAN, the name of an Hebrew month. Baruch i. 8. The third month of the holy year, and the ninth of the civil year. It anſwers to the moon of May.

SKINS. Our firſt parents had no ſooner committed ſin, 'ere they perceived their nakedneſs, and made themſelves aprons of fig-leaves. Gen. iii. 7, 21. But, ſoon afterwards, God gave them coats of ſkins for cloathing. Vide ADAM. [It is moſt probable they were the ſkin (for the word is ſingular, not plural) of a ſacrifice.] By theſe coats of ſkins, ſome ancients underſtood the barks of trees. Others tranſlate, He made them coats to cover their ſkins. The Chaldee, He made them robes of honour, to cover their fleſh.

Moſes leaves to the prieſts the ſkins of the victims, and this was one of their chief perquiſites. Lev. vii. 8. But when a ſacrifice was offered for the ſins of the prieſt himſelf, the ſkin was burned out of the camp, or the city. Lev. iv. 11. viii. 17. xvi. 27.

Tents were anciently made of ſkins. Hab. iii. 7. the tents of the Midianites. Cant. i. 4. the tents of king Solomon. The ark of the Lord was lodged under a covering of ſkins: 2 Sam. vii. 2. The Pſalmiſt compares the Heavens to a vaſt tent of ſkins. Pſalm ciii. And Jeremiah iv. 20. ſuddenly are my tents ſpoiled, and my curtains in a moment.

Country people were often cloathed with ſkins; and ſkins are enumerated among the cloathing of the people. Lev. xi. 32. xiii. 48. xv. 17. Prophets, and ſuch as profeſſed auſterity, wore girdles of leather. 2 Kings i. 8. Elijah and John the Baptiſt wore girdles of this kind. Matt. iii. 4. Vide FRAGMENTS, Nos. 319, 320.

SLAVES. Men were originally free and equal; ſlavery entered the world by ſin. Noah, to puniſh the affront received from his ſon, ſubjected him to ſlavery; Gen. ix. 25. When Abraham was choſen of God, to become the father of the faithful, he received the badge of circumciſion, as a character which diſtinguiſhed him as the ſervant of the Lord. His deſcendants always valued themſelves on their liberty. We have never been ſervants to any, ſaid the Jews to Jeſus Chriſt. John. viii. 33. And St. Paul magnifies the liberty of the true children of Abraham, as being really free, born of a free mother, in oppoſition to the race of Iſhmael, born of a mother who was a ſlave. Gal. iv. 31. This regards moral liberty, and moral ſervitude. But the rabbins maintain, that they have never been in ſubjection to any one by a ſervitude which they call intrinſic, and which changes the condition of the perſon. If they have been reduced to ſlavery, that does not deſtroy that ſtate of liberty wherein they were born.

But this does not hinder, but that the Hebrews have been ſubject to ſeveral princes: to the Egyptians, the Philiſtines, the Chaldeans, the Grecians, and the Romans. Many have been forced to ſell their liberty; others, being taken in war, remained ſlaves to their conquerors. Moſes himſelf notices two or three ſorts of ſlaves among the Hebrews. They had foreign ſlaves, obtained by war, or by money, or born in the houſe. Maſters had an entire authority over theſe; they might ſell them, change them, puniſh them, judge them, and even put them to death, without any form of proceſs. Exod. xxi. 20, 21. If a man ſmite his ſervant, or his maid with a rod, and he die under his hand, he ſhall be ſurely puniſhed; notwithſtanding, if he continue a day or two, he ſhall not be puniſhed, for he is his money.

This muſt be underſtood, as the rabbins, ſay, Vide Selden. de jure Nat. & Gent. lib. iv. cap. i. of Hebrew ſlaves, but not of foreign ſlaves, which a maſter might have, and might uſe what ſeverity towards them he pleaſed, with impunity; for in this caſe the law of Moſes enjoined nothing. They followed the rules common to other nations, among whom maſters had abſolute power over their ſlaves. Apud omnes peræquè nationes animadvertere poſſumus, dominis in ſervos vitæ neciſque poteſtatem fuiſſe. Yet wiſe men have always diſapproved that liberty which certain maſters aſſumed, of putting their ſlaves to death. Cato the cenſor would never put any of his ſlaves to death, before they had been condemned, and found worthy of death, by his other ſlaves. Plutarch in Catone. Job teſtifies, that he had never declined to enter into judgment with his ſlaves, when any controverſy aroſe between them. Job xxxi. 13, 14, 15. The Athenians puniſhed with death him who had killed a ſlave, as much as if he had killed a freeman.

The

The Samaritan text, in this paſſage, is very different from the Hebrew. It reads thus: He that ſhall ſtrike his man-ſervant, or his maid ſervant with a rod, if they die under his hand, he ſhall not be moleſted, he ſhall not die; and if the ſervant ſurvives for two or three days, he ſhall not be puniſhed, becauſe it is the price of his money. As if all this related only to a ſlave, Canaanitiſh, or Gentile, which the civil laws allowed to put to death with impunity.

The Chaldee paraphraſt, ſome rabbins, and ſome commentators, are of the ſame opinion; that this has no regard to Hebrew ſlaves; for, ſay they, it cannot be ſaid of an Iſraelitiſh ſlave, that he was the price of his maſter's money. He was in ſervitude but for a few years, and the damage his maſter would ſuffer by putting him to death, and thereby depriving himſelf of his ſervices, would not have been puniſhment enough. Whereas the loſs of a foreign ſlave was a conſiderable prejudice to an intereſted maſter, and he was, in ſome meaſure, juſtly puniſhed for his cruelty, by the death of a man who was his own in perpetuity; and who might have left him children of the ſame condition as himſelf.

Moreover, it was not the deſign of the Lord, that the Iſraelites ſhould be reduced to perpetual ſlavery by their brethren; or that they ſhould be ſold to ſtrangers, to remain ſlaves for their whole lives. But, if an Hebrew ſhould have ſold himſelf to a ſtranger living in the country; this Hebrew might redeem his freedom, if he had means for it. If not, one of his neareſt relations might redeem him, by paying to his maſter the ſum he had coſt him, deducting the ſervice he had done him, and reckoning what time he had to ſerve to the year of jubilee; for then he had a right to go out gratis.

In Exodus xxi. 1, 2, &c. Moſes makes theſe regulations concerning Hebrew ſlaves: If thou buy an Hebrew ſervant, ſix years he ſhall ſerve, and in the ſeventh he ſhall go out free for nothing. The rabbins inſiſt, that a ſlave was obliged to ſerve ſeven years compleat; but the generality of commentators think, that he went out free in the ſabbatical year, though he had ſerved only two or three years. Moſes adds, He ſhall have at going out the ſame cloaths he had at coming in, and his wife ſhall go out with him. The Hebrew has it; If he came in by himſelf [with his body] he ſhall go out by himſelf; if he were married, then his wife ſhall go out with him. The rabbins ſay, that the maſter was obliged to maintain the wife and children of the ſlave, though the huſband only was a ſlave.

If his maſter have given him a wife, and ſhe hath borne him ſons or daughters; the wife and her children ſhall be her maſter's, and he ſhall go out by himſelf; [or with his body.] This law is capable of ſeveral ſenſes: A maſter might make a Hebrew ſlave marry a woman ſlave of another nation; and as this woman is no Iſraelite, ſhe could not enjoy the privilege of the ſabbatical year; but her huſband might quit her, and enter on his liberty this year. It is aſked, Whether the marriage was diſſolved by this ſeparation? Interpreters are divided on this queſtion. What to us appears to have the greateſt certainty, is, that as there could probably be no marriage among ſlaves, who had taken one another without choice, and without liberty, ſo there could be no diſſolution of marriage in their ſeparation.

If the ſervant ſhall plainly ſay, I love my maſter, my wife, and my children, I will not go out free: Then his maſter ſhall bring him unto the judges [Heb. Gods]; he ſhall alſo bring him to the door, or unto the door-poſt, [of his maſter's houſe] and his maſter ſhall bore his ear through with an awl, and he ſhall ſerve him for ever. Deut. xv. 17. According to the commentators, till the year of jubilee; for then all ſlaves, without exception, recovered their liberty. Hieronym. in Galat. i. Grot. Vatab. Tirin. &c. The rabbins add, that they were thus ſet free alſo at the death of their maſters, and did not deſcend to their heirs.

If a man ſell his daughter to be a maid-ſervant, [or a ſlave] ſhe ſhall not go out as the men-ſervants do. Exod. xxi. 7. The laws we have now mentioned do not concern her. There is another kind of juriſprudence for Hebrew girls, than for men, or boys. A father could not ſell his daughter for a ſlave, according to the rabbins, till ſhe was at the age of puberty, and unleſs he was reduced to the utmoſt indigence. Beſides, when a maſter bought an Iſraelitiſh girl, it was always with preſumption that he, or his ſon, would take her to wife. Hence Moſes adds, If ſhe pleaſe not her maſter, and he does not think fit to marry her, he ſhall ſet her at liberty: or, according to the Hebrew, he ſhall let her be redeemed. To ſell her unto a ſtrange nation he ſhall have no power, ſeeing he hath dealt deceitfully with her, as to the promiſe, implicitly at leaſt, that he had made her, of taking her to wife.

If he hath betrothed her unto his ſon, he ſhall deal with her after the manner of daughters. Exod. xxi. 9, 10. He ſhall take care that his ſon uſes her as his wife, that he does not deſpiſe her, or uſe her ill. "If he makes his ſon marry another ther wife, he ſhall give her her dowry, her cloaths, and what is due to her for her virginity;" or, according to the Hebrew, "If he make his ſon marry another wife, he ſhall not diminiſh the cloaths, the maintenance, or the habitation of the former." That is, according to ſeveral commentators, If the maſter who bought this maid, and who made his ſon marry her, makes his ſon marry a ſecond wife, he ſhall take care that his ſon treat this firſt woman as his wife, that he allow her food and raiment, and perform the duties of marriage to her, as to his true wife; if he does not, then ſhall ſhe go out free without money.

Otherwiſe, if the father of a family who has bought an Iſraelitiſh maid, does not marry her, nor make his ſon marry her; or, if he would diſmiſs her after he had kept her for ſome time, he ſhall be obliged to marry her to another, or to ſell her to another Hebrew maſter, on the ſame conditions that he had taken her himſelf, giving her a portion, her clothes, and the price of her virginity, agreeable to cuſtom; or, as regulated by the judges.

An Hebrew might fall into ſlavery ſeveral ways: 1. If reduced to extreme poverty, he might ſell himſelf. Lev. xxv. 39. 2. A father might ſell his children as ſlaves. Exod. xxi. 7. 3. Inſolvent debtors might be delivered to their creditors as ſlaves. 2 Kings iv. 1. 4. Thieves not able to make reſtitution for their theſts, or their value, were ſold for the benefit of the ſufferers. Exod. xxii. 3. 5. They might be taken priſoners in war. 6. They might be ſtolen, and afterwards ſold for ſlaves, as Joſeph was ſold by his brethren. 7. An Hebrew ſlave redeemed from a Gentile by one of his brethren, might be ſold by him to another Iſraelite.

Slavery, ſervitude, or bondage, in Scripture often expreſſes the ſubjection of one people to another. Gen. xxvii. 37. Iſaac ſays to Eſau; Behold, I have made him thy Lord, and all his brethren have I given to him for ſervants. The Egyptians ſay to Joſeph, Buy us and our land for bread, and we and our land will be ſervants unto Pharaoh. When Samuel declares to the Hebrews the rights and prerogatives of a king, 1 Sam. viii. 16, 17. he ſays, "He ſhall take your ſlaves, and your maids, and you yourſelves ſhall be ſubject to him as ſlaves." And Goliah ſays to the Iſraelites, 1 Sam. xvii. 8, 9. Am not I a Philiſtine, and you ſervants to Saul? Chooſe you a man for you, and let him come down to me. And if he be able to fight with me, and to kill me, then will we be your ſervants. But if I prevail againſt him, and kill him, then ſhall ye be our ſervants, and ſerve us.

SLEEP, ſleeping, ſlumbering, is taken, firſt, for the natural ſleep or repoſe of the body; ſecondly, for the moral ſleep of the ſoul, ſupineneſs, indolence, ſtupidity; or, thirdly, for the ſleep of death.

You ſhall ſleep with your fathers, you ſhall die, as they are dead. Jer. li. 39. Daniel ſays, xii. 2. Thoſe that ſleep in the duſt of the grave. John xi. 11. Lazarus our friend ſleepeth; let us go and awake him: He is dead, let us go and revive him. Awake thou that ſleepeſt, and ariſe from the dead, and Chriſt ſhall give thee light. Epheſ. v. 14. He ſpeaks to thoſe dead in ſin and infidelity. St. Peter ſays of the wicked, their damnation ſlumbereth not; 2 Pet. ii. 3. God is not aſleep; he will not forget to puniſh them in his own due time. And Solomon ſays, Prov. xxiii. 21. The ſlumberer ſhall be cloathed with rags; the ſlothful ſhall live in poverty.

Iſaiah ſpeaks of a ſuperſtitious practice among the Pagans, who went to ſleep in the temples of their idols, to obtain prophetic dreams; Iſai. lxv. 4. בנצורים ילינו. Qui habitant in ſepulchris, & in delubro idolorum dormiunt. He ſpeaks of ſuperſtitious and idolatrous Jews, who in contempt of the prophets and the temple of the Lord, ſlept in the tombs and temples of idols, to procure dreams that might diſcover future events to them. The Pagans for this purpoſe uſed to lie on the ſkins of the ſacrificed victims.

VIRGIL. ÆNEID. vii.

The Hebrew may be thus tranſlated, They remained in the ſepulchres, and paſſed the night among the monuments, or, in deſerted places. Strabo ſays, lib. xvi. that the Jews ſlept in their temples, and there expected prophetic dreams, both for themſelves and others; but that God ſends none but to ſuch only as live in purity and juſtice.

To ſleep is alſo taken for the commerce between the ſexes. Gen. xix. 33.

SLING, funda; an inſtrument of cords, uſed to throw ſtones with the greater violence. The invention of the ſling is aſcribed to the Phenicians, Plin. lib. vii. cap. 56. or to the inhabitants of the iſlands Baleares, now called Majorca and Minorca Vegetius de re militari, lib. iv. The Hebrews heretofore made great uſe of them. The tribe of Benjamin had eſpecial ſkill and dexterity in the ſling, and could hit a mark to a hair, Judg. xx. 16. This muſt be owned to be an exaggeration; but however, it proves their great abilities in the management of the ſling. David obtained great glory when he knocked down by his ſling, the giant Goliah, who was the terror of all Iſrael. 1 Sam. xvii. 49. Scripture notices, that when David was at Ziklag, there came to him a company of ſlingers, who could uſe their left-hands with the ſame facility as their right. 1 Chron. xii. 2. Uzziah, king of Judah, made great collections of arms in his magazines, particularly there were bows, and ſlings for caſting ſtones, 2 Chron. xxvi. 14.

SMELL. Jacob ſaid to his ſons, after the ſlaughter of the Shechemites. Gen. xxxiv. 30. Ye have troubled me, to make me to ſtink among the inhabitants of the land: Ye have given me an ill ſcent, or ſmell, among this people. The Iſraelites in like manner complained to Moſes and Aaron, Exod. v. 21. The Lord look upon you, and judge, becauſe you have made our ſavour to be abhorred in the eyes of Pharaoh, and in the eyes of his ſervants. This manner of ſpeaking occurs pretty frequently in the Hebrew. In a contrary ſenſe, St. Paul ſays, 2 Cor. ii. 15, 16. We are unto God a ſweet ſavour of Chriſt, in them that are ſaved, and in them that periſh: To the one we are the ſavour of death unto death, and to the other the ſavour of life unto life. [Vide the Rabbins' account of Eve. SIN, ad fin.]

In the ſacrifices of the old law, the ſmell of the burnt offerings is repreſented in Scripture, as agreeable to God; Gen. viii. 21. And thou ſhalt burn the whole ram upon the altar: it is a burnt offering unto the Lord; it is a ſweet ſavour, an offering made by fire unto the Lord. The ſame thing, by analogy, is ſaid of prayer, Pſalm cxli. 2. Let my prayer be ſet forth before thee as incenſe; and the lifting up of my hands, as the evening ſacrifice. And St. John, Rev. v. 8. repreſents the twenty-four elders with golden phials full of odours, which are the prayers of the ſaints.

In Daniel iii. 27, Odor ignis, the ſmell of fire, ſeems to inſinuate, that the cloaths of the three young men, thrown into the fiery furnace, were not ſo much as ſinged, or had the ſmell of fire upon them.

SMERDIS, king of Perſia, called Artaxerxes, or Artachſarta, Ezra iv. 7. Cyrus the Great, ſays Xenoph. Cyropæd. left two ſons, Cambyſes, and Tanaoxares, otherwiſe called Smerdis, or Mergis, according to Juſtin. Cambyſes took his brother with him in his expedition againſt Egypt. But when it was found that Smerdis was the only one of his army who could draw the bow that the Ethiopians had ſent him, Cambyſes conceived ſuch a jealouſy againſt him that he ſent him back into Perſia. Some time after this, having dreamed that Smerdis had taken poſſeſſion of the crown of Perſia, he ſent one of his confidents, named Prexaſpes, to put him to death; which he did.

After about three years, Cambyſes ſet out to return from Egypt, into Perſia. Herodot. lib. iii. When arrived in Syria, he found a courier diſpatched from Perſia, with an account, that Smerdis the ſon of Cyrus, had aſcended the throne. And indeed, Pathiſites, a chief of the Magi, to whom Cambyſes had left the government of Perſia, in his abſence, had placed his own brother, Smerdis, on the throne. He had great reſemblance to Smerdis, the prince of that name, who had been killed by Prexaſpes, and whoſe death was not publicly known.

Upon this, Cambyſes gave orders for the marching of his troops with all expedition to puniſh this uſurper: but as he was mounting his horſe with too great precipitation, his ſword fell out of the ſcabbard, and wounded him in his thigh, of which he died ſoon after: Before his death, he ſent for the grandees of Perſia, acquainted them with the death of his brother Smerdis, and with the uſurpation of the Magian, conjuring them not to ſubmit to the ſurreptitious authority of this impoſtor. Herodotus calls him Smerdis; Œſchilus, Mardus; Cteſius, Spendates; and Juſtin, Oropaſtes.

No ſooner was he confirmed in his goverment by the death of Cambyſes, but the Samaritans, always at enmity with the Jews, wrote to him, that the Jews, who were always factious and turbulent, were now rebuilding the city and temple of Jeruſalem; and that when they had compleated this undertaking, it was much to be apprehended, they intended to revolt; which might encourage the neighbouring nations of Syria and Paleſtine to do the ſame, &c. This letter having been received at court, the archives of the kingdom were inſpected, where indeed it was eaſy to obſerve, that the Hebrews had long maintained a war againſt the kings of Aſſyria and Babylon, and at laſt had been ſubdued by king Nebuchadnezzar. Ezra iv. 7.

On this, an order was ſent forbidding the Jews to proceed in repairing Jeruſalem, or the temple; and the Samaritans were directed to ſee this order complied with. Thus a ſtop was put to this work until the ſecond year of Darius, ſon of Hyſtaſpes, who permitted the Jews to reſume their work of repairing the temple; but the prohibition of rebuilding the city walls was not taken off until A. D. 3550, by Artaxerxes Longimanus.

Smerdis omitted nothing to ſecure the poſſeſſion of the throne of Perſia. He married Atoſſa daughter of of Cyrus, and granted his ſubjects an exemption from taxes, and military ſervices, for three years: and as he had great reaſon to fear the worſt, if it ſhould be known that he was not the true Smerdis, he took great care to avoid appearing in public; this was not unuſual in Perſia, where their kings to preſerve the reſpect due to majeſty, ſhew themſelves but ſeldom: yet this exceeding caution rendered him the more ſuſpected. Ozanes, a Perſian noble whoſe daughter Phedyma was of the number of the king's wives, privately enquired of his daughter whether the king was the true Smerdis or no? ſhe informed him, that having never ſeen Smerdis the ſon of Cyrus, ſhe could not judge of this matter. He gave her orders to enquire of Atoſſa the daughter of Cyrus, and ſiſter to Smerdis. But Phedyma let her father know, that the wives of the king had no correſpondence with one another, nor were allowed to ſee one another. At laſt, Ozanes gave his daughter orders to obſerve whether the king had his ears or not; for Cyrus had cauſed the ears of the counterfeit Smerdis to be cut off, for ſome crime. Phedyma while the king was ſleeping ſoundly by her, ſatisfied herſelf, that he had loſt his ears: of which ſhe gave intelligence to her father.

Ozanes opened the matter to ſix of the principal nobility, who, forming a party againſt him, entered the palace, attacked the uſurper, and his brother Pathiſites, the contriver of this intrigue: killed them both, and expoſing their heads to the people diſcovered the whole impoſture. Darius the ſon of Hyſtaſpes ſucceeded Smerdis. Vide DARIUS.

SMITE. To Smite, is often uſed for to kill. David ſmote the Philiſtine: he put Goliah to death. The Lord ſmote Nabal; he ſmote Uzzah; he put them to death. To Smite, is alſo put for to afflict, to ſtrike with fear, with the peſtilence, with poverty, with ulcers, with diſtempers, with wounds. To ſmite an army, is, to conquer it, to rout it entirely. To ſmite the camp of the Philiſtines, is, to diſperſe it, to obtain a victory over them. To ſtrike, literally to ſmite a covenant, is to contract an alliance. God ſmote the Philiſtines, in poſteriora; with the piles, or hemorrhoids, or other diſeaſe of the fundament. To ſmite with the tongue, is to load with injuries and reproaches; with ſcandalous reflections. To ſmite or ſtrike hands, is ſometimes an action of applauſe and approbation; at other times, is a token of grief, trouble, and aſtoniſhment. To ſmite the cheek, to ſmite with the fiſt, require no explication. Lam. iii. 30. To ſmite the thigh, denotes indignation, trouble, aſtoniſhment. Jer, xxxi. 19. To ſtrike hand againſt hand, ſignifies, expreſs your trouble, by ſmiting your hands. Ezek. xxi. 14. He ſhall ſmite the earth with the rod of his mouth, Iſai. xi. 4, God ſhall deſtroy them with his breath. To wound [or ſmite] the weak conſcience of a brother, 1 Cor. viii. 12. is, to create unneceſſary ſcruples in his conſcience, and to expoſe him to the commiſſion of ſin. To ſtrike or ſmite one's heart: David ſmote his heart; he felt remorſe, at having cut off the lappet of Saul's garment. 1 Sam. xxiv. 6. See STROKE.

SMYRNA, Σμυρνα, from a Greek word that ſignifies Myrrh.

SMYRNA, a city of Aſia Minor, on the Archipelago, having a fine harbour. Jeſus Chriſt, by the mouth of St. John, addreſſes the angel or biſhop of Smyrna. Rev. ii. 8, 9, 10.

It is aſked, who was this angel, or biſhop? The generality think it was Polycarp, who was made biſhop of Smyrna by the apoſtle John. Ita Irenæ. lib. iii. cap. 3, Tertull. Præſcript. cap. 32. Hieron. de viris illuſt. cap. 32. alii. The commendations given to the angel of Smyrna, agree with St. Polycarp; and it is obſervable, that here is not one word of reproach. There is ſome probability that the martyrdom of St. Germanicus and others, of Smyrna, who ſuffered under Marcus Aurelius, was what St. John had in view, when he ſays, the devil ſhall put ſome of them in priſon.

SNUFFERS, Emunctoria. מלקחים Exod. xxv. 38. & xxxvii. 23. The ſnuffers were to ſnuff the lamps of the great golden candleſtick with ſeven branches, that ſtood in the ſanctuary. They were of gold, and their form was probably like that of our ſnuffers, uſed to ſnuff lamps, or candles. The word comes from a root that ſignifies, to lay hold of, to pinch, to ſhut up, to receive.

SO, סוא, σαυὰ, a meaſure for grain, or dry matters. Heb. Seah, which the Greeks tranſlate by σάτον. But it is better to acknowledge, that the true etymology of this Egyptian word is not to be found in the Hebrew tongue.

SO, or Sua, king of Egypt: he made an alliance with Hoſhea king of Iſrael, and promiſed him aſſiſtance, yet gave him none; nor prevented Shalmaneſer king of Aſſyria from taking Samaria, and ſubverting the kingdom of Iſrael, A. M. 3283, ante A.D. 721. 2 Kings xvii. 4.

Uſher, and Marſham, think So, otherwiſe Soos or Sous, is the Sabacon king of Ethiopia, who is taken for the firſt king of the dynaſty of Egyptians in Egypt. Uſher ſays, he began to reign A. M.

3277, having taken and burnt alive Bocchoris king of this country. He reigned eight years. He had for his ſucceſſor Sevechus, whom Uſher thinks to be the Sethon, of Herodotus, lib. 2. cap. 141. Uſher. ad A.M. 3279. Can. Ægypt. ſæculo 16. p. 484. Vide FRAGMENT, No.

SOBA, צובה, army, or battle; from צבא tſaba: otherwiſe, ſwelling, or tumor; from צבה tſabah.

SOBA; Syria of Soba, or Aram of Soba. We think Soba to be a city which gave name to a part of Syria. But this city having been deſtroyed, or having changed its name, we cannot certainly ſay how far Syria of Soba extended. It appears, that it muſt have been at the northern extremity of Cœlo-Syria, from Libanus and Antilibanus toward Antioch; for it is different from Syria, of Damaſcus, of Emath, of Rohob, of Maachar, and of Geſhur. Soba is called Sobol, or Sobal, in Judith iii. 1, 14. I ſuppoſe Soba, or Sobal, might be Hoba, or Hobal or Abyla, lying between Libanus and Antilibanus.

SOBAL, שבל, way, ſpike, thigh; from שבל ſhobel: otherwiſe, old-age, vain; from בלה balah, to grow old, and שוא ſhova, vain.

I. SOBAL, the city of Seir the Horite, Gen. xxxvi. 20.

II. SOBAL, Syria of, ſee SOBA.

SOBER, Sobriety: this is commonly taken for the oppoſite to intemperance: ſometimes alſo for moderation, modeſty, and that virtue which knows how to chuſe the golden mean. Rom. xii. 3. For I ſay, through the grace given unto me to every man that is among you, not to think of himſelf more highly than he ought to think; but to think ſoberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the meaſure of faith. St. Paul, 1 Tim. ii. 9. would have women dreſs themſelves in modeſt apparel, with ſhame-facedneſs and ſobriety, as decency requires. Alſo the word ſobriety is taken for vigilance: 1 Tim. iii. 2. Νηφάλιον, Vigilantem, Pagn. Mont. Eraſm. Eſt. Menoch. Piſc. A Biſhop muſt be vigilant, ſober. Elſewhere it is taken for prudent, moderate: 2 Tim. i. 7. Σωφρονίσμ&, ſobrietas, frugalitas, modeſtia, animi tranquillitas, &c. For God has not given us the ſpirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a ſound mind, or ſobriety. When Antiochus Epiphanes was told of the murder of the high-prieſt Onias, he was ſo moved at it, that he ſhed tears; remembering the wiſdom and the moderation of that great man: becauſe of the ſober and modeſt behaviour of him that was dead. 2 Macc. iv. 37.

SOCOH, סבות, or Soceth, tents, tabernacles; from סך ſoc.

SOCOH, Soco, or Socho, a city of Judah, Joſh. xv. 35. 1 Sam. xvii. 1. Heber repaired Socoh, 1 Chron. iv. 18. and his family dwelt there. Rehoboam fortified it afterwards: 2 Chron. xi. 7. Euſebius ſays, there were two cities of Socoh, the higher, and the lower Socoh, nine miles from Eleutheropolis toward Jeruſalem. [Shoco, Eng. Tr.]

SODI, סודי, my ſecret; from סוד ſod, ſecret, and the pronoun י i, my.

SODOM, שדמה, their ſecret, their lime, their cement; from, סוד ſod, ſecret, and the pronoun ה ah, theirs; or from שוד ſhud, lime: but improperly, for Sodom is written with a ס ſamech.

SODOM, the capital city of Pentapolis, for ſome time the dwelling place of Lot, the nephew of Abraham. Gen. xiii. 12, 13. The crimes of this city roſe to ſuch a height, that God deſtroyed it by fire from heaven, with three other neighbouring cities, Gomorrah, Zeboim, and Admah; which were as wicked as itſelf. Gen. xix. A.M. 2107, ante A.D. 1897. The plain wherein they ſtood, was before pleaſant and fruitful like an earthly paradiſe. It was firſt burned, and was afterwards overflowed by the waters of the Jordan, which there formed the Dead-ſea, or lake of Sodom. It is believed Sodom was one of the ſouthern cities that were deſtroyed; becauſe it was near Zoar, which was beyond the ſouthernmoſt point of the Dead ſea.

It is doubted whether it ſtood within the ſpace of land now poſſeſſed by this ſea, or only upon its border. The prophets mention the deſtruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, or allude to it, and inſinuate, that theſe places ſhall be deſert and dryed up, and uninhabited, Jer. xlix. 18. & l. 38.; that they ſhall be covered with briars and brambles, a land of ſalt and ſulphur, where there can be neither planting nor ſowing: Deut. xxix. 22. Wiſd. ii 9. Amos iv. 11. throughout ſcripture the ruin of Sodom and Gomorrah is repreſented as one of the moſt ſignal effects of God's anger. Joſephus ſays de bello, lib. 5. cap. 5. that around the lake of Sodom, and the cities deſtroyed by fire from heaven, the land is all burnt up, and the diſmal effects of this terrible burning are ſtill viſible, as are the remains of thoſe unfortunate cities. The fruits which grow there have a fair outward appearance, and ſeem good to the ſight; but are full of aſhes, and, when opened, fly away in duſt.

It ſhould ſeem then, that in Joſephus's time, the ruins of theſe five cities were ſtill in being. Strabo Geograph. lib. 15. alſo ſpeaks of the ruins of Sodom, which were ſixty furlongs in compaſs, and were to be ſeen on the ſhore of the Dead-ſea. The Notitia makes expreſs mention of Sodom, as an epiſcopal city. There is found one Severus, a biſhop of Sodom, among the biſhops of Arabia, who who ſubſcribed to the firſt council of Nice. M. Reland cannot perſuade himſelf that Sodom was ever rebuilt; he believes the word Sodom, among the ſubſcriptions to the council of Nice, muſt be a fault of the copiers; but I cannot be of his opinion. The record is very circumſtantial; it puts the epiſcopal city of Sodom between Thamar and En-geddi. Stephen the geographer, in Ἐγγάδα & in Σόδομα, puts En-geddi near Sodom. So that I do not ſee it can be doubted, but that the city of Sodom was rebuilt, either in its former place, or near it: for though it appears to me very probable, that it was not covered by the waters of the Dead-ſea, and that it ſtood on the ſhore of this ſea, yet I would not ſtrenuouſly oppoſe the contrary opinion.

Lake of Sodom. See ASPHALTITES.

SOHEM, or Shohem, a ſort of precious ſtone. St. Jerom and the LXX. generally render this word by the onyx-ſtone; but we think it rather ſignifies an emerald. See Gen. ii. 12. and PRECIOUS STONES. In the hiſtory of the Eaſt, we find ſeveral princes called by the name Soheme; from this Hebrew word.

SOLOMON, שלמה, peaceable, or perfect, or that recompences; from שלם.

SOLOMON, or Salomon, ſon of David and Bathſheba, born A.M. 2971, ante A.D. 1033. The Lord loved him, and ſent the prophet Nathan to David, to declare his affection toward this child, and to give Solomon the name of Jedidiah, or, Beloved of the Lord; 2 Sam. xii. 24, 25. This was, probably, when Nathan aſſured David, that this ſon ſhould ſucceed him, and that he ſhould inherit thoſe promiſes the Lord had made him ſome years before, when he had conceived the deſign of building a temple to the Lord: for then God told him, by the prophet Nathan, "You ſhall not build me an houſe; but I will ſet one of your children upon the throne after you; he ſhall build a houſe to my name," &c. 2 Sam. vii. 5. &c. 1 Kings viii. 17. 1 Chron. xvii. 1, 2, 3. Pſalm cxxxii. 11.

From this time David prepared what was neceſſary for building the temple, and gave Solomon an education proportionate to the great deſigns God had ordained him to. But, toward the end of David's reign, Adonijah, David's eldeſt ſon, began to act as if he were to ſucceed to the crown. David did not reſtrain him; Joab, Abiathar, and ſeveral of the principal men of the court, were in his intereſt: but Zadok the high-prieſt informed Bathſheba, the mother of Solomon, of his deſigns; and by her application to David, procured the king's orders for the immediate coronation of Solomon. Vide BATHSHEBA and DAVID. Theſe orders were obeyed; Solomon was anointed king of Iſrael; brought back amid the acclamations of the people, and placed on the throne of David: who ſaid, "Bleſſed be the Lord, who has this day permitted me to ſee with my own eyes my ſon Solomon ſitting on my throne."

Adonijah, and his gueſts, being alarmed, fled for ſafety; and were aſſured of it, by Solomon. Adonijah then quitted his aſylum, and came to pay his duty to king Solomon.

David's death being at hand, he earneſtly recommended to Solomon a ſtrict fidelity and piety towards God: bid him puniſh Joab, and Shimei; but ſhew friendſhip to the ſons of Barzillai, who had ſuccoured him in his diſtreſs. He put into his hands plans for building the temple, and accounts of his treaſures for erecting this edifice: with many other regulations civil and ſacred. Laſtly, in a general aſſembly of the people, and of the great men, David delivered to him his gold, ſilver, and valuable materials, collected for building the temple, and exhorted all preſent to make each an offering to the Lord, according to his abilities.

Solomon now entered on the full poſſeſſion of the kingdom. Soon after this, his brother Adonijah made intereſt with Bathſheba, that ſhe would intreat Solomon to give him Abiſhag the Shunammite to wife. Bathſheba recommended this requeſt; but Solomon perceiving Adonijah's evil intentions, ordered Adonijah to be put to death. He alſo baniſhed the high-prieſt Abiathar to his country-houſe, becauſe he had been of Adonijah's party. When Joab heard what had happened to Adonijah and Abiathar, he fled into the tabernacle as a place of refuge. Solomon commanded him to be put to death. Solomon alſo ordered Shimei to build a houſe in Jeruſalem, and not quit that city. Shimei obeyed this order for a time, but tranſgreſſing it, Solomon ſent Benaiah, the ſon of Jehoiada, to kill him. Vide SHIMEI.

Solomon being confirmed in his kingdom, contracted an alliance with Pharaoh, king of Egypt, and married his daughter. A.M. 2291, ante A.D. 1013. He brought her to Jeruſalem, and had apartments for her in the city of David, till he ſhould build her a palace, which he did ſome years afterwards, when he had finiſhed the temple. It is thought, that on occaſion of this marriage, Solomon compoſed the Canticles, which are a kind of Epithalamium. To the ſame is referred Pſalm xlv. This marriage has not been generally approved. Scripture ſpeaks of the daughter of Pharaoh, as contributing to pervert Solomon; 1 Kings xi. 1, 2. Neh. xiii. 26. and it is very likely, that if at firſt this princeſs might ſeem converted to the Lord, ſhe afterwards might might retain her private diſpoſition to idolatry, and engage her huſband in it.

Solomon, accompanied by his troops, and all Iſrael, went up to Gibeon, where was then the brazen altar, upon which he offered a thouſand burnt-offerings. The night following God appeared to him in a dream; and ſaid, "Aſk of me what you deſire." Solomon begged of God a wiſe and underſtanding heart, and ſuch qualities as were neceſſary for the government of the people committed to him. This requeſt was agreeable to the Lord; and was fully granted by him. Solomon returned to Jeruſalem, where he offered a great number of ſacrifices on the altar, before the ark of the Lord, and made a great feaſt for his ſervants.

Two women of ill repute came before the king, and complained, "That one of them had ſtifled her child in her ſleep, and having privately conveyed it to her companion, had ſtolen her living child, and pretended it to be her own." As each of theſe women eagerly claimed the living child, the king ordered to cut this child into two equal parts, that each of the women might have half of it. But the real mother of the child, moved by natural affection, ſaid to the king; "Let not the child be divided, rather let her take the whole child." Solomon, without heſitation, determined, that the child ſhould be given to her, for ſhe was the mother of it. All Iſrael hearing of this deciſion, were filled with reverence for their king, perceiving his great wiſdom, and knowledge of the human heart.

Solomon enjoyed a profound peace throughout his dominions; Judah and Iſrael lived in ſecurity; and his neighbours either paid him tribute, or were his allies: he ruled over all the countries and kingdoms, from the Euphrates to the Nile, and his dominions extended even beyond the Euphrates: he had abundance of horſes and chariots of war: he exceeded the Orientals, and all the Egyptians, in wiſdom and prudence: he was the wiſeſt of mankind, and his reputation was ſpread through all nations. He compoſed, or collected, three thouſand proverbs, and one thouſand and five canticles. (The Septuagint, and ſeveral interpreters, read five thouſand, inſtead of a thouſand and five, as the Hebrew.) He knew the nature of plants and trees, from the cedar on Libanus, to the hyſſop on the wall; alſo of beaſts, of birds, of reptiles, of fiſhes. There was a concourſe of ſtrangers from all countries to hear his wiſdom; and ambaſſadors from the moſt remote princes. He made gold and ſilver as common in Jeruſalem as ſtones in the ſtreet; and cedars as plentiful as the ſycamores in the valley.

When Hiram, king of Tyre, knew that Solomon was made king of Iſrael, he ſent ambaſſadors, to congratulate his acceſſion to the crown. Some time afterwards, Solomon deſired him to ſupply wood and workmen, to aſſiſt in building a temple to the Lord. Hiram gladly undertook what Solomon deſired. Solomon, on his part, obliged himſelf to give 20,000 meaſures of wheat, and 20,000 meaſures of oil. The Hebrew and the Vulgate have only twenty meaſures of oil; but it is thought it ought to be twenty thouſand. Joſephus adds, Antiq. lib. viii. cap. 2. wine alſo; and indeed it is ſaid, 2 Chron. ii. 20. that Solomon gave to Hiram's workmen wheat, barley, wine, and oil.

Joſephus ſays, that even in his time were preſerved in the archives of Tyre, the letters of Solomon and Hiram to each other. He cites Dion and Menander, who ſaid that theſe two princes uſed to ſend enigmas to one another, in order to be ſolved.

Solomon began to build the temple in the fourth year of his reign, and the ſecond after the death of David; four hundred and eighty years after the Exodus. He employed in this great work ſeventy thouſand proſelytes, deſcendants of the ancient Canaanites, in carrying burthens; fourſcore thouſand in cutting ſtones out of the quarries; and three thouſand ſix hundred overſeers of the works. Beſides thirty thouſand Iſraelites in the quarries of Libanus.

The temple was compleated in the eleventh year of Solomon; ſo that he was but ſeven years in performing this vaſt work. The dedication was made the year following, A. M. 3001. To make this ceremony the more auguſt, Solomon choſe for it the eighth day of the ſeventh month of the holy year, which was the firſt of the civil year, and anſwered to our October. The ceremony of the dedication laſted ſeven days, at the end of which began the feaſt of tabernacles, which continued ſeven days longer; ſo that the people continued at Jeruſalem fourteen or fifteen days, from the eighth to the twenty-ſecond of the ſeventh month.

When the ark was placed in the ſanctuary, while the prieſts and Levites were celebrating the praiſes of the Lord, the temple was filled with a miraculous cloud; ſo that the prieſts could no longer continue there, nor perform the functions of their miniſtry. Then Solomon, being on his throne, proſtrated himſelf with his face to the ground; then riſing up, and turning toward the ſanctuary, he addreſſed his prayer to God, and beſought him, that the houſe which he had built might be acceptable to him, that he would bleſs and ſanctify it, and hear the prayers of thoſe who ſhould addreſs him from this holy place. He beſought him alſo to fulfil the promiſes he had made to David his ſervant, in favour of his family, and of the kings his ſucceſſors. Then he turned himſelf to the people, and bleſſed them. Fire coming down from heaven, conſumed the victims and burnt-ſacrifices on the altar, and the glory of the Lord filled the whole temple; ſo that even the prieſts could not enter the temple, to perform their offices.

On this day the king cauſed to be ſacrificed 22,000 oxen, and 120,000 ſheep for peace-offerings. And becauſe the altar of burnt-offerings was not ſufficient for all theſe victims, the king conſecrated the court of the people. The Lord appeared a ſecond time to Solomon in a dream; probably in the night that followed the firſt day of the dedication; and ſaid to him: "I have heard your prayer, and have choſen this temple to be my houſe of ſacrifice. I will bleſs you, and your poſterity, if you are conſtant in my worſhip; but if not, I will puniſh you, and deſtroy this edifice."

Solomon afterwards built a palace for himſelf, and another for his queen, the king of Egypt's daughter. He was thirteen years in finiſhing theſe buildings, and employed therein whatever the moſt exquiſite art or the moſt profuſe riches could furniſh. The palace in which he generally reſided, was called The Houſe of the Foreſt of Lebanon; probably becauſe of the great quantity of cedar uſed therein. He gave Hiram twenty cities in the province of Galilee. Hiram went to ſee them, but did not like them. See CABUL. Hiram alſo ſent Solomon ſix-ſcore talents of gold; probably he lent them Solomon to go on with his buildings. 1 Kings ix. 14.

Solomon alſo built the walls of Jeruſalem, the place called Millo, in this city; he repaired and fortified Hazor, Megiddo, Gezer, the two Beth-horons, Upper and Lower, Baalath, and Palmyra, in the Deſart of Syria. He alſo fortified the cities where he had magazines of corn, wine, and oil; and thoſe where his chariots and horſes were kept. He brought under his government the Hittites, the Hivites, the Amorites, and the Perizites, which remained in the land of Iſrael. He made them tributaries, and compelled them to work at the public works.

He fitted out a fleet at Ezion-geber, and at Elath, on the Red-ſea, to go to Ophir. Hiram, king of Tyre, furniſhed him mariners, who inſtructed the ſubjects of Solomon. They performed this voyage in three years, and brought back gold, ivory, ebony, precious wood, peacocks, apes, and other curioſities. In one voyage they brought Solomon four hundred and fifty talents of gold, 2 Chron. ix. 21. or, only four hundred and twenty, as 1 Kings ix. 28.

About the ſame time the queen of Sheba came to Jeruſalem, attracted by the great fame of king Solomon. She brought rich preſents of gold, ſpices, and precious ſtones. She propoſed ſeveral enigmas, and hard queſtions, to which Solomon gave her ſuch ſatisfactory anſwers, that ſhe owned what had been told her of his wiſdom and magnificence, was far ſhort of what ſhe had found. The king, on his part, made her rich preſents.

Solomon was one of the richeſt, if not the very richeſt of all princes that have ever lived; and Scripture expreſsly tells us, he exceeded in riches and wiſdom all the kings of the earth. His annual revenues were ſix hundred and ſixty ſix talents of gold, without reckoning tributes from kings and nations, or paid by Iſraelites, or ſums received for cuſtoms. The bucklers of his guards, and the throne he ſat on, were overlaid with gold. All the veſſels of his table, and the utenſils of his palaces, were of gold. From all parts he received preſents, veſſels of gold and ſilver, precious ſtuffs, ſpices, arms, horſes, and mules; the whole earth deſired to ſee the face of Solomon, and to hear the wiſdom God had put into his heart.

But the later actions of his life ſadly diſgraced his character. Beſides Pharaoh's daughter, he married wives from among the Moabites, Ammonites, Idumeans, Sidonians, and Hittites. He had 700 wives, who were ſo many queens, beſide 300 concubines. Theſe women perverted his heart, in his declining age, ſo that he worſhipped Aſhtoreth, goddeſs of the Sidonians, Moloch, idol of the Ammonites, and Chemoſh, god of the Moabites. To theſe he built temples on the mount of Olives, over againſt, and eaſt of Jeruſalem. Wherefore the Lord ſaid to him in a dream, "Since you have not kept my covenant, nor obeyed my commandments, I will rend and divide your kingdom, and will give it to one of your ſervants." See REHOBOAM. Solomon, before his death, ſaw the beginnings of revolt, in the troubles raiſed by Jeroboam; and by Hadad the Idumean.

Solomon died, after he had reigned forty years, A. M. 3029, ante A. D. 1705. We think he might be about fifty-eight years of age; for he was about eighteen when he began to reign. Joſephus, Antiq. lib. viii. cap. 3. init. allows him him eighty years of reign, and ninety-four years of life; but this is a manifeſt error. The hiſtory of this prince was writ by the prophets Nathan, Ahijah, and Iddo. He was buried in the city of David, and Rehoboam his ſon reigned in his ſtead, but not over all Iſrael.

A famous queſtion is ſtarted concerning the ſalvation of Solomon. Some decide it in his favour; others to his diſadvantage: In my opinion, they are wiſeſt who preſerve ſilence.

Several interpreters are of opinion, that the book of Eccleſiaſtes is a monument of the repentance of Solomon, being compoſed by him after his fall.

Of all the ingenious works compoſed by Solomon, we have nothing remaining but his Proverbs, Eccleſiaſtes, and the Canticles. Some have aſcribed to him the book of Wiſdom, and Eccleſiaſticus. But we have ſhewn under their titles, that theſe opinions are very improbable. The Jews think he was the author of Pſalm lxxii. Give the king thy judgments, O God, and thy righteouſneſs unto the king's ſon, &c. And Pſalm cxxvii. Except the Lord build the houſe, &c.

There has alſo been publiſhed, The Pſalter of Solomon, containing eighteen Pſalms, found in Greek, in the library of Auſburg, by Andrew Schott; which have been tranſlated into Latin, and given to the public, by father de la Cerda. The learned are agreed, that they are none of Solomon's, but of ſome Helleniſtical Jew, much converſant in the ſacred authors, who has compoſed them in imitation of the Pſalms of David, of which he has pretty cloſely imitated the ſtile; and has inſerted in then ſeveral fragments of the prophets Iſaiah and Ezekiel, which he has well enough accommodated to his deſign.

Theſe eighteen Pſalms, were not unknown to the ancients. They were formerly in the famous Alexandrian manuſcript, preſerved in England, as may be ſeen by the index at the end of the New Teſtament; though the Pſalms themſelves are loſt. Lambecius mentions a manuſcript in the emperor's library, wherein theſe Pſalms are found, between the books of Wiſdom and Eccleſiaſticus. But the Hebrews had never any knowledge of this work, nor the Latins neither; and the ancient Greeks, who might have been acquainted with it, have never quoted it as Scripture.

Some of the orientals aſcribe to Solomon, the invention of the Syriac and Arabic letters; and the tradition of the Syrians is, that this prince communicated the Syrian characters to Hiram, king of Tyre; at whoſe requeſt, he tranſlated the Scriptures into the Syrian language. But theſe traditions deſerve little credit. The origin of the Arabic characters, or the verſions of the Scripture into Syriac, are not ſo ancient as Solomon; and beſides, of what uſe could theſe tranſlations be to a Tyrian prince, who ſpoke Phenician, i. e. the ſame language as Solomon.

Eupolemus, in Euſebius, alledges a pretended letter of Solomon to Vaphres, king of Egypt, and Vaphres's anſwer to Solomon; alſo, a letter of Solomon to Suram, king of Tyre, Sidon, and Phenicia, together with Suram's anſwer, (probably he means Hiram, or Huram. But theſe letters are looked on as fictitious, as well as thoſe in Joſephus Antiq. lib. viii. cap. 2. which are nearly of the ſame taſte, but more conformable to what we find in Scripture.

Joſephus aſſures us, that Solomon compoſed books of inchantments, and ſeveral manners of exorciſm. Origen ſpeaks of the conjurations uſed by the Jews in his time, to expel devils, by writings they pretended to have received from Solomon. The orientals think he had the ſecret of tying up, or chaining demons, and of commanding them.

The Greeks tell us, that this prince compoſed ſeveral pieces in phyſic, and wrote on the nature and virtues of ſtones, of vegetables, and ſimples. But king Hezekiah ſeeing great abuſes made of theſe works, ſuppreſſed them all. Yet this has not hindered, but that ſince his time there have appeared ſeveral books of ſecrets in magic, medicine, and inchantments, under the name of this prince. They alſo quote ſeveral other works under his name; as, The Inſtruction of Solomon to his ſon Rehoboam: Solomon's Hygromancy to the ſame; The Teſtament of Solomon; The book of the Throne of Solomon; The Books of Magic, compoſed by demons, under the name of Solomon; The Clavicula, or Key of Solomon; The Ring of Solomon; The Contradiction of Solomon; and ſeveral others. [Some of which are very abominable and infamous; have been ſold for very great prices; eſpecially thoſe which ſome great name has called genuine, becauſe whoever poſſeſſes one of theſe works, calls all others impoſtures: as they do not agree together. Nevertheleſs, ſo far as may be judged, whatever the writers and ſellers might be, the poſſeſſors, and ſtudents of them are no Solomons.] Some impute to Solomon the book of Job.

The orientals have entertained ſuch a grand idea of the merit and great qualifications of this prince, that they give the name of Solomon or Soliman, as an honour to their kings. D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 819.

They pretend he was not only king of the Jews, and and of the neighbouring nations, but alſo univerſal monarch of the earth. His viſier, or prime miniſter, was Aſaph, mentioned in Scripture, and to whom David addreſſes ſeveral Pſalms. And not only all the men of the world, but the good and evil ſpirits, the birds, and even the winds, were under his direction. He had, they ſay, a wonderful ring, which diſcovered to him not only things preſent, but alſo the paſt, and the future. The form and matter of his throne was ſo magnificent as to exceed all deſcription. They add many extravagancies, which only ſhew their talent for hyperbole, and their application of that talent to Solomon.

SOLYMA. A name ſometimes given to Jeruſalem, which ſee.

SOLYME, a town beyond Jordan, in the diſtrict of Gaulon. Joſeph. de vitâ ſuâ, p. 1013.

SOLYMI. Homer, and the poet Chœrilus, (Chœrilus Poeta, apud Joſeph. lib. i. contra Appion,) have mentioned the Solymi, an ancient and venerable people, who ſpoke Phenician, who wore their hair cut round, and who dwelt in the Solymean mountains, near a great lake. Theſe marks Joſephus and Tacitus Hiſt. lib. v. cap. 2, thought to agree with the Jews, here called Solymi, becauſe of their capital city Jeruſalem; a nation remarkable for the ſingularity of their laws, and of their actions, ſpeaking Phenician or Hebrew, dwelling in a mountainous country at Jeruſalem, ſituate in the mountains, and near the lake Aſphaltites.

Notwithſtanding theſe tokens, many learned men maintain, that the Solymi, are not the Jews. A circumſtance which very much favours their opinion is, that according to Chœrilus, the Solymi wore their hair cut round, which was expreſsly forbid by Moſes. See Leviticus xix. 7. Alſo the Lake Aſphaltites, was ſeven or eight leagues from Jeruſalem. The arms which the poet aſſigns to them can hardly agree with the Jews. He ſays they wore helmets made of the leather of a horſe's head dried in the ſmoke. The Jews had never much to do with horſes in their country, being incumbered with mountains.

Who then are theſe Solymi? Some think them to be the Moabites, or the Midianites, bordering on the Lake Aſphaltites, and reckoned among the Arabians, who, as hiſtorians inform us, uſed to cut their hair round in a circle. We do not any where find them called Solymi; but Joſephus ſpeaks of a town or village of this name, beyond Jordan, in the Gaulonitis. Others think, that the Solymean mountains were in Piſidia, near to Lycia; and that here we muſt ſeek the Solymi of Homer and Chœrilus.

SOPATER, Σώπατρος, who defends the father, or the health of the father; from the Greek σώζω, I ſave, and πατήρ, father. Vide SOSIPATER.

SOPHA. Epiphanius ſays, the prophet Malachi was born in the city of Sopha, of Zebulun.

SOPHER, ספר, γραμματεὺς, ſcribe; from ספר ſepher, a book: or he that writes, relates, or tells.

SOPHER, or Shopher, a commander of the army of Zedekiah, king of Judah, 2 Kings xxv. 19. But Sopher may rather be taken for a ſcribe, ſecretary, or commiſſioner, who ſuperintended the king's army.

SOPHERETH, ספרת, from ספר ſhepher, a book.

SOREK, שורק, vine, hiſſing, a colour inclining to yellow; from שרק ſhorek.

SOREK, or Sorec, a brook in the tribe of Dan. A place where dwelt the famous Dalilah, Samſon's miſtreſs. Euſebius ſays, it was not far from Zorah and Eſhtaol, the place of Samſon's uſual abode. Judges xvi. 4.

Caphar-Sorek, or the camp of Sorek; a town near Zorah, or Saraa, according to Euſebius.

The wine of Sorek, wine made in the vale of this name. Some have thought it to be the wine of Aſkalon, famous among the ancients. The brook Sorek, was not far from this city. The rabbins think Sorek to be a particular kind of vine, which bears a great quantity of excellent fruit, at all ſeaſons. Sorek does not only ſignify the grape, or the wine, of the valley of Sorek, but a kind of wine, and probably of the white, or yellowiſh grape, of which they made the white wines in this country. The Lord ſays, he planted his vine of Sorek, Iſa. v. 2. יטעהו שרק Iſaiah tells us of the plant of Sorek, which was at Jazer, beyond Jordan. Iſa. xvi. 8. The wine of Sorek was excellent; Gen. xlix. 11. and the colour of the Sorek was probably yellow, or white inclining to yellow. Jer. ii. 21. Iſaiah, xix. 9. ſpeaks of the flax of Sorek, or colour of Sorek; and Zech. i. 8. deſcribes horſes of the ſame colour. [In the paſſages here quoted, our tranſlation takes Sorek as an appellative, and not as the proper name of a place.] Some think that in the valley of Sorek, the famous bunch of grapes was gathered, which was brought to the Iſraelites in the deſart, Numb. xiii. 23. But this opinion is without foundation.

SORROW; this paſſion contracts the heart, ſinks the ſpirits, and injures health. Scripture adviſes, not to ſuffer ourſelves to be overcome with ſorrow. Prov. xxv. 20. Ecclus. xiv. 1, 2, 3, xxx. 24, 25, &c. St. Paul diſtinguiſhes two ſorts of ſorrow; one a godly, the other a worldly, ſorrow. 2 Cor. vii. 10. Godly ſorrow worketh repentance to ſalvation not to be repented of;

but the ſorrow of the world worketh death. He reproves the Theſſalonians, 1 Theſ. iv. 13. for their too great ſorrow at the death of their relations. The wiſe man commends a kind of ſorrow, which is rather a ſerious and ſober deportment, and a baniſhing of vain joys, than a real ſorrow. Eccleſ. vii. 3. Sorrow is better than laughter; for by the ſadneſs of the countenance the heart is made better. The heart of the wiſe is in the houſe of mourning, but the heart of fools is in the houſe of mirth. He intends to tell us, that the grave and ſerious air of a maſter who reproves us, is more profitable than the laughter and careſſes of thoſe who flatter us. Jeſus Chriſt upbraids the Phariſees with that counterfeit air of ſorrow and mortification, which they affected when they faſted: and he would have his diſciples avoid all ſuch affectation, which propoſes to gain the approbation of men; Matth. vi. 16. Iſaiah, deſcribing the qualities of the Meſſiah, ſays, he ſhall not be ſevere, or violent, he ſhall not fail nor be diſcouraged till he have ſet judgment in the earth. The Hebrew Iſai. xlii. 4. לא יכהה ולא ירוץ ſays, He ſhall not quench, and ſhall not break: his reign ſhall be a reign of mildneſs and mercy. St. James adviſes thoſe to pray who are in ſorrow. Is any among you afflicted, let him pray. James v. 13.

SOSIPATER, Σωσίπατρος, that ſaves the father, or ſafety of the father; from the Greek σώζω, I preſerve, or ſaviour, and πάτηρ, father.

I. SOSIPATER, or Sopater. Soſipater and Doſitheus, two captains of Judas Maccabeus's army, defeated ten thouſand men of the army of Timotheus, who had ſhut themſelves up in a ſtrong hold. 2 Macc. xii. 19.

II. SOSIPATER, of whom St. Paul ſpeaks, Rom. xvi. 21. was his kinſman, as ſome think. Lucius, and Jaſon, and Soſipater, my kinſmen, ſalute you. But, there is ſome difficulty in this, ſince Jaſon was of Theſſalonica, and Soſipater was of Berea, in Macedonia, very diſtant from Tarſus, the country of St. Paul. Origen in Rom. xvi. believes they were originally Gentiles, which is another reaſon againſt their being the apoſtle's kinſmen. In what ſenſe then does he call them kinſmen? Is it, becauſe they were of the ſame nation, of the ſame tribe, of the ſame city, of the ſame religion, or only allied to him? I think it may be confidently aſſerted, that this Soſipater, who was at Rome, A. D. 58, when St. Paul wrote to the Romans, cannot be the Soſipater of Berea; ſince he accompanied St. Paul, the ſame year 58, to Jeruſalem, and probably went with him from Corinth, from whence the Epiſtle to the Romans was written, to go by way of Macedonia to Jeruſalem. See Acts xx. 4, 5, 6, &c. [Sopater, Eng. Tr.]

Soſipater, was of Berea, as has been ſaid; and it is very likely St. Paul converted him, A.D. 52. when he viſited that city. The Latin in Acts xx. 4, and ſome Greek MSS. call him Soſipater Pyrrhus. When St. Paul departed from Corinth, for Jeruſalem, Acts xx. 4, 5, 6, A.D. 58, he was accompanied by Soſipater, by Ariſtarchus, and other diſciples, to Philippi, from whence St. Paul ſent them to Troas, where they ſtaid for him, ſo that he could not be at the ſame time at Rome, as has been obſerved. We know not what became of Soſipater after this time: But the Latins place his feaſt June 25, and call him a diſciple of St. Paul. The Greeks honour him April 28, or 29. They join him with Jaſon, and call him a kinſman of St. Paul. Thus they confound Soſipater of Berea, with Soſipater of Rome. I know of no commentator who has not done the ſame.

SOSTHENES, Σωσθένης, ſaviour, ſtrong and powerful; from the Greek word σωζω, I ſave, and σθένος, ſtrength, force.

SOSTHENES, chief of the ſynagogue of Corinth. Vide Chryſoſt. in Acta homil. xxxix. Œcumen. in Acta, Theodoret, in 1 Cor. i. 1. Sanct. Tromond. Eſt. &c. The Jews of Corinth laying hold of St. Paul, carried him before the tribunal of Gallio, the pro-conſul, but he ſent them away. Then they ſeized Soſthenes, the chief of the ſynagogue, and began to beat him before the tribunal; but Gallio diſregarded it. It is diſputed whether they were Jews or Gentiles, who ſeized Soſthenes and beat him. The printed Greek of the Acts intimates, they were Gentiles. St. Auſtin and Bede read in the ſame manner. They imagined, that the Pagans ſeeing Gallio's ill reception of the Jews, abuſed this chief of their ſynagogue; whether merely out of hatred to the Jews, or out of friendſhip to St. Paul. This opinion is followed by Cajetan, Lyran, Grotius, and ſome others. Acts xviii. 17.

Others think, that Soſthenes, though head of the ſynagogue, yet might be a friend and ſecret diſciple of St. Paul; and that the other Jews, ſeeing themſelves neglected by Gallio, might vent their malice on Soſthenes. Theſe alſo inſiſt, that this is the ſame Soſthenes whoſe name is read with that of St. Paul, 1 Cor. i. 1. written from Epheſus, A. D. 56, three years after this ſcuffle at Corinth. However, it muſt be owned, that this opinion has not always been univerſal; ſince, in the time of Euſebius, Hiſt. Eccleſ.

Eccleſ. lib. i. cap. 12. it was thought that Soſthenes was one of the ſeventy-two diſciples, and conſequently he could not be chief of the ſynagogue of Corinth twenty years after the death of Jeſus Chriſt. The Greeks keep his feaſt, December 8, and call him an apoſtle, as being one of the ſeventy. They alſo make him the firſt biſhop of Colophon. The Latins ever ſince the ninth century, honour him as a diſciple of St. Paul, June 11, and November 28. See M. de Tillemont, tom. i. Hiſt. Eccl. Not. 45.

SOSTRATUS, Σώστρατος, that ſaves the army, or the ſafety of the army; from σώζω, to ſave, and στρατος, an army.

SOSTRATUS. He commanded the fortreſs of the Greeks in the upper city of Jeruſalem, for Antiochus Epiphanes. 2 Macc. iv. 26, 27. A.M. 3834, ante A.D. 170. Having earneſtly preſſed, but to little purpoſe, the high-prieſt Menelaus to go with the money that he owed king Antiochus; he was ſent for to Antioch with the ſame Menelaus, and received the government of the iſle of Cyprus. Thus ſays the Latin text; but the Greek reads, Soſtratus, left in his place, (in the city of Jeruſalem,) Cartes who had been (or then was) governor of Cyprus, or commander of the troops of the king of Syria, in that iſland. Ezra ii. 55.

SOTAI, סוטי, who declines, falls, or prevaricates; from סוט mut.

SOUL. The word ſoul is very equivocal, in the ſtile of the Hebrews. It is taken,

1. For the ſoul which animates mankind; for that which animates beaſts; for a living perſon: Give me the ſouls, ſays the king of Sodom to Abraham, and take the goods to thyſelf, Gen. xiv. 21. And, Gen xii. 5, Abraham took Sarai his wife, and Lot, his brother's ſon, and their ſubſtance that they had gathered, and the ſouls that they had gotten in Haran; i. e. the ſlaves they had purchaſed, or the children there born to them.

2. The ſoul is alſo taken for the life; Gen. xxxii. 30. My life [Heb. ſoul] is preſerved. And, Gen. xxxvii. 22, Kill not his ſoul; or, put him not to death. My ſoul ſhall live; or, thou ſhalt preſerve me alive. Thoſe that ſought my ſoul, or, had a deſign upon my life. Not to take his ſoul in vain; or, not to ſwear falſely by his life.

3. It it taken ſometimes for death. Numb. ix. 6. Who were defiled by the dead body of a man, or, by the ſoul. And, Numb. xix. 11, He that toucheth the dead body [Heb. ſoul] of any man ſhall be unclean ſeven days. [The Engliſh word PERSON, is the neareſt I can think of to anſwer the Hebrew.]

4. For deſire, love, inclination, Gen. xxiii. 8. If it be your mind; Heb. If it pleaſe your ſoul. And, Numb. xi. 6. Our ſoul is dried away, or diſguſted at the ſight of the manna. To conſume thine eyes, and to grieve thine heart; or, thy ſoul ſhall be dried up with envy, to ſee thy rival in the temple in thy place.

5. For the life of a beaſt. Deut. xii. 23. Be ſure that thou eat not the blood; for the blood is the life, [Soul]: Gen. ix. 9, 10. I eſtabliſh my covenant with you, and with your ſeed after you; and with every living creature [Heb. Soul] that is with you, of the fowl, of the cattle, and of every beaſt of the earth with you, from all that go out of the ark, to every beaſt of the earth. And Prov. xii. 10. A righteous man regardeth the life of his beaſt; he compaſſionates their labours, and comforts them; but the tender mercies of the wicked are cruel. Vide BEAST.

A great number of queſtions may be propoſed, concerning the ſoul of man, its nature, or eſſence, and its creation. Whether all ſouls were created at the beginning of the world, or whether God creates them every day? Whether the ſoul be immortal? Whether it paſſes from body to body by a tranſmigration? Whether all ſouls are equally enlightened and perfect?

When God had formed the body of man out of the duſt Gen. ii. 7. he breathed into his noſtrils the breath of life, and man became a living ſoul, or, a living man. This breath of life, has been conſidered by ſome, as the principle of animal life in man, which, in this reſpect according to them is nothing different from that of a beaſt. God gives to men and to brutes a breath of life, or a vivifying ſpirit; all fleſh in which is the breath of life; Gen. vi. 17. i. e. all the animals that were to die by the waters of the deluge. This ſpirit of life God withdraws when he pleaſes, and brings all fleſh to corruption, ſays Job xxxiv, 14, 15. And the Pſalmiſt civ. 29. ſpeaking of animals, to which God gives their ſubſiſtence, ſays, thou takeſt away their breath, they die, and return to their duſt. And Solomon, Eccl. xii. 7. then ſhall the duſt return to the earth as it was, and the ſpirit ſhall return unto God who gave it. And St. Paul, ſpeaking to the philoſophers of Athens, ſays, that God giveth to all life, and breath, and all things. Acts xvii. 25.

But, beſide this ſpirit, this breath, which is the principle of animal life, common to men and to brutes, which is diſperſed after death, we muſt acknowledge, that there is in man a ſpiritual, a reaſonable, and immortal ſoul, the origin of our thoughts, of our deſires, of our reaſonings; which diſtinguiſhes us from the brute creation, and in which chiefly conſiſts our reſemblance to God: Gen. i. 26. This ſubſtance muſt be ſpiritual, becauſe it thinks; it muſt be immortal, becauſe it is ſpiritual. Some philoſophers, as Plato, have been of opinion, that it was a portion of the deity:

Divinæ particulam auræ.
HORAT. lib. 2. Sat. 2.

But how can deity be obnoxious to the evils and weakneſſes of our ſouls; to ſin, to deſire, to pain?

It is true, ſcripture aſcribes both to man and beaſt, a ſoul, a ſpirit, life, and reſpiration; but it allows to man alone the privilege of underſtanding, knowledge of God, wiſdom, immortality, hope of future happineſs, and of eternal life: it only threatens men with puniſhment in another life, and with the pains of hell.

Are ſouls merely ſpiritual, without any mixture of matter even of the moſt fine and ſubtile? So ſay chriſtian philoſophers and divines. The antients were not convinced of this. The antient compiler of the book of Enoch thought the angels were corporeal, and conſequently, ſo were the ſouls of men; ſince he ſuppoſes ſouls to be of the ſame nature as angels. The ancient Greek and Latin fathers, who read in Geneſis, that the angels of God ſaw the daughters of men, and took to themſelves wives, and from them produced giants; thoſe fathers, made no doubt of their having bodies, and that they were ſuſceptible of bodily paſſions.

But as it was very difficult to reconcile this opinion, of the materiality of the ſoul, with its other properties, which can only agree to a pure ſpirit, they perſuaded themſelves, that the ſoul was compoſed of two parts; one purely ſpiritual, which has the faculty of thinking, and which approaches the nature of God; the other ſubtile, penetrating, and approaching to the nature of very fine Ether. The author of the book of Enoch, ſays, that the ſpirits of the ſouls of men put up their ſighs even to heaven. The ſpirit, or the underſtanding, is incloſed in the ſoul, as in its caſe. The ſoul, when ſeparated from the body has ſtill a reſemblance of the body which it animated, and is, as it were, the image of it. But the ſpirit, the intellectual part, has nothing ſenſible or corporeal. When ſouls appear to men after death, the ſoul, not the ſpirit, returns. The ſoul of Patroclus appeared to Achilles; it reſembled the hero it had animated; it had his ſtature, his eyes, his voice, and even his very cloaths. Homer. Iliad. xxiii. When Ulyſſes deſcended into hell, he there ſaw the divine Hector; i. e. his image, his ſoul; for as to himſelf, or his ſpirit, it was with the immortal Gods, partaking of their joys. Id. Odyſſ. λ. v. 600.

The Rabbins alſo aſcribe to ſouls, after their ſeparation from the body, another ſubtile body, which they call the veſſel, or ſcabbard, of the ſoul. They hold, that immediately after death, the ſouls of the wicked are inveſted with a kind of cloathing in which they are condemned to ſuffer: that the ſouls of ſaints, on the contrary are clad in a magnificent habit, and with a ſplendid body, by the help of which they are inured to the brightneſs and felicity of their happy ſtate. The apoſtles made no doubt of the apparition of ſpirits, and thought theſe ſpirits to have the form and appearance, the voice, and the outward marks, of the perſons to which they belonged. The giants of old, who groaned under the waters, Job xxvi. 5. and the kings of the nations that are under the earth, Prov. ix. 18. Iſai. xiv. 9. Ezek. xxxi. xxxii. are repreſented, as having the ſame enſigns of honour, the ſame outward forms, as they had on earth. When Jeſus Chriſt appeared to his apoſtles after his reſurrection, St. Thomas, fearing it was a mere phantom, or ſpirit, ſuch as ſometimes appeared, according to popular opinion, and from whence no concluſion could be drawn that the bodies were riſen; our Saviour, to remove his ſcruples, bid him touch him, and lay his hand upon his wounds, to convince himſelf that he (Jeſus) was really riſen: John xx. 25, 26, 27. and when ſuddenly he preſented himſelf in the midſt of his diſciples, he ſays to them, why are ye troubled, and why do thoughts ariſe in your hearts? Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myſelf: handle me, and ſee; for a ſpirit has not fleſh and bones, as ye ſee me have. Luke xxiv. 38, 39.

Perhaps it will be ſaid, that theſe ſentiments of the apoſtles are only remains of thoſe judaical prejudices, from which they were afterwards delivered, by the deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt: as it may be pretended that the opinions of the Rabbins, are errors extracted from the philoſophy of the Pagans, not illuminated by the light of faith and revelation.

We commonly believe, that God creates ſouls at the time that bodies are produced, which they are to inform. The Jews, on the contrary, think that God created them all at the beginning, and that they come to join themſelves to bodies, drawn by a certain attraction which it is not eaſy to reſiſt. Angels, demons, and ſouls, are ſubſtances of the ſame nature, ſays Philo; they differ only in name. As there are good and bad angels, ſo there are alſo good and bad ſouls. Angels and ſouls reſide in the pureſt and higheſt region of the air, from whence they deſcend into the bodies which they animate, and bring bring thither their good or bad qualities. The Eſſenes, ſays Joſephus, hold ſouls to be immortal, and that, drawn by a certain natural attraction, they come to ſhut themſelves up in human bodies, as in priſons; that after death, thoſe who have lived well, withdraw into delicious places beyond the ocean; and thoſe who have lived ill, are baniſhed to dark places, there to ſuffer puniſhment. And ſpeaking of the Phariſees, he ſays, that they are perſuaded, that ſouls which have lived well, return, after death, to the place from whence they came, with a power of returning into other bodies; but that the ſouls of the wicked are condemned to eternal puniſhment

The Rabbins teach, that the ſouls of ſuch dead as have not been buried, cannot enter the place where the ſouls of the departed are, but wander about till their bodies are laid in their tomb. Bar-Nacham, in Bereſchit Rabba cap. 22. Talmud. tract. Sanhedrim, cap. 4 This opinion prevailed among the Greeks and Latins. Homer relates, Iliad. Ψ. v. 70, &c. that Patroclus appeared to Achilles, and ſaid to him; "bury me quickly that I may enter within the gates of the kingdom of Pluto; becauſe that the ſouls, thoſe phantoms of the dead, drive me from thence, and will not ſuffer me to paſs over the river; but I wander about the gates of the vaſt palace of the god of hell." And Virgil ſays,

> Nec ripus datur horrendas, nec rauca fluenta
> Tranſportare prius, quam ſedibus oſſa quierunt.

They were alſo of opinion, that the ſouls of the greater part of the Jews remained one year in a kind of purgatory; in an undetermined ſtate: That during this time they frequently viſited the bodies they had animated. that they appeared, and might receive aſſiſtance from prayers and alms made for them: that the apparition of Samuel to Saul was ſome time in that year immediately following his deceaſe; but that after this year is paſſed, ſpirits, or demons, have no longer any power over the ſouls of the dead. See Manaſſeh ben-Iſrael, de Reſur. Mort. lib. ii. cap. 6. Juſtin Martyr, and Origen, thought, that the ſouls, even of good men, were, after death, under the power of the devil, who made them ſometimes appear, at the charms and evocations of magicians. Anaſtaſius of Antioch, in Adeg. qu. 12. ſtrongly ſupports the ſentiments of Origen; and maintains, that the ſouls of the juſt were in the power of the devil in hell, before Jeſus Chriſt deſcended thither, and delivered them from thence.

The Talmudiſts think, ſays Buxtorf, Synag. Jud. cap. 35. that ſouls ſeparate from the body, know all that paſſes on earth, becauſe they are commonly a whole year before they enter heaven: during all this time they go to and fro through the world, and learn whatever is ſaid or done. They do not enter heaven, till after the body is reduced to duſt, according to thoſe words of Solomon. Eccleſ. xii. 7. Then ſhall the duſt return to the earth as it was, and the ſpirit ſhall return unto God who gave it. In a conference held in the preſence of the Pope, A.D. 1412, the Jews were accuſed of lighting up wax candles at the feet, or at the head of the dead, that the ſoul might have light when it came to ſeek its body. It is certain, that at this day they light up a lamp at the pillow of a dead man's bed, after the body is carried to be buried, and that this lamp burns there for ſeven days, Leo of Modena, Ceremonies of the Jews, p. v. cap. 9. but they are not agreed that this is done to light the ſoul at its return thither.

The immortality of the ſoul, is a fundamental doctrine both of the Jewiſh and Chriſtian religion. The ancient patriarchs lived and died perſuaded of this truth. It was in the hope of immortality and of another life, and that the patriarchs received the promiſes. For what recompence did Abraham receive in this life,—he who lived all his days a ſtranger, not poſſeſſing one foot of land in the country promiſed him? When this patriarch died, and was gathered to his fathers; this is not to tell us, that his body was laid in the ſame tomb with his fathers: They were of Chaldea, there his fathers were buried; but as to himſelf, he was buried in the land of Canaan, in a ſepulchre he purchaſed. It muſt therefore be meant, that he was gathered to his fathers in another life. The ſame muſt be ſaid of Aaron and Moſes, who at their deaths were gathered to their fathers; i. e. to the ſpirits, not to the bodies, of their fathers.

When Balaam deſired that his death might be like that of the juſt, Numb. xxiii. 10. what did he underſtand, but the hope and expectation of a happy reſurrection; For as to other circumſtances, the death of the Hebrews was not different from that of other nations. Death is a tribute that all men alike muſt pay to nature.

Another deciſive proof, that the Iſraelites believed the immortality of the ſoul, was their perſuaſion, that the ſouls of the dead ſometimes appeared after their deceaſe. Samuel appeared to Saul: 1 Sam. xxviii. 13, 14, 15. Jeremiah appeared to Judas Maccabeus. 2 Macc. xv. 14. When the apoſtles ſaw Jeſus Chriſt walking on the ſea, they took him for an apparition; Mat. xiv.

26. and when he appeared to them after his reſurrection, he ſaid to them, Luke xxiv. 39. Handle me, and ſee, for a ſpirit has not fleſh, and bones, as ye ſee me have. They believed alſo a reſurrection to come, the puniſhment of the wicked in another life, and Abraham's boſom for the reception of the juſt; they had in their hiſtories examples of dead men reſtored to life, as thoſe raiſed by Elijah and Eliſha. Moſes had forbid them to conſult or inquire of the dead; Deut. xxviii. 11. All this proves that the Jews believed the immortality of the ſoul.

If the Saducees denied this immortality, as alſo the reſurrection; if the Rabbins Maimonides and Kimchi, who taught the annihilation of the ſoul, were looked on by their nation as a kind of heretics and innovators; and thoſe of whom Solomon has expreſſed the ſentiments Eccleſ. iii. 19, 20. That which befalleth the ſons of men, befalleth beaſts, even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth, ſo dieth the other, yea, they have all one breath, ſo that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beaſt; for all is vanity. All go unto one place, all are of the duſt, and all turn to duſt again. Theſe were the ſentiments of impious and wicked people, diſapproved and condemned by good Iſraelites, and confuted by Solomon himſelf, who ſays, Eccleſ. xii. 7. Then ſhall the duſt return to the earth as it was, and the ſpirit ſhall return unto God who gave it.

SPAIN, Ἱσπανία. In Greek, rare, or precious.

SPAIN, is a part of Europe, almoſt ſurrounded by the ſea; by the ocean weſt and north, by the Mediterranean ſouth and eaſt; and by France toward the north. Euſebius, and after him Bochart, (Phaleg. lib. iii. cap. 7.) think that Tharſis is the father of the Spaniards. St. Paul tells the Romans, xv. 24, 28. that he hopes to ſee them as he goes to Spain: but it is doubted whether he was ever there. Several fathers have poſitively affirmed it; Epiphan. hæreſ. 27. Chryſoſt. Præfat. in Ep. ad Heb. Hieron. in Iſai. xi. Theodoret. in 2 Timoth. iv. & in Philip. i. 26. Gregor. in Job. lib. xxxi. cap. 22; but others ſpeak of it with more diffidence. Baronius and Pererius are for the affirmative, Scotus and Thomas for the negative. Tillemont, note 73 on St. Paul.

SPARROW, paſſer, in Hebrew, צפור, tzipphor, Στρουθίον. This Hebrew word is uſed not only for a ſparrow, but for all ſorts of clean birds; or ſuch whoſe uſe was not forbid by the law. The Rabbins Kimchi, Pomarius, and Aquinas, pretend, that it ſignifies all kinds of birds, in general; which is confirmed by Bochart, de Animal. Sacr. p. 2. lib. iii. cap. 21, 22. But he ſhews alſo, that it ſignifies particularly a ſparrow. In moſt of the paſſages where paſſer or ſparrow is read, we may underſtand a bird in general. Pſalm xi. 1. Flee as a bird to your mountain: for ſparrows do not frequent mountains. Pſalm cii. 7. I watch, and am as a ſparrow alone upon the houſe-top. It ought to be underſtood of the owl, that hides itſelf under the roofs of houſes. Pſalm civ. 16, 17. Cedri Libani, illic paſſeres nidificabunt; ſparrows do not build in the cedars of Libanus. In theſe paſſages therefore paſſer, or ſparrow, ſignifies a bird, in general.

There is a famous paſſage in Leviticus, where Moſes appoints him, who is declared clean from his leproſy, to bring to the prieſt at the entry of the tabernacle, two young ſparrows alive, ſuch as are allowed to be eaten; rather, two birds alive, and clean. For if they muſt needs be ſparrows, wherefore add, ſuch as may be eaten; as if there were two ſorts? The Seventy read only birds, and the interpreter of Origen reads two hens. The leprous perſon therefore was to bring two clean birds to the door of the tabernacle, with a bundle of cedar-branches, &c. Vide LEPER.

SPARTANS, Σπαρτιανοὶ, people of Lacedemonia. 1 Macc. xiv. 20. That ſow; from σπαρτος.

SPIKENARD, or Nard. A plant that grows in the Indies, whoſe root is very ſmall and ſlender. It puts forth a long, ſmall ſtalk, and has ſeveral ears or ſpikes even with the ground, which has given it the name of ſpikenard. The nard of the mountains is moſt odoriferous. All the ſpecies of ſpikenard are hot and drying; they provoke urine, and are binding, when drank. The Indian nard, commonly called ſpica nardi, if it be genuine, is of a yellowiſh colour, inclining to purple, and ſhould have its ſpikes long, ſo that the briſtles of the ſpike ſhould be large and odoriferous. The taſte ſhould be ſomething ſharp and bitter, and dry upon the tongue; and afterwards leave the mouth full of a very agreeable ſavour. It is thought that roſemary, and lavender, are kinds of ſpikenard. They made a perfume of great eſteem with the blade, or ſpike, of the nard, and of which Scripture ſpeaks. The ſpouſe in Cant. i. 12. iv. 13, 14. (Heb. נרד nared or nered, Gr. Νάρδος,) ſays; While the king ſitteth at his table, my ſpikenard ſendeth forth the ſmell thereof. And in the goſpel, St. Mark, xiv. 3. ſpeaks of the perfume of ſpikenard; and St. John, xii. 3. mentions nardus piſticus, by which ſeveral underſtand the pure and unſophiſticated nard. But there is great probability, that the copiers have put nardi piſtici, piſtici, inſtead of nardi ſpicata, or ſpikenard. The ſpikenard, as we call it, or the blade of the nard, is the moſt eſteemed for making perfume: that taken from the leaves is leſs valuable. Cacumina nardi in ariſtas ſe ſpargunt, idio geminâ dote nardi ſpicas & folia celebrant. Pliny, lib. xii. cap. 12.

SPIRIT. In Hebrew, רוח, ruach; in Greek, Πνεῦμα, pneuma; in Latin, ſpiritus.

1. In Scripture the word ſpirit is taken ſometimes for the Holy Ghoſt, the third perſon of the Holy Trinity, who inſpired the prophets, who animates good men, pours his unction into our hearts, imparts to us light and comfort, in whoſe name we are baptized, as well as in that of the Father and the Son; that enlivening ſpirit who proceeds from the Father and the Son.

2. At other times it is taken for breath, reſpiration, animal life, which belongs as well to men as to animals: this breath God has given us, and this he takes away, when he takes away our lives. Gen. vii. 15. Numb. xvi. 22. Job xii. 10.

3. It ſignifies alſo the reaſonable ſoul which animates us, and which preſerves its being, even after the death of the body. That ſpiritual, reaſoning, and chuſing ſubſtance, which is capable of eternal happineſs.

4. The wind: thus, ſpiritus procellarum. Spiritus grandis & fortis. In ſpiritu vehementi conteres naves Tharſis, &c. In all which places ſpiritus ſignifies only a ſtrong wind. Pſalm x. 7. 1 Kings xix. 11. Pſalm xlviii. 7.

5. Spirit alſo ſignifies an angel, a demon, a ghoſt, a ſoul ſeparated from the body. It is ſaid, Acts xxiii. 8. that the Saducees denied the exiſtence of angels and ſpirits. Jeſus Chriſt appearing to his diſciples, ſaid to them, Luke xxiv. 39. Handle me, and ſee; for a ſpirit hath not fleſh and bones, as ye ſee me have. Heb. i. 14. the good angels are called miniſtring ſpirits. It is ſaid, 1 Sam. xvi. 14. xviii. 10. xix. 9. that the evil ſpirit from God came upon Saul. And in the goſpel the devils are often called unclean ſpirits, evil ſpirits, ſpirits of darkneſs. Vide SOUL.

6. Spirit is ſometimes taken for the diſpoſition of of the heart, or of the body; [rather of the mind, or intellect] becauſe it was preſumed, that the good or evil inclinations of each of theſe proceeded from good or bad ſpirits. So a ſpirit of jealouſy, a ſpirit of fornication, a ſpirit of prayer, a ſpirit of infirmity, a ſpirit of wiſdom and underſtanding, a ſpirit of fear of the Lord, &c. Numb. v. 14. Hoſ. iv. 2. Zech. xii. 10. Luke xiii. 11. Eccleſ. xv. 5. Iſai. xi. 2.

Diſtinguiſhing, or diſcerning, of ſpirits. This was a gift of God, which conſiſted in diſcerning, whether a man was really inſpired by the ſpirit of God, or was a falſe prophet, and impoſtor, who only followed the impulſe of his own ſpirit, or of the ſpirit of Satan. St. Paul ſpeaks, 1 Cor. xii. 10. of the diſcerning of ſpirits, among the miraculous gifts granted by God to the faithful, at the firſt ſettlement of Chriſtianity. And St. John, 1 John iv. 1. Beloved, believe not every ſpirit, but try the ſpirits, whether they are of God: becauſe many falſe prophets are gone out into the world.

To quench the Spirit. St. Paul cautions the Theſſalonians, 1 Theſ. v. 19. not to quench the Spirit. The Spirit may be quenched, firſt, by forcing, as it were, the Holy Ghoſt to withdraw from us, by ſin, by irregularity of manners, by vanity, by avarice, by negligence, and by other crimes contrary to charity, to truth, to peace, and to the other gifts of the Holy Ghoſt. Secondly, the Spirit might have been quenched by ſuch actions as cauſed God to take away his ſupernatural gifts and favours, ſuch as prophecy, the gift of tongues, the giſt of healing, &c. For though theſe gifts were of mere grace, and God might communicate them ſometimes to wicked people, yet he has often granted them to the prayers of the faithful, and taken them away, to puniſh their abuſe or contempt of them.

To grieve the Spirit, Epheſ. iv. 30. may be alſo taken in two ways; either in the ſenſe of an internal grace, habitual or actual: or, in the ſenſe of miraculous gifts, with which God favoured the primitive Chriſtians. We grieve the Spirit of God, by withſtanding his holy inſpirations, the motions of his grace; or by living in a luke-warm and negligent manner: by deſpiſing his gifts, or neglecting them; by abuſing his favours, either out of vanity, curioſity, or negligence. And in a contrary ſenſe, 2 Tim. i. 6. we ſtir up the Spirit of God which is in us, by the practice of virtue, by our exactneſs in complying with his inſpirations, by fervour in his ſervice, by renewing our gratitude, &c.

The ſpirit, as oppoſed to the fleſh, is put for the ſoul by which we are animated. Gen. vi. 3. "My ſpirit ſhall no longer abide in man, becauſe he is but fleſh." I will deſtroy mankind, I will take from them my breath which I gave them, the ſoul that I infuſed into them, becauſe they are all carnal, debaſed by vile inclinations, by brutiſh paſſion: becauſe, in a word, all fleſh have corrupted their way upon the earth; they have in a great meaſure forgotten that they are reaſonable creatures, and have plunged themſelves into the ſtate and condition of beaſts. [Otherwiſe, my Spirit ſhall not ſtrive with man—to correct him, to reprove his wickedneſs; no; but I will chaſtiſe him ſeverely; his violent inclinations ſhall feel no check from the gentle admonitions of my benevolent Spirit, but ſhall have their own way — his fleſh ſhall not be thwarted, but ſhall prove his ruin—at leaſt after ſuch a reſpite as I have appointed.]

Spirit, in the moral ſenſe, is oppoſed to the fleſh. Rom. vii. 25. With the mind, or ſpirit, I myſelf ſerve the law of God; but with the fleſh the law of ſin. And Rom. viii. 13. If he live after the fleſh, he ſhall die; but if ye through the ſpirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye ſhall live. And Gal. v. 19, 22. Now the works of the fleſh are manifeſt, which are theſe; adultery, fornication, uncleanneſs, laſciviouſneſs, &c. But the fruit of the ſpirit is love, joy, peace, long-ſuffering, gentleneſs, goodneſs, faith, meekneſs, temperance.

The ſpirit of Jeſus Chriſt, which animates true Chriſtians, the children of God, and which diſtinguiſhes them from the children of darkneſs, who are animated by the ſpirit of the world, is, the gift of grace, of adoption, the holy Spirit poured into our hearts, which emboldens us to call God, my Father, my Father, Rom. viii. 5. Thoſe who are animated by this ſpirit have crucified the fleſh, with the affections and luſts thereof. If we live in the ſpirit, let us alſo walk in the ſpirit, Gal. v. 24. And Rom. viii. 9. Ye are not in the fleſh, but in the ſpirit, if ſo be that the ſpirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the ſpirit of Chriſt, he is none of his. The ſpirit of Jeſus Chriſt animated the prophets, and inclined them induſtriouſly to enquire at what time thoſe particulars ſhould happen, which they had foretold, concerning his paſſion and glory. 1 Peter i. 11.

SPIRITS. Apparitions of ſpirits. The notion, that ſpirits, angels, demons, the ſouls of the dead, have ſometimes appeared to men, is univerſally ſpread among all nations. It is founded on an infinite number of hiſtories, and inſtances; but chiefly on the authority of the ſacred books: which relate ſeveral appearances of angels and demons. Herein we may alſo obſerve the opinion, which ſuppoſes the return and appearing of the ſpirits and ſouls of dead perſons; in the ſtory of the raiſing the ghoſt of Samuel, 1 Sam. xxviii. 11, 12. in what is ſaid by Jeſus Chriſt to his apoſtles, Luke xxiv. 39. Handle me, and ſee, for a ſpirit has not fleſh and bones, as ye ſee me have: in what was imagined by the apoſtles, when they ſaw Jeſus Chriſt in the night walking upon the water; Matt. xiv. 26. And in Acts xii. 13, 15. when St. Peter ſtood knocking at the door, they thought it was his angel, becauſe they knew he had been put into priſon but a little before. And in 2 Macc. xv. 12. the high-prieſt Onias, and the prophet Jeremiah, appeared in a dream to Judas Maccabeus. Vide SOUL.

SPITHAMA, a ſort of meaſure, in length nearly a foot.

SPITTLE, Saliva. The ſpittle of him who was troubled with a gonorrhœa rendered unclean that perſon on whom it accidentally fell. Lev. xv. 8. He continued unclean till evening, and till he had waſhed himſelf and his cloaths. To ſpit in any one's face was looked on as the greateſt outrage; Job xxx. 10. Iſai. l. 6. See Numb. xii. 14. If her father had but ſpit in her face, ſhould ſhe not be aſhamed ſeven days? The widow of a man who died without children, might ſpit in the face of his brother, or of his neareſt kinſman, that refuſed to take her to wife, Deut. xxv. 9. The ſoldiers ſpit in the face of our Saviour at his paſſion; Mark x. 34. xiv. 65. xv. 19. Luke xviii. 38. Vide FRAGMENTS, Nos. LXXVI. p. 133. CI. p. 2.

SPY. The patriarch Joſeph pretended to arreſt his brethren, and did in effect ſecure his brother Simeon in priſon, feigning that he took them for ſpies. According to the rules of war, a ſpy taken in a camp deſerves to be hanged. Moſes ſent twelve ſpies to explore the land of Canaan. Vide Numb. xiii. 2, 3, &c. When they returned, they made their report to the people, ſaying, "The country where we have been is indeed a country flowing with milk and honey; but we have ſeen there giants of the race of Anak. Amalek dwells to the ſouth, the Hittites, the Jebuſites, and the Ammorites, in the mountains, and the Canaanites along the ſea-coaſt."

Then the people began to murmur: but Caleb, one of the meſſengers, endeavoured to encourage them. The others, on the contrary, diſparaged the land, inſiſting on the great difficulty there would be to conquer it. This terrified the people; who became faint hearted, and were condemned to wander in the wilderneſs.

Mention is again made of ſpies in the book of Joſhua ii. 1, 2, 3, &c.

STACHYS, Στάχυς, ſpike; from στάχυς.

STACHYS, a diſciple of St. Paul, of whom he makes honourable mention, Rom. xvi. 9. We know no particulars of his life that can be relied on. Nicephorus Caliſtus aſſures us, lib. ii. cap. 39. that St. Andrew came and preached for ſome time at Byzantium, afterwards Conſtantinople; but being obliged to leave it, he ordained Stachys biſhop there. The Menæa of the Greeks ſet down the feaſt of St. Stachys October 31; in which which they are followed by the Roman martyrology, which alſo makes him biſhop of Byzantium, and which aſſures us, that to him St. Paul makes his recommendations in the epiſtle to the Romans, and whom he calls his well-beloved. The Greeks give him the title of an apoſtle, and put him among the ſeventy-two diſciples. But we find nothing of this in authors of greater antiquity than Nicephorus.

STADIUM, a furlong, a meaſure of length, which conſiſted of one hundred and twenty-five geometrical paces. Eight furlongs make a mile, and three miles make a common league. See the Table of meaſures.

Stadium is alſo taken for the place where they performed public exerciſes of running. St. Paul alludes to theſe ſpectacles and theſe exerciſes, when he ſays, 1 Cor. ix. 24. They which run in a race (in ſtadio) run all, but one receiveth the prize. Theſe places were called ſtadia, becauſe they were diſtinguiſhed into courſes, or diſtances, by certain reſting places; ſo that ſome of the racers run but one diſtance, ſome two or more, each according to his ſtrength.

STAR, Stella; in Hebrew, ככב, cocab. Under the name of ſtars, the Hebrews comprehended all the heavenly bodies, conſtellations, and planets; all the luminaries, except the ſun and the moon. Scripture often expreſſes itſelf as if it ſhould ſeem to attribute ſenſe and underſtanding to the ſtars. The ſun and moon were called, by the idolatrous Iſraelites, king and queen of heaven; and the ſtars were (as it were) their army and militia; Deut. xvii. 3. Both received thoſe honours, which were only due to their Creator.

The number of the ſtars was conſidered as infinite: the Pſalmiſt, to exalt the power and omniſcience of God, ſays, that he numbers the ſtars, and calls them by their names. He is deſcribed as a king taking a review of his army, and knowing the name of every one of his ſoldiers. Scripture, to expreſs a very extraordinary increaſe and multiplication, uſes the ſimilitude of the ſtars of heaven, or of the ſands of the ſea: I will multiply thy ſeed as the ſtars of the heaven, and as the ſand upon the ſea-ſhore; Gen. xv. 5. xxii. 17. xxvi. 4. Exod. xxxii. 13, &c. Job ſays, xxv. 5. that in the eyes of God, the ſtars themſelves are impure; that they formed a kind of concert—ſong—to his honour, at the beginning of the creation, xxxviii. 7. that God locks them up, as with a key, and hinders them from appearing, but when he pleaſes, Job ix. 7.

In times of diſgrace and public calamity, it is ſaid, the ſtars withhold their light, and are covered with darkneſs; that they fall from heaven, and diſappear. Theſe figurative and emphatic expreſſions are only weakened and enervated by being explained. [I preſume they frequently refer to the governing powers of nations.] Amos ſays, that the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs carried the ſtar of your gods, which ye made to yourſelves. {Vide FRAGMENTS, Nos. CVIII. CCXIII. Job ſpeaks in two places of four of the principal conſtellations known to the ancients; the bear, Orion, the Hyades, and the ſtar of the ſouth. Job ix. 9. & xxxviii. 31, 32.

Star of Balaam, and Star of the Magi, vide MAGI and ABRAHAM, ult. alſo, ad fin.

STARS. To caution the Hebrews againſt the idolatry that prevailed over almoſt all the eaſt, of worſhipping the ſun, moon, and ſtars; Moſes informs us, Gen. i. 14, 15, 16. that God gave them their being, and that he ſeparated them from that maſs of matter which he produced out of nothing. Job, xxxviii. 7. deſcribes the ſtars, as praiſing the creator at the beginning of the world. And Iſaiah, xiv. 13. makes Lucifer ſay at his rebellion; I will aſcend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the ſtars of God. [but who is this Lucifer?]

The beauty and ſplendor that men obſerved in the ſtars, and the great advantages they derived from them; the wonderful order apparent in their courſes; the influence aſcribed to them, in the production and preſervation of animals, of fruits, plants, and minerals, have induced almoſt all people of the world to impute to them life, knowledge, power, and to pay them a ſovereign worſhip and adoration. Moſes ſays, Deut. iv. 19. Leſt thou lift up thine eyes unto heaven, and when thou ſeeſt the ſun, and the moon, and the ſtars, even all the hoſt of heaven, thou ſhouldſt be driven to worſhip them, and ſerve them, which the Lord thy God hath divided unto all nations under the whole heaven. And Job ſays, xxxi. 26, 27, 28. If I beheld the ſun when it ſhined, or the moon walking in brightneſs; and my heart hath been ſecretly enticed, or my mouth hath kiſſed my hand, (by way of adoration): this alſo were an iniquity to be puniſhed by the judge; for I ſhould have denied the God that is above. The worſhip of Baal, of Aſtarte, of the queen of heaven, of the hoſt of heaven, with which the Jews were often reproached, was the worſhip of the ſtars, eſpecially of the ſun and moon. St. Stephen, Acts vii. 42. after having ſpoke of the worſhip of the golden calf by the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, ſays, that God gave them up to their blindneſs, and that they paid their adoration to the hoſt of heaven, and carried in the deſart the tent of Moloch, and the ark of their god Remphan.

The Jews, both ancient and modern, aſcribe great influence to the ſtars. Philo, Leg. Allegor. lib. i. p. 41. imputes to them a great part of whatever happens on the earth. He ſays elſewhere, that the ſtars are not only animals, but even moſt pure ſpirits; that the air is replete with animals, or ſpirits, continually deſcending, to animate bodies. He had borrowed theſe notions from his maſter Plato. Origen was guilty of the ſame miſtake, tom. i. in Joan. p. 17. The Rabbins alſo aſcribe intelligence to the heaven, and the ſtars. Maimonid. Moſe-nebochim, part 2. cap. 4. &c. Menaſſe-ben-Iſrael, prob. 25, &c. they maintain, that they have a knowledge of God; that they know themſelves; that God is the object of their deſires; that their knowledge and actions are more perfect than thoſe of men.

Maimonides ſays, that among wiſe men there is no controverſy about the ſtars: they all agree, that they have a great influence on the generation and corruption of ſublunary bodies. Some impute the direction of affairs rather to the angels, than the ſtars; but others maintain, that it is the ſtars which pour out their influences on the earth: every herb, according to them, has its particular ſtar, from whence it receives its virtue; which virtue is even extended to the body of man, and to the principal actions of his life. However, this does not take away the liberty of man; the planets lay him under no neceſſity: their effects are chiefly confined to the body; as health, complexion, and what depends thereon.

The ſacred books ſometimes ſeem to aſcribe knowledge to the ſtars: we are told, that the ſtars praiſed the Lord at the beginning of the world. Job xxxviii. 7. The ſun, the moon, and the ſtars are excited to praiſe the Lord. The moon is ſaid to withdraw her light, to obey the voice of Joſhua: that the ſun ſtopt its courſe, at the command of this general of God's people: that the ſun riſes as a bridegroom, who comes out of his nuptial chamber. Pſalm xix. 5. Job ſays, that the Lord commandeth the ſun, and it riſeth not; and ſealeth up the ſtars.

But all theſe expreſſions, which are merely popular, are not to be underſtood literally; for then we muſt ſay, that the earth, the trees, the waters, are animated, ſince we find in Scripture expreſſions that would inſinuate as much. All the creatures glorify God, bleſs the Lord, and obey him, each in its way. If we allow any thing more to the ſun, the moon, or the ſtars, it is becauſe they are creatures of greater perfection, and in which the glory and magnificence of God ſhine forth more eminently and conſpicuouſly.

The ſtar foretold by Balaam, Numb. xxiv. 17. There ſhall come a ſtar out of Jacob, and a ſceptre ſhall riſe out of Iſrael, and ſhall ſmite the corners of Moab, and deſtroy all the children of Sheth. According to the modern Jews, this ſtar ſignifies king David, who conquered the Moabites, and reduced them under his obedience. But the ancient Jews, as the paraphraſts Onkelos and Jonathan, explain it of the Meſſiah, which is certainly the literal and natural ſenſe of this paſſage. Some have thought that in this place Balaam foretold the appearance of that real ſtar, which ſhone at the time of our Saviour's birth, and which guided the Magi into Judea, to ſee the perſon whoſe birth was declared by that ſtar. But this ſtar did not come out of Jacob; and what is ſaid there cannot be applied to this ſtar, which plainly points at a ruler, a conqueror, a great prince, in a word, the Meſſiah. The Jews were ſo well convinced of this, at the time of Jeſus Chriſt, and ſome time afterwards, that the famous impoſtor Bar-chaliba cauſed himſelf to be called Bar-cocheba, the ſon of the ſtar, pretending to be the Meſſiah; and involved the Jews of Paleſtine in a revolt, which compleated the ruin of that unfortunate nation.

STATER, a piece of money of the value of one ſhekel. Mat. xvii. 27. Our Saviour ſent Peter to fiſh in the lake of Tiberias: this apoſtle caught there, with his angle-rod, a fiſh which had a Stater in its mouth. This ſerved to pay for Chriſt and himſelf, what they owed to the temple, which was half a ſhekel a-piece. In 1 Sam. ix. 8. a quarter of a ſhekel, is tranſlated by quarta pars Stateris; and in Jeremy, St. Jerom tranſlates ſhekel by Stater. See Ezek. iv. 10. & v. 1.

STATUE of Salt. The ſcripture tells us, that Lot's wife was changed into a ſtatue of ſalt. See LOT'S WIFE.

STATUE of Nebuchadnezzar; or rather the ſtatue that Nebuchadnezzar ſaw in his dream, Dan. ii. 31, &c. which was very large and terrible to behold: its head was of gold, its breaſt and its arms of ſilver, the belly and thighs of braſs, the legs of iron, and the feet partly of iron and partly of clay. Daniel's explication was,—that the empire of Nebuchadnezzar, i. e. of the Chaldeans, was repreſented by the head of gold; the empire of the Perſians, founded by Cyrus, was repreſented by the breaſt and arms of ſilver; the empire of the Grecians, founded by Alexander the Great, was was hinted at by the belly and thighs of braſs: the empire of the Romans was denoted by the legs of iron; or rather, this empire being divided into two, is that of the Seleucidæ in Syria, and of the Lagidæ in Egypt. The attempts of the kings of Egypt and Syria, to unite their intereſts by intermarriages, not ſucceeding, are repreſented by the feet, being partly of iron, and partly of clay. The little ſtone that comes from the mountain, and which overturns the ſtatue, is the empire of the Romans, under which appeared the Meſſiah, whoſe kingdom ſaw the fall of the Roman Coloſſus.

The ſame Nebuchadnezzar cauſed a golden ſtatue to be ſet up, of ſixty cubits high, and ſix cubits thick. Vide the hiſtory in Daniel, and FRAGMENT, No. CL. page 113.

It is enquired, what this ſtatue was, and what it repreſented? Some think it was a ſtatue of Nebuchadnezzar himſelf; others that of his father, whom he had a mind to deify: but, to us it ſeems moſt probable, that it was a ſtatue of the god Bel, to whom he deſigned a particular worſhip, at the time of the playing of the inſtruments: and, in effect, he did not complain of the Jews for refuſing to worſhip him, or his father, but his gods.

STEPHANAS, Στεφανᾶς, crown, or crowned; from the Greek, ϛεφανή, a crown.

STEPHANAS, the name of a principal chriſtian of Corinth, whom St. Paul baptized, with all his family, probably about A.D. 52. 1 Cor. i. 16. Stephanas devoted himſelf to the ſervice of the church; and A. D. 56 he came to St. Paul at Epheſus, 1 Cor. xvi. 15, 17. and, according to Chryſoſtom, in 1 Cor. homil. 44. brought him letters from the church of Corinth, to conſult him concerning marriage, continence, and, perhaps, other ſubjects, which St. Paul treats of in his firſt epiſtle to the Corinthians, which the apoſtle wrote from Epheſus A.D. 56. and ſent by Stephanas, Fortunatus, and Achaicus. We know no other particulars of Stephanas.

STEPHANUS, Στεφανος.

STEPHEN; in Greek, Stephanos, which ſignifies a crown. Stephen the firſt martyr, was probably of the number of thoſe Helleniſtical Jews that believed in Jeſus Chriſt. Epiphanius, de Chriſto, cap. iv. p. 50. thinks he was of the number of the ſeventy two diſciples of Jeſus Chriſt; but this is not certain. Jeſus Chriſt appointed his ſeventy-two diſciples to teach and preach; but it ſeems that Stephen, and the ſix other firſt deacons, had not that particular deſignation, when they were choſen to ſerve tables: which which was in the year 35. St. Stephen is always put at their head; and it is believed he had ſtudied at the feet of Gamaliel. As he was full of the Holy Ghoſt, and of zeal, Acts vi. 5, 6, &c. he performed many wonderful works and miracles: and ſome of the ſynagogue of the freed-men, of the Cyrenians, of the Alexandrians, and others, diſputing with him, could not withſtand his wiſdom and ſpirit.

Then they ſuborned falſe witneſſes, to teſtify, that they heard him blaſpheme againſt Moſes, and againſt God; and they drew him before the Sanhedrim. Stephen appeared in the midſt of this aſſembly, with a countenance like that of an angel; and the high-prieſt aſking him, what he had to anſwer? in his defence, he ſhewed—he had not ſaid any thing, either againſt Moſes, or the temple,—but that the Jews had always oppoſed themſelves to God and his prophets; he upbraided them with the hardneſs of their hearts, with their putting the prophets to death, and, laſtly, with ſlaying Jeſus Chriſt himſelf.

At theſe words they were enraged and gnaſhed their teeth againſt him. But Stephen lifting up his eyes to heaven, ſaid; I ſee the heavens open, and the ſon of man ſtanding at the right hand of God. Then the Jews cried out, ſtopped their ears, and falling on him, they drew him out of the city, and ſtoned him. The witneſſes laid down their cloaths at the feet of a young man called Saul, then one of the moſt eager perſecutors of the chriſtians, but afterwards one of the moſt zealous preachers of chriſtianity. Stephen called upon the Lord, and ſaid; Lord. impute not this ſin to them. After which he fell aſleep in the Lord, and ſome pious perſons took care to bury him, and accompanied his funeral with great mourning. Acts viii. 2.

This is what ſcripture informs us of St. Stephen and his martyrdom. We are told many particulars of his burial, and afterwards of the diſcovery of his body, in a work printed at the end of the ſeventh tome of St. Auſtin, under the name of Lucian the prieſt. The devotion paid to him is very antient in the church.

STIGMATA. Certain marks and inciſions made by the heathen in their fleſh, in honour of ſome falſe deity. Theſe marks were imprinted, either by a hot iron, or with a needle, with which they made ſeveral punctures, which they afterwards filled with a fine powder, either black, blue, or ſome other colour, which incorporated with the fleſh, and remained indelible.

The greater part of the Arabian women have their arms and cheeks marked with theſe Stigmata. Lucian, in his book of the Syrian goddeſs ſays, that the Aſſyrians wore theſe printed characters ſome on their hands, others on their necks. Moſes warns the Iſraelites from making any figure, or any mark upon their bodies: Ye ſhall not make any cuttings in your fleſh for the dead, nor print any marks upon you. Levit. xix. 28.

Ptolemy Philopater gave orders, that the Jews who had forſaken their religion, and had embraced that of the pagans, ſhould be ſtigmatized with the mark of an ivy-leaf, which tree is dedicated to Bacchus. 3 Macc. Ἀπογραφομένους χαράττεσθαι καὶ διὰ πυρὸς εἰς τὸ σῶμα παρασήμῳ Διονύσου κισσοφύλλῳ. St. John Rev. xiii. 16, 17. alludes to this cuſtom, when he ſays, the beaſt printed his character on her people in their right hand, and on their fore-head; and forbad all to buy or to ſell, but thoſe who bore this mark. St. Paul declares, Gal. vi. 17. that he bore in his body the marks of the Lord Jeſus; i. e. the ſcars of ſtripes received for his ſake, and in his ſervice, and that he looked on them as ſo many Stigmata, or honourable marks of his conſecration to his ſervice. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CVII. p. 12.

Philo the Jew ſays, de Monarch. lib. 14. that there were men, who printed characters on their fleſh with hot irons, to devote themſelves more ſolemnly and avowedly to the worſhip of their idols, and to prove with greater evidence their engagement. Procopius, in Iſa. xliv. takes notice of an antient cuſtom among chriſtians, who made marks on their arms and wriſts, repreſenting the croſs, or the monogram of Jeſus Chriſt: a cuſtom which ſtill continues among the oriental chriſtians, and thoſe who make a pilgrimage to Jeruſalem. Prudentius deſcribes the manner in which the pagans made their Stigmata, in honour to their gods:

Quid cum ſacrandus accipit ſphragitidas?
Acus minutas ingerunt fornacibus,
His Membra pergunt urere; utque igniverint
Quamcumque partem corporis fervens nota
Stigmavit, hanc ſic conſecratam prædicant.

PRUDENT. HYMN. x.

STOICKS, Στωικοὶ, thus called by the Greeks, becauſe they aſſembled and converſed together under a porch, or portico, in Greek ϛοὰ, Stoa.

STOICKS, heathen philoſophers, who took their name from the Greek word ſtoa, ſignifying a porch, or portico, becauſe Zeno, the head of the Stoicks, kept his ſchool in a porch of the city of Athens. Diogenes Laertius in his life of Zeno, and others have treated of theſe philoſophers. Joſephus ſays, that the phariſees approach very near to the ſentiments of the Stoicks. They affected the ſame ſtiffneſs, patience, apathy, auſterity, and inſenſibility. The ſect of the Stoicks was conſiderable at Athens when St. Paul came thither, ſince he had conferences with them. Acts xvii. 18. The Stoicks placed the ſupreme happineſs of man in living agreeably to nature and reaſon. They ſeem to have looked on God as the ſoul of the world.

STONES. We have ſpoken of the ſeveral precious ſtones, or gems, mentioned in ſcripture. Neither the Jews nor even the antient Greek interpreters, ſeem to have had correct knowledge of the proper ſignification of the original terms. Vide Louis de Dieu on Exod. xxviii. 17, &c. and Braunius, de Veſtitu Sacerdotum Hebræorum, lib. ii. cap. 8, 9, &c. alſo Francis de la Rue, de Gemmis.

For the names of the precious ſtones which were in the High-prieſt's breaſt-plate. Exod. xxviii. 17, &c. The reader may ſee their articles.

On the two ſhoulders of the high-prieſt were two ſtones, called in Hebrew, Shohem, Vulgate Onyx, LXX. Emeralds. Exodus xxviii. 9. We think this to be the true ſignification of the Hebrew word Shohem.

St. John, Rev. xxi. 19, 20, 21, &c. ſpeaks of the New Jeruſalem, the ſpouſe of the lamb, whoſe foundations were precious ſtones.—As—1, Jaſper; 2, Sapphire; 3, Chalcedony; 4, Emerald; 5, Sardonyx; 6, Sardius; 7, Chryſolite; 8, Beryl; 9, Topaz; 10, Chryſopraſus; 11, Jacinth; 12, Amethyſt.

To theſe precious ſtones may be added the ſtone of שיש, ſhiſh, ſis, or שש ſes, or ſais, mentioned 1 Chron. xxix. 2. and Eſth. i. 6. which is commonly tranſlated fine white marble.

The ſtone Gazith, 1 Chron. xxii. 2, אבן גזית. I take this to be common marble, ſawed, and poliſhed.

The ſtone of Phuc. אבן פוך. 1 Chron. xxix. 2. Iſa. liv. 11. Phuc, in Hebrew, ſignifies antimony, or Stibium. We may ſee by Iſaiah, that the ſtone of Phuc was uſed for pavements. The ſtone of Stibium, or antimony, is a mineral of a black colour, full of ſhining veins, like poliſhed iron, and which has an intermediate nature, between metal and ſtone. [Something like black lead ore.]

The corner ſtone, or the head ſtone of the corner. Is that which is put at the angle of a building, whether at the foundation, or on the top of the wall. Jeſus Chriſt was that corner ſtone which though rejected by the Jews, is the corner ſtone of the church, Pſalm cxviii. 22. and the ſtone that binds and unites the ſynagogue and the Gentiles in the union of the ſame faith. Acts iv. 11. Iſaiah xxviii. 16. Eph. ii. 20. 1 Pet. ii. 6. Matth. xxi. 42. Mark xii. 10. Luke xx. 17.

The ſtone of Zoheleth, 1 Kings i. 9. as the rabbins ſay, was a ſtone that ſerved for exerciſe to young people people, who tried their ſtrength, either in lifting it, caſting it, or rolling it; upon which they are not entirely agreed. See Zech. xii. 3. A ſtone of proof.

The Hebrews ſometimes give the name of ſtone, or rock, to kings, to princes, or to God himſelf. Joſeph in Egypt became the ſtone of Iſrael. Gen. xlix. 24. They alſo give the name of ſtones to their weights uſed in commerce. Levit. xix. 36. Juſt weights ſhall ye have: Heb. Juſt ſtones. Thou ſhalt not have in thy bag divers weights, a great and a ſmall. Deut. xxv. 13. Heb. a ſtone and a ſtone. The ſtone of the king, is the king's weight. 2 Sam. xiv. 26. See alſo Prov. xvi. 11. xx. 10, 23. Mic. vi. 11. A ſtone of fraud, is a deceitful weight.

They call a great ſhower of hail, hail-ſtones. Joſh. x. 11. See Iſai. xxx. 30. Ezek. xiii. 12, 13. xxxviii. 22.

Jacob's ſtone, is that he uſed for his pillow, when he went to Meſopotamia, and upon which he poured oil, by a kind of conſecration, becauſe it was to ſtand as an altar to the Lord after his return. Gen. xxviii. 18. And, in effect, he did come hither to pay his vows, and to offer his ſacrifices, after he returned out of that country. Gen. xxxv. 14. From Jacob's anointing of this ſtone, ſay ſome, the Pagans took up the practice of pouring oil on certain ſtones which they worſhipped. Clemens Alexandrinus, Strom. lib. vii. aſſures us, that they paid a religious worſhip to theſe kind of ſtones. Arnobius, cont. Gen. lib. 1. acknowledges, that he himſelf had fallen into this kind of idolatry, before he embraced Chriſtianity: Si quando conſpexeram lubricatum lapidem, & ex olivi unguine lubricatum, tanquam ineſſet vis præſens, adulabar, affabar.

The ancient Phenicians, called by the name of Bethulæq, ſuch ſtones as were conſecrated to divine worſhip. Euſebius, præpar. lib. i. cap. 10. Sanchoniathon aſcribes the invention of them to the god Cœlus; he ſays, they are living and animated ſtones. They were long ſeen about Mount Libanus. Aſclepiades, apud Photium, Cod. 242. takes notice of them near Heliopolis, in Syria. They aſcribed oracles to them, and the preſence of ſome deity, or of ſome genius that animated them. Some of theſe Bethulæa were conſecrated to Saturn, others to the ſun, or to other deities. Heſychius ſays, that the poets call the ſtone which Saturn devoured inſtead of his ſon Jupiter, by the name of Bethula. I doubt not but that the word Bethula or Bethulæa, is derived from Bethel, where Jacob anointed a ſtone in honour of the true God.

The Mahometans think, that Jacob's ſtone was conveyed to the temple of Jeruſalem, and is ſtill preſerved in a moſque there, in the place where they think the temple formerly ſtood. They call this ſtone Alſakra, or the ſtone of unction. The cadi Gemaleddin, ſon of Vallel, writes, that paſſing through Jeruſalem, in his way to Egypt, he ſaw Chriſtian prieſts carrying glaſs phials full of wine over the Sakra, near which the Muſſulmen had built their temple, which, for this reaſon, they call the Temple of the Stone. This wine that the Chriſtian prieſts ſet upon the ſtone, was, without doubt, deſigned for the celebration of maſs there.

Shower of ſtones. Joſhua x. 11. ſpeaks of its raining ſtones upon the Canaanites. And it came to paſs as they fled from before Iſrael, and were in the going down to Beth-horon, that the Lord caſt down great ſtones from heaven upon them unto Azekah, and they died. They were more that died with hail-ſtones, than they whom the children of Iſrael ſlew with the ſword. Some pretend, that this was ordinary hail, but larger and more violent than uſual: Others maintain, that Joſhua is to be underſtood literally, of a ſhower of ſtones. The text ſeems to be expreſs for this ſentiment, and the thing is not impoſſible. We have ſeveral inſtances of ſhowers of ſtones.

When the Scripture ſpeaks of theſe events, it ſpeaks of them as of a prodigy. But a common ſhower of hail has nothing of a miracle in it. Maſius, Bonfrere, Grotius, explain it literally of a ſhower of ſtones. Moſes, Deut. xxviii. 24. ſpeaks of a ſhower of duſt and ſand, with which he threatens Iſrael. The Romans, who looked on ſhowers of ſtones as very diſaſtrous, in their annals have noticed many inſtances of them. Under the reign of Tullus Hoſtilius, when it was known to the people of Rome, that a ſhower of ſtones had fallen on the mountain of Alba, at firſt it ſeemed incredible. They ſent out proper perſons to inquire into this prodigy, and it was found that ſtones had fallen after the ſame manner as a ſtorm of hail driven by the wind. Tit. Liv. lib. i. decad. 1. p. 12. Idem. lib. xxv. xxx. xxxiv. xxxv. & alibi paſſim. Some time after the battle of Cannæ, there was ſeen upon the ſame mountain of Alba, a ſhower of ſtones, which continued for two days together. In 1538, near a village in Italy, called Tripergola, after ſome ſhocks of an earthquake, there was ſeen a ſhower of ſtones and duſt, which darkened the air for two days, after which they obſerved that a mountain had roſe up in the midſt of the Lucrine lake. Montfaucon, Diar. Italic. cap. 21. [It is probable the ſtones mentioned mentioned by Livy, came from an eruption of mount Veſuvius, being brought by a tempeſt: but from whence could thoſe come that fell on the Canaanites? The inſtances of enormous hail-ſtones are amply ſufficient. Exod. ix. 25. Rev. xvi. 21.]

This is not to affirm that there was no miracle here, as there was none in thoſe ſhowers of ſtones mentioned by Livy; but the miracle conſiſts much leſs in the thing itſelf, than in the circumſtances of time and place.

Stone of offence. What we meet in our way, which makes us ſtumble or fall. Iſai. viii. 14. St. Peter and St. Paul have ſaid that Jeſus Chriſt was a ſtumbling-ſtone to the Jews who believed not on him. Rom. ix. 33, 34. 1 Pet. ii. 8.

Moſes ſays, that God would give to the Hebrews a country, whoſe rocks and ſtones ſhould ſupply them with plenty of honey and oil. Deut. xxxii. 13. He made him to ſuck honey out of the rock, and oil out of the flinty rock. And the Pſalmiſt ſays, Pſa. lxxxi. 16. ſpeaking of the miracle by which Moſes drew water out of the rock; With honey out of the rock ſhould I have ſatisfied thee. In Paleſtine the bees often ſtore up their honey in holes of the rocks. To this the Scripture alludes in this place. Job ſays, Job xxix. 6. in the ſame ſenſe, that in his proſperity, the rock poured me out rivers of oil, becauſe olive-trees generally grew on the mountains.

Many people bordering on Paleſtine, dwelt in the rocks and hollow ſtones in the mountains. The people inhabiting on the Perſian gulph, lived in the ſame manner. For this reaſon they were called in Greek, Troglodytes, i. e. people who dwell in caves and mountain-groves. Thoſe that inhabited the deſart about Tekoah, lodged in caverns dug in the earth, ſays Jerom. The Idumeans had their ordinary abodes in the clefts of the rocks. Jer. xlviii. 28. O ye that dwell in Moab, leave the cities and dwell in the rock, and be like the dove that maketh her neſt in the ſides of the hole's mouth. Hither the Moabites uſed to retreat in times of calamity. The Kenites, who dwelt to the ſouth of the Dead-ſea, lodged after the ſame manner: And he looked on the Kenites, and took up his parable and ſaid; Strong is thy dwelling-place, and thou putteſt thy neſt in a rock. Numb. xxiv. 21.

In Iſai. li. 1. God ſays to the Jews, Look unto the rock whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence ye are digged; i. e. to Abraham and the patriarchs, your anceſtors. And Matt. iii. 9. John the Baptiſt tells the Phariſees; Think not to ſay within yourſelves, We have Abraham to our father; for I ſay unto you, that God is able of theſe ſtones to raiſe up children unto Abraham. He can convert the moſt hardened hearts, and call thoſe at the greateſt diſtance. It is believed, that when he ſpoke this, the Baptiſt pointed to the ſtones in the deſart, but underſtood the people that were yet infidels and gentiles.

The knives of ſtone uſed by the Jews in circumciſion, were not enjoined by the law; but the uſe was founded, either on cuſtom, convenience, or experience of this kind of inſtrument, being leſs dangerous than thoſe of metal. Zipporah uſed a ſtone to circumciſe her ſons. Exod. iv. 25. Joſhua did the ſame, when he cauſed ſuch of the Iſraelites to be circumciſed at Gilgal, as had not received circumciſion during their journey in the wilderneſs; Joſh. v. 2. This expreſſion ſhews, that knives were not then in common uſe. The Egyptians uſed theſe knives of ſtone to open dead bodies that were to be embalmed, Herodot. lib. ii. cap. 2. Pliny, lib. xxxv. cap. 12. aſſures us, that the prieſts of the mother of the gods had ſharp ſtones, with which they cut themſelves, which they thought they could not do with any thing elſe without danger. Catullus obſerves that Atys demaſculated himſelf after the ſame manner. Catul. carm. de Berecynt & Athy.

Devolvit acuto ſibi pondera ſilice.

They uſed ſtone knives to make inciſions in the tree from whence the balm diſtilled: alſo, formerly inſtead of pen-knives, to cut the canes for writing with. Scaliger ſays, that he had ſeen at Lyons two of theſe ſtone knives. The Africans of Morocco, and ſome Americans, at this day, have them in common uſe, of which they make knives, lancets, and razors. Julian. lib. vi. Epigram. apud Bonfrer. 1 Joſ. v. The oriental Jews commonly uſed them for the circumciſion of their children, being not unlike flints for guns: But the weſtern Jews uſe a razor. D. Joh. de Palafox, cap. 12.

Moſes forbids the Hebrews to ſet up in their country any ſtone that is exalted or remarkable. Levit. xxvi. 1. אבן משכית LXX. Λίθον σκόπου. The Hebrew may be tranſlated by a ſtone for ſight, a land-mark, that ſtands on an eminence, or in ſome great road, that it might be ſeen at a diſtance. Strabo lib. xvii. mentions theſe ſtones, on the highways in Egypt. They are raiſed high, are poliſhed, round, almoſt ſpherical; made of a kind of a black and hard ſtone, of which mortars are made in that country. Theſe ſtones or columns are placed on a larger ſtone, or baſe, and ſometimes have another leſſer ſtone over them, as a capital. Some ſtand alone alone and ſeparate; the greateſt are almoſt twelve feet in length, and generally they are about half as thick; thus ſays Strabo. There are alſo ſeveral remarkable and eminent ſtones upon Libanus, as the ſame author teſtifies. The Syrians and Egyptians had ſuch a reſpect for theſe ſtones, that they almoſt adored them. They anointed them with oil, as may be ſeen from Apuleius, they kiſſed them, and ſaluted them. It is likely, this is what Moſes forbad the Hebrews.

Solomon ſays, Proverbs xvi. 8. As he that bindeth a ſtone in a ſling, ſo is he that giveth honour to a fool. Or, as the Vulgate, He that heaps honours on a fool, does like one who throws a ſtone on thoſe heaps, that are raiſed to the honour of Mercury. Statues of Mercury were generally ſet up in croſs-ways, and heaps of ſtones were caſt at the feet of theſe ſtatues, out of ſuperſtitious views; pretty much like what is done in Italy, &c. where perſons throw ſtones at the feet of certain croſſes ſet up in the high ways. They pretend, that ſo many ſtones caſt there, are teſtimonies of ſalutation paid to it. It is certain that the Pagans uſed to make heaps of ſtones at the feet of the ſtatue of Mercury, and to his honour; and it can hardly be doubted, but that the author of the Vulgate had this cuſtom in view.

But the Hebrew text imports; Juſt as a little ſtone, (literally a fragment of a ſtone) thrown upon an heap of ſtones; ſo is honour conferred upon a fool. This little ſtone does not augnent the heap, nor is ſo much as ſeen upon it; ſo honour heaped upon a fool, does not render him more worthy of conſideration. Others tranſlate it, to tie a ſtone in a piece of purple, is to give honour to a fool. As nothing can be ſo ill placed as a ſtone in a piece of fine cloth; ſo are honours ill placed upon a fool. Laſtly, the Hebrew may be rendered thus; To give honours to a fool, is the ſame thing as to put a piece of tried ſilver in a ſling. The Septuagint tranſlate it; He that gives glory to a fool, is like him that ties a ſtone in a ſling; for this is to loſe labour, when the ſtone is faſtened to the ſling.

HEAPS of ſtones, raiſed in witneſs of any memorable event, and to preſerve the remembrance of ſome matter of great importance, are the moſt ancient monuments among the Hebrews. In early ages, theſe monuments were inſtead of inſcriptions, pyramids, medals, or hiſtories. Jacob and Laban raiſed ſuch a monument on mount Gilead, in memory of their covenant. Gen. xxxi. 46. Joſhua erected one at Gilgal, made of ſtones, taken out of the Jordan, to preſerve the memorial of his miraculous paſſage over this river. Joſh. iv. 5, 6, 7. The Iſraelites that dwelt beyond Jordan, alſo raiſed one on the banks of the river, as a teſtimony that they conſtituted but one nation with their brethren on the other ſide. Joſh. xxii. 10. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXLVI. page 167.

Sometimes they heaped ſuch a collection of ſtones on the burying place of odious perſons, as Achan and Abſalom. Joſh. vii. 26. 2 Sam. xviii. 17.

Rough and unformed ſtones were conſidered as purer, and fitter for ſacred uſes, than thoſe that were hewn. Moſes directed, Exod. xx. 25. an altar to be raiſed to the Lord of rough ſtones; If thou wilt make me an altar of ſtone, thou ſhalt not build it of hewn ſtone; for if thou lift up thy tool upon it, thou haſt polluted it. God ordered that an altar of rude ſtones ſhould be built to him upon mount Ebal, Deut. xxvii. 5. that it ſhould be covered with mortar, and that the words of the covenant ſhould be written upon it. This was performed by Joſhua. Joſh. viii. 31, 32. The altar of the temple at Jeruſalem, which was built after the return from the captivity, was alſo of rude ſtones; Ezra v. 8. as likewiſe that repaired by Judas Maccabeus, after the profanation of the former by Antiochus Epiphanes. 1 Macc. iv. 46, 47.

In Deut. viii. 9. Moſes ſpeaking of Paleſtine, ſays, that the ſtones of that country are iron-ſtones; which ſignifies that the ſtones of this country might ſerve to make knives, hatchets, and other inſtruments, which are commonly made of iron; or that theſe ſtones have the hardneſs and ſolidity of iron; or, that the mountains of this country will abundantly ſupply them with mines of iron, or iron-ſtone.

A heart of ſtone, may be underſtood ſeveral ways. Job xli. 24, ſpeaking of the Behemoth, ſays, his heart is as hard as ſtone, as impenetrable as an anvil: which is as much as to ſay, that he is of a very extraordinary ſtrength, boldneſs, and courage. It is ſaid, 1 Sam. xxv, 37. that the heart of Nabal became as a ſtone, when he was told of the danger he had incurred by his imprudence. His heart became immoveable like a ſtone, it was contracted or convulſed, and this convulſion was the occaſion of his death. Ezekiel ſays, xi. 19. xxxvi. 26. that the Lord will take away from his people their heart of ſtone, and give them a heart of fleſh; that he will convert them, and inſpire them with milder and more gracious feelings. Pretty near in the ſame ſenſe, John the Baptiſt ſaid, Matt. iii. 9. that God was able to raiſe up to Abraham children from the ſtones of the deſart.

A ſtone is ſometimes put for an idol of ſtone; Wo unto him that ſaith to the wood, Awake, and to the dumb ſtone, Ariſe, it ſhall teach. Hab. ii. 19. The Aſſyrians threw into the fire the gods of the nations; for they were no gods, they were only wood and ſtone. Iſai. xxxvii. 9. And Jer. ii. 27. ſays, Saying to a ſtock, Thou art my father, and to a ſtone, Thou haſt brought me forth.

To be reduced to an heap of ſtones, is ſaid of a city or houſe which is entirely ruined and demoliſhed; I will make Samaria as an heap of the field, and as plantings of a vineyard. Mic. i. 6. Iſaiah ſays, xvii. 1. that Damaſcus ſhall ceaſe to be a city, and ſhall be reduced to an heap of ſtones. Thus alſo our Saviour, ſpeaking of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, ſays, that one ſtone ſhall not remain upon another. Matt. xxiv. 2.

Daniel, ſpeaking of the kingdom of the Meſſiah, compares it to a ſmall ſtone looſened from the mountain, that falls upon the feet of the Coloſſus which Nebuchadnezzar ſaw in his dream, and which afterwards filled the whole earth. Dan. ii. 34.

The author of Eccleſiaſticus ſays, xxii. 1, 2, that the ſlothful man ſhall be ſtoned with ſtones of dirt, and ſtones of filth or dung. That is, beſides the puniſhment of being ſtoned, he ſhall ſuffer the ſhame of contempt. He ſhall be daubed with dirt, and be looked upon as defiled with dung. The Engliſh tranſlation thus reads this paſſage; A ſlothful man is compared to a filthy ſtone, and every one will hiſs him out to his diſgrace. A ſlothful man is compared to the filth of a dunghill; every man that takes it up will ſhake his hand.

Ezekiel, xxviii. 14, 16. compares the king of Tyre to the cherubim in the temple, in the midſt of the ſtones of fire, or of burning ſtones. The cherubim were of gold, the pavement of the ſanctuary was of ſtones and marble, precious and ſhining. Thus the king of Tyre was cloathed with magnificent garments, gold and precious ſtones ſurrounded him on all ſides, his apartments were paved with precious marble, &c.

STONING. To ſtone, to put to death by caſting ſtones. Lapidation was a puniſhment much in uſe among the Hebrews, and the rabbins reckon up many crimes that were ſubject to it. Theſe are, in general, all that the law condemns to death, without expreſſing the particular kind of death.

The rabbins tell us, that when a man was condemned to death, he was led out of the city, an officer going before him with a pike in his hand, at the top of which was a linen cloth, to render it diſtinguiſhable from afar, and that thoſe who might have any thing to offer in favour of the criminal, might propoſe it. If no one offered, he was conducted to the place of execution, and was exhorted to acknowledge and confeſs his fault; becauſe thoſe who confeſs their ſins, have a part in the life to come. After this he was ſtoned. But lapidation, ſay the rabbins, apud Selden. de Synedriis, lib. i. cap. 5. lib. ii. cap. 13. was performed after two manners. The firſt was when ſtones were thrown upon the guilty perſon till he died; the witneſſes throwing the firſt ſtones at him. The ſecond manner was, when the criminal was brought to a ſteep place, whoſe heighth was at leaſt that of two men, from whence one of the two witneſſes threw him headlong, and the other rolled a large ſtone upon his body. If he did not die by his fall from the rock, they diſpatched him by throwing ſtones upon him. [Some ſuppoſe a reference to theſe two manners of ſtoning in the goſpel, Matt. xxi. 44.] We ſee more than one inſtance in Scripture of the firſt manner of ſtoning; but we have no example of the ſecond; for that of Jezebel, who was thrown out of a window, proves nothing. 2 Kings ix. 33.

What we have ſaid, that they generally ſtoned criminals out of the city, is true only of regular executions. For in ſome caſes the Jews ſtoned thoſe whom they thought deſerved it, wherever they found them. For example, when by a tranſport of zeal, they ſtoned to death a blaſphemer, an adulterer, or an idolater. Thus, when they brought to Jeſus a woman ſurpriſed in adultery, John viii. 7. he ſaid to her accuſers, Let him who is without fault caſt the firſt ſtone at her. And, when the Jews pretending he blaſphemed, took up ſtones to ſtone him, even in the temple: John viii. 59, alſo, John x. 31. on ſuch occaſions they did not ſtay for the uſual formalities; but followed the firſt tranſports of their paſſion. This they called, the judgment of zeal.

We are told, that after a man had been ſtoned, they faſtened his body to a ſtake, by tying his hands together, and ſo left him till ſun-ſet; then they untied him, and buried him in the Vale of Carcaſſes, with the ſtake to which he had been faſtened. This they ſay, was done only to blaſphemers and idolaters; but it would be very difficult to prove this practice by Scripture.

STORAX. Jacob ſent a preſent of Storax to the governor of Egypt, whom he did not then know to be his ſon Joſeph. Gen. xliii. 11. The Hebrew is נכאות nechoth. LXX Θυμίαμα, perfumes, Aquila Aquila ϛοραϰα, Storax. St. Jerom has followed Aquila. Storax is a plant, which in magnitude and form is ſomewhat like a quince-tree. It yields a liquor alſo called Storax. Its bloſſom is white, and its fruit hangs by long ſtalks, covered with a thin ſkin, round and ſharp at the bottom, of the bigneſs of a large nut, wherein are little kernels, from whence the grain is taken. The Storax is a fat thick liquor, like balm, which has a diſagreeable ſmell. Some do not diſtinguiſh ſtorax from ſtacte, which ſee.

It is not certain that the Hebrew word Nechoth, ſignifies ſtorax. Jerom in Gen. xxxvii. 25. 2 Kings xx. 13. and Iſa. xxxix. 2. renders it by aromata; and in Gen. xliii. 11. by ſtorax. The LXX. always uſe aromata. Others think it to be wax, roſin, ſtacte, balm, or in general, ſomething very valuable.

STORK, Ciconia, a bird well known. The Hebrews call it chaſeda, or chaſida, חסד חסידה Miſericordia, which ſignifies pity or mercy; probably, becauſe of the tenderneſs it ſhews to its parents, which it never forſakes; but feeds, and defends, even to death. The ſtork is a bird of paſſage, Jer. viii. 7. The ſtork in the Heaven knoweth her appointed times, and the turtle, and the crane, and the ſwallow obſerve the time of their coming. Jerom and the Septuagint ſometimes render the Hebrew word Chaſidah by Herodius, the heron, and ſometimes by pelican, or kite; but interpreters are pretty well agreed, that it ſignifies a ſtork. Moſes places it among unclean birds. Lev. xi. 19. Deut. xiv. 18. The Pſalmiſt ſays, civ. 17. As for the ſtork, the fir-trees are her houſe. In our parts of the world, ſhe rather makes her neſt on ſome high tower, or the top of a houſe; but in Paleſtine, where the coverings of their houſes are flat, ſhe builds in high trees. Profane authors ſpeak much of the piety of the ſtork, and its gratitude to its parents. St. Ambroſe ſays, in Hexaemer. lib. v. cap. 16. that for this reaſon the Romans called it avis pia; and Publius, apud Petron. (Vide Bochart. de animal. ſacr. tom. ii. lib. ii. cap. 29.) calls it pietatis cultrix:

Ciconia etiam grata, peregrina, hoſpita,
Pietatis-cultrix, gracili-pes, crotaliſtria.

The ſtork has beak and legs long and red; it feeds on ſerpents, frogs, and inſects: Its plumage would be wholly white, but that the extremity of its wings, and ſome ſmall part of its head and thighs are black: It ſits for the ſpace of thirty days, and lays but four eggs. Formerly they would not eat the ſtork, but at preſent it is much eſteemed, for the delicacy of its fleſh. They go to ſouthern countries in Auguſt, and return at Spring. Bellonius ſays, that when they go away, that ſtork which comes laſt to the place of rendezvous is killed on the ſpot. Vide MISCELLANIES, Plate IV. No. 1.

Beſides the common ſtork which we have now deſcribed, there is a black one, which the Egyptians call Ibis; which is not a bird of paſſage, but continues always in that country. Vide FRAGMENTS, No. CXXVIII. and Plate.

STRANGE Worſhip. The Hebrews thus called all kinds of idolatry, ſuperſtition, all imitation of the worſhip of ſtrange nations and idolaters, all ſacrilege, all religious worſhip that was performed, even to the true God, in a place, and at a time, or even in a manner, different from what he had appointed: All this is called ſtrange worſhip, becauſe it was not conformable to that of the patriarchs and the fathers of their nation.

[STRANGE Wives; foreign women married by Iſraelitiſh men. STRANGE Women, foreign women reſident in Iſrael. Their characters being none of the beſt, many bad things are compared to them.]

I. STRATO; The tower of Strato. See CÆSAREA of PALESTINE. This famous city was built by Herod the Great. It is ſaid, Strato was a Grecian, who gave his name to this place; and tower.

II. STRATO; the tower of Strato; See the Articles of ANTIGONUS and ARISTOBULUS.

STUDIES of the Hebrews. The chief ſtudy of the Hebrews, was always the law of the Lord. We ſee this recommended throughout the Old Teſtament. Exod. xiii. 9. Deut. vi. 7.

But their ſtudy was not confined to their laws, and ceremonies, preſcribed by Moſes: They ſtudied their hiſtories, and even their genealogies; ſo that the children of the Jews, according to the report of St. Jerom, knew at their fingers-ends all the genealogies found in the Chronicles. From their tendereſt infancy, as Joſephus tells us, lib. i. cont. App. they were accuſtomed to ſtudy the laws of God, to learn them by heart, to practiſe them; and they were ſo addicted to them, that they were ready to die for them.

After they had the writings of the prophets, they applied themſelves very earneſtly to know the ſenſe of the prophecies, and to ſtudy the hidden meaning of them. This we ſee by Daniel, who applied himſelf with great care to unfold the meaning of his own revelations, and of thoſe of the prophet Jeremiah, who fixed the time for the compleating the captivity of the people of God. Dan. vii. 28. ix. 2, 3, 22, 23, 24. Vide alſo 1 Pet. i. 11. Jeſus, the ſon of Sirach, is deſcribed to us as a man of true learning, who, after he had with great diligence ſtudied the law, the prophets, and the other books of his nation, applied himſelf to write ſomething that might be of uſe to poſterity. And here is the deſcription that the ſon of Sirach himſelf gives us of a truly learned man, according to the Hebrews. "The wiſe man who addicts himſelf to ſtudy, and who meditates on the law of the Lord, will ſearch out the wiſdom of all the antients, and will make the prophets his ſtudy. He will lay up in his heart the diſcourſes of famous men, and at the ſame time he will penetrate into the myſtery of parables. He will enter into the ſervice of great men, and will appear before the governors of provinces. He will travel into the territory of foreign nations, to prove good and evil among men.—And if it ſhall pleaſe the ſovereign Lord, he will be filled with the ſpirit of underſtanding: and will diſpenſe the words of wiſdom like rain, &c."

In our Saviour's time it appears, that the main ſtudy of the Jewiſh doctors was the traditions. Jeſus Chriſt upbraids them frequently with having forſaken the law of God, and its true meaning, to aſcribe meanings and explications to it, contrary to the ſenſe of the law, and the intention of the law giver. St Paul, who had been bred up in theſe principles, ſhews alſo the abſurdity of them in his epiſtles, always calling back the laws to their original, and to their true ſenſe. But all this was not able to cure the ſpirit of the Jews upon this article; at this day they are more bigotted to their traditions than ever, and they make them the greateſt part of their ſtudy. See SCHOOLS, SYNAGOGUES, TRADITIONS.

STYLE, to write with. The ancients often uſed ſtyles i. e. a kind of bodkins, to write with on tablets done over with wax. Theſe ſtyles were of iron, braſs, or bone, ſharp at one end, and flat at the other, or pointed at one end, and the other formed like a little ſpoon, or ſpatula. The ſharp end was uſed for writing of letters, the other expunged them. The writer could put out, or correct, what he diſliked, and yet no eraſure appear, and he could write anew as often as he pleaſed on the ſame place. On this was founded that advice of Horace, of turning the ſtyle, and blotting out often,

Sæpe ſtylum vertas iterum quæ digna legi ſint Scripturus.

The Scripture alludes to the ſame cuſtom; 2 Kings xxi. 13. I will blot out Jeruſalem as men blot out writing from their writing-tablets. I will turn the tablets, and draw the ſtyle over the wax, till nothing appear, not the leaſt trace.

Iſaiah viii. 1. received orders from the Lord, to write in a great roll of parchment, with the ſtyle of a man, what ſhould be dictated to him. It is aſked, What is meant by this ſtyle of a man? It could not be one of theſe ſtyles of metal: They were not uſed for writing on parchment or vellum, but on wood, ivory, or wax. It is therefore probable, that the ſtyle of a man, in this place, ſignifies a manner of writing, which is eaſy, ſimple, natural, and intelligible. For generally the prophets expreſſed themſelves in a parabolical, enigmatical, and obſcure ſtyle. Here God intended that Iſaiah ſhould not ſpeak, or write, after the manner of the prophets, but as other men uſed to do.

Jeremiah ſays, viii. 8. that the ſtyle of the doctors of the law, is truly a ſtyle of error, and which writes nothing but lies. Literally; The pen of the ſcribes is in vain. They have promiſed you peace, but behold war. Jer. xvii. 1. בעט ברזל בצפורן שמיר. he ſays, The ſin of Judah is written with a pen of iron and with the point of a diamond. It is graven upon the table of their heart; or, engraven on their heart, as on writing tablets. Inſtead of the point of a diamond, the Hebrew ſays, a graver of Shamir. See SHAMIR.

SUAH, סוה, that tears up by the roots; from סחה ſachah, or from נסח naſach: otherwiſe, to deſpiſe.

SUCCOTH, סכות, tents, tabernacles; from סך.

I. SUCCOTH, or Sochoth, the firſt encampment of the Iſraelites, after they left Egypt, Exod. xii. 37. Succoth ſignifies tents; perhaps the Miſchenoth, or Cities of Tents: Exod. i. 11. Our tranſlation renders Miſchenoth treaſure cities.

II. SUCCOTH, a city beyond Jordan, between the brook Jabok and this river. Jacob at his return from Meſopotamia, paſſing over the brook Jabok, ſet up his tents at Succoth, where afterwards they built a city. Gen. xxxiii. 17. Joſhua aſſigned it to the tribe of Gad. Joſh. xiii. 27. Solomon caſt his large brazen veſſels, for the ſervice of the temple, between Succoth and Zarthan. 1 Kings vii. 46. St. Jerom ſays, quæſt. Hebr. in Gen. xxxiii. Succoth was within the diſtrict of Scythopolis. The Jews tell us the name of Darala was afterwards given to Succoth: סכות דרעלה Succoth Darala. Gideon tore the fleſh of the principal men of Succoth with thorns and briars, becauſe they returned him an haughty anſwer, when purſuing the Midianites, Judges viii. 5, A. M. 2759, ante A. D. 1245.

III. SUCCOTH. Booths. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CCVI. page 27.

SUCCOTH-BENOTH, סכות־בנות, the tabernacles of young women, or the tents of proſtitutes; from סך ſoc, a tent, a tabernacle, and בת bath, a daughter.

SUCCOTH-BENOTH. 2 Kings xvii. 30. The Babylonians

Babylonians who were brought into the country of Samaria by Shalmaneſer, or by Eſar-haddon, king of Aſſyria, continued the worſhip of their falſe Gods, and made there Succoth-benoth, i. e. the tents of the young women, or places of proſtitution, where all young women, once in their lives, proſtituted themſelves, in honour of the goddeſs Milytta. Vide Selden. de Diis Syr. Syntagm. 2. cap. 7. Grot. ad 2 Reg. xvii. 20. Herodotus ſays, lib. i. cap. 199. this was thus practiſed at Babylon: all the young women of the country are obliged, once in their lives, to proſtitute themſelves to a ſtranger, in honour of Milytta, or Venus. The rich preſent themſelves before the temple in covered chariots, attended by a great number of domeſtics. They go only out of ceremony, and do not abandon themſelves to ſtrangers, as others do. But the common ſort ſtand before the temple, having crowns on their head, and being ſeparated from one another by ſmall cords, which, however, do not hinder ſtrangers from going in, and chooſing which they like beſt. They throw money in their laps, ſaying, I invoke the goddeſs Milytta for you. The woman muſt not refuſe this money, be it ever ſo little, becauſe it is appointed to uſes which they call ſacred; nor muſt they reject ſuch perſons as offer themſelves. Theſe lead them away, and after they have accompanied them, they may return to their own houſes. Probably, the Babylonians brought with them this abominable cuſtom into the country of Samaria. The Rabbins inſiſt, that Succoth-benoth ſignifies a hen and chickens. Euſebius and St. Jerom, in locis, ſeem to think, it is a city which theſe people built in Samaria. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CCXIII. page 49.

SUD, Σὰδὶ, from סוד ſod, ſecret.

SUD, or Sodi, a river of Babylonia, Baruch, lib. iv. We know no river by this name in that country: it might be ſome arm of the Euphrates. Sodi, in Hebrew, ſignifies pride.

SUDARIUM. This Latin word, according to ſeveral good interpreters, ſignifies a bandage of cloth, wrapped about the head. Theophylact. Œcumen. Druſ. Hamm. Sanct. Lud. de Dieu, in Act. xix. 2. Sudarium comes from ſudor, becauſe this linen was chiefly uſed to receive and dry up the ſweat. We generally tranſlate ſudarium by handkerchief, or napkin; but its proper ſignification, and uſe, was to wipe off the ſweat of the head and face.

The wicked ſervant in the goſpel, Luke xix. 20. returned his maſter's money which he had hid in a napkin; in ſudario; inſtead of putting it out to uſe. And, Acts xix. 12. we read, that they brought their ſudaria of linen, which St. Paul had uſed in wiping himſelf, and which reſtored the ſick to health.

The word ſudarium is chiefly uſed in eccleſiaſtical phraſe, to ſignify the ſhroud in which the body of our Saviour was wrapped in his ſepulchre.

But ſhrouds are not ſudaria properly ſo called: for, John, Καὶ ἡ ὄψις αὐτοῦ σουδαρίῳ περιεδέδετο, expreſsly mentions the ſudarium upon the head of Lazarus, brother to Mary and Martha, and upon the head of Jeſus Chriſt, as they lay in their tombs; xi. 44. xx. 7. Beſides which they were wrapped in bandages, or ſhrouds, &c. after the manner of their country.

SULPHUR. They diſtinguiſh two ſorts of ſulphur; the yellow ſulphur, or common ſort, which is hard, ſhining, friable, eaſily melted, and inflammable. The mines of ſulphur which are at the foot of Mount Veſuvius, and of other burning mountains, or volcanos, maintain the inflammation of the earth in the bowels of theſe mountains. The other kind of ſulphur is called, ſulphur vivum, it is grey, fat, bituminous, inflammable, and ſerves to make yellow ſulphur.

The Scripture ſpeaks of ſulphur in ſeveral places. The Hebrews call it גפרית gofrith, a name which reſembles the Hebrew word גפר gopher, uſed to ſignify the wood uſed by Noah to build his ark. Moſes ſays, that the Lord rained fire and brimſtone upon Sodom and Gomorrah; Gen. xix. 24. i. e. he deſtroyed thoſe cities by ſulphureous and fiery exhalations. And Deut. xxix. 23. he ſays, that God conſumed them by ſulphur and the burning of ſalt. The Hebrews gave the name of ſalt to nitre, bitumen, and ſulphur, which are inflammable ſubſtances. Vide SODOM: and LOT.

Job, or rather Bildad, one of his friends, Job xviii. 15. ſays, by way of imprecation on the wicked, that brimſtone ſhall be ſcattered upon his habitation. That lightning or thunder ſhall fall on his houſe, and there leave the ſcent of ſulphur. Or, that the wicked ſhall be drove out of his houſe, and thoſe who take poſſeſſion of it, ſhould puriſy it by ſulphur. This was a common fumigation for expelling bad air, and for purifying infected habitations. The Pſalmiſt allots to the wicked their portion of fire, ſulphur, and tempeſtuous winds; in a word, thunders and ſtorms: Pſalm xi. 6. Iſaiah, xxx. 33. deſcribing the burning of the Valley of Tophet, defiled by idolatry, ſays, that a great pile is provided for it, and that the breath of the Lord ſhould inflame it as a torrent of ſulphur.

The ſame prophet, Iſa. xxxiv. 9. to give a lively idea of that vengeance which God ſhould take on the wicked nations, ſays, that in his preſence, rivers ſhould be turned into pitch, the earth into ſulphur, and burning pitch; that they ſhould continually burn night and day, and their ſmoke ſhould aſcend to heaven inceſſantly. What ſtrength of imagery is here! Ezekiel threatens the army of Gog with the ſevereſt effects of God's wrath, the plague, blood, violent rains, thunder, fire, ſulphur. Ezekiel xxxviii. 22. We have ſeen a ſhower of ſulphur upon Sodom, and we often find it in the Revelations..

SUN, Sol. Gen. i. 16. שמש ſhemeſh. Gr. Ἡλιος, helios. This great luminary God created at the beginning, to preſide over day; as he created the moon to preſide over night. We think it was the ſun which the Phenicians worſhipped under the name of Baal, the Moabites under the name of Chemoſh, the Ammonites under that of Moloch, the Iſraelites under that of Baal, and the king of the hoſt of heaven. They united with his worſhip that of the moon. They worſhipped on high-places, in groves, on the roofs of their houſes. Moſes cautioned the Iſraelites againſt this worſhip: Deut. iv. 19. Take ye therefore good heed unto yourſelves, —— leſt thou lift up thine eyes unto heaven, and when thou ſeeſt the ſun, the moon, and the ſtars, even all the hoſt of heaven, thou ſhouldſt be driven to worſhip and ſerve them, Deut. xvii. 3, he condemns to death thoſe perverted to worſhip ſtrange gods, the ſun, or the moon. Joſiah, king of Judah, took from the temple of the Lord, the horſes, and burned the chariots, which the kings his predeceſſors had conſecrated to the ſun. 2 Kings xxiii. 11. Job ſays, xxxi. 26, 27, 28. that he looked on it as a very great crime, and as renouncing the God that is above, to kiſs his hand in token of adoration, when he beheld the ſun in all its beauty and ſplendour. Ezekiel ſaw in the ſpirit, in the temple of the Lord, five and twenty men of Judah, who turned their backs on the ſanctuary, and had their faces toward the eaſt, worſhipping the ſun at his riſing. Ezek. viii. 16.

The ſun furniſhes matter to the greater part of the noble ſimilitudes, uſed by the ſacred authors. To repreſent great calamity, they ſay the ſun was obſcured, and the moon withdrew her light, &c. &c. See Iſai. xiii. 10. xxiv. 23. Jerem. xv. 9. Ezek. xxxii. 7. Joel ii. 31. Amos viii. 9.

The Scripture acquaints us with three very extraordinary and miraculous accidents that happened to the ſun. The firſt, was, when it ſtood ſtill at the command of Joſhua. Joſh. x. 12, 13. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CLIV. page 136. The ſecond, when it returned back in the time of king Hezekiah. 2 Kings xx. 11. Vide FRAGMENT, No. II. alſo Nos. . And the third, when it was involved in darkneſs, though the moon was then at full, during the time of our Saviour's crucifixion. Matth. xxvii. 45.

To expreſs a long continuance of any thing glorious and illuſtrious, in Scripture ſtyle it is ſaid, it ſhall continue as long as the ſun. So the reign of the Meſſiah, Pſalm lxxii. 17. And Pſalm lxxxix. 36. that his throne is as durable as the ſun. That under his happy dominion, the light of the moon ſhall be equal to that of the ſun, and that of the ſun ſhall be ſeven times more than ordinary. Iſai. xxx. 26. Jeſus Chriſt is called the ſun of righteouſneſs; Mal. iv. 2.

The compaſs of the whole earth is deſcribed by the expreſſion, from the riſing of the ſun, to the going down of the ſame: or rather, from eaſt to weſt. Pſalm l. 1. cvii. 3. cxiii. 3, &c. To be hung on a gibbet in the eye of the ſun; to be expoſed in the fields to the birds of the air, to the heat of the ſun, expreſſes the utmoſt degree of ignominy. I have beheld all that is done under the ſun, i e. in the world. A woman cloathed with the ſun, and the moon under her feet, is the church perſonified. Rev. xii. 1.

SUPERSTITION, and Superſtitious. Theſe words occur only in the New Teſtament. Feſtus, governor of Judea, ſpeaking to king Agrippa, told him, that Paul had diſputed with the other Jews, concerning matters of their own ſuperſtition. Acts xxv. 19. He ſpoke like a true pagan, equally ignorant of the Chriſtian religion, and that of the Jews. St. Paul, writing to the Coloſſians, Coloſ. ii. 23. recommended to them, not to regard thoſe falſe teachers, who would perſuade them to a compliance with human wiſdom, in an affected humility and ſuperſtition. Laſtly, the ſame apoſtle, ſpeaking to the Athenians, ſays to them; I perceive that in all things ye are too ſuperſtitious. Acts xvii. 22.

The Latin word ſuperſtitio, may inſinuate, either, 1. that a ſuperſtitious perſon adds ſomething to the ordinary worſhip, quod ſuperſtat & ſuperfluit, which is redundant and unneceſſary; ſo that ſuperſtitio may ſtand for a ſuperfluous worſhip: or, 2. that a ſuperſtitious man looks on God and religion as an inſupportable yoke; horribili ſuper aſpectu mortalibus inſtans, as Lucretius ſays, lib. i. The Greeks call it deiſidaimonia, Δεισιδαιμονία, inanis terror deorum, terror of the gods [demons.] A ſuperſtitious man looks on God as a ſevere and rigid maſter, and obeys with fear and trembling. Varro ſaid, the pious man honoured and loved God, but the ſuperſtitious man dreaded him, even to terror. And Maximus Tyrius tells us, that a man truly pious looks on God as a friend full of goodneſs, whereas the ſuperſtitious man ſerves him with ſentiments of a baſe and mean flattery. [I cannot, however help thinking, ing, that the Greek word deiſidaimonia is of a more equivocal import, than our author has ſtated above: as I think Feſtus, a governor newly arrived in his province, would never have paid ſo ill a compliment to Agrippa, a king, of the ſame religion as the Jews, as to call his religion ſuperſtitious: and when Paul at Athens tells the Areopagus, ye are too ſuperſtitious, I am perſuaded he uſes a word capable of a good, as well as of a bad ſenſe; as it would have been highly offenſive to good manners, as well as entirely unneceſſary, to calumniate the religion of his judges, before whom he was pleading: whereas if we take this word in the ſenſe of worſhip, or reverence, Feſtus may ſay, "Paul and the Jews differ in reſpect to ſome objects of ſpiritual reverence;"—and Paul may ſay, "I perceive ye are greatly attached to ſpiritual reverences,"—both without offence to his hearers, and as a very graceful introduction to his following diſcourſe; which propoſed to inform them on the proper object of religious reverence and worſhip.]

SUPH, סוף, Jam Suph, Sea of Ruſhes, the Red-ſea.

SUR, סור, Πύλη τῶν ὁδῶν, that withdraws, or departs; from סור ſur.

SUR. The gate of Sur was in the temple of the Lord. 2 Kings xi. 6. שער סור Porta Sur, called the gate of the foundation, 2 Chron. xxiii. 5. שער היכוד Porta hajeſod, i. e. porta fundamenti.

SUSAN, שושן. See Shuſhan.

SUSANCHITES, שושנכיא, Vulgate, Saſanechei, lily, or roſe, or joy of the lame, or of thoſe that ſtrike; from שושן ſhoſhan, a lily, or roſe, or נכה naca, lame, or that beats or ſtrikes. This word is a foreigner from the holy language.

SUSANCHITES, Suſanchæi. A people that came from beyond the Euphrates to inhabit the country of Samaria, Neh. iv. 9. It is very probable their former dwelling was in Suſiana, or the city and country of Suſes, or Shuſhan.

SUSANNA, Σωτάννα, lily, or roſe, or joy, from שושן ſhoſhan.

I. SUSANNA, daughter of Chelcias, and wife of Joacim, of Judah. Hiſt. of Suſanna. This hiſtory happened about A. M. 3401, ante A. D. 603. She dwelt at Babylon, being carried thither in captivity with her huſband, probably at the ſame time as Daniel; i. e. A.M. 3398, ante A.D. 606. Suſanna was a woman of extraordinary beauty, and of equal piety. The captive Jews at Babylon, aſſembled at Joacim's houſe, for the determination of their affairs; and every year they appointed two judges, for the deciſion of difficulties. Every day about noon Suſanna walked in her huſband's garden. The Judges mentioned above, who were at Joacim's houſe, ſeeing her go into the garden, conceived a violent paſſion for her. Having met in the ſame place, to watch for an opportunity of ſeeing Suſanna, they diſcovered their inclinations to each other, and agreed on a method of ſurprizing her alone in the garden. In which having ſucceeded, they ran to Suſanna, and threatened, if ſhe would not conſent to gratify them, they would accuſe her of meeting a young man in the garden. Suſanna fetched a deep ſigh, and told them; I ſee nothing but danger on both ſides. But it is better to fall into your hands and be innocent, than to ſin againſt the Lord. She then began to cry out as loud as ſhe could, and the old men at the ſame time, cried out againſt her. The people flocked thither, and the two judges told them, they had ſurpriſed Suſanna with her gallant.

The day following, the people being aſſembled at Joacim's as uſual, the two judges ſent to fetch Suſanna, who came, accompanied by her father, mother, children, and family. Then the two judges ſtood up, and putting their hands upon her head, they ſwore, that they had ſeen her in the garden with a young man, and that they had ſurpriſed them in the very act. Suſanna was condemned to death. She addreſſed herſelf to God, and called him to witneſs her innocence.

The Lord heard her prayers; and as ſhe was going to execution, a young man, named Daniel, called out, I am innocent of the blood of this woman. On this they all ſtopped, and Daniel upbraided their credulity. Return, ſays he, and try her over again, for they have borne falſe witneſs againſt her. When the people were come back to Joacim's houſe, Daniel ſaid; ſeparate the elders from each other, and let me examine them. Daniel aſked the firſt; under what tree did you ſee them confer together? he anſwered, under a maſtic-tree. Daniel ſaid to him; the angel of the Lord will quickly ſaw you in two. Then the other elder came, to whom he put the ſame queſtion. He anſwered, under an holm-tree. Daniel told him, the angel of the Lord was ready to cut him in two in the middle. Then all the people ſhouted for joy, and made the two elders ſuffer the ſame penalty as they were going to inflict upon Suſanna; i. e. they ſtoned them.

This hiſtory is not extant in the Hebrew of Daniel, but only in the (apochryphal) Greek. Many have diſputed its canonicalneſs. Julius Africanus wrote againſt the truth of this hiſtory; but Origen wrote a defence of it. Vide Origen. Epiſt. ad Jul. Afric. & Tract. 31 in Matth. And even Jerom, who in ſome places is not favourable to it, and cenſures it as a mere fable, in other places ſays, that not only the Greeks and Latins, Latins, but alſo the Syrians and Egyptians, received it as ſcripture. Apolog. Ruſin. lib. 2. & Præfat in Daniel. [There is an argument drawn from the play upon words in reference to the names of the two trees. Suſan. 54. Ὑπὸ χίνου ——ηδη γὰρ Ἀγγελῳ τῦ Θεῦ χίσει σε μέσον. 58. Ὑπὸ πρίνου——τὴν ῥομφαίαν ἔχων πρίσει σε μεσον. Theſe alluſions, which can only have place in the Greek tongue, have made it ſuſpected, that this hiſtory was never written in Hebrew. But it is not impoſſible, but that the antient Greek tranſlator, finding theſe alluſions in the Hebrew, may have imitated them in Greek by ſubſtituting one tree for another. N.B. This mode of reaſoning renders the whole copy uncertain; and it is unwiſe to admit as canonical ſcripture, a work liable to ſuch exceptions.]

Several interpreters have thought, that the two judges, convicted by Daniel, were Ahab and Zedekiah, falſe prophets of Babylon, whom Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon roaſted in the fire, becauſe they committed villainy in Iſrael, and have committed adultery with their neighbours' wives. Jer. xxix. 21. 22. But the hiſtory ſtates that Suſanna's accuſers were condemned and put to death, 1. by the people, 2. very probably, by ſtoning, as Suſanna was to have been.

II. SUSANNA, an holy woman who attended on Jeſus Chriſt with ſome others, who adminiſtered to him of their ſubſtance, and to his diſciples alſo, Luke viii. 2, 3. This was commonly practiſed by pious women among the Jews, and no one took offence at it. Hieron. ad Matth. xxvii. Beda, Strabo, &c. We know nothing more of this Suſanna; for all that has been ſaid of her arrival at Marſeilles, with Lazarus, Martha, and Mary, is very apocryphal.

SUSI, סוסי, horſe, or ſwallow; from סוס ſus: otherwiſe, moth; from סס ſas.

SUSI, father of Gaddi, of Manaſſeh, Num. xiii. 11.

SWALLOW. Mention is made of this bird in Iſaiah xxxviii. 14. Like a crane or a ſwallow, ſo did I chatter. And Jeremiah viii. 7. the ſtork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times, and the turtle, and the crane, and the ſwallow obſerve the time of their coming. It is related in Tobit, ii. 11. that the dung falling from a ſwallow's neſt into the eyes of this holy man, occaſioned the loſs of his ſight. The Hebrew word סיס Sis, tranſlated a ſwallow, according to ſome interpreters, ſignifies a crane; Pagn. Munſter. Buxtorf. Mercer. Rab. Salom. & Kimchi. and that which is joined with it in Iſaiah and Jeremiah, עגור hagur, according to them ſignifies a ſwallow. The Chaldee and Symmachus tranſlate this paſſage of Iſaiah, I cried as the ſwallow which is taken. And Aquila, like the ſwallow (ſus סוס) Agur.

The Septuagint, the Vulgate, and Bochart, think that ſis ſignifies a ſwallow. But the Septuagint, the Vulgate, and Symmachus took hagur for a verb. Bochart thinks it ſignifies a crane. It is plain from Jeremiah, that theſe two words ſignify different birds. The reaſons in proof that ſis ſignifies a ſwallow, are, 1 The antient Greek interpreters took it in this ſenſe. 2 The name ſis anſwers to the cry of the ſwallow; and the goddeſs Iſis, they ſay, was changed into this bird. 3. The ſwallow is a plaintive bird, and a bird of paſſage, which perfectly ſuits the meaning of Iſaiah and Jeremiah. In Tobit, it is univerſally agreed to ſignify a ſwallow.

This bird is black, with ſpots of a dirty black under her belly; in flight is very ſwift: appears in ſummer and is gone in winter. It is thought it paſſes into hotter climates. It is called Chelidon in Greek, whence comes the name of the herb Chelidone, in Engliſh, celandine, or ſwallow-wort, becauſe it is pretended, that with this herb the ſwallow opens the eyes of her young ones, though they ſhould even be made blind.

She is ſaid to breed twice a year; once in each climate. Their chief food is inſects. They commonly make their neſts in chimneys, and every year return to the ſame place. Their neſts are made of clay or dirt, with little bits of ſtraw or chaff. Bellon ſays, that its eye ſight is ſo quick, that it perceives a fly at the diſtance of a thouſand paces. There are alſo ſea-ſwallows. I do not find that Moſes declares the ſwallow, clean or unclean.

SWINE, an animal well known; the uſe of which was forbid the Hebrews. Lev. xi. 7. Deut. xiv. 8. They had the fleſh of this animal in ſuch deteſtation, that they would not ſo much as pronounce its name, but inſtead of it, that beaſt, that thing. Porphyry affirms, de abſtin. animal. that the Hebrews and Phenicians abſtained from pork, becauſe there was none in their country. It had been much more congruous to have ſaid, there was none, or but little, becauſe they bred no hogs, by reaſon of their abhorrence: for we know from the goſpel, that there were herds of ſwine in our Saviour's time. Matth. viii. 30, 31. Mark v. 11. Luke viii. 32, 33. xv. 15. Some antient authors thought, Plut. Arch. Sympoſ. lib. 4. that the Jews forbore eating the fleſh of this animal, only becauſe they paid divine honours to it;

Judæus licet & porcinum numen adoret,
Et Cilli ſummas advocet auriculas.
PETRON. SATIRIC. FRAGMENT.

But this calumny is ſo notorious, as not to deſerve confutation. Profane authors rallied them on this abſtinence, ſaying, that the Jews would as ſoon kill a man as a hog;

Nec diſtare putant humanâ carne ſuillam.
JUVENAL. SATIR. 15.

Auguſtus ſaid once (apud Macrob.) that it were better to be Herod's hog than his ſon; becauſe this prince had put to death ſeveral of his ſons. Vide HEROD. Beſide the Jews, the Egyptians had ſuch an horror for this animal, that if any one had touched it, though by chance, he plunged himſelf into the river, cloaths and all. They did not allow ſwineherds to enter their temples, nor would have any correſpondence with them. Herodot. lib. 2. cap. 47. The Arabian Scenites eat no pork; and Solinus aſſures us, that if hogs were but carried into their country, they would preſently die. When Adrian rebuilt Jeruſalem, he ſet up the image of a hog in bas relief on the gates of the city, to keep the Jews away from it, and to expreſs the greater contempt for that people. Vide FRAGMENTS, No. CCIII.

Our Saviour Mat. vii. 6. forbids his diſciples to caſt their pearls before ſwine, leſt, ſays he, they ſhould tread them under foot, and turn againſt you and tear you, q. d. We muſt not raſhly diſcourſe on divine matters, and on certain truths before an audience ill prepared to receive them. This will only provoke them, and expoſe truth to inſult. The ſame is enjoined in Eccleſiaſticus, xxxii. 6. do not ſpeak, but when you find a hearer diſpoſed to receive your doctrine. On this maxim is founded the practice of the antient fathers of the church, not to ſpeak of the myſteries of chriſtianity before pagans: but only to ſuch as are well diſpoſed to revere them. The prodigal ſon, Luke xv. 15, when in diſtreſs, was glad to feed ſwine!

It is ſaid Prov. xi. 22. as a jewel of gold in a ſwine's ſnout, ſo is a fair woman which is without diſcretion. The Jewiſh and Arabian women wore rings in their noſtrils to adorn themſelves. But nothing can be more ridiculous than to put a gold ring, or a jewel, in a ſwine's ſnout.

St. Peter compares ſinners that frequently relapſe into ſin, to a ſwine that as ſoon as he is waſhed, goes again to wallow in the mire. It is a kind of proverb, the hog loves dirt.

SWORD. In the ſtile of the Hebrews, the ſword is often uſed for war. The Lord ſhall ſend the ſword into the land; i. e. war. The mouth of the ſword, is, the edge of the ſword. A man that draws the ſword, is, a ſoldier by profeſſion. The ſword of the mouth, Job v. 15. is, pernicious diſcourſe, accuſations, ſlander, calumny. Their tongue is a two-edged ſword; Pſalm lvii. 4. the tongue of the wicked is extremely dangerous. If he turn not, he will whet his ſword: he will ſend war, or wounds. To lift the ſword upon ſtones, Ex. xx. 25. is to cut them with a chiſſel, or other iron inſtrument. By thy ſword ſhalt thou live, Gen xxvii. 40. thou ſhalt ſupport thyſelf by war and rapine. Nation ſhall not lift up ſword againſt nation, Iſa. ii. 4. ſhall not war, ſmite, wound, or kill. They that take the ſword ſhall periſh with the ſword; Mat. xxvi. 52. they that take up the ſword by their own authority, and would do themſelves juſtice, deſerve to be put to death by the ſword of authority. Or this is a kind of proverb: thoſe who take the ſword to ſmite another, generally ſuffer by it themſelves. The word of God is quick and powerful, and ſharper than any two-edged ſword: Heb. iv. 12. it penetrates even to the bottom of the ſoul, and into the heart and mind. St. Paul exhorts the Epheſians, vi. 17. to arm themſelves with the word of God, as with a ſpiritual ſword; to defend themſelves againſt ſpiritual enemies.

SYCOMORE, a tree called the Egyptian fig-tree; its name is compoſed of Sycos, a fig-tree, and Moros, a mulberry-tree. It is like the mulberry-tree in its leaves, and the fig tree in its fruit. This fruit grows ſticking to the trunk of the tree. It does not grow ripe till rubbed with iron combs, Plin. lib. 13. cap. 7. Hieronym. in Amos. Theophraſt. hiſt. lib. 4. cap. 2. Dioſcorid. lib. 1. after which rubbing it ripens in four days. Amos expreſſes this when he ſays, I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet's ſon; but I was an herdman, and a gatherer of ſycomore fruit, or wild figs. Pliny and other naturaliſts obſerve, that theſe figs do not ripen except they are rubbed; Scalpendo tantum ferreis unguibus, aliter non matureſcit. Jerom on Amos ſays, that without this management the figs cannot be eaten, becauſe of their intolerable bitterneſs; Sycomori agreſtes afferunt ficus, quæ ſi non vellicentur amariſſimas cariculas faciunt.

To make this tree fruitful, they made chinks and cleſts in the bark, through which a kind of milky liquor diſtils. This cauſes a little bough to be formed, ſometimes having ſix or ſeven figs upon it. Theſe figs are ſweet, but not good for the ſtomach; they weaken it, and create a nauſea, but at the ſame time moiſten and refreſh.

Many of theſe Sycomores grow in Egypt: ſome ſo large that three men can hardly graſp them. Vide FRAGMENT, No. LXVII. p. 120. Alſo No. and Plate.

SYENE, סונה, buſh; from סנה ſenah: or enmity, according to the ſyriac.

SYENE, a city on the ſouthern frontiers of Egypt toward Ethiopia, between Thebes and the cataracts of the Nile. Ezekiel, xxix. 10. xxx. 6. places it at the extremity of Egypt, oppoſite to the land of Cuſh. But the Hebrew might alſo be tranſlated, from Migdol to Syene, and to [even at] at] the frontiers of Cuſh. The land of Cuſh was Ethiopia proper, which is beyond, and ſouth of Syene, the utmoſt city of Egypt. Migdol ſignifies a tower; Ezekiel alſo puts Migdol and Syene as the two extremities of Egypt.

The city of Syene itſelf, was well known to the antients, who ſpeak of it as the fartheſt city of Egypt towards Ethiopia. Strab. Ptolom. Herodot. Plin. Stephan. alii. Pliny ſays it is in a peninſula on the eaſtern ſhore of the Nile; that it is a mile round, and that it had a Roman garriſon. Strabo lib. 17. ſays, that there were three Roman cohorts, to hinder the irruptions of the Ethiopians. He adds, that in this city there was a well, wherein the ſun ſhone direct to the bottom; and that here the ſun made no ſhadow at noon, when in the ſummer ſolſtice. Pliny alſo ſpeaks of it; lib. 1. cap. 73. Solſtitii die medio nullam umbram jaci. And Lucan;

------Umbras nuſquam flectente Syene.
LUCAN. lib. 2. v. 587.

SYENE is ſmall but well peopled. The mountains of Alaki, and of Giannadel, where are the cataracts of the Nile, incloſe its territory. The firſt of theſe mountains is to the eaſt, the other to the weſt. They reckon five ſmall days journeys from this city to that of Cous which is more northerly, in long. 61 deg. 30 min. lat. 24 deg. 10 min. They are both in the ſecond climate. D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient.

SYLVANUS, that loves the woods; from Sylva, a foreſt. See SILAS.

SYMBOL, from the Greek Symbolon, a mark or pledge, which is agreed upon as a diſtinguiſhing ſign. E. gr. Perſons united by the bands of friendſhip or of hoſpitality, when they viſited one another, they carried their ſymbols or pledges, to ſhew they were of ſuch a family, ſuch a ſociety, ſuch a place, or ſuch a religion. Symbolum alſo ſignifies what each contributed to a feaſt or entertainment, made at a common charge, whether each gave money, or brought wine, or proviſions: [ſomewhat analogous to our idea of "clubbing" for payment.] We find the word ſymbolum in this ſenſe Prov. xxiii. 20. 21. LXX.

In eccleſiaſtical language, that is called ſymbol which forms the matter of the ſacraments, that which is a ſubject of the ſenſes, and oppoſed to what is repreſented by it. In the Euchariſt, bread and wine are the ſymbols of the body and blood of Jeſus Chriſt: and in baptiſm, water is the ſymbol of this ſacrament, and of inward purification, &c. See Suicer, Theſ. Eccle.

SYMMACHUS, a famous tranſlator of the Old Teſtament, out of Hebrew into Greek. He was a Samaritan by birth, and lived at the end of the ſecond century, under the emperor Severus. Epiphanius, de ponder & menſur, ſays, that he was in good repute in his own country, and held a conſiderable rank among the learned men of Samaria. But having an ambition of becoming their head and maſter, and being diſguſted at their refuſal of this dignity, he left Samaria, and ſettled among the Jews. He even ſubmitted to the reception of a ſecond circumciſion from them; for the animoſity between the Jews and Samaritans was carried ſo far, that they obliged proſelytes to be re-circumciſed.

After this, Symmachus embraced chriſtianity, among the ſect of the Ebionites. Euſeb. hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. vi. cap. 17. & Demoſt. Evang. lib. vii. cap. 1. In defence of theſe heretics againſt the catholics, he undertook a new tranſlation of the books of the old teſtament into Greek: wherein he gives to the text the moſt favourable turn he can, conformably to their notions; who acknowledged Jeſus Chriſt as the Meſſiah, but not as God; or the ſon of God. They likewiſe denied a future judgment; and maintained other errors.

The method of Symmachus in his tranſlation, is very different from that of Aquila, or of Theodotion. Aquila endeavours, in a cloſe and ſervile manner, to give the literal ſenſe, and ſignification, of every word of the text, not much regarding the coherence of the diſcourſe; ſo that his tranſlation was rather a dictionary for the literal ſignification of the terms, than a tranſlation expreſſing the ſenſe of the text. Symmachus, on the contrary, endeavoured to expreſs what he thought to be the general meaning of the text rather than the power of every word. Theodotion keeps the medium between Aquila and Symmachus; his verſion does not appear to be a paraphraſe, like that of Symmachus; nor a dictionary, like that of Aquila. He endeavours to give the ſenſe of the Hebrew text in Greek words anſwering to the Hebrew, ſo far as the different genius's of the two languages would allow.

We have now only ſome fragments of the verſions of theſe antient tranſlators, which have been gathered together by the great pains of Montfaucon, in two volumes, folio, intitled, The Hexapla of Origen.

The ancient fathers have ſpoken of certain heretics, called Symmachians; whom ſome think to have been the diſciples and followers of this Symmachus, the tranſlator.

SYMPHONY. This word is taken for the agreement of ſeveral voices, for a concert of ſeveral inſtruments, or for a particular ſort of inſtrument. St. Luke xv. 25. Vulgate. takes it in the the firſt ſenſe, when he ſays, that the brother of the prodigal ſon, returning out of the field, heard in his father's houſe a concert of inſtruments, or voices: Audivit ſymphoniam & chorum. Daniel iii. 5, 7, 10, 15. takes it in the ſecond ſenſe, for an inſtrument of muſic, which was a viol, or ſome inſtrument approaching thereto. [How this Greek word might get into Daniel, which has been made an objection againſt the authenticity of this book, Vide DULCIMER, alſo FRAGMENT, No.]

SYNAGOGUE. This Greek word ſignifies either an aſſembly, or the place wherein an aſſembly meets. In the firſt ſenſe it is commonly underſtood of the church of the Jews, compared, or oppoſed, to that of the Chriſtians. St. John, Rev. ii. 9. iii. 9. ſpeaking of heretics calls them the ſynagogue of Satan.

The Vulgate, gives the name of princes of the ſynagogue, or of the aſſembly, principes ſynagogæ, to thoſe leading Jews who had the precedence among the people in the deſart. Exod. xxxiv. 31. Numb. iv. 34. xvi. 2. &c. We find alſo, Synagoga Deorum, Synagoga potentium, Synagoga peccatorum, Synagoga populi, Synagoga ſuperborum, for the aſſembly of the judges, of great men, of ſinners, of the people. Mention is made, 1 Macc. ii. 42. of the ſynagogue of the Aſſideans, who probably were a kind of ſect, or order of the Jews, which made a profeſſion of the ſtricteſt piety.

Synagogue commonly ſignifies a building where the Jews aſſembled, to pray, to read, and to hear the reading of holy books, and other inſtructions. It is often mentioned in the Goſpels, and the Acts, becauſe Jeſus Chriſt, and his apoſtles, generally frequented and preached in the ſynagogues. The origin of theſe ſynagogues is not very well known, and many learned men have thought them a late inſtitution. Yet we ſee ſome hints of them in the time of Eliſha. Devout perſons in the time of this prophet aſſembled to him on the ſabbath-day, to hear the law read to them. 2 Kings iv. 23. Judith paſſed the night in prayer, in a place of prayer at Bethulia. Judith vi. 21. Her hiſtory is commonly placed under Manaſſeh. The Pſalmiſt deſcribing the havoc made by the army of Nebuchadnezzar in Jeruſalem, ſays, They have burned up all the ſynagogues of God in the land. Pſalm lxxiv. 8. מועדי אל. The captive Jews beyond the Euphrates aſſembled to Ezekiel, to hear the word of the Lord. Ezek. xxxiii. 31. Mordecai made all the Jews of Shuſhan reſort to the place of prayer, to recommend to God the undertaking of queen Eſther. Eſth. iv. 16. The author of the third book of Maccabees, who lived under Ptolemy Philopater, king of Egypt, long before the perſecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, ſays, that the Jews of Egypt being delivered from the danger that threatened them, ſet up a place of prayer near Alexandria. 3 Mac. c. ult. See PROSEUCHA.

At the time of the Maccabees, ſynagogues became ſo frequent in Iſrael, that they were in almoſt every place in the country. Maimonides ſays, in Tephilla, cap. 11. ſect. 1. that wherever any Iſraelites were, they built a ſynagogue. It is affirmed, that in the city of Jeruſalem alone, were nearly five hundred. Every trading fraternity had one of their own, and even ſtrangers built ſome for their own nation. Hence, in the Acts of the Apoſtles, vi. 9. we find the ſynagogues of the Alexandrians, of the Aſiatics, of the Cilicians, of the freed-men, of thoſe of Cyrene, erected for ſuch inhabitants of theſe cities, or nations, as ſhould be at Jeruſalem.

A Synagogue was a public edifice, within, or without, the city, and generally in an elevated place. The Jews would have them more eminent than the other buildings, or private houſes; Generally they were covered, and thereby diſtinguiſhed from the Proſeuchas, which were commonly in the fields, and open. In the midſt of the ſynagogue was a deſk or pulpit, on which the book, or roll, of the law was read very ſolemnly. There likewiſe he ſtood who intended to harangue the people. At the higheſt part of the ſynagogue, towards the eaſt, and over againſt the door, which is always weſt, as far as can well be, is the cheſt or preſs, wherein the book, or roll, of the law is kept, wrapped up in fine embroidered cloth. The women are diſtinct from the men, and ſeated in a gallery incloſed with lattices; ſo that they may ſee and hear, but not be ſeen.

Every ſynagogue has its chief, or perhaps ſeveral chiefs and officers, according to the circumſtances of places. One is called chazan, who appoints and chants the prayers. Another who keeps the keys, and is a kind of church-warden, they call ſciamas, or ſervant. Leo of Modena, Ceremonies of the Jews, part i. cap. 10. The prince of the ſynagogue in the goſpel, called Archiſynagogus, angel of the ſynagogue, [ruler of the ſynagogue, Eng. Tr.] or ſage, in Hebrew, Chacham, preſides in the aſſemblies, and in judicial affairs which are ſometimes here decided, againſt thoſe who have given any ſcandal, and tranſgreſſed the law in any important matter; They inflict upon the guilty perſon thirty-nine ſtrokes with a whip. The ſame preſidents invite thoſe to ſpeak in the ſynagogue, whom they think capable of it, and offer that honour to ſtrangers, if there be any who ſeem to have the gift of ſpeaking. Thus our Saviour often ſpoke in the aſſemblies; and St. Paul, being at Antioch of Piſidia, was invited by the princes of the ſynagogue, to addreſs them for their edification. Luke iv. 16. Matth. iv. 23. ix. 35. & paſſim. Acts xiii. 13, 14, 15.

The word Synagoga, as ſignifying a place of aſſembly, is uſed alſo to expreſs a Chriſtian church. For example, St. James ſays, ii. 2. If there come unto your aſſembly (or ſynagogue) a man with a gold ring, &c. And St. Paul ſays, Heb. x. 25. Not forſaking the aſſembling of yourſelves together, as the manner of ſome is, where the Greek reads ſynagogue.

The Synagogue of the freed-men, Synagoga Libertinorum, Acts vi. 9. was, according to many interpreters, that of thoſe Jews, who having been led captive by Pompey and by Soſius, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiv. cap. 7, 8, and de Bello. lib. i. cap. 5. and Antiq. lib. xiv. cap. 28. had afterwards recovered their liberty, and were retired to Jeruſalem, when Tiberius drove away the Jews out of Italy. Tacit. Annal. lib. ii. Sueton. in Tiberio, cap. 36. and Joſeph Antiq. lib. xvi. cap. 5. Others will have it, that St. Luke wrote Lybiſtinorum, and not Libertinorum; and that the Lybiſtini were people of Libya, in Africa, near Egypt. Libertini is not a Greek word, and Lybiſtini would better ſuit with the tenor of St. Luke's diſcourſe; but the manuſcripts are not favourable to this conjecture.

The Jewiſh authors give this general rule for the conſtruction of ſynagogues. Wherever there are ten Batelnim, a ſynagogue ought to be built. Magilla cap. 1. § 3. Maimon. in Tephill. Vide & Lightfoot, Harm. cap. 17. and in Matth. iv. 23. The ſignification of the word Batelnim has been controverted. Buxtorf thinks them to be perſons receiving a ſtipend for duly aſſiſting at divine ſervice, that there may be always ten perſons, at leaſt, to aſſemble together. Lightfoot imagines them to have been miniſters and officers of the ſynagogue. But the moſt probable opinion is, that they were perſons of a mature age, free, and competent to aſſiſt conſtantly at the ſervice, at leaſt, two days a week, beſide the ſabbath. So that always on theſe days there were preſent that number of aſſiſtants, without which the ſervice would not be performed. The three days of aſſembling were Monday, Friday, and Saturday, not including days of faſting, or ſolemn feſtivals.

The great ſynagogue. The Hebrews, David Ganz, Chronic. Buxtorf. Tiberius, cap. 10. give this name to a company of ſix-ſcore perſons, at the head of whom was Ezra, or Eſdras, at their return from the Babyloniſh captivity. This company was chiefly eſtabliſhed for two reaſons: Firſt, To take care of reſtoring the obſervation of the law, according to the ancient and approved practice, before the captivity. Secondly, To collect all the ſacred books into a body, and to compoſe thereof the canon of the holy Scriptures; and to give an exact and correct edition of them. They pretend, that after Eſdras, Daniel and his three companions Shadrach, Meſhech, and Abednego, held the firſt places; that Simon the Juſt was at the lower end of the aſſembly, and that all theſe were cotemporary.

But this diſpoſition cannot be ſupported by chronology; for Simon the Juſt lived long after Daniel and Eſdras. What appears to be moſt certain in this affair, is, that Eſdras began the reformation now mentioned; that it was continued by others of the wiſer and more enlightened Jews, and was at laſt compleated, eſpecially as to the canon of Scripture, under Simon the Juſt, who was made high-prieſt A. M. 3702, ante A. D. 302; and who died A. M. 3711.

SYNTYCHE, Συντύχη, that ſpeaks or diſcourſes: from the Greek συντυγχάνω, to converſe.

SYNTYCHE, mentioned by St. Paul, Phil. iv. 2. was a woman illuſtrious for virtue and good works, and who was, as it were, at the head of the church at Philippi, with another woman called Euodias. Chryſoſt. Theodoret. Eſt. Zanch. Menoc. &c. in Philipp. iv. It is thought St. Paul ſpeaks of them when he ſays, Help thoſe women which laboured with me in the Goſpel. But ſome difficulties had happened between them, and therefore the apoſtle exhorts them to be of the ſame mind in the Lord. We know no particulars of their lives, Syntyche is ſet down July 22, and the martyrologies inſinuate, that her body reſts at Philippi, in Macedonia.

SYRACUSE, Συρακῶσαί, that draws violently, from the Greek, σύρω, and ἀκωσα.

SYRACUSE, a famous city in Sicily, on the eaſtern coaſt of the iſland.

SYRIA, ארם, συρία, Syria, or Meſopotamia, ſublime, or that deceives; from רמה ramah.

SYRIA, in Hebrew, Gen. x. 22, ארם, Aram, from the name of the patriarch who peopled the chief provinces of it. Vide ARAM. The Arameans, or Syrians, poſſeſſed Meſopotamia, Chaldea, and part of Armenia. Syria, properly ſo called, comprehended between Euphrates eaſt, the Mediterranean weſt, Cilicia north, Phenicia, Judea, and Arabia deſerta, ſouth. The Hebrews were were originally Arameans, ſince they came into Meſopotamia, and therefore it is ſaid, that Jacob was a poor Aramean. Deut. xxvi. 5. It is certain, however, that he was not deſcended from Aram, but from Arphaxad, another ſon of Shem. Amos ix. 7. ſeems to ſay, that the Lord brought the Aſſyrians, or Aram, from Kir, as he had brought the Philiſtines from Caphtor. i. e. that Aram, or his poſterity, came to dwell in Syria, when they quitted the neighbourhood of the river Cyrus, in Armenia.

Syria of the two Rivers, or Meſopotamia of Syria, (Vulgate) or Aram Naharaim. (Hebrew) is comprehended between the two rivers Tigris and Euphrates.

Syria of Damaſcus, that of which Damaſcus was the capital, extended eaſtward along mount Libanus. Its limits varied according as the princes that reigned at Damaſcus were more or leſs powerful.

Syria of Zobah, or Soba, or Sobal, as it is called by the Septuagint, was probably Cœle-Syria, or Syria the hollow. Its capital was Zobah, a city unknown, unleſs it be the Hoba or Hobal, north of Damaſcus. Gen. xiv. 15. See HOBAL or ABILA.

Syria of Maachah, or of Beth-maacah, or of Machati, was alſo towards Libanus. 2 Sam. x. 6, 8. 1 Kings xiii. 20. 2 Kings xv. 29. It extended beyond Jordan, and was given to Manaſſeh. Deut. iii. 14. Joſh. xiii. 4. See MAACHAH.

Syria of Rohob, or Rehob, was that part of Syria of which Rehob was the capital. But Rohob was near the northern frontier of the Land of Promiſe, Numb. xiii. 21. on the way, or paſs, that leads to Emath, or Hamath. It was given to the tribe of Aſher, and is contiguous to Aphek, which was in Libanus. Joſh. xix. 28, 30. and xxi. 31. Laiſh, otherwiſe called Dan, ſituate at the fountains of Jordan, was in the country of Rohob. Judg. i. 31. Hadadezer, king of Syria of Zobah, was ſon of Rehob or Rohob, or perhaps a native of the city of this name. 2 Sam. viii. 3, 12. The Ammonites called to their aſſiſtance againſt David, the Syrians of Rehob, of Zoba, of Maachah, and of Iſh-tob. 2 Sam. x. 6, 8.

Syria of Tob, or of Iſhtob, or of the land of Tob, or of the Tubieni, as they are called in the Maccabees, was in the neighbourhood of Libanus, the northern extremity of Paleſtine. Jud. xi. 3, 5. 1 Macc. v. 13. 2 Macc. xii. 17. See TOB. When Jephthah was baniſhed by his brethren from Gilead, he withdrew into the land of Tob.

Syria of Emath, or Hamath, that of which the city Hamath, on the Orontes, was the capital. See HAMATH.

Syria, without any other appellation, ſtands for the kingdom of Syria, of which Antioch became the capital after the reign of the Seleucidæ.

Cœlo-Syria, or Cœle-Syria, or the lower Syria, occurs in ſeveral places of the Maccabees. 1 Macc. x. 69. 2 Macc. iii. 5, 8. iv. 4. viii. 8. Κοιλη Συρία. Cœle-Syria. Strabo lib. xvi. Ιδίως ἡ πῶ Λιβάνῳ καὶ Ανλιλιβάνῳ ἀφωρισμένη. The word Cœle-Syria, in the Greek, ſignifies Syria cava, or Syria the hollow, or deep. It may be conſidered, ſays Strabo, either in a proper and reſtrained ſenſe, as comprehending only the tract of land between Libanus and Antilibanus; or in a larger ſignification, and then it will comprehend all the country in obedience to the kings of Syria, from Seleucia to Arabia and Egypt.

Syria of Paleſtine, Syria Paleſtina, is read in ſome authors, Herodot. lib. iii. cap. 5. lib. ii. cap. 104. Ammian. Marcel. Hiſt. lib. xiv. and Joſephus, Antiq. lib. x. cap. 7. de Bello, lib. v. cap. 14. himſelf ſometimes comprehends Paleſtine under Syria, becauſe this province was long under the government of the kings of Syria, who appointed governors here.

Syria at firſt was governed by its own kings, each of which reigned in his own city, and territories. David ſubdued them about A. M. 2960, ante A. D. 1044. 2 Sam. viii. 16. On occaſion of his war againſt the Ammonites, to whom the Syrians gave aſſiſtance. 2 Sam. x. 6, 8, 13, 18, 19. They continued in ſubjection till after the reign of Solomon, when they ſhook off the yoke, and could not be reduced again, till the time of Jeroboam II. king of Iſrael, A. M. 3179. Rezin, king of Syria, and Pekah, king of Iſrael, having declared war againſt Ahab, king of Judah; this prince found himſelf under a neceſſity of calling to his aſſiſtance Tiglath-pileſer, king of Aſſyria, who put Rezin to death, took Damaſcus, and tranſported the Syrians out of their country to beyond the Euphrates. From that time Syria continued in ſubjection to the kings of Aſſyria. Afterwards it came under the dominion of the Chaldeans; then under that of the Perſians; laſtly, it was reduced by Alexander the Great, and was ſubject to all the revolutions that happened to the great empires of the eaſt.

After the death of Alexander, A. M. 3681, ante A. D. 323; his empire was divided among his principal officers, who at firſt aſſumed the title of governors; afterwards that of kings.

3682 Seleucus I. named Nicator, or Nicanor, head of the family of kings called Seleucidæ, took the diadem, and the name of king of Syria, A. M. 3682, and reigned forty-two years. He died A. M. 3724, ante A. D. 280.

3724 Antiochus I. ſurnamed Soter, reigned nineteen years.
3743 Antiochus II. ſurnamed Theos, fifteen years.
3759 Seleucus II. ſurnamed Callinicus or Pogon, i. e. bearded; reigned twenty years..
3778 Seleucus III. ſurnamed Keraunus, or Thunder, reigned three years.
3781 Antiochus III. ſurnamed Magnus, reigned thirty-ſix years.
3816 Seleucus IV. ſurnamed Philopater, reigned twelve years.
3828 Antiochus IV. ſurnamed Epiphanes, ſon of Antiochus the Great, and brother of Seleucus IV. reigned eleven years.
3840 Antiochus V. ſurnamed Eupator, two years.
3842 Demetrius I. ſurnamed Soter, ſon of Seleucus IV. reigned twelve years.
3854 Demetrius II. ſurnamed Nicator, reigned ten years, with much perplexity. He had for competitors Alexander Balas, or Belles, and Antiochus Theos, ſon of Balas. Demetrius Nicator died A. M. 3864, and Alexander Balas A. M. 3859, and Antiochus Theos his ſon, having begun to reign under the regency of Tryphon A. M. 3860, was put to death in 3861, and the kingdom was uſurped by Tryphon, who was alſo put to death in 3866.
3864 Antiochus VI. ſurnamed Pius, or Soter, or Sidetes, i. e the fiſher or hunter, brother to Demetrius Nicanor, reigned about ten years, when he was put to death by the Parthians.
3873 Demetrius III. ſurnamed Nicanor, aſcending the throne, had for competitor Alexander Zebina. Demetrius was overcome, and ſlain in 3878, as was Zebina 3882.
3878 Seleucus V. ſon of Demetrius Nicanor, reigned one year in great uneaſineſs.
3882 Antiochus VII. ſurnamed Gryphus, or Philometer, diſpoſſeſſed Zebina in 3882, and reigned eight years in peace. Then Antiochus, ſurnamed Cyzicenus, his brother, roſe againſt him, and overcame him in 3892. They divided the kingdom. Antiochus Gryphus died in 8910, having reigned in all about twenty-nine years; and Antiochus Cyzicenus, his brother, was overcome and put to death the ſame year, by Seleucus, the ſon of Gryphus.
3910 Seleucus VI. ſon of Gryphus reigned but one year. He was conquered and deprived of his kingdom A. M. 3911, by Antiochus Euſebes, ſon of his uncle Antiochus Cyzicenus, and was put to death the ſame year, at Mopſueſta in Cilicia.
3911 Antiochus VIII. ſurnamed Euſebes, reigned in trouble two years. His competitors were Antiochus and Philippus, brothers to his uncle Seleucus, and Demetrius Eucærus, ſon of Antiochus Gryphus, who overcame him, and forced him to take refuge among the Parthians, A.M. 3912.
3912 Thus was Syria divided between Philip and Demetrius Eucærus, of which the latter reigned at Damaſcus. But the Syrians finding the kingdom almoſt ruined by theſe civil wars, ſome would have called in king 3921 Mithridates, others Ptolemy Lathurus, king of Egypt: at laſt they agreed on Tigranes, king of Armenia, who governed Syria eighteen years, from A.D. 3921 to 3939.
3932 to 3939 Antiochus XI. ſurnamed Aſiaticus, and his brother, ſons of Antiochus Euſebes, who ſtill had poſſeſſion of that part of Syria which Tigranes had not ſeized, went to Rome A.M. 3932, to ſolicit the kingdom of Egypt of the ſenate, which they pretended to claim in right of their mother Cleopatra, ſurnamed Selene. But Tigranes having put Selene to death in 3934, Antiochus Aſiaticus loſt all hopes of obtaining Egypt, and returned into Syria in 3935, where he reigned four years, till Pompey having reduced Syria into a Roman province, A.M. 3939, this monarchy became extinct, having ſubſiſted two hundred and fifty-ſeven years.

SYRIA-ZOBAH, ארם־צובה, Syria of Zobah, Heb. Aram-Sobah. Lifted up, and fighting.

SYROPHŒNISSA, Συροφοινίσσα, who is a Syrophenician, red, or purple, drawn to; from the Greek σύρω, I draw, and φοίνιξ, red, palm-tree, or of purple; or perhaps Syro may come from Zur, Tyre, and Phœnix from בנ ענק bene Anak, ſons of Anak, or the Anakim, giants of the land of Canaan.

SYRO-PHENICIA, is Phenicia properly ſo called, of which Sidon, or Zidon was the capital; which having by right of conqueſt been united to the kingdom of Syria, added its old name Phenicia to that of Syria; the Canaanitiſh woman is called a Syro-phenician, Mark vii. 26. becauſe ſhe was of Phenicia, which was then conſidered as making part of Syria. St. Matthew, who wrote in Hebrew or Syriac, calls her a Canaanitiſh woman, Matt. xv. 22. 24. becauſe this country was really peopled by the Canaanites, Sidon being the eldeſt ſon of Canaan. Gen. x. 15.

SYRTIS, Σύρτις, that draws, or attraction; from the Greek σύρω, I draw.

TABATHA, a town or village five miles from Gaza, ſouth. Nicephorus Caliſtus places Tabatha, or Thabaſa, fifteen miles from Gaza.

TABBAOTH, טבעות, otherwiſe Tabboth, rings, jewels; from טבעת tabahath: otherwiſe, plunged, or ſunk; from טבע tabaha: good time; from טוב tob, good, and עת heth, time.

TABBATH, טבת, ταβὰθ, good, or goodneſs; from טוב tob, good.

TABBATH. When the Midianites in the time of Gideon, turned their arms on themſelves, they fled to Beth-ſhittah, to the eminence of Abel-meholah, to Tabbath. Judges vii. 22. Where this Tabbath was is unknown, unleſs it be Thebes, three miles from Scythopolis.

TABEAL, טבאל, good God; from טוב tob, good, and אל el, God.

TABEAL, or Tabeel. The two kings Rezin and Pekah, having declared war againſt king Ahab, reſolved to place on the throne of Judah the ſon of Tabeal, Iſaiah vii. 6. We have no knowledge of this man, [except he be Tab-Rimmon.]

TABEEL, טבאל, Vulgate, Thabeel, from the ſame.

TABEEL. One who oppoſed the re-eſtabliſhment of the temple, Ezra iv. 7.

TABERAH, burning.

TABERAH, or Tabeera, an encampment of Iſrael in the Deſart, Numb. xi. 3. Deut. ix. 22. They named it Burning, becauſe a fire from the tabernacle of the Lord burned a great part of the camp.

TABERNACLE; in Latin, tabernaculum; in Greek Σκήνη, ſcene; in Hebrew אהל, ohel; which properly ſignifies a tent. The patriarchs lived in tents, or tabernacles. In the camp of Iſrael under Moſes, were two tabernacles; the firſt, tabernaculum conventûs, the tent of the congregation, was that wherein the people aſſembled for diſpatch of their ordinary ſecular affairs. The other was, tabernaculum teſtimonii, the tent of teſtimony, or, the tabernacle of the Lord, or ſimply, the tabernacle. Here the Iſraelites, while in the wilderneſs, performed religious exerciſes, offered ſacrifices, worſhip, &c.

This tabernacle, was an oblong ſquare, thirty cubits in length; ten in breadth; ten in height. It was divided into two parts. The firſt was called the ſanctum, or holy place; twenty cubits long, and ten wide. Herein were placed the table of ſhew-bread, the golden candleſtick, and the golden altar of incenſe. The ſecond part was the ſanctuary, or ſanctum ſanctorum, whoſe length was ten cubits, and breadth the ſame. Herein was the ark of the covenant. The ſanctuary was divided from the ſanctum by a curtain, or veil, of very rich cloth, which hung on four pillars of ſhittim wood, covered with plates of gold. The ſanctum was alſo cloſed in front by a veil, hung on five pillars of ſhittim wood, overlaid with plates of gold, their baſes being of braſs.

On the weſt, north, and ſouth ſides, the tabernacle was incloſed by boards, or planks, of ſhittim-wood, overlaid with plates of gold, having baſes of braſs. Theſe boards were eight in number on the weſt ſide, but twenty on the north and ſouth ſides. They were all ten cubits high, and in breadth each was a cubit and half. They were let into each other, by two tenons above, and below. And as the whole of the tabernacle was moveable, and might be taken down, theſe boards were carried by two baſes, wherein were two mortice-holes, by which they were joined together. To ſupport them, each had five golden rings, at proper diſtances; through which were paſſed five poles of ſhittim-wood, covered with plates of gold, which ſupported the whole.

The tabernacle had no window. It was covered by ſeveral curtains; the firſt, on the inſide, was of the colour of hyacinth, ſtriped with purple, ſcarlet, and crimſon. Over this were others of goats hair, which hindered the rain from penetrating, and preſerved the rich curtains. There were none of theſe curtains in front, but only on the ſides, and behind; ſo that at the entrance of the tabernacle the firſt rich curtain afore-mentioned, might be ſeen, which incloſed the whole front. Over theſe veils of goats hair were two others; one of ſheep-ſkins dyed red, the other of ſheep ſkins dyed azure-blue.

Around the tabernacle was a large oblong court, in length an hundred cubits, in breadth fifty. This ſpace was encompaſſed by pillars overlaid with plates of ſilver, with capitals of ſilver, but their baſes of braſs. There were ten pillars to the weſt, ſix to the eaſt, twenty to the north, and twenty to the ſouth. On theſe pillars hung curtains made of twined linen-thread, or net-work, which ſurrounded the tabernacle; except at the entrance of the court, which was cloſed by another curtain of richer materials, having embroidered work of hyacinth, purple, and ſcarlet. This entrance was twenty cubits wide; the curtain was of the ſame length, and was ſuſtained by four pillars overlaid with plates of ſilver, whoſe capitals and baſes were of braſs.

In this court, and oppoſite to the entrance of the tabernacle, or Sanctum, ſtood the altar of burnt-offerings, on which were burned all the ſacrifices. Here was alſo water for the uſes of the prieſts. The laity brought their victims as far as the altar: there they were killed, ſkinned, and offered to the Lord, according to their ſeveral rites and ceremonies.

The entrance of the tabernacle looked eaſt; the ſanctuary weſt; and the two ſides north and ſouth. This tent was, as it were, the dwelling of the God of Iſrael, who was conſidered as reſiding in the midſt of the camp. Round about it were encamped the tribes: Judah, Zebulun and Iſſachar, to the eaſt; Ephraim, Benjamin and Manaſſeh, to the weſt; Dan, Aſher and Napthali, to the north; Reuben, Simeon and Gad, to the ſouth. The tribe of Levi, being entirely employed in ſacred ſervice, were placed all round the tabernacle; Moſes and Aaron were to the eaſt, the family of Gerſhom, weſt, that of Merari, north, and that of Kohath, ſouth.

The prieſts entered the ſanctum every morning to offer incenſe; and to put out the lamps; and every evening they went in to light them again. Every morning and evening they offered a lamb for a burnt ſacrifice on the brazen altar.

The tabernacle of the covenant was erected and conſecrated at the foot of mount Sinai, the firſt day of the firſt month of the ſecond year after the coming out of Egypt, A.M. 2514, ante A.D. 1490.

Spencer has endeavoured to prove, de legib. Hebr. Ritual. Diſſert. 1. lib. 3. that this tabernacle, the ark, the cherubim, &c. were imitations of the worſhip of the Egyptians, and other idolatrous people, to their gods; and that the Lord appointed them to his people out of pure condeſcenſion; deſigning to ſtop their ſtrong inclination for idolatry, by ſanctifying theſe cuſtoms and correcting them; by cutting off all ſuch practices as were impious, ſuperſtitious, or idolatrous, with which the pagans had polluted them.

He undertakes to prove this opinion by a compariſon between theſe and the portative temples of the heathen, and of the tents in which they encloſed what was moſt ſacred and venerable in their religion. It is certain the Gentiles carried their gods with them in their journies, and in proceſſions on the ſhoulders of their prieſts. Apuleius, Metam. lib. xi. deſcribes the pomp, or proceſſion of the goddeſs Iſis. Virgil ſpeaks of the Trojan deities carried by Æneas in his travels:

Errantesque deos, agitataque numina Trojæ.

He founds his opinion on that famous paſſage of Amos v. 25, 26. Acts. vii. 42. Have ye offered unto me ſacrifices and offerings in the wilderneſs forty years, O houſe of Iſrael? But ye have born the tabernacle of your Moloch, and Chiun your images, the ſtar of your god, which ye made to yourſelves. Here, ſays he, is the tabernacle of Moloch and of Remphan, which the Iſraelites carried with them in the deſart, even under the very noſe of Moſes. Therefore to obviate their violent prepoſſeſſion toward viſible gods and their worſhip, Moſes himſelf gives them a tabernacle, an ark, with ſacrifices and rites, but purged from idolatry and ſuperſtition. Vide FRAGMENTS, No. CCXIII. page 52.

TABERNACLE of Moloch. See MOLOCH, and SUCCOTH-BENOTH, and FRAGMENTS,

TABERNACLE, in the ſenſe of a houſe or dwelling. The old teſtament is full of theſe kinds of expreſſions: Iſrael dwelt in peace in their tabernacles: Iſrael return to your tabernacles: every one returned to his own tabernacle. And theſe are to be underſtood literally, in ſome caſes. As when mention is made of the patriarchs, in the land of Canaan before their going into Egypt: their dwellings were only in tents; they built no houſes houſes, and inhabited no cities. The ſame of an army in the field, which abode in tents, or tabernacles. But in a multitude of places, by tent, or tabernacle, a houſe is to be underſtood. The Hebrews having long dwelt under tents before they went down into Egypt, and afterwards in their pilgrimages in the wilderneſs, brought this kind of ſpeaking into uſe. Vide FRAGMENTS, No. CCVI. page 26.

This name is alſo given to the temple of Solomon, though that was built of very ſolid materials; and perhaps becauſe its conſtruction had great reſemblance to the tabernacle of Moſes. So, David ſays Pſalm cxxxii. 3, 7. he would not allow himſelf any reſt, till he had built a tabernacle to the Lord. Pſalm lxxiv. complains, that the Chaldeans or Syrians had defiled the tabernacle of the Lord.

Tabernacle is ſometimes put for heaven, for the dwelling place of the bleſſed. Pſalm xv. 1. Pſalm lxi. 4. I will abide in thy tabernacle for ever. And Pſalm lxxxiv. 1. How amiable are thy tabernacles, O Lord of Hoſts! Theſe paſſages may be alſo literally explained of the temple of Jeruſalem: but it appears from the new teſtament, that the Jews often underſtood heaven by ſuch forms of ſpeech. Our Saviour adviſes us to make friends of the Mammon of unrighteouſneſs that they may receive us into everlaſting tabernacles. Luke xvi. 9. And St. Paul ſays to the Hebrews viii. 2. Jeſus Chriſt was a miniſter of the ſanctuary and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched and not man. And Heb. ix. 11. But Chriſt being come an high-prieſt of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to ſay, not of this building. See Rev. xiii. 6. xxi. 3. St. Paul alſo ſpeaks of his own body, as of a tent or tabernacle; 2 Cor. v. 4. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burthened. And St. Peter 2 Pet. i. 13. 14.; I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to ſtir you up, by putting you in remembrance, knowing that ſhortly I muſt put off this my tabernacle. [RESIDENCE.]

The tabernacle of David that God was to raiſe, Amos ix. 11. Acts xv. 16. is the church of Chriſt, which is the houſe of Jeſus Chriſt, the offspring of David, and heir of the promiſes made to that patriarch.

The feaſt of TABERNACLES; called John vii. 2. Σκηνοπηγία. Scenopegia, i. e. the feaſt wherein they ſet up tents or tabernacles. Vide alſo 1 Macc. x. 21. 2 Macc. i. 8. 18. In Hebrew חג הסכות Chag haſſuchoth, the feaſt of tents, Lev. xxiii. 42, 43, 44. becauſe it was kept under green tents, or arbours, in memory of their dwelling in tents in the paſſage through the wilderneſs. It was one of the three great ſolemnities of the Hebrews: wherein all the males were obliged to appear before the Lord. It was celebrated after harveſt, on the fifteenth of Tizri; which was the firſt month of the civil year, and anſwers to September. Herein they returned thanks to God for the fruits of the earth then gathered in. Exod. xxiii. 16. The feaſt continued eight days; but the firſt day and the laſt were the moſt ſolemn, Levit. xxiii. 34, 35, &c. It was not allowed to do any labour on this feaſt; and particular ſacrifices were offered in it.

The firſt day of the feaſt they cut down branches of the handſomeſt trees, with their fruit; branches of palm-trees, or ſuch as were fulleſt of leaves, and boughs of the willow-trees that grew by water-courſes. The neateſt of theſe branches they carried in ceremony to the ſynagogue, where they performed what they called Lulab, i. e. holding in their right hand a branch of a palm-tree, three branches of myrtle, and two of willow, tyed together; and having in their left hand, a branch of a citron with its fruit; they brought them together waving them towards the four quarters of the world, and ſinging certain ſongs. Theſe branches were alſo called Hoſanna, becauſe they cried Hoſanna! not unlike what the Jews did at our Saviour's entry into Jeruſalem. Matt. xxi. 8, 9. On the eighth day they performed this ceremony oftener, and with greater ſolemnity, than on the other days of the feaſt: wherefore they called this day Hoſanna Rabbah; or, the great Hoſanna. Vide FRAGMENTS, No.

The Jews acquaint us, that every Iſraelite, on the feaſt-day, in the morning, was obliged to bring theſe branches of trees, on penalty of faſting all that day. Then they made a proceſſion round the altar of burnt offerings, ſhaking their branches, and ſinging. At preſent, they carry theſe branches into the ſynagogue, and provide themſelves with oranges and citrons, in countries where they do not grow. They make it a part of their ceremony to take a turn round the deſk in the middle of the ſynagogue, once a day at leaſt; and they eat nothing till they have done this.

The Pſalm cxviii. O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good——Let Iſrael now ſay, &c. ſeems to have been ſung at the feaſt of tabernacles. The Pſalmiſt makes a plain alluſion to it, ver. 25, 26, 27, &c. Save now, I beſeech thee, O Lord, O Lord I beſeech thee ſend now proſperity. Bleſſed he be that cometh in the name of the Lord, &c.

the Hebrew ſays, ana Jehovah, &c. which words the Jews ſing even to this day, when they make a proceſſion about their deſk, at the feaſt of Tabernacles; and which were ſung at our Saviour's triumphal entry into Jeruſalem.

Probably on occaſion of theſe ceremonies, Plutarch ſays, Sympoſ. Prob. 5. the Hebrews kept this feaſt in honour of Bacchus. They enter, ſays he, into their temple, carrying vine-branches and wands in their hands; but what they do there, I know not. He calls theſe feaſts Cladophoria, and Thyrſophoria; and, as in the feaſt of Bacchus, the heathen carried green branches wrapt about their wands, which the Greeks call Thyrſos, he concluded from thence that probably the Jews by the ſame ceremony would do honour to Bacchus in this ſolemnity. Joſephus, ſpeaking of this feaſt, uſes the Greek word Eireſione, which ſignifies a poſy, or bundle, compoſed of a branch of olive wrapt about with wool, upon which were hung various fruits; which a child, whoſe father and mother were ſtill living, uſed to lay at the door of Apollo's temple, (for ſo the Greeks underſtand Eireſione.) But Joſephus explains himſelf, by ſaying, that among the Hebrews it was a wreath, or poſy, of myrtle, willow, and ſprigs of the palm-tree, on which citrons were hung. It is obſervable, that though Moſes does not expreſsly mention myrtle, yet Nehemiah viii. 15. Joſephus, the Rabbins, and the Syriac, notice it as neceſſary in this ceremony; and the Jews underſtand of this tree what Moſes ſays, Levit. xxiii. 40. And ye ſhall take you, on the firſt day, the boughs of goodly trees, branches of palm-trees, and the boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook; and ye ſhall rejoice before the Lord your God ſeven days.

The firſt day of the feaſt, beſides the ordinary ſacrifices, they offered as a burnt offering thirteen calves, two rams, and fourteen lambs; with offerings of flour and libations of wine. They offered alſo a goat for a ſin-offering. Numb. xxix. 12, 13, 14, &c.

The ſecond day they offered twelve calves, two rams, and fourteen lambs, for a burnt-offering, with their offerings of flour, oil, and wine. They offered alſo a goat for a ſin offering; and this beſide the ordinary morning and evening ſacrifices, which were never interrupted, nor thoſe offered by the Iſraelites from private devotion, or for expiation of ſin. Theſe we now mention were offered in the name of the whole people of Iſrael. On the third, fourth, fifth, ſixth and ſeventh days of the feaſt were offered the ſame ſacrifices as on the ſecond day; with this difference, that every day they diminiſhed from the former by one calf; ſo that on the third day they offered eleven, on the fourth ten, on the fifth nine, on the ſixth eight, and on the ſeventh but ſeven. But the eighth day, which was kept with the greateſt ſolemnity, they offered but one calf, one ram, and ſeven lambs for a burnt offering; and one goat for a ſin-offering; with the other accuſtomed offerings, and libations.

We are aſſured, that on the eighth day of the feaſt the Jews preſented at the temple the firſt fruits of their later crop, i. e. of ſuch things as were the ſloweſt in coming to maturity; that they drew water out of the fountain of Siloam, which was brought into the temple, and, being firſt mingled with wine, was poured out by the prieſts at the foot of the altar of burnt offerings. [I ſuppoſe that ſometimes, "blood and water," might flow together.] The people in the mean time ſung theſe words of the prophet Iſaiah xii. 3. Therefore with joy ſhall ye draw water out of the wells of ſalvation. It is ſaid this ceremony was inſtituted by Haggai and Zechariah, at the return from the captivity; and ſome ſuppoſe that Jeſus Chriſt alluded to it, John vii. 37, 38. when he cried in the temple, on the laſt day of the feaſt of tabernacles, If any man thirſt, let him come unto me and drink. He that believeth on me, as the ſcripture hath ſaid, out of his belly ſhall flow rivers of living water. Meaning, according to St. John's obſervation, the Holy Ghoſt, given to thoſe who believed on him. Some commentators think, that at this feaſt were rehearſed the Pſalms viii, lxxxi, and lxxxviii, entitled pro torcularibus, for the preſſes. But Leo of Modena ſays, they rehearſed thoſe Pſalms whoſe titles are Hallelujah, or praiſe God, i. e. cxi. cxii. cxiii. cxvi. cxvii. cxviii. Ceremonies of the Jews. p. 2. cap. 7. Vide FRAGMENT, No. 318, p. 23.

The ſame author tells us, that the modern Jews not having the opportunity of going to the temple, nor of performing the ceremonies preſcribed by Moſes, make each for himſelf, in ſome open place, a bower, or arbour, of branches of trees, hung around, and adorned as much as they can. Here they eat and drink, and ſome even lie; at leaſt, they paſs as much time here as they uſed to paſs in their houſes, and this during the whole eight days of the feſtival. Sickneſs or old age is diſpenſed with from this ceremony; and when it rains very hard they retire to their houſes; for theſe bowers are not made to keep out the weather. Munſter. in Levit. xxiii. Leo of Modena adds, that though Moſes appointed but eight days for this feaſt, yet cuſtom and the devotion of the people have added a ninth. On the the ſeventh day of the feaſt, which they call Hoſanna Rabba, they quit their myrtle and palm branches, and take only thoſe of willow, with which they make ſeven turns round the deſk in their ſynagogue, ſinging the xxixth Pſalm; Give unto the Lord, O ye mighty, &c. The ninth and laſt day, which is an inſtitution of the Rabbins, is called the joy of the law, becauſe on this they compleat the reading of the pentateuch.

TABITHA, טביתה, ταβιθὰ, or Dorcas; wild goat, or kid. The Syriac word Tabitha, ſignifies clear-ſighted.

TABITHA. A chriſtian widow who lived at Joppa, who abounded in alms-deeds, and other good works. She fell ſick A.D. 34, of which ſickneſs ſhe died; after ſhe had been waſhed, as cuſtomary, ſhe was laid out on a table in an upper chamber, in order to be put into her coffin; and it being known that St. Peter was at Lydda, which was not far from Joppa, he was deſired to come over. He ſoon came, and was conducted to the chamber were the corpſe lay: the widows preſented themſelves to him, weeping, and ſhewed the cloaths that Tabitha had made for them. Peter cauſed all to go out, betook himſelf to prayer; and turning to the body ſaid, Tabitha, ariſe: ſhe immediately opened her eyes, and ſeeing Peter, ſhe ſat up. Then he called the ſaints and widows, and preſented Tabitha to them. Acts ix. 36.

TABLES of the law, given to Moſes on mount Sinai; they were written by the finger of God, and contained the ten commandments, Exod. xx. Many queſtions have been ſtarted, about theſe tables, their matter, their form, their number, who wrote them, and what they contained. Some oriental authors, ſays D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. p. 649. make them ten in number, others ſeven; but the Hebrews reckon only two. Some ſuppoſe them to have been of wood, others of precious ſtone. And theſe are divided, ſome ſuppoſing them to have been of ruby, or carbuncle; but the greater part are for carbuncle. Thoſe who make them of wood, ſuppoſe it to have been a wood called Sedr, or Sedras, which is a kind of Lotum, with which the Muſſulmen ſuppoſe their paradiſe to be planted.

Moſes obſerves, that theſe tables were written on both ſides. Many think they were tranſparent, ſo that they might be read through; on one ſide towards the right, and on the other ſide towards the left. Others, that the lawgiver makes this obſervation, becauſe generally, in writing tables, they only wrote on one ſide. Others thus tranſlate, they were written on the two parts that were contiguous to each other: becauſe, being ſhut upon one another, the two faces on which was the writing touched one another, ſo that no writing was ſeen on the outſide. Some think the ten commandments were wrote on each of the two tables; others, that the ten were divided; five on one table, and five on the other. Some make the tables to have been of ten or twelve cubits in length.

Moſes ſays that the tables were written by the finger of God. Theſe words are diverſly explained: ſome underſtand them literally, that they were written by the operation of God himſelf; others underſtand it by the miniſtry of an angel; others of the ſpirit of God, which is ſometimes called the finger of God. See Exod. viii. 19. Luke xi. 20. Others explain it by an order of God to Moſes to write them: this opinion may be maintained from Exod. xxxiv. 27, 28. where, ſpeaking of the ſecond tables which God gave to Moſes, God ordered him to write the words of the covenant which he had made with Iſrael; and a little after, Moſes relates that he had wrote the words of the covenant upon tables. In the ſame chapter it is ſaid, that he hewed two other tables like the former which he had broke. From hence St. Auſtin and St. Cyprian have concluded, that the ſecond tables were not written by the hand of God, though the firſt were. But Moſes in Deuteronomy x. 4. repeating what had been ſaid of the ſecond tables that God gave him, takes expreſs notice that God himſelf wrote them: as he had written the former. Whence it follows, that neither was writ by the finger of God, or that both were ſo written. But it is ſufficient, that God inſpired Moſes, and by his ſpirit enabled him to write them, in order to give authority to his words; and it is needleſs to have recourſe to a new miracle.

TABLE of Shew-bread. See FRAGMENTS, No.

TABLE of the Lord. This was the altar of burnt-offerings: the Lord was conſidered in his temple, as a monarch in his palace: he was ſerved with bread, wine, ſalt, &c. as food: lamps were lighted up for him, perfumes were burnt for him. The name of table more particularly belongs to the altar of Shew-bread, becauſe on that was ſerved bread, wine, and ſalt. Malachi i. 7, 12. complains that the table of the Lord was contemned; becauſe they offered on the altar of burnt offerings ſuch vile animals as had not the qualities required. In the new teſtament, the table of the Lord is that on which was offered the ſacramental ſigns of the body and blood of Jeſus Chriſt: Ye cannot partake of the table of the Lord and the table of devils. 1 Cor. x. 21. Jeſus Chriſt, Luke xxii. 30. repreſents his kingdom kingdom, as a feaſt, where the elect ſit at table; That ye may eat and drink at my table, in my kingdom, and ſit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Iſrael.

TABOR, תבור, choice, or purity; from ברר barar: according the Syriac, bruiſing, contrition. טבור Tabor, with a ט teth, ſignifies the navel.

I. TABOR, or Thabor; a mountain of Galilee, called by the Greeks, Ithaburius, or Athaburius. Euſebius ſays in Θαβὼρ, it was on the frontiers of Zebulun, in the middle of Galilee, ten miles from Diocæſarea, eaſt; it was alſo in the confines of Iſſachar and Napthali. Joſhua xix. 22. puts it on the borders of Iſſachar. Tabor, in Hebrew ſignifies an eminence, and the navel; becauſe this mountain riſes up in the midſt of a wide champaign country, called the valley of Jezreel, or the great plain. Joſephus ſays, de bello lib. iv. cap. 2 ſeu. 5. in Gr. that the height of Tabor is thirty Stadia, and that there is a plain on the top of it, of twenty-ſix Stadia in circumference, ſurrounded with walls, and inacceſſible on the north ſide. Polybius ſays, lib. v. cap. 70. there was a city on the top of it; and Joſephus inſinuates the ſame, when he ſays, that he cauſed the top of mount Ithabirius to be incloſed with walls in forty days, the inhabitants of which had none but rain-water. He adds, that Tabor is ſituated between the great plain and Scythopolis; which cannot be underſtood of the great plain of Jezreel, in the midſt of which Tabor ſtood, but of another great plain, at the foot of mount Carmel, which ſtretches out ſouth, eaſt, and north of this mountain. See M. Reland. Palæſtin. lib. 1. cap. 55.

Tabor ſtands entirely alone, in the midſt of a great plain in which it riſes up like a ſugar-loaf: Eſt autem Thabor mons in Galilæa, ſitus in campeſtribus, rotundus atque ſublimis, & ex omni parte finitus æqualitur, ſays St. Jerom in Oſee v. This is confirmed by travellers, who add, that it makes a very beautiful proſpect, being covered with verdure and green trees; and that on its top is a large plain, where was formerly a city, and where a great monaſtery has been built ſince. This mountain at preſent is entirely forſaken. The city of Tabor is mentioned 1 Chron. vi. 77. Sanutus, ſecret. fidel. cruc. p. 252. ſpeaks of a river whoſe ſpring was at the foot of Tabor, eaſt, and which ran into the Jordan, at the end of the lake of Genezareth. Tabor was oppoſite to mount Hermon, which was on the other ſide of the valley of Jezreel, ſouth. Hermon was deſart and barren, but Tabor was inhabited, and covered with trees and verdure: the Pſalmiſt puts theſe two mountains in oppoſition; the north and the ſouth thou haſt created them; Tabor and Hermon ſhall rejoice in thy name. Pſalm. lxxxix. 12.

Deborah and Barak aſſembled their army on Tabor and gave battle to Siſera, at the foot of this mountain A.M. 2719, ante A.D. 1285. Judg. iv. 6, &c.

Hoſea v. 1. reproaches the princes of Iſrael, and the prieſts of the golden calves, becauſe ye have been a ſnare on Mizpah, and a net ſpread upon Tabor. Theſe ſnares and nets, were probably idols, or ſuperſtitious altars, ſet up at Mizpah beyond Jordan, and on Tabor in Galilee.

When Joſephus the hiſtorian was governor of Galilee, he had the top of Tabor ſtrongly fortified, thinking to make it impregnable. But Veſpaſian ſent Placidus, one of his officers, who by ſtratagem drew down the Jews from the mountain into the open country, where he cut them to pieces. Joſeph. de bello lib. 4. cap. 6. A.D. 67.

It has been believed for ſeveral ages that our Saviour was transfigured on mount Tabor. Matt. xvii. 1. Luke ix. 28, &c. Euſebius expreſsly ſays ſo on Pſalm lxxxix. 12. and St. Jerom in the epitaph of St. Paula, and in his ſeventeenth letter to Marcella. John Damaſcenus, homil. de Transfig. affirms it alſo; and for a long time it was looked on as indiſputable. Yet Maldonatus, Lightfoot, Reland, and others, have doubted it. The old itinerary of Bourdeaux will have it, that our Saviour was transfigured on the mount of Olives. The ancient fathers who have ſpoken of the transfiguration have not named Tabor for it. The evangeliſts do not name it, and the journey they inſinuate our Saviour to have made for this purpoſe, does not ſeem favourable to the opinion that it took place on mount Tabor.

II. TABOR, a city on the ſummit of mount Tabor: aſſigned to the Levites of the family of Merari, 1 Chron. vi. 77. Polybius and Joſephus notice it.

III. TABOR. The plain of Tabor, or the oak of Tabor, 1 Sam. x. 3. cannot be near Tabor of Galilee, but muſt be between Bethlehem and Bethel. It might be tranſlated, the oak of the hill, or eminence. We find elſewhere the word Tabor in an appellative ſenſe, to ſignify an eminence or high place. See Judg. ix. 36. Heb.

Cheſloth-Tabor, or Cheſulloth Tabor. Joſh. xix. 12, 18. called Chaſalus, in Euſebius and St. Jerom, was at the foot of mount Tabor, ten miles from Diocæſarea, eaſt.

TABRIMON, טברמן. good pome-granate; from טוב tob, good, and רמן rimmon, a pome-granate: otherwiſe, goodneſs raiſed; from the ſame טיב tob, and and רמם ramam, elevated: otherwiſe, the navel, or middle, prepared, reckoned, given; from טבור, tabur, a navel, and מנה manah, to prepare, &c.

TABRIMON, or Tabremon, father of Ben-hadad, king of Syria, 1 Kings xv. 18.

TADMOR, תדמור. See Palmyra.

TADMOR, or Thadamor, a city built by Solomon.

TAHAN, תחן, who prays, or is merciful, or gracious; from חנן chanan: otherwiſe, to encamp; from חנה chanah.

II. TAHAN, or Thaan, ſon of Telah, and father of Laadan, of Ephraim. 1 Chron. vii. 25.

TAHATH, תחת, under; from תחת tacath: otherwiſe terror, dread; from חתת cathath: or deſcent, according to the Syriac.

I. TAHATH, or Thahat, an encampment of Iſrael in the deſart. From Makeloth they went to Tahath, and from thence to Tarah, Numb. xxxiii. 26, 27.

II. TAHATH, ſon of Kohath, and father of Uriel. 1 Chron. vi. 24.

III. TAHATH, ſon of Bered, and grandſon of Ephraim. 1 Chron. vii. 20.

TAHAPANES, תחפנחס, or Taphnis, ſecret temptation, hidden flight, covered ſtandard, from חפף chaphaph, covered, hidden, and נס nes, temptation, flight, ſtandard. This word is Egyptian.

TAHAPANES, Tahpanhes, or Taphnis, a city of Egypt. Jeremiah ſpeaks of it, and we are told he was buried there. Jer. ii. 16. xliii. 7, 8, 9. xliv. 1. xlvi. 14. It is thought to be the ſame as Daphnæ Peluſiæ, ſixteen miles from Peluſium, ſouth, according to the itinerary of Antoninus. Jeremiah, and the Iſraelites with him retired to Taphnis; where the Lord revealed to Jeremiah that Nebuchadnezzar ſhould take this city, and ſhould ſet up his throne in the very place where the prophet had hid ſtones. Jer. xliii. 7, 8, 9. This was then a royal city. Herodotus ſays, lib. ii. cap. 30. that in the time of Pſammiticus, king of Egypt, there was a garriſon at Daphnæ Peluſiæ, againſt the incurſions of the barbarians.

TAHPENES, תחפניס, τεχεφενὴς, ſtandard, flight, temptation, ſecret; from נוס nus, flight, or נסה naſah, to tempt, or נסס naſas, ſtandard, and חפף chaphaph, hidden, covered.

TAPHENES, or Taphne. Pharaoh king of Egypt took ſuch affection to Hadad, ſon of the king of Idumea, who had ſought refuge with him, that he gave him to wife the ſiſter of his queen Tahpenes. 1 Kings xi. 19, 20.

TALED, a ſort of habit worn by the Jews chiefly when they repeat their prayers in the ſynagogue: inſtead of that ſquare garment they wore heretofore, to which Moſes had appointed that they ſhould faſten borders of blue to the four quarters, and fringes, or ribbands, along the borders. Numb. xv. 38. Deut. xxii. 12. But at preſent, that they may not be expoſed to deriſion, for the too great ſingularity of their dreſs, they content themſelves with wearing a ſquare piece of cloth underneath their waiſtcoats, with four tufts at the four corners; and when they meet in the ſynagogue to prayers, they cover their heads with a ſquare woolen veil, which has four tufts at the four corners. This veil they call thaled, or taled. Leo of Modena, Ceremonies of the Jews, page 1. chap. 5. 11.

TALENT, talentum, in Hebrew, ככר, chickar. The Hebrew talent [of ſilver] was equivalent to 3,000 ſhekels, Exod. xxxviii. 24, 25, 26. and conſequently was the weight of 1500 Roman ounces, or twenty-five Roman pounds; and of Engliſh weight, 114 pounds and 15 pennyweights troy. The weight of the Jewiſh talent, according to Dr. Arbuthnot, was 113 pounds, 10 ounces, one pennyweight, and $10\frac{2}{7}$ grains, of our troy weight. And its value in (Engliſh) money was £342. 3*s*. 9*d*. The talent of gold was of the ſame weight, and its value was £54,752. ſterling.

The common attick talent was of the value of £2,400.

Several authors have pretended that among the Hebrews there were two ſorts of talents, a larger, and a ſmaller; the talent of the ſanctuary, and the common talent: The firſt, they ſay, was double to the other. But I cannot find this diſtinction in Scripture.

TALITHA-CUMI, Ταλιθα-κῦμι. Young woman ariſe; from the Hebrew כומי cumi, ariſe, Dan. vii. 5. and the Syriac talitha, young woman.

TALITHA-CUMI. Theſe words Jeſus Chriſt uſed when he raiſed up the daughter of Jairus; they are not pure Hebrew, but Syriac, and ſignify, My daughter ariſe. Mark v. 41. טליתא קומי Τὸ κοράσιον ἔγειραι.

TALMAI, תלמי, θολμὶ, my furrow; from תלם thelem: otherwiſe, that ſuſpends the waters; from תלה thalah, to hang, or ſuſpend, and מים maiim, waters: or heap of waters: from תלל thalal, a heap, and maiim, waters.

I. TALMAI, or Tholmai, ſon of Anak, of the race of the giants, deſtroyed by Iſrael. Numb. xiii. 33. Joſh. xv. 14.

TALMON, טלמון, preparation, or preſent, or enumeration of the dew; from מנה manah, and טל tal, dew: and according to the Syriac and Hebrew, preſent, or preparation of the ſhadow.

TALMON, or Telmon, a Levite, a porter of the temple. 1 Chron. ix. 17.

TALMUD, תלמוד doctrine; from למד lamad, to teach.

TALMUD, or Thalmud. תלמוד Thalmud, from למד to teach. Thus Talmud may be tranſlated by Doctrinale. The Talmud contains the body of the doctrine, religion, and morality of the Jews. They have two works under this name: the firſt, the Talmud of Jeruſalem, the other, the Talmud of Babylon. The firſt was compiled by Rabbi Johanan, who preſided in the academy of Paleſtine fourſcore years, and who finiſhed it, they ſay, in the 230th year after the ruin of the temple; about A. D. 300, for the uſe of the Jews in Judea. This Talmud is ſhorter and more obſcure than that of Babylon; but is older.

It is compoſed of two parts, the Miſhna, and the Gemara. The Miſhna is the work of Rabbi Judah, ſurnamed the Holy, who compiled it about the year 120 after the deſtruction of the temple: A. D. 190. The Miſhna ſignifies the ſecond law, and is a collection of the traditions of the Jewiſh doctors, which Judah gathered into one body, for fear they ſhould be loſt and forgotten, becauſe of the diſperſion of the Iſraelites, and the interruption of their ſchools. About an hundred years afterwards, Rabbi Johanan compoſed the Gemara, q. d. completion or perfection, to compleat and finiſh the Miſhna of Rabbi Judah the Holy. And theſe two works make up the body of the Talmud of Jeruſalem.

The Talmud of Babylon is compoſed of the Miſhna of Judah the Holy, and of the Gemara compoſed by Rabbi Aſa, who lived at Babylon about an hundred years after Rabbi Johanan. He kept his ſchool at Sara near Babylon, where, after he had preſided forty years, he produced his commentary on the Miſhna. He did not finiſh it himſelf, but his diſciples, or children, put the laſt hand to it. This collection is called the Talmud of Babylon, becauſe it was compiled at Babylon, and was chiefly in requeſt among the Jews beyond the Euphrates. The Jews prefer this to that of Jeruſalem, becauſe it is clearer and more extenſive. It abounds with a multitude of fables and ridiculous ſtories, of which however they muſt entertain no doubt, except they would paſs for heretics. They even prefer the authority of the Talmud to that of Scripture, and compare the Bible to water, the Miſhna to wine, and the Gemara to hypocras. They believe the traditions and explications contained in this book are derived from God himſelf, that Moſes revealed them to Aaron, to his ſons, and to the elders of Iſrael; that theſe communicated them to the prophets, and the prophets to the members of the great ſynagogue; who paſſed them down, till they came to the doctors that reduced them to the form of the Miſhna and the Gemara. The Miſhna is written in Hebrew, in a very cloſe and obſcure ſtile; and the Gemara is written in a ſtile compoſed of Hebrew, Chaldee, and ſeveral terms of other languages.

Rabbi Aſa being prevented by death from finiſhing his work, his children or diſciples, who continued it, did not finiſh it till a good while after; i. e. according to Serrarius, Bartolocci, Trigland, and others, till A. D. 500, or 505. Father Morinus proceeds ſo far as to maintain, that the Miſhna could not be compoſed before A. D. 500, and that the Talmud of Babylon was not finiſhed till towards A. D. 700; and the Talmud of Jeruſalem, he thinks is not earlier than the fifth century. And ſurely if the Miſhna itſelf was not before A. D. 500, the Talmud of Jeruſalem muſt be more modern.

The Talmud of Jeruſalem, and the Miſhna, after the Chaldee paraphraſes of Onkelos, and of Jonathan, are the moſt ancient books of doctrine the Jews have, except the ſacred authors. Lightfoot has derived a great deal of light from them, for explaining many paſſages of the New Teſtament, by comparing the expreſſions of the Miſhna with thoſe of the apoſtles and evangeliſts. Maimonides has made an extract, or abridgment, of the Talmud of Babylon, which in the judgment of the moſt knowing, is preferable to the Talmud itſelf: for he omits what he finds there that is fabulous, childiſh, or uſeleſs, and collects only the deciſions of caſes, with which that great work abounds This work he entitled Jadhachazacah, or The Strong Hand. It is a digeſt of the Jewiſh laws, and the moſt compleat that was ever made: not in reſpect of the matter, but the perſpicuity of the ſtile, the method, and regular diſpoſition.

TALMUDISTS, i. e. thoſe who teach the traditions of the Jews contained in the Talmud, have been known by ſeveral names in different times. From the time of the great ſynagogue to the Miſhna, they were called Tannaim, q. Traditioners, from Tanach, which in Chaldee ſignifies, To give by tradition. After the Miſhna to the Talmud, they were were called Amoraim, pronouncing, ſpeaking, dictating, becauſe they explained and dictated to their pupils the explications of the Gemara. After the Talmud, they were named Openers. Laſtly, they obtained the name of Gaoniim, excellent, ſublime. At preſent theſe pompous names are diſuſed: They are contented with the appellation of Rabbi, or Chacham, of which the firſt ſignifies maſter, the other wiſeman.

About A. D. 1236, a Jew of Rochelle, being converted to Chriſtianity, and named Thomas, he went to viſit pope Gregory IX. in the ſecond year of his pontificate, A. D. 1238, and made a diſcovery to him of the errors of the Talmud. The pope ſent them, in thirty-five articles, to the archbiſhops of France, in 1239, with a letter, in which he required them to ſeize the books of the Jews, and to burn all which contained any errors. He wrote in the ſame terms to the kings of France, England, Arragon, Caſtile, Leon, Navarre, and Portugal. In conſequence of this order, twenty cart-loads of Hebrew books were burnt in France.

Gregory's ſucceſſor, Innocent IV. gave commiſſion to his legate Ludes de Chateau-roux, to examine the Talmud, and other books of the Jews; after he had carefully recognized them, he tolerated them, ſo far as they were not contrary to the Chriſtian religion, and reſtored them again: But the legate wrote to the pope, that to tolerate them was the ſame as to approve them; wherefore, May 15, 1248, he juridically condemned them.

The two Talmuds are in print: That of Jeruſalem in one good volume, in folio; and that of Babylon in twelve volumes, in folio, at Amſterdam, and alſo at other places.

TAMAR, תמר, palm, or palm-tree; from תמר tamar, a palm-tree.

I. TAMAR, or Thamar, daughter-in-law to the patriarch Judah, wife of Er and Onan, and mother to Pharez and Zarah. The book of the Teſtament of the twelve Patriarchs ſays, that Tamar was of Meſopotamia, and daughter of Aram, i. e. a Syrian: that Bathſhuah, the wife of Judah, could not endure her, becauſe ſhe was of a nation different from her own, and inſpired the ſame hatred of her into her ſon Er, who, refuſing to uſe Tamar as his wife, was ſlain by an angel of the Lord, on the third day after his marriage. The Rabbins believe that he was ſo very much taken with the beauty of his wife, that he would not have her become a mother, leſt that ſhould impair it. But Scripture ſays, only, that Er was very wicked before the Lord, for which the Lord ſlew him. Gen. xxxviii. 7. Judah then ſaid to Onan, his ſecond ſon, Go in unto thy brother's wife, and marry her, and raiſe up ſeed unto thy brother. Onan took her, in obedience to his father's command; but knowing that the children born from this marriage would not belong to him, but to his brother, he withheld from Tamar the means of becoming a mother: wherefore the Lord ſlew him alſo. Judah ſaid then to Tamar, Continue a widow in thy father's houſe, till my ſon Shelah ſhall be of age to marry; for he was afraid that Shelah alſo might die, as his brothers did. Tamar therefore lived with her father a conſiderable time, yet did not receive Shelah as her huſband. Some years after, when Judah went to a ſheep-ſhearing feaſt of his friend Hirah, the Adullamite, Tamar being informed of it, diſguiſed herſelf as an harlot, and ſat in a place where Judah would paſs. Judah went in unto her, and gave her as pledges, his ring, his bracelets, and his ſtaff.

After ſome months her pregnancy began to ſhew; Judah being informed of it, would have had her burned alive: But when ſhe produced the ring, the bracelets, and the ſtaff, and ſaid ſhe was with child by him who owned thoſe pledges, Judah acknowledged that ſhe was more juſt than he had been. She had twins, of which one was called Pharez, the other Zarah. See their articles. This happened about A. M. 2277, ante A. D. 1727.

The author of the Imperfect Work on St. Matthew, ſays, homil. 1, that the mother of Er, the ſon of Judah, being a Canaanitiſh woman, could not approve of the marriage of her ſon with Tamar, who was an Aramean, or Syrian; ſhe therefore adviſed her ſon to refrain from his wife. Er followed this advice, and God ſtruck him dead. His brother Onan then married her, but Tamar ſtill continued a virgin. Judah, being much troubled at the death of his two ſons, and the diſappointment of his daughter-in-law, the cauſe of which he knew not, continued a long time in tears, and penitence. God being moved at his concern, let him know what had paſſed; and Judah made a ſcruple at marrying Tamar himſelf, though he was apprized that the marriage of neither of his ſons had been conſummated.

The Teſtament of the twelve Patriarchs, intimates that Onan lived a whole year with Tamar, without intercourſe with her. Vide FRAGMENTS, Nos. LXXXII, p. 140. CXXV. p. 39.

II. TAMAR, daughter of Maacah, the wife of David, (and by courteſy reckoned among the king's children: 1 Chron. iii. 9. "David's children, beſides the concubine's children, and their ſiſter TAMAR.") and ſiſter of Abſalom. Her extraordinary beauty was the occaſion of her brother Amnon's falling deſperately in love with her, diſhonouring her, then hating her, and forcibly expelling her. Vide AMNON. Tamar ſtrewed aſhes on her head, rent her cloaths, and covering her face with her hands, went homeward weeping. Abſalom, her brother by the ſame mother, met her in this diſtreſs, took her to his own houſe, bid her be quiet, and leave revenge to him: And in fact, the reſentment of this injury he kept ſo much in his heart, that he killed Amnon ſome time after. See ABSALOM, and AMNON.

III. TAMAR, daughter of Abſalom, was of great beauty. 2 Sam. xiv. 27. Some Greek and Latin copies inſinuate that ſhe married Rehoboam, king of Judah, and was mother to Abijam, the ſucceſſor of Rehoboam: but neither the Hebrew nor Vulgate acknowledge this. We read, 2 Chron. xi. 20. that Rehoboam married Maacah, the daughter of Abſalom; i. e. probably, the grand-daughter of Abſalom by Tamar; for often daughter is put for grand-daughter.

IV. TAMAR, a city of Judea, mentioned Ezekiel xlvii. 19. xlviii. 28. as a ſouthern limit of this country: It muſt be about the ſouthern point of the Dead-ſea. Euſebius ſays, that Thamara is one day's journey from Malis, or Maliſha, going towards Elia or Jeruſalem. He adds, that the Romans kept a garriſon there. Ptolemy, and the tables of Peutinger, ſet down alſo Thamar or Thamara in Judea.

TAMMUS, Thamus, or Thammus, a month of the Jews, anſwering to June, the fourth of the holy year, and the tenth of the civil year. It has but twenty-nine days.

On the ſeventeenth day of this month the Jews faſt, in commemoration of the worſhip of the golden calf, and its puniſhment. Exod. xxxii. In this month they keep a memorial of what happened to Miriam, the ſiſter of Moſes, who was ſtruck with a leproſy for murmuring againſt Moſes. Numb. xii. 1—10.

The Syrians by this word, expreſs in their calendar the month that anſwers to July. The Arabians, the Perſians, and the Turks, uſe it to expreſs the hotteſt part of the ſummer. The Jewiſh aſtronomers, at this day, call the ſun's entrance into the ſign Cancer, Tekupha Tammus, or the revolution of Thamus.

TAMMUZ, תמוז, abſtruſe, concealed.

TAMMUZ, or Thamus, a Pagan deity, thought to be the ſame as Adonis. It is mentioned in Ezekiel viii. 14. מבכות את־התמוז. LXX. Τὸν Θαμμοὺς. Alius, Βδελύγμαΐα, abominationes. Alius, Παροξυσμὸς, irritationes. Mulieres plangentes Adonidem; Hebrew, plangentes Tammuz: women weeping for Tammuz. David Kimchi ſays, that Tammuz was an idol of braſs, whoſe eyes the Pagans uſed to fill with lead; then making a fire in the hollow parts of the idol, the lead would melt, and the image ſeem to ſhed tears.

St. Jerom has rendered Tammuz by Adonis: and there is great probability that this is its true ſignification. Manetho, apud Plutarc. de Iſide & Oſiride. The word Ammuz, which is the ſame as Tammuz, ſignifies abſtruſe, or concealed. The conſtruction of the Hebrew text of Ezekiel gives reaſon to judge, that Tammuz is uſed in an appellative ſenſe. But nothing can agree better with Adonis than the epithet ſecret, or hidden, whether we conſider that ſecreſy and obſcurity in which his myſteries were involved, or the condition in which he was repreſented during his feſtival. He was put into a coffin, and lamented over as if dead. Moſes in ſome places, Lev. xix. 27, 28. Deut. xiv. 1. See alſo Pſal. cvi. 28. calls him The Dead, by way of deriſion. Laſtly, the circumſtance of women bewailing Tammuz, has determined the greater part of commentators to explain theſe paſſages of Ezekiel by the feaſts of Adonis.

It is thought the Iſraelitiſh women who bewailed Tammuz, Ezek. viii. 14. had for the object of their falſe worſhip the ſame ſun as was adored by the men in ver. 15, 16. And he brought me into the inner court of the Lord's houſe, and behold, at the door of the temple of the Lord, between the porch and the altar, were about five and twenty men, with their backs toward the temple of the Lord, and their faces toward the eaſt, and they worſhipped the ſun toward the eaſt.

This is not inconſiſtent with the opinion which takes Tammuz for Adonis, becauſe in the Pagan theology Adonis was the ſun alſo. Vide FRAGMENTS, Nos. 316, 317. pages 20, 21.

TAMNA, Thamna, or Thamnatha, a famous city in Paleſtine, on the road from Jeruſalem to Diſpolis. Euſeb. in Αινὰν. It was the capital of Toparchia Thamnitica, which became famous in the later times of the Jewiſh republic.

TANACH, תענך, that afflicts thee, that humbles thee, that reproves thee; from ענה hanah, to afflict, &c. and the pronoun ך ec, thee, thou.

TANACH, or Thanac, or Taanach; a city of the half tribe of Manaſſeh, on this ſide Jordan, Joſh. xxi. 25. xii. 21. Judg. i. 27. yielded to the Levites. Euſebius, St. Jerom, and Procopius pius of Gaza, ſay, that in their time it was a conſiderable place, three miles from Legio.

TANHUMETH, תנחמת, θανεμαὰθ, conſolation, or repentance; from נחם nacham: otherwiſe, bottle, or wall that is given, or of a gift; from חמת chemeth, veſſel, or bottle, or חמה chomah, a wall, and מתת mathath: otherwiſe, the gift of indignation, or of heat; from חמה chamah, anger, wrath, or חם cham, heat, and mathath: otherwiſe, the reſt of death; from נוה nuah, reſt, and מות muth, death.

TANIS, צען, Heb. Zoan, motion. It is not known what Zoan ſignifies in the Egyptian tongue.

TANIS, a city of Egypt, in Hebrew, צוען Zoan. Moſes affirms that Tanis, or Zoan, is later by ſeven years than the city of Hebron in Canaan; Numb. xiii. 22. and the Pſalmiſt aſſerts, that Moſes performed his miracles in the fields of Tanis. Pſalm lxxviii. 12, 43. This city was within the Delta. Iſaiah, xix. 11, 13. xxx. 24. addreſſes the princes of Tanis, who were conceited of their wiſdom and prudence. He derides their falſe politics. It appears that in the time of this prophet, Tanis was the capital of the Lower Egypt. Ezekiel xxx. 14. ſpeaks of Zoan, but St. Jerom has tranſlated it by Taphnis, inſtead of Tanis, which two cities were very different from each other. Tanis was ſituate on that arm of the Nile which was neareſt to that of Damietta, weſt.

TANNIM, תנים, great fiſhes. [REPTILES.]

TANNIM, or Thannim, Gen. i. 21. תנינם הגדלים Vulgate, Cete grandia. LXX. Κήτη. ſignifies generally great fiſhes, ſea-monſters, dragons. When Moſes threw down his rod before Pharaoh, it was changed into a dragon; Heb. Thannim, Exod. vii. 9. And, their poiſon is as the venom of the Tannim. We think that ſometimes it expreſſes the crocodile; So Pſalm lxxiv. 13. Thou brakeſt the heads of the dragons in the waters;—of the Tannim, or Thanninim. The LXX. and even Jerom, ſometimes tranſlate Tannim by Syrens, ſuppoſing this word to ſignify ſea-monſters, whoſe figure partakes of a man and a fiſh. See Job xxx. 29. Iſaiah xxxvi. 13. xliii. 20. in LXX. Iſa. xiii. 22. Vulgate. In Lament. iv. 3. Jerom renders Thannim by Lamiæ, witches, or ſorcereſſes; but the general and better interpretation is dragons, or ſea-monſters.

TAPHATH, טפת, little girl; from טפף taphath, or טף taph, to take ſhort ſteps, like children: otherwiſe, diſtillation, drop; from נפש nepheſh.

TAPHATH, or Taphu, daughter of Solomon. She married the ſon of Abinadab, governor of the province of Dor. 1 Kings iv. 11.

TAPHON, or Thopo, a city in Judea, fortified by Bacchides, 1 Macc. ix. 50. See Tappuah.

TAPHSAR, טפסר, βελοσάσεις, army, he that takes away children. This word is foreign to the Hebrew tongue.

TAPHSAR, טפסר. This word is found, Jer. li. 27. which St. Jerom has left as it is, without tranſlating it; and in Nahum iii. 17. where he has rendered it by little children, reading Tappapim, inſtead of Taphſarim. Our beſt interpreters conſider this word as a name of dignity; perhaps the ſame as Achaſdrapne, whence Satrapa is formed. Some have thought Taphſar to be the name of a province, but without proof. [A captain, Eng. Tr.]

TAPPUAH, תפוח, ταπιφθ, apple, or apple-tree; from תפח thaphach: otherwiſe, breath, ſwelling: otherwiſe, , that binds and holds in nets; from פוח puach.

I. TAPPUAH, or Taphua, a city of Manaſſeh, but belonging to Ephraim. Joſh. xvii. 8. Probably the En-tappuah, of the former verſe. Vulgate, [and Heb.] the fountain of Taphua.

II. TAPPUAH, a city of Judah, Joſh. xv. 34. perhaps the Beth-tappuah, of verſe 53: which is alſo attributed to Judah, and which Euſebius places beyond Raphia fourteen miles; toward Egypt. Euſeb. in Beth-taphu.

TARAH, or Thare, an encampment of Iſrael in the deſart. They came hither from Tahath, and went hence to Mithcah, Numb. xxxiii. 27. Ptolemy ſpeaks of a city called Thana, in Arabia Petrea, and Joſephus mentions a city called Tharabaſa, which the Jews took from the Arabians. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiv. cap. 2.

TARALAH, תראלה, examiner, or turtle of the curſe, or of ſtrength, or of the oak; from תור thur, examiner, turtle, and אלה alah, to curſe, or oak; or from איל ejal, force.

TARALAH, or Tharela, a city of Benjamin, Joſh. xviii. 27.

TAREA, תארע, Vulgate, Tharac. The houſe or chamber of the companion, or of the ſhepherd, or of malice; from תא tha, bed or chamber, and רעה rohah, companion, or ſhepherd, or from רע rah, or רוע ruah, malice: otherwiſe, that cries and laments, or does amiſs; from רוע ruah.

TAREA, תהרע, evil, anger; from חרה charah, anger, and רע rah, evil: otherwiſe, anger of the ſhepherd, and of the companion; from רעה rahah, ſhepherd, or companion.

TAREA, or Tharaa, or Tahrea, ſon of Micah, and grandſon of Jonathan, ſon of Saul. 1 Chr. viii. 35.

TARES, Zizanium, Lolium; a plant with a longiſh rough leaf, not eaſily diſtinguiſhed from corn, or other grain, among which it grows. Its ſtem is ſmaller than that of wheat; at the top of this ſtem riſes a long ear with little huſks, which ſurround it at equal diſtances, and which contain three or four grains, covered with down or pluff, which are not eaſily broken. Bread made of corn wherein there are many tares, is very unwholeſome; it intoxicates, loads the ſtomach, and creates heavineſs, drowſineſs, and head-achs. When the plant is grown up, and ready to bloſſom, it is eaſily diſtinguiſhed from corn. Hence our Saviour, in his parable of the good corn and the tares, bids his reapers to wait for the time of harveſt, when it would be eaſy to pluck up the tares, and to caſt them into the fire. Matth. xiii. 26, 27, 28, &c. In the church the tares muſt be mingled with the wheat, the wicked with the righteous, the reprobate with the elect, till the day of judgment. Sometimes paſtors can rake out hereticks, ſchiſmatics, and ſcandalous offenders, by excommunication; but they cannot detect, and expel all kinds of tares.

The word tares is often uſed in a figurative ſenſe. To ſow tares in a family, is to raiſe diſcord in it. The enemy has ſown tares, in the field of the church: heretics have ſpread their errors within it: the devil has propagated diviſion among its members.

The ear of this plant is a foot long, divided into ſeveral parts, ranged alternately, ſo that each appears to be a little ear, made up of grains ſmaller than thoſe of wheat, but a little mealy, of a reddiſh colour. Its blade is very different from that of wheat, but it is chiefly diſtinguiſhable when it grows up, and when it begins to bloſſom. In French it has obtained the name of ivroye, or ivraye, as they ſay, becauſe it enivre, i. e. inebriates thoſe who eat bread made of it, or who drink beer in which any conſiderable quantity of this grain was infuſed. Some botaniſts think that tares are produced from grains of wheat or barley degenerated; whence it is that there are certain years, and certain diſtricts, wherein many tares are gathered, though good corn was ſowed; and, on the contrary, we are aſſured that tares are ſometimes changed into wheat when they happen on good ground. I have ſeen perſons who affirmed, that they had made the experiment of both theſe things.

TARGUM; in the plural, targumim; i. e. expoſitions, or explications. This name is given to the Chaldee paraphraſes of the books of the Old Teſtament. They are called paraphraſes, or expoſitions, becauſe they are rather comments and explications, than literal tranſlations in the Chaldee tongue, which after the captivity of Babylon, was more known to the Jews than Hebrew itſelf. So that when the Hebrew text was read in the ſynagogue, or in the temple, they generally added an explication in the Chaldee tongue, for the advantage of the people. It is probable, that this cuſtom began from the time of Ezra, ſince that learned ſcribe reading the law to the people in the temple, explained it, with the other prieſts who were with him, to make it underſtood by the people. Ezra viii. 8, 9. Whether they explained it in the Hebrew language, or, which to us appears moſt probable, in the Chaldee, or Syriac; for theſe two languages had then a very great conformity; and were almoſt the ſame: even at this day they have a very near agreement.

But, though the cuſtom of making theſe expoſitions in the Chaldee language be very ancient, yet they had no written paraphraſes, or targumim before Onkelos and Jonathan, who lived about the time of our Saviour. Jonathan is placed about thirty years before Chriſt, under the reign of Herod the Great: Onkelos ſomething later. The targum of Onkelos is the moſt eſteemed, and copies are found in which it is inſerted verſe for verſe with the Hebrew. It is ſo ſhort, and ſo ſimple, that it cannot be ſuſpected of being corrupted. See ONKELOS. This paraphraſt wrote only on the books of Moſes, and his ſtile approaches nearly to the purity of the Chaldee, as found in Daniel and Ezra. This targum is quoted in the Miſhna; but was not known either to Euſebius, Jerom, or Origen.

The targum of Jonathan, ſon of Uziel, is on the greater and leſſer prophets. He is much more diffuſe than Onkelos, and eſpecially on the leſſer prophets, where he takes great liberties, and runs on in allegories. His ſtile is pure enough, and approaches near to the Chaldee of Onkelos. It is thought that the Jewiſh doctors who lived above ſeven hundred years after him, have made additions to him. They aſcribe to him a paraphraſe on the Pentateuch alſo; but this is not his.

The targum of Joſeph the Blind, [i. e. having loſt one eye] is on the Hagiographa. This author is much more modern, and leſs eſteemed than the former. He wrote on the Pſalms, Job, the Proverbs, Canticles, Eccleſiaſtes, Ruth, and Eſther. His ſtile is a very corrupt Chaldee, with a great mixture of foreign words.

The targum of Jeruſalem is only on the Pentateuch; nor is that perfect. There are whole verſes wanting, others tranſpoſed, others mutilated; which which has made many conclude that this is only a fragment of ſome ancient paraphraſe, now loſt.

Conſult Walton, Proleg. 12. Father Morinus, Exercitationes Biblicæ, and Father Le Long, Bibliotheca Sacra, cap. 2. ſect. 2. There is no targum on Daniel, Ezra, and Nehemiah. One has lately been publiſhed on the Chronicles. The editions of the Chaldee paraphraſes in the Polyglots of Complutum, Antwerp, and Paris, and even in the Rabbinical Bibles printed at Venice, are imperfect: Thoſe of Baſil, and thoſe of the Engliſh Polyglot, are more entire.

TARICHEA, a city of Galilee, mentioned by Joſephus in vitâ ſuâ. page 1010. He ſays it was thirty ſtadia from Tiberias: he went on ſhip-board there to go to Tiberias. Joſeph. de Bello, lib. ii. cap. 16. Pliny places it ſouth of the lake of Genneſareth, and Tiberias, weſt.

TARPELITES, טרפליא, raviſhers, or wearied; from טרף taraph: otherwiſe, ſucceſſion or order of miracles; from טור tur, rank, order, and פלא pala, miracles: otherwiſe, ruinous order, or rank; from מפלה muphalah, ruin: otherwiſe, according to the Syriac and Hebrew, cuſtom, or guardian of the miracle, or of the ruin, or of the leaf of the tree. This word is a ſtranger to the holy language.

TARPELITES, Terphalæi; a people ſent from beyond the Euphrates into Samaria. Ezr. iv. 9. Some think them to be the Sapires, or Saſpires, (See SEPHAR) or the Tripolitans, i. e. people of Tripolis.

TARSHISH, תרשיש, contemplation, or examination of the marble, or of the joy; from תור thur, to examine, &c. and שיש ſhiſh, marble; or from שוש ſhuſh, joy: otherwiſe, precious ſtone, the colour of azure; from תרשיש Tharſhiſh, the name of the country, from whence this precious ſtone was fetched.

I. TARSHISH, or Tharſis, ſecond ſon of Javan, Gen. x. 4. We think he founded Tarſus in Cilicia, and gave the name of Tarſis to the province. Vide TARSUS.

II. TARSHISH, a chief noble of Perſia. Eſth. i. 14.

TARSHISH, or THARSHISH, תרשיש. See TARSHISH, above.

I. THARSHISH, or Tharſis, ſon of Bilhan, of Benjamin. 1 Chron. vii. 10.

II. THARSHISH. The country of Tharſhiſh, whither Solomon ſent his fleets. 1 Kings x. 22. 2 Chron. ix. 21. There is a multitude of opinions concerning this country. Joſephus, the Chaldee and Arabic paraphraſts, explain it of Tarſus, a city of Cilicia: The LXX. Jerom, and Theodoret, underſtand it of Carthage. Euſebius derives the Spaniards from Tharſhiſh: The Arabian geographer thinks it was Tunis in Africa. Bochart makes it Tarteſſus, an iſland in the Streights of Gades. Le Clerc underſtands Thaſſus an iſland and city in the Ægean ſea. Grotius thinks the whole ocean was called Tharſhiſh, becauſe of the famous city of Tarteſſus, now mentioned. Sanctius believes the ſea, in general, to be called Tharſhiſh, and that ſhips of Tharſhiſh are thoſe employed in voyages at ſea, in oppoſition to ſmall veſſels uſed only in rivers. Vide FRAGMENTS, Nos. LXX, LXXI, p. 125. CCXVII. p. 77.

The Seventy ſometimes tranſlate Tharſhiſh by the ſea; and Scripture gives alike the name ſhips of Tharſhiſh to thoſe fitted out at Ezion-geber, on the Red-ſea, and which ſailed to the ocean, as to thoſe fitted out at Joppa, and in the ports of the Mediterranean, (which was uſually called the Great-ſea.) We cannot apprehend any other way to explain all the paſſages which mention ſhips of Tarſhiſh.

For on one ſide, we ſee that Tarſhiſh ſignifies the city of Tarſus, and Cilicia; on the other ſide we ſee that they fitted out ſhips of Tharſhiſh, or ſhips to go to Tharſhiſh, in places from whence we cannot ſuppoſe they went to Tarſus in Cilicia. For example, the book of Judith, chap. ii. 12, 13. Vulgate. deſcribing the courſe of Holofernes, ſays, he went into Cilicia, and deſtroyed all the children of Tharſhiſh, or Tharſis. Jonah, chap. i. 3, &c. flying from before the face of the Lord, went on ſhip-board at Joppa for Tharſhiſh, probably Tarſus in Cilicia. The prophets Iſaiah and Ezekiel, among the merchant ſhips that came to traffic at Tyre, enumerate thoſe of Tharſhiſh. Iſa. xxiii. 1, 14. lx. 19. Ezek. xxvii. 12, 25. xxxviii. 13. Cilicia was altogether within reach from Tyre; and there is but little probability that they ſhould come from the coaſt of the ocean to trade there. Laſtly, the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. lxxii. 10. puts the kings of Tharſhiſh with thoſe of the iſles: The kings of Tharſhiſh, and of the iſles, ſhall bring preſents. But by the iſles, or iſlands, are generally meant thoſe of the Mediterranean, and the maritime places, whither the Hebrews were uſed to go by ſea. [The Archipelago, &c.]

From all theſe paſſages it ſeems that the country of Tharſhiſh was on the Mediterranean, and probably it was Cilicia.

Therefore, when we ſee ſhips fitted out on the Red-ſea, or at Ezion-geber, in order to go to Tharſhiſh, we muſt conclude, either that there were two countries called Tharſhiſh, one on the ocean, another on the Mediterranean, which ſeems by no means probable; or, that ſhips of Tharſhiſh, in general, ſignifies ſhips able to bear a long a long voyage; large ſhips, in oppoſition to ſmall craft intended for a home-trade in navigable rivers; [Or, ſhips built in a particular manner—Tarſhiſh-built.]

TARSUS, Ταρσὸς, winged, feathered; from the Greek τάρσος, wings, feathers.

TARSUS, the capital city of Cilicia, and probably the Tharſhiſh of Scripture. St. Paul was a native of Tarſus in Cilicia. Acts ix. 11. xxi. 39. Some think it obtained the privileges of a Roman colony, by its firm adherence to Julius Cæſar, which made the inhabitants citizens of Rome; whence St. Paul was free of Rome, by being born in Tarſus. Others maintain that Tarſus, though a free city, was not a Roman colony, in the time of St. Paul; and that no trace is found of this on the medals, before the reign of Caracalla, or Heliogabalus; therefore, the privilege of being a citizen of Rome belonged to the apoſtle, not as being a denizen of Tarſus, but by ſome perſonal right derived from his father or anceſtors. Vide ROMAN, 3.

TARTAK, תרתק, or, Tertak. Chained, bound, ſhut up; from נרתק nirtak.

The ſecond day of this month is the laſt of the octave of the dedication of the temple, after it was purified by Judas Maccabeus. See 1 Macc. iv. 59. John x. 22.

TEKOA, Thecue, or Thecua, a city of Judah, 2 Chron. xi. 6. It is alſo in the Greek of Joſhua, xv. 60. but not in the Hebrew. Euſebius and Jerom place Tekoa twelve miles from Jeruſalem, ſouth. In another place Jerom ſays, that it was ſix miles from Bethlehem, ſouth: See his Prologue to Amos. It ſtood on a mountain, and was the fartheſt place that way, toward ward the Red-ſea. Joſephus ſays, Tekoa was not far from the caſtle of Herodium. Joſeph. de Bello, lib. v. cap. 7. The wilderneſs of Tekoa is mentioned, 2 Chron. xx. 20. which wilderneſs is not far from the Red-ſea. 1 Macc. ix. 4.

TELASSER, or Thalaſſar, a province of Aſia. Rabſhakeh tells Hezekiah, Iſa. xxxvii. 12. 2 Kings xix. 12. that the gods of the nations could not deliver from his maſter's power the children of Eden, that were at Telaſſer, or Thelaſar. The exact ſituation of this province is unknown, but it is thought to be towards Armenia and Meſopotamia, and about the ſources of the Euphrates and Tigris; becauſe of the children of Eden, that inhabited this country.

TELEM, טלם, their lamb; from טלה talah: otherwiſe, their dew; from טל tal, the dew; and the pronoun מ am, theirs. In Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic, this word ſignifies to miſuſe, or abuſe.

TEMENI, תימני, θεμανεὶ. From Teman.

TEMENI, or Temani, ſon of Aſhur and of Naarah. 1 Chron. iv. 6.

TEMPLE, the houſe of God, the ſanctuary, the tabernacle of the Lord, the palace of the Moſt High, &c. Theſe terms are often ſynonymous in Scripture, though, ſtrictly ſpeaking, they import very different things: For, the ſanctuary was but one part of the tabernacle, or temple; and the word temple does not deſcribe the tabernacle, or tabernacle the temple. The Hebrews, before Solomon could not properly be ſaid to have had a temple, yet they did not ſcruple to uſe the word temple for the tabernacle; as, on the contrary, they ſometimes by the tabernacle of the Lord, expreſs the temple built by Solomon.

After the Lord had inſtructed David that Jeruſalem was the place he had choſen, wherein to fix his dwelling, this pious prince began to think of executing his deſign of preparing a temple for the Lord, that might be ſomething worthy of his divine Majeſty. He opened his mind on this ſubject to the prophet Nathan, but the Lord did not think fit that David ſhould execute this deſign, however laudable; but that honour was reſerved for Solomon, his ſon and ſucceſſor, who was to be a peaceable prince; whereas David had ſhed much blood in war. Nevertheleſs, David applied himſelf to collect great quantities of gold, ſilver, braſs, iron, and other materials for this undertaking,

Solomon laid the foundations of the temple, A. M. 2992, 2992, ante A.D. 1012, and it was finiſhed A.M. 3000, and dedicated in 3001, ante A.D. 1003. The place choſen for erecting this magnificent ſtructure, was Mount Moriah. Its entrance ſtood toward the eaſt, and the moſt holy, and moſt retired part, was toward the weſt. The firſt book of Kings, and the ſecond of Chronicles, has chiefly deſcribed the temple, properly ſo called; i. e. the ſanctuary, the ſanctum, and the apartments attached to them; alſo the veſſels, the implements, and ornaments of the temple, giving ſcarce any deſcription of the courts, and areas, which however made a principal part of the grandeur of this edifice. Ezekiel has ſupplied this defect, by the exact plan he has deſcribed of theſe neceſſary parts. Indeed, it muſt be owned, that the temple, as deſcribed by Ezekiel, was never reſtored after the captivity of Babylon, according to the model and the menſurations of this prophet. But as the meaſures he ſets down for the ſanctum, and the ſanctuary, are within a ſmall matter the ſame as thoſe of the temple of Solomon; and as this prophet, who was himſelf a prieſt, had ſeen the firſt temple, it may be ſuppoſed the deſcription he gives us of the temple of Jeruſalem, is that of the temple of Solomon.

After the conſecration, or dedication, of the temple, by Solomon, A.M. 3001, this edifice ſuffered many revolutions, which it is proper to notice here.

A.M. 3033, ante A.D. 971, Shiſhak, king of Egypt, took Jeruſalem, and carried away the treaſures of the temple. 1 Kings xiv. 25, &c. 2 Chron. xii.

A.M. 3146, Joaſh, king of Judah, collected ſilver to repair the temple; they began the work in earneſt in 3148. 2 Kings xii. 4, 5, &c. 2 Chron. xxiv. 7, 8. &c.

Ahaz, king of Judah, having bought the aſſiſtance of Tiglath-Pilneſer, king of Aſſyria, againſt the kings of Iſrael and Damaſcus, who were at war with him, robbed the temple of the Lord of its riches, to give to this foreign king; 2 Chron. xxviii. 21, 22, &c. A.M. 3264, ante A.D. 740. not content with that, he profaned this holy place, by ſetting up therein an altar copied from one he had ſeen at Damaſcus, and taking away the brazen altar that Solomon had made. 2 Kings xvi. 10, 11, 12, &c. He alſo took away the brazen ſea from off the brazen oxen that ſupported it, and the brazen baſons from their pedeſtals, and the king's throne, which was of braſs. Theſe he took away, to prevent their being carried off by the king of Aſſyria. Nor did he ſtop here, but carried his wickedneſs ſo far as to ſacrifice to ſtrange gods, and to erect profane altars in all the corners of the ſtreets of Jeruſalem. 2 Chron. xxviii. 24, 25. He pillaged the temple, broke the ſacred veſſels, and ſhut up the houſe of God. From A.M. 3264, ante A.D. 740, to 3278, ante A.D. 726.

Hezekiah, ſon and ſucceſſor of Ahaz, opened again and repaired the gates of the temple, which his father had ſhut up, and robbed of their ornaments. 2 Chron. xxix. 3, 4, &c. A.M. 3278, ante A.D. 726. He reſtored the worſhip of the Lord, and ſacrifices, and made new ſacred veſſels, in the place of thoſe which Ahaz had deſtroyed. But in the 14th year of his reign, Sennacherib, king of Aſſyria, coming with an army into the land of Judah, Hezekiah was forced to take the riches of the temple and even the plates of gold that he himſelf had put on the gates of the temple, to give them to the king of Aſſyria. But when Sennacherib was gone back into his own country, no doubt but Hezekiah reſtored all theſe things to their firſt condition.

Manaſſeh, ſon and ſucceſſor of Hezekiah, profaned the temple of the Lord, by ſetting up altars and idols, by which he worſhipped the hoſt of heaven, even in the courts of the houſe of the Lord. 2 Kings xxi. 4, 5, 6, 7. 2 Chron. xxxiii. 5 6, 7. A.M. 3306. God delivered him into the hands of the king of Babylon, who loaded him with chains, and carried him beyond the Euphrates. 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11, 12, &c. A.M. 3328, ante A.D. 676. Here he acknowledged, and repented of, his ſins; and, being ſent back to his dominions, he redreſſed the profanations of the temple he had committed, taking away the idols, deſtroying the profane altars, and reſtoring the altar of burnt-offerings, upon which he offered his ſacrifices.

Joſiah, king of Judah, laboured with all his might in repairing the edifices of the temple, which had been either neglected, or demoliſhed, by the kings of Judah, his predeceſſors. He alſo commanded the prieſts and Levites to replace the ark of the Lord in the ſanctuary; and that it ſhould not be moved from place to place, as it had been during the reigns of the wicked kings his predeceſſors. 2 Chron. xxxv. 3.

Nebuchadnezzar took away a part of the ſacred veſſels of the temple of the Lord, and placed them in the temple of his god at Babylon, under the reign of Jehoiakim, king of Judah. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 6, 7. A.M. 3398, ante A.D. 706. He alſo carried away others under the reign of Jeconiah. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 10. A.M. 3505, ante A. D. 599. Laſtly, he took the city of Jeruſalem, and entirely deſtroyed the temple, in the eleventh year of Zedekiah, A. M. 3416, ante A. D. 588. 2 Kings xxv. 1, 2, 3, &c. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 18, 19.

The temple continued in its ruins fifty-two years, till the firſt year of the reign of Cyrus, at Babylon, A. M. 3468, ante A. D. 536. Then Cyrus permitted the Jews to return to Jeruſalem, and to rebuild the temple of the Lord. Ezr. i. 1, 2, 3, &c. The following year they laid the foundations of the ſecond temple; but they had hardly worked at it one year, when Cyrus, or his officers gained over by the enemies of the Jews, forbad them the work. Ezr. iv. 5. A. M. 3470, ante A. D. 534. After the death of Cyrus and Cambyſes, they were again forbid by the Magian, who reigned after Cambyſes, and whom Scripture calls Artaxerxes. Vide SMERDIS. Ezra iv. 7—17, 18. A. M. 3483, ante A. D. 521. Laſtly, theſe prohibitions being ſuperſeded under Darius, ſon of Hyſtaſpes, the temple was finiſhed and dedicated four years afterwards, A.M. 3489, ante A.D. 515, twenty years after the return from the captivity.

This temple was profaned by order of Antiochus Epiphanes, A. M. 3837. The ordinary ſacrifices were diſcontinued, and the idol of Jupiter Olympius was ſet up near the altar. It continued in this condition three years: 1 Macc. i. 62. Judas Maccabeus purified it, and reſtored the ſacrifices and the worſhip of the Lord, A. M. 3840, ante A. D. 164.

Herod the Great undertook to rebuild the whole temple of Jeruſalem; in the eighteenth year of his reign, A. M. 3986. Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xv. cap. 14. He began to lay the foundation of it, A. M. 3984, forty-ſix years before the firſt paſſover of Jeſus Chriſt, as the Jews obſerved to him by ſaying, Forty and ſix years was this temple in building, and wilt thou rear it up in three days? This is not ſaying that Herod had employed forty-ſix years in building it; for Joſephus aſſures us, that he finiſhed it in nine years and an half. But, after the time of this prince, they ſtill continued to make additions to it; and the ſame Joſephus tells us, that they continued working on it, till the beginning of the Jewiſh war. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 8.

This temple built by Herod did not ſubſiſt above ſeventy-ſeven years, being deſtroyed, A. M. 4073, A.D. 70. It was begun by Herod, A. M. 3987, finiſhed in 3996, burnt by the Romans in 4073.

This temple of Herod was very different from that of Solomon, and from that rebuilt by Zerubbabel, after the captivity. The following is the deſcription Joſephus has left us of it, who himſelf had ſeen it. [For plans, &c. Vide the FRAGMENTS.]

The temple, properly ſo called, was only ſixty cubits high, and ſixty broad; but there were two ſides of front, like two arms, or ſhoulderings, which advanced twenty cubits on each ſide; making, the whole front, an hundred cubits wide, as well as high. The ſtones uſed in this building were white and hard, twenty-five cubits long, eight high, and twelve wide. Joſeph. de Bello. lib. vi.

The front of this magnificent building reſembled that of a royal palace. The two wings in the front were lower than the middle, which middle was ſo exalted, that thoſe who were over-againſt the temple, or who approached it from a diſtance, might ſee it many furlongs off. The gates were almoſt of the ſame height as the temple, and on the top of the gates were veils, or tapeſtry, of ſeveral colours, embelliſhed with purple flowers. On the two ſides of the doors were pillars, the capitals of which were adorned with branches of a golden vine, which hung down with their grapes and cluſters, ſo well imitated, that art did not yield to nature. Herod made very large and high galleries about the temple, ſuitable to the magnificence of the reſt of the building, exceeding in beauty and ſumptuouſneſs all of the kind that had been ſeen.

The temple was built upon a very uneven mountain; and, originally, there was hardly plain enough on the top of it for the ſcite of the temple and altar. The reſt of it was ſteep and ſloping. But Solomon raiſed a wall toward the eaſt, to ſupport the earth on that ſide; and after this ſide was filled up, he there built one of the porticos or galleries. At that time, only this face was caſed with ſtone; but in ſucceeding times the people endeavouring to enlarge this ſpace, and the top of the mountain being much extended, they broke down the wall on the north ſide, and encloſed a ſecond ſpace as large as the whole original circumference of the temple. So that at laſt, againſt all hope and expectation, this work was ſo far extended, that the whole mountain was ſurrounded by a treble wall. But, for the compleating this great work whole ages were barely ſufficient; and all the ſacred treaſures were applied to this uſe, that the devotion of the people brought to the temple from all the world. In ſome places theſe walls were above three hundred cubits high; and the ſtones uſed in this work were forty cubits long. They were faſtened together by iron cramps, and lead, to reſiſt the injuries of time. The level on which the temple was built was a furlong ſquare, or one hundred and twenty-five paces.

The entrances into the firſt encloſure, (which was a ſquare of a furlong on each ſide,) were by a gate on the eaſtern ſide, one on the ſouth ſide, and one on the north ſide: and four on the weſt ſide, one of which went to the palace, another into the city, and the two others into the fields. This encloſure was ſecured without by a very high and ſolid wall; and within, all around it on the four ſides, were ſtately porticos or galleries, ſuſtained by columns, ſo thick that three men could hardly graſp them in their arms; for each of them was, in circumference, twenty-ſeven feet. The number of theſe columns was an hundred and ſixty-two. They ſupported a roof of cedar very curiouſly wrought, and made three galleries, of which the center was the higheſt and wideſt, being in width forty-five feet, in height an hundred. Thoſe on the two ſides were but thirty feet wide, and fifty feet high.

The court, or area, before theſe galleries was paved with marble of ſeveral colours; and at a little diſtance from the galleries was a ſecond encloſure, formed by an handſome baluſtrade of ſtone, with pillars at equal diſtances, on which were inſcriptions in Greek, and in Latin, to warn ſtrangers, and ſuch as were unclean, not to proceed any farther on pain of death. This encloſure had but one entrance on the eaſt, but on the north and ſouth it had three, at equal diſtances.

The third encloſure, which included the temple and the altar of burnt-ſacrifices, was ſurrounded by a wall of forty cubits high. It was ſquare, as well as the former, and the height of the wall did not without appear ſo much as it really was, becauſe it was loſt behind the ſteps, by which it was ſurrounded, and partly covered. Firſt, there were fourteen ſteps, above which was a terrace of about ten cubits wide, which went all round the encloſure. From thence was another aſcent of five ſteps, to come to the platform of the gate; ſo that the wall was but five and twenty cubits high within. The entrance into this portico was by one gate toward the eaſt, by four toward the ſouth, and four toward the north. There was no gate on the weſt ſide, but a great wall ran all along from north to ſouth. At the entrance of each gate within were large rooms, in form of pavilions, of thirty cubits ſquare, and forty high, each ſuſtained by a pillar of twelve cubits, or eighteen feet in circumference.

Within this encloſure were alſo double covered galleries, with two rows of pillars, to the eaſt, north, and ſouth; but none to the weſt. The women had a gate to themſelves on the eaſt ſide, and one on the ſouth and the north, by which they paſſed to the place appointed for them, which was diſtant from that of the men.

The altar of burnt-ſacrifices was fifteen cubits high, and forty cubits wide each way: They aſcended to it by a ſlope without ſteps, towards the ſouth. At the four corners were ſo many eminences, or little horns; and it was built of rough ſtones, on which no iron had been uſed, nor tool of any other metal.

The front of the temple which was an hundred cubits high, and as many wide, was adorned with many rich ſpoils, which the Jews had dedicated to God, as trophies of their victories: When Herod had finiſhed the temple he dedicated them anew; to which he added ſome of his own, taken in his wars againſt the barbarous nations.

The porch of the temple was ninety cubits high, and one hundred in length, from north to ſouth, The door was ſeventy cubits high, and twenty-five wide. The ſanctum, or ſanctuary, and the apartments that ranged along the two ſides of the temple, had nothing ſingular. Joſephus obſerves, that when it was reſolved to build the temple and the altar, Herod did not enter the courts of the prieſts, being only a layman. He left to the prieſts the care of finiſhing this work themſelves, who compleated it in eighteen months; the reſt took up eight years.

Within this incloſure was a wall, one cubit high, which ſurrounded the temple and the altar of burnt-ſacrifices; and ſeparated the prieſts from the other Iſraelites. This place was not to be entered by the laity: they came as far as this wall, to offer their ſacrifices and offerings; but no farther.

Joſephus relates a circumſtance, which he ſaid he received by tradition from his fathers, that all the time they worked on the temple, there fell no rain in the day-time, but only in the night; ſo that the workmen were not hindered in their work. When the temple was finiſhed, the dedication of it was performed with great ſolemnity. The people rendered hearty thanks to God, and gave the king much praiſe and commendation, which he well deſerved, for the execution of this great work. Herod offered three hundred oxen in ſacrifice, and all the people, with great alacrity, brought their victims to this auguſt ceremony. The number of them was ſo very great, that it was not eaſy to count them.

them. What contributed to make this feſtival the more ſolemn, was, that it happened on the ſame day that Herod came to the throne, which anniverſary he always celebrated with much pomp.

In the angle of the northern ſide of the external incloſure of the temple, was a very ſtrong tower, built by the Aſmonean kings, who were poſſeſſed both of the regal ſtate and the prieſthood at the ſame time. Here were kept the ſacred ornaments worn by the high-prieſt, on great occaſions. Herod continued to keep them here; and after Herod, the Romans, till the time of Tiberius. But during his reign, Vitellius coming to Jeruſalem as governor of Syria, the inhabitants of Jeruſalem received him with ſo much honour, that to ſhew his acknowledgement, he obtained from Tiberius permiſſion to commit the care of this ſacred depoſit into their hands. They enjoyed this favour till the death of king Agrippa: when Caſſius Longinus, governor of Syria, and Cuſpius Fadus, governor of Judea, commanded the Jews to return them to the tower of Antonia, and the cuſtody of the Romans; as before. The Jews ſent to deſire this favour again from the emperor Claudius; and young king Agrippa being then at Rome, obtained it for himſelf.

Before this, the manner of keeping this precious habit was thus; It was kept in the tower Antonia, under the ſeal of the high-prieſt, and thoſe of the treaſurers of the temple. On the eve of any ſolemn feſtival, they waited on the commander of the caſtle for the Romans; after they had viſited, and examined the ſeals, they received the holy veſtments from his hands; and they brought them back to him when the feſtival was over, and ſealed them up again as before.

This tower, or caſtle, was already very ſtrong, but Herod fortified it ſtill more, and called it Antonia, in honour of his patron Anthony. Herod made a paſſage under ground, from the tower Antonia to the eaſtern gate of the temple, near which he alſo built another tower. This was to preſerve a communication between the two towers and the temple, that might be ſerviceable to himſelf, or to the kings his ſucceſſors, in caſe of ſedition. Vide ANTONIA.

Father John-Baptiſt Villalpandus, a Spaniſh jeſuit, who died May 22, 1608, and who was employed by the king of Spain to draw up a deſcription of the temple and city of Jeruſalem, has acquired an immortal glory by his work, which is printed in three volumes in folio.

However, very able men, think this learned jeſuit, though extremely well furniſhed with profound knowledge in Greek and Roman architecture, was too much prejudiced in favour of the temple of Solomon, and imagined, that he could not make it too ſplendid, too grand, or too magnificent, and therefore exhauſted all the force of his imagination and genius, to deſcribe a temple that ſhould be the moſt perfect pile of building poſſible.

He has introduced many embelliſhments which are not mentioned in the ſacred text, but which ought to have been there according to the rules of architecture, which he ſuppoſes Solomon could not be ignorant of; as if the ſame taſte muſt needs prevail in architecture, among all nations, or, as if Solomon, who lived ſo long before the firſt architects of Greece, muſt needs have followed their rules. Villalpandus has multiplied the courts, and the porticos, and inſtead of three courts, which only are mentioned in Scripture, he has deſcribed eleven.

Villalpandus ſuppoſes that all the courts were ſurrounded with three ranks of columns, and that upon theſe columns were three ſtories of apartments; which, to me, does not ſeem at all to be warranted from Scripture. The Orientals did not commonly build ſeveral ſtories thus one upon another; and theſe muſt have been of a very extraordinary height.

As to Dr. Prideaux's ſyſtem, which he has extracted from the Rabbins, we may ſay of it in general, that it is very commodious in giving us very plauſible explications of whatever is ſaid in Scripture of the different parts of the temple, and their uſes. We find there whatever is taken notice of in the goſpel; the beautiful gate, Solomon's porch, the cheſts of the temple, wherein the offerings were put, the Gazophylacium, or treaſury; in ſhort, thoſe who contrived this plan have taken care for every thing. There is but one thing wanting, but that is eſſential, viz. The authors of the Talmud, and the Rabbins, have never proved, nor will ever be able to prove, their ſuppoſitions, either from Scripture, or from authors that had ſeen the temple, or had conſulted thoſe that had ſeen it. For neither the Talmudiſts nor Rabbins are either of antiquity or authority ſufficient, when the queſtion is about a matter of fact, of which they could not be witneſſes, neither themſelves nor thoſe whoſe teſtimonies they alledge, I mean their fathers or grandfathers. We know very certainly that they were but little converſant in the ſtudy of antiquity, and that they have no ancient documents, except the ſacred writings and Joſephus, which can give them any information about the true form of the temple. How then can they acquaint us with ſo many particulars, which are different from what the Scriptures and Joſephus tell us of them.

If the Rabbins had been ſatisfied with deſcribing the temple, ſuch as it was when the Romans deſtroyed it, one might endeavour either to reconcile them with Joſephus, which I think to be impoſſible, or we might ſay, they had ſome tradition, or ſome private writing more faithful and exact than Joſephus: But to pretend the temple they deſcribe to us is the ſame with that of Solomon, or Ezekiel; this indeed is utterly inſupportable.

What they ſay, for inſtance, about the court of the women, is to be found in no place of Scripture. The Chel, or the wall that ſeparated the court of the Iſraelites from that of the Gentiles, was not within, but without the temple. The pillars, Jachin and Boaz, were not to be ſeen in the ſecond temple. It is very uncertain whether the veil that was rent at our Saviour's crucifixion is that which parted the Sanctum from the ſanctuary. It might be that which ſeparated the Sanctum from the Veſtibulum. The width of the Veſtibulum of Solomon's temple did not exceed the width of the temple itſelf: And where ſhall we find that it was one of the wings of the temple on which the Devil placed our Saviour? Matth. iv. 5.—How ſhall we prove the exiſtence of all thoſe gates, both on the weſt and ſouth ſides of the temple; and of ſo many ſmall apartments, the uſes of which are ſo minutely determined?

I would not here be underſtood to intend to diſparage the pains Dr. Prideaux has taken in theſe matters; I would only inſinuate, that the greateſt part of the things ſet down in the plan of the temple he has given us, are of but little certainty; that the Jewiſh authors he has followed are guides to be but little relied on in theſe matters; and that to know the ancient temple of Solomon we muſt keep to the text of the book of the Kings and of Ezekiel. As to the temple of Herod, which was demoliſhed by the Romans, we have no other guide to follow but Joſephus. Vide the PLATES, &c.

Scripture ſpeaks of ſeveral other temples, in, or near, Paleſtine; as the temple of Dagon, at Gaza, Judg. xvi. 23. Another at Aſhdod, or Azotus, 1 Sam. v. 1, 2, 3. and 1 Macc. x. 84.

The temple of Babylon, wherein Nebuchadnezzar laid up the veſſels of the temple of Jeruſalem, Dan. i. 2.

The temple of the golden calf, at Bethel, and at Dan. Joſephus ſays, that even in his time the temple of the golden calf was to be ſeen at Dan, near the river called the little Jordan. In his text is read—at Daphne, but it plainly ought to be read—at Dan.

1. TEMPLE is alſo ſaid of the church of Jeſus Chriſt. Rev. iii. 12. Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God. And St. Paul ſays, 2 Theſſ. ii. 4. that antichriſt as God ſitteth in the temple of God, ſhewing himſelf that he is God.

2. TEMPLE is ſometimes put for heaven, Pſal. xi. 4. The Lord is in his holy temple; the Lord's throne is in heaven. The martyrs in heaven are ſaid to be before the throne of God, and to ſerve him day and night in his temple. Rev. vii. 15.

3. The TEMPLE of God, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, is the ſoul of a righteous man. 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17. Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the ſpirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him ſhall God deſtroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are. And, 1 Cor. vi. 19. Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghoſt, which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? And, 2 Cor. vi. 16. And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? For ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath ſaid, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they ſhall be my people.

TEMPTATION, to tempt, to prove. God tempted Abraham, by commanding him to offer up his ſon Iſaac, Gen. xxii. 1. intending to prove his obedience and faith, to confirm and ſtrengthen him by this trial, and to give to all ſucceeding ages, in the perſon of Abraham, an example, and pattern of perfect obedience. God does not tempt, or try, men in order to know their tempers and diſpoſitions, as if he were ignorant of them; but, to exerciſe their virtue, to purify it, to make it conſpicuous to others, and to give them an opportunity of receiving favours at his hands. When we read in Scripture, that God proved his people, whether they would walk in his law, or no; Exod. xvi. 4. that he permitted falſe prophets to ariſe among them, who propheſied vain things, to try them, whether they would ſeek the Lord with their whole hearts. Theſe expreſſions ſhould be explained by that of St. James i. 13. Let no man ſay when he is tempted, I am tempted of God; for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man. But every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own luſt, and enticed. God forbid we ſhould ſay, that God tempts us to commit what he prohibits, and what he will puniſh us for committing. Deus non eſt autor eorum eſt ultor. Fulgent. ad Monim. lib. i.

The devil indeed tempts us, to evil, to ſin, to diſtruſt, to contempt of God and his laws, to pride and vanity. He lays ſnares for us, even in our beſt actions, endeavouring to make us loſe the benefit of them, by imputing the merit of them to ourſelves, and not to God. Satan tempted David, and prevailed with him to number the people out of vain confidence, and curioſity. 1 Chron. xxi. 1. He tempted our Saviour in the wilderneſs, and endeavoured to infuſe into him ſentiments of pride, ambition, &c. Matt. iv. 1. Mark i. 13. Luke iv. 2. He tempted Ananias and Sapphira, to lie to the Holy Ghoſt. Acts v. 3. St. Paul recommends to the Corinthians, not to expoſe themſelves to the temptation of incontinence, under pretence of affecting to live in marriage to a greater degree of perfection. 1 Cor. vii. 5. Laſtly, in the prayer that Chriſt himſelf hath taught us, we pray God not to lead us into temptation; Matth. vi. 13. and a little before his death, our Saviour exhorts his diſciples to watch and pray, that they might not enter into temptation. Matth. xxvi. 41. St. Paul tells us, that God will not ſuffer us to be tempted above what we are able to bear. 1 Cor. x. 13.

Men are ſaid to tempt the Lord when they unſeaſonably require proofs of his divine preſence, power, or goodneſs. Without doubt, we are allowed to ſeek the Lord for his aſſiſtance, and to pray him to give us what we need; but it is not allowed us to tempt him, nor (for example) to deſire miracles of him, or to expoſe ourſelves to dangers from which we cannot eſcape, but by miraculous interpoſitions of his providence. God is not obliged to work miracles in our favour, and he requires of us only the performance of ſuch actions as are within the ordinary meaſures of our ſtrength. The Iſraelites in the deſert often tempted the Lord, as if they had had reaſon to doubt of his preſence among them, or of his goodneſs, or of his power, after all he had done in their favour. Exod. xvi. 2, 7, 17. Numb. xx. 12. Pſal. lxxviii. 18, 41, &c. God forbids us to tempt him; Before thou prayeſt, prepare thyſelf, and be not as one that tempteth the Lord. Eccluſ. xviii. 23.

Men tempt one another when they would know whether things are really what they ſeem to be, whether men are ſuch as they are thought, or deſired, to be. The queen of Sheba came to prove the wiſdom of Solomon, by propoſing riddles to him, for him to explain. 1 Kings x. 1. 2 Chron. ix. 1. Daniel deſired of him who had the care of feeding him and his companions to prove them for ſome days, whether the abſtaining from polluted food would make them leaner. Dan. i. 12, 14. The ſcribes and phariſees often tempted our Saviour in the goſpel, and endeavoured to decoy him into their ſnares. Matt. xvi. 1. xix. 3. xxii. 18. alibi paſſim.

TEMPTATION, the name of an encampment of Iſrael, in the wilderneſs: Exod. xvii. 7. See Maſſah, which in Hebrew ſignifies temptation. The ſame encampment is alſo called Rephidim. Deut. vi. 16. Here Moſes brought water out of the rock Horeb.

TENT. See Tabernacle. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CCVI. page 26.

TEPHILIM, or Tepilim, otherwiſe Totaphot, Frontals or Phylacteries, which the Jews uſed at their morning-prayer, and ſome devotees alſo at evening-prayer: but, except the chanter, few put them on then. See PHYLACTERIES. The Jews took, in a literal ſenſe, the commandment to wear the words of the law as a ſign upon their forehead. See TALED: But, that they may not expoſe themſelves to railery, and to preſerve the reſpect due to ſo ſacred a thing, they only wear them at prayer time. Leo of Modena, Cerem. Jews, cap. 5.

They hold theſe Tephilim, or phylacteries, ſo ſacred, that ſome of them perſuade themſelves that even God himſelf wears them, at his head and arms, as well as the Jews. And this is not one of thoſe allegories, under which their doctors conceal a figurative ſenſe; for they maintain, that when God permitted Moſes to ſee him behind, he only had a mind to ſhew him the knot of the ſtring that tied the Tephilim to his head; and that the face which he refuſed to diſcover to this legiſlator, was properly, truly, and ſubſtantially the face of God. Thus they extol the original and excellence of their Tephilim!

And

And they are not wrong in referring the origin of them to God himſelf, if we are to take in a literal ſenſe, thoſe expreſſions of Moſes, Deut. vi. 8, 9. And thou ſhalt bind them for a ſign upon thine hands, and they ſhall be as frontlets between thine eyes; and thou ſhalt write them upon the poſts of thine houſe, and on thy gates. As theſe laſt words are taken literally, which relate to the writing of the words of the law on the poſts of the houſes; ſo the command of wearing them on their foreheads muſt not be underſtood as a mere allegory. It is obſerved, that as the Pagans wore their phylacteries, or amulets, on ſeveral parts of their bodies, ſo God commanded his people to wear Tephilim on their foreheads and their arms; to remind them of the law of God, and to avert from his people the ſuperſtitious abuſe of the taliſmans, and phylacteries, of the Pagans.

But St. Jerom maintains, in which he is followed alſo by ſeveral learned commentators, that the words of Moſes ſhould be underſtood in a figurative ſenſe, and that the ancient Jews did not otherwiſe underſtand them: And it is only ſince the time of the Phariſees that they were taken literally. Jeſus Chriſt did not abſolutely condemn the uſe of the Tephilim, but he blamed the affectation of the Phariſees, who muſt needs wear them much larger, and broader, than other men; I mean, than other men who wore them; for it is not probable that all men wore them, generally. See the commentators on Matth. xxiii. 5. Vide Plate of PHYLACTERIES.

TERAH, תרח, to breathe, to ſcent, to blow; from רוח rich.

TERAH, or Thare, ſon of Nahor, and father of Nahor, Haran, and Abraham. Gen. xi. 24. born A. M. 1878, ante A. D. 2126. He begat Abraham at the age of ſeventy-two years, A. M. 2008, ante A. D. 1996. He came with Abraham out of Ur of the Chaldeans, to ſettle at Haran in Meſopotamia, A. M. 2082. Gen. xi. 31, 32. He died there the ſame year, aged two hundred and ſeventy-five years.

Scripture ſays plainly, that Terah had fallen into idolatry. Joſh. xxiv. 2—14. Your fathers dwelt on the other ſide of the flood in old times; even Terah, the father of Abraham, and the father of Nahor; and they ſerved other gods. Some think that Abraham himſelf, at firſt, worſhipped idols; but, that afterwards God being gracious to him, convinced him of the vanity of this worſhip, and that he undeceived his father Terah.

The Arabians and Turks ſay, that one Azar was the father of Abraham, and that Terah was his grandfather. Biblioth. Orient. p. 12. Juſtin ſays, that Adores, Abraham, and Iſrael, reigned ſucceſſively at Damaſcus. Juſtin. lib. xxxvi. Suidas aſſures us, that Abraham converted his father Terah, who was an idolater; and Georgius Syncellus acquaints us, that he threw his father Terah's idols into the fire, and that Haran endeavouring to reſcue them from the flames, was burned with them; that Terah having at firſt quitted the worſhip of theſe falſe gods, afterwards relapſed into his former idolatry, and continued obſtinate in it till his dying day. Syncel. Chronic. page 99. For a hiſtory relating to his idols, vide ABRAHAM.

Several of the Orientals think, that Azor is the ſame as Terah, Abraham's father. The Perſians and the Turks call him Pour-Tiraſch; i. e. the carver of idols. For it is a tradition among the Muſſulmen that he was not only an idolater, but alſo a maker, and vender, of idols; that he had great diſputes with his ſon Abraham on this account; and that he accuſed him before Nimrod, who cauſed him to be caſt into a burning furnace, from whence Abraham came out ſafe.

TERAPHIM, תרפים, from תרף an image, an idol. [or from ſeraph, burning.]

TERAPHIM, or Theraphim. It is ſaid, Gen. xxxi. 19. that Rachel had ſtolen the images—Teraphim, of her father. Heb. תרפים Theraphim. LXX. Εἴδωλα. Aqu. Μορφώματα Figuræ. Symmac. & Theodot. Θεραφειν. It is enquired, what theſe Teraphim were? The LXX. ſometimes tranſlate this word by oracle, Hoſ. iii. 4. Δήλης. Zech. x. ii. Ἀποφθεγγομενης. and ſometimes by vain figures. Κενοταφία. 1 Sam. xix. 13. It appears indeed from all the paſſages in which this word is uſed, that they were idols or ſuperſtitious figures. The Jews ſay it was the head of a man, taken off from the trunk, and embalmed; under the tongue of which was put a plate of gold, with the name of a falſe deity; that this head was placed in a niche, that candles were lighted up to it, and that they pretended to divine by it.

Others think the teraphim were taliſmans, i. e. metal figures, caſt and engraven under certain aſpects of the planets, to which they aſcribed extraordinary effects; in proportion to the nature of the metal, to the qualities of the planet, and to the figures repreſented on the taliſman. This opinion appears the moſt probable. All the eaſtern people are ſtill much addicted to this ſuperſtition of taliſmans. The Perſians call them telefin, Chardin. tom. ii. of the ſcience of the Perſians, cap. x. a name nearly approaching to teraphim. In that country no man is ſeen without them, and ſome are even loaded with them. They impute many virtues to them them. They hang ſome to the necks of animals; and to the cages of birds. But thoſe of Rachel muſt be groſs images, and of ſome precious metal. See Gen. xxxi. 19. 1 Sam. xv. 23. Ezek. xxi. 21. Zech. x. 2. where the word teraphim is uſed for an idol, or ſuperſtitious figure.

It is aſked, Why Rachel ſtole the teraphim of her father Laban? Some have thought it was to receive reparation for wrongs he had done her. Others imagine, that ſhe thought to deprive him of the means of diſcovering their flight, by taking away his oracles. Others ſay, that with the teraphim ſhe thought to take the proſperity of her father's houſe, and transfer it to her huſband. Some, that ſhe intended to remove the occaſion of her father's ſuperſtitious worſhip, and to ſtop his idolatry: and ſome believe that both ſhe and her ſiſter Leah were addicted to this idolatrous ſuperſtition, which they wiſhed to continue in the land of Canaan But Jacob compelled them to diſcard all theſe falſe deities, which he afterwards hid under the oak, near Shechem. Gen. xxxv. 4.

Beſide this ſuperſtitious teraphim, Scripture ſpeaks of two other kinds. The firſt are thoſe that Michal put into David's bed, pretending he was there ſick. 1 Sam. xix. 9. And Michal took an image [teraphim] and laid it in the bed. Probably a figure of ſticks, made up in haſte, dreſſed with cloaths like a great baby; or like one of thoſe malkins that countrymen ſet up in the fields to fright the birds from their corn. Michal put it in her huſband's bed, to make thoſe who were ſent by her father, believe he was there ſick. Vide FRAGMENTS, No.

The other teraphim mentioned in Scripture, were thoſe the Jews conſulted, without imagining that by this they abandoned the worſhip of the Lord. Such was the teraphim that Micah made, and ſet up in his houſe, Judg. xvii. 5, &c. to which he appointed a prieſt of the race of Levi; by the power of which he flattered himſelf that God would bleſs his houſe, &c. Judg. xviii. 14, 17, &c. It was, probably, ſome hieroglyphical figure, to which the ſuperſtitious Jews attributed the virtue of an oracle, and the power of foretelling things to come. It would be raſh to undertake to deſcribe it; but we may imagine, it was pretty like the cherubim; i. e. ſomething compoſed of the parts of ſeveral animals, a collection that did not ſubſiſt in nature; a mere chimera; e. gr. a man with wings, having the feet of an ox, and the head of a bird; or ſome other figure of a like nature. [Vide CHERUBIM, Plate III.]

The prophet Hoſea, iii. 4, 5. threatening Iſrael, ſays, The children of Iſrael ſhall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a ſacrifice, and without an image, and without an ephod, and without teraphim; i. e. that during their captivity they ſhould have no public exerciſe of their religion. They had indeed before, their altars, ephods, teraphim, while they paid their impious adoration to the golden calves; but after they were led into captivity beyond the Euphrates, they had no longer prieſts or altars, ſacrifices or ephods, teraphim, golden calves, or other ſuperſtitious figures, from which they might receive anſwers, whether true or falſe, and which they might worſhip.

Spencer pretends, Tract. de Urim & Thummim, that the word teraphim is Chaldee, and that it is the ſame as ſeraphim, changing the Hebrew ש ſhin into ת tau, i. e. ſ into t, which is very common. He maintains that the images of teraphim are derived originally from the Amorites, the Chaldeans, and the Syrians: He adds, that the god Seraphis of the Egyptians is the ſame as teraphim. It may be added, that the flying ſerpent called ſeraph, might give occaſion to the naming thoſe angels ſeraphim which appeared to the prophets, and which are repreſented as flying round about the throne of God. The heathen gave ſuch kind of likeneſſes to their ſuperſtitious and magical figures. We know that the abraxes, which are real taliſmans, or teraphim, are adorned with groteſque figures formed after a thouſand manners. Sometimes there is a ſerpent having a radiating head: Sometimes a human figure with a cock's head, and the arms terminating in two ſerpents, which are inſtead of feet and legs, to the figure. Laſtly, the ſerpent is there repreſented after ſeveral manners. The god Seraphis is alſo almoſt always accompanied by ſerpents, which winde about him. There are figures of Mithras, or the ſun, having four wings, like the ſeraphim, with the head of a lion, over which is the head of a ſerpent, the body of which infolds the whole ſtatue.

All this, in my opinion, very well exhibits the teraphim. As theſe ſuperſtitious taliſmans were common to almoſt all the eaſt, it is natural to think that every perſon engraved thereon a repreſentation of that deity which he thought moſt powerful, and favourable. The ſun was worſhipped by almoſt all the world; the ſerpent was one of his ſymbols: The ſun was a beneficent deity, the god of good fortune. The Orientals generally repreſented him on their taliſmans, ſometimes under one emblem, ſometimes times under another. The Jews, who had lived long in Egypt, always ſhewed an inclination to worſhip Egyptian gods rather than others. Hence proceeded the worſhip of the golden calf, in the wilderneſs, and in the kingdom of Jeroboam. It is therefore probable that the teraphim of Laban, ſtolen by Rachel, were hieroglyphical figures and taliſmans, reſembling thoſe of the Syrians; that the teraphim of Micah were nearly approaching to the cherubim of Moſes, or, to the ſeraphim deſcribed by Iſaiah. In a word, that theſe figures were by no means uniform, no more than the cherubim and ſeraphim deſcribed in Scripture. Every one made them, or cauſed them to be made, according to his own fancy and devotion.

The Rabbins pretend, as R. David Kimchi, that the teraphim were not mere idols, but were idols that gave oracles, and foretold future events. Rabbi David, of Pomire, ſays, they had a human ſhape, and that, when they were once ſet up, and dedicated, they ſpoke, and gave anſwers at certain hours, and under certain conſtellations, by the influence of the heavenly bodies; and that this influence was communicated to them by the art of him who made them, of a certain metal, with certain characters, and under certain aſpects of the ſtars.

Rabbi Eliezer pretends, Ch. xxxvi. that the teraphim ſpoke. He proves it by thoſe words of Zech. x. 2. The teraphim ſpeak vain things. To make a teraphim, according to this Rabbi, they proceeded thus, They killed a firſt-born child, clove his head open, ſprinkled it with ſalt and oil, and wrote the name of ſome unclean ſpirit on a plate of gold, which plate they put under the tongue of the dead child. They ſet his head in a niche in the wall, where they lighted up lamps, prayed to it, and aſked it queſtions, which it anſwered.

This account of Eliezer has much of the air of a fable; and yet Rabbi Tanthuma, and Jonathan the paraphraſt, targum in Gen. xxx. relate it in the ſame manner. But, as we ſaid before, we muſt not imagine that there was but one kind of teraphim: this name was given to very different things, as well in matter as figure. The teraphim laid in David's bed, to make it be thought that he was there himſelf, muſt have been large. Thoſe which Hoſea ſpeaks of, as conſulted by the Iſraelites, and thoſe of Micah, probably repreſented either the cherubim of the ark of the covenant, or ſome ſuperſtitious figure; but however, ſuch as the Iſraelites thought they might reconcile the worſhip of, with the worſhip of the Lord. The greater part of the abraxas, which were certainly a kind of taliſmans, or teraphim, have the name of God upon them, as Iao, Adonai, Elohim, &c.

Father Kircher, Oedip. Ægypt. Synt. iv. cap. 3. and after him Cuneus, in his Republic of the Hebrews, maintain that all idolatry came from Egypt; and that the uſe of Teraphim paſſed from that country into the eaſt; for that Ham, or his ſon Mizraim, were the inventors of ſtatues; which the Egyptians had in ſuch great multitudes, that no city, village, high-way, or croſs-way, was without them. They aſcribed many virtues to them, eſpecially to ſuch as were formed under the aſpects of certain ſtars and conſtellations. It was thought they had the power of foretelling future events, of revealing things concealed, of preventing evils threatened, and of procuring certain advantages, as that of pleaſing, of being lucky at play, or in trade. The rabbins own that the word teraphim is foreign from the Hebrew tongue, whence it is concluded that it is Egyptian; and the ſame as ſerapis. Abenephius aſſures us, that when Abraham abode in Egypt, his domeſtics were tainted with this kind of idolatry, and carried it with them into Canaan; from them it paſſed into the family of Laban. All this is very precarious; and it would be very difficult to produce vouchers for it.

A modern author has propoſed another conjecture concerning the teraphim Jurieu, Hiſt. des Cultes, conceives that the teraphim, Rachel ſtole, might be the Dii Penates, the houſhold gods of Laban. Theſe gods, who were ſet up in the highways, were alſo the guardians of the houſe. Ovid, ſays of Lauriunda, the mother of the gods Lares and Viales, that ſhe brought forth two ſons who were the tutelar gods of croſs-ways and of private houſes:

> Fitque gravis, geminoſque parit, qui compita ſervant,
> Et vigilant noſtrâ ſemper in æde Lares.
> OVID. FAST. lib. ii.

Theſe Lares, and gods of the high-ways, were the ſouls of the heroes of the family, who had been deified, and then worſhipped. Thus the teraphim of Laban, according to this author, were images of Noah, the reſtorer of mankind, and of Shem, the head of Laban's family. This, according to him, was the firſt inſtitution of domeſtic gods. There were but two of them, and their worſhip was introduced quickly after the deluge. Laban does not only complain that gods, or ſtatues, had been ſtolen from him, in which he put confidence, and to which he paid a religious adoration; but he complains that that he was deprived of his gods: i. e. the gods of his family, Geneſis xxxi. 30.

But this conjecture is not more ſatisfactory than the preceding. It is not credible, that the worſhip of the gods Lares and Penates was known in the time of Laban; and I am much in doubt, whether it was in uſe among the people of the eaſt for ſeveral ages after this patriarch.

Nor is it probable that Laban would place among his gods the patriarchs Noah and Shem, who had been dead ſo little a while before: For Noah died, A.M. 2006, and Shem, A.M. 2158; i. e. only 87 years before Jacob came to Laban. Vide FRAGMENT, and Plate "of TERAPHIM."

TEREBINTHUS, the turpentine-tree. The Vulgate, and Septuagint, generally tranſlate by Terebinthus, the Hebrew word Elah, or Aleh, אלה Elah, LXX. Τερέβινθος. Vulg. Terebinthus. Aliquando, Βάλανος. Aliquando Δρῦς, Quercus, Gen. xxxv. 4, 8, &c. which others render by an oak, an elm, a cheſnut-tree, or in general, a tree. St. Jerom is not more uniform in his tranſlation of this word; for ſometimes he renders it by quercus, or ilex, an oak. The terebinthus is a tree whoſe wood and bark reſembles the lentiſk-tree, and whoſe leaves are like thoſe of the Aſh, but a little thicker, and more glutinous. Its flower reſembles that of the olive, and its fruit grows in bunches or cluſters. This fruit is hard, reſinous, the ſize of juniper-berries. A reſin, or gum, diſtils from the trunk. This tree was frequent in Judea.

The terebinthus, under which Abraham entertained three angels, is very famous in antiquity, Gen. xviii. 1, 2, &c. Joſephus ſays, de bell. lib. iv. cap. 7. that ſix furlongs from Hebron they ſhewed a very large terebinthus, which the inhabitants of the country thought to be as old as the world itſelf. Euſebius aſſures us, that in his time the terebinthus of Abraham was ſtill to be ſeen, and that the people, both Chriſtians and Gentiles, held it in great veneration, as well for the ſake of Abraham, as of the heavenly gueſts he entertained under it. St. Jerom ſays, this terebinthus was two miles from Hebron. Sozomen, Hiſt. lib. ii. cap. 4. places it fifteen ſtadia from this city; and an old itinerary puts it at two miles. Theſe varieties might make one doubt whether the terebinthus Joſephus ſpeaks of, were the ſame as that of Euſebius, St. Jerom, and Sozomen.

Some ancients have pretended, that this terebinthus was the ſtaff of one of the three angels, entertained by Abraham, who fixing it in the earth, it took root, and became a great tree. At the foot of this tree was an altar, on which were offered prophane ſacrifices; which the emperor Conſtantine being informed of, wrote to Euſebius, biſhop of Cæſarea, to pull down the altar, and to build an oratory in the place. Vide Socrat. Hiſt. lib. i. cap. 18. Euſeb. de vitâ Conſtant. lib. iii. cap. 52.

It is ſaid that when this terebinthus was ſet on fire, the flame ſeized it all at once, but after the fire was extinguiſhed, the tree was as whole and ſound as before. The concourſe of people, who came from all parts to viſit this terebinthus, occaſioned a fair to be kept here. St. Jerom, and ſome others tell us, that after the war of the emperor Adrian againſt the Jews, they ſold here a great multitude of ſlaves of this nation, at a very low price; and that ſuch as could not be put off here, were carried into Egypt, or periſhed miſerably. Sanutus, in Secret. fidel. crucis. p. 248. informs us, that the trunk of this terebinthus was ſtill in being in his time; and that ſome people carried it away in pieces, to which they aſcribed great virtues.

The terebinthus of Jacob, where he buried the gods that his people had brought out of Meſopotamia, Gen. xxxv. 4. was behind the city of Shechem, and very different from that where Abraham had ſet up his tent, near Hebron; yet they have been very abſurdly confounded together. It is thought to be under this ſame terebinthus, (which the Vulgate calls an oak, Joſh. xxiv. 26.) that Joſhua renewed the covenant with the Lord; and that Abimelech, the ſon of Gideon, was made king by the Shechemites. Judg. ix. 6.

TERESH, תרש. See THARRA. Heir, miſerable, or baniſhed; from ירש jaraſh. This name is Mediſh or Perſian; and therefore its etymology cannot be found in the Hebrew.

TERTIUS, Τέρτιος. A Latin word, the third.

TERTIUS, was St. Paul's amanuenſis, when he wrote his epiſtle to the Romans, A. D. 58. I Tertius, who wrote this epiſtle, ſalute you in the Lord. Rom. xvi. 22. Some think that Tertius copied this letter from the original written by St. Paul's own hand. Lightfoot, Chorograph. p. 123. conjectures that Tertius is the ſame as Silas, who accompanied St. Paul in ſome of his journies. Silas in Hebrew ſignifies the ſame as Tertius in Latin. Some Greek editions inſtead of Tertius read Terentius. The Greeks keep his feaſt, November 10, and give him great commendations. They make him ſucceſſor to Soſipater in the biſhopric of Iconium.

TERTULLUS, Τέρτυλλος, a liar, an impoſtor; from the Greek τερατόλογος, a teller of ſtories, a cheat. [q. was his true appellation Ter-Tullius, "thrice Tully;" varied by Jewiſh wit into Tertullus?]

TERTULLUS, an advocate who pleaded againſt St. Paul, before Felix, governor of Judea, A.D. 58. Acts xxiv. 1—9. Some have thought that Tertullus afterwards became a convert.

TESTAMENT, is commonly taken in Scripture for covenant, and anſwers to the Hebrew ברית Berith. Greek Διαθήκη, Teſtamentum. the Greeks have rendered it by Diatheke, which ſignifies an act of the laſt will of a perſon who hath death in view, and who diſpoſes of his eſtate, and gives orders to be fulfilled after his deceaſe. The word teſtament is no where found in this ſenſe, that I know of, in the Old Teſtament, but only in the ſenſe of pact, or covenant. But St. Paul, Heb. ix. 15, &c. arguing about the Greek word diatheke, which ſignifies the teſtament of one that declares his laſt will, makes uſe of theſe words, And for this cauſe he is the mediator of the New Teſtament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the tranſgreſſions that were under the firſt teſtament, they which are called might receive the promiſe of eternal inheritance. For where a teſtament is, there muſt alſo of neceſſity be the death of the teſtator; for a teſtament is of force after men are dead, otherwiſe it is of no ſtrength at all whilſt the teſtator liveth; whereupon neither the firſt teſtament was dedicated without blood. Where we may obſerve, that he ſpeaks of the old and new covenants, as of two teſtaments, in the ſenſe of a perſon's making his laſt will. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXXIX. pages 50, 51.

In Galatians iii. 15, 17. he ſpeaks alſo of the covenant God made with Abraham, under the notion of an ordinary teſtament. Brethren, ſays he, I ſpeak after the manner of men; though it be but a man's covenant, (or teſtament) yet if it be confirmed, no man diſannulleth, or addeth thereto.

But in the Old and New Teſtament, the word teſtamentum generally ſignifies the covenant, the law, the promiſes. So, Exod. xxx. 26. the ark of the teſtament, ſtands for that cheſt, or coffer, wherein were depoſited the tables of the law of the covenant. Ecclus. xlv. 30. Teſtamentum pacis, the covenant of peace: ibid xlvii. 13. Teſtamentum regni, the promiſe by which God engages to give the kingdom. Pſalm lxxiv. 20. Reſpice in teſtamentum tuum, remember thy promiſes, thy covenant: Non profanabo teſtamentum tuum, I ſhall not fail of performing my promiſes. Iſai. xiv. 13. Sedebo in monte teſtamenti, I will ſit down upon the mountain of the temple, where the ark of the covenant is laid up: Mal. iii. 1. Angelus teſtamenti, the Son of God, who was to renew the covenant. Matth. xxvi. 28. Sanguis novi teſtamenti, the blood that confirms the new covenant. Acts vii. 8. Dedit illi teſtamentum circumciſionis, God made a covenant with Abraham, by enjoining circumciſion to himſelf and to his poſterity. Vide COVENANT, ad finem.

The Revelation of St. John.

The word teſtament is ſometimes uſed for the law of God: Pſalm xliv. 17. Iniquè non egimus in teſtamento tuo, we have not tranſgreſſed thy laws. And, Pſal. l. 16. Quare tu aſſumis teſtamentum meum per os tuum, why doſt thou pronounce the words of my law: And, Pſ. lxxviii. 10. Non cuſtodierunt teſtamentum Dei, & in lege ejus noluerunt ambulare, they have not kept the laws of the Lord, to walk in them.

Teſtamentum inferorum, the covenant of the grave, or that ſentence pronounced againſt man, that All muſt die: The Greek ſays, Eccleſ. xvii 12. Διαθήκη ἅδε ȣ ὑπεδειχθη σοι. The covenant of the God of the dead has not been ſhewn to you: Pluto has not informed you how long you have to to live. This expreſſion is borrowed from the religion of the Pagans; but it is eaſy to affix a good idea to it, by ſubſtituting the true God inſtead of Pluto.

Daniel ſays, that during the perſecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, Dan. xi. 32. מרשיעי ברית יחניף בהלקות, the wicked would diſſemble with the holy covenant: Teſtamentum ſimulabunt fraudulenter; the Hebrew ſays, by his careſſes he will oblige the prevaricators of the covenant to diſſemble or diſguiſe their belief. And indeed many of the Jews renounced their religion, others diſſembled their ſentiments. And in the Maccabees, 2 Macc. vii. 36. Ἀεννάϑ ζωῆς ὑπὸ διαθήκην ϑεῦ πεπῖώκασι. Fratres mei ſub teſtamento æterniæ vitæ effecti ſunt, My brethren are dead in the hope of eternal life: The Greek may be tranſlated, They are dead for the covenant that God gave them, which he has ſworn to them of everlaſting life.

The orientals being fruitful in fictions, have trumped up teſtaments of Adam, of Noah, of Abraham, of Job, of Moſes, of Solomon, and of the twelve patriarchs, the ſons of Jacob. It is obvious how little credit is to be given to theſe things: But, however, we ſhould ſupply the reader with ſome juſt reaſons for deſpiſing them. They tell us, ſay Elmacim. & Eutych. Alex. apud. Fabric. Apochryph. V. T. tom. ii. page 35. that Adam, a little before his death called to him Seth, Enoch, Cainan, and Mahalaleel, and bid them take his body after his death, and bury it in the middle of the earth, i. e. on mount Calvary, near Jeruſalem. A Mahometan author ſays, that the firſt father made his will, and had it wrote and ſigned by the angel Gabriel, and ſixty thouſand other angels, and depoſited it with the patriarch Seth, his ſon.

As to Noah's teſtament, it is pretended, Georg. Syncell. Abulpharag. Dynaſt. p. 9, 10. Eutych. tom. i. Annal. p. 44. that when he was nine hundred and thirty four years of age, he made a diſtribution of the earth to his three ſons. He gave to Ham the blacks, to Japhet the ruddy, and to Shem the brown: [Vide FRAGMENT, No. XX.] That he ordered Shem to take Melchiſedech with him, and to carry the coffin which contained the body of Adam to ſuch a place as the angel of the Lord ſhould conduct them; which Shem did not fail to perform.

Lambecius ſpeaks of a Greek manuſcript, called The Teſtament of Abraham; but this is a modern work, and altogether fabulous.

In the catalogue of Apocryphal books condemned by pope Gelaſius, we read of The Teſtament of Job: But the beſt copies, inſtead of Job read Jacob.

St. Athanaſius, in his Synopſis of Holy Scripture, and ſome other ancients, mention The Teſtament of Moſes, which was an Apocryphal book compoſed, probably, by the heretics called Sethians. M. Gilbert Gaulmin quotes, in ſome places of his notes upon Pſellus, a Greek MS. called The Teſtament of Solomon: But he informs us it is a bad work, compoſed by ſome modern Greek, who gave it the pompous name of Solomon's will, to recommend it.

The Teſtament of the twelve Patriarchs, is an Apocryphal work compoſed in Greek by ſome converted Jew, in the firſt or ſecond century. Origen had ſeen this work, and found ſome good ſenſe in it; though the Jews did not admit it into their canon. It was long unknown to the learned of Europe, and even to the Greeks. Robert Groſſeteſte (Great-head) biſhop of Lincoln, having received intelligence of it from Johan de Baſingſtoke, deacon of Legies, who had ſtudied at Athens, ſent for a Greek copy into England, and tranſlated it into Latin by the aſſiſtance of Maſter Nicolas, a Grecian by birth, and a clergyman belonging to St. Alban's, about A. D. 1252. Afterwards, it was publiſhed in Greek, by Dr. Grabe, in his Spicilegium S. Patrum, and by M. Fabricius, in his Apocryphal books of the Old Teſtament. This author gives particulars of the life and death of the twelve patriarchs, whom he makes to ſpeak, to relate, and to foretell, whatever he thinks proper. He ſpeaks of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, of the coming of the Meſſiah, of the actions of his life, and even of the writings of the evangeliſts, in a manner that can agree to none but a Chriſtian, but very probably a convert from Judaiſm, and ſtill poſſeſſed with many prejudices of his nation.

TESTIMONY, Teſtimonium. This word is taken

1. For the teſtimony, or witneſſing exhibited in a court of juſtice, by affirming or denying ſomething, about which we are judicially interrogated. Scripture prohibits falſe teſtimony, in ſeveral places. Exod. xx. 16. xxiii. 1.
2. Teſtimony is uſed for a monument or memorial. So, Gen. xxxi. 47, 48, 52. this heap be witneſs, or bear teſtimony: Jegar-ſahadutha, the heap of teſtimony. The tribes of Iſrael that abode beyond Jordan raiſed a kind of very high altar on the banks of that river, to ſerve as a teſtimony, or monument, of their union with their brethren who dwelt on this ſide Jordan. Joſh. xxii. 27.
3. Teſtimony is often put for the law of the Lord, becauſe when the Lord gave it to the Iſraelites, he gave teſtimony of his preſence by prodigies performed in their ſight, and he required an oath of them, that they ſhould continue faithful to him. Teſtimonium, in ſome ſenſe, is equivalent to Juramentum: thus the ark is called The ark of Teſtimony, becauſe it contained the tables of the law; ſo the Tabernacle of Teſtimony, becauſe that was the tent wherein the tables of the law were kept. In Pſal. cxix. teſtimonies are often put for the law of the Lord, for the wonders he had performed, and for the inſtructions he had given to his people: his ſtatutes, judgments, ordinances, &c.

St. Jerom often tranſlates the Hebrew word Moed by teſtimony. Thus tabernaclum teſtimonii, the tent of teſtimony, אהל מועד Ohel mohed, Tabernaculum conventionis, vel cætûs. But Moed ſignifies more properly aſſembly, convention; becauſe, at the entrance of this tent, or tabernacle, the people aſſembled; and here Moſes declared and promulgated to them the orders he had received from the Lord.

Teſtimony is ſometimes taken, alſo, in the ſenſe of praiſe. Acts x. 22. It is ſaid Cornelius the centurion had a good teſtimony from the whole nation of the Jews. Vir Juſtus & timens Deum, & teſtimonium habens ab univerſâ gente Judæorum: And, Acts vi. 3. Men of good teſtimony. Viros boni teſtimonii ſeptem: perſons to whom every body gives a good character.

Sometimes the ark of the covenant is called abſolutely, Teſtimonium; becauſe it included the tables of the law, or of teſtimony. So it is ſaid, Aaron put an omer of manna into the teſtimony. Exod. xvi. 34. לפני חעדת Coram teſtimonio. The Vulgate reads in tabernaculo, but the Hebrew, in teſtimonio. In 2 Kings xi. 12. the book of the law, or the volume which was uſed to be put upon the king's head on his coronation-day, was called teſtimonium: Produxit filium regis, & poſuit ſuper eum diadema & Teſtimonium. Iſaiah, vii. 16. calls teſtimonium a writing he had drawn up by the Lord's command, containing a prophecy he had pronounced, and written in the preſence of two witneſſes. God bids him ſeal it up, till the time appointed: Liga Teſtimonium, ſigna legem, &c.

In the New Teſtament Teſtimonium is put for that atteſtation which is given to the probity of any one. John i. 8. John Baptiſt came to bear teſtimony to the light; to declare that Chriſt was come, and to confirm that Jeſus was the true Meſſiah. John v. 31. Jeſus Chriſt ſays, that if he gave teſtimony of himſelf, on that account his teſtimony would not be true; q. d. we are not obliged to be determined by one who is judge in his own cauſe, and who proclaims his own qualifications: It is to be preſumed he would extol himſelf. His heavenly father, and the works of Jeſus Chriſt, as well as (viva voce) John the Baptiſt, bear ſufficient teſtimony to him; and their teſtimony ought to be eſteemed of irrefragable authority.

TETRAGRAMMATON, or name of four letters. Τετραγράμματον, nomen quatuor literarum. Thus the name Jehovah is often called; which the Hebrews, out of reſpect, never pronounce: but ſay Adonai, or Elohim; and when they have occaſion to mention this ſacred name, they call it Shem-hamphoraſh, i. e. The name explanatory; the Greeks chuſe rather to ſay Tetragrammaton, or name of four letters, י jod, ה he, ו vau, ה he: יהוה which we pronounce Jehovah.

TETRAPLA of Origen. Thus Origen called his edition of the Bible; in which he had placed, in four columns one againſt another, the four verſions, of the Septuagint, of Aquila, of Symmachus, and of Theodotion. Tetrapla in Greek properly ſignifies four-fold, or compoſed of four parts.

TETRARCH, Τετράρχης, governor of a fourth part:

TETRARCH. This word, ſtrictly taken, according to the force of the Greek, ſignifies a ſovereign who hath the fourth part of a ſtate, province, or kingdom, under his dominion; without wearing the diadem, or bearing the title of king. The word tetrarch is ſometimes found in Scripture, as Matth. xiv. 1. Luke iii. 1, 19. ix. 7. Acts xiii. 1. and was frequent among the deſcendants of Herod the Great; to whom the Roman emperors diſtributed his dominions at their pleaſure. But the words tetrarch, and tetrarchy ought not to be underſtood rigorouſly, though indeed they ſignify but a fourth part of a kingdom, or province. The name tetrarch was given to him who poſſeſſed, perhaps an half, or, a third part. Often alſo the name of a king was given to him who was but a tetrarch; and the name of kingdom was given to a tetrarchy.

TEXT of Scripture, may be taken in ſeveral ſenſes:

1. By way of oppoſition to a gloſs, comment, or explication; without any reſpect to the language in which the text is written, whether it be the original, or a tranſlation. For example, the text obſerves, that God was angry, or God repented; and the gloſs acquaints us that this muſt be taken in a figurative ſenſe; i. e. God acted as though he had been angry, or, as if he had repented.
2. The Text of Scripture is put in oppoſition to tranſlations made from it. Thus, the He- brew text of the Old Teſtament, and the Greek text of the New, are the originals from whence all tranſlations are derived. We muſt have recourſe to theſe originals to underſtand well the ſenſe of the tranſlations.

The original text of all the books of the Old Teſtament, which are received into the canon by the Jews, is the Hebrew. The books called Apocryphal, are in Greeek: of ſome, this Greek is the original; of others, it may be a tranſlation; but this is uncertain. However, the Greek, which is the oldeſt verſion, is now accounted as the original. We have no certain proof that the book of Wiſdom, and the ſecond book of Maccabees, were written originally, either in Syriac, or in Hebrew.

The original text of the books of the New Teſtament is in Greek; though it be certain that Matthew wrote a goſpel in Hebrew, and ſome think Mark wrote his goſpel in Latin, and that Paul wrote his epiſtle to the Romans in Latin, and his epiſtle to the Hebrews in Hebrew. But as the original Hebrew of Matthew is loſt, and as there are good proofs that all the other books of the New Teſtament were written in Greek, the Greek paſſes for the original language of all the New Teſtament.

For the Samaritan text, ſee SAMARITAN.

Though it cannot be maintained that our copies of the original texts of the Old and New Teſtaments are now entirely free from faults, yet it muſt be agreed that they are perfectly authentic, and that the faults which by length of time, or by the negligence of tranſcribers, have crept into the text, are not of ſuch conſequence as to cauſe them to be looked on as corrupted fountains, or as of no authority. Theſe faults are not numerous, nor of great importance, nor radical. If perhaps, ſome date may be changed, ſome proper name of a perſon, or a city, or the like, may be altered and corrupted, theſe defects may be ſupplied, either by the aſſiſtance of ancient manuſcripts, or of old tranſlations, made before ſuch alterations happened in the text. Some of the ancient fathers complained that the Jews had purpoſely corrupted ſeveral paſſages of the Old Teſtament, which they thought too favourable to Jeſus Chriſt: But this accuſation has not been well ſupported. The paſſages which they have been charged with as having taken out of the Hebrew text, were probably never in it. See Jerom on Iſa. vi. Euſebius, Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. iii. cap. 10. St. Auguſt. lib. xv. cap. 13. de Civitate Dei. Juſtin. Dialog. cum. Tryphone. Tertull. de habitu muliere. cap. iii. Origen. Homil. 12 *in Jerem. Idem Epiſt. ad Jul. Afric. Chryſoſt. THADDEUS, Θαδδαῖος. Mark iii. 18. Matth. x. 3. Lebbeus. Lebbeus ſignifies a man of a good heart; Thaddeus, that praiſes and confeſſes; from ידה jadah, whence תודה thodah, or thadah.

I. THADDEUS. This is the ſurname of Jude the apoſtle, Vide JUDE. They willingly gave him the name Thaddeus, to avoid the name Judas, and for fear of confounding him with Judas Iſcariot, who for his treaſon was juſtly deteſted. To St. Thaddeus the apoſtle, has ſometimes been imputed what only agrees with St. Thaddeus the diſciple of Jeſus Chriſt, of whom we ſhall next ſpeak. St. Jerom on Matth. x. 4.

II. THADDEUS, or Tatteus, according to Ruſinus, was, as is believed, brother of St. Thomas the apoſtle: (The edition of Euſebius at Geneva, in 1612, page 23, and the Latin tranſlation of Muſculus, p. 13. read that Thaddeus was brother of St. Thomas; but neither the generality of manuſcripts, nor the verſion of Ruſinus, nor Nicephorus, mention this,) he was alſo one of the ſeventy diſciples. Soon after our Saviour's aſcenſion, St. Thomas ſent him from Jeruſalem to Edeſſa to king Abgarus. Jeſus Chriſt, they tell us, had wrote to this prince, promiſing to ſend him one of his diſciples, who ſhould cure him of a diſeaſe he then laboured under. When Thaddeus was come to Edeſſa, he lodged at firſt with one called Tobiah, where he ſoon became famous by the miracles he performed in the name of Jeſus Chriſt. Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. i. cap. 13.

Abgarus being informed of this, concluded Thaddeus muſt be the ſame whom our Saviour had promiſed to ſend, and had him brought to him by Tobiah. Abgarus fell at his feet, and aſked him if he was not the perſon who was to cure him? to which Thaddeus anſwered, Yes; that he was come to recompence him for his great faith: Then aſking him if he believed in Jeſus Chriſt, and in his Father? Abgarus affirmed that he believed with his whole heart; at the ſame time Thaddeus laid his hands upon him, and perfectly cured him. He did alſo many other miracles there, and converted the whole city. Abgarus offered him gold, but he refuſed it, ſaying, If we have abandoned our own goods, why ſhould we take thoſe of others? It is not known what Thaddeus did after this time, nor is his memory much celebrated by the church; becauſe he has not been well diſtinguiſhed from St, Jude. The Latins honour a St. Thaddeus on on May 11, whom they ſeem to make a martyr in Aſia: And the Greeks remember him Auguſt 21: they ſay he died in peace at Berytus in Phœnicia, after he had there baptized many perſons. Vide ABGARUS.

THAHASH, תחש, τόχος, that makes haſte; from חוש chuſh: or that keeps ſilence; from חשה chaſhah: or of the colour of hyacinth; from תחש thachaſh. This word alſo ſignifies an animal, whoſe ſkin was dyed of a violet or blue colour; Exod. xxv. 5. Some think it ſtands for a badger.

THAHASH, or Tachaſh, third ſon of Nahor and Reuma, Gen. xxii. 24.

THALASSA, Θάλασσα, λασαία, Gr. Laſæa, Acts xxvii. 8. Thick, hairy, graſſy; from λάσος. Thalaſſa ſignifies the ſea.

THALASSA, a city, or haven, in the ſouth of the iſle of Crete: called Laſea, or Laſſos, Acts xxvii. 8.

THALCA, a city of Simeon, Joſh. xix. 7. It is not in the Hebrew, but only in the Septuagint. Euſebius and St. Jerom ſpeak of a place called Thala, ſixteen miles from Eleutheropolis, ſouth.

THAMAH, תמה, that blots out, or ſuppreſſes; from מחא macha: otherwiſe, according to the Syriac, that ſmites:

THAMNA. See TIMNAH.

THANATH. A village ten miles from Shechem, toward the Jordan. St. Jerom calls it Thenath; Ptolemy alſo places Thena in Samaria.

THAPSACUS, a famous city on the Euphrates, where they paſſed over this river to go from Meſopotamia into Arabia Deſerta, or back again: not far from the mouth of the Chaboras, where it falls into the Euphrates. The ancient geographers have talked much of it. It appears to us, by the courſe that the kings of Aſſyria obſerved in coming towards Paleſtine, that they muſt have paſſed the Euphrates at Thapſacus.

THARRA, or Thara; one of the two eunuchs which conſpired againſt king Ahaſuerus, diſcovered by Mordecai. Eſth. xii. 1.

THASSI, Θασσι, that ſleeps, that forgets; from נשה naſhah: or תסי boiling, or תשי thaſhi, weak, or תיש tiſh, goat.

THASSI, or Thaſi, the ſurname of Simon Maccabeus, 1 Macc. ii. 3.

THAU, תו, σημεῖον, ſign, the laſt letter of the Hebrew alphabet.

THAU, or Tau, the laſt letter of the Hebrew alphabet, which they ſay had formerly the figure of an X, or a croſs †; Ita quidam Judæi ad Chriſtum converſi, apud Origen, Hieron. Sanct. Prado, &c. in Ezek. ix. And indeed this may be obſerved on the Samaritan medals, and other ancient monuments, vide Palæograph. Græc. D. Bernard. de Montfauc. lib. ii. cap. 1. p. 120, 121. where the letter Thau is very near this ſhape: and the greater part of commentators think that Ezekiel, ix. 4. והתוית תו על־מצחות האנשים, Signa Thau ſuper frontes virorum gementium, muſt be underſtood that the letter Thau, or the croſs, was marked on their foreheads. But why Thau rather than any other letter? Some ſay, becauſe this letter is the firſt in the word Thorah, the law. The Septuagint have tranſlated barely, LXX. Δὸς τὸ σημεῖον ἐπὶ τὰ μέλωπα. Et ita Aqu. & Sym. apud Hieron. in Ezech. Set a mark upon the foreheads of the men that ſigh. The Chaldee and the Syriac underſtood it in the ſame manner. [as does Eng. Tr.]

Origen, in a Fragment printed in the Hexapla, ſays, Aquila and Theodotion had it thus: Put the mark Thau upon the foreheads of thoſe that ſigh. But St. Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Euſebius of Ceſarea, and other Greeks, have followed the Seventy, and underſtood it of a particular mark put upon the foreheads of thoſe perſons, that they might not be confounded with the multitude doomed to death. The older Latin fathers read the ſame as the Septuagint.

The Samaritans were long accuſed with having expunged three letters out of their alphabet; but this has been cleared up, ſince their manuſcripts have been inſpected, and the ancient medals ſtruck in Phœnicia, bordering on their country: they can now only be reproached with having changed the ſhape of the letter Thau, which Origen, and other fathers that followed him, aſſures us had the form of a croſs. St. Jerom, who might have ſeen ancient copies of the Samaritan Pentateuch, informs us likewiſe, that their Thau had the figure of a croſs. This letter at this day has quite another ſhape; but we know by the medals, that the Thau really did reſemble a croſs. Is this change merely the effect of accident? of length of time? or, is it a contrivance of the Samaritans, to deprive us of a reference to the prophecy of Ezekiel? I decide nothing: but, it is certain, that ſuch changes are not frequent, except by deſign. If we compare the ancient Samaritan letters with the modern, there appears a much greater difference between the ancient and modern Thau, than between any other letters of the ſame alphabet.

THEATRE, Theatrum, the place where public ſhews were exhibited. Theſe buildings were in the the form of a ſemicircle, in which the ſpectators beheld the games that were repreſented on the ſcene, or ſtage, over-againſt them: the muſic was placed in the orcheſtrum. The word theatre is found but once in Scripture: in the tumult raiſed by Demetrius the ſilver-ſmith at Epheſus, having caught Gaius and Ariſtarchus, men of Macedonia, Paul's companions in travel, they ruſhed with one accord into the theatre, Acts xix. 29. [and ver. 31] A. D. 57.

THEBES, a very famous city in higher Egypt, and capital of the Thebais. Its name is not in the Vulgate, nor is the ancient Hebrew name known. Bochart, Phaleg. lib. iv. cap. 27. pretends it was the city of No ammon, or No, mentioned by the prophets, Ezek. xxx. 14, &c. Nahum iii. 8. Jerem. xlvi. 25. and which is commonly tranſlated by Alexandria. But we have endeavoured to prove from Nahum, that No-ammon rather ſignifies the city of Dioſpolis in Lower Egypt.

Theſe are the reaſons for believing that Thebes, the great Thebes, which had an hundred gates, which is celebrated in Homer, is denoted in Scripture by the name No, or Ammon-No, or No-Ammon, and in the Vulgate by Alexandria, Nahum iii. 8. נא־אמון No-ammon. Jerem. xlvi. 25. אמון מנא Ammon de No. Ezek. xxx. 14, 16. It is called only נו No, and ver. 15. המון־נא Hammon-No.

Nahum deſcribes the ſituation of No-Ammon, or of No the populous, the great; No ſignifies an habitation, and Hammon a great flock of people, a multitude of inhabitants. I cannot ſay whether that etymology may be admitted, which derives No-Ammon from Ham, as if it were the habitation of Ham, or of Hammon. For in the Hebrew it is never wrote with Cheth, but with Aleph, or with He. חם Ham, or Cham, אמין or המין No-Hammon, or No-Ammon.

Nahum thus deſcribes the ſituation of No-Ammon; Art thou better than populous No, that was ſituate among the rivers, that had the waters round about it, whoſe rampart was the ſea, and her wall was from the ſea? Thebes the capital of Thebais ſtands on the Nile. This river is often expreſſed in the plural number, becauſe of the multitude of its arms, inlets, and canals. A city ſo large as Thebes, having a circumference of four hundred ſtadia, which make thirteen leagues, and an hundred gates, full of multitudes of people, could not but be well watered by canals, ſince the waters of the Nile, could not of their own accord penetrate to all its parts, nor into its fields. Nahum adds, that the ſea was the occaſion of its riches. Thebes was at a great diſtance from the ſea; but by means of the Nile it might trade in the Mediterranean, might ſend merchandizes thither, and take advantage of the riches of this ſea, by veſſels. Beſides, by the name of ſea the ſacred authors often denote great rivers, particularly the Nile, and the Euphrates. Vide SEA.

Diodorus Siculus, lib. i. Bibl. obſerves, that the Grecians called Thebes Dioſpolis, i. e. the city of Jupiter. The Septuagint do the ſame, in Ezek. xxx. 14, 16. But the name Dioſpolis is modern, if compared with the ſacred authors. It was Alexander, after the conqueſt of the Greeks, who gave it this name. The ancient Thebes was demoliſhed and made deſolate, according to the predictions of the prophet: but they built near that, the city of Dioſpolis, or new Thebes, which was deſtroyed and ſacked by Cornelius Gallus, ſee Strabo, lib. xvii. M. d'Herbelot, in his Bibliotheca Orientalis, is of opinion, that the city of Coſs, in the Upper Thebais, on the Banks of the Nile, is the ancient and famous Thebes we are now ſpeaking of. Thebais is divided into Upper, Middle, and Lower. The cities of Aſouan, otherwiſe Sienna, that of Eſna, of Coos, and of Kiphe, which is the ancient Coptos, and Akſur, are in the Upper Thebais. Abdelmoel, an Arabian geographer, ſays, that after Grand Cairo, Coos is the largeſt city in Egypt. Vide AMNON No, ad fin.

THEBET, or Thevet, a month of the Hebrews. It anſwers to the moon of December; and is the tenth month of the holy year, and the fourth of the civil year.

THEBEZ, תבץ, muddy; from בץ botz, mud, boggy: or eggs; from ביץ bitz: otherwiſe, fine linen, or ſilk; from בוץ butz.

THEBEZ, or Thebes, a city of Ephraim, at the ſiege of which Abimelech, ſon of Gideon, was killed, Judg. ix. 50, &c. A. M. 2771. ante A. D. 1233. Euſebius ſays, there was a village called Thebes, thirteen miles from Shechem, toward Scythopolis.

THIEF. Among the Hebrews theft was not puniſhed with death: Prov. vi. 30, 31. Men do not deſpiſe a thief, if he ſteal to ſatisfy his ſoul when he is hungry. But if he be found, he ſhall reſtore ſeven-fold; he ſhall give all the ſubſtance of his houſe. The law allowed the killing of a night-robber, Exod. xxii. 2. becauſe it concluded his intention was to murder, as well as to rob: it condemned a common thief to make double reſtitution. Exod. xxii. 4. If he ſtole an ox he was to reſtore five-fold; if a ſheep, only four-fold, Exod. xxii. 1. But if the animal that was ſtolen was found alive in his houſe, he only rendered the double of it. If he did not make reſtitution, they ſeized what was in his houſe, ſold it, and even ſold him himſelf, if he had not wherewithal to make ſatisfaction. Exod. xxii. 3. In the paſſage of Proverbs, the Wiſeman ſeems to ſay, that the thief ſhould reſtore ſeven-fold the value ſtolen: but ſeven-fold is here put for many-fold. Zaccheus declared he would reſtore four-fold whatever he had fraudulently acquired in his office of Publican, Luke xix. 8. becauſe the civil law condemned receivers of the public money to a four-fold reſtitution of their unjuſt gains

If a thief was taken, and carried before a magiſtrate, he was interrogated judicially, and adjured in the name of the Lord, to confeſs the fact. If he perſiſted in denying it, and was afterwards convicted of perjury, he was condemned to death; not for the theft, but for the perjury. An accomplice, or receiver of ſtolen goods, was ſubject to the ſame penalty, if he did not diſcover the truth to the Judges, when he was examined, and adjured in the name of the Lord: If a ſoul ſin, and hear the voice of ſwearing, and is a witneſs, whether he hath ſeen or known of it, if he do not utter it, then he ſhall bear his iniquity, Levit. v. 1. he ſhall undergo a capital puniſhment. And Solomon ſays, Prov. xxix. 24. Whoſo is partner with a thief, hateth his own ſoul; he heareth curſing, [adjuration] and betrayeth it not.

The law condemns theft; Exod. xx. 15. But there is no penalty annexed, except reſtitution, greater or leſs, according to the offence: but to ſteal away a freeman, or an Hebrew, and to reduce him to a ſtate of ſervitude, was puniſhed with death: Exod. xxi. 16. The Jews do not think that the ſtealing a man of any other nation deſerved death, but only the theft of a free Hebrew. If it be a ſtranger who is ſtole, the thief was only condemned to reſtitution. They found this diſtinction on Deut. xxiv. 7. which limits the law we are ſpeaking of; Si furatus fuerit hominem de filiis Iſrael; an exception which the Septuagint, and Onkelos, have even inſerted into the text of Exod. xxi. 16. The laws of the Athenians puniſhed with death, the plagium, i e. the theft of a freeman; and the Roman laws condemned both the buyer and ſeller of a freeman to the ſame puniſhment, if they knew his condition. Digeſt. 48. T. 15.

He who ſtole an ox was puniſhed by the reſtitution of five oxen, to the perſon robbed. He who ſtole a ſheep or a goat was obliged to reſtore four, Exod. xxii. 1. It is thought that the theft of an ox, was puniſhed the more ſeverely, becauſe this animal is of greater uſe than others. The law-giver limits this law a little afterwards, ſaying, If the theft be certainly found in his hands alive, whether it be ox, or aſs, or ſheep, he ſhall reſtore double: Exod. xxii. 4. Or, according to the Hebrew, If what he has ſtole be found in his hands, he ſhall reſtore two alive, for every one that he ſtole.

The night-robber, taken in the fact, might be killed with impunity: But it was not allowed to kill a thief taken ſtealing in the day time. Exod. xxii. 2. It was preſumed, that he who attempted to break open an houſe, and ſteal by night, had a deſign on the life of the perſon moleſted; and under this preſumption he might be prevented and killed. But it was not ſo with him who ſtole by day; there was then opportunity to defend one's ſelf againſt ſuch an attack; and the thief might be proſecuted before the judges, and compelled to reſtitution.

If a thief had not wherewithal to reſtore what was ſtolen, as the law preſcribed, he might be ſold, and reduced to bondage. Exod. xxii. 3.

The Rabbins acquaint us, that, a woman convicted of theft could not be ſold. That, a thief was never ſold, unleſs his theft was greater than all he was worth; that, if he was worth twenty crowns, he was not ſold for the theft of ten crowns; and that, a thief thus ſold, was not obliged to continue in ſlavery longer than till his ſervice amounted to the value ſtolen by him. As to the double, treble, or quadruple reſtitution, this was only when he was ſet at liberty.

It is enquired, whether the crime of theft, beſides the penalty of reſtitution, was not ſubject to corporal puniſhment? Some believe that on ſome occaſions the thief was put to death, becauſe, Jacob ſays to Laban, Gen. xxxi. 32. With whomſoever thou findeſt thy gods, let him not live. Eſtius thinks, that if he was inſolvent, he was corrected with rods; or even hanged, if convicted of thieving ſeveral times. But I cannot be of opinion that mere theft was puniſhed among the Hebrews with death, or even with corporal puniſhment. The law only inflicts the puniſhment of death upon plagiariſm, or ſtealing a freeman.

Solomon ſays, Proverbs xxix. 24. Whoſo is partner with a thief hateth his own ſoul: he expoſeth himſelf to a miſerable life; not becauſe all ſorts of theft were puniſhable by death, but becauſe in ſome caſes theft was capitally puniſhed: and beſides beſides, it expoſes a man to the danger of falſe oaths, and perjury, on account of his theft, in which caſe he would deſerve death: Adjurantem audit, & non judicat, ſays Solomon; and Moſes ſays, Levit. v. 1. If a ſoul ſin, and hear the voice of ſwearing, and is a witneſs, whether he hath ſeen or known of it; if he do not utter it, then he ſhall bear his iniquity: he ſhall be puniſhed with the utmoſt rigor, becauſe of his perjury, and profanation of the name of God. See alſo Prov. xxx. 9. Leſt I be poor and ſteal, and take the name of my God in vain.

[Query, whether by a partner with a thief is not meant a partaker, a receiver, who, as an acceſſary after the fact, is as bad as the thief himſelf? our laws puniſh both equally.]

It ſhould ſeem as if mere theft among the Hebrews had no particular mark of infamy annexed to it. The Wiſe man, in the Proverbs, ſays, Men do not deſpiſe a thief if he ſteal to ſatisfy his ſoul when he is hungry: the law inflicts no peculiar puniſhment on him, and he is not made to undergo any ſhameful or ignominious penalty. Solomon adds, But if he is found, he ſhall reſtore ſeven-fold, he ſhall give all the ſubſtance of his houſe. This is the danger he is expoſed to by ſtealing.

[Will this paſſage bear this ſenſe? Succeſsful peculation, if it procure riches, is not deſpiſed by the world, who are dazzled with the ſucceſs, and overlook the crime: but if it be detected, then the tranſgreſſor ſhall be puniſhed with the greateſt ſeverity, even to the loſs of all: ſubſtance, repute, &c. &c. his whole property. Nevertheleſs, we muſt recollect, that theft in Sparta, by the inſtitutions of Lycurgus, was not infamous: though detection was both infamous, and puniſhable.]

Many tribes inhabiting around Judea, made robbery a kind of profeſſion. Geneſis xxvii. 40. Iſaac foretold to Eſau, that he ſhould live by his ſword; ſhould maintain himſelf by plunder. Iſhmael, the ſon of Abraham, had no other trade than war and rapine; he was ferus homo, and juvenis ſagittarius, Gen. xvi. 12. always at war with his neighbours, Gen. xxi. 20. his hand againſt every man, and every man's hand againſt him. His poſterity, the Iſhmaelites, followed his example, and made no ſcruple to rob on the high-way. They even gloried in it, and applied to it as a ſort of trade, or calling. They do no farther miſchief to travellers, when they ſubmit readily, and give up their whole baggage without reſiſtance, and without giving them the trouble to alight from their horſes. As ſoon as they perceive any one on the road, they cover the lower part of their faces, to their eyes, with their turbant, or buſtmani, which hangs on their ſhoulders, that they may not be known. They raiſe their lances, and ride up full ſpeed, ſaying immediately, Deliver, you raſcal, your aunt is quite naked. Manners of the Arabians, by M. d'Arvieux, cap. 13. By theſe words, your aunt is naked, they mean their own wives, whom it would be ill manners to name, according to their cuſtoms: but they call them aunts of thoſe they attack, as imagining that all men are relations. All this time they hold their lance againſt the breaſt of the poor traveller, till they have got what they want. Perhaps they may leave him a pair of drawers, or a ſhirt, if he ſurrender readily, and intreat earneſtly not to be left quite naked. Alſo, they may leave him his horſe's furniture beſides, becauſe they know not what to do with it, and it may make a diſcovery. However, if the traveller's horſe have a good ſaddle, or good geers, they change with him for their own. But if the paſſenger ſhould ſtand on his defence, and ſhould draw blood of them, they ſhew him no mercy: and if they cannot be revenged on him, they kill all they meet beſides: ſo truly do they fulfil that prophecy ſo deſcriptive of Iſhmael, the father of the Iſhmaelites, or Arabians.

Scripture often ſpeaks of troops of robbers—of Moab, of Syria, of Chaldea, of Ammon, and other nations, who practiſed rapine and plunder where-ever they could with impunity. Jepthah, who became afterwards the general of Iſrael, was at firſt the head of ſuch a troop of robbers, Judg. xi. 3. David, and his followers, had frequent engagements with ſuch robbers that were near Paleſtine, 2 Sam. iii. 22. They were ſuch people as theſe who pillaged Ziklag; and of whom David revenged himſelf after his return to that town. 1 Sam. xxx. 8. 22. Iſhboſheth, ſon of Saul, had in his ſervice two captains of robbers, who cut off his head while he was ſleeping, 2 Sam. iv. 2. Rezin, who afterwards became king of Damaſcus, was before that captain of a gang of thieves, 1 Kings xi. 23, 24. The three troops of Chaldeans who took away Job's camels, were troops of ſuch robbers. Job i. 17.

Among theſe people theft was neither ſo odious, nor ſo ſcandalous, as among us. This appears from the heroical times, and even afterwards among the Grecians. They did not come clandeſtinely when they entered a country to plunder it: it appears from Homer, that they made a kind of glory of it, as if it was a lawful conqueſt. They enquired coolly when a number of people came into a province, or an iſland, whether they they were come a robbing, or on any other account? "Our anceſtors, ſays Joſephus, being content with their own country, which is very fruitful, did not apply themſelves to commerce, as the Phœnicians, who inhabit the coaſts of the Mediterranean, nor to travelling, nor to war, in order to make conqueſts; nor to robbery and plundering, like many others; [by this he probably means the Arabians, and even the more ancient Grecians;] but they made it their buſineſs to cultivate their lands, and to breed up their children to the ſtudy of their law." Joſeph. lib. i. contr. Appian.

Our Saviour was fixed on the croſs between two thieves. St. Luke ſays, xxiii. 39, 40. One of the malefactors railed on him, ſaying, If thou be Chriſt, ſave thyſelf and us: but the other anſwering, rebuked him, ſaying, Doſt not thou fear God, ſeeing thou art in the ſame condemnation? and we indeed juſtly, for we receive the due reward of our deeds; but this man hath done nothing amiſs. And he ſaid unto Jeſus, Lord, remember me when thou comeſt into thy kingdom: And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Verily, I ſay unto thee, to-day ſhalt thou be with me in Paradiſe.

St. Matthew, xxvii. 44. and St. Mark, xv. 32. ſay, in the plural number, that the two thieves inſulted Jeſus Chriſt. Some explain this by a figure of ſpeech wherein one is ſpoke of as many. Others think, that both the two thieves at firſt inſulted our Saviour, but that afterwards the good thief, prevented by the grace and the miracles of Jeſus Chriſt, was converted, and reproved his companion.

The falſe Goſpel of the Infancy of Jeſus Chriſt, which is very ancient, relates, that when our Saviour fled into Egypt, the child Jeſus, the virgin Mary, and Joſeph, fell among a gang of thieves, who were all aſleep, except two: one of theſe propoſed to murder that holy company, but the other diſſuaded him: that then the child Jeſus foretold, that one day thoſe two thieves ſhould be fixed to croſſes near himſelf: that one ſhould go to paradiſe, and the other to hell. The firſt was called Titus, and the ſecond Damachus. The falſe Goſpel of Nicodemus names one Demas, and the other Gertas. A Perſian hiſtory of the Life of Chriſt names them Vicimus and Juſtinus: the author of the Flowers, or Connections, aſcribed to Bede, calls them Matha and Joca. The Oriental Chriſtians call the good thief Laas-al-jemin, the thief on the right-hand. St. Hilary in Matth. alſo, places the good thief on the right-hand of our Saviour, and the wicked on his left-hand.

Several of the fathers have called the good thief a martyr, becauſe of his teſtimony to the truth, at a time when it was abandoned by all. He was baptized, as it were, in his own blood, he died in a ſpirit of faith and charity, and received the favour of immediate happineſs after death, as Jeſus Chriſt aſſures him: To-day ſhalt thou be with me in paradiſe. Whether by the word paradiſe we underſtand a place of reſt, where the ſouls of the ſaints wait for the coming of the Meſſiah; or heaven, where the bleſſed enjoy eternal happineſs. Several of the fathers underſtood it in this latter ſenſe. Aug. Ep. 187. nov. edit. n. 5, 6, 7. Cyril. Hieroſol. Cathech. 13. Chryſoſt. tom. v. Homil. 32. Enciſen. Homil. 23, &c.

Marcion, as Epiphanius reports, expunged theſe words, Verily I ſay unto thee, to day ſhalt thou be with me in paradiſe: and Origen obſerves, that ſome catholics in their ſimplicity alſo obliterated them out of their copies; imagining it was a contradiction to ſay, that the good thief ſhould be to-day in paradiſe with Jeſus Chriſt, while the body of our Saviour lay in his tomb. Heſychius of Jeruſalem obſerves, that ſome put a ſtop after to-day, in this manner, Verily I ſay unto thee to-day, Thou ſhalt be with me in paradiſe. But it is needleſs to make any change in the text, ſeeing it may be conveniently explained without any alteration.

The Oriental churches, the Greek, and the Latin, have thought good to pay a public veneration to a ſaint ſo remarkable. The churches of Syria and Meſopotamia mark his feaſt in their calendar on the ninth day after the paſſion-Friday, or Good-Friday; i. e. on the Saturday in Eaſter-week, Biblioth. Orient. Article Laas.

The Greek church places his feſtival March 23, and the Latin, March 25, agreeably to an old tradition, which affirmed, that Jeſus Chriſt died on that day. Others have placed his feaſt April 3, or May 5. In ſome places chapels have been erected to him, by the name of St. Dimas, or Dyſmas.

THEFT. When the Iſraelites were departing from Egypt, they borrowed of their Egyptian neighbours of both ſexes, valuable garments, veſſels of gold, and ſilver, and carried them with them into the wilderneſs, Exod. xi. 2, 3. Let every man borrow of his neighbour, and every woman of her neighbour, jewels of ſilver, and jewels of gold. And the Lord gave the people favour in the ſight of the Egyptians. It is enquired, Whether the Hebrews could lawfully borrow theſe things of the Egyptians, when they had no intention tention to reſtore them? and whether this was not a manifeſt theft, and injuſtice? it is anſwered, firſt, that on this occaſion God diſpenſed with that law, by which he forbad theft; or rather, that being abſolute maſter of every thing, he transferred to the Hebrews that right which the Egyptians had to theſe things. The Book of Wiſdom inſinuates another reaſon, which is, that God deſigning to recompence the Hebrews for their labourings and ſufferings in Egypt, allowed them to pay themſelves by their own hands, by detaining what they borrowed from the Egyptians. This way of paying one's ſelf cannot be allowed, regularly; but in theſe circumſtances, having no other way of doing themſelves juſtice, and being authorized by the command of God, they might have recourſe to this.

Others look on this, not as a theft, but as a fair booty got in a juſt war. The Egyptians were enemies to the Hebrews; they had unjuſtly perſecuted them for a long time, and took from them the means of defending themſelves, and of recovering their liberty: they might therefore lawfully deprive them of their goods by a wile, and ſtratagem, pretending to borrow of them what they never intended to return.

Petr. Lombard, lib. iii. Deſſ. 37. here diſtinguiſhes, between ſuch Iſraelites who acted in the ſimplicity of their hearts, and ſincerely obeyed the commands of God, and thoſe who followed their own covetous deſires. The firſt are excuſed from ſin by the uprightneſs of their intentions; but not the ſecond, who were ready enough to rob the Egyptians, if they could borrow with impunity, even though God had not allowed them. St. Auſtin, reaſons much in the ſame manner, lib. ii. contra Fauſt. cap. 71.

Irenæus obſerves, lib. iv. contra Hæreſ. cap. 49. that the Egyptians were indebted to the Hebrews, not only for their goods, but for their lives alſo, becauſe of the benefits they had received from the patriarch Joſeph, when they were under the greateſt neceſſity. The Iſraelites were unjuſtly oppreſſed by a cruel ſlavery in Egypt: the Egyptians exerciſed all kinds of violences againſt them, and overwhelmed them with calamities, even to the rendering their lives bitter. The Hebrews had built them cities, and had very much improved the riches of theſe inhuman maſters; who, inſtead of acknowledging theſe ſervices, intended even to take away their lives. What injuſtice therefore, could there be, if the Iſraelites ſhould take again a ſmall part of that which they had procured for the Egyptians? and if they ſhould receive a ſmall recompence, for ſo many ſervices done them? They came poor out of Egypt, whereas they ought to have got much riches, if they had not been reduced into an unjuſt ſervitude: and, like as a freeman, who had been ſtolen, and ſold for a ſlave, might, without injuſtice, ſet himſelf at liberty, and pay himſelf for his labour, by taking from his maſter a ſmall reward for his ſervice: ſo the Iſraelites, at their departure out of Egypt, might receive ſomething as a recompence, ſince a great deal was due to them. [For a ſuppoſed lawſuit on this ſubject, between the Jews and the Egyptians, vide ALEXANDER.]

[After all, this ſubject might be beſt underſtood by knowing who THESE Egyptians were: if it could be proved that they were recent invaders, and conquerors, of the country, who by fraud or force, had ſeized the riches of the original Egyptians, it would appear that they themſelves had no right to theſe riches: ſo that Iſrael did but rob a thief. The ſame argument may be applied to the people of Canaan: when we conſider, who were the then occupant Philiſtines? which we ſuppoſe to be of the ſame race as THESE Egyptians. This will be ſtated in a future FRAGMENT: or on a future occaſion.]

If any one had ſtolen an Iſraelite, whether free, or not, and ſold him to another, he was puniſhable with death: Exod. xxi. 16. Deut. xxiv. 7. The Hebrew inſinuates, he who ſhall ſteal a man, and ſell him, if he be found in his hands, ſhall ſuffer death. But we may thus underſtand it, with Glaſſius: he who ſhall ſteal a man, whether he have ſold him, or he be ſtill in his hands, he ſhall ſuffer death. The Jews are not of opinion, that by this law they are forbid from ſtealing a man of another nation, under the penalty of death; but only from ſtealing an Hebrew. The laws of the Athenians, and Romans, alſo puniſhed with death the ſtealing of a man.

THELASAR, תלאשר, θελασσὰ, that unbinds and grants the ſuſpenſion, or the heap; from שרה ſharah, to unbind, &c. and from תלה thalah, to ſuſpend, or from תלל thalal, heap, or maſs. As this word is Mediſh or Perſian, it is not poſſible to find its true etymology in the Hebrew.

THEOCRACY, Θεοκρατία, the government of God.

THEOCRACY. This word is uſed by Joſephus to expreſs the form of government of the Jews. "Among the ſeveral nations of the world, ſays he, ſome have choſen monarchical government, others democratical, or the government of the people; but our legiſlator eſtabliſhed a form of government very different from all others, which is, a Theocracy, if I may be allowed to fay ſo, which gives the whole power to God, and the management of all the affairs of the nation; inſpiring us with this maxim, that God ſees every thing, and that he is the cauſe of all the good that happens to us."

The government of the Jews, which Joſephus calls a theocracy, experienced ſeveral changes. We obſerve, in this nation, the legiſlator Moſes, his ſucceſſor Joſhua, the judges, the kings, and the high-prieſts. Under all theſe revolutions, God was indeed conſidered as the monarch of Iſrael; but he was far from exerciſing his authority and juriſdiction always in the ſame manner.

In the time of Moſes we may affirm that he governed immediately; for he revealed his will, on all emergencies, to this legiſlator, which was accordingly put in execution. He dwelt among his people as a king in his palace, or in the midſt of his camp; being always ready to give an anſwer when conſulted, to reſtrain thoſe who tranſgreſſed his laws, to inſtruct thoſe who had any difficulty about the ſenſe of his ordinances, to determine thoſe who were in ſuſpence about any important undertaking. This was, properly, the time of the theocracy; in the ſtricteſt ſenſe.

It was much the ſame under Joſhua: This great man, full of the ſpirit of Moſes, would do nothing without firſt conſulting God; at leaſt, in affairs of conſequence; though ſometimes, indeed, he followed his own mind, as in the buſineſs of the Gideonites, and that of Ai. In theſe happy times, when the motions of the general and ſoldiers were regulated by orders from God, ſucceſs attended of courſe.

The Judges who ſucceeded Joſhua were heroes, whom God raiſed from time to time, for the deliverance of his people. He endued them with extraordinary ſtrength, and courage; filled them with his ſpirit; and often worked miracles by them in favour of the Hebrews. Sometimes, we find a whole generation without any judges, as it happened after Joſhua's time: Sometimes theſe interruptions were ſhorter: Sometimes it was an heroine, as Deborah, whom God raiſed up to judge, and to deliver, his people; ſometimes their valour was limited to the delivering of one tribe out of ſlavery, and ſometimes all Iſrael was reſtored to liberty. The ſervitudes that were frequent at this time, did not always extend over the whole nation. Some were confined to the country beyond Jordan; as that from which Jephthah delivered his countrymen; others, to this ſide of that river; others, were more general, and extenſive; but all were juſt puniſhments for the iniquities of the people, to whom God ſhewed the difference between the mildneſs of a father, or of a merciful God, who governs, and the cruel ſeverity of an inſulting conqueror.

The firſt ſtep of the Iſraelites, when, ſeveral years after the death of Joſhua, they ſaw themſelves oppreſſed by the Canaanites, plainly ſhews the then form of their government. Judg. i. 1, 2. The children of Iſrael aſked the Lord, ſaying, Who ſhall go up for us againſt the Canaanites firſt to fight againſt them? And the Lord ſaid, Judah ſhall go up; behold I have delivered the land into his hand. Here is a true theocracy, and the exerciſe of the power of God, in the appointment of leaders to govern, and command, the people in his name. All the judges, in like manner, received their authority from him. When the Iſraelites would have given the chief command to Gideon, for himſelf and his ſucceſſors, he anſwered, I will not reign over you, neither myſelf, nor my ſon, but the Lord ſhall rule over you. Judg. viii. 22, 23.

When the Iſraelites urged Samuel to give them a king, as all the other nations had which were round about them, this prophet was very much concerned at it; as a kind of outrage and contempt put upon the majeſty of God, who was their head and their king. 1 Sam. viii. 5, 7. Samuel prayed to God in the bitterneſs of his ſoul, and the Lord anſwered him, Hearken to the importunities of this people, for it is not you, but me, whom they reject. God granted them a king in his indignation, and took him away again in his fury. Hoſ. xiii. 11.

At the ſame time he bid Samuel to lay before them the rights and prerogatives their king would aſſume. We ſtill perceive the ſovereign, or royal authority of God: he grants them a king, he ſettles his rights; he diſpoſes of him, and he reproves him, in his indignation, when he fails in obedience and ſubmiſſion.

In Deut. xvii. 14, 15, &c. Moſes ſays to the people, foreſeeing that one day they would have a king; When thou art come into the land, and ſhalt ſay, I will ſet up a king over me, thou ſhalt in any wiſe ſet him king over thee whom the Lord thy God ſhall chuſe; one from among thy brethren ſhalt thou ſet king over thee; thou mayeſt not ſet a ſtranger over thee, which is not thy brother. But he ſhall not multiply horſes to himſelf; neither ſhall he multiply wives to himſelf, that his heart turn not away; neither ſhall he greatly multiply to himſelf ſilver and gold: he ſhall write him a copy of this law in a book, out of that which is before the prieſts prieſts and Levites: And it ſhall be with him, and he ſhall read therein all the days of his life; that he may learn to fear the Lord his God, to keep all the words of this law, and theſe ſtatutes, to do them; that his heart be not lifted up above his brethren, and that he turn not aſide from the commandment, to the right-hand, or to the left: to the end that he may prolong his days in his kingdom; he, and his children, in the midſt of Iſrael.

Such was to be the government of the Hebrews under their kings. They were to be choſen by God, inſtructed by his prieſts, ſubmiſſive to his orders, not to undertake any thing of conſequence without conſulting him; and under ſuch a dependence on his will, that he might reject them as he did Saul, when they neglected their duty. When God promiſed David to make the crown hereditary in his family, that was departing from the firſt maxims of the monarchy, which intended that the kings ſhould be elective, and given to the people by God.

It muſt be acknowledged that after David, the kings of Judah and Iſrael governed according to their own fancy; and after the ſchiſm of Rehoboam, few of the princes kept to the rules of the theocracy. They would not be under any reſtraint, but endeavoured to caſt off that happy ſubjection, to which the judges, and the firſt kings of Iſrael, had willingly ſubmitted. All kinds of calamities then poured in upon them, and upon their ſubjects: They were delivered as a prey to their enemies; they had no peace, or proſperity, either at home, or abroad: God viſited them with a multitude of troubles, and at laſt diſperſed them into diſtant countries.

Nevertheleſs, to remind them of their dependance, and to bring them back to their duty, the Lord ſent, from time to time, prophets, full of zeal, power, and courage, who boldly upbraided them with their prevarications and impieties; and who oppoſed themſelves, like a wall of braſs, to whatever they committed contrary to the rights of God. Theſe divine men did not only appear in the kingdom of Judah, where the public worſhip was maintained, but alſo in the kingdom of Iſrael, however ſchiſmatic and polluted that might be. Therefore, we may affirm, that, notwithſtanding the almoſt general defection of theſe two kingdoms, God ſtill maintained his theocracy therein, as well by his vengeance executed againſt wicked kings, as by that ſmall number of good princes which obeyed his commands; as Hezekiah and Joſiah; and by the prophets whom he raiſed up, from time to time, in the country, till the captivity of Babylon.

During the whole time of this captivity, we are not to expect any certain form of government in Iſrael, or any regular polity. In vain the Jews pretend to find one beyond the Euphrates, either before or ſince Cyrus's time. We do not find any that was well ſupported even after the return from the captivity, during the time that the Hebrews of Paleſtine were under obedience to the kings of Perſia, and to the Greeks, ſucceſſors of Alexander. If it ſhould be aſked, what then was the form of government in the Jewiſh nation? the reply would be,—a kind of ariſtocracy, ſubordinate to the monarchy of the Perſians, or of the Grecians. The high-prieſt was at the head of the principal people, whoſe power being limited by the ſovereign authority, only extended to matters relating to the law, and religion. It was a kind of a voluntary juriſdiction, to which the people ſubmitted, ſo far as they pleaſed, and were countenanced by the kings to whom they were in ſubjection. The high-prieſt Jaddus received Alexander at Jeruſalem, at the head of the people; but, it was becauſe in this exigence the city was abandoned by the governors of the king of Perſia; and the proſperous progreſs of Alexander made them connive at ſuch a proceeding, which, without doubt, they would not have ſuffered on another occaſion.

The Aſmonean princes make a fifth period, which preſents a new aſpect of government. After the Maccabees had ſupported the religion of their country, with great hazard of their lives, and, with extraordinary bravery, had withſtood the wicked commands of Antiochus Epiphanes, they at laſt ſhook off the yoke of the kings of Syria, and, aſſerting their liberty, they took the title of princes of the Jews, and of kings. By the conſent of the people, they re-united the high-prieſthood to the ſupreme authority.

Under their government we find evident footſteps of the theocracy; as the ſupreme governor was inveſted with the ſacerdotal character; ſo that the kingdom was properly what Moſes calls a kingdom of prieſts: Exod. xix. 6. Or, as St. Peter ſpeaks, 1 Pet. ii. 9. Ye are a choſen generation, a royal prieſthood. The royal power, and the ſacerdotal, being united, made a ſingular kind of polity, under princes entirely devoted to the ſervice of God, inſtructed in his laws from their youth, and intereſted alſo, by the rules of politics, to ſupport them, and to make the people obſerve them. They could hardly fail of extirpating idolatry, ignorance, impiety, and thoſe groſs diſorders that had prevailed under the kings. So that the commonwealth of the Jews was never more in earneſt to perform the laws of God, or more exempt from thoſe crimes upbraided by the prophets, than under the Aſmonean princes. [Is not this one reaſon for the ſuſpenſion of prophecy?]

Under their government the Romans became maſters of Judea, and fixed their dominion in it. They did not meddle with religion, and even left a conſiderable ſhare of authority to the later princes of the Aſmonean race. Herod ſucceeded them, but he ſacrificed every thing to his ambition and politics; and though he made an outward profeſſion of the Jewiſh religion, yet he gave himſelf little trouble about practiſing it, but violated it on an hundred occaſions. However, the prieſts and people continued firmly attached to it; and when Jeſus Chriſt appeared in Paleſtine, external religion was in a flouriſhing condition. His preaching chiefly reproved the Phariſees, who, by their ſubtle diſtinctions, and refinements on the law, had obſcured the true ſenſe of it, and ſubverted its real intention. Our Saviour expoſed their hypocriſy, reformed, and corrected, their miſtakes, reſtored primitive piety, and gave the rules of a pure and ſincere worſhip, in mind, and in truth.

THEODOTION. He was, according to Epiphanius, de ponderib. & menſur. of Sinope in Pontus, according to Ireneus, de hæreſ. lib. iii. cap. 24, & Synopſ. Athanaſ. he was of Epheſus. Thoſe who would reconcile theſe two opinions, tell us, that he was born in Sinope, and dwelt in Epheſus. He lived under Commodus, about A. D. 175. He firſt profeſſed Chriſtianity, and was a diſciple of Tatian; then he fell into the hereſy of Marcion; afterwards, being at variance with the Marcionites, be became a Jew. Having learned Hebrew, he tranſlated the Old Teſtament into Greek, and his tranſlation is the third with that of the Septuagint; that of Aquila is the ſecond, and that of Symmachus is the fourth. Irenæus quotes Aquila and Theodotion, but ſays nothing of Symmachus, which gives reaſon to conclude that his verſion was not extant at that time.

Theodotion undertook his tranſlation in oppoſition to the Marcionites, whom he had lately quitted. His method obſerves a medium between the Septuagint and Aquila. He doth not keep ſervilely to the words like Aquila, nor take the latitude of Symmachus, who rather paraphraſed than tranſlated. He adheres chiefly to the LXX. ſays Jerom, Commentar. in Eccleſiaſt. cap. ii. whoſe ſimple manner of tranſlation he imitated. He ſtudied to expreſs the ſenſe of the text in Greek words, anſwering to thoſe of the Hebrew, as far as the genius of the two languages would allow. His verſion is preferred by Chriſtians before thoſe of Symmachus and Aquila: but the Jews prefer that of Aquila, ſo far as they uſe a Greek verſion: They prefer it to that of the Septuagint, becauſe it is more literal, and verbal. Hence the Talmud frequently mentions the verſion of Aquila, but not that of the Septuagint.

The eſteem of the Helleniſtical Jews for this Greek tranſlation, excited the jealouſy of the Hebraizing Jews; who could not obſerve without concern that they departed ſo much from the ancient uſage of the ſynagogue, by reading theſe tranſlations into foreign languages. They pretended that nothing ought to be read there but the Hebrew text, and the ancient Chaldee paraphraſes; and that all the Greek verſions ought to be excluded. But as it was not practicable to bring back the Hellenizing Jews to languages they did not underſtand, this affair produced great diviſions among the Jews, ſo that the emperors were obliged to take cognizance of them. Juſtinian, Novell. 146. Photii. Nomocan. xii. 3. publiſhed an ordinance yet ſeen among his conſtitutions, permitting the Jews to read the Scripture in their ſynagogues, in the Greek verſion of the Septuagint, in that of Aquila, or in what other language they ſhould think fit, according to the countries wherein they dwelt. But the Jewiſh doctors having determined the matter otherwiſe, this conſtitution of the emperor produced little effect: The Greek verſions were excluded, and from that time the reading of the Holy Scripture has been performed in Hebrew and Chaldee; for to this day the uſe of the Chaldee is retained in ſome of their ſynagogues; as at Franckfort in Germany.

To return to Theodotion; the ancient Chriſtians had ſo great a value for his tranſlation, that perceiving the tranſlation of Daniel, by the Septuagint, to be very defective, they ſubſtituted that of Theodotion, which has continued ever ſince. Hieron. præfat. in Verſion. Daniel. in præfat. ad Com. in eund. For the ſame reaſon, when Origen, in his Hexapla, was obliged to ſupply ſomething that was wanting in the Septuagint, he took it from Theodotion, marking it with aſteriſks. Hieron. præfat. in Pent. & præfat. ad lib. Paral. & Epiſt. ad Auguſt.

Theodotion made two tranſlations, or rather reviſed his firſt; but they are both loſt; none of it remains entire but the book of Daniel. Fragments of the reſt have been collected in the Hexapla of Origen, by F. Montfaucon.

From Theodotion is received the hiſtory of Suſanna, which is rejected by the Jews; but is read in Chriſtian churches, the Greeks and Latins, the Syrians and Egyptians. Hieron. præfat. in Dan. St. Jerom even informs us, in Iſaiah iii. that the hiſtory of Suſanna was placed before the prophecies of Daniel in the vulgar editions; Theodotion having put it in this place, as proper to it on account of the time when it happened.

THEODOTUS, Θεόδοτος, given of God, or gift of God; from the Greek Θεὸς, God, and δοτὸς, given.

THEODOTUS, a Syrian commiſſioner ſent by Nicanor to treat of peace with Judas Maccabeus, 2 Mac. xiv. 19. A. M. 3843, ante A. D. 161.

THEOPHILUS, Θεόφιλος, friend of God; from Θεός, God, and Φίλος, a friend.

THEOPHILUS, to whom St. Luke addreſſes the books of his Goſpel, and the Acts of the Apoſtles. Luke i. 3. Acts i. 3. It is doubted whether the name Theophilus be the proper name of a perſon, or an appellative, or common name, which, according to its etymology, may ſtand for any good man, or a lover of God. Some, as Origen. Homil. 1. in Luc. Ambroſ. in Luc. Epiphan. hæreſ. 51. Bede, Camerar, Hammond in Luc. think this name to be generical, and that St. Luke deſigned to addreſs his work to all who love God: but it is much more probable, that this Theophilus was a Chriſtian, to whom the evangeliſt dedicated theſe works. And the epithet moſt excellent, which is given to him, ſhews him to have been a man of great quality. Oecumenius concludes from hence that he was governor, or intendant, of ſome province, becauſe ſuch had generally the title of moſt excellent given to them. Others believe him to have been biſhop of Antioch; but, at that time, there was none of this name in that city. Grotius conjectures he might be a magiſtrate of Achaia, converted by St. Luke.

THERAPEUTÆ, Θεραπευταὶ, ſervants of God.

THERAPEUTÆ. This is the name of a ſect, whoſe manner of life Philo has deſcribed, in his book of a Contemplative Life. Many of the ancient fathers thought they were Chriſtians; and that Philo, obſerving their manner of life, had a mind that his nation ſhould have the credit of them. They differed from the Eſſenes in this, that the Therapeutæ addicted themſelves to a contemplative life, but the Eſſenes to an active life. We ſhall give a ſhort account of their way of living, which ſerved as a model to the ancient monks, both of the eaſt, and weſt.

They relinquiſhed their eſtates, their parents, and ſometimes their country; they fled from cities, and the concourſe of men, and dwelt in the country, in ſeparate cells, the better to preſerve their ſolitude; but not at any great diſtances; in order that they might defend themſelves from thieves, and maintain a ſocial intercourſe. Their houſes, or cells, were very plain, and contained nothing but what was neceſſary: never omitting a little oratory, deſtined to prayer and exerciſes of piety. There were Therapeutæ in ſeveral parts, but chiefly in Egypt, about the lake Mœris.

Philo deſcribes them in this manner: "They are called Therapeutæ; and ſuch women as adhere to theſe inſtitutions are called Therapeutidæ. This name perfectly agrees with them, in both its ſignifications, of curing, and of worſhipping: For they really are phyſicians, not of the body, which is the ſubject of common medicine, but of the ſoul; the diſtempers of which they cure, and theſe are much more ſtubborn and difficult than thoſe of the body. Theſe diſtempers of the ſoul are, love of pleaſure, concupiſcence, diſcontent, fear, covetouſneſs, profuſion, injuſtice, and a multitude of other criminal paſſions. In the other ſenſe of the word Therapeutæ, they are truly worſhippers, and ſervants of God: that wonderful being, better than good itſelf, ſimpler than unity, and older than unity itſelf: They worſhip and ſerve him, according to the rules of nature, and the holy conſtitutions of the ſacred books.

Thoſe who embrace this inſtitution, do it not out of cuſtom, to follow a faſhion; or out of complaiſance to thoſe who exhort them to it; but from motives of ſeraphic and heavenly love, which caſts them into a kind of enthuſiaſm, like that which ſeizes the Bacchanals, and the Corybantes, at the celebration of their myſteries. This enthuſiaſm keeps poſſeſſion of them till they arrive at that ſtate of contemplation to which they aſpire. Then, conſidering themſelves as dead to the world, and thinking only on a happy immortality, they give up all their goods to their children, or relations; or, if they have none, to their friends and acquaintance. Thus, being diſengaged from all incumbrances, they fly without once looking behind them, quitting brethren, children, wives, fathers, mothers, mothers, and all relations. They avoid their old friends, and countrymen, that nothing may retain them, or induce them to forſake the way of life they have choſen.

If they leave a city or habitation, it is not to ſeek another, like ſlaves who only change their maſters, but not their condition. For all cities and countries, even thoſe governed by the beſt laws, are to them full of tumult and hurry, things inſupportable to thoſe who have once taſted the bleſſing of true wiſdom.

The greater part of the Therapeutæ reſide about Alexandria, and the chief of them moſtly retire to an eminence near the lake Mœris, a very ſecure and convenient place, and where the air is ſalutary. Hither they come from all parts, as to their common country. Their houſes here are built with the utmoſt ſimplicity; having regard only, to defend themſelves from cold in winter, and from the heat of the ſun in ſummer. They are not ſo near each other as in cities; for that would not be agreeable to ſuch as ſeek ſolitude; nor ſo far from one another, but that they may ſee one another ſometimes, and converſe about the duties of their condition, and aſſiſt one another if robbers aſſault them, &c.

Each has his little oratory, which they call Semneion, or Monaſterion, for meditation, and the exerciſes of piety. Nothing enters this ſacred place that is not neceſſary to ſupport the body; no furniture is ſeen here, except the law, the divine oracles, books of hymns, and inſtructions, relating to the knowledge of God, and of piety. Their mind is always filled up with the preſence of God; ſo that even when aſleep their dreams terminate on the perfections and excellencies of God, and their whole diſcourſe and reaſoning regards this divine philoſophy.

They conſtantly pray twice a-day, morning and evening. At ſun-riſing, they implore the bleſſing of God for that day; that he would enlighten them, and warm their ſouls with his heavenly light: At evening, they pray that their ſouls may be diſengaged from ſenſe and ſenſual things, that by a complete recollection of themſelves they may be prepared for the diſcovery of truth. They have among them ſeveral ancient writings of the heads of their ſect, which are the documents of that allegorical knowledge which they ſtudy, and which they endeavour to imitate.

With them temperance was eſteemed the foundation of all virtues. They neither ate nor drank till after the ſun was ſet: Some of them ate but once in three days; others once in ſix days. Their food was only bread, to which thoſe who were more nice added a little ſalt and hyſſop. They drank nothing but water: their cloaths were very plain; in winter a thick gown, in ſummer a thinner habit. They avoided vanity in every thing, as being the daughter of lying. They prayed twice a-day, morning and evening: the reſt of their time they employed in reading and meditation. Their reading was only in holy books, which they explained in an allegorical manner. They compoſed hymns, and ſongs, of different meaſures.

On the ſabbath-day they aſſembled in the common oratory, divided into two parts, by a wall of two, or three cubits high, that the women might be parted from the men, and might hear inſtruction without being ſeen. There they ſat, in order, according to every one's age, with their hands hid, the right hand on the breaſt; and the left below. The eldeſt, and moſt knowing, ſtood up, and ſpoke to them: His aſpect was modeſt, his voice moderate, his diſcourſe ſolid, but without ornament: all heard in ſilence, and ſhewed their ſentiments only by ſigns of the head and eyes. Their chief feſtival was Pentecoſt: then they aſſembled, all cloathed in white, to pray, and to eat together chearfully. The feaſt began by prayer, after which they ſat at a table on haſſocks of ruſhes, the women on the left hand, and the men on the right. They kept ſo ſtrict a ſilence, that none durſt draw his breath with vehemence. In the mean time ſome one propoſed a queſtion out of Holy Scripture, and explained it at leiſure, in a plain manner, but myſtically, and allegorically.

After which they ſerved up their food, which was leavened bread, with ſalt and hyſſop; with cold water for the young and robuſt, and warm water for the tender and aged. After the repaſt, they all roſe up together in the middle of the room; and formed two choirs, one of men, the other of women; they ſung ſeveral Canticles to the honour of God; ſometimes all together, and ſometimes alternatively; and in the mean time, they danced, and ſeemed as if tranſported, complying with the ſenſe and words of the ſong. Laſtly, they united in one dance, in imitation of that of the Iſraelites at their coming out of the Red Sea. Thus they paſſed the whole night before the Pentecoſt; and in the morning at ſun-riſing, they lifted up their hands to heaven, and intreated the Lord to make known his truth to them: After which each each returned into his own cell, and began his uſual exerciſes.

hoſe authors who have thought the Therapeutæ to be Chriſtians, were chiefly moved by the following reaſons. The Therapeutæ quitted their eſtates, brothers, children, fathers, and all their relations, to have leiſure for contemplation, and to unite themſelves the more cloſely to God. They had ſeveral books of the elders, and heads of their ſect, wherein Scripture was explained allegorically: They were diſperſed over ſeveral parts of the world: They lived in common; they had prieſts, deacons, virgins, monaſteries, or Semneia, a ſacred and myſtical table; they aſſembled by night, to ſing hymns; they prayed toward the Eaſt: they read and explained the ſacred books of the Old Teſtament in an allegorical manner; compoſed hymns, and ſung them by night to the honour of God: They aſſembled on the ſeventh day to entertain one another with diſcourſes of piety, and to pay their worſhip to the Lord, in common. Their churches, or the places of their aſſembling, agree with the form of the churches of the ancient Chriſtians: The women were there ſeparated from the men, by a wall of three cubits: They kept the fifty days, from Eaſter to Pentecoſt; their life was ſevere, private, retired, humble; and was paſſed in faſting and abſtinence.

All theſe marks agree to the Chriſtians; and the collection of all theſe circumſtances can agree to no other ſect, either Jewiſh or Pagan. Philo, ſpeaking of their holy table, expreſſes himſelf obſcurely, becauſe the primitive Chriſtians were ſtudious to conceal this myſtery. However, what was ſerved on this table he calls the moſt holy and moſt ſacred of aliments. He ſays, preſently after, that this holy food was leavened bread, and ſalt mingled with hyſſop: He ſpeaks of the privilege that the chief of this feaſt poſſeſſed, to handle and adminiſter theſe ſacred things. The deacons brought the tables. The firſt Chriſtians uſed only portable wooden tables, for the celebration of their holy myſteries. This cuſtom ſubſiſted in the time of St. Athanaſius; and was continued in many cities and villages of Egypt, down to the fifth century, as Sozomen informs us.

Where can we find a ſect, but that of the Chriſtians, which in Philo's time was every where diſperſed, as he ſays of the Therapeutæ? If this ſect was different from that of the Chriſtians, what is become of it? How came it to be unknown to the apoſtles? If the Therapeutæ were an ancient ſect of the Jews, how is it that Philo did not notice their antiquity? and why has not Joſephus mentioned them? If Philo, to whom only they were known, has forborne to call them Chriſtians, it was becauſe at that time this name was not familiar in Egypt. The fathers who maintained that they were Chriſtians, only knew it by tradition, or by thoſe characters of reſemblance between the doctrines and actions of the Therapeutæ, and thoſe of the firſt faithful. The word monaſtery, applied from the beginning to the habitations of the ſolitary Chriſtians in Egypt, and alſo known among the Therapeutæ; thoſe cells, or monaſteries, ſtanding on an eminence beyond the lake Mœris; i. e. on the mountain of Nitria; celebrated in the hiſtory of our ſolitaries, as well as in the deſcription that Philo has given us of the Therapeutæ, ſupply us with further proof, that the monks are the ſucceſſors of the Therapeutæ, and that the habitations of theſe paſſed to the other by way of ſucceſſion. For is it probable, that the Jews would yield them up to the Chriſtians, or that the Chriſtians, who were perſecuted down to the fourth century, ſhould be able to get poſſeſſion of them, under their perſecutions?

Euſebius, Caſſian, and the patriarch Methodius, have aſſerted, that St. Mark built monaſteries in Egypt. It muſt be acknowledged that the name and profeſſion of monks, ſuch as it now is, was not known in the time of the apoſtles: But there is reaſon to believe that when thoſe ancient writers ſpoke of monaſteries, they had in view theſe habitations of the Therapeutæ, built, or rather ſet up, by the advice of St. Mark biſhop of Alexandria. If we ſhould refuſe to the Therapeutæ the name of monks, we cannot, however, avoid owning that they forſook all things, according to the advice of Jeſus Chriſt, and lived in common, after the model of the firſt faithful at Jeruſalem. And certain it is, that the monaſtic life ſoon followed after this firſt inſtitution of living in common, of which there were examples, before the retirement of St. Anthony, i. e. A. D. 271; becauſe this year, when St. Anthony withdrew into the deſart, he there met with an old man who profeſſed the monaſtic life. Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. 2. cap. 17.

Euſebius was the firſt among the Fathers who applied to the Chriſtians what Philo had delivered concerning the Therapeutæ. St. Jerom de Scriptoribus Eccleſ. in Marco, has followed Euſebius:

St. Epiphanius, Hæreſ. 29. went ſtill farther, and thought that all which Philo has ſaid, not only of the Therapeutæ, but alſo of the Eſſenes, whom he calls Jeſſeans, is to be underſtood of the Chriſtians. Caſſian, at the end of his prologue to the Inſtitutes, and Book ii. C. 5. affirms, that the monaſteries of the Chriſtians in Egypt were founded even in the apoſtolical times, and by St. Mark himſelf. Sozomen, lib. ii. cap. 18. believes, that the Therapeutæ of Philo were Jews, converted to the faith of Jeſus Chriſt, who gave riſe to that ſolitary life which afterwards came to be ſo much in vogue in Egypt. Photius, 104, 105, acknowledges, that the monaſteries of the Therapeutæ, and the life led there, became a pattern to the monks. He takes notice, that ſome were of opinion that Philo had embraced Chriſtianity, and that at Rome being acquainted with St. Peter, he made the Elogium of the firſt Chriſtians of Egypt, the diſciples of St. Mark, the pupil of this apoſtle, and his ſucceſſor in the chair of Alexandria.

Therefore the Chriſtianity of the Therapeutæ is founded on the authority, and teſtimony, of ſeveral of the ancient Fathers; on the agreement of times and places; and on the characters, and lives of the Therapeutæ, compared with the manners of the firſt Chriſtians: and it appears to have been a prevailing opinion in the church, for ſeveral ages, though of late it has been called in queſtion.

The following are ſome of the reaſons that have been advanced to the contrary.

It is ſaid, that all authors who have ſpoken of the Chriſtianity of the Therapeutæ have only copied from Euſebius; they have taken his foundation, his teſtimony and authority, and have had no other grounds for what they have advanced, but what we read in Philo. But the whole of what Philo has ſaid will not amount to a proof, that the Therapeutæ were Chriſtians. This may be very well underſtood of ſome ſect of the Jews, more zealous and more pure as to opinions and practices, than the generality of that nation. The auſterities, the ſilence, the retirement, the contempt of riches, that continence which obtained among them, are not indubitable marks of the Chriſtian profeſſion. Many of the Heathen lived in retirement; diſintereſted, auſtere, continent. All the Therapeutæ did not bind themſelves to celibacy and virginity: it was only thoſe whoſe wives and children declined to follow the ſame ſtate of life. The Veſpers, the obſervation of the Sabbath, and of the day of Pentecoſt; the hymns, and the allegorical explications, are more in the character of Jews than of Chriſtians. Deacons, or miniſters, are found in the Hebrew aſſemblies, and in their ſynagogues. The myſtical repaſt of leavened bread, and of ſalt mingled with hyſſop, cannot be the Euchariſt; in which always wine, and never ſalt, or hyſſop, was uſed. And what Philo adds, that this repaſt, or table, was inſtituted out of a reſpectful diſtinction for the holy table, placed in the porch of the temple, on which only unleavened bread was placed, with pure ſalt, concurs to prove that this was a mere Jewiſh ceremony.

The word monaſtery, or Semneion, cannot eaſily impoſe on any one. The ancient monks might have borrowed this term from the Therapeutæ, as well as many other practices, juſt as the Chriſtian church has adopted many Jewiſh terms, and cuſtoms. And yet we are not to conclude that ſhe has adopted their ſentiments alſo.

To thoſe general reflections, derived from the agreement between the Therapeutæ and the Chriſtians, it may be anſwered, that they are not ſufficient to prove the Therapeutæ to have been Chriſtians: we muſt diſcover ſome character among them peculiar to Chriſtians, and which cannot agree to thoſe of any other religion: for example, either the name of Chriſt, ſome doctrine, or ſome opinion, derivable only from Jeſus Chriſt; ſome peculiar practice, which cannot be common with thoſe of another religion.

As to what is ſuggeſted, that all theſe marks centering in the Therapeutæ agree only with Chriſtians, this may be diſputed. For, though this concurrence of tokens is ſpecious and impoſing, yet if each, taken in itſelf, be doubtful and equivocal, it is impoſſible that when united they can conſtitute a deciſive proof. Beſides, this conformity between Chriſtianity and Therapeutiſm becomes inſufficient in proof that the Therapeutæ were truly Chriſtians, when it is found that they differed in important articles. For example, the Therapeutæ forſook their country, their eſtates, and relations, and retired into ſolitude: certainly, this mark does not agree to all Chriſtians; not even to the primitive Chriſtians, who lived together in cities, in their own houſes, with their kindred, their wives, and their children. The cuſtom of abandoning cities, and retiring into wilderneſſes, did not obtain among Chriſtians, till long after Philo; and when the Therapeutæ were no more heard of.

Philo owns that the Therapeutæ were diſperſed into ſeveral parts of the earth; but eſpecially that they were numerous in Egypt. Can this deſcribe the Chriſtians, who, as every one knows, were in much greater numbers in Paleſtine, and in Syria, than in Egypt, in the time of Philo? Beſides, how could Philo, who was certainly a ſtrict Jew, give ſuch commendations to the Therapeutæ if they had been Chriſtians, ſeeing that the Chriſtians were every-where hated by the Jews?

were

The Therapeutæ ſtudied the Holy Scriptures, and ſuch writings as their ANCESTORS HAD LEFT THEM, concerning the allegorical manner of explanation. This agrees better to the Jews of Egypt than to the Chriſtians, who in the time of Philo were but juſt beginning, and had no [ANCESTORS, no] ancient books, or allegorical writings; and who never much applied themſelves to this kind of ſtudy; whereas, on the contrary, it was greatly in faſhion among the Jews of Egypt; and Philo himſelf was a great proficient in it. The dances and motions, with which the Therapeutæ concluded their aſſemblies, hardly ſeem agreeable to that ſimplicity which was a diſtinguiſhing character of the firſt believers.

From what we have ſaid concerning the Therapeutæ, (which is the ſubſtance of the arguments pro and con) we may, I think, fairly conclude, that their Chriſtianity is very doubtful, and problematical: the reader may conſult for his farther ſatisfaction, Philo, De vitâ Contemplativâ; Euſebius, Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. ii. cap. 27. St. Jerom, Of Illuſtrious Men, cap. 8.; Epiphan. Hæreſ. xxix. cap. 5. Caſſian, Inſtit. lib. ii. cap. 5. Sozom. lib. i. cap. 12. F. Montfaucon, in his Obſervations on Philo's Book of the Contemplative Life, &c.

THERMUTHIS. This name Joſephus gives to the daughter of Pharaoh king of Egypt, who took Moſes out of the river Nile, and adopted him. Scripture does not tell us her name: others call her Pharia, Syncell. Chronol. p. 120.

THESSALONIANS, Θεσσαλονικεῖς people of Theſſalonica.

THESSALONIANS, Chriſtians of Theſſalonica. St. Paul being obliged to quit Theſſalonica, retired to Berea, where he left Timothy and Silas, to confirm the churches of Macedonia. From thence he went to Athens, and from Athens to Corinth, where, after ſome months, Silas and Timothy came to him, and informed him of the ſtate of the church at Theſſalonica; which perſiſted in the faith, notwithſtanding perſecutions and ſufferings. They told him alſo, of ſome among them who afflicted themſelves too much for the death of their relations, and who were not ſufficiently inſtructed concerning the coming of our Lord, and the laſt judgment. They reported alſo, that ſome of them were vain, inquiſitive, and reſtleſs.

St. Paul therefore wrote to them, about the end of A. D. 52, or the beginning of A. D. 53, and this firſt Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians is the firſt in order of time of all St. Paul's epiſtles. The ancient Greek ſubſcriptions, and the Latin inſcriptions, the Syriac, the Arabic, the Coptic, Theodoret, and St. Athanaſius, think it was written from Athens. But, our more ſkilful critics maintain, and the ſeries of the hiſtory of St. Paul's journies, ſufficiently ſhews, that it was ſent from Corinth. The apoſtle inſtructs them concerning the laſt judgment, and about the manner, and the meaſure, wherewith Chriſtians ſhould be afflicted for the death of their relations. He expreſſes much affection and tenderneſs for them; and an earneſt deſire of coming to ſee them. He reproves them with much mildneſs and prudence, mixing ſtrokes of praiſe, and marks of tenderneſs, with his reprehenſions.

The ſecond Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians was written from Corinth, a little time after the firſt, about the beginning of A. D. 53. In this St. Paul animates the Theſſalonians againſt the fears occaſioned by a falſe interpretation of a paſſage in his former epiſtle, as if he had ſaid, that the day of the Lord was at hand. He exhorts them to continue ſtedfaſt in the doctrine and traditions he had taught them, and to ſuffer with conſtancy under perſecution. He reproves more vehemently than before, thoſe who lived in idleneſs and vain curioſity: he would have them notice theſe people, and ſeparate from them, that at leaſt they might be aſhamed of their trifling, and reform it. He ſigns the letter with his own hand, and deſires them to mark it well, that they might not be impoſed on by ſuppoſitious letters, written in his name: [by which perhaps they had been deceived, ſee chap. ii. 2.]

Some ancients thought this epiſtle to have been ſent from Athens; others that it was written from Rome; or, from Laodicea; but there are no good proofs for any of theſe opinions. Grotius will have it to have been written long before the firſt to the Theſſalonians, and that it was directed to Jaſon the Jew, kinſman to Silas and Timothy, and to other Judaizing Chriſtians, who had withdrawn out of Syria, and Paleſtine, after the perſecution at the death of Stephen; and were come as far as Theſſalonica. He fixes the epoch of this epiſtle in the ſecond year of Caius. The confutation of this opinion may be ſeen in Bochart's Letter to M. De Sarrau, tom. iii. p. 1044. Edit. Leid. Henric. Maurus, lib. ii. cap. 21.

THESSALONICA, Θεσσαλονίκη, victory over the Theſſalians.

THESSALONICA, a famous city in Macedonia, and capital of this kingdom, ſtanding on the Theſmaick ſea. Stephen of Byzantium ſays, it was improved and beautified by Philip king of Macedon, and called Theſſalonica, in memory of his victory over the Theſſalians. Its old name was Theſma: but Strabo, and others affirm, that it was named from Theſſalonica, the wife of Caſſander, and daughter of Philip. Here were a number of Jews, who were in poſſeſſion of a ſynagogue, Acts xvii. 1, 2, 3, &c. St. Paul came hither A. D. 52, and entering the ſynagogue, according to his cuſtom, he preached to the congregation, out of the Scriptures, three ſabbath-days ſucceſſively. Some Jews were converted, and many Gentiles that feared God, and ſome women of quality. But the reſt of the Jews, hurried away by falſe zeal, raiſed a tumult and came to the houſe of Jaſon, to ſeize Paul and Silas, who lodged there, and to take them before the magiſtrates. But finding neither Paul nor Silas, they laid hold of Jaſon, and others. However, Jaſon, and the reſt giving ſecurity, were ſet at liberty; and the ſame night the brethren conducted Paul and Silas out of the city, toward Berea.

THEUDAS, Θευδᾶς, or Theodas, given of God, or the gift of God; from Θεὸς, God, and δίδωμι, I give.

I. THEUDAS, or Theodas. Gamaliel, Acts v. 36. ſays, A. D. 33, that one Theudas ſet himſelf up ſome time before for ſome great perſon: about four hundred men joined him; but he was killed; all that believed in him were diſperſed; and the matter came to nothing. Uſher thinks this Theudas is the ſame as Judas, who revolted at the death of Herod, mentioned by Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xvii. cap. 12. Anno J. C. 1. ante A. D. 5.

II. THEUDAS, an impoſtor, who appeared in Judea in the time of Cuſpius Fadus, the governor. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 2. A. D. 45. This man pretended to be a prophet, and inſpired. He deceived many Jews, perſuading them to forſake all, and to follow him to Jordan, which they were to paſs over dry-ſhod, as Joſhua had done anciently. Fadus ſent ſome troops of horſe after them, who killed and took many, and brought Theudas's head to Jeruſalem. This Theudas is much later than he who is mentioned by Gamaliel, Acts v. 36. For that had happened A. D. 33. whereas, the defeat of this Theudas, by Fadus, did not happen till A. D. 45. Notwithſtanding this, ſeveral have confounded theſe two Theudas's, THIGH. When Abraham ſent his ſervant Eliezer to ſeek a wife for his ſon Iſaac, Gen. xxiv. 2, 3. he ſaid to him, Put, I pray thee, thy hand under my thigh, and I will make thee ſwear by the Lord, the God of heaven, and the God of the earth, that thou ſhalt not take a wife unto my ſon of the daughters of the Canaanites among whom I dwell. Jacob, on his death-bed, ſays the ſame to his ſon Joſeph, Gen. xlvii. 29. If now I have found grace in thy ſight, put, I pray thee, thy hand under my thigh, and deal kindly and truly with me, and bury me not, I pray thee, in Egypt. After theſe inſtances, we do not perceive that the Jews uſed this ceremony in their oaths, or abjurations.

We are ignorant of the motives of this ceremony; and the conjectures of commentators are little ſatisfactory. The Jews think that in this action the patriarchs intended an oath by their circumciſion, which was then the ſymbol of the true religion. Chaldæi Interpr. & Hæbræi apud Hieron. qu. Hebr. in Geneſ. Others, that they meant to ſwear by the Meſſiah, who, according to the language of the Jews, was to proceed out of the thigh, or loins, of the patriarchs. Joſephus ſays, Antiq. lib. i. cap. 24. that this practice was retained in his time; and we are aſſured, that the modern Jews retain this manner of ſwearing.

The ſouls that came out of the loins, or thigh, of Jacob, Gen. xlvi. 26. i. e. the perſons who proceeded immediately from him, or mediately, by his ſons and daughters. This way of expreſſion is very common in Scripture.

The Jews wore their ſwords on their thigh: Gird thy ſword on thy thigh. Pſ. xlv. 3. And Cant. iii. 8. each of them having his ſword on his thigh.

To ſtrike upon the thigh was a mark of great conſternation, of great affliction: After I was inſtructed, I ſmote on my thigh, Jerem. xxxi. 19. And Ezekiel, xxi. 12. Clama & ulula — quia gladio traditi ſunt, idcirco plaude ſuper femur.

In Judges xv. 8. it is obſervable, that Samſon cauſed ſo many misfortunes to the Philiſtines, that they put their leg upon their thigh: Ita ut ſtupentes ſuram femori imponerent: they remained ſtruck with aſtoniſhment, and loſt all reſolution; holding their legs upon their thighs, or, bringing the calf of their leg againſt their thigh, they expreſſed their ſurprize. The Hebrew has it, he ſtruck their thigh againſt their leg, or their thigh and leg together: he beat them back and belly, he routed them horſe and foot, the runaways as well as thoſe that made reſiſtance: or, he ſmote them hip and thigh, as we ſhould ſay in our language; he cut off both legs and arms.

THOMAS, the Apoſtle, otherwiſe called Didymus, i. e. in Greek a twin. John xx. 24. Θωμᾶς ὁ λεγόμενος Δίδυμος. The Hebrew word תאם Tham, ſignifies alſo a twin. Euſebius, lib. i. cap. 13. ſeems to ſay that he was alſo called Jude, when he relates that Jude, otherwiſe called Thomas, ſent Thaddeus the diſciple to Edeſſa, to king Abgarus. Some editions of Euſebius call this Thaddeus the brother of Thomas. No doubt but St. Thomas was a Galilean, as well as the other apoſtles; but the place of his birth, and the circumſtances of his vocation, are unknown. He was appointed an apoſtle A. D. 31, Luke vi. 13, 14, 15. and continued to follow our Saviour during the three years of his preaching. We know no particulars of his life till A. D. 33, a little before the paſſion of our Saviour; when Jeſus Chriſt, intending to go to Judea to raiſe up Lazarus, Thomas ſaid to the reſt, Let us alſo go, that we may die with him, John xi. 16. Let us die with Lazarus; or, Let us die with Jeſus Chriſt; for interpreters take it in both ſenſes. St. Thomas meant, that by going to Judea they ſhould be expoſed to certain death; for he knew the hatred and malice of the Jews againſt Jeſus Chriſt. Some explain theſe words, as if he intended to encourage the apoſtles to this reſolution; but others underſtand them as a token of fear. Chryſoſt. in Joan. Hom. 61. p. 398.

At the Laſt Supper, John xiv. 5, 6. St. Thomas aſked Jeſus Chriſt whither he was going, and what way? Our Saviour anſwered, I am the way, and the truth, and the life. After the reſurrection, when Jeſus Chriſt appeared to his apoſtles, in the abſence of St. Thomas, he ſo far expreſſed his diffidence of what they aſſured him, as to tell them, Except I ſhall ſee in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thruſt my hand into his ſide, I will not believe, John xx. 19—29. Eight days after, Jeſus appeared to the apoſtles, and to St. Thomas, who was among them. Then Thomas having both ſeen, and touched him, no longer doubted, but cried out, My Lord, and my God. It is the common opinion of the Fathers that he touched him; but the goſpel does not mention it explicitly. Jeſus ſaid to him, Thomas, becauſe thou haſt ſeen, thou haſt believed: Bleſſed are they that have not ſeen, and yet have believed. A few days after, when St. Thomas and ſome other diſciples went a fiſhing, on the ſea of Galilee, Jeſus appeared to them, cauſed them to take a very great draught of fiſhes, manifeſted himſelf to them, and dined with them.

Tradition ſays, that in the diſtribution of the apoſtles to the ſeveral parts of the world, to preach the goſpel, the country of the Parthians was allotted to St. Thomas. It is added, that he preached to the Medes, the Perſians, the Carmanians, the Hircanians, the Bactrians, and to the Magians, people which then compoſed the empire of the Parthians. The author of the Imperfect Work upon St. Matthew, ſays, that being arrived at the country wherein the Magi were ſtill living, who came to worſhip Jeſus Chriſt at Bethlehem, he baptized them, and uſed them in preaching the goſpel. Several of the Fathers, Greg. Naz. Orat. 25. Hieron. Ep. 148. Ambroſ. in Pſal. xlv. Paulin. carm. 26. alii plures. inform us, that he preached in the Indies; others, that he preached in Ethiopia. See tom. vi. Chryſoſt. Append. Homil. 31. [This Ethiopia is the original land of Cuſh, near the Caſpian ſea; Vide CUSH III. and the name of India has been given to the countries adjacent, forming part of the Parthian empire: not the Eaſt-Indies.]

We have no certain hiſtory of St. Thomas and his courſe of preaching. It was read in certain apocryphal books, in great eſteem among the Manichees, that this ſaint having received a blow from a certain perſon, he curſed him, upon which the man was devoured by a lion. This ſtory is read in Abdias, and St. Auſtin ſpeaks of it in ſeveral places, but he rejects the ſtory, and the books that contain it, as apocryphal, and of no authority. Aug. lib. i. cap. 20. de Serm. Domini in monte. In Adimant. cap. 17. in Fauſt. lib. xxii. cap. 79. Clemens Alexandrinus, Strom. lib. iv. reports, out of Heracleon, a Valentinian heretic, that St. Thomas did not ſuffer martyrdom; but other Fathers expreſsly mention, that he died by the hands of infidels. It is thought he died at Calamine in the Indies, from whence his body was brought to Edeſſa, where he was always honoured. The Portugueze pretend, that this ſaint ſuffered martyrdom at Maliapus in the Indies, and that in this city is an ancient inſcription, which ſays he was pierced by a lance, at the foot of a croſs, near this city; that his body was there found in later ages, and carried to Goa, where he is held in veneration.

To this is oppoſed the tradition of the Greeks, the eſteem ſhewed by the Edeſſenians to the body of St. Thomas, the teſtimonies of the Fathers, and the martyrologies, which have mentioned the body, and remains, of St. Thomas many ages before this pretended diſcovery at Maliapus in the Indies: laſtly, it is maintained, that no good proof can be given that Calamine is the ſame as Maliapus. The martyrologies notice the death of St. Thomas, or his tranſlation to Edeſſa, December 21. which is his feſtival in the weſt: but the Greeks place it October 6. The martyrology of St. Jerom ſets down a feſtival of this ſaint June 3, and his death February 9.

Several apocryphal works have been imputed to St. Thomas; as, his Acts, his Voyages, his Goſpel, an Apocalypſe; which have been condemned by pope Gelaſius. Abdias ſpeaks of a book which contained the voyage of St. Thomas into the Indies, and his actions there. We find the Acts of St. Thomas in Greek manuſcripts, in ſeveral libraries. The ſpurious goſpel of St. Thomas was compoſed by Thomas the diſciple of Manes; Cyrill. Cathech. 6. and this goſpel was probably the ſame as that of the Infancy of Jeſus. It is cited out of his Acts, that he baptized not with water, but with oil; which was alſo imitated by the Manichees.

There are Chriſtians in the Eaſt-Indies which go by the name of St. Thomas, becauſe it is thought St. Thomas preached the goſpel to them. They dwell in a peninſula of the Indus, on this ſide the gulph. There are alſo many in the kingdom of Cranganor, and in the neighbouring places; as alſo at Negapatan, at Melcapar, at Engamar, beyond Cochin, where their archbiſhop reſides, who is under the juriſdiction of the patriarch of Babylon. It is ſaid that the firſt Chriſtians of the Indies, converted by St. Thomas, relapſed into their former infidelity, and ſo far forgot the inſtructions they had received from this apoſtle, that they did not ſo much as remember there had ever been any Chriſtians in their country: ſo that a certain holy man, called Mar-Thome, or Lord Thomas, a Syrian by nation, went to carry the light of the goſpel into thoſe parts. He converted a great number of the people, with the aſſiſtance of ſome prieſts of Syria and Egypt, whom he invited thither. The Chriſtians of St. Thomas are infected with ſeveral errors, but chiefly Neſtorianiſm: and I incline to believe, that they derived the name of Chriſtians of St. Thomas only from this Mar-Thome, their apoſtle, juſt mentioned.

Many have affirmed, that St. Thomas preached in China. This opinion is founded on the Breviary of the Syrians, where we read, By St. Thomas the error of idolatry was ſubdued in the Indies: by St. Thomas the Chineſe and Æthiopians were converted to the knowledge of the truth: by St. Thomas the kingdom of heaven has taken wing, and penetrated as far as China. Hence they pretend that he went as far as the Indies, where he ſuffered martyrdom, according to the tradition of the churches of Malabar.

It is certain that the knowledge of the Chriſtian religion is ancient in China. In a collection of canons we find one that ſpeaks of the metropolitans of China. The two Arabians, whoſe travels have been publiſhed, (Ancient Accounts of the Indies, tranſlated from the Arabic. Paris, 1718. pages 13, 146.) own that the king of China had ſome knowledge of Jeſus Chriſt and his apoſtles. They ſay, that in their journey they paſſed through Bezomna, that is to ſay, the church of St. Thomas. Yet father Couplet has often teſtified, that the hiſtories of China make no mention of the preaching of Chriſtianity in China.

THOR, a little town and port on the Red Sea, weſt of mount Sinai, from which it is diſtant about fifty miles. Half a league from Thor they ſhew a garden, wherein are twelve fountains, and ſeveral palm-trees: It is thought this is the Elim, of Exod. xv. 27. where were twelve wells of water, and threeſcore and ten palm-trees. The twelve wells are there, but they are become bitter; and, inſtead of threeſcore and ten palm-trees, there are now more than two thouſand. I do not know that Thor is mentioned in Scripture. Thor, Al-thor, or Al-tour is the Arabian name of mount Sinai, i. e. the Mountain; by way of excellence. [Is Thor the Shur, or Sur, of Gen. xxv. 10. Exod. xv. 22? its ſituation is perfectly coincident.]

THORNS. The crown of thorns, with which our Saviour was crowned at his paſſion, has much exerciſed learned men. Thomas Bartholine has a diſſertation on this ſubject, printed with his treatiſe on the croſs of our Saviour. All the evangeliſts expreſly notice that our Saviour was crowned with thorns: But they do not ſay with what kind of thorns, nor for what end he was thus crowned. There is great likelihood that it was to inſult him, and to mock his pretended royalty. To add pain to their inſult, the ſoldiers choſe thorns, to tear and wound wound his head. Chriſtus Jeſus quale, oro te, ſertum pro utroque ſexu ſubiit? --- Certe præter figuram contumelia in promptu eſt, & turpitudo, & dedecoratio, & his implexa ſævitia, quæ tunc Domini tempora & fædaverunt & laurinaverunt. Tertull. de corona Militis.

But what kind of thorns did the ſoldiers chooſe to crown our Saviour with? It is generally anſwered thoſe of the Rubus, which bears a ſmall fruit called Sloes; its bloſſoms are white, and it brings forth thorns with its leaves. Some believe, that, as in Judea, the thorns were in bloſſom at that ſeaſon, the ſoldiers choſe thoſe branches on purpoſe, to make him a garland or crown of flowers, which being full of thorns, might at the ſame time add pain to his inſult.

Others obſerve, that in Paleſtine, and eſpecially about Jeruſalem, the thorns above-mentioned are now not to be found; but only the Rhamnus, or buck-thorn. Therefore there is great probability that the ſoldiers took of this thorn, which was at hand; and that the evangeliſts intended nothing elſe, by the general name of thorns. Bellon. lib. 2. Obſervat. cap. 88. Vide Hieron. in Abacuc. III. Gretzer. lib. I. de Cruce. cap. 12.

Some are for the Acacia, becauſe this tree is called a Thorn; in Greek, Acanthe, without any addition.

Others have declared for the white thorn, or haw-thorn, which is a common ſhrub, and has ſtiff and hard prickles. Its bloſſoms are white and odoriferous. Marcel. Empiric. cap. 23.

The ſea-ruſh, or Juncus Marinus, has alſo had its partizans. Hugo Cardin. in Joan. Tolet. Perer. alii Durand. lib. 6. Divin. Offic. cap. 17. It is armed with a very ſharp point at the end.

But great numbers are againſt this opinion, as contrary to the text of the evangeliſts, who mention thorns, and not the ſea-ruſh; which beſides, was not proper for the ſoldiers deſigns, becauſe it has but one prickle at its end. Bartholin, Diſſert. de Spineâ coronâ, concurs againſt the Juncus Marinus. He quotes Delrio, who ſaid he often examined the holy crown, which is kept at Paris, and had ſeen others in other places, both in Spain, Flanders, and elſewhere, which were always the buck-thorn; or, a large round thorn.

It is alſo diſputed, whether our Saviour wore his crown of thorns when on the croſs, or whether it was taken from him with his cloaths. Opinions are divided on this, and it is impoſſible to reconcile them, as the ſacred writers have ſaid nothing of the matter. Nor has ancient hiſtory informed us of the manner in which the holy crown has been preſerved, and handed down to us. It is alſo very difficult to believe, that all the thorns, and all the parts, of the holy crown, ſhewn in different places, can proceed from that one crown which our Saviour wore.

THOSA, תיצי, θωσί, Thoſaites, Tizites, diſſipation, he that comes out; from יצא jaiſa.

THOSA. Jediael and Joha, the ſons of Shimri, were Tizites, or inhabitants of Tiza, or Thoſa, 1 Chron. xi. 45. It is unknown where this city ſtood.

THOUGHT, Thinking. This word is taken, not always for the pure operation of the mind while it thinks, without paſſing a judgment, or taking any reſolution. Thought often includes a formed deſign of doing ſomething: For example, Jerem. xi. 19. I knew not that they had deviſed devices [or thought Thoughts] againſt me, ſaying, Let us deſtroy the tree with the fruit thereof. And Gen. xi. 6. ſpeaking of thoſe that built the tower of Babel, Nothing will be reſtrained from them which they have imagined, [or thought] to do. And the Pſalmiſt ſays, The Lord bringeth the counſel of the heathen to nought; he maketh the devices [or thoughts] of the people of none effect. The counſel of the Lord ſtandeth for ever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations. In theſe paſſages, counſel, deſigns, devices, thoughts, are equivalent to undertakings and reſolutions.

The Hebrews give the title of works of thought to ſuch works as require induſtry, and particular genius. Exod. xxxv. 31, 32. Bezaleel was filled with the ſpirit of God, wiſdom, and underſtanding—to think, and to do, &c. Hebrew to think thoughts [TO STUDY] and to do, &c. Ver. 33. In all works of thought. In Prov. xiv. 17. a man of thoughts is a crafty man; Hebrew, a maſter of thought. And Acts xvii. 29. Sculptura artis & cogitationis.

Cogitare and cogitatio are often taken in an ill ſenſe, for contriving and deviſing miſchief. Pſal. lvi. 6. Their thoughts, i. e. their devices, are againſt me for evil. And Nahum i. 9, 11. What do you imagine, deviſe, againſt the Lord? Et ex te exibit cogitans contra dominum malitiam. See Jerem. xviii. 18. Iſa. lv. 7.

St. Paul Rom. ii. 15. ſays, Their thoughts the mean while accuſing, or elſe excuſing, one another; their conſcience bears teſtimony to them, either for good, or for evil. Epheſ. ii. 3. fulfilling the deſires of the fleſh, and of the mind [or thoughts]; i. e. of their own fleſh, of their own mind, their carnal inclinations. And, ſpeaking of virgins, 1 Cor. vii. 34. he ſays, The unmarried woman woman careth for [or thinketh of] the things of the Lord: is employed about matters of religion, and is desirous of pleasing God.

THOUSAND, in Hebrew, Eleph; in Greek, Chilion; in Latin, Mille; in number, ten hundred, but often taken for a very great and indefinite number. So Deut. v. 10. vii. 9. the Lord sheweth mercy to a thousand generations. Psal. lxxxiv. 10. A day in thy courts is better than a thousand. And Psal. cv. 8. He hath remembered his covenant for ever, the word which he commanded to a thousand generations. St. John, Rev. xx. 1, 2, 3, &c. says, And I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit, and a great chain in his hand; and he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the devil and Satan, and bound him a thousand years. And cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled; and after that he must be loosed a little season. And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them; and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded, for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection.

From these passages, ill understood, proceeded the opinion of the Millenaries, who thought that Jesus Christ was to reign with his saints, on earth, for a thousand years, before the day of final judgment. Those who maintained this opinion, were not Heretics, or Schismatics, but some of the ancient fathers of the church, famous for learning, and venerable for sanctity, who in good earnest, and without obstinacy, maintained an opinion, which they thought was clearly delivered in the Scriptures. This came first from the Jews, who expected under the Messiah a reign of a thousand years, on earth, as appears in 2 Esdras iv. 35, &c. vi. 18. But he who gave most reputation to this Hypothesis was Papias, a disciple of St. John the Evangelist, who pretended to have received from the apostles and their disciples, the doctrine of the Millenium, or our Saviour's personal reign on earth, for a thousand years. Caius, a priest of the church of Rome, who lived in the second century, treats the opinion of the Millenaries as a fable invented by Cerinthus. Vide Euseb. Hist. Eccles. lib. 3. cap. 39.

The word Millennium, or Millenary, is not read in Scripture. Du Pin has composed a dissertation on this subject, before his work on the Revelation; see our commentary on Rev. xx. 2. St. Austin, de Civit. lib. 20. cap. 7. St. Gregory the Great, Moral. lib. 4. cap. 12. Andreas Cretensis, Berengaudus, Ribera, and many other learned commentators, understood by a thousand years, not a fixed and determinate number of years, but the whole time from the resurrection of our Saviour, which is the beginning of his reign over the church, till the end of the world, and the final consummation of all things.

THRACIANS, Θρᾶκες, rough, difficult, full of stones; from the Greek θρᾶχυς.

THRASEAS, Θρασέα, Vulgate Thrasœæ, audacious, bold; from the Greek θρασὺς.

THRASEAS, or Tharsea, father of Apollonius, governor of Cœle-Syria, 2 Macc. iii. 5.

THRONE. Heaven is the throne of God, the earth is his foot-stool. Isaiah lxvi. 1. Jesus Christ sat down at the right-hand of the throne of God. Acts vii. 49. The ark of the covenant was considered as the throne of God: Psal. lxxxix. 14. xcvii. 2. Justice and judgment are the establishment of the throne of the Lord.

THRONE denotes that magnificent seat whereon princes usually sit, to receive the homage of their subjects, or to give audience to ambassadors; where they appear in pomp and ceremony; from whence they dispense justice. The throne, the sceptre, the crown, are the ordinary symbols of royalty, and royal authority. Scripture often represents the Lord as sitting on a throne: Sometimes it is said, that the heaven is his throne, and the earth his footstool. Isa. lxvi. 1. The Psalmist says, that God had confirmed his throne in heaven, from all eternity. Psal. ciii. 19. xciii. 2. xlv. 6. This throne was supported by justice and equity, xcvii. 2. The throne of the Lord which was shewn to Ezekiel, i. 2, 3. was at the same time the most terrible, and yet the most magnificent object, that can be imagined. It was an animated chariot, borne by four Cherubim of an extraordinary figure: The wheels were of inexplicable beauty and magnitude, and animated, and conducted, by a spirit. The throne of the Lord, which was over the wheels and cherubim, was like glittering crystal, with a seat of saphire. He who sat on the throne was surrounded with splendor like that of fire, or of metal in fusion; and about him glowed the colours of the rainbow. See also Isaiah vi. 2, 3, 4. Vide FRAGMENTS, No. CLII, page 120.

The

The cherubim upon the ark of the covenant, were alſo conſidered as a kind of throne of God: from whence it is ſaid in many places, that God ſits between the cherubim: 1 Sam. iv. 4. 2 Sam. vi. 2. 2 Kings xix. 15. Pſal. xviii. 10. lxxx. 1. xcix. 1. Iſai. xxxvii. 16. whether we conſider the cherubim of the ark, or the cherubim which Iſaiah and Ezekiel deſcribe as under, and about, the throne of the almighty: and probably to the ſame cherubim St Paul refers by the name of thrones. Coloſſ. i. 16.

The THRONE of Solomon is deſcribed in Scripture as the fineſt and richeſt in the world. 1 Kings, x. 20. It was of ivory, inlaid with gold. The aſcent was by ſeven ſteps; the back was round, and two arms ſupported the ſeat: twelve golden lions, one at each end of every ſtep, made a principal part of its ornaments.

The Jews ſometimes ſwore by the throne of God, or by the heaven. The Son of God forbids ſuch ſort of oaths; Matth. v. 34. xxiii. 22: for, ſays he, he who ſwears by heaven, ſwears by the throne of God, and by him who ſitteth upon that throne. There is a paſſage, Exod. xvii. 16. that might be underſtood in the ſenſe of an oath made by the throne of God. Quia manus ſolii Domini, & bellum Domini, erit contra Amalec; the Lord has lifted up his hand from his throne (he has ſworn by his throne) that he would make war againſt Amalek. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CCXVIII, page 90. Thus in Judith, i. 12, Nebuchadnezzar ſwears by his throne, that he would make war againſt all who had rejected his ambaſſadors.

In Scripture the Son of God is repreſented as ſitting on a throne at the right-hand of his father. Pſal. cx. 1. Heb. i. 8. Rev. iii. 21. And Jeſus Chriſt aſſures his apoſtles, that they ſhould ſit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Iſrael: Luke xxii. 30. And in the Revelations, we find the twenty-four elders ſitting on thrones in the preſence of the Lord. Rev. iv. 4. And, Dan. vii. 9. when God is about to enter into judgment with men, thrones are prepared for the judges. The Ancient of days is ſeated, his throne is as a flame of fire, his wheels are as conſuming fire; ſtreams of fire radiate from his face; millions of millions of angels attend upon him, and thouſands of thouſands are round about him.

THRONES, in the ſenſe of an order of the cœleſtial hierarchy, Coloſſ. i. 16. may ſignify, as above hinted, the cherubim, which were conſidered as the throne of God. St. Paul, Eph. iii. 10. vi. 12. does not mention thrones among the cœleſtial ſpirits that compoſe the angelic hierarchy. Some moderns pretend, that by thrones, principalities, powers, and dominions. St. Paul means no more than temporal powers, ſubordinate to one another. Thus, thrones denote kingly power, principalities ſtand for governors or princes, and powers ſignify judges, magiſtrates of cities, &c.

THYATIRA, Θυάτειρα, perfume, or ſacrifice of labour and contrition; from the Greek θύα, ſcent, perfume, and τείρα, I bruiſe, I diſturb.

THYATIRA, a city which ſome aſcribe to Myſia, and others to Lydia, or to the Leſſer Aſia, becauſe it is on the frontiers of theſe three provinces. St. John writes to the biſhop, or angel, of Thyatira, Rev. ii. 18, 19, &c. I know thy works, &c.

Some think this angel, or biſhop, was St. Carpus, or St. Irenæus: but the firſt is very doubtful; and the latter is without any foundation. Epiphanius, Hæreſ. 51. ſays, that ſome heretics doubted of the authority of the Revelations, becauſe in their time there was no Chriſtian church at Thyatira; as if that was a proof there had been none. As to the Jezabel there, who pretended to be a propheteſs, it is believed that Jezabel is only a figurative name, to denote ſome very wicked woman; but it is not known who ſhe was. Several Greek manuſcripts read, Your wife Jezabel; and ſome of the primitive fathers thought it was the wife of the biſhop of this city. Others believe it ſtands for the Nicolaitans, who corrupted the manners of the faithful, and ſeduced them by their hereſies. But the greater part judge, with good reaſon, that under the name of Jezabel St. John refers to ſome powerful preſumptious woman, who perverted the people, by her vain pretences to prophecy.

THYRSUS. There is mention of theſe rods, or Thirſi in Macc. x. 7. The Jews carried them at the feaſt of tabernacles; and they ſtill carry ſomething like them in their Hoſanna. They are branches of willow, myrtle, and palm-tree; tied together, with citrons or oranges hanging to them, which they wave in a religious manner towards the four quarters of the world. See FEAST OF TABERNACLES.

TIARA. This name is often given to the high-prieſt's mitre. See CIDARIS.

TIBARENIANS, a people bordering on Cappadocia. See TUBAL.

TIBERIAS, Τιβεριὰς, good viſion; from טוב tub, good, and ראה raah, viſion: otherwiſe, the navel; from תבור thabur: otherwiſe, bruiſing; from תבר thabar.

TIBERIAS, a famous city of Galilee, at the ſouthern extremity, on the weſtern ſhore, of the lake of Geneſareth; otherwiſe the ſea of Tiberias. It is thought its old name was Cinnereth, or Hammath, or Emath, or Rakkath, or Recchath: but M. Reland, Paleſt. lib. ii. p. 1037. ſhews, that this is very doubtful, and is only founded on the ſea of Ginnereth being afterwards called the ſea of Tiberias; which by no means proves that Cinnereth and Tiberias are the ſame town. Beſides, he obſerves, that the portion of Naphthali did not begin towards the ſouth, but at Capernaum; [Matt. iv. 13, ſays, that Capernaum was on the confines of Zebulun and Naphthali; and Joſhua ſays, xix. 34. that Naphthali paſſes into Zebulun, towards the ſouth.] which is more to the north than Tiberias; and yet Cinnereth, Hammath, Rakkath, belong to the portion of Naphthali, Joſh. xix. 35. Tiberias, therefore, could not; ſince we know that it was ſouth of the lake of Tiberias.

Joſephus tells us, Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 3. De Bell. lib. ii. cap. 8. that this city was built in honour of Tiberius, by king Herod Agrippa. Pretty near it were baths of hot water; and it ſtood in a place where were many tombs and dead bodies; Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 2. which was contrary to the uſages, and cuſtoms of the Jews. Tiberias was thirty furlongs from Hippos, ſixty from Gadara, an hundred and twenty from Scythopolis, and thirty from Tarichea. Idem de vitâ ſuâ. page 1025. Ibid. page 1010.

Herod the Tetrarch, who built this city, endowed it with great advantages. Its convenient ſituation ſoon made it conſiderable; and it became the metropolis of all Galilee. When Agrippa was obliged to leave Rome, he retired thither with his uncle Herod: The emperor Claudius afterwards beſtowed it on him; for which reaſon, in medals it has the name of Claudia Tiberias. Joſephus took poſſeſſion of it, at the time of the wars of the Jews, and gave the baſtinado to the officer who came to propoſe terms of peace to it from the Romans. Veſpaſian intended to put all the inhabitants to the edge of the ſword; but Agrippa, to whom it belonged, prevailed with him to be ſatisfied with beating down part of its walls. Tiberias was much frequented by fiſhermen and ſeamen; whence we ſee a boat, on the reverſe of ſome medals ſtruck in this city. In another medal, ſtruck under Trajan, we find the goddeſs Salus ſurrounded by a ſerpent, and ſitting on a mountain from whence proceeds a great quantity of water; to ſhew that Tiberias was famous for its baths of hot waters, from whence diſeaſed people received great benefit.

In this city, certain Jews, and ſome of the moſt learned of their prieſts, after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by the Romans, aſſembled and laid the foundation of an academy, which became famous by the Miſhna, which was compoſed in it; by the celebrated labours of the Maſorites, the authors of the pointed vowels; and by the reputation of the doctors who there kept their ſchools. In the ſame city alſo reſided the patriarch of the nation.

Epiphanius obſerves, adverſ. Hæreſ, page 127, that in the time of Conſtantine the Great, the Goſpel of St. John, and the Acts of the Apoſtles, tranſlated into Hebrew, were diſcovered by count Joſeph, in the archives, or treaſury, of Tiberias; and that before this time no Chriſtian was permitted to dwell at Tiberias, or at Capernaum, or at Nazareth, or at Diocæſarea; and that count Joſeph, having obtained leave from Conſtantine to build a church there in honour of Jeſus Chriſt, he made uſe of a great temple, called Adrianeum, which had never been finiſhed, or conſecrated. This he compleated, and dedicated it to the uſe of the Chriſtians. Lampridius, de Severo, informs us, that the emperors Alexander Severus, and Adrian, had intentions of placing Jeſus Chriſt among the gods, and to conſecrate temples to him: From whence it proceeds, that at this day, ſays the author, temples without ſtatues were ſeen in every city, which, for this reaſon, were called Adrianea.

The lake, the pool, the ſea of Tiberias, is the ſame as the lake of Geneſar, or Geneſereth, or the ſea of Cinnereth, or of Galilee See CINNERETH.

TIBERIUS, Τιβέριος, ſon of the Tiber.

TIBERIUS ALEXANDER LYSIMACHUS, nephew to Philo the Jew, and ſon of Alexander Lyſimachus, Alabarcha, or chief of the Jews at Alexandria, and brother to Philo the Jew. Tiberius Alexander was therefore a Jew by nation, and even of the ſacerdotal race: but he quitted the religion of his forefathers, and became a Pagan. He was appointed to ſucceed Cuſpius Fadus, in the government of Judæa, A. D. 46. He made no innovations in the province, any more than his predeceſſor before him; which kept things in tranquility. He cauſed to be crucified James and Simon, ſons of Judas the Galilean, who had made an inſurrection forty years before. He governed Judæa till A. D. 48, and had for ſucceſſor Ventidius Cumanus. Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 3. He was given as an hoſtage to the Parthians, when Corbulo engaged Tiridates to come to Rome, Rome, to receive the crown from Tiberius. Tacit, Annal. lib. xv. cap. 26. 29. Dio. lib. lxii. A. D. 63. He was Prefect of Egypt, A. D 66. He was the firſt that acknowledged Veſpaſian as emperor, July 1, A. D. 69, and was lieutenant-general to Titus, at the ſiege of Jeruſalem, A. D. 70. Titus had a great eſteem for him; and Tiberius Alexander was, in a manner, the principal man of his council.

TIBERIUS. The emperor Tiberius, ſon of Livia, the wife of Auguſtus, and of Tiberius Nero, her former huſband, of the patrician family of the Claudii, was adopted by Auguſtus, A. D. 4, ſucceeded him A. D. 14, and reigned twenty-two years, ſeven months, and ſeven days. We ſhall not give a particular account of his life and government, but what may contribute to illuſtrate the Scriptures, which is the object of this work.

The Jews made application to Tiberius, A. D. 17, for ſome abatement of their taxes, with which they were oppreſſed. The emperor referred the matter to Germanicus, who was to proceed this year on his expedition into the Eaſt. But we are not informed how Germanicus determined this affair. Tacit. Annal. lib. xi. cap. 4. A. D. 19, of Tiberius the 6th, the Senate of Rome forbad any Jewiſh ceremonies to be exerciſed in the city; they even decreed, according to Tacitus, that the Jews ſhould be expelled Italy, except they changed their religion in a certain time; and that all who did not conform to this decree ſhould be reduced to ſlavery. But neither Joſephus, nor Suetonius, tells us, that they were driven out of Italy. Philo, Leg. p. 1014, imputes this perſecution to the intrigues of Sejanus, who apprehended their too great fidelity might obſtruct the deſigns he was forming. Joſephus ſays, Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 5. it took its riſe from four Jews, who, profeſſing to teach Judaiſm at Rome, had perſuaded Fulvia, a Roman lady, to embrace this religion, and to put rich preſents into their hands, to be ſent, (as they ſaid) to the temple of Jeruſalem; though in truth, they were converted to their own uſe. Tiberius being informed of this by Saturninus, the huſband of Fulvia, expelled all the Jews from Rome. Four thouſand of them were enrolled, to be ſent againſt the robbers in Sardinia. Sueton. in Tiber. cap. 36.

It was towards A. D. 26, Tiberius ſent Pontius Pilate into Judea, to ſucceed Gratus. This governor attempted to conſecrate to Tiberius, golden bucklers in the palace of Herod at Jeruſalem; but the Jews procured from Tiberius, a revocation of the order. Pilate alſo attempted to introduce the enſigns of the army on which were the effigies of Tiberius: but the conſtancy of the Jews prevailed with Pilate to withdraw them. Vide PILATE.

Forty years before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, A. D. 30, of Tiberius 17, the Romans deprived the Jews of the power of life and death. John xviii. 31. Judæi apud Caſaub. exerc. 15. n. 71. Philo Legat. p. 1015. But in the year following, Tiberius ſent orders to the governor, to make no innovations on the cuſtoms of the Jews, nor to commit any violence on their perſons. When Jeſus Chriſt was dead, A. D. 33, Pilate wrote to Tiberius, ſay Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib xi. cap. 2. Tertull. Apolog. cap. 5. an account of his death, and of the conſequent prodigies. The emperor wrote to the ſenate in ſuch a manner, as ſhewed he deſired they ſhould decree divine honours to Jeſus Chriſt. But the ſenate withheld thoſe honours, partly to maintain their own authority, and to hinder others from adoring any god without their permiſſion; and partly in compliment to Tiberius, who had declined them when offered to him by the ſenate. Tiberius did not forbear to ſhew his good inclinations toward the Chriſtians; and even threatened thoſe with death who ſhould give them any diſturbance. In effect, we do not find any perſecution of the church under this emperor. He died March, A. D. 37.

TIBHATH, טבחת, murder, or cook; from טבח tabach.

TIBHATH, or Thebat, a city of Syria, taken and plundered by David. 1 Chron. xviii. 8. Stephanus, the geographer, ſpeaks of a Thebes in Syria. It ſhould ſeem that Tibhath is called Betah. 2 Sam. viii. 8.

TIBNI, תבני, ſtraw, or hay; from תבן theben: otherwiſe, underſtanding; from בינה binah: otherwiſe, filiation; from בן ben, a ſon.

TIBNI, or Thebni, ſon of Ginath, competitor with Omri for the kingdom of Iſrael: But Omri prevailed. 1 Kings xvi. 21. Scripture does not tell us what death Tibni died; but it ſhould ſeem that he died in battle, A. M. 3079, ante A. D. 925.

TICHON, תיכון, τιχὼν, middle, from תוך thoc: otherwiſe, preparation; from כון cun.

TICHON. Ezekiel xlvii. 16, ſpeaks of the houſe of Tichon, or Beth-tichon, on the confines of Auranitis. Its ſituation is unknown; but it could not be far from Damaſcus, nor from Trachonitis. Pliny mentions the Bœtaceni, lib. v. cap. 23. Others read Bœtarreni, inſtead of Bœtaceni. [Hazar-hatticon, Eng. Tr.]

TIDAL, תדעל, θαργὰλ, that breaks the yoke; from עול hol, a yoke, and דלל dalal, to break: otherwiſe, knowledge of elevation; from ידע jadah, knowledge, and עלה halah, elevation. The Septuagint read ר reſh for ד daleth; thargal.

TIDAL, or Thadal, king of nations, or of Goim, Gen. xiv. 1. מלך־גוים Melech-Goim. Some think he was king of Galilee of the Gentiles, beyond Jordan, Matth. iv. 15. Symmachus tranſlates it King of Pamphilia; the Syriac, King of the Galites; Joſhua ſpeaks of a king of the nations of Gilgal, or of Galilee, according to the Septuagint. Joſh. xii. 23.

TIGER, a fierce wild beaſt. It is mentioned but once in the Latin. Job ſays, iv. 11. ליש laiſh. Tigris periit eò quòd non haberet prædam. But the Hebrew Laiſh, tranſlated tiger, ſignifies rather an old lion, as in our tranſlation.

This animal is of the cat kind. Oppian ſays, that it is the moſt beautiful of quadrupeds, as the peacock is the fineſt of birds. It is ſo nimble and active, that the poets have fancied it to be conceived by the wind. In fable the chariot of Bacchus is drawn by tigers, to inſinuate that wine tames the fierceſt and moſt ſavage of men. In the Mogul's court they exhibit combats of men againſt tigers. Pietro della Valle, p. 4.

TIGLATH-PILESER. See TILGATH-PILNESER.

TIGRIS, חדקל, τήγρις, Heb. Chidekel, or Hiddekel, point of ſwiftneſs, or ſwift as an arrow. Tigris in Perſian, ſignifies an arrow, ſays Q. Curtius, lib. iv. cap. 9. Hiddekel may be derived from חד chad, ſharp, and חלל chalal, ſwiftneſs: otherwiſe, ſharp ſound; from חול chol, ſound, and chad. Joyful ſound, or ſwiftneſs; from chalal, and chol, and חדה chadah, to rejoice: or, according to the Syriac and Hebrew, a voice, a ſound, a velocity.

TIGRIS, a famous river, which riſes in Armenia, and diſcharges itſelf in the Perſian gulph. Moſes calls it Hiddekel, Gen. ii. 14. חדקל. The ancients Digilito, and to this day it is called Degil, or Tigil. Joſephus, the Chaldee paraphraſt, the Arabian and Perſian tranſlators, call it Digilat. Pliny, lib. vi. cap. 27. ſays, that at its fountain, and ſo far as it runs ſmoothly, it is called Diglito; but when it becomes more rapid, it is called Tigris, which, in the language of the Medes, ſignifies an arrow. He adds, that it riſes in the greater Armenia, in the midſt of a plain called Elegoſine: it enters the lake Arethuſa, and croſſes it, without mingling with its waters: after which it meets with mount Taurus, where, plunging into the earth, it paſſes under the mountain, and riſes again on the other ſide. The cave at which it enters is called Zoroanda: and, in proof that it is the ſame river, and not another, that comes out again, on the other ſide, it re-produces at its opening, what had been caſt into it at its entrance into the cave: thus ſays Pliny. Ptolemy alſo, places the ſpring of Tigris in the middle of Armenia, 39° 30 min. N. Lat. [Part of the ſame ſtream is called HIE, another part DIGEL, theſe united, probably form the Hi-dekel of Moſes.]

Strabo, lib. xi. ſeems to have taken for the fountain of the Tigris, its re-appearance out of mount Taurus; ſince he places it out of Armenia, and ſays it riſes ſouth of mount Niphates, which is a part of mount Taurus. The Tigris eaſt, and the Euphrates weſt, are the boundaries of Meſopotamia; which lies between theſe rivers. After having paſſed through a large tract of land, from north to ſouth, theſe two famous rivers diſcharge themſelves into the Perſian gulph. At this day they unite in one channel; but formerly they entered it ſeparately, as Pliny obſerves, lib. vi. cap. 27, 28. and in his time traces of the ancient channels were ſtill ſeen. The Tigris took its riſe in the land of Eden, and was one of the four rivers that watered the earthly paradiſe, Geneſis ii. 14. The Tigris overflows its banks in the beginning of ſpring, occaſioned by the melting of the ſnows on the mountains of Armenia, Ecclus. xxiv. 25.

TIKVATH, תקוה, θεκωὲ, hope, union, or heap; from קוה cavah: otherwiſe, line, chord, or rule; from קו cau.

TIKVATH, or Thecue, father of Shallum, 2 Chr. xxxiv. 22. Perhaps it may only mean, that Shallum was a native of Tikvah, or Tekoa.

TILGATH-PILNESER, תגלה־פלאסר, תלגת־פלנאסר, θεγλαθ-Φαλασὰρ, or Tiglath-pileſer, that binds or takes away captivity, miraculous, or ruinous; from אסר aſar, to bind, and גלה galah, captivity, and פלא pala, miraculous; or from נפל nephel, or מפלה maphala, ruin. That hinders or binds, and withholds the ſnow that falls; from אסר aſar, to bind, to hinder, and the Chaldee תלג thelag, to ſnow, and from פלה palah, to diſperſe, to divide. This name is Aſſyrian, and therefore foreign to the holy language.

TILGATH-PILNESER, or Theglat-Phalaſſar, king of Aſſyria, ſon and ſucceſſor of Sardanapalus; he began to reign at Nineveh, A. M. 3257, ante A. D. 747. Profane writers generally call him Ninus Junior. Ælian, Hiſt. Animal, lib. xii. cap. 12. calls him Thilgam; Scripture calls him Tilgath-pilneſer, or Tiglath-pileſer, 1 Chron. v. 6. 2 Kings xv. 29. xvi. 10. He reſtored the kingdom of Aſſyria, after the diſmembring of it by Beleſis and Arbaces. See SARDANAPALUS.

Ahaz, king of Judah, finding himſelf preſſed by Reſin, king of Syria, and Pekah, king of Iſrael, and unable to oppoſe them, ſent ambaſſadors to Tilgath-pilneſer, to deſire his aſſiſtance againſt theſe kings, 2 Kings xvi. 7, 8, 9, &c. At the ſame time he ſent him all the gold and ſilver found in the treaſuries of the temple, and of the palace. Tilgath-pilneſer marched againſt Rezin, killed him, plundered Damaſcus, and tranſported the inhabitants to places on the river Cyrus. Ahaz went to meet this prince at Damaſcus, 2 Chron. xxviii. 20, 21. but Tilgath-pilneſer was not ſatisfied with the preſents of Ahaz, but entered Judæa, where he found no oppoſition, and ravaged the whole country. He did the ſame in Samaria, carried away the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, and tranſplanted them to Halah, Habor, and Hara, upon the river Gozan, 1 Chron. v. 26. He took alſo the cities Ijon, Abel-beth-maachah, Janoah, Kedeſh, Hazor, Galilee, and the countries of Gilead, and Napthali, and carried away the inhabitants into Aſſyria, 2 Kings xv. 29. Tilgath-pilneſer reigned nineteen years at Nineveh, he died A. M. 3276, ante A. D. 728. His ſucceſſor was his ſon Shalmaneſer.

Tilgath-

TILON, תילון, muttering: from לון lun: otherwiſe, his ſuſpenſion; from תלה thalah, to ſuſpend: otherwiſe, their heap; from תלל thalal, heap or maſs, and the pronoun ן an, theirs.

TILON, or Thilon, ſon of Shimon, a deſcendant of Caleb, 1 Chron. iv. 20.

TIME, Tempus. This term is commonly taken in all languages for the meaſure of motion, or for the duration of any thing. [Time, ſays Mr. Locke, is the flux of inſtants.] It is alſo taken for opportunity, for the favourable moment for doing, or omitting, any thing. The Time of any one, ſignifies the time of his coming. Iſaiah xiii. 22. propè eſt ut veniat Tempus ejus, & dies ejus non elongabuntur. Jeſus Chriſt, ſpeaking of his death, ſays, that his time was not yet come, John vii. 6, 7.

The time of the vengeance of God, is ſpoken of as the time of the Lord, the time of his viſiting: Woe unto them, for their day is come, the time of their viſitation. Behold, I am againſt thee, O thou moſt proud, ſaith the Lord God of hoſts; for thy day is come, the time that I will viſit thee. Jerem. l. 27, 31.

To redeem the time, Daniel ii. 8. I know of certainty that ye would gain the time, or redeem the time. And Epheſians v. 16. Redeeming the time, becauſe the days are evil. Theſe expreſſions may ſignify, to gain time; to protract an affair to a great length; to wait for a more favourable opportunity. Thus Nebuchadnezzar's magicians would have gained time, requiring a length of time from the king wherein to explain his dream; hoping that his deſire of recovering it might have paſſed away, or, that the dream might have revived in his memory. St. Paul adviſes the faithful to redeem the time, becauſe the days are evil; i. e. to let the time of the anger and rage of wicked men paſs away, and wait for more favourable circumſtances.

[I doubt whether our learned author has hit the true meaning of theſe paſſages: I think I hear Nebuchadnezzar ſaying, "It has pleaſed God to grant me a dream, evidently prophetic, and monitory; to warn me againſt approaching danger from enemies: now, you refuſe to explain it, becauſe you would have the time paſs away during which this warning might be of uſe: you refuſe to explain it, till after the opportunity for profiting by it, is over: in this delay, you aſſiſt my enemies, by keeping me in ignorance. I am ſure you mean to protract the time, beyond the event predicted." St. Paul adviſes his Chriſtian friends to REDEEM time: i. e. to buy back again, like thoſe who have ſold a commodity much beneath its value; to re-purchaſe, and re-poſſeſs it: it is true, this is impoſſible in reſpect of time; but the perſon who is deſirous of re-purchaſing what he has ſold too cheaply, will take eſpecial care of the remainder of his commodity; and will eſteem that ſo much the more valuable, as he has been a loſer by his former conduct; which is preciſely, I apprehend, what the apoſtle deſigned by his precept.]

King Ahaſuerus conſulted the wiſe men which knew the times, Eſth. i. 13. i. e. his counſellors, who underſtood the hiſtory, cuſtoms, and laws of the Perſians. Jerom has tranſlated, he conſulted the ſages, who were always near his perſon, according to the cuſtom of kings. The Chaldee paraphraſt inſiſts, that he conſulted the children of Iſſachar, who were ſkilful in the ſcience of times and ſeaſons. Moſes ſays, Deut. xxxiii. 18, 19. that thoſe of this tribe ſhould invite the people to come to the mountain: populos vocabunt ad montem. They ſhall be able aſtronomers, and ſhall know the feſtival days exactly; they ſhall invite their neighbours to repair to Jeruſalem, to the holy mountain.

Jeſus Chriſt ſays to his apoſtles, who aſked him if he was ſoon to reſtore the kingdom to Iſrael? Acts i. 7. It is not for you to know the times, or the ſeaſons, which the Father has put [RESERVED] in his own power. They ſtill thought that the kingdom of the Meſſiah was a temporal kingdom. But the Holy Ghoſt, which they received at Pentecoſt, inſtructed them, that the complete kingdom of the Meſſiah, the renovation of all things, was not to take place before the end of of the world. St. Peter, ſpeaking to the Jews, Acts iii. 20, 21. refers to the time of refreſhing; the time of the reſtoration of all things. And St. Paul, 1 Theſſ. v. 1. uſes almoſt the ſame terms as thoſe in which our Saviour expreſſed himſelf to his apoſtles, concerning his laſt coming.

A time, times, and half a time, in Dan. xii. 7. and Rev. xii. 14. denotes three years and an half; which the perſecutions continued, againſt the Jews in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, and againſt the Chriſtians in the time of Diocleſian. [Unleſs it be ſo many ſeries of years; during which the goſpel is to be oppreſſed and obſcured: 360—720—180 = 1260 years.] Tempus, a year, Tempora, two years, dimidium Temporis, half a year.

In Dan. iv. 13. ſeven times are taken for ſeven years. Until ſeven times [years] have paſſed over him. This denoted the ſeven years of the metamorphoſis of king Nebuchadnezzar. In Ezek. iv. 10, 11, a tempore uſque ad tempus comedes; you ſhall eat theſe three hundred and ninety loaves, in the three hundred and ninety days, that I have appointed you. From one time to another time, is from the beginning of ſuch a term to the end of the ſame.

An acceptable time, a time of good pleaſures, a time of favour, a time of viſitation; the time of the favour, of the goodneſs, and of the mercy of God; to which is oppoſed, a time of fury, a time of correction, the time of anger, of vengeance, the evil day, &c.

Our time, is put for the time of death: 1 Macc. ix. 10. Si appropiavit tempus noſtrum, moriamur in virtute propter fratres noſtros. The devils complained that Jeſus Chriſt was come to torment them before the time: Matth. viii. 29. i. e. before the laſt judgment, at which the devils will be thrown for ever into the fire prepared for them. The fulneſs of time, Galat. iv. 4. ſtands for the time of the coming of the Meſſiah: The latter times alſo, denotes, occaſionally, the time of the Meſſiah, but elſewhere, the laſt judgment, and the time of the perſecution of Antichriſt. Ante tempora ſæcularia, Tit. i. 2. ſtands for that eternity which was before the creation of the world. Before the world there was properly no time: the time that has elapſed from Adam to us, is the Tempora ſæcularia, the times of ages, oppoſed to that duration of eternity, which preceded the creation, and which is a time improperly ſo called. Pſal. xxx. 16.

We read in Pſal. xxxi. 15. in manibus tuis ſortes meæ; my lot is within thy hands: בידך עתותי LXX. οἱ κλῆροι μου. Aq. Sym. Theod. οἱ καιροι. The Hebrew is, in manibus tuis tempora mea, my time, the duration of my life, is in thy hand. Several Latin copies read it in the ſame manner; as the Roman pſalters, of St. Germain des Prez, and that of St. Peter of Chartres.

TIMEUS, Τιμαῖος, Timeus in Greek may ſignify, perfect, honourable: in Hebrew, admirable; from תמה thamah, to admire.

TIMEUS, father of the blind man whom Jeſus Chriſt cured at Jericho; who is called Bar-Timeus, i. e. ſon of Timeus, Mark x. 46.

TIMNA, תמנע, hindrance, prohibition; from מנע manah: otherwiſe, trouble, perfect and compleat; from נוע nuah, motion, concuſſion, and תמם thamam, perfect, finiſhed.

I. TIMNA, or Thamna, ſon of Eliphaz, and grandſon of Eſau, 1 Chron. i. 36. But we ſhould rather ſay, that Timna was mother of Amalek, and wife of Eſau, to reconcile the Chronicles with Gen. xxxvi. 12.

II. TIMNA, concubine of Eſau, and mother of Amalek, Gen. xxxvi. 12. probably the ſame Timna as the above.

III. TIMNA, duke, or chief, of Idumea, after the death of Hadad, 1 Chron. i. 51. Gen. xxxvi. 40.

TIMNATH, תמנה, image, or figure; from מין mon: otherwiſe, enumeration; from מנה manah: or, according to the Syriac, that eſtabliſhes.

I. TIMNATH, Timnah, Thamna, or Thamnatha, a city of Judah, Joſh. xv. 10, 57. Judah was going to Timnath, when he met with Tamar, Gen. xxxviii. 12. This city may well enough be that which is between Jeruſalem and Diſpolis.

II. TIMNATH, a city of the Philiſtines, where Samſon married his wife. Judg. xiv. 1, &c. Perhaps this is the ſame as the former, which might then belong to the Philiſtines; for it was near their country.

TIMNATH-SERAH, תמנת־סרה, θαμναθα-σαρά, Thanath-ſare, or Thamath-hereſh, by the tranſpoſition of the ס ſamech, figure, or image extended, or that remains; from מון mun, an image, and סרה ſerah, extended, or remaining: or image of the ſun; from חרס cheres: otherwiſe, extenſive enumeration; from מנה manah, to reckon, and סרח ſarach: otherwiſe, image, ſtink; from the Syrian and Chaldee, סרה ſarah.

TIMNATH-SERAH, or Thamnat-Saraa, a city of Ephraim, which Joſhua choſe for his dwelling and burying-place, Joſh. xix. 50. xxiv. 30.

TIMNITE, תמני, θαμναθαῖος, ſee Timnath.

TIMON, Τίμων, honourable, worthy; from the Greek τιμή,

TIMON,

TIMON, one of the ſeven firſt deacons, Acts vi. 5. Nothing particular is known of him. The Greeks honour four of the firſt deacons on July 28. They ſay of Timon, that being made biſhop of Boſtra in Arabia, he was burnt by the infidels. The Latins place his death on April 19, at Corinth. They tell us, that he preached ſome time at Berea, and then came to Corinth, where the Jews and Pagans threw him into the fire; and ſeeing that by a miracle he eſcaped from thence, they fixed him on a croſs. Dorotheus makes him ſometime biſhop of Boſtra, and ſometime of Tyre and Sidon. See Bollandus, April 19.

TIMOTHY, Τιμόθεος, honour of God, or valued of God; from the Greek τιμή, and θέος, God.

I. TIMOTHY, Timotheus, general of Antiochus Epiphanes, together with Bacchides, another general of the ſame prince, was twice defeated by Judas Maccabeus: Firſt, A. M. 3840, ſhortly after the purification and re-dedication of the temple, 2 Macc. viii. 30. Afterwards, again the ſame year beyond Jordan, ſeveral times. 1 Macc. v. 6, 7. He was killed a little after, with Chereas his brother, at Gazara, whither he had fled, after the loſs of a great battle. 2 Macc. x. 87.

II. TIMOTHY, general of king Antiochus Epiphanes, and governor of the country beyond Jordan, a different perſon from the former Timothy. 1 Macc. v. 11, 12. 2 Macc. xii. 20, 21, &c. He aſſembled a great army beyond Jordan, but was overcome by Judas Maccabeus, and Jonathan his brother. Timothy falling into the hands of Doſitheus and Soſipater, begged his life of them, promiſing to ſet at liberty many Jewiſh priſoners; giving his word of honour that he would releaſe the captives, he was ſet at liberty, without injury. We hear no more of him. See 2 Macc. chap. xii. 1 Macc. v. 11, 44. A. M. 3841, ante A. D. 163.

III. TIMOTHY, a diſciple of St. Paul. He was of Derbe, or rather of Lyſtra, both cities of Lycaonia. Acts xvi. 1. xiv. 6. His father was a Gentile, but his mother was a Jeweſs. Her name was Eunice, and his grandmother's name was Lois. St. Paul commends their piety, and the good education they had given Timothy. 2 Tim. i. 5. iii. 15. When St. Paul came to Derbe and Lyſtra, about A. D. 51, or 52, the brethren reported very advantageouſly of the merit and good diſpoſition of Timothy, and the apoſtle would have him along with him. He circumciſed him at Lyſtra, before he received him into his company. Acts xvi. 3. Timothy applied himſelf to labour in the goſpel, and did St. Paul very important ſervices, through the whole courſe of his preaching. It is not known when he was made biſhop; but it is believed that he received very early the impoſition of the apoſtle's hands, and that in conſequence of a particular revelation, or order from the Holy Ghoſt. 1 Tim. iv. 14. 2 Tim. i. 6. St. Paul names him, not only his dearly beloved ſon, but alſo his brother, the companion of his labours, and a man of God; obſerving, that there was none more united with him in heart and mind than Timothy.

This holy diſciple accompanied St. Paul to Macedonia, to Philippi, to Theſſalonica, to Berea: And when the apoſtle went from Berea, he left Timothy and Silas there, to confirm the converts. Acts xvii. 14, 15, 16, &c. When at Athens, he directed Timothy to viſit him there: A. D. 52. And when he was come, and had given him an account of the churches of Macedonia, St. Paul ſent him back to Theſſalonica, from whence he afterwards returned with Silas, and came to St. Paul at Corinth, Acts xviii. 5. There he continued with him; and the apoſtle names him with Silas, at the beginning of the two epiſtles he then wrote to the Theſſalonians.

About A. D. 56, St. Paul ſent Timothy and Eraſtus into Macedonia; Acts xix. 21, 22. and directed Timothy to call at Corinth, to refreſh the minds of the Corinthians in the truth. And ſome time after, writing to the ſame Corinthians, 1 Cor. iv. 17. he recommends to them to have care of Timothy, and to ſend him back in peace. Timothy returned to St. Paul, in Aſia, who there ſtayed for him. They went together into Macedonia; and the apoſtle joins Timothy's name with his own, in the ſecond epiſtle to the Corinthians, which he wrote from Macedonia, about the middle of A. D. 57; and he ſends his commendations to the Romans, in the letter which he wrote to them from Corinth, the ſame year, Rom. xvi. 21.

Though it does not appear by the Acts, that Timothy was with St. Paul the two years in which he was priſoner at Cæſarea, nor during his voyage to Rome; yet as Timothy had accompanied him in his journey to Jeruſalem, Acts xx. 4. where he was apprehended, it is likely he alſo followed him to Cæſarea, and to Rome; and it is certain he was in this laſt city when the apoſtle wrote to the Philippians, to the Coloſſians, and to Philemon, becauſe he is named in the titles of theſe epiſtles, which were written A. D. 60, 61, 62. The year following, when St. Paul wrote to the Hebrews, Heb.

Heb. xiii. 23. A. D. 64. he tells them, that Timothy was come out of priſon: But he mentions no circumſtances, either of the impriſonment, or of the delivery of this diſciple.

When St. Paul returned from Rome, A. D. 64, he left Timothy at Epheſus, 1 Tim. i. 3, 4. ii. 1, 8. 9. iii. 1, 8. v. 7, 20. to take care of that church, of which he was the firſt biſhop, as he is recognized by the council of Chalcedon. Chalcedon. Concil. tom. 4. p. 699. Vide & Conſtitut. Apoſt. lib. vii. cap. 46. St. Paul wrote to him from Macedonia the firſt of the two letters that are addreſſed to him, 1 Tim. vi. 23. about A. D. 64, or 65. He recommends to him to be more moderate in his auſterities, and to drink a little wine, becauſe of the weakneſs of his ſtomach, and his frequent infirmities. After the apoſtle came to Rome, A. D. 65, being now near his death, he wrote to him his ſecond letter, which is full of kindneſs and tenderneſs for this his dear diſciple, and which is juſtly conſidered as the laſt will of St. Paul. He deſires him to come to Rome to him before winter, and to bring with him ſeveral things that St. Paul had left at Troas. 2 Tim. iv. 10, 11, 12, 13. If Timothy went to Rome, as is probable, he muſt be a witneſs there of the martyrdom of St. Paul, A. D. 66.

He returned to Epheſus, probably A. D. 67, and continued to govern this church as its biſhop; for St. John the Evangeliſt, who reſided there at the ſame time, had the care of the churches of all Aſia, by an authority ſuperior to that of a biſhop. The Acts of St. Timothy, of which Photius has tranſmitted an abridgment to us, Cod. 254. (See the Bolland. 24. January; M. De Tillemont. tom. ii. p. 101, 564.) import, that on January 22, A. D. 97, the pagans of Epheſus made a great feaſt, in which they carried in proceſſion the images of their gods, being maſked and armed with great clubs; that Timothy ruſhed in among them, to prevent this idolatrous ſuperſtition, but they killed him with ſtones and with their clubs. His diſciples carried him to a mountain near the city, upon which he was buried. The Greeks, Uſuard, and ſome Latins, put his feaſt on this day; but Bede, Raban, Adon, and others, place it January 24. The ancient martyrologies, under the name of Jerom, mention him September 27.

If he did not die before A. D. 97, we can hardly doubt but that he muſt be the angel of the church of Epheſus, to whom St. John writes, Rev. ii. 1, 2, 3, &c. Though the reproaches of having left his firſt love, do not ſeem to agree to ſo holy a man as Timothy. I know thy works, and thy labour, and thy patience, and how thou canſt not bear them which are evil; and thou haſt tried them which ſay they are apoſtles, and are not, and haſt found them lyars: And haſt born, and haſt patience, and for my name ſake haſt laboured, and haſt not fainted. Nevertheleſs, I have ſomewhat againſt thee, becauſe thou haſt left thy firſt love. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do thy firſt works; or elſe I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candleſtick out of his place, except thou repent. The greater part of Interpreters think, that theſe reproaches do not ſo much concern Timothy, perſonally, as ſome member of his church, whoſe zeal was become cool. Others are perſuaded that they may even be imputed to Timothy himſelf, who made ample atonement by his martyrdom, for what the Holy Ghoſt reproaches him with in this place. We are not to think that the Saints are in an impeccable ſtate; or that their zeal never ſuffers any diminution. It is thought Timothy was ſucceeded by Oneſimus.

TIPHSAH, תפסה, θαΦὰ, θαΦθὰ, paſſage, leap, or ſtep, made in halting: or the paſſover; from פסח paſach.

TIPHSAH, or Thapſa, a city of Ephraim. Shallum ſon of Jabeſh having ſlain Zechariah king of Iſrael, Menahem, general of this prince's army, procured himſelf to be acknowledged king; 2 Kings xv. 16. A. D. 233, ante A. D. 771. The city of Tiphſah having ſhut its gates againſt him, he took it by force; and exerciſed the utmoſt cruelties againſt the inhabitants. See Joſeph. Antiq. lib. ix. cap. 11.

TIRAS, תירס, that demoliſhes or deſtroys; from תרס aras: otherwiſe, that waters; from רכס raſas.

TIRAS, or Thiras, the ſeventh ſon of Japheth, the ſon of Noah. Gen. x. 2. Interpreters agree, that he was the father of the Thracians.

TIRATHITES. The word is not in the Vulgate, but only in the Hebrew of 1 Chron. ii. 55: הרעתים Tirathim. Vulg. Canentes. The Tirathites, in Chaldee ſignifies porters. They deſcended from Hemath, head of the family of the Rechabites.

TIRHAKAH, תרהקה, inquirer, examiner, or dull obſerver, whoſe eyes are ſtopped, or whoſe ſight is diſturbed; from תור thur, to ſeek, to examine, and קהה caah, made dull: otherwiſe, turtle, or law made dull; from the ſame תור thur, a turtle, or תורה thorah, a law, and קהה caah, to make blunt. This is an Ethiopian name; its etymology is not in the Hebrew.

TIRHAKAH, or Tharaca, king of Ethiopia; is of of the land of Cuſh, bordering on Paleſtine and Egypt. This prince, at the head of a powerful army, attempted to relieve Hezekiah, then attacked by Sennacherib. 2 Kings xix. 9. A. M. 3291, ante A. D. Sennacherib was then engaged in the ſiege of Lachiſh; yet he raiſed the ſiege, and went out to meet him. But the angel of the Lord ſmote his army that night, and killed of them to the number of eighty-five thouſand men. It does not appear that this prince had given Tirhakah battle; his army was routed before he came up to him, Tirhakah is called Thearchon by Strabo. lib. i. p. 653. This geographer quotes Megaſthenes, who related, that this prince had carried his conqueſts as far as Europe, and even to the pillars of Hercules.

TIRIA, הריא, that ſearches or examines; from תור thur: otherwiſe, that beholds; from ראה raah.

TIRIA, or Thiria, ſon of Jehaleleel; deſcended from Caleb, 1 Chron. iv. 16.

TIRSHATHA, התרשתא, that overturns the foundation; from שתות ſhathoth, foundation, and תור thor, or thua, that overturns: according to the Syriac, that beholds the time or the year. This word is foreign to the Hebrew tongue; it will not be eaſy to find its true etymology in that language.

TIRSHATHA, or Atherſata, a title, it ſignifies The king's cup-bearer. התיר שתה Pincerna Regis. Nehem. vii. 65, 70. x. 1. See NEHEMIAH.

TIRZAH, תרצתה, Heb. Tirzathah, benevolent, or complaiſant; from רצה ratza: otherwiſe, that runs; from רוץ rutz.

I. TIRZAH, or Therſa, the fifth daughter of Zelophehad, Numb. xxvi. 33. xxvii. 1. Joſh. xvii. 3.

II. TIRZAH, a city of Ephraim, the royal ſeat of the kings of Iſrael, from the time of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, to the reign of Omri, who built the city of Samaria, which then became the capital of this kingdom. Joſhua killed the king of Tirzah, Joſh. xii. 24. Menahem, the ſon of Gadi, of Tirzah, ſlew Shallum, the uſurper of the kingdom of Iſrael, who reigned at Samaria, and aſſumed the government himſelf. But the city of Tirzah ſhutting its gates againſt him, he made it feel the moſt terrible effects of his indignation. See 2 Kings xv. 14, 16. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. ix. cap. 11.

TISHBITE, תשבי, that makes captives; from שבה ſhabah: otherwiſe, that turns back or recalls, that dwells; from שוב ſhub.

TISHBITE: Theſbe, or Thiſhbe, was a city of Gilead, beyond Jordan, and the country of the prophet Elijah, who from hence was called the Tiſhbite. 1 King xvii. 1. Epiphanius ſays, that Thiſbe was in the country of the Arabians, because in his time the whole diſtrict beyond Jordan belonged to the Arabians. Joſephus calls this city Theſbon, Antiq. lib. viii. cap. 5.

TISRI, or Tizri, the firſt Hebrew month of the civil year, and the ſeventh of the eccleſiaſtical year. The Hebrews call it תצרי Tizri, or, otherwiſe ראש־השנה Roſh-haſhana. Initium vel caput anni. i. e. the beginning of the year. It anſwered to the moon of September. On the firſt day of this month was kept the feaſt of trumpets, becauſe the beginning of the year was then proclaimed by the ſound of trumpets. On this day they refrained from all ſorts of ſervile buſineſs, and offered in ſacrifice a calf, a ram, and ſeven lambs. Levit. xxiii. 24. Numb. xxix. 1.

It is thought Joſhua died on the firſt day of Tiſri. The ſabbatical years, and the year of jubilee, began on this day.

The third day was a faſt for the death of Gedaliah, the ſon of Ahikam, killed at Mizpah. 2 Kings xxv. 25. Jerem. xli. 2.

The fifth day was a faſt for the death of twenty of the chief Jewiſh doctors; particularly for that of Akiba.

The eighth day, the dedication of Solomon's temple, which began on this day, and continued fourteen days, to the 22d. 1 Kings viii. 35. 2 Chr. vii. 9, 10.

The tenth day, the feaſt of ſolemn expiation. Levit. xvi. 29. xxiii. 27. See EXPIATION.

The fifteenth of Tiſri, the feaſt of tabernacles. It continued ſeven days. Levit. xxiii. 34. See TABERNACLES.

The twenty third day, the Jews keep the feaſt of The rejoicing for the Law: they thank God for having given it them; they read the bleſſings; and the hiſtory of the death of Moſes. Deut. xxxiii. xxxiv.

TITANS, Τιτᾶνες, in Greek, it may ſignify revenger, puniſher.

TITANS, giants, famous in hiſtory, or rather in fable. Vide REPHAIM.

TITLE, Titulus. This word is variouſly uſed:—

1. For a monument. Jacob roſe up early in the morning, and took the ſtone that had ſerved him for a pillow, and made a monument of it: Gen. xxviii. 18. Erexit in titulum. Jacob, together with Laban, erected a title, or monument, of their covenant, by a pile of ſtones on mount Gilead. Gen. xxxi. 45, 46. After the death of Rachel, Jacob raiſed her a monument. Gen. xxxv. 20. Abſalom in his life-time ſet up himſelf a monument, or title, called The hand of Abſalom. 2 Sam. xviii. 18. In moſt of theſe places the Hebrew word is Matzbah, מצבה, Statua, Columna, quicquid ſtatuitur & erigitur in monumentum.

monumentum. which, in general, ſignifies any thing ſet up as a memorial, whether a ſtatue, a pillar, a ſtone, a mound, &c. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CLXVI. page 167. Moſes forbids the erecting of ſuperſtitious monuments, or titles, through all the coaſts of Iſrael. Levit. xxvi. 1. See alſo, Numb. xxxiii. 52.

2. Title is taken for whatever is put upon any thing, as a mark. So, the title of a Pſalm, the title of a book. Thus we often find in the inſcriptions of the Pſalms, [Pſal. xv. lvi. lvii. lviii. lix. lx. Heb. לדוד מכתם. LXX. Στηλογραφία τῷ Δαυὶδ. Aqu. Ταπεινοφρόνως καὶ απλως. Sym. Ταπεινόφρονως καὶ ἀμώμως. Hieron. Humilis & ſimplicis David.] Pſalmus David in tituli inſcriptionem. The Hebrew reads, Michtam le-David; which Jerom, Aquila, and Symmachus, expreſs by, A Pſalm of David, the humble and the ſimple: Others, A golden Pſalm of David. We think it only means, A Pſalm, inſcribed, ſealed, or marked, by the name of David. Iſaiah ſays, xix. 19. the time ſhall come when a title, (or pillar) to the Lord ſhall be ſeen on the borders of Egypt; and an altar, or monument, inſcribed to his name. The evangeliſts tell us, that a title was put on the croſs of our Saviour; i. e. the ſubject of his condemnation, written in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, "Jeſus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews;" which might be underſtod to imply, that Jeſus of Nazareth was condemned for aſſuming the quality of king of the Jews.

3. Title ſeems alſo to be put for epitaphs, or inſcriptions; or, for pillars, tombs, or other erections, &c. over the graves of the dead. We have already obſerved in this ſenſe the titles of Rachel and Abſalom. See alſo 2 Kings xxiii. 17. the title of the man of God, ſent to reprove Jeroboam, and which was preſerved by king Joſiah; and thoſe titles (or ſigns) mentioned by Ezekiel xxxix. 15. which were put near the dead bodies, that they might be buried.

TITUS, Τιτος, honourable; from the Greek τέω, I honour.

TITUS, ſon and ſucceſſor of the emperor Veſpaſian; brother and predeceſſor of the emperor Domitian. One of the beſt princes that the Roman empire ever had; liberal, generous, mild, wiſe, and valiant. He thought that day loſt, in which he had not done ſome ſervice to mankind. He was called the love and delight of human kind. He was made uſe of by providence to accompliſh the deſtruction of the city and temple of Jeruſalem; and by that means to fulfil the denunciations of the Son of God againſt a city, which had murdered the prophets, and even Jeſus Chriſt himſelf. Matth. xxiv. 1, 2, 3, &c.

Veſpaſian was in Achaia with Nero, when that emperor appointed him to conduct the Jewiſh war, A. D. 66. He did not arrive in Judæa till the year following, and began to form his army in 67. His ſon Titus, whom he had choſen for one of his lieutenants, joined him at Ptolemais, with two legions which he brought with him from Alexandria. Joſeph. de Bell. lib. iii. cap. 5. Sueton. in Veſpaſ. cap. 4. They began the war firſt in Galilee, that they might give the people of Jeruſalem time to reflect on what was approaching. Titus gave many proofs of his bravery; and Veſpaſian, his father, being declared emperor, A. D. 69, and being obliged to ſet out for Italy, he left the whole care of the Jewiſh war to Titus. Titus laid ſiege to Jeruſalem in the beginning of April, A. D. 70. The firſt wall was taken April 28, the ſecond wall May 7th. The tower Antonia was taken by ſtorm, July 5. The perpetual ſacrifice was diſcontinued, and entirely ceaſed July 7 or 10. The temple was burnt, notwithſtanding Titus's orders to the contrary, Auguſt 10. The Romans carried the third wall of the city, September 7, and Titus entered the day following, September 8. After which Titus cauſed the temple and city to be razed, except three towers, Hippica, Phaſaele, and Mariamne, with the wall that ſurrounded the weſtern part of the city. De Bell. lib. vii. cap. 1, 34. The Jews have a tradition, that he cauſed a plough to paſs over the city, or at leaſt the temple, which was the token of entire deſolation; but it is believed this happened rather under Adrian, Vide Scalig. Iſagog. lib. iii. Thus was fulfilled the prediction of Jeſus Chriſt, who told his apoſtles, that the enemies would not leave one ſtone upon another of thoſe buildings, which they ſo much admired. Matt. xxiv. 2. Titus left at Jeruſalem the tenth legion, under the command of Terentius Rufus; and as the approaching winter would not allow him to go to Rome to his father, he viſited ſeveral cities of Syria, where he often had games repreſented at the coſt of the Jews, the ſlaughter of whom, ſays Joſephus, always made a part of thoſe entertainments. De Bell. lib. vii. cap. 6, 8, 13.

He continued ſome time at Berytus, and went to Antioch, in the beginning of A. D. 71. From thence he paſſed to Zeugma, on the Euphrates, where he had conferences with the ambaſſadors of Vologeſus, king of the Parthians. He then returned returned to Antioch, where he declined to meddle with the privileges of the Jews, or to expel them from this city, as the citizens of Antioch earneſtly endeavoured to perſuade him: de Bell. lib. vii. cap. 14. He then paſſed through Jeruſalem, in his way to Egypt. He could not forbear ſhedding tears, when he ſaw the condition to which that city was reduced: and he made imprecations againſt thoſe who had forced him to this extremity, againſt his own inclination. de Bell. lib. vii. cap. 15. From Alexandria he went to Rome by ſea, where he triumphed over the Jews, with his father Veſpaſian. Among the plunder was the golden table, and the golden candleſtick with ſeven branches, with the roll of the law of the Jews; which were carried in the triumph, de Bell. lib. vii. cap. 17. The book of the law was kept in the palace, with the purple hangings that had been uſed in the temple. The golden veſſels were placed in the temple that Veſpaſian built, and conſecrated as the Temple of Peace, de Bell. lib. vii. cap. 19. Veſpaſian died A. D. 79; Titus ſucceeded him, and governed the Roman empire two years, two months, and twenty days. His brother Domitian ſucceeded him.

II. TITUS, ſurnamed Juſtus, a native of Corinth, and hoſt to St. Paul in this city. We read, Acts xviii. 7. that St. Paul quitted the houſe of Aquila, where he lodged, and entered the houſe of one Titus Juſtus, who feared God, and whoſe houſe adjoined the ſynagogue: As if he meant to hint, that he abandoned the Jews, with reluctance, and was ready to return to them, if they would but relinquiſh their ſtubbornneſs, and hardneſs of heart. Some Greek MSS. read only Titus, without Juſtus: others read, Titus the ſon of Juſtus. St. Chryſoſtom, in Ep. ad. Tit. 1. and Grotius, were of opinion, that this Titus was the biſhop of Crete, to whom St. Paul has addreſſed an epiſtle. But the contrary opinion, which diſtinguiſhes theſe two perſons, has generally prevailed. We know nothing particular concerning Titus Juſtus.

III. TITUS, a diſciple of St. Paul, was a Gentile by religion and birth, Galat. ii. 3. but was converted by St. Paul, who calls him his ſon, Tit. i. 4. Jerom ſays, Ep. 150. Qu. 11. that he was St. Paul's interpreter; and this, probably, becauſe he might write what St. Paul dictated; or, explain in Latin what this apoſtle ſaid in Greek; or render into Greek what St. Paul ſaid in Hebrew, or Syriac. St. Paul took him with him to Jeruſalem, A. D. 51. Gal. ii. 1. about the time of the queſtion, Whether the converted Gentiles ſhould become ſubject to the ceremonies of the law, Some would then have obliged him to circumciſe Titus; but neither he nor Titus would conſent. Titus was ſent by the ſame apoſtle to Corinth, 2 Cor. xii. 18. toward the end of A. D. 56. on occaſion of ſome diſputes in that church. He was very well received by the Corinthians, and much ſatisfied by their ready compliance, but would receive nothing from them; thereby imitating the diſintereſtedneſs of his maſter.

From thence he went to St. Paul in Macedonia, and gave him an account of the ſtate of the church of Corinth, 2 Cor. vii. 6, 15. A little while afterwards the apoſtle deſired him to return to Corinth, to regulate things againſt his own coming. Titus readily undertook this journey, and departed immediately, 2 Cor. viii. 5, 16, 17. carrying with him St. Paul's ſecond letter to the Corinthians. Titus was made biſhop of Crete about A. D. 63. when St. Paul was obliged to quit this iſland, to take care of the other churches, Tit. i. 5. The following year he wrote to him, to deſire him, that as ſoon as he ſhould have ſent Tychicus or Artemas to him, to ſupply his place in Crete, Titus would come to him to Nicopolis in Macedonia, (or to Nicopolis in Epirus, on the gulph of Ambracia,) where the apoſtle intended to paſs his winter. Tit. iii. 12.

The ſubject of this epiſtle, written A. D. 64, is, to repreſent to Titus, the qualities of a biſhop. As a principal function of Titus in the iſle of Crete, was to ordain prieſts and biſhops, it was highly incumbent on him to make a diſcreet choice. The apoſtle alſo ſuggeſts the advice and inſtructions that he ſhould give to all ſorts of perſons; to the aged, both men and women; to young people of each ſex; to ſlaves and ſervants. He exhorts him to exerciſe a ſtrict authority over the Cretans, and to reprove them with ſeverity; as a people addicted to lying, idleneſs, and gluttony. And as there were many converted Jews in Crete, he exhorts Titus to oppoſe their vain traditions, and fables; alſo the obſervation of the legal ceremonies, as no longer neceſſary; to ſhew that the diſtinction of meats is aboliſhed, and that every thing is pure and clean to thoſe who are pure. He puts him in mind of exhorting the faithful to be obedient to temporal powers, to avoid diſputes, quarrels, and ſlander; to apply themſelves to honeſt callings; and to ſhun the company of heretics, after the firſt and ſecond admonition.

The Epiſtle to Titus has always been acknowledged by the church. The Marcionites did not receive it, Tertull. contr. Marcion. lib. 5. cap. ult. nor the Baſilidians, and ſome other heretics, Hieron. Prolog. in Epiſt. ad Tit. Tatian, the chief of the Encratites, received it, and preferred it before all the reſt. It is not certainly known from whence it was written, nor by whom it was ſent.

Titus was deputed to preach the goſpel in Dalmatia; and he was there A. D. 65, when the apoſtle wrote his ſecond epiſtle to Timothy, 2 Tim. iv. 10. He afterwards returned to Crete, from whence, it is ſaid, he propagated the goſpel in the neighbouring iſlands. He died at the age of ninety-four years, and was buried in the iſland of Crete. Menæa p. 259, 277. We are aſſured that the cathedral of the city of Candia is dedicated to his name, and that his head is there preſerved. The Greeks keep his feaſt Auguſt 25, but the Latins January 4.

TIZRI. See TISRI.

TOB, טוב, good, or goodneſs.

TOB, the country of Tob, Tubin, or of the Tubenians, lying beyond Jordan, in the moſt northern part of the portion of Manaſſeh. Into this country Jephthah retired, when driven away by his brethren. Judg. xi. 3, 5. This country is called Tobie, or Tubin, 1 Macc. v. 13. and the Jews of this diſtrict are called Tubieni, 2 Macc. xii. 17.

TOB-ADONIJAH, טיב־אדניה, my good god; from טוב tob, good, אדון adon, maſter, ruler, and יה jah, the Lord; otherwiſe, the goodneſs of the foundation of the Lord; from the ſame, tob and jah, and אדן eden, baſe, or foundation.

TOB-ADONIJAH, or Thobadonias, a Levite, and doctor of the law, ſent with others by king Jehoſhaphat into the cities of Judah, to inſtruct the people, 2 Chron. xvii. 8. A. M. 3092, ante A. D. 910.

TOBIAH, טוביה, or Tobias, the Lord is good, or the goodneſs of the Lord: from טוב tob, good, or goodneſs, and יה jah, the Lord.

I. TOBIAH, Tobias, or Tobit, was ſon of Tobiel, Ita Edit. Rom. LXX. Hebræi Munſter, and grandſon of Ananiel, of the tribe of Naphthali. Others make him ſon of Ananiel, Ita Hebr. Fagii & Antiq. Edit. Latin. His habitation was in Kadeſh, the capital city of Naphthali. The Greek text intimates, that he was of Thiſbe, which laid to the right of Kadeſh of Naphthali. Tobit married Anna, a woman of his own tribe, and had by her one ſon, whom after his own name, he called Tobiah, or Tobit, Tob. i. 1, 2, 3, 4, &c. Tobiah was born A. M. 3262; he married Anna about 3281: he had young Tobiah in 3281; he was carried captive to Nineveh in 3283, ante A. D. 721. Though he lived in the midſt of Galilee, and in the kingdom of the ten tribes, where the worſhip of the golden calves had long prevailed, yet he did not omit to go ſecretly to the temple of the Lord at Jeruſalem, on the ſolemn feaſts, and there to offer his tythes and firſt-fruits. He continued this pious practice from his youth, till Shalmaneſer took Samaria, and led him away captive to Nineveh, with his wife and ſon.

In this country, he abſtained from the food of the Gentiles, and preſerved his ſoul pure from their defilements. God gave him favour before king Shalmaneſer, who not only gave him liberty, but alſo made him his purveyor, Tob. i. 13. Ἦμην αὐτῷ ἀγοραστής. Going on a time to Rages in Media, he lent to one Gabriel, a Jew, and his kinſman, or, according to the Greek, committed to his truſt, the ſum of ten talents; about 3422l.

After the death of Shalmaneſer, Tobit was diſgraced by king Sennacherib, his ſucceſſor; was turned out of his employment, fell to great poverty, and was forced to conceal himſelf, to avoid the death he was threatened with. Moreover, the king confiſcated his whole eſtate.

But after the death of Sennacherib he returned to his houſe, and his goods were reſtored to him. He continued, as before, in the exerciſes of piety. One day, after he had buried a dead body, left in the market place, he durſt not enter his houſe becauſe of the uncleanneſs he had ſo contracted: he therefore went to ſleep under the wall of his court. While he ſlept here the warm dung of a ſparrow, or ſwallow, whoſe neſt happened to be juſt above him, fell into his eyes, and deprived him of his ſight. This misfortune, which God permitted by way of trial, did not provoke him into repining and impatience, but he ſtill retained his integrity, notwithſtanding the inſults and reproaches of his relations; and of his wife herſelf, who aſked, where were the fruits of all the works of charity he had done?

Seeing that he could be of no further uſe, but was become a burden to himſelf and to others, he begged of the Lord to take him out of this life: and thinking himſelf near death, he ſent his ſon to Gabriel at Rages, to fetch the money left with him. Tobias went thither, married Sara the daughter of Raguel, and brought the money to his father. Alſo, by means of the gall of a fiſh which he had caught on the banks of the Tigris, he reſtored ſight to his father. Vide TOBIAH II.

Tobit intending to reward the angel Raphael, who had conducted his ſon to Ecbatana, and whom he took to be a mere man, offered him half of what his ſon had brought out of Media. But the angel, taking them into a private place, thus ſpoke to them: Bleſs the great God of heaven, who has thus manifeſted his mercy towards you. Prayer joined to faſting and alms-giving, is better than all the riches in the world. And ſince you were agreeable to him, he has thought fit to make trial of your virtue. I am the angel Raphael, whom God has ſent to relieve you, &c.

Then the two Tobits, father and ſon, proſtrated themſelves on the earth, worſhipping God for three hours. On this occaſion Tobit compoſed a canticle of thankſgiving, in which he extols the greatneſs, the power, and the goodneſs, of God; he foretels the reſtoring of Jeruſalem, the end of the captivity, the magnificence of the holy city, and its temple, and the multitude of its inhabitants. After Tobit had recovered his ſight, he lived forty-two years, and ſaw the ſons of his grandchildren. He was fifty-ſix years old when he became blind, and recovered his ſight at ſixty. When dying, he called his ſon Tobias, and ſeven young grandchildren, and ſaid to them; the deſtruction of Nineveh is near; the land of Iſrael that has been forſaken ſhall be peopled again; the houſe of God that was burnt ſhall be rebuilt again. My children, ſerve the Lord in truth; endeavour to do what is agreeable to him. Continue not long here; but, as ſoon as you have buried your mother near me, in the ſame ſepulchre, think of leaving this place as ſoon as poſſible.

All this happened, as Tobit had foretold; Tobias, his ſon, faithfully performed all he commanded. So that after Tobit had lived an hundred and two years, he died in peace, and was honourably buried in the city of Nineveh. A. M. 3363, ante A. D.. 641.

II. TOBIAS, ſon of Tobiah, or Tobit, mentioned above, and of Anna, his wife, of the tribe of Naphthali, was born A. M. 3281, ante A. D. 723. He was very young when carried captive to Nineveh, with his father, by king Shalmaneſer, A. M. 3283. His father Tobit educated him in the fear of the Lord, and in the practice of the law. His father ſuppoſing himſelf near death, called him, and gave him many pious inſtructions; alſo, adviſed him to be induſtrious in recovering the ten talents, committed to Gabael, who dwelt at Rages in Media. He added, "Be not diſcouraged, my ſon; we are poor now, it is true, but we ſhall be rich enough if we fear God, if we avoid ſin, and if we practiſe good works."

He bid Tobiah ſeek a guide, who could conduct him into Media. Tobiah went out for this purpoſe, and ſoon found a young man, who appeared willing to undertake the journey. Vide RAPHAEL.

When they arrived at their inn, a place on the river Tigris, Tobiah went into the river to waſh his feet, when preſently a great fiſh leaped out of the water, as if it would devour him. The angel bid him take courage, and ſeize it by the gills, and draw it to land; then to take out the heart, the gall, and the liver, which would compoſe ſome particular remedies. Being come pretty near to Ecbatana, Tobiah aſked the angel, where they ſhould lodge? He told him, there lived in that city one Raguel, who has an only daughter, whoſe name is Sara. You are his neareſt kinſman, and all his eſtate ought to come to you: you muſt therefore marry her.

Tobiah anſwered, I have heard ſay, that ſhe hath already had ſeven huſbands, but they are all dead, being ſlain by a dæmon that haunts her. I am afraid the ſame fate ſhould happen to me, by which I ſhould bring the grey hairs of my parents to the grave. The angel replied, the dæmon has power over thoſe only who marry to gratify a brutal paſſion: but when you have married this young woman, live with her in continence for three nights, and the firſt night put upon hot coals the liver of this fiſh, the fume of which will drive away the evil ſpirit.

Entering into the city, they went ſtrait to Raguel, who received them with much joy. He obſerved in young Tobiah a great reſemblance of his father, and being informed he was his ſon, he fell on his neck, and embraced him, with tears. Having ordered ſomething to eat, Tobiah told him, he would not ſit down to his table, before he promiſed him his daughter Sara in marriage. Raguel apprehending the ſame misfortune might happen to him as had happened to the other huſbands of Sara, durſt not return an anſwer; till the angel ſaid, You need not heſitate to give your daughter to this young man, becauſe he fears God; and your daughter is due to him, as her neareſt kinſman; for which reaſon no other could take her to wife. Raguel on this promiſed him his daughter; and taking Sara's right hand, and putting it into that of Tobiah, he ſaid to them, May the God of Abraham, of Iſaac, and of Jacob, be with you both, unite you, and pour out his bleſſings upon you.

After ſupper, Tobiah was taken into the nuptial chamber, where having put the liver of the fiſh upon burning coals, the angel Raphael ſeized the dæmon, and chained him up in the deſarts of Egypt. (See RAPHAEL and ASMODEUS.) Then Tobiah and Sara betook themſelves to prayer, and paſſed the night in continence. The day following, very early, Raguel ſent to ſee whether Tobiah was alive or dead; and, for fear of the the worſt, had already provided a grave for him. But when he heard that he was living and in good health, he filled up the grave, and praiſed God Then preparing a great feaſt, he invited all his friends and neighbours.

Tobiah called the angel, gave him the bond, and deſired him to go to Rages himſelf, and to receive from Gabael the money, which was the chief occaſion of their journey, which he did, and brought with him Gabael himſelf, who deſired to ſee young Tobiah.

In the mean time, Tobit the father, with his wife Anna, were in great trouble about their ſon, fearing that ſome misfortune had befallen him. Eſpecially Anna was inconſolable, and went out every day that way by which he was to return, in hopes of meeting him. Nor was Tobiah himſelf leſs impatient to return to his parents. Raguel would fain have detained him longer, but Tobiah was ſo urgent, that at laſt he conſented to let him depart with his wife Sara, and much property.

When they came to Charan, or Haran, Raphael ſaid to Tobiah, you know in what condition you left your father; if you think well of it, we will go before, and let your ſervants and your wife come ſlowly after, with the cattle. This being concluded on, they went forward. Anna, Tobiah's mother, perceiving him at a diſtance, ran to carry the news to her huſband. At the ſame time came in the dog that had followed Tobiah, as it were, to tell that his maſter was hard by. Old Tobit, blind as he was, roſe up, and taking a ſervant by the hand, ran to meet his ſon, fell upon him, and embraced him: his mother did the ſame, and both began to weep. Tobiah then taking the gall of the fiſh, he rubbed his father's eyes with it, and in about half an hour afterwards a thin white film or ſkin, like the inward ſkin of an egg, began to fall from his eyes; upon which he recovered his ſight. Seven days after arrived Sara, Tobiah's wife, with the ſervants and cattle. Tobit, calling his friends together, made a feaſt that continued ſeven days; then being deſirous to give Raphael his reward, whom he ſtill took for a mere man, the angel diſcovered himſelf to them. Vide TOBIT.

God bleſſed this mariage, and gave Tobiah ſeven children. After his return he lived with his father about forty-two years. He then paid him the laſt duties; and having done the ſame by his mother, he quitted Nineveh, with his wife and children, and returned to his father and mother-in-law at Ecbatana. He alſo cloſed their eyes; and lived to ſee his children's children, to the fifth generation. After having lived fourſcore and nineteen years, he died in peace, and was buried by his children. He was ſent to Rages, A.M. 3322; he died A.M. 3380, ante A.D. 624.

The book of Tobit contains the hiſtory of the father and ſon, now related. It is thought to have been compoſed by them, or, at leaſt, that they left the materials out of which it was compoſed; for there may be obſerved in it, ſome reflections that ſeem not to have proceeded immediately from themſelves. It is not doubted but that the original of this work was either in Hebrew or Chaldee, though it cannot now be found. St. Jerom having retrieved a Chaldee copy of it, took a man who perfectly underſtood this language, who rendered it into Hebrew, which at the ſame time St. Jerom tranſlated into Latin. This Latin tranſlation we now follow, and it was declared authentic by the council of Trent. Before this tranſlation there was another from the Greek, the author of which, and its age, are unknown. It was made from a different original than that of St. Jerom, and very often diſagrees with it pretty much. The ancient Latin tranſlations from the Greek, were not very conſiſtent with one another; and the Greek copies we now have are not all alike.

We have the hiſtory of Tobit in Hebrew, printed by Fagius and by Munſter. Origen had been informed, that the Jews read Tobit in their own language. Origen. Ep. ad African. Huetius had an Hebrew mannſcript of Tobit in his poſſeſſion. We cannot judge of that which the Jews had, and which Origen mentions, becauſe it is unknown to us; but thoſe of Fagius and Munſter are different from both the Greek and the Latin, and can be thought to be only copies or tranſlations, and thoſe modern enough, from the Greek or the Latin verſion. The Syriac verſion has ſo great a conformity with the Greek, that it is eaſily perceived to have been made from it. Laſtly, the Latin verſion being the moſt natural, the moſt perſpicuous, and moſt free from foreign circumſtances, has the greateſt tokens of truth.

The book of Tobit not being received into the canon of the Jews, was not admitted into that of the ancient Chriſtian authors; Jerom does not regiſter it among the ſacred books. Some moderns have ſpoken of it with very little reſpect; Paul Fagius has pretended, that it did not contain a true hiſtory, but a pious fiction; wherein is given a pattern of a good father and an obedient ſon; exemplifying in what manner manner God rewards the practice of good works, even in this life; especially the care of burying the dead.

Notwithstanding these reasons, we are assured that the Jews had always a great regard for this book. Origen, in his epistle to Africanus, says, that they read this work, but placed it among their apocryphal writings. Jerom acknowledges, that though they did not receive it into their canon, yet they admitted it among their Hagiographa: Quem Hebræi de catalogo divinarum scripturarum secantes, his quæ hagiographa memorant manciparunt. Hieron. Ep. Chromat. & Hesiod. Grotius owns, that they read this work, and considered it as a true history. Grot. Præfat. in Tob. Vide & Sixt. Sen. lib. viii. Biblioth.

In the Christian church, several of the ancient fathers admitted this book as canonical. St. Cyprian quotes it in more places than one, as a divine writing, and dictated by the Holy Ghost. Cypr. lib. iii. Testim. & lib. de opere & Eleemos. Polycarp in his epistle, Clemens Alexandrinus, Origen, contra Cels. lib. iii. the author of the Apostolical Constitutions, lib. i. cap. 1. lib. iii. cap. 15. St. Basil, St. Ambrose, St. Jerom, St. Austin, and others of the fathers, have often quoted it, as they quote other canonical books. Tobit is expresly mentioned in the catalogues of holy books composed by the council of Hippona. An. 393. Can. 98. in the third council of Carthage, An. 397. Can. 47. in the epistle of Innocent I. to Exuperus, in the Roman synod, held under Gelasius; in the more modern authors, as Cassiodorus, Rabanus Maurus, Isidorus of Seville, the decree of union between the Greeks and Latins under Eugenius IV. and, lastly, in the council of Trent. [Notwithstanding which, Protestants by rejecting it avoid many difficulties; they are amply justified, by its non-existence in an authentic original; and by the contrariety found in those translations which have come down to us. It may be AUTHENTIC, as a history (and probably it is founded on fact) without being CANONICAL, or inspired: and therefore it is very properly placed among the apocryphal writings.]

III. TOBIAS, brother-in-law to the high-priest Onias II. father of Joseph, and grandfather of Hyrcanus; Josephus, Antiq. lib. xii. cap. 4. This Tobias is but little known, but his son Joseph, and his grandson Hyrcanus, are very well known in history. 2 Macc. iii. 11. gives Hyrcanus the surname of Tobias.

IV. TOBIAH, an Ammonite, an enemy to the Jews. He strenuously opposed the rebuilding of the temple, after the return from Babylon. Neh ii. 10. iv. 3. vi. 1, 12, 14. A. M. 3550, ante A. D. 454. This Tobiah is called in some places the servant, or slave, of Nehemiah; probably because he was of servile condition. However, he was of great consideration among the Samaritans, where he was governor with Sanballat. Tobiah married the daughter of Shechaniah, a principal Jew of Jerusalem, and had a powerful party in Jerusalem itself, which was opposite to Nehemiah. Neh. vi. 18. He maintained a correspondence with this party, against the interests of Nehemiah; but this prudent governor, by his wisdom and moderation, defeated all their machinations. Nehemiah being obliged to return to Babylon, after he had repaired the walls of Jerusalem, Tobiah took this opportunity to come and dwell at Jerusalem; and even obtained of Eliashib, who had the care of the house of the Lord, an apartment in the temple. But Nehemiah returning from Babylon, some years after, drove Tobiah away, and threw his goods out of the holy place. Nehem. xiii. 4—8. The year is uncertain. Scripture makes no farther mention of Tobiah: probably he retired to Sanballat at Samaria.

V. TOBIAH, son of Nokoda. His children or grand-children returned from the captivity, Ezra ii. 60. [children of Nokoda. Eng. Tr.]

TOBIE, Τωβίας, from טוב tob, good. 1 Macc. v. 13.

I. TOBIJAH, or Thob-ias, a Levite, and doctor of the law, sent by king Jehoshaphat through the cities of Judah, to instruct the people, 2 Chron. xvii. 8.

II. TOBIJAH, or Tobiah. The Lord commanded the prophet Zechariah, vi. 10, 14. to ask of Tobijah, Heldai, (otherwise Helem) Jedaiah, and Josiah, (otherwise Hen) son of Zephaniah, lately returned from Babylon, a certain quantity of gold and silver, which they intended for an offering to the temple, to make crowns thereof, to place on the head of Joshua, the son of Josedech, high-priest of the Jews. The Rabbins are of opinion, that these four persons were the same as Daniel, Ananias, Azariah, and Misbael.

TOCHEN, תכן, middle; from תוך thoc: otherwise, preparation; from כין cun.

TOCHEN, or Thochen, a city of Simeon, 1 Chron. iv. 32. Gr. Tocca.

TOGARMAH, תגרמה, θεργαμὰ, which is all bone, or strong: otherwise, breaking or gnawing of the bones; from גרם gherem, bone, strong, or very fearful.

TOGARMAH, or Thogarma, the third son of Gomer. Gen. x. 3. The learned are divided as to what country he peopled. Josephus and Jerom were of opinion, that Togarmah was the father of the Phrygians: Eusebius, Theodoret, and Isidorus of Seville, thought he peopled Armenia:

the Chaldee and the Thalmudiſts are for Germany. Several moderns believe that the children of Togarmah peopled Turcomania in Tartary and Scythia. Bochart is for Cappadocia: in conſequence of what is ſaid Ezek. xxvii. 14. they of the houſe of Togarmah traded in thy fairs (at Tyre) with horſes and horſemen and mules. He proves that Cappadocia was famous for excellent horſes and aſſes. He obſerves alſo, that certain Gauls, under the conduct of Trocmus, made a ſettlement at Cappadocia, and were called Trocmi, or Throgmi. This opinion, which places Togarmah in Scythia and Turcomania, ſeems to us to ſtand on the beſt foundation.

TOHU, תהו, θοκὲ, that lives; from היה chajah: otherwiſe, that declares; from חיה chivah.

TOHU, תוה, Heb. Thoah. Dart, javelin; from תותה thothach.

TOHU, or Thohu, ſon of Zuph, or Suph, father of Elihu, and grandfather of Samuel, 1 Sam. i. 1. 1 Chron. vi. 34. [Toah. Eng. Tr.]

TOI, תעי, תעו, who wanders; from תעה thahah.

TOI, or Thou, king of Hamath in Syria. When he heard that David had conquered king Hadadezer, he ſent his ſon Joram, to congratulate him on that occaſion, and to offer him veſſels of gold, ſilver, and braſs. 2 Sam. viii. 9. 10, 11. A. M. 2960, ante A. D. 1044.

TOLA, תולע, worm, or grub: otherwiſe, ſcarlet, becauſe this colour is made from a worm; from תלע tholah.

I. TOLA, or Thola, the tenth judge of Iſrael. He ſucceeded Abimelech, and judged Iſrael twenty-three years; from A. M. 2271, to 2794; ante A. D. 1310. Scripture ſays, Tola was the ſon of Puah, uncle to Abimelech by the father's ſide, and conſequently brother to Gideon; yet Tola was of the tribe of Iſſachar, and Gideon was of Manaſſeh. To reconcile this, it is ſaid, that Gideon and Puah might be uterine brothers; born of the ſame mother, who might ſucceſſively have married two huſbands, one of the tribe of Manaſſeh, from which marriage Gideon proceeded, the other of the tribe of Iſſachar, who was father of Puah. See St. Auſtin, Queſt. 47. in Judic. and other commentators on Judg. x. 1. Tola was buried at Shamir, a city in the mountain of Ephraim, where he dwelt. He had for ſucceſſor Jair of Gilead.

II. TOLA, eldeſt ſon of Iſſachar, and chief of a family. Numb. xxvi. 23. Gen. xlvi. 13.

TOLAD, תולד, birth, or generation; from ילד jalad.

TOLAD, or Tholad, a city of Simeon, 1 Chron. iv. 29. probably the Eltolad, Joſh. xv. 30. xix. 4. It was yielded by Judah to Simeon. The Greeks call it Molada.

TOMB. See SEPULCHRE.

TO-MORROW, is uſed in Scripture indefinitely, for any time to come. For example, Exod. xiii. 14. when thy ſon aſketh thee in time to come; Heb. to-morrow. And, Deut. vi. 20. In time to come, your children might ſpeak to our children; Heb. to-morrow, alſo Joſh. iv. 6, 21. In the ſtyle of the Oriental, to-day often ſignified the preſent life, and to-morrow, the life to come, Joſh. xxii. 24. Jeſus Chriſt forbids his diſciples to trouble themſelves about to-morrow, and tells them that the morrow will take care for itſelf.

TONGUE. This word is taken in different ſenſes:

1. For the natural tongue, the organ of ſpeech.
2. For the tongue, or language, ſpoken in any country.
3. For good or bad diſcourſe: thus we ſay a bad tongue, a ſlanderous tongue, &c. Many queſtions are propoſed about tongues, taken in the ſecond ſenſe, for language. See LANGUAGE.

To gnaw ones tongue, is a ſign of fury, deſpair, and torment. The worſhippers of the beaſt, gnawed their tongues for pain; and blaſphemed the God of heaven, becauſe of their pains and their ſores, and repented not of their deeds. Rev. xvi. 10.

Tongue of the ſea, tongue of land, are terms uſed in Scripture for an extremity or point of a ſea. Or, a peninſula, a cape, a promontory of land; ſtretching out into the ſea.

Lingua eucharis, a tongue of bleſſing and kindneſs, Eccleſ. vi. 5. in oppoſition to an ill tongue, a tongue of reproach and ſcandal: the firſt promotes friendſhip, love, and concord, among men; the other cauſes deſtruction, hatred, and diſſention.

Flagellum linguæ, the flail, the laſh of the tongue, are malicious diſcourſes, ſcandal, calumny, inſulting and offenſive ſpeeches. The wiſe man ſays, Ecclus. xxvi. 9. that a jealous woman is a ſcourge of the tongue. In families, where polygamy was frequent, jealouſy among women was the foundation of an infinite number of evil diſcourſes and backbitings. The ſame author ſays, Ecclus. xxviii. 17, 18. The ſtroke of the whip maketh marks in the fleſh, but the ſtroke of the tongue breaketh the bone. Many have fallen by the edge of the ſword, but not ſo many as have fallen by the tongue. And Job ſays, v. 21. God ſhall defend you from the laſh of the tongue; you ſhall not be expoſed to its ſtrokes.

The gift of tongues, which God granted to the apoſtles and diſciples aſſembled at Jeruſalem, on the day of Pentecoſt, Acts ii. 3. 4, 5, &c. was communicated to the faithful, as appears by the Epiſtles of St. Paul, which regulate the manner in which this great privilege was to be uſed uſed in their aſſemblies, 1 Cor. xii. 10. xiv. 2: and it continued in the church ſo long as God thought neceſſary, for the converſion of the heathen, and the confirmation of believers. Irenæus teſtifies, lib. v. cap. 6. that it ſubſiſted in the church in his time.

The Rabbins teach, ſee Baſnage's Jewiſh Antiquities, tom. i. p. 111, cap. 13. that the judges of the ſanhedrim ought to know ſeveral tongues. Some extend the number to ſeventy, ſuppoſing there is only this number of languages in the world. It would be a ſhame to uſe an interpreter before this famous tribunal. Every one might preſent themſelves here, either to accuſe or defend, without fear of not finding a judge who could underſtand his language. This is what the Jewiſh doctors pretend; but Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xx. cap. ult. informs us, that the Jews made but little account of the ſtudy of languages, becauſe they looked on it as a thing common to freemen and ſlaves; and which any one might acquire, if he pleaſed, by a little labour. They eſteem ſuch only as ſtudy the law and the holy writings, and who have a knowledge of them ſufficiently extenſive and profound, to interpret them to others.

They bring the example of a Jew, the ſon of Duma, who conſulting his maſter about the ſtudy of foreign languages, received this anſwer: that he muſt meditate upon the law of God both day and night: if you can find an hour, ſaid the maſter, that is neither night nor day, you may then leave the ſtudy of the law, and read Greek. Miſhnah. in Sota, cap. 9. We are alſo told, that when Jeruſalem was beſieged by a king of the Aſmoneans, they let down every day in a baſket, over the walls, ſo much money as was neceſſary for buying lambs for the daily ſacrifices, which lambs they drew up again in the ſame baſket. But a man who ſpoke Greek having acquainted the beſiegers, that as long as they offered the ſacrifices the city could not be taken, they ſent up a hog in the baſket, inſtead of the uſual victim: and from that time they curſed every one that could ſpeak Greek.

The tongue of angels, 1 Cor. xiii. 1. St. Paul ſays, Though I ſpeak with the tongues of men, and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as ſounding braſs, or a tinkling cymbal. Some of the ancients thought, that the angels had an audible language, becauſe Scripture ſays, they ſpeak to God, and diſcourſe with one another. Others, that they uſe the Hebrew tongue, as being the ſhorteſt and moſt expreſſive of all languages. A Rabbin called Sochanan boaſted that he knew the language of angels and of devils, becauſe he could exorciſe the one, and conjure the other. Vide Lightfoot in 1 Cor. xiii. 1.

But theſe opinions are now rejected: it is agreed that the angels have no ſenſible tongue, either common, or particular. If they ſpeak to God, if they commune among one another, it is by an operation of their ſpirit and will, by which they reciprocally communicate their thoughts. Souls and ſpirits ſpeak by their deſires, ſays Gregory the Great, lib. ii. Moral. cap. 5. Animarum verba ipſa ſunt deſideria.

When therefore St. Paul ſays, that though he ſhould ſpeak with the tongue of men and of angels, it would be nothing without charity; he uſes a kind of hyperbole, like as when we ſay, angelical beauty, angelical voice, &c. I would have every one ſet a due value on the gift of tongues, ſays St. Paul; but, though a man poſſeſſed the moſt exquiſite eloquence, could he ſpeak as well as angels themſelves, this ineſtimable gift would be of little uſe to him, as to ſalvation, if he be without charity.

TOOTH. The Hebrews called ivory, tooth, q. elephant's tooth: 1 Kings x. 22. They alſo called naked and craggy rocks teeth: 1 Sam. xiv. 4. The rock from which God cauſed the water to guſh, for quenching Samſon's thirſt is called makteſh, the jaw-tooth. Judg. xv. 19. When Moſes appointed the law of retribution, Legem talionis, he ordered tooth for tooth. Exod. xxi. 24. To grind the teeth, to gnaſh the teeth, are tokens of ſorrow, deſpair, and paſſion. Pſal. xxxv. 16. God breaks the teeth of the wicked; Pſal. lviii. 6. he puts it out of their power to injure good men. The wicked complain, that the fathers have eaten ſour grapes, but the children's teeth were ſet on edge; Ezek. xviii. 2.—as if they would accuſe God of injuſtice, for puniſhing the innocent, and ſparing the guilty. Amos iv. 6. tells the prevaricating Jews, that God had ſent them cleanneſs of teeth, i. e. famine: They ſhould not have wherewithal to defile their teeth. St. Jerom tranſlates it, ſtuporem dentium. The goſpel in ſeveral places ſpeaks of the gnaſhing of teeth of the damned, out of rage and deſpair. David ſays, that his enemies have their teeth as ſharp and piercing as ſwords, or arrows. Pſal. lvii. 4.

TOPARCHY, Τοπαρχία, A Greek word, ſignifying territory, dominion over a certain diſtrict.

TOPARCHY, from the Greek, Toparchia, a lordſhip, a government of a place or diſtrict, which gives to the perſon who poſſeſſes it no particular title, either of governor or preſident, or ethnarch, or tetrarch, or king. There is frequent quent mention in the Maccabees, of the three toparchies (or governments) of Apherema, Lydda, and Ramaſhem. 1 Macc. xi. 28. x. 30, 38. Pliny, lib. iv. cap. 14. ſets down ten toparchies of Judea; i. e. Jericho, Emmaus, Lydda, Joppa, Acrabatene, Gophnitica, Thamnitica, Betholene, Tephene, Orine, wherein was Jeruſalem, and laſtly, Herodium. Joſephus alſo, de Bello, lib. iii. cap. 4. names ten, of which Jeruſalem was the chief; Gophna, Acrabate, Thamna, Lydda, Ammaus, Pella, Idumea, Engaddi, Herodium, Jericho. Elſewhere, Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 5. he mentions three toparchies added to Judea; i. e. Samaria, Galilee, and Perea; or, Samaria, Joppa, and Galilee.

TOPAZ, Topaſius, in Hebrew, פטדה, Pitdath, Exod. xxviii. 17. Vide alſo chap. xxxix. 10. Job xxviii. 19. Ezek. xxviii. 13. The LXX. St. Jerom, Pagninus, Leo of Juda, Junius, and the greater part of modern interpreters, tranſlate pitdath by topaz; the paraphraſts Onkelos and Jonathan by a green ſtone: Kimchi tranſlates it the ſame; which agrees perfectly with the topaz; of which the fineſt are green. Pliny ſays, lib. xxxvii. cap. 8. Egregia topazio gloria eſt, ſuo virenti genere. Yet others maintain, that the moſt beautiful topazes are of a gold colour. It is probable enough that Moſes expreſſes the topaz by the Hebrew pitdath, which has a good deal of reſemblance to topazios, being read backwards. It is pretended this ſtone was named topaz, from an iſland in the Red-ſea, of the ſame name. Pliny will have Juba, king of Mauritania, to have been the firſt who found them: but if it was known to Moſes, it muſt be much more ancient. Job ſpeaks of the pitdath of Cuſh; Job xxviii. 19. which may confirm their opinion who ſuppoſe the topaz came from the Red-ſea; becauſe there was a country of Cuſh lying on the eaſtern ſhore of this ſea.

Others will have it, that the pitdath ſignifies an emerald. Pliny ſays, lib. xxxvii. cap. 5. that the emerald is of a fine green, and comes from Ethiopia. The land of Cuſh often ſignifies Ethiopia; and Job ſpeaks of the pitdath of Cuſh. This ſtone was the ſecond of the firſt row in the pontifical breaſt-plate, and had the name of Simeon on it. Exod. xxviii. 17.

The LXX. Pſal. cxix. 127. tranſlate by topazion the Hebrew word paz, or phaz, which rather ſignifies the pureſt gold, the gold of Phaz, or Piſon. Compare Jerem. x. 9. 1 Kings ix. 28. Dan. x. 5. Job xxvii. 22. [UPHAZ.]

TOPHEL, תפל, τοΦὰλ, ruin, folly, without underſtanding, inſipid; from תפל thaphil. Deut. i. 1.

TOPHET, תפת, drum; from תף thoph: otherwiſe, betraying; from פתה pathah.

TOPHET. It is thought Tophet was the butchery, or place of ſlaughter at Jeruſalem, lying ſouth of the city, in the valley of the children of Hinnon. It is alſo ſaid, that a conſtant fire was kept here, for burning the carcaſſes, and other filth, brought hither from the city. Into the ſame place they caſt the aſhes and remains of the images of falſe gods, when they demoliſhed their altars, and ſtatues. Iſaiah xxx. 33. ſeems to allude to this cuſtom, of burning dead carcaſſes in Tophet, when ſpeaking of the defeat of the army of Sennacherib, he ſays; For Tophet is ordained of old; yea, for the king it is prepared; he hath made it deep and large. The pile thereof is fire, and much wood; the breath of the Lord, like a ſtream of brimſtone doth kindle it.

Others think the name of Tophet is given to the valley of Hinnon, becauſe of the ſacrifices offered there to the god Moloch, by beat of drum, to drown the cries of the conſuming children. In Hebrew, a drum is called Toph. Vide MOLOCH.

Jeremiah vii. 31, upbraids the Iſraelites with having built temples to Moloch, The high places of Tophet, which is in the valley of the ſon of Hinnon, to burn their ſons and their daughters in the fire. We may ſee, by the ſame prophet, that tophet was a polluted and unclean place, where they uſed to throw the carcaſſes, to which they refuſed burial. Jerem. vii. 32. xix. 11, 12, 13. King Joſiah defiled the place of Tophet, where the temple of Moloch ſtood, that nobody might go thither any more, to ſacrifice their children to that cruel deity. 2 Kings xxiii. 10, 11.

TORRENT, or Brook. In Paleſtine, Arabia, and the neighbouring countries, where water was ſcarce, and the heat exceſſive, to find a torrent, brook, or rivulet, in the wilderneſs, or on a journey, was very agreeable and acceptable. God promiſes his people, that at their return from the captivity of Babylon, he would provide them ſtreams of waters, in the deſarts through which they ſhould be obliged to paſs. Iſai. xxxv. 6. Jerem. xxxi. 9. The Pſalmiſt deſcribes the Meſſiah, as a conqueror at the head of his army, who finds water in abundance upon his march. Pſal. cx. 7. [But others underſtand this very differently; He ſhall drink of the brook of ſuffering:—rather the brook of perſonal conſolations, and divine ſupports.]

Figuratively, a torrent generally ſignifies plenty and abundance, whether of good or evil. A torrent or river of tears, Lam. ii. 18. Pſ. xviii. 4. a torrent of iniquity, or torrent of Belial, according to the Hebrew. Pſal. cxxiv. 5. My ſoul has paſſed through the torrent, it has been, as it were, plunged in the waters, but God has preſerved it.

A torre-

A torrent of ſulphur, &c. and in a contrary ſenſe, a torrent or river of delights, of peace; rivers of gold, of butter and honey. Job xxii. 24. xx. 15.

TOTAPHOTH, טוטפות, Totaphot. LXX. Ἀσάλευτοι. Aquil. Ἐνεκτὰ. Exod. xiii. 16. Deut. vi. 8. xi. 18. [Sign, token, Eng. Tr.] St. Jerom tranſlates it by appenſum quid, an appendage; and elſewhere, by a ſign. Several commentators think, that totaphoth is an Egyptian word, and denotes ſome ſort of ornament, which we do not well know. The Septuagint generally tranſlate it by things immoveable, Aquila by things that are appendant. The Chaldee paraphraſts ſometimes tranſlate it by tephelim, preſervatives; and ſometimes by a tiara, a crown, a bracelet, probably according to the cuſtom of the Jews of their time, who took the totaphoth for rolls of parchment, which they wore upon their foreheads. The Syriac has it, a memorial before your eyes; Pagninus, bandages before the eyes. Some Rabbins ſay, that totaphot ſignifies a looking-glaſs; and ſeveral learned men pretend, Oleaſt. Munſt. Mayer. Grot. &c. that in Egyptian it ſignifies ſpectacles. Scaliger and Lightfoot, Hor. Heb. in Matthew xxiii. explain it by amuleta, phylacteries, preſervatives: Samuel Petit, Var. Lect. cap. 20. טוטפות, pudenda è luto effermata: in the Septuagint he reads Αξὰ λευτα, from ἀξα, duſt, and λευτα, pudenda, inſtead of Ἀσάλευτα, as we read it, i. e. obſcene figures that the Pagans carried about them by way of preſervative. St. Jerom imagined, they were rolls of parchment that were moveable before, or between, the eyes of the Jews. Deut. vi. 8. Movebuntur ante oculos tuos: And chap. xi. 18. Inter oculos veſtros collocate: And Exod. xiii. 16. Quaſi appenſum quid. And in his commentary on St. Matth. xxiii. though he quotes the Septuagint, who tranſlate totaphoth by immoveable things, yet he does not omit to obſerve, that the Phariſees explained the words of Moſes too literally, and wrote the decalogue on ſlips of parchment, folded them up, put them upon their foreheads, and made as it were a crown of them, which was in motion upon their eyes. He takes notice, that the Jews of India, Babylonia, and Perſia, ſtill retained this cuſtom in his time: and thoſe that wore theſe rolls were eſteemed as the moſt devout. Vide PHYLACTERIES, TEPHILIM.

I ſhould think that the word totaphoth ſignifies pendants, worn upon the forehead, and hanging down between the eyes. See Gen. xxiv. 22. And that Moſes requires that the law of God ſhould be always preſent to the minds of the Iſraelites, as thoſe ornaments for the forehead were always before the eyes of thoſe who wore them. The word totaphoth might, perhaps, be Egyptian. I obſerve, in moſt of the figures of prieſts, repreſented in the pictures of Iſis, a little ornament raiſed upon the forehead, fixed to their bonnet. This ornament does not ſeem to be flowing on the forehead, but like a leaf turned up. By the words of Moſes, it ſhould be an ornament peculiar to men, becauſe he exhorts men not to forget the commandments of God, and not to loſe ſight of them, no more than they did of the totaphoth, which they hung on their foreheads. Vide Plate of "PRIEST'S DRESSES, No. CCXXXVI. page 136.

TOUCHING, Tangere, Of the fruit of the tree which is in the midſt of the garden, God hath ſaid, ye ſhall not eat of it, neither ſhall ye touch it, leſt ye die. Gen. iii. 3. To touch a woman, Gen. xx. 6. Non permiſi ut tangeres eum. And St. Paul, Bonum eſt homini mulierim non tangere: 1 Cor. vii. 1. It is beſt for a man to live in a ſtate of continence. Iſai. lii. 11. Do not touch, or eat, any thing unclean. The touching of unclean things defiled thoſe who were clean, and the touching of holy things defiled thoſe who were unclean, or who were not qualified to touch them. See Lev. v. 2, 3. vi. 18, 27, &c. God forbids to build an altar to him of ſuch ſtones, as had been touched by an iron tool. Deut. xxvii. 5. Joſh. viii. 31.

To touch, is alſo uſed for to puniſh, or to put to death. We ſhall know that it is not his hand that ſmote us, that ſent this misfortune upon us; 1 Sam. vi. 9. Touch not my anointed; 1 Chron. xvi. 22. Pſalm cv. 15. And in Job i. 11. Touch all which he poſſeſſes. And in Wiſdom iii. 1. The pangs of death do not touch them. And Wiſd. xviii. 20. Tetigit & juſtos tentatio mortis. Even the juſt themſelves, the Iſraelites, were ſtruck with death.

God touches the heart of thoſe in whom he inſpires ſentiments of converſion, and repentance, Jerem. iv. 18. 1 Sam. x. 26. God himſelf is touched with repentance and grief, Gen. vi. 6. Tactus dolore cordis intrinſecus: or rather, he acts as if he really repented.

Jeſus Chriſt upbraids the Phariſees with refuſing ſo much as to touch with their finger, thoſe burdens which they laid upon others; Luke xi. 46. And God ſays, that the wicked Iſraelites do not ſtay to be purified from their firſt murders, before they commit freſh ones, Hoſ. iv. 2. Blood toucheth blood.

To touch the feet, is put for ſupplicating. See Exod. iv. 25. 2 Kings iv. 27, 37.

TOWER, Turris; in Greek πυργος, Pyrgos; in Hebrew, Migdol. See MIGDOL.

The Tower of Strato. See STRATO.

The Tower of Siloam was probably near the fountain of that name, eaſt of Jeruſalem. Vide SILOAM.

The Tower of the Flock, or the Tower of Ader. Vide ADER. It is ſaid this tower was in the neighbourhood of Bethlehem, Gen. xxxv. 21. and that the ſhepherds, to whom the angel revealed the birth of our Saviour, were near this tower, where afterwards a church was built. Luke ii. 8, 15. Hieron. Ep. 27. Many interpreters aſſert, that this paſſage of Micah, And thou tower of the flock, the ſtrong hold of the daughter of Zion, ſtood for the city of Bethlehem; others maintain, that the prophet intended the city of Jeruſalem.

The Tower of the Watchmen, 2 Kings xvii. 9. xviii. 8. We often find this form of ſpeaking in the Scripture. From the tower of the watchmen to the fenced city, to expreſs in general all the places [ſtructures] of a country, from the leaſt to the greateſt. A tower of watchmen, or of ſhepherds, ſtood alone in the midſt of a plain, to lodge ſhepherds and herdſmen, who looked after the flocks, or to place watchmen in. King Uzziah cauſed ſeveral towers to be built for the ſhepherds in the deſart; and made many ciſterns there, becauſe he had a great number of flocks; 2 Chron. xxvi. 10. The Tower of the Flock mentioned before, and that which Iſaiah, v. 2. notices, which was built in the midſt of a vineyard, were of the ſame kind. Vide Plate of AGRICULTURE, and FRAGMENT, No. page

Scripture ſpeaks of the Tower of Phanuel, of that of Succoth, of Shechem, and others, which were a kind of citadels and fortreſſes to theſe cities. The Tower of Babel was alſo as it were the fortreſs of Babylon. Faciamus Civitatem & Turrim, Gen. xi. 4, 5. St. Jerom obſerves, ad Princ. that the Septuagint often uſe the Greek word baris, which is a word proper to Paleſtine, where they called by this name houſes that were ſhut up on all ſides, and conſtructed in the manner of towers. And this is probably what he would expreſs in 2 Chron. xvii. 12. when he ſays, Jehoſhaphat built in Judah houſes in the form of towers. Ædificavit in Judah domos ad inſtar turrium. The Hebrew has Biranioth, which comes from the Chaldee bira, a palace. Vide BARIS.

Mention is alſo made of ſeveral towers in the city of Jeruſalem; of which the true ſituation is little known. We ſhall not venture to determine here any thing of them.

Ezekiel, in two places, xxix. 10. xxx. 6. ſpeaks of the Tower of Syene: Heb. בירניות Biranioth, A turre Syenes, uſque ad terminos Æthiopiæ. But we have ſhewn, under the article SYENE, that the Hebrew ought to be tranſlated, from Migdol, or Magdolum, a city in the Lower Egypt, to the city of Syene, which is at the extremity of Upper Egypt, on the frontiers of Ethiopia.

The Tower of Babel. See BABEL. The Septuagint read in Iſaiah x. 9. Οὐκ ἔλαβον τὴν χώραν τὴν ἐπάνω Βαβυλῶνος, καὶ Καλάνης ὁ πύργος ᾠκοδομήθη, Did not I take the country which is above Babylon, and Chalaneh, where the tower was built?—The Greek fathers, who uſed this verſion, and thought it agreeable to the Hebrew, were really perſuaded that this famous tower was built above Babylon, and that Chalaneh was the place where it was raiſed. But the Hebrew text implies, Is not Calaneh as Carchemiſh, Hamath as Arpad, and Samaria as Damaſcus? i. e. Have not I ſubdued all theſe cities?

The Tower of Shechem, Judg. ix. 46, &c. This tower was as a citadel, or fortreſs, ſtanding on higher ground than the reſt of the city, and capacious enough to receive above a thouſand perſons. After Abimelech had taken and razed the city of Shechem, he endeavoured alſo to take this tower, to which the inhabitants had retired; but as he could not take it, becauſe it was extremely ſtrong, he reſolved to ſet it on fire; whereby all who had taken refuge in the tower, either periſhed in the flames, or were ſtifled by the ſmoke.

TRACONITIS, Τραχωνίτις, rough, ſtrong; from the Greek τραχὺς.

TRACHONITIS, Trachonite, or Drachonite. St. Luke, iii. 1, ſpeaks of Trachonitis: he ſays, that in the fifteenth year of Tiberius, Philip, ſon of Herod the Great, was Tetrarch of Iturea, and of Trachonitis. This province had Arabia Deſerta eaſt, Batanea weſt, Iturea ſouth, and the country of Damaſcus north. Trachonitis is often aſcribed to Arabia; to which it rather belongs than to Paleſtine. Joſephus, Antiq. lib. i. cap. 7, ſays, it is ſituate between Paleſtine and Cœlo-Syria, and was peopled by Huſh, or Chuſh, the ſon of Aram. The road to Trachonitis lay toward the lake Phiala, where were the ſources of the Jordan. This province was full of rocks, which ſerved to harbour a great number of thieves and robbers, who often found employment for Herod the Great, as may be ſeen in Joſephus. Euſebius ſays, in loc. voce Kanath, that the tribe of Manaſſeh extended into Trachonitis, towards Boſtra; and elſewhere, that Iturea penetrated alſo into Trachonitis, and into the deſart deſart near Boſtra. St. Jerom ſays, that Trachonitis is beyond Boſtra, inclining toward Damaſcus. Strabo ſpeaks of two mountains called Trachones, which were above Damaſcus, towards Arabia and Iturea, where are ſteep mountains with caves in them, that would afford retreats to a thouſand men.

TRADITION, is a ſentiment, cuſtom, &c. not written in the holy books, but delivered down by ſucceſſion, and, as it were, from hand to hand.

The Jews did not commit their traditions to writing, before their wars againſt the Romans, firſt under Veſpaſian, afterwards, under Adrian and Severus. Then the Rabbin Judas, ſurnamed the Holy, compoſed the Miſhna; i. e. the ſecond law; which is the moſt ancient collection of Jewiſh traditions. To this were added the Gemara of Jeruſalem, and that of Babylon, which, together with the Miſhna, form the Talmud of Jeruſalem; and that of Babylon; which are as the ſupplement and the explication of the Miſhna, or of the principal code of their traditions. Vide MISHNA, TALMUD.

Jeſus Chriſt, in the Goſpel, often declared againſt the falſe traditions of the Phariſees. He reproached them with preferring theſe traditions to the law itſelf; for the obſervation of which they even violated the commandments of God. Mark vii. 7, 8, 9, 10, &c. Matth. xv. 1, 2, 3, 4, &c. For, laying aſide the commandment of God, ye hold the tradition of men.——Full well ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition. He gives ſeveral examples of their falſifications of the law, of their ſuperſtitious adherence to vain obſervances, while they neglected eſſential things. However, the Phariſees and Jews have not abated their ſupercilious zeal for the traditions of their fathers; and thoſe who have not a blind reſpect for them, or do not pay unlimited ſubmiſſion to them, are looked upon as heretics. Witneſs, the Caraites, who adhere to the text of Scripture, and who admit of no traditions, but ſuch as are found agreeable to the words and intention of the lawgiver.

The Jews call their traditions The Oral Law, pretending that God delivered them to Moſes, by word of mouth on mount Sinai, when he gave him the written law; that this lawgiver taught and committed them to the elders of the people, as a truſt, which they were to convey down to their ſucceſſors; and ſo on. Through this channel the Jews pretend to have received all their traditions, which are read at this day in the Talmuds: and from hence proceeds that extravagant veneration they have for them; which is carried ſo far, as to make them prefer theſe before the moſt expreſs texts of Scripture.

The Chriſtians alſo had their traditions, which they received from Jeſus Chriſt, or his apoſtles. St. Paul, 2 Theſſalonians ii. 15. ſays, Therefore, brethren, ſtand faſt, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word, or by our epiſtle. The ancient fathers acknowledged the truth and authority of the apoſtolical traditions, as well written as not. Vide Iren, lib. iii. contra Hæreſ. cap. 3, 4. Tertull. de corona militis, cap. 3. Baſil. ad Amphiloch. de ſpiritu ſancto. cap. 29. Chryſoſt. in 2 Theſſal. ii. Epiphan. Hæreſ. 61. Auguſt. Ep. olim 118. nunc 54. ad Januar. But they have not pretended that we muſt blindly receive as apoſtolical traditions all that may be put upon us as ſuch. Reaſon and diſcretion teach us to diſtinguiſh the true from the falſe: we are obliged to admit of none, but ſuch as are approved of and authorized, by general conſent in the church.

TRAGELAPHUS, אקו, Heb. akko; from the Greek τράγος, a goat, and ελαφὼν, a ſtag.

TRANSFIGURATION. After our Saviour had enquired of his diſciples, what men thought of him? and, what they themſelves thought of him? St. Peter anſwered, that he was the Son of the living God. Then Jeſus Chriſt began to ſpeak of his paſſion, which was at hand, Matth. xvi. 28. adding, Verily, I ſay unto you, there be ſome ſtanding here, which ſhall not taſte of death, till they ſee the ſon of man coming in his kingdom. Six days after this promiſe, [Matth. xvii. 1. ſays ſix days; but Luke ix. 28. mentions eight days; probably becauſe he counted incluſively, reckoning the day of the promiſe, and the day of the execution: whereas the other evangeliſt had regard only to the ſix intermediate days. One evangeliſt alſo ſays about eight days—the other, after ſix days.] Jeſus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into an high mountain apart, and was transfigured before them, and his face did ſhine as the ſun, and his raiment was white as the light: and behold there appeared unto them Moſes and Elias talking with him.

The ſubject of their converſation, ſays St. Luke, was the expected ſufferings and death of Jeſus at Jeruſalem.

We conceive that this transfiguration happened in the night; and from hence proceeded the ſleep, which oppreſſed the apoſtles. Moreover, St. Luke obſerves that the next day they came down from the mountain. Luke ix. 37. Therefore they they had paſſed the preceding night there. The chief deſign of the Son of God in this transfiguration, was, according to the fathers, to fulfil his promiſe made ſome days before that he would let ſome of his diſciples ſee a glimpſe of his glory before their death; and to fortify them againſt the ſcandal of the croſs, by giving them this convincing proof that he was the Meſſiah. It is obſerved, with great reaſon, that the condition in which Jeſus Chriſt appeared among men, humble, weak, poor, deſpiſed, was a true and continual transfiguration; whereas the transfiguration itſelf, in which he ſhewed himſelf in the real ſplendor of his glory, was his true and natural condition.

It is the common opinion of interpreters, that this transfiguration occurred upon mount Tabor: but this opinion is attended with great difficulties. Vide TABOR.

As to the appearing of Moſes and Elias, it is aſked, how could the apoſtles know them? It is anſwered, that Jeſus Chriſt might call them by their names; or, he might tell his apoſtles ſo afterwards. Or, the apoſtles might know them by pictures, or deſcriptions, received from their anceſtors: for it cannot be doubted but that among the Jews there was a certain tradition of theſe matters, as there is in the Chriſtian church, concerning the likeneſs, for inſtance, of St. Peter, or St. Paul.

The fathers obſerve in this manifeſtation, that the law, repreſented by Moſes, and the prophets, repreſented by Elias, gave teſtimony to our Saviour. It is is believed that Moſes was raiſed from the dead on this occaſion: as for Elias, he did not die; and he came from the place where he now is, a place unknown to men, to appear on the mountain of transfiguration. Some have thought that theſe two holy perſons did not appear in reality, but in figure only.

TRANSMIGRATIONS. See CAPTIVITIES. Great difficulties are ſtarted concerning the country whither the ten tribes of Iſrael were tranſplanted. Scripture informs us, 2 Kings xv. 29. 1 Chron. v. 26. that Tiglath-Pilneſer carried away Naphthali, Reuben, Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, from beyond Jordan, to Halah, to Habor, and to Hara, A. M. 3264. About twenty years after, in 3283, when Salmanaſſer took Samaria, he carried off the reſt of Iſrael into Aſſyria, to Halah, to Habor, on the river Gozan, and into the cities of the Medes. 2 Kings xvii. 6. xviii. 10.

Lahela and Halah are certainly the ſame, and probably denote the land of Havilah, or Cholchis. Habor, or Chabor, is the river Chaboras, and the country watered by it. Gozan, or Gauzan, is the name of the province through which the river Chaboras flows, according to 2 Kings xviii. 10. In Habor fluviis Gozan; and xvii. 6. In Habor juxta fluvium Gozan. There is alſo a diſtrict in Media, called Gauzan, between the rivers Cyrus and Cambyſes. Benjamin of Tudela places Gozan in Media, four days journey from Hemdam. By Gozan the Jews underſtand the river Sabbaticus, which does not run on the Sabbath-day; but on this day is ſurrounded by fire, ſo as not to be paſſable.

Hara, or Ara, is in Media. This is probably the province of the Areans, known to the ancient geographers. Benjamin of Tudela aſſures us, that there were in Media fifty cities peopled by Iſraelites. We ſee by Tobit i. 11, 16. ii. 7. v. 8. that there were Iſraelites at Nineveh, at Rages in Media, at Shuſhan, or Suſa, and at Ecbatana. In our Saviour's time there were Iſraelites ſcattered through the provinces of the Eaſt, Acts ii. 9, 10, 11. Perſia, Media, the country of Elam, Meſopotamia, Cappadocia, Pontus, Aſia, Phrygia, Pamphilia, Egypt, Cyrenaica, the iſland of Crete, and Arabia. St. James, i. 1. writes to the twelve tribes that were diſperſed. Philo, legat ad Caium. places the Jews in great numbers throughout the Eaſt, under the empire of the Perſians. Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xi. cap. 5, ſpeaking of the ten tribes, ſays, that in his time they were ſtill in great multitudes beyond the Euphrates. And St. Jerom, in Ezech. xxiii. aſſures us, that even in his time the ten tribes were ſtill in captivity, in the mountains and cities of Media.

The ſecond book of Eſdras xiii. 41, &c. advances a notion, that the Iſraelites carried captive by Salmanaſſer, reſolved upon withdrawing from among the nations, that they might ſerve God with greater liberty; and that for this purpoſe they paſſed over the Euphrates, God having opened the channel of this river, by a miracle in their favour, like that when he gave the Hebrews paſſage over the Jordan, under Joſhua. They marched a year and a half before they arrived at the place they intended. At laſt they ſettled at Arzeret, where they are to remain to the latter ages, and then the Almighty will recall them, and again open a paſſage for them through the Euphrates.

But where is this country of Arzeret? The Hebrews themſelves do not know it. Joſeph Ben-Gorion ſays, that when Alexander the Great would have paſſed over the dark mountains which ſeparate the country of the Iſraelites from the

the other nations, he was prevented by a voice which cried to him, Take care that you enter not into the Houſe of God. Benjamin of Tudela reports, that after a journey of one and twenty days, as he travelled towards the North, he arrived at the kingdom of the Rechabites, the extent of which was ſixteen days journey. Of the cities of this kingdom he relates many particulars, but does not ſay that this was the kingdom of Arzereth.

Menaſſeh Ben-Iſrael pretends, in La Eſperança di Iſrael, that the Iſraelites of the ten tribes retired ſoon into Tartary, from whence ſeveral of them paſſed into America; which opinion is not peculiar to him. Many learned men have thought, (Philip. Mornay de verit. Relig. Chriſt. cap. 26. Geneb. Chronic. Religions du Monde, tom. ii. Vide Grot. de Origin. Gent. Americ.) that the ten tribes were in Tartary; from whence they have ſpread into Ruſſia, Moſcovy, Poland, Lithuania, where they are in greater numbers than in any other places of Europe. The Tartars have preſerved ſeveral Jewiſh cuſtoms. They eat no ſwines-fleſh, are circumciſed at nine years old, obſerve the Levitical law, which requires that the brother ſhall marry his brother's wife, if he dies without children. Davity relates, Etats du Turc en Aſie, p. 124, 168. that the king of Thabor in Tartary came into France in the reign of Francis I. and propoſed to this prince to become a Jew. He made the ſame propoſal to ſeveral other princes of Europe, who received it with contempt.

It is believed that ſeveral Jews paſſed from Tartary into China.

As to that opinion which ſuppoſes the Iſraelites of the ten tribes, at leaſt a part of them, to have paſſed into America, the foundation of it is this: Monteſini, in his relation addreſſed to Manaſſeh Ben-Iſrael, ſays, that he found many Iſraelites concealed behind the mountains Cordilleron [Cordilleras], which are upon the confines of Chilly [Chili] in Armenia, [South America.] He adds, that when he advanced farther into this country, he arrived at the banks of a river, and a ſignal being given, he ſaw people appear who pronounced in Hebrew thoſe words of Deuteronomy, Hear, O Iſrael, the Lord thy God is the only Lord. They held Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, to have been their progenitors, and pretended to be of the poſterity of Reuben. They ſaid they had been brought into this country by the particular and miraculous providence of God; that at the inſtigation of the Magi, the Indians had three times waged war againſt them, but that the Iſraelites had always been victorious. That at laſt the Magi having eſcaped the ſlaughter, declared that the God of Iſrael was the only true God, and that at the conſummation of ages the Iſraelites ſhould become maſters of the world.

This relation of Monteſini deceived Manaſſeh, who thereupon compoſed his treatiſe called, The Hope of Iſrael. In this he maintains, that Aſia and America were heretofore but one continent, which God divided at the ſtreights of Anian: that it was before this ſeparation the Iſraelites paſſed thither, and fixed themſelves there, notwithſtanding the oppoſition of the inhabitants of the country. He ſupports this opinion from thoſe words of Scripture; Iſai. li. 5. The iſles ſhall wait upon me, and on mine arm ſhall they truſt. And Iſai. xlii. 4. The iſles ſhall wait for his law. It was America, ſays Manaſſeh, that the prophet Iſaiah meant by the word iſles in theſe paſſages.

Sir William Penn, in his letter concerning the ſtate of the dominions of the Engliſh in America, is perſuaded, that the Americans originally were derived from the Hebrews. Their countenances, eſpecially thoſe of their children, have ſo exact a reſemblance to thoſe of the Jews, that in looking upon them any one would think that they ſaw the Jews themſelves. Their eyes are ſmall and black: they reckon by moons: they offer up their firſt-fruits: their altars are ſaid to be compoſed of twelve ſtones: their mournings continue for a year: their women obſerve the ſame cuſtoms as the Jeweſſes: their language is maſculine, ſhort, cloſe, energetical; one word ſerves inſtead of three, the reſt being ſupplied by the hearers.

Others add, that the Mexicans receive circumciſion; that giants have been ſeen heretofore in this country; that the Americans have ſome notion of the deluge, and of the paſſage over the Red ſea: that in ſome places of Peru they kill a white lamb, the blood of which they mingle with meal, and diſtribute it to the people, who with this blood make a token over the doors of their houſes. Some of them believe a reſurrection; they keep up a perpetual fire in honour of their gods; obſerve a year of jubilee at the end of fifty years, and a ſabbath every week. Theſe marks of conformity between the Americans and the Iſraelites, and many other that have been taken notice of, cannot be merely caſual. It muſt therefore be acknowledged, that the Iſraelites penetrated as far as America, either by China, or ſome other way.

There

There are ſome Jews who ſuppoſe them to have paſſed thither even from Spain or France, and who underſtand thoſe words of Obadiah, verſe 20, to allude to this paſſage. Vide SOPHARAD, BOSPHORUS.

But when we conſider theſe proofs with a little attention, and examine the facts advanced as foundations of this opinion, we ſhall find that a great part of theſe characters are falſe, that others are doubtful, and others equivocal. If we obſerve among the Americans ſome footſteps of Judaiſm, we may alſo obſerve ſome marks of Chriſtianity too; but more eſpecially a declared open Paganiſm and idolatry. So that nothing can be reaſonably concluded about the original of the Americans, either as proceeding from the Jews or Chriſtians.

It has been ſaid a long time ago, that the ten tribes, at leaſt a part of them, are ſettled in Ethiopia. It is thought that at, and after, the time of Solomon many of them followed the queen of Sheba. The Rabbi Eliezer tells us, Vide Bartolocci Bibl. Rabbin. tom. i. p. 129. that in the time of Jeroboam, the tribe of Dan went into this country, and that the tribes of Naphthali, of Gad, of Aſher, and of Moſes, went thither ſome time after. The tribe of Moſes, (of which tribe Scripture mentions nothing) according to him, was idolatrous: But being converted, they built themſelves palaces in the land of their ſettlement. Theſe tribes united together, and had a powerful monarch of their own nation, who could bring into the field, ſixſcore thouſand horſe, and an hundred thouſand foot. But what we may be certain of is, that in Ethiopia there are many Jews, that they are brave and warlike, and that ſome of them have been powerful enough. In the middle of the laſt age one of them ſet himſelf up for king of a little mountainous country, which was of very difficult acceſs; as we are informed by the two ambaſſadors of the king of Ethiopia, whom Mr. Bernier ſaw at the court of the great Mogul. Bernier, Voiage de Cachemire, lib. 4. Theſe Jews pretend to be deſcended from Judah, and there is no proof of their deſcent from thoſe other tribes. [Mr. BRUCE confirms this.]

Olaus Rudbek, ſon of the famous Mr. Rudbek, author of the Atlantica, in his Laponia illuſtrata, pretends that we muſt not expect to find the remains of the ten tribes of Iſrael either in Aſia, or in Africa, and much leſs in America; but in the utmoſt northern climes, even in his own country of Lapland. Theſe ſurmiſes he ſupports by ſome general probabilities, and by the conformity between the manners and ceremonies of the Laplanders and thoſe of the Jews. But, upon this foundation, there can be no country in the world in which the Jews, and the ten tribes, may not be found.

Certain it is, firſt, that there is no place of the earth known to us, where the ten tribes can be found united, and making but one people: Secondly, that there are but few countries where there are not Jews and Iſraelites, and conſequently ſome traces of their religion: Thirdly, that a great number of the captive Iſraelites returned into their own country during the times of the rule of the Perſians and Greeks: Fourthly, that the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, and the ten tribes of Iſrael, are at preſent ſo blended together, that it is hardly poſſible to diſtinguiſh them, and therefore a needleſs thing to give ourſelves trouble in ſeeking the ten tribes in any part of the world. See CAPTIVITY, &c. [Sir W. JONES has lately hinted at their ſettlement toward India, which is very probable.]

TREASURE, in Latin and Greek Θησαύρος, Theſaurus; in Hebrew, אוצר Ozer. The Hebrew word, ſignifies any thing collected together; proviſions, magazines. So, a treaſure of corn, of wine, of oil; treaſures of gold, ſilver, braſs; treaſures of ſilver in money. Snow, winds, hail, rain, waters, are in the treaſuries of God: He bringeth the wind out of his treaſuries, Pſal. cxxxv. 7. Jerem. li. 16. We ſay alſo, a treaſure of good works, treaſures of iniquity; to lay up treaſures in heaven, to bring forth good or evil out of the treaſures of ones heart. The wiſemen opened their treaſures, i. e. their pacquets, or bundles, to offer preſents to our Saviour. Joſeph told his brethren, when they found their money returned in their ſacks, that God had given them treaſures. Gen. xliii 23. The treaſures of the houſe of God, whether in ſilver, corn, wine, or oil, were under the care of the Levites, the porters, or doorkeepers, of the temple. The kings of Judah had alſo keepers of their treaſures, both in city and country; 1 Chron. xxvii. 25. 2 Chron. xxxii. 27, &c. and the places where theſe magazines were laid up were called treaſure-cities. Pharaoh compelled the Hebrews to build him treaſure-cities, or magazines: Exod. i. 11. ערי מסכנות Urbes Tabernaculorum, ſays the Vulgate; but the beſt interpreters tranſlate the Hebrew by treaſure. This word is often uſed to expreſs any thing whatever in great abundance. Coloſ. ii. 3. In Jeſus Chriſt are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge. The wiſeman ſays, that wiſdom contains in its treaſuries underſtanding, the knowledge of religion, gion, &c. And St. Paul, Rom. ii. 5. you heap up to yourſelf a treaſure of wrath againſt the day of wrath, &c. The prophet Amos ſays, iii. 10. they treaſure up iniquity, they lay up iniquity as it were in a ſtore-houſe; which will bring them a thouſand calamities.

The treaſures of impiety or iniquity, Prov. x. 2. expreſs ill-got riches. The treaſures of iniquity, ſays the wiſeman, will bring no profit; in the ſame ſenſe Chriſt calls the riches of iniquity Mammona iniquitatis, an eſtate wickedly acquired.

Goſpel faith is the treaſure of the juſt; but St. Paul ſays, 2 Cor. iv. 7. We have this treaſure in earthen veſſels. Iſaiah ſays of a good man, Iſa. xxxiii. 6. the fear of the Lord is his treaſure. The wiſeman ſays, Ecclus. xxix. 11. Lay up thy treaſure, according to the commandment of the moſt high, and it will bring thee more profit than gold. Our Saviour tells us, Matth. xii. 35. A good man, out of the good treaſure of his heart, bringeth forth good things; and an evil man, out of the evil treaſure, bringeth forth evil things. Nothing can proceed from us, but what is within us, whether good or evil.

Under the name of treaſure, is often underſtood ſome ſecret, unknown, and precious thing. Deut. xxviii. 12. The Lord ſhall open unto thee his good treaſure, the heaven, to give the rain unto thy land, in his due ſeaſon. The terrible effects of the vengeance of the Lord, Is not this laid up in the ſtore with me, and ſealed up among my treaſures? Job aſks, Have you penetrated into the treaſuries of the ſnow, and have you ſeen the treaſures of the hail? All theſe things are unknown to mortals; God keeps them concealed in his treaſuries.

TREES. There is hardly any thing leſs certain in Scripture, than the Hebrew names of plants and trees. We ſhall not attempt to enumerate them here, but rather, as occaſions offer, ſhall ſpeak of the chief of them mentioned in Scripture.

When the Jews had planted a vine, or fruit-tree, they were not allowed to eat the fruit, for the firſt three years: They offered to God that of the fourth year, and afterwards might uſe whatever thoſe trees produced. Levit. xix. 23. The fruit of the three firſt years was accounted unclean: Scripture ſays, that for theſe three years they gave a ſort of circumciſion to the trees: Auferetis præputia eorum? After this they became common. They profaned (as it were) their trees, after they had offered the firſt-fruits to the Lord.

TREE of life: this was a tree planted in the midſt of Paradiſe; whoſe fruit had the power of preſerving the life of Adam, if he had continued obedient to the commands of God: But this tree of life became to him a tree of death, becauſe of his infidelity and diſobedience.

TREE of the knowledge of good and evil. This was was alſo planted in the midſt of paradiſe, and Adam was forbid to touch it on pain of death, Gen. ii. 17. It is diſputed, whether the tree of life, and that of the knowledge of good and evil, might be the ſame tree? Opinions are divided hereupon: But that opinion which makes them diſtinct, ſeems the moſt probable.

Theſe reaſons are generally alledged, for and againſt the opinion which ſuppoſes them to be two different trees. Gen. ii. 9. Moſes ſays, that God planted the garden of Eden, and put therein all ſorts of good trees, particularly the tree of life in the midſt of the garden, as alſo the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. And when he placed Adam in paradiſe, he ſaid to him, Of every tree of the garden thou mayeſt freely eat; but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou ſhalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt ſurely die. And when the ſerpent tempted Eve, he ſaid to her, Yea, hath God ſaid, ye ſhall not eat of every tree of the garden? Eve anſwered, God hath permitted us to eat of the fruits of paradiſe, but of the fruit of the tree which is in the midſt of the garden, God hath ſaid, ye ſhall not eat of it, neither ſhall ye touch it, leſt ye die. To which the ſerpent replied, Ye ſhall not ſurely die; for God doth know, that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes ſhall be opened, and ye ſhall be as gods, knowing good and evil. And after Adam and Eve had tranſgreſſed the commands of God, he drove them out of paradiſe, ſaying to them, Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil. And now, leſt he put forth his hand, and take alſo of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever, therefore the Lord ſent him forth from the garden of Eden.

From all theſe paſſages it may be concluded in favour of one tree only, whoſe uſe was forbid to Adam; Firſt, there can be no neceſſity of admitting two; the ſame fruit that could prolong Adam's life, might alſo communicate knowledge. Secondly, the text of Moſes may very well be underſtood of one tree: "God planted the tree of life, OR the tree of knowledge." Frequently in the Hebrew the conjunction and is equivalent to the disjunctive or; in like manner, leſt he put forth his hand, and take take alſo of the tree of life, and live for ever, may be explained in the ſame ſenſe: Leſt he ſhould return to it again, to obtain life alſo; as he has already eat of it in order to obtain knowledge. Thirdly, the tempter plainly aſcribes to the ſame tree, the fruit of life, and the fruit of knowledge: Ye ſhall not ſurely die; for God doth know, that in the day ye eat thereof, ye ſhall know good and evil. He confirms them againſt the apprehenſions of death, and aſſures them of knowledge; by their eating the forbidden fruit.

But the contrary opinion ſeems to have a better foundation in the letter of the text. Moſes plainly diſtinguiſhes theſe two trees, the tree of life, and the tree of knowledge; why then, ſhould we confound them without neceſſity? Life and knowledge are very different effects; why ſhould they be produced by one and the ſame fruit:—was it too much to forbid Adam the uſe of two trees? The diſcourſe of God with Adam after his fall, ſeems to be expreſs, for a diſtinction of two trees: Leſt he take alſo of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever. As if he had ſaid, he has already taſted of the fruit of knowledge, he muſt be drove away from the fruit of life, leſt he ſhould take of that alſo. The tempter indeed aſſures Eve and Adam againſt the fear of death; but he only offers them the fruit of knowledge, telling them, that as ſoon as they had taſted of it, they ſhould have the knowledge of Gods. Hence, after their ſin, it is ſaid, their eyes were opened. Theſe reaſons incline us to prefer this opinion, inſtead of the former, which we had eſpouſed. See St. Auſtin, lib. vi. cap. 30. of his imperfect work againſt Julian.

It is enquired, of what nature was the forbidden fruit? Some have thought it was wheat, others the vine, Rabb. in Sanhedrin. fol. 70. Bemidbar. Rabb. fol. 170, & 238. others, the fig-tree, Theodor. apud Theodoret. qu. 28. in Geneſ. Iſidor. Peluſ. lib. 1. ep. 2. others the cherry-tree, others the apple-tree. This laſt ſentiment has prevailed, though no better founded than the reſt. However, they quote this paſſage of Canticles viii. 5. "I awakened you under the apple-tree; there your mother loſt her innocence;" as if Solomon had here intended to ſpeak of the fall of the firſt woman. We read this paſſage thus in our tranſlation: I raiſed thee up under the apple-tree, there thy mother brought thee forth; there ſhe brought thee forth that bare thee.

Many of the ancients conſidered this whole relation of Moſes as figurative: and were of opinion, that this account could only be underſtood as an allegory. St. Auſtin thought, de Geneſ. ad liter. lib. viii. cap. 5. & lib. ii. de pecat. mentis. cap. 21. that the virtue of the tree of life, and that of the knowledge of good and evil, were ſupernatural and miraculous. Others have thought, that this virtue was natural to them. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 1. Bonavent. in 2. Sent. diſt. 19. Strab. in Geneſ. Hug. Victor Abulens. alii paſſim. According to Philo, de opificio mundi, p. 35. the tree of life repreſents piety, and the tree of knowledge, prudence. God is the foundation of theſe virtues. The Rabbins tell us very incredible and ridiculous ſtories concerning the tree of life: that it was of a prodigious ſize, and all the waters of the earth guſhed out at its foot: that one could hardly go round it in five hundred years. Perhaps all this is allegorical; but the ſecret meaning is hardly worth the trouble of penetrating into. Baſnage, Hiſt. of the Jews, lib. vi. cap. 12. art. 18.

TRES TABERNÆ, Τρεῖς τάβερναι, the three taverns, or ſhops. Acts xxviii 15.

TRIBE. Jacob having twelve ſons, who were the heads of ſo many families, which all together formed a great nation; each of theſe families was called a tribe. But Jacob on his death-bed adopted Ephraim and Manaſſeh, the two ſons of Joſeph, and would have them alſo to conſtitute two tribes in Iſrael. Gen. xlviii. 5. Inſtead of twelve tribes, there were now thirteen, that of Joſeph being divided into two. However, in the diſtribution of lands by Joſhua, under the order of God, they reckoned but twelve tribes, and made but twelve lots. For the tribe of Levi, being appointed to ſacred ſervice, had no ſhare in the diſtribution of the land; but only ſome cities to dwell in, and the firſt fruits, tythes, and oblations of the people.

The twelve tribes, while in the deſart, encamped around the tabernacle of the covenant, each in its order. To the eaſt were Judah, Zebulun, and Iſſachar: to the weſt were Ephraim, Manaſſeh, and Benjamin: to the ſouth were Reuben, Simeon, and Gad: and to the north were Dan, Aſher, and Naphthali. The Levites were diſtributed round about the tabernacle, nearer to the holy place than the other tribes; ſo that Moſes and Aaron, with their families, were to the eaſt, Gerſhom to the weſt, Kohath to the ſouth, and Merari to the north.

In the marches of Iſrael, the twelve tribes were divided into four great bodies. The firſt body, in the front of the army, included Judah, Iſſachar, and Zebulun: the ſecond was compoſed of Reuben, Simeon, and Gad. Between the ſecond and third body of troops, came the Le- vites and prieſts; with the ark of the Lord, and the furniture of the tabernacle.

The third body of the army of Iſrael was compoſed of Ephraim, Manaſſeh, and Benjamin. The fourth, which brought up the rear, was Dan, Aſher, and Naphthali.

In the diviſion made by Joſhua of the land of Canaan, Reuben, Gad, and half of Manaſſeh, had their lot beyond Jordan: All the other tribes, and the remaining half of Manaſſeh, had their diſtribution on this ſide the river. See the title of each of the twelve tribes, JUDAH, SIMEON, LEVI, BENJAMIN, DAN, EPHRAIM, MANASSEH, REUBEN, GAD, ASHER, ZEBULUN, ISSACHAR, and NAPHTHALI.

The twelve tribes continued united as one ſtate, one people, and one monarchy, till after the death of Solomon. Then ten of the tribes of Iſrael revolted from the houſe of David, and received as their king Jeroboam, the ſon of Nebat; and only the tribes of Judah and Benjamin continued under the government of Reboboam. This ſeparation may be conſidered as the chief cauſe of thoſe great misfortunes which afterwards happened to theſe two kingdoms, and to the whole Hebrew nation. As, firſt, it cauſed the alteration and change of the primitive religion, and the ancient worſhip of their forefathers. Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat ſubſtituted the worſhip of golden calves inſtead of worſhipping the Lord; which induced the ten tribes to forſake the temple of the Lord. Secondly, this ſchiſm cauſed an irreconcileable hatred between the ten tribes of Iſrael, and the two of Judah and Benjamin; and created infinite wars and diſputes. The Lord being provoked, delivered them up to their enemies. Tiglath-Pilneſer firſt took captive the tribes of Reuben, Gad, Naphthali, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, beyond Jordan, and carried them over the Euphrates, 2 Kings xv. 29. 1 Chron. v. 26. A. M. 3264, ante A. D. 740.

Some years afterward, Shalmaneſer, king of Aſſyria, deſtroyed Samaria, and took away the reſt of Iſrael, beyond the Euphrates. 2 Kings xvii. 6. xviii. 10, 11. Thus ended the kingdom of Iſrael, A. M. 3283, ante A. D. 721.

It has been a great problem among the fathers, and interpreters, to determine whether theſe ten tribes ſtill continue in their ſettlement beyond the Euphrates, or whether they returned again into their own country. The greater part are of opinion, that they never did return; but the contrary opinion ſeems to have a better foundation in Scripture, which in ſeveral places promiſes the return of theſe tribes, and which repreſents all Paleſtine as well peopled by Iſraelites of all the tribes, long before the coming of Chriſt. However, it muſt be owned, that this return is not clearly made out by hiſtory, becauſe it was performed by inſenſible degrees, and was not ſo compleat and entire, but that a great number of Iſraelites ſtill remained beyond the Euphrates; ſo that St. Peter addreſſes his firſt epiſtle to the converted Jews diſperſed in the provinces of Pontus, of Cappadocia, Bythinia, Aſia, &c. [Major RENNEL, on Herodotus, has lately propoſed ſtrong arguments to prove that the deportation of Iſrael, like that of Judah, was not univerſal, or of all the people.]

The tribes of Judah and Benjamin, under the government of the family of David, continued much longer in their own country: But at laſt, Nebuchadnezzar took Jeruſalem, burnt the temple, and carried Judah and Benjamin to Babylon. 2 Kings xxv. 1, 2, 3, &c. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 17, 18, &c. A. M. 3416, ante A. D. 588.

The captivity of Judah continued for ſeventy years, as the prophets had foretold. Jerem. xxv. 11, 12. xxix. 10. The beginning of it may be fixed A. M. 3398, and the end in 3468, which is the firſt year of Cyrus at Babylon. Or the beginning A. M. 3416, the year of the taking of Jeruſalem, and of its deſtruction by Nebuchadnezzar, the end in 3486, which is the beginning of the reign of Darius ſon of Hyſtaſpes, the ſpouſe of queen Eſther, and the protector of the Jewiſh nation. The return of Judah is plainly aſſigned at the end of the ſecond book of the Chronicles, and in the books of Ezra and Nehemiah. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 20, 21, 22, 23. The decree of Cyrus which allowed their return into Judea, was A. M. 3468, ante A. D. 536.

TRIBUNAL. The place where judicial proceedings are exerciſed and adminiſtered. Moſes appointed, (Deut. xvi. 18. xvii. 8, 9. Ezek. xliv. 24. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 10. cap. ult.) that in every city there ſhould be judges and magiſtrates, who ſhould hear and determine differences: And that if any thing very difficult occurred, it ſhould be referred to the place which the Lord ſhould chooſe, and be laid before the high-prieſt, or prieſts of the race of Aaron, and before the judge whom the Lord ſhould raiſe up there for the time being. See JUDGE and SANHEDRIM.

The Rabbins pretend, that there were three kinds of tribunals in Iſrael; one of three judges, another of twenty-three, and another of ſixty. The tribunal of three judges was in every village, it determined cauſes on money matters, and ordinary affairs; the tribunal of three and twenty judges was kept in cities, and could take cognizance of matters relating to life and death. Laſtly, the third tribunal of ſixty, was held only at Jeruſalem, in an apartment of the temple. This is what the Jews call the great Sanhedrim, to the authority of which, even the king, the high-prieſt, the tribes of Iſrael, the falſe prophets, and the affairs of religion, were ſubject. The Rabbins affirm, that the privilege of judging in capital cauſes was taken away from this council forty years before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; A. D. 30, ſeven years before the death of our Saviour. Wherefore the Jews ſaid to Pilate, that it was not permitted them to put any one to death: John xviii. 31.

TRIBUNE, an office of dignity among the Romans. They had tribunes of ſeveral kinds. Some commanded the troops, others directed the adminiſtration of the commonwealth. We find ſome called Tribuni Celerum, who commanded a ſort of light-horſe: Others called Tribuni Ærarii, had the inſpection of the public treaſure. Tribuni Fabricarum, attended to the making of arms and armour. Tribuni Maritimorum, had the overſight of ſea-ports, of rivers, of ſalt-works. Tribuni Plebis were the guardians and patrons of the people, to protect them from any injuries they might receive from the nobles, &c. Laſtly, Tribuni Militum, or Militiæ, who were divided into greater and leſſer tribunes; the firſt were tribunes of legions, the others tribunes of troops, or cohorts.

In Scripture the word tribune is often uſed, in the Latin of the Old Teſtament; becauſe the tranſlators knew no word more proper to expreſs certain employments, which reſembled that of the tribunes of the Roman republic. For example; Jerom, Exod. xviii. 21, 25. שרי אלפים Principes Militum. LXX. Χιλιάρχας. (Vide Numb. xxxi. 14, 48, 52. Deut. i. 15. 1 Reg. viii. 12. xvii. 18. & paſſim.) tranſlates by Tribunes what the Hebrew calls prince of a thouſand, and the Septuagint, Chiliarchæ; which has the ſame ſignification as the Hebrew. In the New Teſtament, the word Tribune has more correct relation to the offices or employments of the Romans, ſince they were really officers of the Roman troops: as John xviii. 12. Acts xxi. 31, 32, 33, 37, &c. Mark vi. 21. ſpeaks of the tribunes of the court of Herod the Tetrarch, theſe in the Greek are called Chiliarchoi, or captains of a thouſand men, as the tribunes of legions were. But he that apprehended St. Paul, and took him out of the hands of the Jews, Acts xxi. 31. was only a captain, or tribune of a company.

TRIBUTE, מס, Heb. Mas; Φόρος, Greek, Phoros.

TRIBUTE, Tributum; in Greek, Φόρος, Phoros; in Hebrew, מס Mas; from the verb Maſas, to melt, or liquify. The Hebrews acknowledged no ſovereign over them, but God: Whence Joſephus calls their government a Theocracy, or divine government. They acknowledged the ſovereign dominion of God by the payment of a tribute, or capitation, of half a ſhekel a head, which every Iſraelite paid yearly, Exod. xxx. 13. Our Saviour, Matth. xvii. 25. thus reaſons with Peter: Of whom do the kings of the earth take cuſtom, or tribute? of their own children, or of ſtrangers? Meaning, that as he was the Son of God, he ought to be exempt from this capitation. I do not find that either the kings, or the judges of the Hebrews, when they were of that nation, demanded any tribute.

Solomon, at the beginning of his reign, 1 Kings ix. 21, 22, 33. 2 Chron. viii. 9. compelled the Canaanites, left in the country, to pay him tribute, and to perform the drudgery of the public works he had undertaken: But the children of Iſrael, he would not ſuffer to be employed therein, but made them his ſoldiers, his miniſters, his chief officers; to command his armies, his chariots, and his horſemen. However, toward the end of his reign, he impoſed a tribute on them, and made them work at the public buildings; 1 Kings v. 13, 14. ix. 15. xi. 27. which alienated their minds, and ſowed the ſeeds of that diſcontent which afterwards ripened into open revolt, by the rebellion of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat. Hence the Iſraelites ſaid to Rehoboam the ſon of Solomon; Thy father made our yoke grievous; now therefore, make thou the grievous ſervice of thy father, and the heavy yoke which he put upon us, lighter, and we will ſerve thee.

The Iſraelites were frequently ſubdued by foreign princes, who laid great taxes and tribute on them; to which, neceſſity compelled them to ſubmit. Yet after Archelaus had been baniſhed to Vienne in France, A. D. 6, and after Judea was reduced to a Roman province, Auguſtus ſent Quirinius (Cyrenius) into this country, to take a new poll of the people, and to make a new eſtimate of their ſubſtance, that he might thereby regulate the tribute that every one was to pay to the Romans. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 17. cap. 15. Then Judas, ſurnamed the Galilean, or Gaulonite, made an inſurrection, to oppoſe the the levying of this tribute: Pretending that it was not lawful to pay tribute to a foreigner; that it was the badge of actual ſervitude, and that they were not allowed to own any for their maſter, who did not worſhip the Lord. Vide JUDAS the Galilean, and HERODIANS.

See Matthew xxii. 17, &c. the anſwer of Jeſus Chriſt to the Phariſees, who came with inſidious deſigns of tempting him, and aſked him, Whether or no it was lawful to pay tribute to Cæſar? And John, viii. 33. where the Jews boaſt of having never been ſlaves to any body; of being a free nation, acknowledging God only for maſter and ſovereign. As at that time many Jews had imbibed the principles of Judas Gaulonites, and infuſed into the people their notions of independence, and a vain ſhew of liberty; ſo on the contrary, the apoſtles St. Peter and St. Paul, in their epiſtles, always endeavoured to recommend, and inculcate, to faithful Chriſtians, ſubmiſſion and obedience to princes, and a conſcientious diſcharge of their duty, in paying tribute. See Rom. xiii. 1—8. 1 Pet. ii. 13.

TRIBUTE-MONEY. We read Matt. xxii. 16, 17, 18, &c. that the diſciples of the Phariſees and the Herodians, came to tempt Jeſus, and aſked him if it were lawful to pay tribute to Cæſar, or not. Jeſus knowing their malice, ſaid to them; Ye hypocrites, why tempt ye me? Shew me a piece of that money, with which the tribute is paid: numiſma cenſûs. It is enquired what piece of money this was? and of what tribute our Saviour here ſpoke? As to the firſt of theſe queſtions, the goſpel informs us, that this piece of money had upon it the image and inſcription of Cæſar, or the Roman emperor. It was therefore a piece of money of the Roman emperor who then reigned, i. e. Tiberius, or one of his predeceſſors. As to the queſtion about the tribute, there is great probability it was a capitation, or a tax levied at ſo much a head. Appian ſays, that the Jews paid the capitation; Appian. Syriac. and Ulpian aſſures us, Ulpian. lib. iii. digeſt. de Cenſib. Vide Ficher. de Numiſm. cenſus. that in the provinces of Syria, all the males from the age of fourteen years, and all the females from twelve, till they were ſixty-five years old, were obliged to pay this tribute, or capitation. This is the proper ſignification of the word Cenſus. Vide alſo FRAGMENTS, Nos.

TRINITY. This term is uſed to expreſs the greateſt myſtery of the Chriſtian religion; i. e. that the one only God is diſtinguiſhed into three perſons; the father, the ſon, and the Holy Spirit. The word Trinity does not occur in Scripture; nevertheleſs, theſe three divine perſons are plainly expreſſed, and diſtinguiſhed. For example, God created the heaven and the earth: i. e. God the father. The ſon is expreſſed through the whole Scripture, by the name of The Word, The Wiſdom, The Saviour, The Deliverer. The Holy Ghoſt, which inſpired the prophets, is called in the Goſpel, The Comforter, or Paracletus. The Father and the Son are repreſented in Pſalm cx. 1. The Lord ſaid unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, &c. In the New Teſtament the three perſons are diſtinctly expreſſed: as Matt. xxviii. 19. Go and teach all nations; baptizing them, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt. And when Jeſus Chriſt came out of the water after his baptiſm, the heaven was opened, and the ſpirit of God deſcended on him like a dove, and a voice was heard from heaven, ſaying, Matth. iii. 16, 17. This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed. The whole goſpel of St. John, eſpecially his firſt chapter, marks diſtinctly the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghoſt; to whom John the Baptiſt gives his teſtimony, John i. 32, 33, 34. ſaying, that he ſaw the Holy Ghoſt deſcend upon Jeſus like a dove. He adds, that the ſame Spirit that ſent him to baptize, ſaid to him, Upon whom thou ſhalt ſee the Spirit deſcending, and remaining on him, the ſame is he who baptizeth with the Holy Ghoſt.

It has been thought, that the diſtinction of three Perſons in the Deity was not unknown to Plato, and his diſciples; and ſome moderns have even dared to affirm, that from their writings the fathers of the church borrowed the greater part of their expreſſions concerning the Trinity. See Baſnage's Hiſt. of the Jews, tom. iv. lib. vi. chap. 4.

It cannot be denied that ſome of the ancient Jews, who lived before Jeſus Chriſt, and thoſe alſo who lived in his time, were ignorant of the myſtery of the Holy Trinity: which yet is ſo clearly revealed in the Old Teſtament, that it could not be unknown to the patriarchs, the prophets, and the enlightened of the ancient Hebrews. Raymund Martin, Galatine, and others, have undertaken to ſhew, that the Chaldee Paraphraſts, and the ancient Rabbins, have made expreſs mention of the Trinity; i. e. of Three divine Perſons: and we do certainly find in their writings the words Shalithith שלישית Trinitas, which ſignifies Trinity; and Memar ממר, Verbum, the Word; and Ruach Hakkadoſhah, רוח הקדשה Sanctus Spiritus, the Holy Spirit. We alſo find God the Father,

Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghoſt. Laſtly, שלשה באחד Tres in Uno. אחד בשלשה Unus in Tribus, the Tri-une, Three in One, and One in Three; alſo, Jehovah, to expreſs the Father, Memra-jah, to expreſs the Word of the Father, and Shechinah, to expreſs the Holy Ghoſt,

It is true, modern Rabbins diſclaim part of the books in which theſe words are found, maintaining that they were not written by Jews: others they explain in another ſenſe: and they not only do not acknowledge a Trinity, but they expreſsly deny it, and declare againſt it; either, becauſe they have departed in this from the ſentiments of their forefathers; or, that their antipathy and hatred to Chriſtians has excited them to diſpute this truth, which is ſo clearly revealed by Chriſt and his apoſtles; or, that this myſtery from the beginning was unknown to the generality of the Jews, and the people had but a very imperfect idea of it. Indeed, the conceptions of the Jews were ſo very groſs, and they were ſo little acquainted with abſtract ſpeculations, that from the belief of the Trinity, it would have been very eaſy to them to have paſſed to that of the plurality of gods. For which reaſon, perhaps, the wiſdom of God might withhold from them the plain diſcovery of this myſtery. Vide Baſnage, as before, the Lexicon of Suicerus, under the word Trias; Cudworth's Intellectual Syſtem. lib. i. cap. 4. and Joſhua Arndi, Diatriba de myſterio Trinit. e ſcriptis Rabb.

TRIPOLIS, a city of Phœnicia, on the Mediterranean ſea, between Botrys to the ſouth, and Arca to the north. It is watered by a river that runs from Libanus. It is mentioned 2 Macc. xiv. 1. where we read, that three years after the death of Antiochus Epiphanes, Demetrius, the ſon of Seleucus, to whom the kingdom of Syria belonged, eſcaped from Rome, and landed at Tripolis, A. D. 3642, ante A. D. 362. The word Tripolis, in Greek, ſignifies three cities: becauſe in fact it was made of three cities, diſtant from one another the length of a ſtadium, or furlong. One of theſe cities belonged to the Arabians, another to the Sidonians, and the third to the Tyrians, Diodor. Sicul. lib. xvi. cap. 41. Strab. lib. xvi. p. 519. Plin. lib. v. cap. 20. It is ſtill a conſiderable place, becauſe of its harbour.

At the foot of the caſtle runs the river called Nahar-kadiſha, or the Holy River. It has its ſource from the ſprings and melted ſnow that run down from Libanus, and particularly from the fountain called in Scripture, The Fountain of Gardens, Cant. iv. 15. Fons hortorum, puteus aquarum viventium, quæ fluunt impetu de Libano. The waters of this river, the inhabitants convey as they pleaſe, by little canals, and ſtop up the outlets, to overflow the land and the neighbouring gardens.

TROAS, a city of Phrygia, or of Myſia, on the Helleſpont, between the city of Troy north, and the city of Aſſos ſouth. Sometimes the name of Troas [or the Troad] ſignifies the whole country of the Trojans, the province where the [ancient] city of Troy had ſtood. But in the New Teſtament, wherein the word Troas is found, it ſignifies a city of this name, which alſo is ſometimes called Antigonia, and Alexandria: Ipſa Troas, Antigonia dicta, nunc Alexandria, ſays Pliny, lib. v. cap. 30. Sometimes both names are united, Alexandria-Troas. St. Paul was at Troas, A. D. 52, Acts xvi. 8, &c. and had a viſion in the night, of a man of Macedonia, who requeſted goſpel-aſſiſtance. He embarked therefore at Troas, and paſſed over into Macedonia; the apoſtle was ſeveral other times at Troas; but we know nothing of his tranſactions there. See Acts xx. 5, 6. 2 Cor. ii. 12. He left behind him at Troas, in the cuſtody of Carpus, ſome clothes and books, which he deſired Timothy to bring with him to Rome, A. D. 65. a little before St. Paul's death, 2 Tim. iv. 13.

TROGLODYTES, סכיים, τρογλοδύται, Heb. Suchiim, a people, who are anointed; from סוך ſuc: otherwiſe, that are covered, and in the ſhade; from סכך ſacac. The Greek Troglodytæ ſignifies thoſe that dwell in caverns; from τρώγλη, a cavern, and δύο or δύμι, to go into.

TROGLODYTES. This word in Greek, ſignifies thoſe who dwell in holes and caverns. There are many of this ſort of people in Paleſtine, Arabia, on the coaſts of the Red Sea, the Perſian gulph, and in Egypt. Scripture mentions Troglodytes only in 2 Chron. xii. 3. Lybies & Troglodytæ, & Æthiopes. The Hebrew ſays, the Lubim, the Sukkim, Cuſhim, or Æthiopians.

Moſt interpreters agree, that the Sukkim ſignifies the Troglodytes. Bochart, Phaleg. lib. iv. cap. 29. ſhews, that Sukkah in Hebrew ſignifies a hole or cave; and Pliny, lib. vi. cap. 29. places the city of Succha on the ſhore of the Red Sea, in the country of the Troglodytes. Grotius, and ſome others, rather ſuppoſe theſe Sukkim, which were in the army of Shiſhack, king of Egypt, were a people that dwelt in tents, as the Arabian Scenites.

Scenites. Many of theſe Arabians dwelt in Arabia Petrea, and about Egypt, who neither cultivated their lands, nor built houſes.

TROPHIMUS, Τρόφιμος, well-educated, or brought up; from the Greek τρόφιμος, which is from τρέφω, to bring up, or educate.

TROPHIMUS, a diſciple of St. Paul, a Gentile by religion, and an Epheſian by birth. After St. Paul had converted him, he adhered conſtantly to him, nor quitted him ever after. He came from Epheſus to Corinth with the apoſtle, and accompanied him in his whole journey from Corinth to Jeruſalem, A. D. 58, Acts xx. 4. When St. Paul was in the temple there, the Jews laid hold of him, crying out, he hath brought Greeks into the temple, and hath polluted this holy place: this they ſaid, becauſe certain Jews of Epheſus having ſeen St. Paul in the city, accompanied by Trophimus, whom they looked upon as a Gentile, imagined that St. Paul had introduced him into the temple. Vide PAUL. It is very probable Trophimus followed him to Rome, and forſook him not in his bonds. It is pretended, that after the apoſtle had obtained his liberty, A. D. 63, he went into Spain; and paſſing through Gaul, he left Trophimus at Arles, as biſhop. See Baronius A. D. 62, ſect. 4. But this is very difficult to reconcile with what St. Paul writes to Timothy, 2 Tim. iv. 20. that he had left Trophimus ſick at Miletus. Trophimus muſt neceſſarily have returned to Aſia, about a year after St. Paul had left him at Arles. The Greeks keep April 14. in honour of Trophimus, and ſay his head was cut off by command of Nero, along with St. Paul. At Arles his feaſt is kept December 29.

TRUMPET. The Lord commanded Moſes to make two trumpets of beaten ſilver, for the purpoſe of calling the people together, when they were to decamp. Vide Numb. x. 2, 3, 4, 5, &c. "The prieſts the ſons of Aaron ſhall only have the privilege of ſounding the trumpets; and this ſhall be an immutable law throughout all your generations. They ſhall ſound when you go forth to war againſt your enemies; and the Lord your God ſhall remember you to ſuccour you. They ſhall alſo ſound when you are to keep your religious feſtivals; when you celebrate your ſolemn feaſts; when you offer your burnt-offerings, and your peace-offerings; and on the firſt day of every month." They alſo chiefly uſed theſe trumpets, to proclaim the beginning of the civil year, the beginning of the ſabbatical year, Levit. xxiii. 24. Numb. xxix. 1. and the beginning of the jubilee, Levit. xxv. 9, 10. Joſephus ſays, Antiq. lib. iii. cap. 11. that theſe trumpets were near a cubit long, and had a tube or pipe of the thickneſs of a common flute. Their mouths were no wider than juſt admitted to blow into them, and their ends were like thoſe of a modern trumpet. At firſt there were but two in the camp, afterwards they made a greater number. In the time of Joſhua there were ſeven, Joſh. iii. 4. At the dedication of the temple of Solomon there were ſix-ſcore prieſts that ſounded the trumpets, 2 Chron. v. 12. Joſephus, Antiq. lib. ii. cap. 8. affirms, that this prince made two hundred thouſand trumpets, as Moſes had commanded. I know not from whence he took this account, of ſo great a number of trumpets. [omit the word thouſand.]

Beſides the ſacred trumpets of the temple, whoſe uſe was reſtricted to the prieſts, even in war and in battle, there were others uſed by their generals, Judg. iii. 27. Ehud ſounded the trumpet, to aſſemble Iſrael againſt the Moabites, whoſe king Eglon he had lately ſlain. Gideon took a trumpet in his hand, and gave each of his people one, when he aſſaulted the Midianites, Judg. vii. 2, 16. Joab ſounded the trumpet, as a ſignal of retreat to his ſoldiers, in the battle againſt Abner, 2 Sam. ii. 28, and in that againſt Abſalom, 2 Sam. xviii. 16; and in the purſuit of Sheba the ſon of Bichri, 2 Sam. xx. 22; and there are many other inſtances.

The Feaſt of TRUMPETS: was kept on the firſt day of the ſeventh month of the ſacred year; which was the firſt month of the civil year: called Tizri; anſwering to the moon of September. The beginning of the year was proclaimed by ſound of trumpet: Levit. xxiii. 2. Numb. xxix. 1, 2, 3, 4, &c. This day was kept ſolemn; all ſervile buſineſs was forbid. They offered a ſolemn holocauſt, in the name of the whole nation; of a calf, two rams, and ſeven lambs, of the ſame year, with offerings of flour and wine, as uſual with theſe ſacrifices. Scripture does not mention the occaſion of appointing this feaſt. Theodoret, qu. 32, in Levit. believes, it was in memory of the thunder and lightning on Mount Sinai, when God gave the law. The Rabbins ſay, it was in remembrance of the deliverance of Iſaac, by the ſubſtitution of a ram.

At preſent the Jews are accuſtomed on this evening to wiſh one another a good year, to make better cheer than ordinary, and to ſound the trumpet thirty times ſucceſſively. Leo of Modena obſerves, Cerem. of the Jews, p. 3, cap. 5. that heretofore there was a diſpute among the Rabbins concerning the time at which the world began: ſome holding for ſpring, others for autumn. But the opinion prevailed that placed it in autumn; and upon this occaſion the Feaſt of Trumpets was founded; which is kept in autumn. During this feaſt, which laſts the two firſt days of the month, labour and buſineſs are ſuſpended. The Jews hold by tradition, that on this day God particularly judges the actions of the foregoing year, and diſpoſes the events of the year following. Wherefore, on the firſt days of the foregoing month, or at leaſt, eight days before the Feaſt of Trumpets, they generally apply themſelves to works of penitence, and mortification; and the evening before, many of them receive thirty-nine laſhes, by way of diſcipline.

On the firſt evening that begins the year, and which precedes the firſt day of Tizri, as they return from the ſynagogue they ſay to one another, May you be written in a good year; the other anſwers, And you alſo. Being returned home, they ſerve at table honey, and leavened bread, and whatever may betoken a happy and plentiful year. Some of them on the morning of theſe two feaſts go to the ſynagogue clothed in white, in token of purity and penitence. Among the German Jews, ſome wear the habit which they have appointed for their burial; and this as a mortification. This day they repeat in the ſynagogue ſeveral particular prayers, and benedictions; they take the Pentateuch very ſolemnly out of its cheſt, and read to five perſons the ſacrifice that was performed on this day: then they twenty times ſound a horn, ſometimes very ſlowly, and then very briſkly. They ſay it reminds them of the judgments of God, it intimidates ſinners, and induces them to repent. After prayers they return to their houſes, ſit down at table, and paſs the reſt of the day in hearing ſermons, and in other exerciſes of devotion; the two days of the feaſt are alike.

To prepare themſelves for the Feaſt of Trumpets, or for the beginning of the civil year, many Jews plunge themſelves into cold water, and as they deſcend in it they confeſs their ſins, and beat their breaſts. They plunge over head and ears, that they may appear entirely clean before God. They think that on this day God aſſembles his council, or his angels; and that he opens his books to judge all men. Three ſorts of books are opened; the book of life, for the juſt; the book of death, for the wicked; and the book of a middle ſtate, for ſuch as are neither entirely good, nor entirely bad. In the two books of life and of death, there are two kinds of pages; one for this life, the other for eternity. For it often happens, that the wicked are not puniſhed in this life according to their demerits; whereas the juſt ſuffer with ſeverity, as if they had incurred the anger of God. This conduct of God is the occaſion that no one can be ſure of his ſtate, but is uncertain, whether he is worthy to be loved or hated. As for the middling ones, they are not written down any where, as the Jews ſay; God ſtays till the day of expiation, which is the tenth of the year, to try if they will be converted. On this day their ſentence paſſes, whether for life or death.

TRUTH, Veritas, is uſed in ſeveral ſenſes in Scripture.

1. Truth is oppoſed to falſhood, to a lye, a miſtake, a deceit, e. g. None among you ſhall conſult the dead, to learn the truth from them; Deut. xviii. 11. and the Pſalmiſt, v. 9. ſpeaking of the wicked, the truth is not in their lips. And St. Paul, Rom. ix. 1. I ſpeak the truth in Chriſt, I lye not.
2. Truth is put for fidelity, ſincerity; punctuality in keeping promiſes. Generally to truth, taken in this ſenſe, is joined mercy or kindneſs: ſo Gen. xxiv. 27. Eliezer, the ſervant of Abraham, thanks God for ſhewing kindneſs and truth to his maſter Abraham: Mercy and Truth may alſo expreſs a ſtable, conſtant, and permanent mercy or kindneſs: the Lord be praiſed, who has favoured my Lord and maſter Abraham in ſo conſtant and uniform a manner.

Thoſe expreſſions, mercy and truth, are frequent in Scripture, Gen. xxiv. 29. And Gen. xlvii. 29. Jacob ſays to his ſon Joſeph, If now I have found grace in thy ſight, put, I pray thee, thy hand under my thigh, and deal kindly and truly with me; bury me not, I pray thee, in Egypt: You ſhall promiſe this favour, and you ſhall faithfully perform it. And Joſhua, ii. 14. the ſpies of the Iſraelites promiſed Rahab, to deal with her kindly and truly, that they would faithfully perform what they had promiſed. And 2 Samuel ii. 6. David ſent to tell the inhabitants of Jabeſh-Gilead; that the Lord would ſhew kindneſs and truth to them, for their piety in burying the bones of Saul; and that he himſelf would requite it to them. As this manner of ſpeaking occurs in almoſt every page of Scripture, in my opinion it may ſignify, that God will beſtow his kindneſs and favour on all thoſe to whom he promiſes mercy and truth; and that he will do this in a fixed and permanent manner.

To ſome God makes promiſes, but they are only conditional; on others, he confers favours, but they are only temporary; others receive his firſt bleſſings, but not final perſeverance. God made many promiſes to the Iſraelites, but on condition that they ſhould continue faithful to him: He gave the royal dignity to Saul, but it was only for a time: Solomon partook plentifully of his firſt favours, but it is doubted whether he had the gift of perſeverance. In this ſenſe God may be ſaid to have granted them his kindneſs, but not his truth. On the contrary, he granted both his mercy, or favour, and his truth, to David, in a particular manner, and in a more perfect manner ſtill to the Meſſiah. Vide Pſalm xl. 11. lvii 3 lxxxix. 33.

The Septuagint generally tranſlate the Hebrew word cheſed by juſtice, which the Vulgate renders mercy. Bleſſed be the Lord, who hath not withdrawn his juſtice and truth from my maſter. But in theſe paſſages, as in many others, the words mercy and juſtice are ſynonymous, even in the Hebrew.

Iſaiah deſires of the Lord, that peace and truth may be eſtabliſhed for his days: 2 Kings xx. 19. Iſaiah xxxix. 8. Heb. Shall there be peace and truth for my life? May I flatter myſelf, that God will ſuſpend the terrible effects of his vengeance till after my death?—Peace and truth here denote conſtant and continual proſperity. Jeremiah xxxiii. 6. uſes almoſt the ſame expreſſion: I will diſcover to them an effectual manner of prayer, to obtain peace and truth, or a fixed and durable peace. Otherwiſe, I will give them that ſolid happineſs they wiſh for. And Zechariah, viii. 19. Seek peace and truth, which relates to what he ſaid a little before, verſe 16. Judge in truth and peace; live in peace, and exerciſe juſtice over your brethren: let the judges and magiſtrates do juſtice to their inferiors, in truth and equity, with deſire of preſerving peace. Or elſe, judicium veritatis & pacis, implies judgment that procures peace to them, conſtant proſperity. Or, judicium verum & perfectum: Judgment attended by perfect equity. The Hebrew word ſhalom, peace, ſtands alſo for perfection.

Jeſus Chriſt is the eternal and eſſential truth, John xiv. 6. I am the way, the truth, and the life. 1 John v. 6. Even as Chriſt is true. He is the Word, full of grace and truth. He has granted and communicated to us a plenitude of both of theſe. Grace and truth came by Jeſus Chriſt. He has ſent to his apoſtles the ſpirit of truth, John i. 16, 17.

The word of truth, the way of truth, the knowledge of truth, to walk in the truth, to ſpeak in truth, to give teſtimony to the truth, in the ſacred authors of the New Teſtament, import the truth of the goſpel, the holy truths of Chriſtianity.

The Pſalmiſt ſays, Pſal. xxxvi. 5. lvii. 11. that the mercy of the Lord reaches to the heavens, and his truth to the clouds; to expreſs their greatneſs, immenſity, and extent; and that all creatures partake of them. Pſalm lxxxv. 10, 11. Mercy and Truth are met together; Righteouſneſs and Peace have kiſſed each other. Truth ſhall ſpring out of the earth, and Righteouſneſs ſhall look down from heaven: he deſcribes the happineſs of Judah, after the return from the captivity; and in a more exalted ſenſe, the advantages of the church after the coming of the Meſſiah. Mercy and juſtice, peace and truth, in theſe places may be conſidered as ſynonymous terms. In In Judah mercy, juſtice, peace, and truth, ſhall be ſeen to flouriſh, a conſtant and permanent mercy, a full and perfect juſtice. Certain it is, that juſtice is often put for clemency, benignity, mercy.

In Pſalm lxxxix. David in ſeveral manners extols the truth of God, or his fidelity to his promiſes. It is a ſong of thankſgiving for the mercies God had vouchſafed to the houſe of David. The fruitful invention of the prophetical poet ſuggeſts great variety of expreſſions to declare the greatneſs of God's favour, and the effectualneſs of his promiſes. "I will for ever ſhew forth his mercies; I will publiſh his truth from generation to generation.—His mercy is founded in heaven, he has confirmed his truth.—His truth ſhall be magnified in the congregation of the ſaints.—His power is infinite, and his truth ſurrounds it on all ſides.—Juſtice and equity are the ſupporters of his throne.—Mercy and truth go before him.—His mercy and his truth ſhall be always diſplayed to David." All theſe different expreſſions and turns of language amount to this, his mercy prevents and promiſes, his truth executes and performs his kind intentions.

TRYPHÆNA, Τρύφαινα, delicious, delicate; from τρύφα.

TRYPHENA and TRYPHOSA, Chriſtian women, whom St. Paul mentions, Rom. xvi. 12. Salute Tryphena and Tryphoſa, who labour in the Lord. Much mention is made of theſe two women in the hiſtory of St. Thecla; but as this hiſtory is corrupt, it can give no authority to the actions of theſe holy women. The Roman martyrology places their feaſts Nov. 10. It is ſaid they went to Rome to be ſerviceable to the ſaints, and to obtain a crown of martyrdom; but they returned into the eaſt, where their blood was ſpilt for Jeſus Chriſt.

TRYPHON, Τρύφων, from the ſame τρύφα.

TRYPHON, a king of Syria. See DIODOTUS, and 1 Macc. xi. 39, 54. xii. 42, 49. xiii. 1, 12. xv. 10, 15.

TRYPHOSA, Τρύφωσα, from the ſame τρύφα.

TUBAL, תבל, θοβὲλ, the earth, the world; from תבל thebel: otherwiſe, that is carried, or led; from יבל jabel: otherwiſe, confuſion; from בלל balal.

TUBAL, or Thubal, fifth ſon of Japheth. Scripture commonly joins together Tubal and Meſhech, which makes it thought that they peopled countries bordering on each other. The Chaldee interpreters, by Tubal and Meſhech underſtand Italy and Aſia, or rather Auſonia. Joſephus thinks Iberia and Cappadocia. St. Jerom affirms, that Tubal repreſents the Spaniards, heretofore called Iberians. Bochart is very copious to prove, that by Meſhech and Tubal are intended the Muſcovites and the Tibarenians. See Gen. x. 2.

TUBAL-CAIN, תובל־קין, θεβὲλ, worldly poſſeſſion, or poſſeſſor of the world; from תבל thebel, the world, or the earth, and קנה canah, poſſeſſion: or who is jealous of confuſion; from קנא kinna, to be jealous, and בלל balal, confuſion.

TUBAL-CAIN, or Thubal-cain, ſon of Lamech the Bigamous, and of Zillah, Gen. iv. 22. Scripture tells us, he was the father and inventor, or maſter, of the art of forging and managing iron, and of making all kinds of iron-work. It has been thought that he gave occaſion to the Vulcan of the Heathens. The name Tubal-cain, is not very remote from Vulcan. [This etymology muſt not be depended on.]

TUBINS, or Tubianians, or Tubienians, Τυβιανοι, 1 Macc. v. 13. See Tob.

TURTLE, a clean bird often mentioned in Scripture. They might offer in ſacrifice either turtles, or young pigeons. Theſe ſacrifices were appointed in favour of the poor, who could not afford more ſubſtantial ſacrifices. Before the law, Abraham offered, Gen. xv. 9. birds, which were a turtle, and a pigeon; and when he divided the other victims, he left the birds entire. Moſes appointed, Levit. xii. 6, 7, 8. for a woman's purification after child-birth, if ſhe had not wherewithal to offer a lamb, ſhe ſhould bring two turtles, or two young pigeons. The Holy Virgin did ſo at her purification, Luke ii. 24.

The Nazarites offered two turtles, or two young pigeons, one to be ſacrificed for ſin, and the other for a burnt-offering, when, during the time of their Nazariteſhip, they had been accidentally defiled by the preſence of a dead body, Numb. vi 10. When a leper was poor, and could not afford the larger ſacrifices, the law appointed for his purification two turtles, or two young pigeons, one for a ſin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering; Levit. xiv. 22. There were other pollutions to purify from which turtles were offered. Vide Birds, Purifications, &c.

Jeremiah viii. 7. ſays, the ſtork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times, and the turtle, and the crane, and the ſwallow obſerve the time of their coming. And indeed the turtle is a bird of paſſage, as well as the ſwallow, and the ſtork: the ſpouſe in the Canticles, compares his bride to the turtle.

[TUTOR, a perſon who has the care of a child or children for a time: uſually one who is not their natural father, but a hireling. This office is very important, but it is only temporary, it leads the young mind toward maturity, but when the time of that maturity is arrived, and youth is advanced to manhood, tutorage ceaſes. This has ſerved the apoſtle for a ſimile, in which he compares the law of Moſes to a tutor, Gal. iv. 2.]

TYCHICUS, Τυχικὸς, caſual, by chance; from τύχη, fortune.

TYCHICUS, a diſciple of St. Paul, employed by the apoſtle, to carry his letters to ſeveral churches. He was of the province of Aſia, and accompanied St. Paul, A. D. 58, in his journey from Corinth to Jeruſalem; Acts xx. 4. He carried the epiſtle to the Coloſſians, written A. D. 61; that to the Epheſians, written A. D. 65; and the firſt to Timothy, written A. D. 64. St. Paul did not ſend him merely to carry his letters, but to learn the ſtate of the churches, and to bring him an account of them. Wherefore he calls him his dear brother, a faithful miniſter of the Lord, and his companion in the ſervice of God. Epheſ. vi. 21, 22. Coloſ. iv. 7, 8. He had thoughts alſo of ſending him into Crete, to preſide there in the abſence of Titus, Tit. iii. 12. It is thought alſo, that he was deputed to Epheſus, while Timothy ſhould be at Rome, when he carried a letter to the Epheſians from this apoſtle. The Greeks celebrate the feaſt of St. Tychicus December 8 or 9, and give him the title of one of the ſeventy diſciples, and biſhop of Colophon in the province of Aſia. Uſuard, Ado, and other martyrologiſts, mark his feaſt at Paphos in Cyprus, April 19. Uſuard gives him only the title of deacon.

TYMPANUM, a timbrel, or inſtrument of muſic, often mentioned in Scripture. The Hebrews call it תוף toph; and, I ſuppoſe, under this name they comprehended all kinds of drums, tabors, and timbrels. I do not find the Hebrews uſed it in their wars, but only at their public rejoicings; and it was commonly put into the hands of women. After the paſſage of the Red Sea, Miriam, the ſiſter of Moſes took a tympanum, or timbrel, and began to play and dance with the women. Exod. xv. 20. The daughter of Jepthah came to meet her father with timbrels, and other muſical inſtruments. Judg. xi. 34. It was probably of the ſame kind as thoſe ancient tympana, which are put into the hands of Cybele the mother of the gods. Tympana habet Cybele, & ſunt mihi tympana cribri.

The ancient marbles generally repreſent Cybele with a tympanum. They uſed alſo to play on this inſtrument the feaſt of Bacchus. Vide Plates of Muſical Inſtruments, Plate III, No. 8.

II. TYMPANUM, an inſtrument of puniſhment; this occurs in the Greek of Hebrews, xi. 35. Ετυμπανίσθησαν diſtenti ſunt. Both ancient and modern interpreters are divided about the ſenſe of this word. Some have explained it of the treſſel, or chevalet, a puniſhment frequent in antiquity, but very little known at this day. St. Chryſoſtom, and the other Greek interpreters that have followed him, and who ought to have underſtood the meaning of this word better than the Latins, thought the apoſtle, in this place, alluded to the death of John the Baptiſt, and to that of St. James, who were both beheaded. Heſychius, Suidas and Oecumenius, think the verb tympanizin ſignifies to flea alive. Others, more modern, take it in a generical ſenſe, for all kinds of capital puniſhment and of violent death. And it is true that the Greek verb, is ſometimes uſed in this import.

But we think the apoſtle, in this place, means the baſtinado, or puniſhment of the whip, and that he alludes to the cruelties exerciſed on old Eleazar, and the ſeven brethren Maccabees. 2 Macc. vi. 19. Ἐλεάζαρος ἀνθαῖρετως επὶ τὸ τύμπανον προσῆγεν. Verſe 28. Τοσαῦτα δὲ εἰπὼν επὶ τὸ τύμπανον εὐθέως ἦλθε, ſpeaking of the martyrdom of Eleazar, ſays, that he went to the tympanum, and being at the point of expiring under the blows of the rods, he ſaid, groaning; "the Lord, who knows all things, knows this, that though I could eſcape death, yet I chuſe to ſuffer theſe violent pains in my body, being torn with the rods." St. Paul ſeems plainly to allude to this paſſage, when he ſays, ſome have ſuffered the puniſhment of the tympanum, not deſiring to reſcue themſelves from this torture, in hopes of a better reſurrection. The ſeven brethren Maccabees were alſo tormented with ſtripes and rods. The ſcholiaſt of Ariſtophanes, in Plutum, ſpeaking of the puniſhment of the tympanum, ſays, Τύμπανα ξύλα ἐφ' οἷς ἐπυμπάνιζον, that they called tympana thoſe inſtruments of wood, upon which criminals were whipt as were condemned by the judges to ſuch beating. This puniſhment is ſtill uſed in the eaſt. See PUNISHMENTS.

[TYPE, TYPICAL. Theſe words are not frequently uſed in Scripture; but what they ſignify is ſuppoſed to be implied very frequently: and hence they become entitled to a place in this work. We uſually conſider a type as an example, pattern, or general ſimilitude to a perſon, event, or thing which is to come: and herein it differs from a repreſentation, memorial, or commemoration of an event, &c. which is paſt. For inſtance, the ſacred ceremony of the paſſover among the Jews, with its bitter herbs, its lamb ſlain, &c. was a commemoration, or kind of repetition of what their fathers had originally tranſacted at their Exodus from Egypt. The ſame may be ſaid of their dwelling in booths, &c. Nay, I apprehend I am juſtified, in my private opinion, that ſacrifices themſelves are commemorative; and being originally inſtituted after the firſt great tranſgreſſion, they perpetually revived in Adam, and in his poſterity, whenever they were offered, the recollection of his firſt guilt, and of the victim which died inſtead of himſelf, on that occaſion.

In the nature of commemorative ordinances, Jews and Chriſtians are agreed: but Chriſtians ſay further that many, or moſt, if not all the ſacred inſtitutions among the Jews were figures, examples, hints, or notices of what was to happen under a more perfect diſpenſation. Hence a ſacrifice whoſe blood was ſhed before God, prefigured a more noble, more dignified blood which ſhould be ſhed before God, at ſome future time: that as ſuch blood was ſhed to reconcile man and God, to mediate between thoſe otherwiſe diſtant parties, ſo the nobler blood ſhould mediate, with the greateſt ſucceſs, in reſtoring amity between God and man. They ſay alſo, that the dwelling in tabernacles, or booths, prefigured the appearance of a great perſonage, whoſe reſidence in human nature was to him, like a temporary dwelling; as much below his true dignity, as a mere booth or hut is below the dignity of a palace. In like manner, the paſſover lamb was an inſtance of a ſacrifice, which exempted from evil, while it alſo prefigured a nobler deliverer (and deliverance) from divine wrath, and anger, than could poſſibly be accompliſhed in the exemption of Iſrael from the ſtroke of the deſtroying angel which ſmote the firſt-born of the Egyptians, — a nobler deliverance from the moral tyranny of ſin, than that of the Iſraelites was from the oppreſſive dominion of Pkaraoh: which deliverance is accompliſhed by the blood of "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the ſins of the world."

Types alſo differ from ſigns, in that ſigns were

occaſional, and did not look backward, but forward: uſually to a point of time but little diſtant, in the firſt place, though ultimately to a much more diſtant event, of whoſe accompliſhment the accompliſhment of the ſign was a token, an earneſt, and in ſome ſenſe a proof: as it manifeſted a divine interpoſition in the ſubject to which the ſign related. So, when Ezekiel, at a great diſtance from Jeruſalem, brought out his goods, and digged through his houſe, he ſignified the fate of Jeruſalem: ſo, when Iſaiah was ordered to beget a child (a ſon) by a young woman then a virgin, this being accompliſhed was a ſign of a much greater birth to be expected in the perſon of Emmanuel, to whom the prophet expreſsly directs the reference.

If this be correct, what ſhould prevent types alſo from looking forward? If it pleaſed God to encourage the hope and faith of his people by occaſional ſigns, why not alſo by laſting and permanent [ſigns] types? Why may not the ſame ideas be conveyed every day, every year, on public occaſions, as now and then, in a leſs conſpicuous manner? But, that may be true of public ſervices under a general idea, which it would be imprudent and unadviſeable to apply to every minute circumſtance attending them. E. gr. The holy of holies in the Jewiſh temple may be a figure emblematic of heaven, the reſidence of God; but it will not therefore be prudent to conſider whatever may at any rate, and by any conſtruction bear a reference to the holy of holies, as therefore aſſimilated to a correſpondent antitype in heaven. I admire the wit, the ingenuity of many of thoſe references which occur in ſome ſyſtems of divinity, but admiration differs from approbation. When I read that the bellies of the pillars in Solomon's temple were decorated with lilly work, I am by no means certain that "the typical meaning was to denote that miniſters being the pillars of the goſpel church, and lillies being emblems of the care of Providence, therefore goſpel miniſters ſhould leave to Providence the care of their bellies." Whatever I think of the doctrine, I do not think this was the intention of the ſacred writer, or of the Holy Spirit, in recording this paſſage.

Whether certain hiſtories which happened in ancient time, were deſigned as types of future events, I do not preſume to determine: but (1) I think it is likely that ſuch hiſtories are recorded, being ſelected from among many which had occurred, as might be uſeful leſſons, &c. &c. to ſucceeding ages. (2) That there being a general conformity in the diſpenſations of Providence, and grace, to different perſons, though in different ages, inſtances of former diſpenſations may very uſefully be held up to the view of later times, and may encourage, or may check, may direct, or may controul, thoſe whoſe circumſtances, &c. may be ſimilar to what is recorded, though their times and their places may be widely ſeparated. We have New Teſtament authority for this practice.

Types may be conſidered as differing in degrees of that clearneſs which determines their reference to their antitype: ſome may be evident, and palpable; others more obſcure: ſome may be referable in a general or leading ſenſe, or under ſome particular view, but, if only that general (or that particular) view was originally deſigned, it is not for us to particularize every diviſion, every ramification ſeen under every aſpect, and tinged with every hue which the multiplication-glaſs of a fertile imagination may offer to our inſpection, or may induce us to admire.

The Jewiſh literati delighted in the ſtudies and the application of learning derived from the types: they even thought certain letters, and their poſitions, were of the nature of types; hence aroſe their Cabala: and it muſt be owned, that the Chriſtian fathers vied with them in this mode of treating Scripture; but the fallacy of it, as to any reliance to be placed on it, appears, from conſidering, that ſcarce any two commentators agree in their explanations and inferences, when ſuch principles are the baſis of their remarks.

Types ſhould be referred from a leſs to a greater, as from the death of a beaſt to the death of a man: from a lower to a higher, as from earth to heaven: from time preſent to futurity, as from this world to the eternal ſtate: from leſſer degrees of perfection to more abſolute, as from man to God.—If the ſacrifice of a lamb availed to reſtore peace, and to conciliate favour, the ſacrifice of a man in whom dwelt all the fulneſs of the Godhead, muſt be infinitely more available to mediate reconciliation: if pardon and exemption from puniſhment in this world be deſirable, juſtification and deliverance from eternal miſery is infinitely more deſirable: if the tender feelings of a father in this unequal ſtate, and amidſt all the imperfections of the ſocial principles be energetic, what muſt be the paternal affections of the great Father of all, the Father of our ſpirits! Whatever is divine is infinite, whatever is infinite eludes our comprehenſion, and mocks our panting toil, however urged by the moſt vehement imagination: under this reflection, types may be uſeful by offering a ſimilitude adapted to our powers, but but when that which is perfect is come, that which is imperfect, and partial, that which is feeble and unſatisfactory, ſhall be done away.]

TYPHONICUS, Τυφώνικος, a turbulent, or impetuous wind; from the Greek τύφω, that is inflamed, or that blows violently.

TYRANNUS, Τύραννος, prince.

TYRANNUS. We read Acts xix. 9. that St. Paul being at Epheſus, withdrew from the ſynagogue, but taught every day in the ſchool of one Tyrannus. It is enquired, who this Tyrannus was? Some think him a prince, or great lord, who accommodated St. Paul with his houſe, in which to receive and inſtruct his diſciples. But the generality conclude, that Tyrannus was a converted Gentile, a friend of St. Paul's, to whom he withdrew. The name of one Tyrannus may be applied, either to a man of this name, or to ſome ſovereign prince. But, beſides, that the name Tyrannus was then become ſo odious, that it would not have been given to a man who deſerved only what was good to be ſaid of him, without ſome kind of mitigation, ſome Greek manuſcripts have Tyrannios inſtead of Tyrannos. Other copies intimate, that he taught from the fifth to the tenth hour. We find in hiſtory more men than one by the name of Tyrannus. [This name was probably a family name; as King, or Lord, &c. is among ourſelves: but the name does not imply the dignity of king, or duke, or earl, &c.]

TYRANT, prince: or, that governs; from the Greek τυραννὸς, that reigns or governs.

TYRANT. This word is taken in an odious ſenſe in moſt modern languages, for a prince who abuſes his authority to oppreſs his ſubjects, and to diſturb his neighbours. But in the Greek and Latin, tyrannus is often taken in a good ſenſe, and formerly there was no diſtinction or difference of ſignification between tyrannus and rex: Nihil intererat apud majores inter tyrannum & regem. Servius in Æneid. lib. iv. Afterwards, the word tyrant became a word of reproach and deteſtation, eſpecially in free cities.

The ſacred authors ſometimes uſe the word tyrannus, to expreſs a prince, or king. So Eſth. vi. 9. Primus de regiis principibus ac tyrannis. The Hebrew reads it פרתמים parthumim, which ſeems to anſwer to the Greek word Παραλίμι& paratimios, an illuſtrious man. We read the ſame word parthumim, in Daniel, i. 3. tranſlated tyrannus in the Vulgate. In Daniel, iii. 2, 3. we read in the Hebrew, gedabræi, inſtead of tyrannus, as in the Greek and Latin. In Job, xxxiv. 19. tyrannus anſwers to the Hebrew word Shar, a prince; and chap. xxxv. 9. it anſwers to Rabbim, great men. In Ezekiel xxiii. 23. Tyrannus is put for the Hebrew word Shuah. In Habakkuk i. 10. Tyrannus is put for the Hebrew word Raſen, which ſignifies a lord, a governor; and is probably the ſame as Saren or Suren, a great lord. I ſhall not ſpeak of the books that are written in Greek; as the Book of Wiſdom, Eccleſiaſticus, and the Maccabees, where the word Tyrannus is uſed ſometimes in a good ſenſe, and ſometimes in a bad ſenſe; as by other Greek authors.

TYRE, צור, τύρος; Heb. Sor, or Tzur, ſtrength, rack, ſharp.

TYRE, or Tyrus, a famous city of Phœnicia. Its Hebrew name is צור Tſor, or צר Zor, which ſignifies a rock. Aulus Gellius, lib. xiv. cap. 6. ſays, its ancient name was Sarra. [q. from Zor?] Plautus, in Trucul. calls it Sara.

Purpuram tibi ex Sara attuli.

And Silius Italicus, lib. xv. puts Sarranus murex for Tyrius:

Sarrano murice fulgens.

The city of Tyre was allotted to the tribe of Aſher, (Joſh. xix. 29. מבצר צר Urbem munitiſſimam Tyrum, Vulg.) with the other maritime cities of the ſame coaſt; but it does not appear that the Aſherites ever drove out the Canaanites. Yet very learned men maintain, that in Joſhua's time Tyre was not built, and that Mibzar-zor, Urbem munitiſſimam Tyrum, [Strong Tyre, Tyre the great,] is not the city of Tyre. Iſaiah, xxiii. 12. calls Sidon the daughter of Tyre, i. e. a colony from it. Homer never ſpeaks of Tyre, but only of Sidon. Joſephus, Antiq. lib. viii. cap. 2. ſays, that Tyre was built not above two hundred and forty years before the temple of Solomon; which would be A. M. 2760, two hundred years after Joſhua. Herodotus, lib. ii. cap. 44. ſays, that it was affirmed by the prieſts of Tyre, that the temple of Hercules in this city was built at the ſame time as the city itſelf, which was 2,300 years before the time of his writing; (A. M. 3596.) By which account Tyre muſt have been built 656 years before the deluge; which by no means can be admitted. [Query, ſhould we read 1,300?]

But there ſeems to be a way of reconciling theſe variations, by allowing two cities of Tyre; the old one known to the ancients by the name of Palæ-Tyrus; the other a later city, called only Tzor, or Tyre. The firſt was built on the Continent, and here ſtood the temple of Hercules, of whoſe antiquity the prieſts of Tyre ſo extravagantly boaſted to Herodotus. In this temple the Tyrians would have had Alexander ſacrificed, when he ſent them word he deſired to come into their city, under pretence of offering ſacrifices to Hercules. Quint. Curt. lib. iv. cap. 5. Juſtin. lib. xi. cap. 1. Tyrum ſe iro velle ad vota Herculi reddenda dixit. Legati reſponderunt, eſſe Templum Herculis extra urbem, in ea ſede quam Palæ-Tyron, ſive veterem Tyrum ipſi vocant, ibique in antiquiore templo rectius id eum eſſe facturum, &c. The other Tyre was in an iſland, oppoſite the old one, from which it was divided but by a narrow ſlip of the ſea. Pliny ſays, lib. v. cap. 19. not above ſeven hundred paces. Alexander the Great filled up this ſpace, in order to take the city; and the iſland continued joined to the Continent in Pliny's time: Tyrus quondam Inſula prælto mari ſeptingentis paſſibus diviſa: nunc vero Alexandri oppugnantis operibus continens.

Joſhua therefore muſt be underſtood of the ancient Tyre. The new one was not built, even in the time of Solomon; there was only a temple in the iſland, dedicated to Jupiter Olympius. Dius, and Menander the Epheſian, apud Joſeph. contra Appion. lib. i. who wrote the Phœnician hiſtory, relate, that Hiram, the friend of Solomon, joined to the city of Tyre the temple of Hercules, which ſtood by itſelf in the iſland, by a mole formed by throwing earth, &c. into the ſea. It is true, that when Hiram wrote to Solomon, he aſked corn of him; becauſe, ſays he, we have need of it, living in an iſland wherein our city is built. But there is great probability that this circumſtance was added by Joſephus, ſince we read the ſame letters in Eupolemus, Euſeb. præpar. lib. x. cap. 33, 34. in a very different ſtyle, and where this circumſtance is not found. There are ſtill ſeen many traces of the ancient Tyre, as large ciſterns, and the remains of an aqueduct, which conveyed the water from the main land into the iſland. This iſland was 22 ſtadia, or 3190 paces in circumference, and the old Tyre was 19000 paces.

Menander of Epheſus relates, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. ix. cap. ult. that Shalmaneſer, king of Aſſyria, ſubdued all Phœnicia. For the inhabitants of Sidon, of Acco, and of ſome other cities, having renounced their alliance with the Tyrians, and having ſurrendered to the king of Aſſyria, Shalmaneſer made war againſt the Tyrians, with a fleet of ſixty ſhips, and eight hundred rowers. The Tyrians had but twelve ſhips, yet they obtained the victory, diſperſing the king's fleet, and taking five hundred priſoners. Shalmaneſer was then obliged to return to Nineveh, but he left his land forces before Tyre, who took poſſeſſion of the waters of the river, and of the aqueducts. This continuing for five years, the Tyrians were forced to dig wells in their own city. Uſher places this expedition of Shalmaneſer A. M. 3287, under the reign of Hezekiah, king of Judah, ante A. D. 717.

Ezekiel, chap. xxvii, xxviii. deſcribes at length the ſiege of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar, A. M. 3419, ante A. D. 385. The learned are not agreed, whether he ſpeaks of old or new Tyre. St. Jerom, in loc. & in Amos i. thinks it to be new Tyre, becauſe he ſays Nebuchadnezzar joined the iſle to the continent, by earth, ſtones, and wood, which he caſt into the water. Marſham, Periſonius, and ſome others, think, on the contrary, that it was old Tyre. However this might be, Nebuchadnezzar ruined the city of Tyre; and the prophets ſhew clearly enough that it was never rebuilt, Marſham. Canon. Chron. Sæcul. xviii. p. 578. This cannot be ſtrictly underſtood but of old Tyre: for new Tyre flouriſhed afterwards, long ſince Nebuchadnezzar. It even recovered itſelf, after its fall by Alexander.

Iſaiah ſays, xxiii. 15, 17, 18. It ſhall come to paſs in that day, that Tyre ſhall be forgotten ſeventy years, according to the days of one king; after the end of ſeventy years ſhall Tyre ſing as an harlot. And it ſhall come to paſs after the end of ſeventy years, that the Lord will viſit Tyre, and ſhe ſhall turn to her hire, and ſhall commit fornication with the kingdoms of the world upon the face of the earth. And her merchandize, and her hire ſhall be holineſs to the Lord, it ſhall not be treaſured nor laid up; for her merchandize ſhall be for them that dwell before the Lord, to eat ſufficiently, and for durable cloathing. It is not eaſy to fix either the beginning or the end of theſe ſeventy years of oblivion of the city of Tyre. For if we put its beginning at the taking of this city by Nebuchadnezzar, or that by Alexander the Great, we muſt take the word oblivion, in an unuſual ſenſe, ſince we read that Nebuchadnezzar left Ithobal for king of Tyre, Joſeph. cont. Appion. lib. i. and that Alexander left therein Abdalonymus, or Ballonymus, or Strato; for all theſe names are found in the ancients, Diodor. Sicul. Juſtin. &c. and that theſe princes and their ſucceſſors reigned there a long time. Nor do we perceive that the Tyrians, before the time of Jeſus Chriſt, ſhewed any zeal for the Lord, or for his worſhip. Therefore to reconcile theſe prophecies, it muſt be ſuppoſed, that when the prophets ſpeak of the total deſtruction of Tyre, they mean the ancient Tyre, which was never rebuilt: and that when they foretel the re-eſtabliſhment of the ſame city, they muſt be underſtood of the New one, which became very flouriſhing, and roſe ſuperior to its misfortunes.

And

And finally, that when it embraced the Chriſtian religion, it offered to the Lord the fruits of its labours and traffic. In the time of St. Paul, there was a great number of believers in Tyre, Acts xxi. 3, 4, &c. and afterwards the church of Tyre became very famous. It afforded a great number of martyrs for the Chriſtian faith, and ſeveral illuſtrious biſhops; councils have been held there.

TYTHES. We have nothing more ancient concerning tythes, than what we find Gen. xiv. 20. that Abraham gave tythes to Melchiſedech, king of Salem, of all the booty he had taken from the enemy. Jacob imitated this piety of his grandfather, when he vowed to the Lord the tythe of all the ſubſtance he might acquire in Meſopotamia, Gen. xxviii. 22. Under the law, Moſes ordained, All the tythe of the land, whether of the ſeed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's; it is holy unto the Lord. And if a man will at all redeem ought of his tythes, he ſhall add thereto the fifth part thereof. And concerning the tythe of the herd, or of the ſlock, even of whatſoever paſſeth under the rod, the tenth ſhall be holy unto the Lord, Levit. xxvii. 30, 31, 32.

The Phariſees, in the time of Jeſus Chriſt, to diſtinguiſh themſelves by a more ſcrupulous obſervance of the law, not content with paying tythe of the grain and fruits growing in the fields, they alſo paid tythe of pulſe and herbs growing in their gardens, which was more than the law required. Our Saviour did not diſapprove of this exactneſs; but he blames them for their hypocriſy and pride in it, Mat. xxiii. 23. Luke xi. 42. We read alſo in the Talmud, Seder. Serain Maſſec. that whatever is eaten, or laid up in reſerve, and which is produced from the earth, is liable to firſt-fruits and tythes.

Tythes were taken from what remained, after the offerings and firſt-fruits were paid. They brought the tythes to the Levites in the city of Jeruſalem, as appears by Joſephus and Tobit, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. iv. cap. 8. Tob. i. 6. The Levites ſet apart the tenth part of their tythes for the prieſt (for the prieſts did not receive them immediately from the people) and the Levites were not to enjoy the tythes they had received, before they had given the prieſts ſuch a part as the law aſſigned them.

Of thoſe nine parts that remained to the proprietors, after the tythe was paid to the Levites, they took another tenth part, which was either ſent to Jeruſalem in kind, or, if that was too far, they ſent the value in money, adding thereto a fifth from the whole, as the Rabbins inform us, Vide Lyran. Deut. xxvi. 12. This tenth part was applied toward celebrating the feſtivals in the temple; and was nearly reſembled by the Agapæ, or love-feaſts, of the firſt Chriſtians. Thus are thoſe words of Deuteronomy, xiv. 22, 23. underſtood by the Rabbins: Thou ſhalt truly tithe all the increaſe of thy ſeed, that the field bringeth forth year by year. And thou ſhalt eat before the Lord thy God, in the place which he ſhall chuſe to place his name there, the tythe of thy corn, of thy wine, and of thy oil, and the firſtlings of thy herds and of thy flocks: that thou mayeſt learn to fear the Lord thy God always. Joſephus alſo ſpeaks of theſe feaſts which were made in the temple, and in the holy city, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. iv. cap. 8.

Tobit ſays, i. 6. that every three years he paid punctually his tythe to ſtrangers and proſelytes. This was probably becauſe there were neither prieſts, nor Levites, in the city where he dwelt. Moſes ſpeaks of this laſt kind of tythe, Deut. xiv. 28. xxvi. 12. At the end of three years thou ſhalt bring forth all the tythe of thine increaſe the ſame year, and ſhalt lay it up within thy gates. And the Levite, (becauſe he hath no part nor inheritance with thee,) and the ſtranger, and the fatherleſs, and the widow, which are within thy gates, ſhall come, and ſhall eat and be ſatisfied; that the Lord thy God may bleſs thee in all the work of thine hand which thou doſt. We think this third tythe not to be different from the ſecond already noticed, except that in the third year it was not brought to the temple, but was uſed on the ſpot by every one in the city of his habitation. Therefore, properly ſpeaking, there were only two ſorts of tythes, 1. that which was given to the Levites and prieſts, 2. that which was applied to feaſts of charity, either in the temple of Jeruſalem, or in other cities.

Samuel tells the children of Iſrael, that their king would take the tenth part of their ſeed, and of their vineyards, and give to his officers and his ſervants. He will take the tenth of your ſheep, and ye ſhall be his ſervants, 1 Sam. viii. 15, 16. Yet it does not clearly appear from the hiſtory of the Jews, that they regularly paid any tythe to their princes. But the manner in which Samuel expreſſes himſelf ſeems to inſinuate, that it was looked on as a common right among the kings of the Eaſt.

At this day the Jews no longer pay tythe, at leaſt they do not think themſelves obliged to do it, except thoſe that are ſettled in the territory of Jeruſalem, and the ancient Judea, Leo of Modena, page 1, cap. 12. For there are few Jews now that have any lands of their own, or any flocks. They only give ſomething for the redemption of the firſt-born, to thoſe whom they they think are deſcended from the prieſts, or Levites. However, we are aſſured, that ſuch among the Jews as would be thought very ſtrict, and religious, give the tenth part of their income to the poor.

Chriſtians alſo pay tythe of the produce of their eſtates to the miniſters of the Lord. But this is not by virtue of any law, either of Jeſus Chriſt, or his apoſtles. Our Saviour has commanded nothing in this affair; only, when he ſent his apoſtles to preach in the cities of Iſrael, he forbad them to carry either purſe, or proviſions, with them, but to enter the houſes of thoſe who were willing to receive them, and to eat what ſhould be ſet before them. For, as he adds, the labourer is worthy of his hire, and of his maintenance, Matth. x. 10. Luke x. 7, 8. And St. Paul determines, that he who receives inſtruction, ſhould adminiſter ſome of his good things to him who gives it, Galat. vi. 6. It is agreeable to nature and reaſon, that they who wait at the altar ſhould live by the altar; and who ever undertook a warfare at his own expence? 1 Cor. ix. 13.

In the infancy of the church, the miniſters lived only on the alms and oblations of the faithful. Afterwards, lands and fixed revenues were given to churches, and to their miniſters. Good people began early to give them a certain portion of their ſubſtance, which was called tythe, in imitation of that which was paid to the prieſts of the old covenant, though every one gave only as his devotion inclined him; without any expreſs obligation, either as to quantity, or quality. Laſtly, the biſhops, in concurrence with ſecular princes, made laws for this, and obliged Chriſtians to give to eccleſiaſtics the tythe of their revenues, and of the fruits of the earth. As theſe regulations were not all made at the ſame time, nor in an uniform manner, we cannot preciſely fix the time of the eſtabliſhment of tythes. But they were paid as far back as the ſixth century; not every where, nor under the ſame obligations. Origen thinks, Homil. xi. in Numeros, that the laws of Moſes concerning tythes and firſt-fruits are not repealed by the goſpel, but that they ought to be obſerved under the new law. F. Paul, in his Treatiſe of Benefices, obſerves, that before the eighth and ninth century, they did not pay tythes in the Eaſt, or in Africa. But thoſe who have treated this matter with greater accuracy, ſhew that tythes had been paid from the earlieſt time.

The moſt barbarous nations, the heathen, Greeks and Romans, out of a principle of religion, common to all men, often dedicated their tythes to their gods. Some made it a ſtanding obligation, others practiſed it on particular occaſions; or by the impulſe of a tranſient devotion. The Arabian merchants who traded in ſpices, durſt not ſell any till they had paid the tythe to their god Sabis, Plin. lib. xii. cap. 14. The Perſians were very exact in offering to their gods the tythe of the ſpoils they had taken from their enemies, Xenoph. Cyropæd. lib. iv. v. vii. The Scythians themſelves ſent their tythes to Apollo, Solin. cap. 27. The Carthaginians were uſed to ſend to Tyre, of which they were a colony, the tythe of their profits; Mela, lib. ii. cap. 5. and they ſent to Hercules Tyrius the tenth of the ſpoils they took in Sicily. Diodor. lib. xx. Juſtin. lib. xviii. The ſhip that brought the uſual tythe of the Carthaginians to Tyre, happened to arrive there a little before Alexander begun the ſiege of that city. Q. Curt. lib. iv. cap. 2. When Piſiſtratus wrote to Solon, to perſuade him to return to Athens, he told him, that every one there paid the tythe of his goods for the offering of ſacrifices to the gods. Laert. lib. i. The Pelaſgians that were ſettled in Italy, received a command from the oracle, to ſend their tythes to Apollo of Delphos. Dionyſ. Halicarn. Plutarch, in more places than one, mentions a cuſtom of the Romans, of offering to Hercules the tythe of what they took from their enemies.

VAICRA, ויקרא, the title of the book Leviticus, and the firſt word of this book: And he called; from the conjunction ו vau, and the word קרא kara, to call.

VAJEDABER, וידבר, the title of the book of Numbers, and the firſt word of this book: And he ſpake; from the conjunction ו vau, and the word דבר dabar, to ſpeak.

VAJEZATHA, ויזתא, βαιζαθὰ, Vulgate, Jezata. That waters the bed; from נזה nazah, to water, and תא tha, chamber, or bed: or, according to the Syriac and Hebrew, Woe to the olive.

VALE, or Valley. There are ſeveral vallies mentioned in Scripture.

The valley of Berachah, or of bleſſing, in Judah, weſt of the Dead-ſea, 2 Chron. xx. 26.

The vale of Siddim, the vale of the Wood, Vallis Sylveſtris, Gen. xiv. 3, 8, 20. The Hebrew, גיא השידים. The valley of Haſhedim, as ſome tranſlate, others the vale of the Fields, the vale of Chalk; the Septuagint, the vale of Salt. In this vale ſtood the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, and here, afterwards, the lake Aſphaltites, or the Dead-ſea, was formed.

The vale of Shaveh, or, the King's Dale, Gen. xiv. 17. 2 Sam. xviii. 18. Shevah is a city in the King's Dale, over againſt Jeruſalem, according to Euſebius. In this vale Melchiſedec met Abraham, at his return from his victory over the five kings. But ſome think this interview was at the foot of mount Tabor. Vide vit. Melchiſedech. tom. 3, Oper. S. Athanaſ. 239. & Brochard. deſcript. Ter. Sanct.

The valley of Salt, [or Salt Pits,] Vallis Salinarum, 2 Sam. viii. 13. 2 Kings xiv. 7. This valley is generally placed in the ſouthern parts of Idumea, ſouth of the Dead-ſea. Here, they ſay, the Idumeans were defeated by David, or by Joab; and again by Amaſiah, the ſon of Joaſh, king of Judah. We place it in the eaſtern parts of Idumea, between Tadmor and Bozrah. See SALT.

The valley of Rephaim, or of the Giants, 2 Sam. v. 18. xxiii. 13. See REPHAIM.

The valley of Eſhcol, or of Grapes, Vallis Botri, Numb. xxxii. 9. See NEHEL ESHCOL.

The valley of Jezreel. This is the ſame as the vale of Eſdraelon, or the plain that extends eaſt and weſt, from Scythopolis to the foot of mount Carmel.

The valley of Mamre, near Hebron. See MAMRE.

The valley of Moreh, near Sichem, called the plain of Moreh, Gen. xii. 6. See MOREH.

The valley of Achor, Joſh. vii. 24, 26. Iſai. lxv. 10. Hoſ. ii. 15. north of Jericho, according to St. Jerom. Here the unfortunate Achan was ſtoned. See ACHOR.

The valley of Ajalon. See AJALON. This city gave its name to the valley.

The valley of Reeds, Vallis Arundinis, Joſh. xvi. 8. xvii. 9. The Hebrew reads, גיא קנה, Ge-Kana, the valley, brook, or river of Kanah. It was not far from the Dead ſea, nor from Tapuah.

The valley of Jehoſhaphat. It is generally underſtood to be the valley wherein the brook Kidron runs, eaſt of Jeruſalem. See JEHOSHAPHAT, Joel iii. 12. and MAP of Jeruſalem.

The valley of Hinnom, or the valley of the ſons of Hinnom. In Hebrew, Joſh. xv. 8. גיא הנום, Gehennon, or Ge-bene-hennon; whence comes the word Gehenna. It was eaſt and ſouth of Jeruſalem. See HINNOM, HENNON, or TOPHET: and the MAP of Jeruſalem.

The king's dale or valley. See the valley of Shaveh.

The valley of Charaſhim, or of Craftſmen, Vallis Artificum, 1 Chron. iv. 14. Nehem. xi. 35. In Hebrew, גיא חרשים, Ge-charaſhim. It is placed on the ſide of the Jordan, in Benjamin.

The valley of Keziz, Joſh. xviii. 21. עמק קציץ, in Benjamin. Its ſituation is not exactly known. Some tranſlate the Hebrew by the valley of Inciſion. It is conjectured that this name was given it, becauſe, perhaps, they here cultivated balm, which is drawn from the tree by inciſion. But I cannot think this plant was cultivated here ſo early as the times of Joſhua.

The valley of Jiphthah-el, Joſh. xix. 14, 27. It probably took its name from the city of Jiphthah-el, on the frontiers of Zebulun. The true ſituation is unknown.

The valley of Sorek, Judg. xvi. 4. in which was the city of Sorek, in Dan. Perhaps it may be the ſame as the valley of Eſhcol. See SOREK.

The valley of Zeboim, 1 Sam. xiii. 18. Zeboim was one of the four cities conſumed with Sodom by fire from heaven. Gen. xiv. 2. xviii. xix. The valley of Zeboim was therefore on the Dead-ſea, but its ſituation is not known. Perhaps Zeboim was rebuilt; ſee Nehem. xi. 34. as alſo Sodom. Some Ita. Chald. Hebr. Vatab. take Zeboim, or Tzeboim, in a generical ſenſe, for ſerpents, baſiliſks, or dragons.

The valley of Gad, 2 Sam. xxiv. 5. beyond Jordan, in the portion of Gad, and probably along the Arnon.

The vale of Baca, Pſalm lxxxiv. 6. or of Tears, probably the ſame as the valley of Tears, or Weepers, or Bochim. See Judg. ii. 1. 2 Sam. v. 23. See BOCHIM. This valley was to the ſouth of Jeruſalem. Vide FRAGMENTS, Nos.

The valley of Viſion, Iſai. xxii. 1. in the prophetical and figurative ſtile, ſignifies Jeruſalem. It is called a valley by Antiphraſis, becauſe that city ſtood upon a mountain. And the additional name of viſion was given to it, becauſe it is the ſubject of the prophecy of Iſaiah; or becauſe the temple of Jeruſalem was built upon mount Moriah, which is the Mountain of Viſion, Gen. xxii. 14. [Query, the valley between two hills, as between Zion and Moriah? Valley of Sion, LXX.]

The fat Valley, Iſai. xxviii. 1, 4, Vallis Pinguium. This lies below and about the city of Samaria. This country was very fat and fruitful. Samaria ſtood on a riſing ground that commanded this valley: In vertice vallis pinguiſſimæ.

The valley of Slaughter, Jerem. vii. 32. Vallis interfectionis. This name, according to the prophet Jeremiah's prediction, ſhould be given to the valley of Hinnom, or Tophet. See TOPHET, and Jerem. vii. 32. xix. 6. xxxi. 40. It is called the valley of Deciſion, or Conciſion, Joel iii. 14. and the valley of Jehoſhaphat, or of the judgment of God.

The valley of the dead Bodies, Jerem. xxxi. 40. Vallis Cadaverum. The ſame as Topheth, which was the ſlaughter-houſe of Jeruſalem.

The valley of the Paſſengers, or Travellers, Ezek. xxxix. 11. Vallis Viatorum ad orientem maris. We think this ſtands for the great road at the foot of mount Carmel, from Judea, Egypt, and the country of the Philiſtines, into Phœnicia.

The valley of Hamon-Gog, Ezek. xxxix. 11, 15, or the burying-place of the army of Gog. Probably the valley of Jezreel, in which, we think, the army of Cambyſes was defeated, after the death of that prince. See CAMBYSES and GOG.

The valley of the Mountains, Zech. xiv. 5, Vallis Montium. The vallies round about Jeruſalem, where the inhabitants of that city took ſhelter in their laſt misfortunes, when the city was beſieged by the Romans.

The illuſtrious Valley, near Sichem. The vale, or plain, of Moreh. The Hebrew calls it, Gen. xii. 6. אלון מורה, Elon-Moreh, the oak, or grove of Moreh.

The vale of Kidron, 2 Kings xxiii. 4, 6. or the fields of the brook Kidron, eaſt of Jeruſalem, between this city and the mount of Olives.

The valley of Gihon, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 14, weſt of Jeruſalem, named from the fountain of Gihon, whoſe ſpring is in this place, and runs from weſt to ſouth.

The valley of Succoth, or the valley of tents, Pſal. lx. 6. cviii. 7. Convallis Tabernaculorum. Beyond Jordan, near the city of Succoth. The Pſalmiſt puts the valley of Succoth for the whole country beyond Jordan.

The valley, or plain, of Zaanaim, Judg. iv. 11, where dwelt Heber the Kenite. It was in Galilee, near Zaanaim, and Kedeſh of Naphthali.

The valley of Elah, 1 Sam. xvii. 2, עמק אלה, of the oak, or of the Terebinthus. Saul here encamped with the army of Iſrael; when the giant Goliah came to inſult the Hebrews. This valley was ſouth of Jeruſalem, towards Sochoh and Azekah. Alſo, the name of the valley of the Terebinthus is given to the valley of Mamre, becauſe of the Terebinthus under which Abraham entertained the angels. See TEREBINTHUS.

The valley of Zephathah, at Mareſhah, 2 Chron. xiv. 10. Here Aſa, king of Judah, defeated a great army of Ethiopians or Cuſhim. This valley was toward Mareſhah and Eleutheropolis.

VALLIS PINGUIUM, גיא־שמנים Heb. Ge-ſhemanim. See GETHSEMANI. The vale of the fat ones, or the fat valley; from גיא ghei, a vale, and שמן ſhaman, fat.

VALLIS SALINARUM, גיא־מלח, γεμαλὲχ, Heb. Ge melach. See GEMELLI. The valley of Salt-pits; from גיא ghei, a valley, and מלח melach, ſalt.

VALLIS SYLVESTRIS, עמק־השדים, Φάραγξ, Heb. Emec-haſhidim. The vale of woods, or of fields, or wild; from עמק hamac, a vale, or depth, and שדד ſhidded, to harrow, to prepare a field.

VANIAH, וניה, nouriſhment of the Lord, or the arms of the Lord.

VANIAH. One of thoſe who put away their ſtrange wives, after the return from Babylon. Ezra x. 36.

VANITY. Interpreters generally tranſlate by vanitas and vanum, the Hebrew words, ſhave, שוא שוא, vanitas, mendacium, and habel, הבל, vanitas, inutilitas, the firſt of which rather ſignifies what is oppoſed to truth; and the ſecond what is oppoſed to reality and ſolidity. Thus the word vanity is taken in ſeveral ſenſes, in the ſacred writers.

I. VANITY is put for vain glory, or pride, which makes men entertain a great opinion of themſelves, to boaſt, or to be ſelf-conceited. For example, Pſal. cxix. 37, Turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity. And, 2 Pet. ii. 18, They ſpeak great ſwelling words of vanity.

II. VANITY is taken for lying, Pſal. iv. 2, How long will ye love vanity, and ſeek after leaſing? And, Exod. xx. 7, Thou ſhalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain; or, thou ſhalt not ſwear to confirm a thing that is falſe; thou ſhalt not appeal to the Lord as a witneſs of thy lies. Viſions of vanity, words of vanity, ſignify falſe and deceitful diſcourſes, or lies.

III. VANITY is taken for mere nothing or emptineſs. As, Eccleſ. i. 2, 3. Vanity of vanities, ſaith the preacher, vanity of vanities, all is vanity: I have ſeen nothing but vanity and vexation of ſpirit, in every thing done in this world, or under the ſun. Pſal. cxliv. 4. Every man living is but altogether vanity: Man is like to vanity, his days are as a ſhadow that paſſeth away.

IV. VANITY is taken for idols: Deut. xxxii. 21. They have moved me to jealouſy with that which is not God, they have provoked me to anger with their vanities: They followed vanity, and became vain: 2 Kings xvii. 15. Jerem. ii. 5. Is not the Lord in Sion? Is not her king in her? Why have they provoked me to anger with their graven images, and with ſtrange vanities?

V. Vain is often put for falſe: Thou ſhalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain: Exod. xx. 7. לשוא. Thou ſhalt not ſwear falſly; (Ita plerique Interpretes. שוא, ſignifies falſe. Deut. v. 20. Exod. xx. 16, &c.) or, thou ſhalt not take uſeleſsly, needleſsly, and without very good and ſubſtantial reaſons, the name of God to witneſs what thou affirmeſt. The Hebrew word ſhave, here tranſlated by vain, is put for falſe in many places; as Deut. v. 20. Exod. xx. 16. Levit. xix. 12. Pſal. iv. 3. xxxvii. 13. lxi. 10. Ezek. xii. 24. xiii. 6. Hoſ. x. 4. xii. 11. Jonah ii. 9. Zech. x. 2. Matth. v. 33. Tertull. de Idololat. cap. 20. Cyrill. Clem. Alex. &c. were of opinion, that this paſſage forbad to give the name of God to falſe gods, to idols. It is certain, that vana is often taken for falſe gods: But that is not the literal meaning of this place.

VI. Vain is oppoſed to true, real, ſubſtantial. Pſal. v. 10. Their heart is vain, or full of vanity and lying. Pſal. xii. 2. They have deceived their neighbours by vain diſcourſes, by words full of deceit and lies. The falſe prophets, Ezek. xiii. 6. Vident vana & divinant mendacium, have only idle dreams, and empty viſions: They pronounce only vain and falſe predictions. See alſo Iſai. lvi. 10.

Vain things are idols, 1 Sam. xii. 21. Do not run after idols, that cannot protect you; for they are non-entities. See Acts xiv. 14, 15.

To lift up the ſoul to vanity, Pſal. xxiv. 4. i. e. to ſwear by his own life, to ſwear vainly and falſely. Pſal. lxii. 10. They have ſought my ſoul in vain; they have unſucceſsfully endeavoured to take away my life; God has preſerved me, and defended me from their ſnares; or, rather, they have ſought, without any reaſon, and under falſe and vain pretences, to put me to death.

Vain men, does not only ſignify men puffed up with pride, and full of vanity, but alſo worthleſs and inſignificant perſons, without religion, without rule, or conduct, brainleſs fellows. For example, 2 Chron. xiii. 7. אנשים רקים בני בליעל. LXX. ἄνδρες λοίμοι. Viri vaniſſimi, & filii Belial. The Hebrew ſays, men void of ſenſe, or beggars, miſerable children, without a yoke, worthleſs children, [children of unreſtrainableneſs.] Rekim, which the Vulgate tranſlates by vaniſſimi, is the ſame as raca, which we find, Matth. v. 22. Whoſo calleth his brother raca,— inſtead of vaniſſimi. The Septuagint renders it peſtilential and dangerous fellows.

He that heaps up riches by lying is vain, and without underſtanding. Prov. xxi. 6. הבל נרף. Vanus eſt & excors. The Hebrew ſays, Vanity is driven by the wind; is as chaff, which is the ſport of the winds. And elſewhere, Prov. xii. 8. נעוה לב Perverſus corde. He that is vain, and without underſtanding, ſhall be expoſed to contempt. The Hebrew ſays, He that hath a perverſe and corrupted heart, &c. Thoſe that have no knowledge of God, are only vanity; all their other qualities, their ſcience, their ſkill, is nothing but ignorance, without this knowledge. The Greek intimates, All men are by nature vain; they can do nothing of themſelves, they tend to nothing, &c.

VAPHRES. The ſame as Pharaoh Hophra. See HOPHRA, and Jerem. xliv. 30.

VASHNI, ושני, καὶ ὁ δεύτερος. This has been taken for the name of a perſon, but very improperly. 1 Chron. vi. 28. is defective; Filii Samuel primogenitus Vaſſeni. It ſhould be read, Filii Samuel, Joel primogenitus, & ſecundus (Heb. ושני vaſeni.) Abia. The word Vaſhni therefore denotes only the ſecond.

VASHNI, or Vaſſeni, the eldeſt ſon of Samuel, according to 1 Chron. vi. 28. And the ſons of Samuel, the firſt-born, Vaſhni, and Abiah. Some Latin copies have Vaſhni, Joel, and Abiah. But this paſſage is viſibly corrupted. Vaſhni, ſignifies The Second; ſo that it ſhould be thus ſupplied, The ſons of Samuel were—Joel the firſt born, and —the ſecond, Abiah. See 1 Chron. vi. 33.

VASHTI, ושתי, ἀςὶ, that drinks; from שתה ſhathah: otherwiſe, thread, or woof; from שתי ſhethi.

VASHTI, or Vaſthi, the wife of king Ahaſuerus. Eſth. i. 9, &c. This prince made a great feaſt for all the nobles of his kingdom; and queen Vaſhti alſo made a feaſt to entertain the women in the palace. On the ſeventh day of the feaſt, when the king was more merry than uſual, being warmed with wine, he ordered his principal officers to fetch queen Vaſhti, with her royal ornaments, that he might ſhew her extraordinary beauty to his ſubjects: But ſhe refuſed to come. This put the king in a great paſſion, and he conſulted with his ſtateſmen, what ſhould be the puniſhment of Vaſhti? Memucan, the firſt of the counſellors, anſwered, that ſhe ſhould be divorced, her crown taken from her, and given to another more worthy. This advice prevailed, Vaſhti was repudiated, and Eſther taken into her place. See ESTHER. This happened A. M. 3486, ante A. D. 518.

It is enquired, who this queen Vaſhti was? Some have thought ſhe was Athoſſa, the daughter of Cyrus, who was firſt married to Cambyſes, her own brother, afterwards to the Magian, who counterfeited Smerdis; and, laſtly, to Darius, the ſon of Hyſtaſpes, whom we take to be Ahaſuerus. She was of very exquiſite beauty; and Herodotus lib. vii. cap. 3. aſſures us, that Darius had four ſons by her, and that ſhe had for a long time a ſhare in the management of affairs. Therefore ſhe could not be Vaſhti, who was divorced in the third year of this prince. Others think her to have been Ahaſuerus's own daughter. The Perſians made no ſcruple of this kind of marriage, and polygamy was cuſtomary among them. But hiſtory gives no warrant to this conjecture. Herodotus lib. vii. cap. 59. ſpeaks likewiſe of Ariſtone, the wife of Darius, ſon of Hyſtaſpes; perhaps ſhe may be Eſther.

The Hebrews tell us, that what made Vaſhti refuſe to obey the king, was, becauſe he required her to ſhew herſelf naked, [unveiled, Vide FRAGMENT, No. CLIX, page 133, &c.] before all the people; which ſhe peremptorily refuſed.

VEIL, or Theriſtrum, this Greek word, ſignifies a veil, or ſcarf, with which women of quality covered their faces, in ſummer, to keep off the heat of the ſun. St. Jerom uſes this word to expreſs the veil with which Tamar covered herſelf, when diſguiſed, Gen. xxxviii. 14. ותכס בצעיף. LXX. Περιέβαλε τὸ θέριστρον. It anſwers to the Hebrew word tzaiph, tranſlated by a veil, a ſcarf, a mantle, with which the eaſtern women covered their head and face. We find the ſame term, Gen. xxiv. 65. where the Vulgate inſinuates that Rebecca covered herſelf with her mantle: Accepit pallium ſuum. We read alſo theriſtrum in the Latin of Iſai. iii. 23. But the Hebrew has haradidim, הרדידים. LXX. Θέριστρα καλάυλιτα. veils to ſit at table in. Others render it by very fine veils, which the women uſed in ſummer. They wore their bracelets on their arms and legs, next to their ſkin; and the veil covered their face, neck, boſom, and ſhoulders, when they were at home: The girdle was very precious, and their ſandals probably were adorned with ſoles of gold. The veil was a kind of crape, ſo that they could ſee through it; or at leaſt a paſſage was left for the light to come to their eyes. Vide FRAGMENTS, Nos. CLIX, page 153, &c.

VEL, אואל, ὁ θεὸς, or God, or the ſtrong; from the conjunction או o, or, and אל el, God, or ſtrong: otherwiſe, that deſires God; from אוה ivah, to deſire, and אל el, God.

VELLE-SHEMOTH, ואלה־שמות, the title of the book Exodus, and the firſt words by which it begins: And theſe are the names; from the conjunction ו vau, and, the pronoun אלה elle, theſe, and שם ſhem, name.

VENGEANCE. See REVENGE.

VENUS, the goddeſs of love, worſhipped by the heathen. Some think her name is derived from the Hebrew word Succoth-Benoth, or Venos, according to another pronunciation. 2 Kings xvii. 30. See SUCCOTH BENOTH. The Egyptians called her Nephtis; the Aſſyrians, Mylytta; the Arabians, Alitta; the Perſians, Mitra: She was alſo known by the name of Tanais, at Babylon; of Erycina, in Sicily; of Aphrodite, among the Greeks. I believe ſhe was generally worſhipped in the territories of Iſrael by the name of Aſtarte, or Aſtaroth, or Aſterah, or the goddeſs of the groves. She is confounded with the moon, whom the Pagans called the heavenly Venus, and the Hebrews the queen of heaven, or the goddeſs Meni. The god Dagon was alſo alſo very probably Venus. The dove was conſecrated to this falſe deity. Vide ASTARTE.

Three leagues from Carthage, ſays Valerius Maximus lib. ii. cap. 6. was a temple called Sicca Veneria, which had ſo much the more relation to the Succoth-benoth of Scripture, as the women there ſacrificed their chaſtity in honour of Venus, and thereby obtained portions, to place them out in matrimony afterwards. Siccæ enim fanum eſt Veneris, in quod ſe matronæ conſerebant, atque inde procedentes ad quæſtum, dotes corporis injuria contrahebant: honeſta nimirum tam inhoneſto vinculo conjugia junctura. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CCXIII.

VERMILION, from the Latin, vermis, or vermiculus, a worm; becauſe crimſon and ſcarlet are dyed with thoſe little worms that are gathered from a kind of green oak, which affords the kermes, or ſcarlet grain. See WORM. But the true vermilion has no relation to the vermiculus, but in colour. The vermilion known to the ancients, vide Pliny, Theophraſt. Dioſcorid. Vitruv. was found in Spain, upon inacceſſible rocks. They were ſtones that were beat down with arrows. They were found alſo in Cholchis. The artificial vermilion was made of a red ſand, procured near Epheſus, after it had been waſhed ſeveral times. The vermilion we uſe at preſent is compoſed of artificial cinnabar, which has been levigated for a long time upon porphyry, and reduced to an impalpable powder.

Wiſdom xii. 14. ſpeaks of vermilion, with which they painted the ſtatues of the gods: Laying it over with vermilion and with paint, colouring it red, and covering every ſpot therein. When a ſtatuary had formed a ſtatue of crooked and knotty wood, he rubbed it with vermilion and red paint, to give it a ſplendid colour, and by the paint to hide the deformities of the wood. The ancients much eſteemed vermilion, and were very thrifty in the uſe of it, becauſe of its ſcarcity, and great price. In the time of Vitruvius lib. vii. cap. 5, it was grown pretty common, and whole walls were ſometimes painted with it. Verrius, quoted in Pliny, lib. xxxiii. cap. 6. informs us, that on high feſtival days, there was a ceremony, and a kind of prodigality, in painting the face of Jupiter with vermilion. I have ſeen a Diana's head, wherein the vermilion might ſtill be perceived, if it were wetted. The Cenſors in Pliny's time, contracted for the care of painting Jupiter's ſtatue with vermilion: A Cenſoribus Jovem miniandum locari. Camillus triumphed all daubed over with vermilion. Such was the taſte of the ancient Romans. Among the Ethiopians, they painted the ſtatues of their gods with this colour; and great men daubed their whole bodies with it. [Whereby they reſembled the ancient heroes; giants, Rephaim.]

VERSIONS of Scripture. It was late before the books of the Old Teſtament were tranſlated into foreign tongues. The Hebrews were always jealous of their privileges, and of being diſtinguiſhed from all nations of the world, as the only depoſitaries of the oracles of the prophets, and of the laws of God. They did not readily converſe with ſtrangers, but kept cloſe up in their own country, which they looked on as the fineſt and beſt on the earth. They made as little excurſions from hence as they could; and contenting themſelves with the ſtudy of their own language, and their laws, they deſpiſed the ſtudy of profane ſciences, and the converſation of foreigners. This is the obſervation of their hiſtorian Joſephus, contr. Appion. lib. i. page 2.

They did not think of tranſlating their books into Greek, till the time of the ſucceſſors of Alexander the Great. Before then, though many of them were ſcattered in Perſia, Media, Aſſyria, and Chaldea; yet they had no thoughts of tranſlating their ſacred books into other tongues; the proximity and relation of the languages of theſe countries with the Hebrew, or rather, the care they took to preſerve their own tongue, in the midſt of thoſe people, was the reaſon that they found no neceſſity of tranſlating the Hebrew books into other tongues. They ſatisfied themſelves with expounding them, vivâ voce, to ſuch as did not underſtand Hebrew. This was the method of Eſdras after the return from the captivity, and was continued by his ſucceſſors, or ſuch as undertook to read and explain the law to the people. Nothing of theſe Chaldee paraphraſes, or interpretations, was committed to writing till about the time of our Saviour, when Onkelos and Jonathan compoſed their targums.

But after the conqueſts of Alexander the Great, when the Jews were diſperſed through all the vaſt empire of this conqueror, and the Greek tongue was now become the univerſal language for all thoſe provinces, which had no relation to the Hebrew, many of the Jews were no longer in a capacity of underſtanding the ſacred books, and, conſequently, were under a neceſſity of having recourſe to ſome Greek tranſlation. This firſt produced that verſion called the Septuagint, after the ſeventy interpreters, Vide SEPTUAGINT; then thoſe of Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion.

The other verſions of Scripture, whether of the Old or new Teſtament, made into Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and into the vulgar tongues of Europe, Aſia, Aſia, and Africa, were procured and performed chiefly by Chriſtians. Theſe were urged by a ſpirit very different from that of the Jews, and deſired nothing more eagerly than to publiſh to the whole world the truths belonging to ſalvation, and to ſpread every where the light of the law and of the goſpel.

VIRTUE. This word is very equivocal. It is uſed,

1. For that virtue which renders us acceptable both to God and man, and which anſwers to the Greek word arete,
2. For power, valour, and agrees with the Greek word dynamis.
3. For a miracle, or a ſupernatural power.
4. For the cœleſtial powers or virtues. [Angels.]

I. VIRTUE, in the ſenſe of a moral virtue, is rarely found in Scripture. I know no Hebrew word that anſwers to it in this ſenſe; and even arete, by which the Greeks expreſs moral virtue, is often put to ſignify force, or ſtrength, in the New Teſtament. As, 1 Pet. ii. 9. That ye may ſhew forth the virtues [praiſes, Eng. Tr.] of him who hath called you.—The Greek word aretas plainly in this place ſignifies power: [rather excellencies or wonders:] Alſo 2 Pet. i. 3. Who hath called us to glory and virtue. But in the fifth verſe, virtus is uſed for virtue: Miniſtrate in fide veſtra virtutem, in virtute autem ſcientiam.

II. Nothing is more common in the Old and New Teſtament, than the word virtue, for power, valour, ſtrength, army. This term anſwers to the Hebrew words, on, און, ail, איל, geburah, גבורה, chail, חיל, coach, כוח, and to the Greek words dynanis and arete. So Ruth iii. 11. For all the people do know that thou art a virtuous woman. A woman of courage, a ſtout woman, [a woman of CHARACTER: i. e. of confirmed good manners] And 2 Chron. ix. 5. Strength and virtue—power—are in your hands. Judith ii. 7. Virtus Aſſyriorum, the armies of the Aſſrians. 1 Macc. i. 4. Congregavit virtutem, he aſſembled forces.

III. VIRTUE is put for miracles. Matth. vii. 22. Nonne in nomine tuo virtutes multas fecimus? Have we not wrought many wonders in thy name? And, xiii. 58. Non fecit ibi virtutes multas: He did not many miracles. And, Acts xix. 11. Virtutes non quaſlibet faciebat Deus per manum Pauli. [Special miracles, Eng. Tr.]

IV. VIRTUE, VIRTUES, ſignifies the heavenly hoſt, or powers: Rom. viii. 38. Certus ſum quia neque virtutes, neque inſtantia, neque futura - - - - neque creatura alia poterit nos ſeparare à charitate Dei. And St. Peter, 1 Pet. iii. 22. Jeſus Chriſt aſcending into heaven, has ſubdued to his majeſty, the angels, the powers, and the virtues.

VESPASIAN, was nominated by the emperor Nero, to manage the war againſt the Jews, A. D. 66. Sueton. in Veſpaſ. cap. 4. Tacit. Hiſt. lib. v. Joſeph. de Bello, lib. iii. cap. 1. He was then in Achaia with the emperor, and began immediately to aſſemble troops, knowing the importance of this undertaking. He did not come into Judea till A. D. 67, and began the war in Galilee, where he took Gadara and Jotapata. Thence he returned to Ptolemais, and to Cæſarea, where he gave his army ſome refreſhment. Afterwards he took Tiberias, Tarichea, Gamala, and all Galilee. A. D. 68, in order to prepare for the ſiege of Jeruſalem, Veſpaſian took all the poſts and ſtrong places round about.

In the mean time Nero died, in A. D. 68, and Galba was declared emperor; but was killed at the beginning of the year following. Vitellius was proclaimed emperor at Cologn; and at the ſame time Otho was made emperor at Rome. Otho loſing the battle at Bebriac, ſlew himſelf April 15, A. D. 69. Vitellius was acknowledged emperor alone, and reigned about eight months. While this was doing, Veſpaſian was declared emperor by the army at Alexandria, July 1, A. D. 69, and by his own army at Cæſarea, on the third of July. Immediately all the eaſt declared for him, and ſoon after all the weſt. His indiſpenſible affairs calling him to Italy, he left his ſon Titus to manage the war againſt the Jews. Titus beſieged Jeruſalem, and took it A. D. 70, the 73d year of Chriſt.

Vitellius came to Rome with his army about the middle of July, A. D. 69; and the legions of Illiricum, who had declared for Veſpaſian, under the conduct of Antonius Primus, defeated the army of Vitellius in two battles, near Cremona. Vitellius himſelf was killed, December 20, and Veſpaſian came to Rome ſome time after. His ſon Titus came thither alſo A. D. 71. after he had reduced Judæa, and demoliſhed Jeruſalem; upon which occaſion they had both together a triumph over the Jews. Veſpaſian ſold all the lands of Judæa; Joſeph. de Bello, lib. vii. cap. 27. ſent a colony to Emmaus, which he called Nicopolis; and obliged the Jews to pay the half-ſhekel a head to the capitol, which before they had paid to the temple at Jeruſalem. Dio. lib. lxvi. page 748. Vide Origen. ad African. Laſtly, he made a ſtrict enquiry for all the lineage of David, Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. iii. cap. 12. Ex Hegiſippo. in order to extirpate the whole whole race, if it had been in his power. But though his commands were executed with great rigour, yet he could never ſucceed in deſtroying that illuſtrious family. He died June 24, A.D. 79, aged ſixty-nine years, ſeven months, and ſeven days. He reigned ten years, wanting ſix days. He was ſucceeded by his ſon Titus.

VESTMENTS, or Garments. The Hebrews wore a coat, or waiſtcoat, called כתנת Chetonet; and a cloak, called מעיל Mehil. The coat was their under garment, next their ſkin, and the cloak over this. Theſe two garments together made what the Scripture calls a Change of Raiment, 2 Kings v. 15. 22. ſuch as thoſe which Naaman brought as a preſent to Eliſha. The coat was commonly of linen; and the cloak of ſtuff, or woolen. As the cloaks were only a great piece of ſtuff, not cut; there were often many of them made of one piece, of which they uſed to make preſents. The Hebrews never changed the faſhion of their cloaths, as we know of; but they dreſſed after the manner of the country wherein they dwelt. A white colour, or a purple, were in moſt eſteem among them. Solomon adviſes him who would live agreeably, Eccleſ. ix. 8. Let thy garments be always white. Joſephus obſerves of this prince, that being the moſt ſplendid and magnificent of kings, he was commonly cloathed in bright and white garments. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. viii. cap. 2. The angels generally appeared in this colour; and in our Saviour's transfiguration, his cloaths appeared as white as ſnow. Moſes appoints none but white coats to the prieſts.

Mention is made in the Scripture, of a coat of many colours, Gen. xxxvii. 3. כתנת פסים, Chetonet paſſim, with which Joſeph was clothed. Tamar, the daughter of David, wore one alſo. 2 Sam. xiii. 18. Interpreters are divided about the ſignification of this word. Some tranſlate it by a long gown; others, by a gown ſtriped with ſeveral colours; and others by a gown with large ſleeves. The Arabians wear very great ſleeves to their coats. Theſe ſleeves have a very wide opening at the end, which hangs ſometimes down to the ground, but at the ſhoulder they are much narrower. In their houſes this coat, or gown, drags on the ground, but abroad they tuck it up, that they may walk at more liberty; or elſe they tie it up with a girdle. Vide FRAGMENTS, Nos. LXI. LXII. page 109. 110.

We ſhall not here ſpeak of the women's veils, or gowns, with which they covered themſelves when they appeared in public. Vide VEIL.

Iſaiah iii. 16—25, makes a long enumeration of the dreſſes of the women of his time. We ſhall not undertake to explain them, becauſe the correct ideas of the greater part of the Hebrew terms are unknown to interpreters.

The coats were often without ſeams, were woven in a loom, and had no ſlits, either at the breaſt or on the ſides; but only at the top, to let the head through. Such, probably, were the coats of the prieſts, Exod. xxviii. 32. and that of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, John xix. 23. which the ſoldiers would not divide, but choſe rather to caſt lots for it. St. Chryſoſtom, Theophylact, and Theophanes, are of opinion, that it was made of two pieces of woollen ſtuff, wove in a loom, and fine-drawn together with a needle, ſo that it ſeemed to be but one piece. Others conſider it as all needle-work from top to bottom. But Braunius, de veſtitu Sacerdotum Hæbræorum, lib. i. cap. 16. proves that it was all wove in a loom. They ſtill make them after the ſame manner in the eaſt.

It is an ancient tradition, Vide Euthym. in Joan. xx. that the Holy Virgin herſelf wove her ſon's coat. The women formerly made the ſtuffs and the cloth, not only for their own cloaths, but alſo for their huſbands and children. This appears from the inſtance of the virtuous woman, whoſe character Solomon gives us, Prov. xxxi. 13. and alſo from that of Penelope, the wife of Ulyſſes. Alexander the Great, Auguſtus, and Charlemaign, wore cloaths made by the hands of their mothers, their wives, or their daughters.

Another popular tradition is, that the coat of Jeſus Chriſt, for which the ſoldiers drew lots, was the ſame he had received from the Virgin Mary, while he was a child, which had continually grown with him, without being worn out. But this tradition is not derived from antiquity. [It is probably founded on the following miſinterpretation.]

Moſes informs us, Deut. viii. 4. that the cloaths which the Hebrews uſed in the Wilderneſs did not wear out. Thy raiment waxed not old upon thee, neither did thy foot ſwell theſe forty years. Juſtin Martyr, and ſome interpreters, following the Rabbins, take theſe words literally, and think that, not only the cloaths of the Iſraelites did not grow old, or wear out, but alſo that thoſe of the children grew with them, and conſtantly fitted them, at every age. St. Jerom, Ep. 38. aſſerts, that ſo much as their hair, or nails, did not grow too long. But others think, with much greater probability, that Moſes intended no more, than that God ſo effectually provided them with neceſſaries, that they did not want cloaths [or had not been forced to wear old or ragged cloaths] in all their journey.

To diſtinguiſh the Iſraelites from other people, the Lord

Lord commanded them to wear tufts, or fringes, at the four corners of their upper garments, of a blue colour, and a border of galoon upon the edges. Numb. xv. 38. Deut. xxii. 12. It is ſeen by Matth. ix. 20. that our Saviour wore theſe fringes at the bottom of his cloak. For the woman who had the iſſue of blood twelve years, promiſed herſelf a cure, if ſhe did but touch the hem, i. e. the fringe, of his garment. The Phariſees, ſtill further to diſtinguiſh themſelves, wore theſe borders, or fringes, longer than others, Matth. xxiii. 5. Magnificent fimbrias. St. Jerom adds, that to make a ſhew of greater auſterity, they faſtened thorns to them, that when they ſtruck againſt their naked legs, they might be reminded of the law of God.

The Jews at this day, ſays Leo of Modena, Cerem. of the Jews, p. 1. cap. 5. that they may comply with the law, Levit. xix. 19. Deut. xxii. 11. which ſays, neither ſhall a garment mingled of linen and woolen come upon thee, do not ſo much as ſew a woolen garment with thread, nor a linen garment with yarn. They take care alſo not to wear the cloaths of a different ſex, according to the command, Deut. xxii. 5. See TALED.

The garments of mourning among the Hebrews were ſackcloth, and haircloth; their colour was dark brown, or black. As the prophets were penitents by profeſſion, their common cloathing was mourning. Widows alſo dreſſed themſelves much the ſame. Judith faſted every day, except on feſtival days, and the ſabbath-day, and wore a hair cloth next her ſkin. Judith viii. 6. The prophets Elias, 2 Kings i. 7, 8. and John the Baptiſt, Matt. iii. 4. were cloathed in ſkins, or coarſe ſtuffs, and wore girdles of leather. St. Paul ſays, Heb. xi. 37. that the prophets wore melotes, ſheep-ſkins, or goat-ſkins. The falſe prophets put on habits of mourning, and penitence, the better to deceive the people. Zech. xiii. 4.

It is diſputed, whether the ancient Hebrews lined their cloaths. Doubled, or lined, garments are pretty often mentioned in Scripture. Micah offers his Levite ten pieces of money a year, & veſtem duplicem. Judg. xvii. 10. Gehazi aſks Naaman for a talent of ſilver, and doubled or lined garments; Veſtes mutatorias duplices. 2 Kings v. 22. The houſehold of the virtuous woman in Prov. xxxi. 21. are cloathed with lined garments: Veſtiti ſunt duplicibus. But it is imagined that changes of raiment are to be underſtood by theſe expreſſions, a pair of garments, two coats, and two cloaks; or, ſimply, a coat and a cloak, a complete ſuit; or perhaps, a garment ſo large, as that it may be doubled about the wearer: yet it muſt be owned, that Duplex, in ſpeaking of cloaths, is ſometimes taken for a garment that is really doubled, or lined. So Moſes appoints the pectoral, or breaſt-piece of the high-prieſt, to be made ſquare and lined.

To ſee garments, or frocks, entire without ſeam, with ſleeves and quarters of the ſame piece, woven together in the loom, is no rarity in the eaſt. We are told, (Voyage to China, by two Arabians, in the ninth Century. At Paris, 1718, in octavo, page 2.) that in the Maldive iſlands, there are workmen and weavers ſo ingenious that they make entire ſhirts and waiſt-coats of the tow of the cocoa-tree, after the manner before deſcribed.

VETCHES, or Fitches, Vicia; a creeping plant that has ſeveral ſtalks, which entangle one in another, and put out ſmall, narrow, longiſh leaves; leſs than thoſe of a lentil. Its flower is ſmall, reddiſh, and ſometimes white. Its pods are like thoſe of peaſe, but ſhorter and ſlenderer. The grain they encloſe is round, and blackiſh; they are uſed for feeding pigeons, who are very greedy of them. [The tares of Mat. xiii. 24, 30. are another kind of plant.]

Iſaiah xxviii. 25. ſpeaks of fitches. Doth he not caſt abroad the fitches? The Hebrew has כוסמת, cuſmeth, which ſome tranſlate by ſpelta, others by zea, a kind of wheat. Ezekiel iv. 9. uſes the ſame word, and the LXX. render it by olyra, a kind of wheat.

VINES, Vineyards, Vintage. There were in Paleſtine many excellent vineyards. Scripture celebrates the vines of Sorek, of Sebamah, of Jazer, of Abel. Profane authors mention the excellent wines of Gaza, Sarepta, Libanus, Saron, Aſcalon, and Tyre, CORIPP. lib. iii.

Jacob, in the bleſſing he gave Judah, Gen. xlix. 11. ſays, binding his foal unto the vine, and his aſſes colt unto the choice vine; he waſhed his garments in wine, and his cloaths in the blood of grapes: to ſhew the abundance of vines that ſhould fall to his lot. The ſpouſe in the Canticles, i. 13. compares her beloved to a cluſter of Cypres that grew in the vineyards of En-gedi. See COPHER and CYPRESS.

Theſe vineyards of En-gedi were not vineyards of grapes for wine [only] but of plants of cypreſs. At the ſame place the plants of balſam grew; which may place this garden among vine-yards.

Noah planted the vine after the Deluge, and was the firſt who cultivated it, Gen. ix. 20. Many are of opinion, that wine was not unknown before the Deluge; and that this patriarch only continued to cultivate the vine after that event, as he had done before it. But the fathers think that he knew not the force of wine; having never uſed it before, nor having ever ſeen any one uſe it. He was the firſt that gathered the juice of the grape, and reduced it [by the fermentative proceſs] to a potable liquor. Before him, men only ate the grapes like other fruit.

God often compares his people to a vine, Pſalm lxxx. 8. Iſaiah v. 1, &c. Jerem. ii. 21. Ezek. xvii. Joel i. 7. Matth. xx. 1. which he had brought out of Egypt, and planted in Paleſtine, as in a good ſoil, but which, inſtead of bringing forth good fruit, brought forth only bitter fruit, and wild grapes. Jeſus Chriſt tells us, that the houſholder having let this vine to tenants, who ought to have rendered him the fruit of it, inſtead of that, they abuſed his ſervants, and killed his own ſon, who went to require the payment of what was owing to him. In another place our Saviour ſays to his diſciples, I am the true vine, and my father is the huſbandman. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit, he taketh away, &c. John xv. 1, 2, 3, &c.

The law of Moſes did not allow, that whoever planted a vine ſhould eat of its fruit before the fifth year. Levit. xix. 24, 25. They alſo did not gather their grapes on the ſeventh year; the fruit was then left for the poor, the orphan, and the ſtranger. A traveller was allowed to gather and eat grapes in a vineyard as he paſſed along, but he was not permitted to carry any away. Deut. xxiii. 24. It was alſo forbidden to ſow any thing elſe in a vineyard: Thou ſhalt not ſow thy vineyard with olive ſeeds. Levit. xxv. 3, 4. Deut. xxii. 9.

Wild VINE, Labruſca. It grew without culture, near the highways and hedges. Its fruit was a very ſmall grape, which became black when ripe: but often it did not ripen at all. See WILD GRAPE, and Iſaiah v. 2, 4.

The wild vine of 2 Kings iv. 39. was not the labruſca; but the wild gourd, a plant that produces the coloquintida, a fruit of a deadly bitterneſs.

The Vine of Sodom, mentioned by Moſes, Deut. xxxii. 32. is a vine of a plant from Sodom, which brings only bitter and uſeleſs grapes; wine as bad (deadly) as the gall of a ſerpent; grapes as bitter as gall: the fruits which grow about the Dead-ſea are rotten within; and only full of duſt: Cuncta ſponte edita aut manu ſata ſive herbâ tenus aut flore, ſeu ſolitam in ſpeciem adolevêr, atra & inania velut in cinerem vaneſcunt. Tacit. Hiſt. lib. v. Vide & Joſeph. de Bello, lib. v. cap. 5. Solin. cap. 44.

Naboth's vineyard is paſſed into a proverb, to expreſs an inheritance uſurped by an high hand from a poor man, unable to defend it. See the ſtory, 1 Kings xxi. 1, 2, &c.

To expreſs a time of public tranquility, of profound peace, it is ſaid that every one lives in quiet under his own vine, and under his own fig-tree. All the time of the reign of Solomon, Judah and Iſrael dwelt ſafely, every man under his vine, and under his fig-tree, from Dan even to Beerſheba. 1 Kings iv. 25. And the prophet Micah, iv. 4. They ſhall ſit every man under his vine, and under his fig-tree, &c. And under the government of Simon the high-prieſt, Then did they till their ground in peace, and the earth gave her increaſe, and the trees of the field their fruit, &c. Every man ſat under his vine, and his fig-tree, and there were none to fray them. 1 Macc. xiv. 8, 12.

VINTAGE. This ſeaſon was accompanied with feaſts and great rejoicings. Iſaiah ſays, xxv. 6. In this mountain ſhall the Lord of Hoſts make unto all people, a feaſt of fat things, a feaſt of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees, well refined. Literally, a feaſt of fatneſs, a feaſt of lees, of marrowy fatneſſes, of clarified lees. And Iſaiah xvi. 10. Gladneſs is taken away, and joy out of the plentiful field; and in the vineyards there ſhall be no ſinging, neither ſhall there be ſhouting; the treaders ſhall tread out no wine in their preſſes: I have made their vintage-ſhouting to ceaſe. Hebrew, out of Carmel. Carmel ſignifies an excellent vineyard. And Jeremiah ſays, xlviii. 33. Joy and gladneſs is taken from the plentiful field (from the Carmel) and from the land of Moab, (which was fruitful in vines) and I have cauſed wine to fail from the wine preſſes, none ſhall tread with ſhouting, their ſhouting ſhall be no ſhouting: Hebrew, literally, they ſhall no longer tread the grape, and he that cries hedad, ſhall no more cry hedad, hedad. This laſt term is the cry of the vintagers, from whence is formed heth, and de heth, [HUZZA! Bravo!] with vigor, with courage, chearfully.

In a figurative ſenſe, a vintager is taken for one who ravages a country, or carries on a bloody war in it. The prophets uſe this metaphor, to expreſs the vengeance which the Lord takes on his enemies. Thou haſt planted thy people as a vine, and now all that paſs by partake of the vintage: Pſalm lxxx. 12. And Jeremiah, Lam. i. 15. makes Jeruſalem ſpeak in this manner;

Vindemiavit me ſicut locutus eſt Dominus, in die furoris ſui. To which is added, deal with them, O Lord, as thou haſt dealt with me; tread them in a wine-preſs as thou haſt trod me, becauſe of my iniquities. And Iſaiah, lxiii. 2. ſpeaking of a conqueror returning from a great expedition, having his cloaths all beſmeared with blood, deſcribes him thus: Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah? This that is glorious in his apparel, travelling in the greatneſs of his ſtrength? I that ſpeak in righteouſneſs, mighty to ſave. Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine-fat? I have trodden the wine-preſs [of fury, wrath, &c.] alone, and of the people there was none with me, &c. See Lam. i. 15. Rev. xiv. 20. xix. 15. &c. See WINE.

VINEGAR, Acetum. Vinegar is made of wine, beer, cyder, or even of water. The wine of the palm-tree turns into vinegar, if it be kept two or three days. The ancients had ſeveral kinds of vinegar, which they uſed for drink. The emperor Peſcennius Niger gave orders that his ſoldiers ſhould drink nothing but vinegar on their marches: Neminem in expeditione vinum bibere, ſed aceto univerſos eſſe contentos. Spartian. in Peſcennio. Boaz told Ruth, ii. 14. that ſhe might come and dip her bread in vinegar, with his people. Harveſters uſed this liquor for their refreſhment. Aceto ſumma vis in refrigerendo, ſays Pliny, lib. xxiii. cap. 1. There is great probability that the vinegar which the Roman ſoldiers offered to our Saviour at his crucifixion, Matth. xxvii. 48. was the vinegar they uſed for their own drinking. Conſtantine the Great allowed them wine and vinegar alternately, every day.

This vinegar was not like that which we uſe for ſalads and ſauces, but a ſmall wine, called peſca, or ſera; of which the authors De re Ruſtica, have given us the compoſition. Columel, lib. i. de re ruſt. & lib. xii. cap. 40. Cato, Plin. &c. They make great uſe of it in Spain and Italy, in harveſt-time. They uſe it alſo in Holland, and on ſhip-board, to correct the ill taſte of water. The Scripture forbids the Nazarites to uſe vinegar, Numb. vi. 3. וחמץ חמץ יין שכר, and all ſorts of liquor that come from the vine, and which are capable of inebriating. The Hebrew has, vinegar made of wine, and vinegar made of ſecar, or the wine of the palm-tree. Pliny, lib. xiv. cap. 16. ſpeaks of ſeveral ſorts of vinegar which might be drank.

It muſt be allowed, however, that there was a kind of ſtrong vinegar, which was not proper for drinking; at leaſt till well diluted. The Pſalmiſt complains, that his enemies had given him vinegar to drink; Pſalm lxix. 21. And Jeſus Chriſt, to fulfil this prophecy in his own perſon, would not drink the vinegar that was offered to him. Solomon ſays, Prov. x. 26. As vinegar to the teeth, and as ſmoke to the eyes, ſo is the ſluggard to them that ſend him. We muſt diſtinguiſh then between that vinegar, or ſmall wine, which was uſed as a drink, and in which the harveſters dipt their bread; and that vinegar which was of conſiderable ſtrength, and uſed in ſauces.

VIPER, a ſort of ſerpent, called vipera quaſi vivipara, becauſe it brings forth its young alive. The viper is not very long, the largeſt being generally leſs than a yard in length; in thickneſs about an inch. It has a flat head. The male has only two teeth, but the female has ſeveral; and the male is commonly blacker than the female. It has been ſaid, that when the viper brings forth, the young ones kill their dam; but this is contradicted by experience. She brings forth her young alive, but they are incloſed in little ſkins, that open on the third day. The poiſon of the viper is very dangerous; but its fleſh is good in many diſtempers.

The viper is mentioned in ſeveral places of Scripture. Job ſays, xx. 16. ראש פתן, The viper's tongue ſhall ſlay him. The Hebrew word peten, they ſay, rather ſignifies the aſp, than the viper. Iſaiah, xxx. 6. אפעה ephee. LXX. Ἀσπίδες, ſpeaks of the viper; where the Hebrew has ephee; which is thought to be the true name of the viper. See Bochart. de Animal. Sacr. p. 2. lib. iii. cap. 1. p. 358. &c. St. Jerom tranſlates ephee by regulus, or the baſiliſk: the Septuagint do the ſame.

VIRGIN, Virgo; in Greek, Παρθένος, parthenos; in Hebrew, עלמה, almah. [Vide ALMAH, with the Addition.] Theſe words properly ſignify an unmarried woman, who has preſerved the purity of her body; but ſome think, that by abuſe, they are uſed to expreſs a young woman, whether ſhe has kept her virginity, or no; and the more preciſely to expreſs virginity, Scripture adds to the words maid, or virgin, neither had any man known her. Gen. xxiv. 16. Numb. xxxi. 17, 18. Sometimes virgin ſignifies only a young woman: Lament like a virgin [young woman] girded with ſackcloth for the huſband of her youth: Joel i. 8. In Proverbs, xxx. 19. Solomon acknowledges the tokens of virginity to be very fallacious: Quartum penitus ignoro. - - - - viam viri in adoleſcenta: Hebrew, in adoleſcentula.

The

The Hebrew word almah ſignifies a perſon concealed; for young unmarried women lived in retired apartments, where men did not go. And when young women were obliged to walk out, they were always veiled, and never appeared uncovered. When Amnon, the ſon of David, had conceived a violent paſſion for Tamar, he could not ſo much as ſee her: For ſhe was a virgin, and Amnon thought it hard for him to do any thing to her. 2 Sam. xiii. 2. When Heliodorus came to Jeruſalem, to take away the treaſures of the temple, the moſt recluſe virgins came out of their retirements; ſome appeared in the ſtreets, ſome at their windows, and others upon their walls. 2 Macc. iii. 19.

VIRGIN is often uſed in Scripture, for a people, a city, a nation. The virgin the daughter of Babylon, the virgin the daughter of Sion, of Iſrael, of Egypt, of Sidon, &c. ſignifies the province, the land, the people, of Babylon, Sion, Iſrael, Egypt, Sidon, &c.

The Virgin, by way of eminence, or excellence, is ſaid of the Holy Virgin Mary, the mother of Jeſus Chriſt; a virgin as well after, as before, her bringing forth: a virgin marked out by thoſe words of Iſaiah, vii. 14. A virgin ſhall conceive and bear a ſon, and ſhall call his name Immanuel. Matth. i. 23.

The ſtate of virginity was not an honourable ſtate, in the Eaſt. When the daughter of Jephthah was to be ſacrificed by her father, Judg. x. 37, 38. ſhe goes to bewail her virginity on the mountains. Sterility was a reproach in Iſrael: Iſaiah, iv. 1. intending to ſhew the ſcarcity of men in Iſrael, ſays, that ſeven women ſhould offer themſelves in marriage to one man, and ſay to him, we ſhall be no charge to you; we will maintain ourſelves in food and cloaths; only take us for wives, and deliver us from the reproach of barrenneſs that we are now under. The ſame prophet comforts Jeruſalem, ſaying, Thou ſhalt forget the ſhame of thy youth, and ſhalt not remember the reproach of thy widowhood any more. Iſaiah liv. 4.

VISION. This is ſaid of the ſeveral ways by which God manifeſted himſelf to the patriarchs, the prophets, and other ſaints. He ſent them prophetic angels; he appeared to them by night in dreams; he illuminated their minds; he ſpoke to them by his voice; he ſent them ecſtaſies, tranſported them beyond themſelves, and ſhewed them things that eye had not ſeen, nor ear heard, nor the heart of man conceived. The Lord ſhews himſelf to Moſes, and ſpeaks to him when he was at the mouth of the cave. Jeſus Chriſt manifeſts himſelf to his apoſtles, in his tranſfiguration upon Tabor, and on ſeveral other occaſions, after his reſurrection. God appeared to Abraham; he ſhewed himſelf to Iſaiah and to Ezekiel, in the ſplendor of his glory. All this, in Scripture-ſtyle, is expreſſed by the name of viſion.

The Lord appeared to Abraham in a viſion, Gen. xv. 1, 2, 5. and ſaid to him, Fear not, Abram, I am thy ſhield, and thy exceeding great reward. This happened in the night, for he brought him forth abroad, and ſaid, Look now towards heaven, and tell the ſtars, if thou be able to number them. And he ſaid unto him, So ſhall thy ſeed be. The Lord alſo appeared to Jacob by night, and told him, he need not ſcruple to go down into Egypt, Gen. xlvi. 2. When Moſes perceived the buſh burn without being conſumed, he ſaid, I will now turn aſide, and ſee this great ſight, [viſion] why the buſh is not burnt. Exod. iii. 3. When Aaron and Miriam murmured againſt Moſes, Numb. xii. 6, 7, 8. the Lord ſaid, Hear now my words: if there be a prophet among you, I, the Lord, will make myſelf known unto him in a viſion, and will ſpeak unto him in a dream. My ſervant Moſes is not ſo, who is faithful in all mine houſe: with him will I ſpeak, mouth to mouth, even apparently, and not in dark ſpeeches; and the ſimilitude of the Lord ſhall he behold. The falſe prophet Balaam, whoſe heart was ſo perverſe, ſaith of himſelf, that he had ſeen the viſions of the Almighty. Numb. xxiv. 14, 16. In the time of the high-prieſt Eli, 1 Sam. iii. 1. The word of the Lord was precious in thoſe days, there was no open viſion: there was no acknowledged prophet.

Viſions are uſed for prophecies written by the prophets. The Viſions of Obadiah; of Nahum; of Iſaiah, the ſon of Amos, &c.

Viſion often ſignifies the bare appearance of an object, or what is ſeen by the eyes. The Meſſiah will not judge according to appearances: not according to the ſight of his eyes, Iſaiah xi. 3. Ezekiel, deſcribing the throne of God, ſays, that the wheels upon which it moved, reſembled the ſea: Ezek. i. 16. And chap. viii. 2. he ſays, that the majeſty of God appeared to him quaſi viſio electri. St. John, Rev. iv. 3. ſays, that he ſaw about the Lord as it were a rainbow, of the colour of an emerald.

Viſion ſometimes ſtands for the vain prophecies of viſionary people. The falſe prophets had only deceitful viſions: lying viſions; Jerem. xxiii. 16. Thoſe that ſee viſions, or the viſionary, ſhall be confounded. Mic. iii. 7.

In ſome paſſages viſions ſtand for the ſpectres and phantoms, that ſometimes appear and frighten the wicked. Moſes ſeems to hint at dreadful viſions of this nature ſeen by the Egyptians, while their country was involved in darkneſs: Deut. iv. 34. Horribiles viſiones juxta omnia quæ fecit Dominus in Ægypto. The book of Wiſdom ſpeaks plainly of them, Wiſd. xvii. 9, 10. xviii. 19. Viſiones enim quæ illos turbaverunt, hæc præmonebant, ne inſcii quare mala patiebantur perirent. Eliphaz, in Job, deſcribes his fear, when a ſpirit ſpoke to him in the night. "In thoughts from the viſions of the night, when deep ſleep falleth upon men; fear came upon me, and trembling, which made all my bones to ſhake. Then a ſpirit paſſed before my face, the hair of my fleſh ſtood up. It ſtood ſtill, but I could not diſcern the form thereof; an image was before mine eyes, there was ſilence, and I heard a voice." Job iv. 13, &c. See alſo Job vii. 14.

VISIT. The term, to viſit, is taken either, 1. in a good, or, 2. an evil, ſenſe.

1. God viſited Sarah in his mercy, and gave her a ſon. Gen. xxi. 1. He viſited the Iſraelites in Egypt, and ſent them Moſes to deliver them. Exod. iii. 16. He viſited Hannah the mother of Samuel. 1 Sam. ii. 21. Laſtly, he viſited and redeemed his people by the coming of the Meſſiah. Luke i. 48.

2. He viſits alſo in his wrath, and vengeance. He viſits the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, to the third and fourth generation. Exod. xx. 5. He threatens to viſit the iniquity of the worſhippers of the golden calf, in the day of his vengeance. Exod. xxxii. 34. He ſays, he will viſit the land of Canaan, whoſe crimes are full. Levit. xviii. 25. Nothing is more frequent in the language of the prophets, than the verb to viſit, in the ſenſe of puniſhing, chaſtiſing, &c.

To viſit, is alſo uſed inſtead of taking a review of; for example, of an army, or of a flock: Ego requiram oves meas, & viſitabo eas, ſicut viſitat paſtor gregem ſuum. Ezek. xxxiv. 11, 12. Zech. x. 3. Mine anger was kindled againſt the ſhepherds, and I puniſhed the goats: for the Lord of Hoſts hath viſited his flock, the houſe of Judah. The author of Eccleſiaſticus, xlix. 18. has uſed the term to viſit, in a very extraordinary ſenſe, when he ſays, the bones of the patriarch Joſeph have been viſited, and have propheſied after his death: Oſſa ipſius viſitata ſunt. Joſeph had foretold to his brethren, that the Lord would viſit them after his death, Gen. l. 42. and he conjured them, that they ſhould not leave his body behind them in Egypt, but carry it with them into the land of Canaan. This was performed by Moſes: his bones were viſited; they were taken out of his tomb; and they may be ſaid in ſome ſenſe to have propheſied, by verifying Joſeph's prophecy [rather of which removal he had propheſied.]

Viſitans ſpeciem tuam non peccabis, ſays Job v. 24. Some have underſtood this of the lawful uſe of marriage: but the Hebrew imports, you ſhall viſit, you ſhall take a review of, you ſhall govern your dwelling, and you ſhall not ſin. Eliphaz ſpeaks of the conduct of a wiſe and prudent man.

To viſit is alſo taken for paying viſits of civility, friendſhip, or duty; as when Jeſſe ſent his ſon David to viſit his brethren in the army to know how they did. 1 Sam. xvii. 18. And when David went to viſit his ſon Amnon, who was ſick; 2 Sam. xiii. 6. and when Ahaziah, king of Judah, went to pay a viſit to Jehoram, king of Iſrael. 2 Kings ix. 16. Or when St. Paul and Barnabas went to viſit the churches they had planted. Acts xv. 36.

A viſit, viſitation, as well as the verb to viſit, is ſometimes taken for a viſit of mercy from God, but oftener for a viſit of rigor and vengeance: day of viſitation, year of viſitation, time of viſitation, or ſimply, viſitation, generally ſignifies, the time of affliction, and vengeance. [INSPECTION.]

VITELLIUS. Lucius Vitellius, the cenſor, father of the emperor A. Vitellius, was made governor of Syria, at the expiration of his conſulate, A. D. 35, and the emperor Tiberius intruſted him with the management of affairs in the Eaſt, which were then very much embarraſſed. The ſame year, or the year following, at fartheſt, he came to Jeruſalem at the feaſt of the Paſſover, and was very magnificently entertained there. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. viii. cap. 6. As an acknowledgment of this reception, he releaſed the city from a tax on the fruits ſold there. He alſo committed to the care of the Jews the high-prieſt's habit, and all the pontifical ornaments, which Herod and the Romans had kept till then in the Tower Antonia. He depoſed Joſeph Caiaphas from the high-prieſthood, and put into his place Jonathan, ſon of Ananus; after which he returned to Antioch.

When the emperor Tiberius had given him orders to make war upon the Arabians, he marched to Ptolemais, with intention to paſs through Judea with his troops, on his way to Petra. But the chief of the Jews waited on him, and intreated him to take another route; becauſe their law did not allow them to ſuffer ſtrange gods in their country, and images, ſuch as were upon the Roman enſigns. He complied, ſent his army another way, and came himſelf to Jeruſalem, accompanied only by a few friends; and

Herod

Herod the Tetrarch. He there offered ſacrifices, and took the prieſthood from Jonathan, whom he had made high-prieſt but two years before, and gave it to Theophilus, the brother of Jonathan. He was again at Jeruſalem, when he heard of the death of the emperor Tiberius; he then took the oath of fidelity from the Jews, in the name of the new emperor Caligula, for whom he offered ſolemn ſacrifices. Philo Legat. p. 1041. In the foregoing year, A. D. 36. he had ſent Pilate the governor of Judea to Rome, to juſtify himſelf to the emperor, for his violence againſt the Samaritans. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 7. This is the ſum of what we know concerning this L. Vitellius, governor of Syria, who got as much eſteem in this province, for his good government; as he deſerved contempt at Rome, for his ſervile flattery to Caius and Claudius. Tacit. Annal. lib. vi. cap. 32.

ULAI, אולי, ὑλαὶ, by the ancient geographers of the Greeks named ὕλαῖος, ſtrength, from אול ul: otherwiſe, fool, ſenſeleſs; from אויל ovil. The Hebrew is אובל-אולי ubal-ulai; but Ubal ſignifies a river, and Ulai is the name of the river.

ULAI, the river Euleus, that runs by the city Shuſhan in Perſia. Daniel had a famous viſion on the river Ulai, and at the gate of this river; i. e. the gate of this city towards the Ulai. Dan. viii. 2, 16.

ULAM, אולם, the porch, the court; from אלם ulam; otherwiſe, their ſtrength, or their folly; from אול ul, ſtrength, and אויל avil, ſenſeleſs, and the pronoun ם am, theirs.

I. ULAM, ſon of Machir, and of Maachah, and father of Bedan, of Benjamin, 1 Chron. vii. 16.

II. ULAM, ſon of Eſhek, of Benjamin, 1 Chron. viii. 39.

III. ULAM. Euſebius ſays, in Οὐλαμᾶς, that there is a village called Ulamma, twelve miles from Diocæſarea, Eaſt.

ULAM-AIS. The Septuagint ſays, that the ancient name of the city of Dan was Ulamais; but in the Hebrew it is Ulam-laiſh; which is to be tranſlated heretofore Laiſh. And the true ancient name of Dan was certainly Laiſh, as Judges xviii. 29.

ULAM-US, or Ulam-Luz: the Septuagint have taken this for the ancient name of Bethel; but the Hebrew ſays, Ulam-Luz, Gen. xxviii. 19. i. e. heretofore Luz, Vide Hieron. in Bethel.

ULATHA, a city between Galilee and Trachonitis. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xv. cap. 13.

ULLA, עלא, elevation, or holocauſt, or leaf; from עלה halah: otherwiſe, young child; from עלל halal.

ULLA, or Olla, of Aſher. He had three ſons, Arab, Haniel, and Rezia, 1 Chron. vii. 39.

UMMAH, עמה, hidden, covered; from עמם hamam: otherwiſe, his people; from עם ham, a people, and the pronoun ה he, his: otherwiſe, with her; from the prepoſition עם om, with, and the pronoun ה he, her.

UMMAH, or Amma, a city of Aſher, Joſh. xix. 30.

UNCTION. Unctions were very frequent among the Hebrews. They anointed and perfumed, from principles both of health and neatneſs. They anointed the hair, head, and beard. Pſal. cxxxiii. 2. At their feaſts, and rejoicings, they anointed the whole body; but ſometimes only the head or feet. John xii. 3. Luke vii. 37, 38. Matth. vi. 17. The anointing of dead bodies was alſo practiſed to preſerve them from corruption. Mark xiv. 8. xvi. 1. Luke xxiii. 56. They anointed their kings and high-prieſts, at their inauguration. Exod. xxix. 29. Levit. iv. 3. Judg. ix. 8. 1 Sam. ix. 16. 1 Kings xix. 15, 16. They alſo anointed the ſacred veſſels of the tabernacle and temple, to conſecrate them. Exod. xxx. 26, &c.

Unction, in general, ſignifies a particular ſanctification; a deſignation to the ſervice of God, to an holy and ſacred uſe. For example, as Jacob went to Meſopotamia, he anointed with oil the ſtone upon which he had reſted, and whereon God had favoured him with a viſion. Gen. xxviii. 18. This unction was a kind of dedication of this ſtone, as an altar to the Lord. Some years afterwards he came to the ſame place, and conſecrated this ſtone a-new by an holy unction, Gen. xxxvi. 14. God appoints to Moſes the manner of making the oil, or the perfumed ointment, which the prieſts and the veſſels of the tabernacle were to be anointed with. The moſt exquiſite perfumes and balſams were ingredients in it. He adds, This ſhall be an holy anointing oil unto me, throughout your generations; upon man's fleſh ſhall it not be poured; neither ſhall ye make any other like it, after the compoſition of it: it is holy, and it ſhall be holy unto you. Whoſoever compoundeth any like it, or whoſoever putteth any of it upon a ſtranger, ſhall even be cut off from his people, Exod. xxx. 23, &c. Ezekiel upbraids his people with having made a like perfume for their own uſe. Ezek. xxiii. 41. Thymiama meum & unguentum meum poſuiſti ſuper eam [menſam tuam] The unction given to ſacred perſons, and to ſacred ornaments, and utenſils, of the temple or tabernacle, to the altars, and baſins, removed them from ordinary and common uſe; raiſed them to an appropriate dignity, rendered them holy, ſacred, and and reverend. The unction received by Aaron, and his ſons, devolved on his whole race, which thereby became wholly devoted to the ſervice of the Lord, and conſecrated to his worſhip. Vide Levit. viii. 1, 2, 3, &c. Exod. xxix. 7. Pſalm cxxxiii. 2. The Rabbins think the holy oil was poured on the head of Aaron in the form of a X, or St. Andrew's croſs; according to others in the form of a Caph, or כ. Many are of opinion, that of the ordinary prieſts, the ſons of Aaron, the hands only were anointed. The Levites did not receive any unction.

Theſe ceremonies were continued ſeven days. The Rabbins inform us, that while the ointment or perfume laſted, that was compoſed by Moſes, they thus anointed all the high-prieſts that ſucceeded, for ſeven days. But when this perfume was exhauſted, they contented themſelves with inſtalling the high prieſt for ſeven days, in his ſacred habit. Selden de Succeſſion. in Pontif. lib. ii. cap. 9. & Cunæus de Rep. Heb. The former, therefore, were called high-prieſts anointed, Levit. iv. 3. v. 16. and the latter were ſaid to be initiated in their habits. They ſay, there was never made any new oil, after that of Moſes was ſpent; which they think laſted to the captivity of Babylon. But the Chriſtian fathers believe, that the unction of the high-prieſts continued to the coming of the true anointed, the Meſſiah, Jeſus Chriſt. Beſides, Moſes no where forbids to renew, or compoſe again, this ointment. It even appears, that he intended it ſhould be repeated as occaſion required, by his ſetting down its compoſition ſo punctually.

As to the unction of kings, it is not commanded by Moſes: but we plainly ſee the practice of it in the ſacred hiſtory. Samuel gave the unction to Saul, 1 Sam. x. 1. Samuel took a vial of oil, and poured it upon his head, and kiſſed him, and ſaid, is it not becauſe the Lord hath anointed thee to be captain over his inheritance? This anointing was renewed ſome time after at Gilgal, [1 Sam. xi. 15. Vulg. & Heb. Fecerunt ibi Regem Saul. LXX. & Joſeph. Unxit ibi Samuel Saulem in Regem. Καὶ ἔχρισε Σαμουὴλ ἐκεῖ τὸν Σαοὺλ εἰς βασιλέα, &c.] when Saul had delivered Jabeſh-Gilead from the violence of Nahaſh king of the Ammonites. Samuel received orders from the Lord, to give the royal unction to young David: Samuel took the horn of oil, and anointed him in the midſt of his brethren, 1 Sam. xvi. 13. And as his title to the crown was much diſputed by the houſe of Saul, the unction was given him three times, reckoning this the firſt. He was afterwards conſecrated at Hebron, by the tribe of Judah, after the death of Saul; 2 Sam. ii. 4. and, laſtly, at Hebron, by all Iſrael, after the death of Abner. 2 Sam. v. 1, 2, 3, &c. When Abſalom rebelled againſt his father, he alſo cauſed himſelf to be anointed with the holy oil: Solomon alſo was anointed by the high-prieſt Zadok, and by the prophet Nathan, 2 Sam. xix. 10. 1 Kings i. 39.

We do not find that the kings of Iſrael generally practiſed this ceremony. The prophet Elijah received an order from the Lord to give the royal unction to Hazael, for his ruling over Syria; and to Jehu the ſon of Nimſhi, for his reigning over Iſrael, 1 Kings xix. 15, 16. Elijah did not execute this commiſſion himſelf; but, his diſciple Eliſha performed it on the perſon of Jehu. He is the only king of Iſrael whoſe unction is expreſsly mentioned in Scripture. But as to the kings of Judah, we find many inſtances of it, even down to the fall of this kingdom, eſpecially when there was any difficulty about the ſucceſſion to the crown: as, under Joaſh, and under Jehoahaz, ſons of Joſiah, who was not the eldeſt ſon of this prince, 2 Kings xi. 12. After the return from the captivity, unction was no longer practiſed as to the kings; nor even as to the prieſts, if the Jews may be believed.

Laſtly, it is ſaid in Scripture, (or is implied) that the prophets were alſo anointed: but we have no particulars of the manner. It is even doubted, whether they did indeed receive any real unction. Elijah is ſent to anoint Eliſha; 1 Kings xix. 16. Eliſha the ſon of Shaphat of Abelmeholah, ſhalt thou anoint to be prophet in thy room: but as to the execution of this command, Elijah does nothing to Eliſha but throw his cloak over his ſhoulders. It is therefore very probable that the word unction, in this place, only imports a particular appointment, deſignation, or call, to the office of a prophet.

The unction of Chriſt the Meſſiah, the anointed of the Lord, by way of excellence, was repreſented by all theſe we have now mentioned. It was foretold in Pſal. xlv. 7. Thou loveſt righteouſneſs, and hateſt iniquity; therefore God, thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladneſs, above thy fellows. And in Iſaiah lxi. 1. The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, becauſe the Lord hath anointed me, &c. And Dan. ix. 24. Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy city.. to ſeal up the viſion and prophecy, and to anoint the moſt holy.

In the Chriſtian diſpenſation we acknowledge the ſpiritual unction of Jeſus Chriſt, the true anointed of the Father, Luke iv. 18. Acts iv. 27. x. 38. who has anointed us by his grace, who hath ſealed us with his ſeal, and hath given us the pledge of the Holy Spirit, which dwells in our hearts. 2 Cor. i. 21.

[Our Lord was alſo anointed, perſonally; at leaſt, ſome parts of his perſon, by repenting converts: but not, that we read of, by way of dignity, or to public honour. [Vide MESSIAH] Was not the ſpitting in his face, by the ſoldiers a mock unction; as the crown of thorns, and the purple robe, were mock enſigns of royalty?]

St. Mark, vi. 13. informs us, that when the apoſtles were ſent by Jeſus Chriſt, to preach throughout Judea, they worked many miracles, they anointed the ſick, and healed them in the name of the Lord. St. James gives directions, that the ſick among the faithful ſhould ſend for the prieſts of the church, who ſhall pray for him, and give him unction with oil, in the name of the Lord. He ſays, that prayer, accompanied with faith, ſhall heal the ſick; that the Lord will comfort him, and if he have ſinned, it ſhall be remitted to him. Upon this it is that the church [of Rome, Concil. Trident. Seſſ. xiv. cap. 1, 2, 3, 4. de Sacram. Extremæ Unctionis.] founds her extreme unction, acknowledges it as an inſtitution of Jeſus Chriſt, and receives it as one of her ſeven ſacraments, to which the ſanctifying grace is promiſed. [forgetting that St. James directs this unction for the purpoſe of reſtoring the ſick to health, or life: whereas the church of Rome employs it for the purpoſe of diſmiſſing the expiring ſoul: i. e. for death. The cuſtom of unction is common in the Eaſt, it is uſed civilly, i. e. by way of perſonal elegance and dreſs; medically, as it is beneficial in certain diſorders, and even ſay ſome, cures the plague; and to this uſe of it St. James evidently alludes. It is uſed alſo officially, as appears in the foregoing parts of this article.]

UNICORN, Greek, Monoceros; Latin, Unicornis; Hebrew, ראם Reem, Numb. xxiii. 22. Deut. xxxiii. 17. Job xxxix. 9. Pſalm xxix. 6. Iſai. xxxiv. 7. Profane authors have given ſuch odd and extraordinary deſcriptions of this animal, as to have brought it into queſtion, whether there ever were true unicorns? travellers are but little agreed in their deſcriptions of the unicorn. Marmol ſays, it is like a foal of two years old, except that it has a beard like a goat; and in the middle of its forehead a horn three feet long, ſmooth, white, and ſtreaked with yellow. Jerome Lobo ſays, that in Ethiopia there is an animal called Arvocharis, which is extremely ſwift, has but one horn, and much reſembles a roebuck. John Gabriel, a Portugueſe, tells us, that in the kingdom of Damor he ſaw an unicorn, which had a beautiful white horn on his forehead, of the length of a foot and a half: the hair of his neck and of his tail was black and ſhort. Vincent le Blanc relates, that he ſaw a unicorn in the ſeraglio of the king of Pegu, whoſe tongue was very long and rugged. Its head was rather like that of a ſtag than that of a horſe. Louis de Bartheme ſays, that at the Soldan's of Mecca, in Arabia, he ſaw two unicorns, which had been ſent him as preſents by a king of Ethiopia. They were as large as a colt of thirty months old, of a dark colour, and had heads much like that of a deer, a horn of three fathoms long, ſhort manes, ſmall legs, the feet cloven, and hoofs like a goat. [q. ANTELOPES?] There are ſea-unicorns, which ſhould be called fiſhes, Narwhol: theſe furniſh the unicorns' horns in the cabinets of the curious.

It follows plainly, either that the generality of ſuch accounts of unicorns muſt be falſe; or that travellers have confounded ſeveral ſpecies of animals into one. We know that there are ſeveral kinds of animals in Ethiopia and the Indies, which have a ſingle horn, ſome upon the noſe, others upon the forehead, others upon the head. Dalechamp, in Plin. lib. viii. xxi. lib. xi. cap. 46. has obſerved as far as ſeven ſpecies of this ſort. Coſmas Monach. tom. ii. Collect. SS. PP. p. 338. the Egyptian, has given us the deſcription of a rhinoceros, an animal well known in Ethiopia. Mr. Chardin, Travels into Perſia, tom. iii. p. 45. ſaw a rhinoceros in Perſia, which had an horn on his noſe, nearly of the bigneſs and ſhape of a ſmall ſugar-loaf. The colour of this horn was a dark grey, as alſo the ſkin of the animal. The ſnout of the rhinoceros is round, turned downward. He has but four teeth, two above, and two below. His eyes are ſet very low, almoſt over-againſt his lips. His tail is ſmall, and made up of nine or ten joints. His whole hide, except his back and head, is covered with little knobs or protuberances. His feet are ſhort and thick, having three toes, or ſtubbed hoofs before, and a callus behind.

Interpreters are not agreed that the Hebrew word Rheem ſignifies either an unicorn, i. e. a rhinoceros; or a monoceros. Some think it denotes the Urus, a kind of wild ox: others, underſtand it of a deer, or the roe-buck; or the oryx, which is an Arabian kind of roe-buck, very large, of a white ſkin, and which has very large horns. Ariſtotle ſays, the oryx has but one horn; but the Arabians, who call it Rim, ſay it has two horns. The Rheem was very wild; for God aſks Job, xxxix. 9, 10. if he could tame the Rheem? if this creature would eat meat in his ſtables, like a domeſtic animal? and if he could put a yoke upon it? Moſes, magnifying the ſtrength of Joſeph, Deut. xxxiii. 17. ſays, that his horns are like the horns of unicorns, or of the Rheem; and the Pſalmiſt deſires of God, Pſal. xxii. 21. to preſerve him from the mouth of the lion, and from the horn of the Rheem. See Bochart de Animal, ſacr. p. 1. lib. iii. cap. 27.

The rhinoceros is much leſs than the elephant, but of extraordinary ſtrength. [We have had ſeveral ſhewn as ſights, in London: but none ſo large as to give a juſt idea of the animal. The largeſt, and fineſt in Europe, was in the menagerie at Verſailles, it was very tame; but to prevent accidents, its horn was cut off, when I ſaw it, which deprived the animal of much of its natural characteriſtic appearance.]

VOCATION. This term has been appropriated chiefly to denote the grace of our calling to the Chriſtian faith and religion; a vocation which is entirely gratuitous on the part of God; who called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpoſe and grace given us in Jeſus Chriſt. 2 Tim. i. 9. The chain and connection of graces that God vouchſafes us, to bring us to ſalvation, is expreſſed Rom. viii. 30. Whom he did predeſtinate, them he alſo called; and whom he called, them he alſo juſtified; and whom he juſtified, them he alſo glorified. It is our part, by the help of God, to make our calling ſure, by the practice of good works; 2 Pet. i. 10. and to live in a manner ſuitable to that ſtate to which we are called; 2 Theſſ. i. 11. for our Saviour tells us, that many are called, but few are choſen. Matth. xxii. 14.

VOICE. The daughter of the voice, in Hebrew, Bath-col, was a way in which God was ſuppoſed to diſcover his will, after prophecy had ceaſed, but its uſe was caſual and fortuitous: conſequently not authentic.

By the word voice is underſtood, not only the voice of a man, or beaſt, but all other ſorts of ſounds, noiſes, or cries. Thunder has often the name of the Voice of God given to it. Moſes ſays, Exod. xx. 18. that all the people ſaw, or heard, the voice which was uttered from Sinai: i. e. the noiſe of the thunder.

Samuel ſays to Iſrael, 1 Sam. xii. 17. Is it not wheat-harveſt to day? I will call unto the Lord, and he will ſend thunder [Heb. a voice,] and rain. Job ſays, xxxvii. 2, 3, &c. Hear attentively the noiſe of his voice, and the ſound that goeth out of his mouth. He directeth it under the whole heaven, and his lightning unto the ends of the earth. After it a voice roareth, he thundereth with the voice of his excellency, and he will not ſtay them when his voice is heard. God thundereth marvellouſly with his voice; great things doth he, which we cannot comprehend. And the Pſalmiſt, xxix. 3. the voice of the Lord thundereth, &c. ſee the paſſage.

To hear the voice of any one, is to obey him. Pſalm lxxxi. 13. O that my people had hearkened unto me, and Iſrael had walked in my ways! Ex. xv. 26. If thou wilt diligently hearken to the voice of the Lord thy God, and wilt do that which is right in his ſight, and wilt give ear to his commandments, and keep all his ſtatutes; I will put none of theſe diſeaſes upon thee, which I have brought upon the Egyptians. But, on the contrary; If thou wilt not hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to obſerve to do all his commandments, and his ſtatutes, which I command thee this day, then all theſe curſes ſhall come upon thee, and overtake thee. Deut. xxviii. 15.

The mother of the ſeven brethren Maccabees ſpoke to them patria voce, i. e. in Hebrew, or in Syriac; for they were examined in Greek, 2 Macc. vii. 8, 21, &c.

St. Paul ſays, 1 Cor. xiv. 7, 8, 10. that there is nothing in the world but what has its voice: inſtruments of muſic, the trumpet, the harp, &c.

The voice of the blood of Abel cried to the Lord from the earth, Gen. iv, 10. Judas Maccabæus intreated of the Lord to have compaſſion on the holy city, and to hear the voice of the blood that cried to him for vengeance, 1 Macc. viii. 3.

VOW, Votum; a promiſe made to God, of doing ſome good thing hereafter. The uſe of vows is obſervable throughout Scripture. Jacob, going into Meſopotamia, vowed to God the tenth of his eſtate, and promiſed to offer it, at Bethel, to the honour of God, Geneſis xxviii. 22. Moſes enacts ſeveral laws for the regulation and execution of vows. A man might devote himſelf, or his children, to the Lord. Jephthah devoted his daughter, and ſome think he offered her in ſacrifice, Judg. xi. 30, 31. Samuel was vowed and conſecrated to the ſervice of the Lord, and was really offered to him, to ſerve in the tabernacle. 1 Sam. i. 21, 22, &c. If a man or woman vowed themſelves to the Lord, they were obliged to adhere ſtrictly to his ſervice, according to the conditions of the vow; but in ſome caſes might be redeemed. A man from twenty years of age till ſixty, gave fifty ſhekels of ſilver; and a woman gave thirty. From the age of five years to twenty, a man gave twenty ſhekels, and a woman ten: from a month old to five years, they gave for a boy five ſhekels, and for a girl three. A man of ſixty years old, or upwards, gave fifteen ſhekels, and a woman of the ſame age age gave ten. If the perſon was poor, and could not procure this ſum, the prieſt impoſed a ranſom upon him, according to his abilities, Levit. xxvii. 3.

Any one who had vowed an animal that was clean, had not the liberty of redeeming it, or of exchanging it, but muſt ſacrifice it to the Lord. If it was an unclean animal, and ſuch as was not allowed to be ſacrificed, the prieſt made a valuation of it; and if the proprietor would redeem it, he added a fifth part to the value, by way of forfeit. They did the ſame, in proportion, when the thing vowed was a houſe, or a field. They could not devote the firſt-born, becauſe, in their own nature they belonged to the Lord. Whatever was devoted by anathema, could not be redeemed, of whatever nature, or quality, it was. An animal was put to death, and other things were devoted for ever to the Lord, Levit. xxvii. 28, 29. The conſecration of Nazarites was a particular kind of vow. Vide NAZARITES.

The vows and promiſes of children were void of courſe, except ratified, by the expreſs, or tacit, conſent of their parents, Numb. xxx. 1, 2, 3, &c. Alſo the vows of a married woman were of no validity, except confirmed by the expreſs, or tacit, conſent of her huſband. But widows, or liberated wives, were bound by their vows, whatever they were. Deut. xxiii. 21, 22. When thou ſhalt vow a vow unto the Lord thy God, thou ſhalt not ſlack to pay it; for the Lord thy God will ſurely require it of thee, and it would be ſin in thee. But if thou ſhalt forbear to vow, it ſhall be no ſin in thee. See Eccleſ. v. 3, 4, &c.

Under the New Teſtament alſo we ſee vows. St. Paul made a vow of Nazariteſhip, when he left Cenchrea to go to Jeruſalem, Acts xviii. 18. When arrived at Jeruſalem, St. James the apoſtle and the brethren adviſed him to join himſelf to four Judaizing Chriſtians, who had a vow of Nazariteſhip, and to contribute to the charge of their purification in the temple. Acts xxi. 18, 19, &c. We have ſeen in all ages a great number of Chriſtian men and women, who have obliged themſelves by promiſes, either public, or particular, to the obſervation of evangelical precepts.

The vows of the Jews, always included, at leaſt implicitly, a kind of imprecation againſt themſelves, if they failed in the performance. Such vows were generally expreſſed in a diſtinct and plain manner, but the penalty was declared in a conditional and hypothetical manner. For example, Pſal. xcv. 11 I have ſworn in my wrath, IF they ſhall enter into my reſt. I have ſworn they ſhall not enter, and I have ſaid,—Let me be a liar,—or ſomething elſe, not expreſſed,—if they do enter. And David vows to the Lord, to build him a temple, ſaying, Surely I will not come [or, if I come,] into the tabernacle of my houſe—until I find out a place for the Lord, an habitation for the mighty God of Jacob. Where we obſerve, that he does not mention the penalty to which he devotes himſelf, if he ſhould fail of performing his vow: as if he had ſaid, "let God treat me with the utmoſt rigour, if I allow myſelf the leaſt reſpite, till I have accompliſhed my deſign."

Sometimes they expreſſed the penalty, or imprecation; but then it was againſt their enemies, or againſt brute beaſts. For example, So, and more alſo, do God unto the enemies of David, if I leave any that pertain to him by the morning light, any that piſſeth againſt the wall. He does not ſay, "may God treat me as a forſworn perſon, if I leave any one alive of the family of Nabal;" but,—may God do ſo to the enemies of David, if I leave ſo much as a dog alive. Generally the Scripture expreſſes the imprecations by, God do ſo to me—and more alſo, &c. without ſpecifying any particular penalty, or imprecation; whether it be that the perſon vowing did not expreſs any, or that out of diſcretion he forbore to mention any, [or that the penalty was ſo publicly known, being cuſtomary, that it was underſtood without being expreſſed.] See DEVOTING, and IMPRECATION.

At the time of our Saviour the Phariſees had ſtrangely altered the laws of vows, and oaths, by their ſubtilties. See CORBAN.

This is what Leo of Modena tells us concerning the practice of the modern Jews in relation to to vows, p. 2. cap. 4. "Vows are not much approved of among them; but when they are made, they ought to be performed. Yet a huſband may acquit his wife, even though againſt her inclinations, of any vow about abſtinence, to which ſhe may have engaged herſelf: but this muſt be done within the firſt four and twenty hours that he has knowledge of it. A father alſo may annul the vow of his daughter, if ſhe is unmarried, as is ſaid, Numb. xxx. 4.

"They hold alſo, by a tradition, that a man or woman who makes an oath, or a vow, provided it is no prejudice to any third perſon, and that they have good reaſon to revoke it; they maintain, I ſay, that ſuch may be diſpenſed with for not performing it, by a Rabbin of authority, or by three other men, though of no diſtinction. He therefore that would be delivered from the obligation of his vow, repreſents his reaſons to a Rabbin, or to three private perſons, who, if they find them ſufficient, may ſay three times, be thou diſcharged from thy vow. And by this means he obtains his liberty.

UR, אור, ὃρ, fire, light; from אור ur or or, according to different readings: otherwiſe, a valley.

UR, a city of Chaldea, the country of Terah, and of Abraham. Gen. xi. 28. God ordered Abraham to leave Ur, that he might bring him into the land of Canaan, which he intended to give him, and his poſterity. As he was going thither, with Terah his father, and Lot his nephew, at Haran, a city of Meſopotamia, Terah fell ſick, and died. After Abraham had paid his laſt duties to him, he continued his journey, into the land of Canaan, A. M. 2082, ante A. D. 1922.

The city of Ur was in Chaldea, as Scripture aſſures us in more places than one; but its true ſituation is unknown. Some think it was Camarina in Babylonia: others, the Orcha, or Orchoe, in Chaldea, according to Ptolemy and Strabo: others, the Ura, or Sura, in Syria, on the Euphrates. Bochart and Grotius maintain, it is Ura in Meſopotamia, two days journey from Niſibe. Ammian. lib. xxv. cap. 26. It is obſerved, that Chaldea and Meſopotamia are often confounded together, and that it is ſaid indifferently, that this city is in one or the other of theſe two provinces.

The word Ur in Hebrew ſignifies fire; and ſome have pretended, that when Moſes ſays, God brought Abraham out of Ur of the Chaldees, he alluded to a fire into which the Chaldees had caſt him. See ABRAHAM and TERAH. St. Jerom followed this opinion, when he tranſlated Nehem. ix. 7. Thou broughteſt Abraham out of the fire of the Chaldees, inſtead of, out of Ur of the Chaldees. But in his Hebraical Queſtions, he conſiders as a mere fable, what the Jews tell of Abraham's pretended deliverance from the fire of the Chaldees.

It is thought that the name Ur, אור, which ſignifies fire, was given to this city, becauſe the element of fire was worſhipped therein. Fire was the ſymbol of the ſun; which luminary was adored throughout the Eaſt. They kept a ſacred and perpetual fire, to his honour, in certain temples, or encloſures, which were ſhut up on every ſide, but were not covered at the top. See CHAMANIM, PERSIANS. For the mode of paſſing through, or over, fire, vide FRAGMENT, No. LI. p. 99. and for the general prevalence of the worſhip of fire, in Paleſtine, after the time of Abraham, vide the FRAGMENTS "On the name ASH."

Rufinus relates, Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. ii. cap. 26. (See alſo Suidas, under the name Canopus,) that the Chaldeans heretofore carried their deity fire, through all the provinces where they came, to combat the other gods worſhipped therein; that which ever ſhould have the ſuperiority in this conflict might be eſteemed the true god. The gods of braſs, gold, ſilver, wood, and ſtone, were eaſily overcome by the fire; which every where obtained victory. A prieſt of Canopus [of the Nile] in Egypt bethought himſelf of this ſtratagem. The Egytians have certain earthen veſſels with little holes on all ſides, intended to filtrate the water of the Nile: he filled one of theſe veſſels with water, and ſtopped up the holes with wax. He faſtened a head to it, which was ſaid to be the head of Menelas, and ſet it up as a God. The Chaldeans, to make trial of the power of this God, lighted a fire about it, that theſe two deities might contend with each other. But no ſooner had the fire melted the wax that ſtopped up the holes of the pitcher, than the water guſhing out, quenched the fire: ſo that the prieſt of Canopus obtained the victory.

URAI, ſon of Bela, of Benjamin, 1 Chron. vii. 7. Uzzi, Eng. Tr.!

URBANE, mentioned by St. Paul, Rom. xvi. 9. Salute Urbane, our helper in Chriſt. The Greeks keep his feaſt October 31; and ſay, he was ordained biſhop of Macedonia by St. Andrew. The Latins put St. Urbane's feaſt October 30. We know nothing particular of him. The Greeks place him among the ſeventy diſciples.

URI, אורי, ωρι, from ur, fire, light.

URI, father of Bezaleel, of Judah, Exod. xxxi. 2.

URIAH, or Urijah, אוריה, the Lord is my light, or fire, or the light of the Lord; from אור ur, or or, fire, and יה jah, the Lord.

URIAH, celebrated for his misfortune; a Hittite originally, and huſband to Bathſheba. After Bathſheba had committed adultery with David, ſhe found herſelf with child by him, and gave notice of it to David, that he might provide for her reputation. 2 Sam. xi. 5, 6. David wrote to Joab, to ſend him Uriah the Hittite; when he was come, David aſked him news concerning the army, and bid him go home; Uriah went from David, but did not go home, chuſing rather to paſs the night with the officers of the king's king's guard. David being informed of this, aſked him, why did you not go home to refreſh yourſelf after your journey? Uriah anſwered, while the ark of the Lord, while Iſrael and Judah are under tents, and while my lord Joab and his ſervants are lying upon the ground, ſhould I go to my houſe, to eat and drink, and ſleep with my wife? David made him come this day, and eat with him, at his table, making him drink plentifully: yet he went, as before, to ſleep with the officers of the guard.

The day following David ſent him back to the camp, with a letter to Joab, directing him, "Place Uriah in the front of the battle, and contrive to abandon him, that he may die by the hand of the enemy." Joab punctually executed theſe orders, Uriah was expoſed to the beſieged, and killed. When Bathſheba knew of the death of Uriah, ſhe mourned for him; after which David took her to his own houſe. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXXIV. p. 38.

The Rabbins juſtify David and Bathſheba, by ſaying, it was a law in Iſrael, that when a man went to the wars, he left a bill of divorce with his wife, that ſhe might freely marry whom ſhe pleaſed, in his abſence: that Bathſheba took advantage of this liberty, and married David. But why ſhould they excuſe a crime, which Scripture condemns in ſo many places, and which David himſelf confeſſed, and bewailed with ſo many bitter tears? This happened A. M. 2969, ante A. D. 1035.

I. URIJAH, chief prieſt of the Jews under Ahaz, king of Judah. Ahaz going to Damaſcus, to meet Tiglath-Pilneſer, king of Aſſyria, ſaw there an altar, whoſe form pleaſed him ſo much, that he ſent a model of it to the high-prieſt Urijah, with orders to ſet up ſuch an one in the temple of Jeruſalem, which Urijah too well performed. 2 Kings xvi. 10, 11, 12. Ahaz alſo ordered the high-prieſt to remove the brazen altar from before the Lord; and on this new altar to offer the morning and evening ſacrifices, &c. reſerving to himſelf to diſpoſe of the great brazen altar at his pleaſure. Urijah obeyed the orders of this wicked king in every thing. A. M. 3264, ante 740. Urijah ſucceeded Zadok the Second, and was ſucceeded by Shallum.

II. URIJAH, a prophet of the Lord, ſon of Shemaiah of Kirjath-jearim, Jerem. xxvi. 20, 21. who propheſied at the ſame time as Jeremiah, and declared the ſame things againſt Jeruſalem and Judah. Jehoiakim, king of Judah, and his great men, reſolved to ſecure him, and put him to death: but Urijah eſcaped into Egypt. Jehoiakim ſent meſſengers after him, who brought him out of Egypt: he then put him to death by the ſword, and ordered him to be buried diſhonourably, in the graves of the meaneſt of the people. URIEL, אוריאל, God is my light, or fire, the light of God; from אור or, or ur, fire, light, and אל el, God.

I. URIEL. This name is given to an angel, and ſignifies in Hebrew, God is my light. The Jews, and ſome Chriſtians, take him for an angel of light. In an apocryphal Jewiſh book, called, The Prayer of Joſeph, the patriarch Jacob is introduced in converſation with the angels Uriel and Raphael. The ſecond book of Eſdras, (2 Eſdr. iv. 36. Uriel Archangelus, alſo 2 Eſdr. v. 20. ſicut mandavit Uriel Angelus,) ſpeaks of Uriel as of a good angel; as does St. Ambroſe, lib. iii. cap. 3. de Fide: Non moritur Gabriel, non moritur Raphael, non moritur Uriel. The Oriental liturgies, and the prayer-books of the Greeks, often mention the angel Uriel, or Suriel, as a good angel: Honoremus Surielem quartum inter Angelos, ſays the Coptic prayer-book; and in the Ethiopic edition of the New Teſtament, is the picture of the angel Uriel, with this inſcription, St. Uriel, who was with Adam and Eve when they went out of paradiſe. He is alſo found in ſeveral ancient litanies; among others in thoſe that F. Mabillon publiſhed (Analecta, tom. ii.) and which he names Carolinian, as being of the time of Charlemaign. Surius relates, A. D. 1544, was diſcovered at Rome, in the tomb of the empreſs Mary, wife to the emperor Honorius, a plate of gold, on which were written in Greek characters, the names of Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, and Uriel.

M. Thiers, in his epiſtle dedicatory to F. Luke Dachery, before his treatiſe De retinenda voce Paraclitus, printed at Lyons in 1669, maintains that Uriel is the name of an evil angel. He acknowledges that his name is invoked in the ritual of Chartres; but he ſays, he never recites the litanies in which his name is found, without being ſhocked at it. He ſhews, that the councils and fathers never ſpeak of more than three good angels, which are Gabriel, Raphael, and Michael; and that the ſecond Roman council, A. D. 745, Art. 3. condemns a prayer that one Adalbert uſed, wherein he invoked the holy angels, Uriel, Raguel, Tubuel, Michael, Inias, &c. The fathers of this council maintain, tom. 6. Concil. Labb. p. 1561. that all the names now mentioned, excepting that of St. Michael, are not names of angels, but rather of dæmons; Non enim nomina Angelorum, præter nomen Michaelis, ſed nomina Dæmonum ſunt; and that the church acknowledges only the names of three angels, viz. Michael, Gabriel, and Raphael. However, it is proper to obſerve, that the intention of this council was to reject all new, and unuſual, names of angels; which this man endeavored to introduce into the church. But, Uriel was no modern name; it had been long admitted, even among the Latins, as may be ſeen, lib. iv. cap. 33. n. 20. of William Durand, biſhop of Mendes, who died in 1296.

Some apocryphal books aſſure us, that from the beginning of the world, to the hundred and ſixtieth year of Enoch, they did not reckon by years, but by weeks; and that it was the archangel Uriel that revealed to Enoch what were months, years, and the revolutions of the ſeaſons, or of the heavenly bodies. Vide Salmaſ. lib. de annis climactericis.

II. URIEL, ſon of Tahaſh, and father of Uzziah, a Levite, of the family of Kohath. 1 Chron. vi. 24. xv. 5, 11.

III. URIEL, of Gibeah; father of Michaiah, the wife of king Rehoboam, and mother of king Abijah. 2 Chron. xiii. 2.

URIM and Thummim: the literal ſignification of theſe two words is, according to the Hebrew, האורים והתמים, Exod. xxviii. 30. Lights and perfections; or, The ſhining and the perfect. According to Jerom, doctrine and judgment: according to the Seventy, Δήλωσιν καὶ ἀλήθειαν, declaration (or manifeſtation) and truth. Some think, urim and thummim are only epithets, or explanations, of the ſtones on the breaſt-plate of the high-prieſt: as if it were ſaid, "Thou ſhalt put therein ſtones that are ſhining and perfect." Others believe that theſe two words are rather Egyptian than Hebrew; and that the Seventy have given their true ſignification. Eccleſiaſticus hints, chap. xlv. 12. Vulgate, as if manifeſtation and truth were the qualities of the high-prieſt, who was cloathed with the ephod: viri ſapientis judicio & veritate præditi. The ſame appears ſtill more plainly, in Ezra, chap. ii. v. 63. Vulgate, Donec ſurgeret ſacerdos doctus atque perfectus; where the Hebrew, and our Engliſh tranſlation, read, Till there ſtood up a prieſt with urim and with thummim.

But Joſephus, Antiq. lib. iii. cap. 8. and after him ſeveral others, as well ancient as modern authors, maintain, that the urim and thummim were the precious ſtones, of the high-prieſt's breaſt-plate, which diſcovered the will of God, by their extraordinary luſtre, thereby predicting the ſucceſs of events to thoſe who conſulted them. For when theſe ſtones gave no extraordinary luſtre, it was concluded that God did not approve of the matter in queſtion. Joſephus adds, that it was two hundred years, at the time of his writing, ſince theſe ſtones had left off ſhewing this luſtre; ſo that this oracle had ceaſed about one hundred and ten years before Jeſus Chriſt.

Others believe that the urim and thummim was ſomething belonging to the breaſt-plate, but they are not agreed what it was; neither Moſes, nor any other ſacred writer, have diſtinctly expreſſed what it might be. Epiphanius, tract. de 12 gemmis. and Suidas, in ἔφωδ. think, that beſide the twelve ſtones of the breaſt-plate, there was a diamond of extraordinary beauty; which by the livelineſs of its luſtre, indicated to the high-prieſt whether the enterprize in hand was pleaſing to God, or no. Procopius, Arias Montanus, and ſome others, place two ſtones therein, beſide the twelve mentioned by Moſes. But St. Auſtin, qu. 117. in Exod. does not approve of theſe additional ſtones; nor of that pretended miraculous ſplendor of theſe ſtones; ſince Scripture ſays nothing about the matter.

St. Cyril, in Expoſit. in Symboli. ſeems to ſay, that manifeſtation and truth were written on two precious ſtones, or on a plate of gold; which is an opinion pretty much followed, both by ancients and moderns. Others held, that the words urim and thummim were written in embroidery on the breaſt-plate, between the rows of the ſtones, or on two borders; one above, the other below, the pectoral. Rabbi Solomon, followed in this by Eugubinus, believes that the name Jehovah, written on a plate of gold, was the urim and thummim. Spencer, in his diſſertation on theſe words, believes they were two little golden figures which gave reſponſes, which were ſhut up in the pectoral as in a purſe, and which anſwered with an articulate voice, ſuch queſtions as were put to them by the high-prieſt. He ſupports his opinion by the authority of St. Jerom, and of Cedrenus among the ancients; and of ſome Rabbins; of Cornelius à Lapide, and of Louis de Dieu, among the moderns. Philo, de vitâ Moſ. lib. iii. de Monarch. lib. ii. ſeems to have had the ſame thought: he ſays, there were on the breaſt-plate two figures in embroidery, of great virtue, one of which repreſented truth, and the other manifeſtation. M. Le Clerc ſuppoſed, that urim and thummim were the names of ſome precious ſtones which compoſed a great collar, hanging down on the breaſt of the high-prieſt; which might be imitated from the Egyptians, among whom the chief officer of juſtice wore about his neck a figure of truth, engraved on on precious ſtones, and hanging by a golden chain. Diodor. Sicul. lib. ii. cap. 3. Biblioth. Ælian. var. hiſt. lib. xiv. cap. 34. Petrus Vallenſis, in a letter written from Cairo, ſays, that he ſaw in Egypt a very ancient mummy, with a great collar hanging on its breaſt, the end of which which was a tablet of gold, whereon was a bird engraved.

It is not probable that Moſes repreſented, either in relief or embroidery, or engraving, any figure of a man, or other animal: but no ill conſequence can follow from ſuppoſing, that he might repreſent ſome myſterious figure, or hieroglyphic, ſuch as the cherubim.

There is a great diverſity of opinions concerning the manner in which God was conſulted by urim and thummim. See Spencer de Urim & Thummim. cap. 6. ſect. 1, 2, 3, &c. It is agreed, firſt, that this way of conſultation was uſed only in affairs of very great importance. Secondly, that the high-prieſt was the only officiating miniſter in it; and that for this he was cloathed in all his pontifical habits; particularly, he was to have on his pectoral, to which the Urim and Thummim was affixed. And, thirdly, ſay Miſhna in Joma, cap. 7. ſect. 5. Maimon. in Cœle Hammikdaſch. cap. 10. that he was not allowed to perform this ſolemn conſultation for a private perſon, but only for the king, for the preſident of the ſanhedrim, for the general of the army of Iſrael, or other public perſons. And even then not on any affair of a private nature, but for the public welfare of church or ſtate; for the common intereſt of the twelve tribes, whoſe names the high-prieſt wore on his pectoral. Abarbanel. in Exod. xxviii. & in Deut. xxxiii. Rab. Levi Ben Gerſon, & Maimon. ibid.

When the urim and thummim was to be exerciſed, the high-prieſt put on his robes, and preſented himſelf, not in the ſanctuary, where he could enter but once a year, but in the holy place, before the curtain that parted the ſanctum from the ſanctuary. Maimon. ibid Jalkuth, fol. 248. There, ſtanding upright, and turning his face toward the ark of the covenant, on which the divine preſence repoſed, he propoſed the matter for which he conſulted. Behind him, in a direct line, at ſome diſtance, out of the ſanctum, ſtood the perſon for whom he conſulted, expecting with humility and reverence, the anſwer of the Lord. The Rabbins think, that the high-prieſt having then his eyes fixed on the ſtones of the pectoral, which was on his breaſt, he there read the anſwer of the Lord. The letters that raiſed themſelves out of their places, and ſhone with more than ordinary luſtre, were formed into the anſwer deſired. For example; when David enquired of God, "Whether he ſhould go up to one of the cities of Judah? 2 Sam. ii. 1. it was anſwered him, עלה alah, aſcende, "go up." i. e. the three letters, ע ain, ל lamed, and ה he, roſe out of their places, as we may ſay, above the reſt, to compoſe the anſwer. Maimon. in Cœle Hammikdaſch. cap. 10. Zohar. in Exod. Jalkuth. ex lib. Siphre. R. Bechai in Deut. xxxiii. 8. Ramban. Alii.

This notion is very old among the Jews, ſince Joſephus, Antiq. lib. iii. cap. 9. and Philo, l. de Monarchia, 2. underſtood it in this manner, and upon their authority ſeveral of the ancient fathers have thus explained the reſponſes by urim and thummim. Yet there are difficulties herein. Firſt, all the letters of the Hebrew alphabet were not found on the pectoral; there were four wanting, ח heth, ת teth, ז zade, and ק koph. To ſupply theſe, the Rabbins pretend, that the names of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob were alſo on the pectoral; but ſtill ת teth would be wanting. Therefore they ſay, this title alſo was there, Col-elle-ſchibte-Iſrael: See here all the tribes of Iſrael. But all this is advanced without proof, and againſt probability.

A ſecond difficulty is this, that if we admit all that the Hebrew doctors ſuggeſt in this affair, yet ſtill it remains to be explained, by what rules the high-prieſt combined theſe letters? Suppoſe, for example, that any ſix of the letters ſhould have ſhined with more than ordinary luſtre; how muſt the high-prieſt diſpoſe them? which muſt be firſt, or laſt? It is anſwered, that in this circumſtance he was always inſpired, and filled with the ſpirit of prophecy; but if ſo, then the urim and thummim would have been unneceſſary. For why muſt miracles be multiplied without occaſion? The high-prieſt need only ſpeak himſelf, and perhaps the whole effect of the urim and thummim was, to repleniſh him with an internal and ſupernatural light, which diſcovered future events to him, and revealed to him the will of God in what was enquired after.

Others think, with great probability, that God gave his anſwers in an articulate voice, heard from within the ſanctuary, and from between the cherubim, over the ark of the propitiatory, called the oracle in Exod. xxv. 18, 20. xxxvii. 6. xl. 20. Levit. xvi. 2. & paſſim. When the Iſraelites made peace with the Gibeonites, they were blamed for not having enquired at the mouth of the Lord, which inſinuates, that he had been uſed to make his voice heard, when he was conſulted.

This method was probably obſerved in the army, and in the camp of Iſrael, as well as in the tabernacle, and in the temple. They took care to carry the ark of the covenant with them in their military expeditions; a tent was pitched for it, and it was conſulted in the ſame manner as in the tabernacle. The ark was in the camp, with the two ſons of the high-prieſt Eli, when it was taken by the Philiſtines, 1 Sam. iv. 3, 5, &c. v. 1, 2, &c. It was alſo in Joab's army before the city of Rabbah, 2 Sam. xi. 11. Saul had doubtleſs the ark along with him, 1 Sam. xiv. 18, when he ſaid to Ahijah, Bring hither the ark of God; for the ark of God was at that time with the children of Iſrael.

But the Rabbins have other notions: they maintain, that the ark of God was never removed out of the ſanctuary; but at that time only, which was ſo fatal to Iſrael, when the Philiſtines took it; that on all other occaſions, where it is ſaid, that the ark was in the army, it muſt be underſtood of a cheſt, wherein they kept the ephod, and pectoral, of the high-prieſt, from whence they took them, when they enquired of the Lord by Urim and Thummim. Thus Moſes ſent Phinehas to war againſt Midian, who took with him the veſſels of the ſanctuary, and the ſacred trumpets, Numb. xxxi. 6. that is, ſays Jonathan the ſon of Uziel, he put into his hands the Urim and Thummim, that he might conſult the Lord on occaſion. So when David ſays to Abiathar, 1 Sam. xxiii. 9. applica Ephod; they alſo underſtand it of this cheſt, wherein the holy ornaments were kept; and the ſame of what Uriah ſays of the ark of the Lord being under tents.

They add, that in ſuch caſes it was not the high-prieſt that went to the camp, or that conſulted God in the army, but ſome other prieſt; who that he might be qualified for this high function, received the holy unction as well as the high-prieſt, and was called, The Anointed for the War. Maimon. in Cœle Hammikdaſch. cap. 1. §. 7. & in Melachim. cap. 7.

But all theſe particulars are very much to be ſuſpected. We find no hints in Scripture of any ſuch cheſt, or of an ark ſent into the camp to be the depoſitory of the high-prieſt's veſtments; nor any traces of this pretended prieſt, anointed for the war, nor any prohibition of carrying the ark into the army. The ark was at Gilgal, when Saul ſacrificed there, and bid Ahiah to conſult the Lord before his ark. For the ſacred hiſtorian adds, the ark was there with the children of Iſrael, 1 Sam. xiii. 9. xiv. 18, 19. When David was forced to quit Jeruſalem before the face of Abſalom, the high-prieſt Zadok followed him with the ark; but David ſent them back, 2 Sam. xv. 24. In the time of king Joſiah, 2 Chron. xxxv. 3. the prieſts carried the ark from place to place; but this prince ordered, that it ſhould be laid up in the ſanctuary, and not removed any more.

Yet we muſt not pretend that it was abſolutely neceſſary the ark ſhould be preſent, when God was conſulted by Urim and Thummim. David, during his flight from Saul, conſulted the Lord on three different occaſions, though the ark was not in his little army: viz. twice at Keilah, and once at Ziglag. 1 Sam. xxiii. 2, 4. xxx. 8. I alſo think, that the ark was not with him, when he conſulted God a fourth time, after the death of Saul, to know whether he ſhould abide in one of the cities of Judah? But the buſineſs is to know on theſe occaſions, how the Lord was conſulted by Urim and Thummim?

Scripture inſinuates, that ſometimes this was done in a hurry. Saul ſeeing the camp of the Philiſtines in a tumult, and not knowing what Jonathan his ſon had done, ſays to the high-prieſt, applica arcam Dei. 1 Sam. xiv. 18, 19, 20. And as the prieſt ſtretched out his hands probably to offer his petition, and to conſult the Lord, Saul ſays to him, Let down your hand. And, without ſtaying for an anſwer, they cried, To arms! and marched againſt the enemy. In all this there ſeems to be but little of preparation and ceremony, though the ark was at hand. But when it was not on the ſpot, probably the Lord was conſulted in the king's domeſtic chapel, or in the moſt private part of his tent; and then the Lord made known his will to the prieſt, either by an articulate voice, or by ſome inward illumination, which enlightened the mind of the prieſt.

It remains to enquire, how long the cuſtom of conſulting God by Urim and Thummim ſubſiſted. The Rabbins think, it continued no longer than under the tabernacle. They have a maxim, that the Holy Spirit ſpoke to Iſrael by Urim and Thummim under the tabernacle; under the firſt temple, by prophets; under the ſecond temple, or after the captivity of Babylon, by the Bath-col, or daughter of the voice: meaning a voice ſent from heaven, as that at the baptiſm of Jeſus Chriſt, Matth. iii. 17. and at his transfiguration, Matth. xvii. 5. 2 Pet. i. 17.

Spencer has adopted this opinion, and endeavours to ſupport it by theſe two arguments. Firſt, that the Urim and Thummim were a conſequence of the divine government, or theocracy. While the Lord immediately governed his people, it was neceſſary there ſhould always be means at hand, to conſult him. Secondly, that this method was eſtabliſhed to conſult God on affairs that concerned the common intereſt of the nation. But the theocracy ceaſed, when the kingdom became hereditary, in the perſon and family of Solomon: as the intereſts of the nation ceaſed to be common, after the diviſion of Iſrael into two monarchies; and what ſeems to be concluſive is, that no traces of conſulting the Lord by Urim and Thummim, appear after the building of the temple of Solomon, to its deſtruction; and after its deſtruction, all agree, that this was never reſtored.

USURY, Uſura, or Fœnus. This is a premium received for the loan of a ſum of money, over and above the principal. It is ſaid, Exod. xxii. 25, 26. If thou lend money to any of my people that is poor by thee, thou ſhalt not be to him as an uſurer, neither ſhalt thou lay upon him uſury. If thou at all take thy neighbour's raiment to pledge, thou ſhalt deliver it unto him by that the ſun goeth down. And Levit. xxv. 35, 36, 37. If thy brother be waxen poor, and fallen into decay with thee, then thou ſhalt relieve him; yea, though he be a ſtranger, or a ſojourner, that he may live with thee. Take thou no uſury of him, or increaſe, but fear thy God, that thy brother may live with thee. Thou ſhalt not give him thy money upon uſury, nor lend him thy victuals for increaſe. The Hebrew may be tranſlated: "When your brother ſhall fall into poverty and miſery, you ſhall ſupport him; and as to the ſtranger or foreigner that ſhall be ſettled among you, you ſhall take no uſury of him; you ſhall not lend him your money for uſury, &c." So that this paſſage would contain two precepts: firſt, that a brother was to be maintained when in poverty; ſecondly, that even a ſtranger was to be relieved, without paying uſury.

And Deut. xxiii. 19, 20. Thou ſhalt not lend upon uſury to thy brother, uſury of money, uſury of victuals, uſury of any thing that is lent upon uſury. Unto a ſtranger thou mayeſt lend upon uſury, but unto thy brother thou ſhalt not lend upon uſury: that the Lord thy God may bleſs thee in all that thou ſetteſt thine hand to, in the land whither thou goeſt to poſſeſs it. In this place the Lord ſeems to tolerate uſury toward ſtrangers; i. e. the Canaanites, and other people devoted to ſubjection, but not toward ſuch ſtrangers againſt whom the Hebrews had no quarrel, and againſt whom the Lord had not denounced his judgments. To exact uſury is here, according to St. Ambroſe. de Tobia. cap. 25. an act of hoſtility; it was a kind of waging war with the Canaanites, and of ruining them by means of uſury. Demand uſury from him whom you may kill without a crime: Cui enim jure inferuntur arma, huic legitimè inducantur uſuræ.—Ab hoc uſuram exige, quem non ſit crimen occidere. So that the true inference is, that God did indeed tolerate, but not approve, the uſury, which the Hebrews received from the Canaanites. He allowed thus much to the hardneſs of their hearts, becauſe it could not be entirely prevented.

Jeſus Chriſt, in his goſpel has revoked all ſuch tolerations, which obtained under the old law, Luke vi. 30, 31, 32, 33. Give to every man that aſketh of thee, and of him that taketh away thy goods, aſk them not again. If ye lend to them of whom you hope to receive, what thank have you? for ſinners alſo lend to ſinners, to receive as much again. But love ye your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again. Theſe laſt words, Mutuum date nihil inde ſperantes, may be explained three ways: 1. Lend even to the pooreſt, where there is no hopes that he can be able ever to repay. 2. Lend, without expecting that the like kindneſs ſhall be returned to you. 3. Lend, without diſtruſting your neighbour; or, lend without diſtruſting Providence; ſo that the fear of indigence ſhould withhold you from doing good: but we think the genuine meaning to be the firſt. St. Auſtin, Epiſt. 153. would not determine, whether gain be unjuſt that is acquired by uſury; and whether reſtitution ought not to be made in this caſe: Quid dicam de uſuris, quas etiam Leges & Judices reddi jubent? Hæc atque ejuſmodi male utique poſſidentur, & vellem reſtituerentur; ſed non eſt quo Judice repetantur. Probably he ſpeaks of ſecret uſury. Nehemiah v. 11. obliges the Jews, after their return from the captivity, to reſtore to their brethren what they had extorted from them. "Reſtore, I pray you, to them, even this day, their lands, their vineyards, their olive-yards, and their houſes; alſo the hundredth part of the money, and of the corn, the wine, and the oil that ye exact of them." The Hebrew ſays, reſtore, or make reſtitution. But it is needleſs to enlarge:—uſury is condemned by all laws, natural, divine, or human. Vide FRAGMENTS, Nos. XLVI, LXXIX.

VULGATE. This title is given to that Latin tranſlation of the bible which was declared authentic by the council of Trent, Concil. Trid. Seſſ. iv. cap. 2. "The holy council taking it into their conſideration, that the church of God would receive no ſmall advantage, if of the ſeveral Latin editions at this day to be ſeen, it were known which ought to be admitted as authentic; thentic; it orders, declares, and determines, that the ancient and common edition, which has been approved by the church by a long uſe for ſo many ages, ought to be held as authentic; that it ought to be received as authentic in the public leſſons, diſputations, preaching, and theological explications; and will not allow that any ſhall be ſo bold as to reject it on any pretence whatever." The council does not intend to compare the Vulgate with the Originals, for that was not the queſtion; but, with the other Latin verſions then in vogue, many of which were very ſuſpicious. It is therefore unreaſonable, that adverſaries [Proteſtants] ſhould accuſe the council with having preferred the Vulgate to the Originals. Salmero, Proleg. 3. who aſſiſted at this council, and Pallavicinus, who wrote the hiſtory of it, both aſſure us, that the council had no other intention, than to declare, that the Vulgate was the only Latin verſion it approved, and held as authentic; as containing nothing contrary to ſound faith, or to good morals.

We cannot aſſign either the time, or the author, of this ancient Latin verſion; but we are perſuaded, that it is only ſince the eſtabliſhment of Chriſtianity, that the Scriptures were tranſlated into Latin. We have no knowledge that the Jews ever rendered any of their ſacred writings into Latin, although they were numerous in Rome, and Italy. But the Chriſtians ſignalized their zeal very early, and with a ſpirit of emulation, in ſpreading the truth through the world, by a great variety of tranſlations of Scripture. Great numbers applied themſelves to this, as we are told by St. Auſtin, de Doctr. Chriſt. lib. ii. cap. 11. n. 16. Qui Scripturas ex Hebræa Lingua in Græcam verterunt, numerari poſſunt: Latini autem Interpretes nullo modo. No ſooner did any man apprehend, that he had ſome talent at tranſlating, but he endeavoured to tranſlate the firſt Greek copy that came into his hands; Ut enim cuique primis fidei temporibus in manus venit Codex Græcus, & aliquantulum facultatis ſibi utriuſque Linguæ habere videbatur, auſus eſt interpretari.

Hence proceeded a multiplicity of Latin verſions of the Bible, and the little agreement they had with each other. This made Jerom, præfat. in Joſue. aſſert, that there were almoſt as many different tranſlations as books: Cùm apud Latinos tot ſint exemplaria ferè quot Codices, & unuſquiſque pro arbitrio ſuo vel addiderit, vel ſubtraxerit quod ei viſum eſt. But among theſe ancient verſions, there was one of greater authority, and more generally received than the others. This was known to antiquity by the name of the Italic Verſion, the Vulgar, or the Vulgate: and was called the Ancient after Jerom had formed a new one from the Hebrew. The former was a tranſlation from the Greek, and it had the greateſt credit among the Latin editions, becauſe it adhered cloſer to the letter of the original, and was the moſt perſpicuous as to ſenſe: Verborum tenacior cum perſpicuetate ſententiæ. Greg. Mag. Præfat. in Moral. in Job.

Although intelligent perſons readily allowed the neceſſity of a new tranſlation, which ſhould be faithful and accurate, and which might ſtand inſtead of all others; yet they contiued to the end of the fourth century, or to the beginning of the fifth, without acomplifhing this matter. And when Jerom began a Latin tranſlation immediately from the Hebrew, he met with great oppoſition, even from perſons who meant well, but who apprehended the authority of the Septuagint would ſuffer by it, whom ſeveral looked upon as divinely inſpired; and they feared it might give offence to thoſe who were accuſtomed to the ancient verſion, to ſee a new one diſagreeing with it. A. M. 382, ante A. D. 389. The good father firſt made ſome trials, to ſee if he could reform the Latin verſions made from the Greek; he twice attempted to reſtore the Pſalter; he alſo beſtowed ſome labour on ſeveral other books of the bible, Proverbs, Eccleſiaſtes, the Canticles, Job, and Chronicles. (See the ſecond Prolegomena of the new edition of St. Jerom.) but his endeavours met with little ſucceſs; the old uſage ſtill prevailed, At laſt he yielded to the ſolicitations of many of his friends, who deſired him to undertake an entire Latin verſion of the bible from the Hebrew. Hieron. præfat. in Paralip. Item, Præfat. in Job, Eſdr. Joſue.

At firſt he tranſlated the books of Samuel, and the Kings, at the requeſt of Paula and Euſtochium: then he tranſlated the book of Job, which he ſeems to have intended for Marcella, a Roman lady: thirdly, the greater and the leſſer prophets; and ſome time after, Eſdras. Fourthly, he tranſlated the Pſalms from the Hebrew, and gave them to Sophronius to put into Greek. Fifthly, at the inſtances of Heliodorus and Chromatius, he tranſlated the three books of Solomon; the Proverbs, Eccleſiaſtes, and Canticles. Sixthly, he undertook the tranſlation of the Pentateuch, at the requeſt of his friend Deſiderius; but he could not finiſh this work till after ſeveral interruptions, becauſe of its great length. Seventhly, at the intreaty of Euſtochium, he compleated the verſion of Joſhua, Judges, Ruth, and Eſther. Laſtly, he tranſlated the Chronicles, at the requeſt of Chromatius.

It is impoſſible to ſhew exactly the time at which each each of theſe works was performed; but we know—that A. D. 392, the books of Samuel and Kings, Job, the greater and ſmaller prophets, the Pſalms, and the books of Solomon, were already tranſlated:—that the books of Eſdras and Geneſis were tranſlated into Latin between A. D. 392 and 394. He could not finiſh the reſt of the Pentateuch, i. e. Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy, till A. D. 404, or 405; i. e. after the death of Paula, A. D. 404. See St. Jerome's preface to Joſhua, and the Prolegomena to the new edition of St. Jerome. After this year he tranſlated Joſhua, Judges, and Ruth. He did not finiſh the tranſlation of the Chronicles till A. D. 396, as may be collected from the letters and prefaces of St. Jerom. He did not meddle with the apocryphal books: ſuch as Wiſdom, Eccleſiaſticus, Maccabees, Baruch, the letter of Jeremiah, the additions to Eſther and Daniel, which are however in the ancient Vulgate. Even the Pſalter, as ſung at this day, is almoſt entirely of the ancient Italic: St. Jerom's verſion from the Hebrew is not in our bibles. Our Vulgate of the Pſalter is not the ancient Latin verſion, reformed from the Greek by St. Jerom, but a mixture of the ancient Italic, with the emendations of St. Jerom.

He tranſlated alſo the New Teſtament from the Greek, at the requeſt of pope Damaſus. Præfat. in quatuor Evangel. Before his tranſlation, there was ſo little agreement among the Latin copies, that there were almoſt as many different verſions as books: Tot enim ſunt exemplaria penè quot ſunt codices. But to avoid giving offence to thoſe who had been accuſtomed to the ancient Vulgate, he endeavoured as much as poſſible to retain the old ways of expreſſion that were already in the text: Ita calamo temperavimus, ut his tantùm quæ ſenſum videbantur mutare correctis, reliqua pateremur manere ut fuerant. This did not a little contribute to make his tranſlation to be received by the whole Latin church, to the excluſion of the old Italic, which is not to be found any where compleat that we know of, and of which there only remain ſome parts in old manuſcripts, or ſome fragments, in the writings of the fathers before St. Jerom.

The progreſs of his new tranſlation was ſo rapid, that this father could no ſooner publiſh a book, than it was diſperſed through the cities and provinces. Rufinus, the rival of St. Jerom, could not ſee this without uneaſineſs, and he reproaches him with it. Rufin. lib. ii. Invectivæ in Hieron. Lucinus the Spaniard, a perſon zealouſly affected to the Holy Scriptures, in A. D. 394, ſent to Bethlehem ſix tranſcribers, to write out the verſions, and all other works of St. Jerom. St. Auſtin at firſt was not very favourable to the verſion of St. Jerom, but afterwards had ſo great an eſteem for it, that from it he compoſed his Speculum, or Looking-glaſs, which is a collection of paſſages of Scripture, for the uſe of unlearned believers. Philip the prieſt, who was a cotemporary with St. Jerom, in his Commentary on Job, has wholly followed the verſion of St. Jerom. St. Gregory the Great, has almoſt always done the ſame in his Morals on Job, though he ſays, that in his time the Roman church uſed indifferently the ancient Italic verſion, or the new one done from the Hebrew. Iſidore of Seville, lib. i. de Officiis Eccleſ. who lived about A. D. 630, ſays, without exception, that all the churches followed the verſion of St. Jerom: Cujus Editione omnes eccleſiæ uſquequaque utuntur. Hugo Victor affirms, lib. de ſacris Scripturis, cap. 9. that the Latin church made a decree, by which it ordained, that for the time to come, no other verſion ſhould be made uſe of. We know nothing of this decree; and it is very poſſible that no ſuch was ever made; but the conſtant uſe and practice of the church is equivalent to the ſtrongeſt decree.

The ancient Vulgate, which was uſed before that of St. Jerom, although compoſed at a time when the Latin tongue was in its greateſt purity, was, however, very barbarous, as may be ſufficiently proved by what remains of it. The firſt interpreters made it much leſs their care to expreſs themſelves purely and elegantly, than plainly and intelligibly, ſo as to be underſtood by the moſt ignorant, and to render the Greek text of Scripture faithfully, and literally, into Latin. St. Jerom's ſtyle is much purer, though without any affectation of ornament, He ſtudied much more to tranſlate perſpicuouſly, than to write fine Latin. And in the main, it may be ſaid, that his tranſlation is excellent, though not without faults. The more knowing, even among the Proteſtants, have commended the Vulgate, and prefer it before any other Latin tranſlation. Ludovicus de Dieu, acknowledges, that the ancient Latin tranſlator was a very learned man. He has his faults, and his barbariſms, ſays he; but I cannot help admiring his fidelity and judgment, even in places where he is moſt barbarous. When Grotius gives his reaſons for chooſing the Vulgate, on which to make his notes on the Scriptures, he has theſe remarkable words: I have always much eſteemed the author of the Vulgate, not only becauſe he delivers no opinion contrary to faith, but alſo becauſe he abounds with erudition. Grot. Præfat. in Annotat. ſuas in Vet. Teſtament. Fagius looks on thoſe as ſhameleſs, and half-learned, who ſpeak ill of this tranſlation. Fagius Præfat. ad Collat. tranſlat. vet. Teſtament.

When the council of Trent, Concil. Trident. Seſſ. 4. gave orders, that the Scriptures ſhould be printed as ſoon as might be, and as correctly as poſſible, particularly, according to the ancient edition of the Vulgate, Pope Sixtus V. made it his care to procure a perfect edition of the Latin Vulgate, which might ſerve as a model to all future editions, for the uſe of the catholic church. He appointed many learned divines to this work, who laboured in it with great application. His edition was finiſhed A. D. 1589, but was not publiſhed till 1590. But, as this was found not ſo perfect as might be deſired, pope Clement VIII. made another edition, in 1592, which has been taken as the model of all printed afterwards. Yet we are not to imagine that this edition is exempt from faults. Cardinal Bellarmine, who with other divines had attended the correction of it, acknowledges, in his Letter to Lucas of Bruges, that there are ſtill ſeveral faults, which the correctors did not remove. Scias velim Biblia vulgata non eſſe á nobis accuratiſſime caſtigata; multa enim de induſtria juſtis de cauſis pertranſivimus.

[It may be worth while to add, that when the emigrant French clergy, who fled to ſave their lives from the fury of the revolution in France, were ſomewhat ſettled in England, the Univerſity of Oxford printed two thouſand copies of the Vulgate verſion of the New Teſtament, to be diſtributed gratis among them: and two thouſand more were printed for the ſame purpoſe at the expence of the Marquis of Buckingham: on this occaſion aroſe a controverſy, for and againſt the authority of the Vulgate; the general opinion of well informed perſons ſeemed to be that, conſidered as a verſion, the Vulgate was not to be rejected; but then its authority ſhould be reſtricted to that of a verſion only.

The avidity with which this preſent was received by the French clergy, was ſufficient to juſtify a much more ſerious charge againſt the church of Rome, viz. that even this verſion, which ſhe patronizes, is little known, and conſequently, leſs underſtood, even by the prieſts of her communion: moſt of whom have never ſeen it otherwiſe than mutilated in their breviary; and very few of whom have conſidered and inveſtigated it, as thoſe ought to do who have the charge of inſtructing others. What a man does not underſtand himſelf, he cannot poſſibly explain to any enquirer. May this abſence of information never again be charged on the clergy of the Romiſh church, or of any other church, with truth!]

VULTURE, a bird of prey, declared unclean by Moſes. Levit. xi. 14. Deut. xiv. 13. We are told, that vultures feed on human fleſh; whence they were among the ancients birds of ill omen. Yet it is certain that the Romans were of another opinion. The Indians, Perſians, and ancient Spaniards, expoſed dead bodies to be eaten by the vultures.

Tellure, ut perhibent, is mos antiquus Iberâ, Exanima obſcœnus conſumat corpora Vultur.

In hieroglyphics it is ſaid, the vulture ſignified pity, and ſharpneſs of ſight, and was conſecrated to Juno.

Moſes calls it דיה Daia, or דאה the Daah in Hebrew; but interpreters are not agreed that this ſignifies a vulture. Bochart diſtinguiſhes between Aia and Daia, maintaining that the former ſignifies a merlin, and the other a vulture. Others think that Daah, or Daia, ſignifies a kite; and Aia a vulture, or a raven. Daah is tranſlated eagle, Jerem. xlviii. 40. xlix. 22; and Daia a kite, Iſai. xxxiv. 15. Vulg. The LXX. and St. Jerom render the Hebrew word, Job xxviii. 7. עיט Hait. (Γυψ. Vulg. Vultur.) by a vulture, which rather ſignifies a bird in general. Vide BIRD.

UZ, עוץ, Vulgate, Us, counſel: otherwiſe, wood; from עץ ketz, according to the Syriac, to fix, to faſten to.

UZ, Us, or Hus, the eldeſt ſon of Aram, and grandſon of Shem. It is thought he peopled Trachonitis, a province beyond Jordan, having Arabia Deſerta eaſt, and Batanea weſt. This opinion is propoſed by St. Jerom and Joſephus. The ancients inform us, that Uz founded the city of Damaſcus. The Hebrews call by the name of Uz the country about Damaſcus, which the Arabians call Gaut or Gauta. Uz might alſo be placed about the ſources of the river Tigris. Diodorus Siculus, Strabo, and Pliny, place thereabouts a people called Uxii, or Oxii.

Moſes ſays nothing of the genealogy of Uz, or of his poſterity. But the Arabians tell us, that Uz, or Hus, had Ad for a ſon, who was father of a people called Adites, in Arabia Fœlix. Theſe people falling into idolatry, God was provoked at their obſtinacy, and deſtroyed them. Vide HEBER, and the Bibliotheca Orientalis of M. d'Herbelot, p. 460.

Joſephus, Antiq. lib. i. cap. 7. and St. Jerom, Quæſt. Heb. in Geneſ. think, that Uz the ſon of Aram founded the city of Damaſcus; and that his deſcendants ſettled in the Trachonitis, which is near the plain of Damaſcus. Bochart is of opinion, that the Huſites peopled the valley between Libanus and Antilibanus, called by the Arabians, Algauta, or the country of Gauth, or of Hus.

Libanus

The Land of Uz. Euſebius and St. Jerom aſſure us, that according to the tradition of the people of Paleſtine, and round about it, the city of Aſtaroth-Carnaim was the place of Job's habitation. But Aſtaroth-Carnaim was beyond Jordan, between Mahanaim and Eſdrai, on the Jabbok. Others ſuppoſe he lived in the city of Bozra, the capital of Idumea; and Job's mother is thought to have been of this city. Others think him, to have dwelt at the famous city of Emah, or Hamah, which is often mentioned in Scripture. It was in Syria on the Orontes. Others believe he lived at Hama, which is thought to be Apamea, in the ſame country, and on the ſame river. All this is on ſuppoſition, that Job was a deſcendant of Uz the ſon of Aram.

As it is our opinion, that Job may very well be the Jobab, mentioned Geneſis xxxvi. 33, 34. and 1 Chron. i. 43, 44. we alſo think the country of Job was the city of Dinnabah, which Scripture aſſigns for Jobab's dwelling-place. But Dinnabah or Denabah, according to Euſebius and St. Jerom, was in the country of Moab, between Areopolis and Heſhbon. Ptolemy places a city of this name in the Palmyrene.

UZAI, עזי, now; from אז az: otherwiſe, or this; from או o, or, and the pronoun זה za, this.

UZAL, עזל, ἀιζὴλ, that travels, that approaches; from אזל azel: otherwiſe, to ſail: otherwiſe, to diſtill, to drop.

UZAL, ſixth ſon of Joktan. He is commonly placed in Arabia Fœlix. In the book of Juchaſim we find mention of Uzal, the capital city of the kingdom of Aljemen, or Sabas. From Uzal the Latins have formed Auzar, and call Myrrha Auzaritis, a kind of myrrh that comes from this country. Plin. lib. xii. cap. 6.

UZZAH, עזא, ſtrength; from עזז hazaz: otherwiſe, goat, or kid; from עז hez.

UZZAH, Aza, or Oza, ſon of Abinadab, 2 Sam, vi. 3, 4, 5, &c. A. M. 2956, ante A. D. 1045. He, with his brother Ahio, conducted the new cart, on which the ark of the covenant was brought from Kirjathjearim to Jeruſalem. When they were come as far as Nachon's threſhing-floor, or, the floor that was prepared, (ſee NACHON.) Uzzah ſtretched out his hand to ſupport the ark of God, which ſeemed to him in danger of falling, becauſe of the ſtumbling of the oxen. The Hebrew is, כי שמטו הבקר Quoniam calcitrabant boves, 2 Sam. vi. 7. Bos laſciviens inclinaverat eam, 1 Chron. xiii. 9. The force of the Hebrew word is unknown. The anger of the Lord ſmote Uzzah becauſe of his raſhneſs and ignorance; and he died on the place.

Opinions are much divided about the occaſion of the death of Uzzah. Some think the Lord put him to death, becauſe he touched the ark irreverently, without ſhewing ſufficient reſpect to it. Others, that the Lord was provoked by his diſtruſt on this occaſion, in attempting to hold up the ark; as if God was not able to preſerve it without his aſſiſtance. But the true cauſe is ſufficiently explained by David himſelf, when he ſays, becauſe there were no prieſts to carry the ark, 1 Chron. xv. 13. Vide & Joſeph. Antiq. lib. vii. cap. 4. Theodoret. qu. 19. in 2 Sam. Uzzah, who was not of the race of Aaron, was ſo raſh as to handle it, and was (it is preſumed) the adviſer of carrying it in a cart, inſtead of having it carried on the ſhoulders of the prieſts.

ADDITION.

As the hiſtory of the death of Uzzah, being related very ſuccinctly, is liable to be miſunderſtood, it may be proper to notice,

1. That, the law, Exod. xxv. 14. ordered that the ark ſhould be carried on the ſhoulders of the Levites, whereas in this inſtance it was drawn by oxen, on a cart, 1. as if this carriage by beaſts was good enough for it; 2. it was hereby aſſimilated to the proceſſions of the heathen, who drew their gods about in carriages; 3. if it had been borne by Levites, would Uzzah have been one to bear it?—did he think this too much trouble? was the diſtance too great? or &c.

2. That, the ark ought to have been enveloped, —wholly concealed, by the prieſts, before the Levites had approached it; whereas, 1. no prieſt attended this proceſſion: 2. was it carried openly, expoſed to view? as it was by the Philiſtines, 1 Sam. vi. 13—19. Uzzah being a Levite, ought to have known theſe rules, and being the principal in conducting the proceſſion, and I ſuppoſe, the elder brother, Uzzah, I ſay, was principally guilty, whereas Ahio was ſubordinate to him.

3. It is likely, that the oxen drew it ſafely while in a ſtraight road, but when they came to turn in to the threſhing floor, that was prepared, one of them became reſtif, and refuſed to go in, ſtarted aſide, [ſtumbled is the uſual idea of the word] which provoking Uzzah, put him off his guard, and irritated his temper to raſhneſs.

But I think the words are capable of another rendering; literally—And they came to the threſhing floor prepared: and Uzzah put forth his hand to the ark of God, and ſeized it, laid hold of it ſtrongly, ſtrongly, held it back, כי INSOMUCH that—to ſuch a degree that—one of the oxen ſtumbled, or ſtarted—and the Lord ſmote Uzzah UPON השל THIS RASHNESS: and he died on the ſpot עם WITH i. e. as cloſe as poſſible, adjoining to, [by] the ark.

This hiſtory then may ſtand thus: Uzzah was ſo intent on preventing the oxen from drawing the cart any further, than the entrance of the floor prepared to receive it, that he pulled, with all his might, againſt the oxen, who were going on; one of them ſlipped, and the whole weight of the cart, or rather, of the ark, falling on Uzzah, he was cruſhed on the ſpot. In this view of the ſtory Uzzah may be ſaid to have been the cauſe of his own death. This ſhews alſo, 1. how Ahio, though equally blameable of not covering, or not bearing the ark, might eſcape any diſaſter. 2. It gives the reaſon of the prepared floor being mentioned, the occurrence happening at the entrance of it; and, 3. it agrees with the name given by David to the place, "the BREACH of Uzzah," i. e. the place where Uzzah was broken,—PRESSED OUT—cruſhed to death.

Obſerve, had the ark been carried on the ſhoulders of the Levites, as it ought to have been, ſuch a fatal event could not have happened; as they could have heard and obeyed orders to ſtop, &c. ſo that greater reſpect to the ark, had been greater ſecurity to its attendants. This is perfectly agreeable to what David afterwards obſerves, 1 Chron. xv. 13. "The Lord made a breach upon us formerly, becauſe we ſought him not after a due order," &c. The order of the words is ſtrongly in favour of this ſenſe of the particle כי, rendered inſomuch, as is its frequent import; inſtead of for as in our tranſlation.

UZZEN-SHERAH, עזן שארה, ear of the fleſh, or of the parent, &c. from אזן ozen, an ear, and שאר ſheor, fleſh, or parent: or the ear of him that remains; from ſheor, or ſhaar, according to different readings: otherwiſe, balances of the fleſh, &c. from מאזנים moznaim, and ſheor, fleſh.

WALL. The Lord tells the prophet Jeremiah, i. 18. xv. 20. that he will make him as a wall of braſs, to withſtand the houſe of Iſrael. St. Paul, Acts xxiii. 3. calls the high-prieſt Ananias a whited wall, intending to ſhew his hypocriſy. He ſays, Epheſ. ii. 14. that Jeſus Chriſt, by his death, broke down the partition-wall, that ſeparated us from God: or, rather, the wall that ſeparated Jew and Gentile; ſo that theſe two people, when converted to Jeſus Chriſt, may make but one people. [Vide the low wall in the Temple, FRAGMENT, No. CCXL.]

Anciently they hung up their bucklers on the walls of cities, from whence on any alarm they were taken down. Hence Iſaiah ſays, Parietem nudavit clypeis.

WAR. When the Hebrews drew out their armies, and went to war againſt their enemies, and battle was at hand, the high-prieſt at the head of the army, ſpoke to the people in this manner: Hear, O Iſrael, and be not in fear of your enemies; for the Lord your God fights for you, &c. Deut. xx. 2, 3, 4, &c.

The Lord commanded, Deut. xx. 10. that when the Iſraelites were to beſiege a city, they ſhould firſt offer it conditions of peace; which if accepted, they were to ſave the lives of the inhabitants, and to ſatisfy themſelves with having ſubdued them. But if it refuſed to open its gates, then they might beſiege it, and having taken it, put all the males to death. He ordered alſo that in long ſieges, and where machines were to be uſed, they ſhould ſpare the fruit-trees, and be contented with cutting down the wild and uſeleſs trees, for carrying on their works.

The Hebrews were formerly one of the moſt warlike nations in the world. The books that relate their wars, are neither flattering authors, nor ignorant, but inſpired by the ſpirit of truth and wiſdom. Their warriors were not fabulous heroes, but, commonly, wiſe and valiant generals, raiſed up by God, to fight the battles of the Lord; ſuch were Joſhua, Gideon, Jephthah, Samſon, David, the Maccabees, &c.

Their wars were not underaken on ſlight occaſions, nor performed with a handful of people. Under Joſhua the affair was of no leſs importance, than to conquer a vaſt country, which God had given to Iſrael, from ſeveral powerful nations, whom God had devoted to an anathema; to vindicate an offended Deity, and human nature, debaſed by a wicked and corrupt people, who had filled up the meaſure of their iniquities. Under the judges, the purpoſe was to aſſert their liberty, by ſhaking off the yoke of powerful kings, who kept them in ſubjection. Under Saul, and David, to theſe motives were added that of ſubduing ſuch provinces, as God had promiſed to his people.

In the later times of the kingdoms of Iſrael and Judah, we obſerve their kings bearing the ſhock of the greateſt powers of Aſia, the kings of Aſſyria and Chaldea, Shalmaneſer, Sennacherib, Eſar-haddon, and Nebuchadnezzar, who made the whole Eaſt tremble. Under the Maccabees, the buſineſs was, with an handful of men, to oppoſe the whole power of the kings of Syria, to uphold the religion of their fathers, and to ſhake off the yoke of that authority, which deſigned to ſubvert both their religion and liberty. In the laſt times of their nation, with what courage, with what intrepidity, and conſtancy, did they ſuſtain the war againſt the Romans, who were then maſters of the world?

In the beginning, under Moſes and Joſhua, they were all ſoldiers, and men bearing arms. They came out of Egypt to the number of ſix hundred thouſand fighting men. When Joſhua entered the land of Canaan, he fought ſometimes with detachments, and ſometimes with his whole army. To ſignalize his omnipotence, and to humble the pride of man, God would often give victory to very ſmall armies. For example, under Gideon, where he ordered this general to diſmiſs the greater part of his army, and only to keep with him three hundred men, with which he defeated an innumerable multitude of Midianites, and Amalekites.

If we would ſee examples of numerous armies,

Abijah, king of Judah, with four hundred thouſand men, made war againſt Jeroboam, king of Iſrael, who had eight hundred thouſand: of whom there were five hundred thouſand ſlain in one battle: [theſe numbers, however, may have a cypher too much.] 2 Chron, xiii. 3, 17. Pekah, ſon of Remaliah, king of Iſrael, in one day killed one hundred and twenty thouſand men, of Judah. 2 Chron. xxviii. 6. Aſa, king of Judah, having an army of ſix hundred thouſand men, was attacked by Zerah, king of Cuſh, who had an army of a million of men: Zerah was entirely routed by the troops of Aſa. 2 Chron. xiv. 9, 13. The ſtanding forces of David and Solomon were more than three hundred thouſand men. 1 Chron. xxvii. Jehoſhaphat, king of Judah, had eleven hundred and ſixty thouſand men of war, not including the garriſons in his fortified places. 2 Chron. xvii. 14, 19.

We may diſtinguiſh two kinds of wars among the Hebrews. Some were of obligation, being expreſsly commanded by the Lord; others were free and voluntary. The firſt were, for example, againſt the Amalekites, and the Canaanites, which were nations devoted to an anathema. The others were to revenge injuries, inſults, or offences, offered to the nation. Such was that againſt the city of Gibeah, and againſt the tribe of Benjamin: and ſuch was that of David againſt the Ammonites, whoſe king had affronted his ambaſſadors. Or to maintain and defend their allies; as that of Joſhua againſt the kings of the Canaanites, to protect Gibeon. Laſtly, whatever reaſons may authorize a nation, or a prince, to make war againſt another, obtained likewiſe among the Hebrews. The laws of Moſes ſuppoſe that Iſrael might make war, and might oppoſe enemies.

The firſt law of war is, that it ſhould be declared to the enemy, and that reparation ſhould be firſt demanded, for the wrong ſuppoſed to have been ſuffered, before the enemy is attacked. Deut. xx. 10, 11, &c.

Declaration of WAR. We have ſeveral examples of defiance, challenge, or declaration of war; and complaints of thoſe who were attacked, without having had war formally declared. When the Ammonites by ſurprize attacked the Iſraelites beyond Jordan, Jephthah ſent to enquire of them, What haſt thou to do with me, that thou art come againſt me, to fight in my land? &c. Judg. xi. 12. When the Philiſtines entered the territory of Judah, to revenge themſelves for the fire that Samſon had put to their corn, the men of Judah came out to enquire of them, Why are ye come up againſt us? Judg. xv. 10. &c. They anſwered, they had no quarrel againſt any but Samſon, who had deſtroyed their fields. The men of Judah promiſed to deliver up the guilty perſon, and the Philiſtines retired.

Amaziah, king of Judah, puffed up with ſome advantages he had obtained over the Edomites, ſent a challenge to Joaſh, king of Iſrael, ſaying, Come, let us look one another in the face. 2 Kings xiv. 8, 9, 10. The king of Iſrael, without giving himſelf any diſquiet about it, ſent him a parable in anſwer: Amaziah would not hearken to his advice, but Judah was beaten. Benhadad, king of Syria, came with his army before Samaria, and ſent to declare war againſt Ahab, king of Iſrael, ſaying, Thy ſilver and thy gold is mine; thy wives alſo, and thy children, even the goodlieſt are mine. 1 Kings xx. 1, 3. Ahab at firſt ſubmitted, but Benhadad becoming more arrogant, Ahab determined to reſiſt him, and Benhadad failed of his purpoſe.

When a war was reſolved on, all the people capable of bearing arms were aſſembled, or only part of them, according to the exigence of the caſe, and the neceſſity and importance of the enterprize. For it does not appear, that before the reign of David there were any regular troops in Iſrael. A general rendezvous was appointed, and a review was made of the people by tribes, and by families. When Saul, at the beginning of his reign, was informed of the cruel propoſal made by the Ammonites to Jabeſh Gilead, he cut in pieces the oxen belonging to his plough, and ſent them through the country, ſaying, Whoſoever cometh not forth after Saul and Samuel, to the relief of Jabeſh-Gilead, ſo ſhall it be done unto his oxen. 1 Sam. xi. 7. After which he marched to meet the enemy. When the children of Iſrael had heard of the crime committed by the inhabitants of Gibeah, againſt the wife of the Levite of Bethlehem, Judg. xx. 8. they reſolved not to return to their houſes till they had fully puniſhed it. They conſulted the Lord, who appointed the tribe of Judah to lead in this enterprize. They choſe ten men out of every hundred, an hundred out of a thouſand, and a thouſand out of ten thouſand, to bring proviſions to the army; after which they marched to meet the enemy.

In ancient times, thoſe who went to war commonly carried their own proviſions with them; hence theſe wars were generally of ſhort continuance, becauſe it was hardly poſſible to ſubſiſt a large body of troops long, with ſuch proviſions as every one carried with him. When David, Jeſſe's younger ſon, ſtayed behind to look after his his father's flocks, while his elder brothers went to the war with Saul, Jeſſe ſent David to carry proviſions to his brothers. 1 Sam. xvii. 13. We ſuppoſe that this way of making war prevailed alſo under Joſhua, the Judges, Saul, David at the beginning of his reign, the kings of Judah and Iſrael, ſucceſſors to Rehoboam and Jeroboam; and under the Maccabees, till the time of Simon Maccabeus, prince and high-prieſt of the Jews, who kept ſoldiers in pay. See 1 Macc. xiv. 32. Every one alſo provided his own arms, for war. The kings of the Hebrews did not begin to have magazines till David.

The kings went to war in perſon, and in the earlier times they fought on foot; we do not read of any horſes, either for the generals, or the officers, under the judges, Saul, or David. After this time they were not ſo ſcarce; and it appears that the kings of Judah and Iſrael went to war, riding in chariots. See CHARIOTS.

The officers of war among the Hebrews, were, 1. the generaliſſimo of the armies, or the military prince, ſuch as Abner under Saul, Joab under David, and Benaiah under Solomon. 2. The princes of the tribes, or the princes of the fathers, or of the families of Iſrael, who were at the head of their tribes. 3. Princes of a thouſand, or tribunes, captains of an hundred, heads of fifty men, thirdſmen, called in Hebrew ſhaliſhim, but whoſe functions are unknown: decurions, or chiefs of ten men. 4. Shopherim, ſcribes or writers, a kind of commiſſaries who kept the muſter-roll of the troops; and, 5. Shoterim, or inſpectors, who had authority to command the troops under their inſpection.

WASHING, purification. See BAPTISM.

WASHING of Feet. The Orientals uſed to waſh the feet of ſtrangers, who came off a journey, becauſe, they commonly walked with their legs bare, and their feet defended by ſandals only. Thus Abraham waſhed the feet of the three angels, Gen. xviii. 4. They waſhed the feet of Eliezer, and thoſe who accompanied him, at the houſe of Laban, Gen. xxiv. 32. and likewiſe thoſe of Joſeph's brethren, when they came into Egypt, Gen. xliii. 24. This office was commonly performed by ſervants and ſlaves. Abigail anſwers David, who ſought her in marriage, that ſhe ſhould think it an honour to waſh the king's ſervants feet. 1 Sam. xxv. 41. Our Saviour waſhed his apoſtle's feet, to give them an example of a perfect humility. John xiii. 3, 6. When St. Paul recommends hoſpitality, he would have a widow, and deaconeſs, in the church, to be one who had waſhed the feet of the ſaints. 1 Tim. v. 10. In a moral ſenſe, to waſh the feet, ſignifies, to purify from earthly and carnal affections.

Our Saviour, after his laſt ſupper, gave his laſt leſſon of humility, by waſhing his diſciples' feet. John xiii. 5, 6. Then cometh he to Simon Peter; and Peter ſaith unto him, Lord, doſt thou waſh my feet? Jeſus anſwered him, If I waſh thee not, thou haſt no part with me. Simon Peter ſaith unto him, Lord, not my feet only, but alſo my hands and my head.

This threatening of our Saviour to Peter, If I waſh thee not, thou haſt no part with me, gave occaſion to ſeveral of the ancients to believe, that the waſhing of feet has ſomething of the nature of baptiſm. St. Ambroſe, lib. de Myſter. cap. 6. teſtifies, that in his time they waſhed the feet of thoſe who were newly baptized, at their coming out of the holy font. Ideo planta abluitur, ut hæreditaria peccata tollantur: noſtra enim propria per baptiſmum relaxantur. He ſays on Pſalm xlviii. Alia eſt iniquitas noſtra, alia calcanei noſtri. Unde dominus diſcipulis pedes lavit, ut lavaret venena ſerpentis. But he adds, that what is cleanſed by the waſhing of feet, is rather concupiſcence, or the inclination to ſin, than ſin itſelf. St. Auſtin quotes pretty near the ſame thing, from a work of St. Ambroſe on Iſaiah, which is now loſt.

The cuſtom of waſhing the feet of the newly baptized, was not peculiar to the church of Milan; it was obſerved in other places of Italy, in Gaul, in Spain, and in Africa. Some of the ancients have given it the name of a ſacrament. St. Bernard and Ernaldus, abbot of Bonneval, are of this opinion. Gerard, biſhop of Toul, A. D. 994, every day waſhed the feet of a certain number of poor men; Credens, ut eſt vera fides, criminum ſordes abluere, uti multoties ſanctum audiebat Præſulem certiſſime prædicare.

On Good Friday the Syrians celebrate the feſtival of waſhing of feet. The Greeks perform the ſacred Niptere, or holy waſhing: and in the Latin church they practiſe this ceremony. The biſhops, the abbots, and princes in many places, practiſe it in perſon. The council of Elvire, ſeeing the abuſe that ſome perſons made of it, by putting a confidence in it for remiſſion of ſins, ſuppreſſed it in Spain.

To waſh the hands. The Hebrews frequently waſhed their hands, as we ſee Mark vii. 3, 4. For the Phariſees, and all the Jews, except they waſh their hands oft, eat not, holding the tradition of the elders. And when they come from the market, except they waſh, they eat not. The Greek text might ſignify, that they waſhed their hands from the elbow to the ends of their fingers.

Vide FRAGMENT, No. XXXII, page 55. Eliſha poured water on the hands of Elijah. 2 Kings iii. 11. Pilate waſhed his hands as a token of his innocency, in the unjuſt ſentence that he pronounced againſt Jeſus Chriſt. Matth. xxvii. 24.

Children were waſhed immediately after their birth. Ezek. xvi. 4. They alſo waſhed their dead, as may be ſeen by the waſhing of Tabitha. Acts ix. 37. They waſhed their cloaths when they would purify them from uncleanneſs, or prepare themſelves for a particular ſanctity. External lotions were the ſymbols of that internal purity and cleanneſs which God requires of thoſe who approach to holy things, and thoſe who ſerve him.

To waſh one's feet in butter, Job. xxix. 6. to waſh one's cloaths in wine, Gen. xlix. 11. to waſh one's feet in the blood of the wicked, Pſalm lviii. 10. are figurative and hyperbolical expreſſions, to ſignify great abundance of butter, of wine, vengeance, &c.

WASHING-BALLS, Smigma. When Suſanna went to bathe, ſhe ſent her maids to fetch oleum & ſmigmata, eſſence, ſoap, waſhballs, ſuch compoſitions as women uſe to perfume themſelves, &c. Vide Pſalms lx. 8. cviii. 9.

WATCHERS. Sometimes this name is given to the angels: Dan. iv. 10, 14. עיר וקדיש. A watchman and a holy one came down from heaven. Vigil & ſanctus de cœlo deſcendit. And a little afterwards, ſententia vigilum decretum eſt. The Chaldee עיר hir, or Ir, tranſlated watchers, according to Jerom, might have given origin to Iris, the meſſenger of the gods. The Chaldeans conceived of theſe angels, or watchers, as of a company of judges, who determined the fate of men. This appears from Dan. iv 17. This matter is by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones. The holy ones, and watchers, are the ſame in theſe paſſages. The Septuagint in the Lamentations iv. 14. Ερᾳλεύθιρων ὁι ἐγρέγοροι ἀυΐης, have read hirim, the watchers, inſtead of hiverim, the blind, as we now have it. The apocryphal book of Enoch, often ſpeaks of the egregoroi, or watchers; and the Syrians owned an order of angels in heaven, which they called egregori. It was theſe watchers who eſpouſed the daughters of men. Gen. vi. 2.

WATERS of Jealouſy. See ADULTERY.

This way of trial or proof, deſcribed by Moſes in ſo exact and circumſtantial a manner, is one of the moſt extraordinary things that can be imagined, and could not be practiſed without a conſtant and perpetual miracle. It cannot be doubted, but that the wiſer men of the nation muſt have diſapproved of this cuſtom, and that Moſes allowed it to the Jews, only for the hardneſs of their hearts; having probably been uſed to ſee ſuch kinds of trials among the Egyptians, or other nations, and fearing worſe extremes, and greater violences, if this had not been permitted them. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXIX. page 29.

It is plain, that the people of the Eaſt have long had a cuſtom, of making thoſe undergo ſeveral kinds of trial, whom they ſuſpected of crimes, the diſcovery of which could not be made in the uſual way. The moſt common of theſe proofs are thoſe of red-hot iron, and of boiling water. They are very frequent at this time in China. When a man is accuſed of a capital crime, he is aſked, whether he is willing to undergo either of theſe trials? If he ſubmits to it, they put upon his hand ſeven leaves from a certain tree, and upon thoſe leaves they clap a red-hot iron. He holds it there for ſome time, and then throws it on the ground. They immediately put his hand into a leather pouch, which they ſeal with the ſeal of the magiſtrate. At the end of three days, if the hand is found to be ſound and well, he is declared innocent, and his accuſer is condemned to pay a mark of gold for the uſe of the prince. The trial by water is performed by throwing a ring into a kettle of boiling water: If the perſon accuſed can take it out from thence with his hand, without ſuffering any harm, he is pronounced innocent. A Voyage to China, in the Ninth Age, page 37. notes, page 159.

This way of proof was not unknown to Sophocles, Vide Antigon. ver. 274. and it was long uſed among Chriſtians in Europe. Ducange Lexic. Ferrum candenſ. Juret. in Not. ad Yvon. Carnit. Baluz. in Not. ad Capitular. They even pretended to make it paſs for a harmleſs, and a religious rite; and we find maſſes and prayers ſaid on theſe occaſions. The Indians continue this practice. The Caffres oblige thoſe who are ſuſpected of any capital crime, to ſwallow poiſon, to lick a hot iron, or to drink boiling water, in which certain bitter herbs have been infuſed. The Negroes of Loango and of Guinea, the Siameſe, and other Indians, have the ſame ſuperſtition, and are thoroughly perſuaded, that theſe trials do no harm to any that are innocent.

Water of the Feet: Urine. Iſai. xxxvi. 12. Ut bibant urinam pedum ſuorum.

Waters often ſtand for poſterity. Iſai. xlviii. 1. Which are come forth out of the waters of Judah. Numb. xxiv. 7. He ſhall pour the water out of his buckets, and his ſeed ſhall be in many waters, Prov.

Prov. v. 15, 16. Drink waters out of thine own ciſtern, and running waters out of thine own well. Let thy fountains be diſperſed abroad, and rivers of waters in the ſtreets.

Waters of Merom, Joſh. xi. 5. Vide MEROM.

WATERS. Great waters, in the language of the prophets, often denote a great multitude of people. Rev. xvii. 15. The waters which thou ſaweſt, where the whore ſitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues.

Waters of the abyſs. Waters of the ſea, of rivers, waters concealed in cavities within the bowels of the earth, alſo called waters of the deep, to diſtinguiſh them from the waters of heaven; the clouds, the rain, the dew, which are called upper waters, ſeparated from the lower by the firmament; i. e. the air, or heaven, Gen. i. 6, 7. vii. 11. Exod. xv. 5. Deut. viii. 7. xxxiii. 13. Iſai. li. 10, &c. Scripture ſays, the Lord has the abyſſes in his treaſury; he has given them limits and boundaries, which they cannot paſs.

Waters of contradiction, Numb. xx. 2, 3, &c. Moſes tells us, that when the Iſraelites came to Kadeſh, and there happened to be in want of water, they made a ſedition againſt him and his brother Aaron, who entered into the tabernacle of the Lord, and proſtrating themſelves, cried to the Lord. The Lord ſaid to Moſes, "Take thy rod, and call the people together, thou and thy brother Aaron, and ſpeak to the rock before you, and it ſhall give you drink."

Moſes therefore took his rod, and aſſembled the people before the rock, and ſaid to them, "Hear, O ye rebels and infidels! Shall we be able to draw you water out of this rock?" Then Moſes lifted up his hand, and ſtriking the rock twice with his rod, there came forth water in abundance, ſo that all the people, and all their cattle drank to their fill. At this time the Lord ſaid to Moſes and Aaron, "Becauſe you have not believed me, and becauſe you have not ſanctified me before the children of Iſrael, you ſhall not bring this people into the land that I have promiſed them." Theſe were the waters of contradiction, where the children of Iſrael murmured againſt the Lord, and where he was ſanctified in the midſt of them. Inſtead of the waters of contradiction, the Hebrew reads מי מריבה, the waters of Meribah, waters of quarrelling, of contention, of murmuring of the people againſt Moſes and againſt God. [Waters of Strife, Eng. Tr.]

It is enquired, in what conſiſted the ſin of Moſes on this occaſion, which was ſo diſpleaſing to God, that he deprived him of the honour of introducing his people into the Land of Promiſe. The Pſalmiſt tells us, that Moſes was ſoured, vexed, or troubled, at theſe murmurs of the people, and expreſſed ſome diſtruſt by his words, Pſal. cv. 32, 33. Irritaverunt eum ad aquas contradictionis, & vexatus eſt Moyſes propter eos, & diſtinxit labiis ſuis: he erred with his lips. He ſhewed ſome doubt in the promiſes of the Lord. God had abſolutely promiſed him, that he ſhould bring water out of the rock; Moſes made ſome ſcruple to believe it: Shall we be able to draw water out of this rock? He ſtruck the rock twice, whereas God had only bid him ſpeak to it. He was afraid, that on this occaſion, God being provoked with his people, ſhould refuſe to fulfil his promiſes. Anima eorum variavit in me, ſays the prophet Zechariah; their ſoul was fluctuating, wavering, and irreſolute, Zech. xi. 8.

They did not ſanctify the Lord, they did not pay that honour due to him, by a ſtrict, punctual, and faithful obedience to his words. They did not ſanctify him before the people: they gave the people occaſion to conceive too low an idea of the power and goodneſs of God; they did an injury, in ſome meaſure, to his power, by ſhewing ſo little confidence in it. Laſtly, the Lord was ſanctified in them; he cauſed his juſtice and his majeſty to ſhine out upon them; he taught his people by them, and by the puniſhment inflicted on them, in what manner he would be ſerved and obeyed. And indeed, nothing is better adapted to ſtrike awe and terror, and to ſhew us how far God is jealous of his glory, than the puniſhment of Moſes and Aaron, in an affair that to us appears of but ſmall importance.

Waters of Marah. See MARAH.

Faithful waters, Iſai. xxxiii. 16. Waters that never fail, ſpring-waters that corrupt not; oppoſed to lying waters, Jer. xv. 18. [Sure waters, Eng. Tr.]

Living waters, ſpring-waters, running waters, in oppoſition to waters that ſtagnate in a ciſtern, or in a lake, which are dead waters.

As in Scripture, bread is put for all ſorts of food, or ſolid nouriſhment, ſo water is uſed for all ſorts of drink. The Moabites and Ammonites are reproached for not meeting the Iſraelites with bread and water; i. e. with proper refreſhments, Deut. xxiii. 4. Nabal ſays, inſulting David's meſſengers, Shall I then take my bread and my water, and my fleſh that I have killed for my ſhearers, and give it unto men, whom I know not whence they be? 1 Sam. xxv. 11. Jeroboam's falſe prophet tells the prophet of the Lord, 1 Kings xiii. 18. An angel ſpake unto me by the word of the Lord, ſaying, Bring him back with thee into thy houſe, that he may eat bread and drink water.

Strange waters, ſtollen waters, Prov. ix. 17. denote unlawful unlawful pleaſures with ſtrange women. The Iſraelites are reproached with having forſaken the fountain of living water, to quench their thirſt at broken ciſterns; Jerem. ii. 13. i. e. with having quitted the worſhip of God for that of falſe and abominable deities.

Waters ſometimes denote afflictions and misfortunes: Lam. iii. 54. So the Pſalmiſt, Save me, O God, for the waters are come in unto my ſoul, Pſal. lxix. 1. See Pſal. cxxiv. 4, 5. cxvii. 16.

Alſo waters ſometimes ſtand for tears and ſweat: O that my head were waters, and mine eyes fountains of tears, Jerem. ix. 1. And, Per cuncta genua fluent aquæ, Ezek. xxi. 7. vii. 17.

WAY, or path, via. This word is taken

1. In a moral ſenſe, for conduct. Make your path ſtrait. The paths of the wicked are crooked. The Lord knows the way of the juſt, &c.
2. For the laws of the Lord. To follow the ways of the Lord, to forſake the ways of the Lord: Lord, guide me in thy paths, &c.
3. For cuſtom, manners, and way of life. All fleſh had corrupted his way upon the earth. The way of all fleſh, the cuſtom of all nations, the manner of all the earth, the ways of the children of Adam.
4. For the conduct of the Lord in reſpect of us. My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, ſaith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, ſo are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts. Iſai. lv. 8, 9. The Lord poſſeſſed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old, Prov. viii. 22. The meek will he teach his way, Pſal. xxv. 9.
5. We find throughout Scripture theſe kinds of expreſſion, the way of peace, of juſtice, of iniquity, of truth, of darkneſs; they need no explanation.
6. To go the way of all the earth, is put to ſignify dying and the grave, Joſh. xxiii. 14.

A hard way expreſſes the way of ſinners, a way of impiety: Judg. ii. 19. In the book of Wiſdom the wicked complain, that they have purſued difficult ways, Wiſd. v. 7. And Eccleſiaſticus xxxii. 25. In a contrary ſenſe, the ways of God, the ways of piety, are often named ſtraight, narrow, difficult, to find, and to walk in. Propter verba labiorum tuorum ego cuſtodivi vias duras: Pſal. xvii. 4. I have guided myſelf with the ſame circumſpection as a man that walks over precipices. And Jeſus Chriſt, Matt. vii. 14. Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, that leadeth unto life; and few there be who find it.

The way of life. The Pſalmiſt ſays, xvi. 11. Thou wilt ſhew me the path of life. Thou haſt taught me to know thy will, and thy commandments, which give life; to the keeping of which thou haſt annexed the promiſe of long life: of eternal life. Jeſus Chriſt, by his reſurrection, was ſhewn, and hath ſhewed us, the way of life, of eternal life, a way before unknown to men. The Wiſeman, Proverbs vi. 23. ſays in the ſame ſenſe, The commandments of God, and his laws, are a ſhining light, and the reproofs of a wiſe man are the way of life. They lead us to life, to a long and happy [a ſpiritual and divine] life. The Old Teſtament is full of ſuch promiſes; but the enlightened ſaints raiſed their hopes and contemplations to a life far above this. See Prov. x. 17.

Way is taken for all the means by which any thing is done; or by which it happens to us. Job ſays, xxxviii. 19, 24, 25. Where is the way where light dwelleth? the way that leads to its palace. Who hath divided a water-courſe for the overflowing of water, or a way for the lightning and thunder? The Wiſeman acknowledges, Prov. xxx. 19, 20. that among things which appear difficult to him, are the way of an eagle in the air, the way of a ſerpent on the earth, the way of a ſhip at ſea, and the way of a man in his youth: Via viri in adoleſcentula: [with a maid. Eng. Tr. Vide ALMAH.] And Eccleſiaſticus xi. 5. ſaith, You know not the way of the wind.

In certain paſſages, it is ſaid, God turns us away from his ways: Thou haſt made us to err from thy way; thou haſt hardened our hearts that we ſhould not fear thee, Iſaiah lxiii. 17. And the Pſalmiſt ſays, xliii. 17. Thou haſt turned aſide our paths from thy way, &c. But theſe expreſſions only ſuggeſt that God ſuffers the enormities of men, which he might hinder, if the laws of his juſtice and mercy required it, and if men, by their depravity and hardneſs of their hearts, did not repell his grace and mercy. God does not harden the ſinner by promoting his wickedneſs; but by reſtraining his own omnipotent mercy.

The Phariſees tell Jeſus Chriſt by their diſciples, Matth. xxii. 16. Maſter, we know that thou art true, and teacheſt the way of God in truth: i. e. the true principles of religion, without accepting any man's perſon. Prepare the way of the Lord, ſays St. Mark, i. 3. diſpoſe your hearts and minds to receive Jeſus Chriſt, and to hear the words of life. Our Saviour ſays, that he is the way, the truth, and the life, John xiv. 6. He teaches the way to heaven; he is the abſolute pattern of perfection; he is the eſſential truth; and the fountain of truth; he is the life of the ſoul. [He is the way, in the ſame ſenſe as he is the door—to heaven, and glory.]

St. Paul departed from Jeruſalem with a reſolution of ſeizing all ſuch as ſhould make profeſſion of this this way of Chriſtianity: Acts ix. 2. The way of truth is blaſphemed by heretics, ſays St. Peter, 2 Pet. ii. 2. The truths of the Chriſtian religion are corrupted by falſe teachers. They have gone in the way of Cain, ſays St. Jude, ver. 2. They have followed his example.

WEDDING. See MARRIAGE.

WEEK. The Hebrews had three ſorts of weeks:

1. Weeks of days, reckoned from one ſabbath to another.
2. Weeks of years, reckoned from one ſabbatical year to another; and conſiſting of ſeven years.
3. Weeks of ſeven times ſeven years, or of forty-nine years; reckoned from one jubilee to another. This may be ſeen in the Conſtitutions of Moſes, and in the Practice of the Jews.

Weeks of Daniel. It is agreed, that the famous weeks of Daniel are weeks of years and not of days. But ſome have made them of ſeventy years; Origen. tract. 29 in Matth. ſo that the ſeventy weeks would contain four thouſand nine hundred years. Some Rabbins make them of forty-nine years, or from one jubilee to another; ſo that they would make three thouſand four hundred and thirty years. Others make them to conſiſt of an hundred years: ſo that the ſeventy weeks would contain ſeven thouſand years. But the generality of interpreters ſuppoſe them to conſiſt of ſeven lunar, or Hebrew, years; and by this reckoning the ſeventy weeks would make four hundred and ninety years. Vide Dan. ix. 24—27.

There are many different hypotheſes concerning the beginning and end of Daniel's ſeventy weeks: even among Chriſtian writers, who believe this prophecy marks the time of the birth, and death, of our ſaviour, Jeſus Chriſt. Some begin them from the firſt year of Darius the Mede, which is the epocha of Daniel's prophecy, and conclude them at the prophanation of the temple, under the perſecution of Antiochus Epiphanes. Vide 1 Macc. i. 17. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. x. cap. ult. Sixt. Senenſ. Bibl. lib. viii. Eſt. in Dan. Marſham. Can. Ægypt. Sæcul. 18. Harduin. de 70. hebdomad. Daniel. Others begin them from the firſt year of Cyrus at Babylon, and end them at the deſtruction of the temple by the Romans. Clem. Alex. Stromat. lib. 1. Quidam apud Euſeb. Demonſt. lib. 8. alii. Others fix this beginning at the firſt year of Darius the Mede, in which this revelation was made to Daniel, and their end at the birth of Jeſus Chriſt. Julius Africanus, lib. v. temporum, apud Hieron. in Dan. ix. began the ſeventy weeks at the ſecond year of Artaxerxes, who ſent back Nehemiah into Judea, commiſſioned to rebuild the walls of Jeruſalem, Nehem. i. 1. ii. 5. and he terminated them at the death of the Meſſiah; which happened (according to him) in the fifteenth year of Tiberius. This hypotheſis, or ſyſtem, ſeems to be the moſt rational of any propoſed by the ancients; and is adhered to by moſt commentators.

The ancient Jews, as St. Jerom reports, in Dan. ix. began the ſeventy weeks of Daniel at Darius the Mede, and ended them at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. The eight remaining weeks determined at the utter diſperſion of the Jews under the emperor Adrian. The modern Jews are not agreed among themſelves, fearing to be convicted from this prophecy that the Meſſiah is already come, and that their expectation of him is in vain. Some pronounce a curſe againſt thoſe who compute the time; ſaying, it is in vain to expect the Meſſiah, who has already come long ſince. Others, believe he is not come, but, that he would have come a great while ago, if the ſins of the Jews had not prevented him. Others, place the beginning of the ſeventy weeks at the deſtruction of the firſt temple by Nebuchadnezzar, and their end at the deſtruction of the ſecond temple by Titus. Between theſe two events they reckon but four hundred and ninety years; which is a proof of their great ignorance in chronology. They believe the deſolation of Jeruſalem is to continue till the war of Gog and Magog, who are to be deſtroyed by the Meſſiah. Thus it is underſtood by Jarchi and Abrabanel; with the chief of the Rabbins.

The ſyſtem of Julius Africanus is eſpouſed, ſome ſmall particulars excepted, by the greater part of interpreters and chronologers, whether Romaniſts, or Proteſtants. This places the firſt year of the ſeventy weeks, at the twentieth year of Artaxerxes Longimanus; who commiſſioned Nehemiah to rebuild the walls of Jeruſalem. From thence to the laſt week, that in which Jeſus, the Meſſiah, was put to death, are reckoned ſeventy weeks, or four hundred and ninety lunar years.

There are ſome variations in the calculation of theſe years; but the greateſt difference does not exceed nine or ten years. Petavius, in his twelfth book De doctrina temporum, reconciles all theſe differences, by ſhewing, that the words of the prophecy of Daniel from the going forth of the word to rebuild Jeruſalem, ought to be underſtood of the compleat execution of the order to rebuild Jeruſalem, which was performed by Nehemiah. He ſhews alſo, that the twentieth year of Artaxerxes, Nehem. i. 1. ought to be explained, not of the twentieth year of the reign of Artaxerxes alone, but of his twentieth year, beginning from the time when his father aſſociated him in the kingdom; ten years before his death. Theſe ten years deducted from the number of years that elapſed between the decree of Artaxerxes in favour of Nehemiah, and the death of Jeſus Chriſt, deliver chronologers out of their perplexities; and diſpel the difficulties that ariſe from the ten ſupernumerary years.

This prophet adds, that after the death of Chriſt, "The people that had renounced him ſhould be no more, that the temple ſhould be deſtroyed by the ſtrange prince and people, that this war ſhould be followed by the abomination of deſolation." All this clearly proves the diſſolution of the covenant between God and the incredulous and murdering Jews; the deſtruction of Jeruſalem and the temple; and the diſperſion of the Jewiſh nation by the Romans. The abomination of deſolation, expreſſes the ruin, the razing, the profanation of the temple; and the Roman eagles ſet up in the holy place. "During this laſt week the covenant ſhall be confirmed with many." Jeſus Chriſt died in the middle of the ſeventieth week, and by his death was the covenant ſealed and confirmed to many; i. e. to thoſe who believed on him. "In the midſt of the week the oblations and ſacrifices ſhould ceaſe." Not that they really ceaſed at the very moment of our Saviour's death, but from that time they were abrogated.

"The abomination of deſolation ſhall be ſeen in the temple, and this deſolation ſhall continue to the end." The deſtruction of the temple, and the abomination of deſolation, did not happen till forty years after our Saviour's death; but it was determined, and in ſome manner begun, from the moment of his death. The deſtruction of the Jews was ſuſpended for ſome years, to give them time to return to God by repentance. After this laſt calamity their nation could never recover itſelf again. "This deſolation ſhall continue to the end." Yet ſo as that there always will be Jews, diſperſed all the world over, to give teſtimony to the truth of the Scriptures and prophecies, and as a monument of God's vengeance, on an ingrateful and incredulous nation.

WEEPING. The ancient Hebrews wept, and ſhewed their trouble openly, in mourning and affliction. They were not of opinion, that courage and greatneſs of ſoul conſiſts in ſeeming inſenſible under adverſity, or in reſtraining our tears. They indulged thoſe natural movements, and were not aſhamed to teſtify their grief by their tears. The heroes in Homer do the ſame. It was even looked on as a great misfortune to one not to be bewailed at his funeral. Job xxvii. 15. ſays of the wicked man, His widows ſhall not weep. And the Pſalmiſt, lxxviii. 64. ſpeaking of the death of Hophni and Phinehas, ſays, Their prieſts fell by the ſword, and their widows made no lamentation. God forbids Ezekiel, chap. xxiv. 16. to weep, or to expreſs any ſorrow for the death of his wife; to ſhew that the Jews ſhould be reduced to ſo great misfortunes, that they ſhould not have liberty even to bewail themſelves.

Weeping men, and weeping women. The ancient Hebrews hired men and women to weep at funerals. So ſays Jeremiah, ix. 17, 18. Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, Conſider ye, and call for the mourning women, that they may come, and ſend for cunning women, that they may come. And let them make haſte, and take up a wailing for us, that our eyes may run down with tears, and our eye-lids guſh out with waters. For a voice of wailing is heard out of Sion. And Amos v. 16. Wailing ſhall be in all ſtreets, and they ſhall ſay in all the high-ways, Alas! Alas! And they ſhall call the huſbandman to mourning, and ſuch as are ſkilful of lamentation to wailing. The weeping men and women of Iſrael, ſung the Lamentations that Jeremiah compoſed for the death of the pious king Joſiah, 2 Chron. xxxv. 25. The Jewiſh doctors teach, that at the burying of the mother of a family, the huſband muſt have at leaſt two players on inſtruments, beſides an hired weeping woman. Talmud. tit. Cetuboth. cap. 4.

It appears by Luke vii. 32. that when any one met a funeral proceſſion, it was expected he ſhould mingle his tears and mournful ſongs with thoſe who bewailed. We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned to you, and ye have not wept. Jeſus, the ſon of Sirach, inſinuates, Eccluſ. xii. 5. that the company attending the corps, and the weeper, took a circuit round the place. "Man ſhall go to the houſe of his eternity, or the grave, and the mourners ſhall go about the place." And the prophet Zechariah deſcribing a famous mourning, ſays, that the families ſhall go ſeparately in troops to make their lamentation, the men on one ſide, and the women on the other. The prophets had a cuſtom, after having proclaimed the calamities of a nation or country, to compoſe a ſong of mourning, as if it were to be ſung by the weeping men and women on the day when the event came to paſs. See Jerem. ix. 10, 18, 20. Ezek. xxvi. 17. xxvii. 2. xxxii. 2.

The valley of tears, Pſal. lxxxiv. 7. in the moral ſenſe, ſignifies this world, which, to good men, preſents only an occaſion of grief and tears, becauſe cauſe of the diſorders that prevail herein, of the continual dangers to which we are expoſed, and the abſence of thoſe eternal good things which we ought to long after. But in the literal ſenſe, this valley of tears, or, according to the Hebrew, the vale of Bocha, or Bochim, was not far from Jeruſalem, and remarkable for its barrenneſs and dryneſs. The Pſalmiſt ſays therefore, Bleſſed is the man whoſe ſtrength is in thee, in whoſe heart are the ways of them, who paſſing through the valley of Baca, or Tears, make it a well, and the rain alſo filleth the pools. Vide FRAGMENTS, Nos. CLXIX. p. 170. 304 CONT. p. 5.

The place of tears, Judges ii. 5. This is the ſame juſt mentioned; which is noticed 2 Sam. v. 23. under the name of the place of mulberry-trees, according to the Hebrew, Bochim.

The bread of affliction or tears, Pſalm lxxx. 5. And, my tears have ſerved me for food day and night, Pſalm xlii. 3. Theſe expreſſions admirably repreſent the temper of a ſoul overwhelmed with trouble; and which being ſenſible of the outrages committed againſt God, is in a manner fed with tears, and finds a kind of comfort in them.

The prophet Iſaiah, xvi. 9. ſpeaking of the troubles of Moab, ſays, אריך דמעתי חשבון ואלעלה, I will water thee with my tears, O Heſhbon and Elealeh. Literally, I will make thee drunk with my tears: I foretel that you ſhall be drunk with tears. My tears, are the tears that I foretel to you. I will make you drunk, I declare to you, that you ſhall be made drunk. I imagine here, that the prophet plays on the words; and inſtead of Medeba, a city of Moab, near to Heſhbon, and Elealeh, he has purpoſely put Dimeath, which ſignifies tears, and has ſome affinity with Medeba. I ſhall intoxicate Dimeath, the city of tears, as alſo of Heſhbon and Elealeh.

Malachi ii. 13. upbraids the Jews with having covered the altar of the Lord with tears. You are the cauſe that my altar is bathed in the tears of your wives, whom you have put away without juſt reaſon. You have in ſome meaſure drowned it with tears, and made it reſound with cries and weeping. Covering the altar of the Lord with tears, with weeping, and with crying out, inſomuch that he regardeth not the offering any more, or receiveth it with good will at your hand. Becauſe the Lord hath been witneſs between thee and the wife of thy youth, againſt whom thou haſt dealt treacherouſly, yet is ſhe thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant.

WELL, or Spring. There is frequent mention of wells in Scripture, and under this name fountains are generally included, whoſe ſources iſſue out of the ground, and bubble up as from the bottom of a well. Such is the well ſpoke of by the ſpouſe, Cant. iv. 15. A fountain of gardens, a well of living waters, and ſtreams from Lebanon. About a league from Tyre they ſhew a well of living water, which they pretend to be the ſame that the ſpouſe here deſcribes. Jacob's well was near Shechem, or Sychar, and is called the fountain of Jacob. John iv. 6. Here our Saviour had his converſation with the woman of Samaria. Afterwards a church was built at this fountain: and Jerom notices it in his letter called, The Epitaph of Paula. Antoninus Martyr ſaw it afterwards in the ſixth century; Adamnanus in the ſeventh, and Villibaldus in the eighth. Reland. Paleſtin. lib. iii.

Heretofore, in the plain, or vale, of Siddim, or Sodom, i. e. the plain now poſſeſſed by the lake of Sodom, there were great numbers of ſlime-pits, or wells of bitumen; from whence they took pitch and bitumen, which is ſtill found in the ſalt waters of the lake of Aſphaltites. Gen. xiv. 10.

Moſes ſpeaks of the well called Beer-lahai-roi, or the well of the living and ſeeing, which is between Kadeſh and Bered, and which the angel ſhewed to Hagar in the wilderneſs, to quench the drought of her ſon Iſhmael, who was in great danger of dying with thirſt. Gen. xvi. 14. In that country, where water was very ſcarce, they uſed to hide their wells by covering their mouths with ſand, that ſtrangers might not ſee them, nor draw water from them. Sometimes there has been great quarrelling and fighting among the ſhepherds, and the country-people, on account of a well. See in Geneſis xxvi. 15, 20, 21, 32. the conteſts between the people of Abimelech, king of Gerar, and thoſe of Iſaac.

At Aſkalon they ſhew travellers certain wells, of an admirable ſtructure, which they pretend to have been built by Abraham and Iſaac. Origen. contra Celſ. lib. iii. Euſeb. ad vocem. Φρέαρ. Antonin. Martyr. Itinerar. Vide Reland. Palæſtin. lib. iii. p. 589.

The Hebrews call a well באר, beer; whence this word is often compounded with proper names: Beer-ſheba, Beeroth-bene jakan, Beeroth, Beerah, &c.

Thoſe who have ſeen the wells now in the deſarts of Arabia, ſay, that theſe wells, or baſins, are nearly of the ſame form. Relation of the Caravans, printed at Nancy. They are wells dug into the rock, the mouths of which are about eighteen palms, or ſix feet in diameter, and from nineteen to twenty feet in depth. Some have affirmed that they uſe the compaſs to find them out; becauſe in this country there are neither cities nor high-ways, nor other land-marks by which they may be found, without correct and conſtant acquaintance with them. So that none but the native Arabs of the country, or thoſe that have been long ſlaves among them, can diſcover them. They generally go to them in the night-time, becauſe of the danger of being met by the Arabs; and beſides, they muſt fill their veſſels in haſte, for fear of who may come after them, with whom they would be obliged to contend for it. The water of theſe wells is very clear, and ſo cool, that they dare not drink it alone. They mingle wine with it; but it is ſoon warm in a climate ſo hot as this is. It is obſerved, that it grows ſour when carried out of theſe deſarts, and when they enter Egypt or India; but recovers itſelf again, when brought back into its own climate. Sometimes the Arabians, out of malice, fill up the wells, by throwing ſand into them; and ſometimes they deſtroy the ſprings, or infect the waters, by throwing carrion into them, to hinder the caravans from their ſupplies of water. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXVII. p. 25.

Our travellers ſpeak with great admiration of Joſeph's well, which is ſtill to be ſeen at Cairo. [But it is the work of Joſeph Saladin, not of the patriarch Joſeph.]

WEIGHTS. The Hebrews weighed all the gold and ſilver they uſed in trade. The general word to denote a weight is a ſtone: Deut. xxv. 13, 15. Thou ſhalt not have in thy bag divers weights; Heb. a ſtone and a ſtone. This forbids two different weights; one too heavy, to buy with, the other too light, to ſell with; but thou ſhalt have only one ſtone of perfection and juſtice, i. e. one true weight. Divers weights and divers meaſures, are alike abomination to the Lord. Prov. xx. 10. God condemns fraud and injuſtice in traffic. The ſhekel, the half ſhekel, the talent, are not only denominations of monies, of certain values, in gold and ſilver, but alſo of certain weights. When Moſes expreſſes the drugs to compoſe the perfume for the golden altar, he ſays, that they were to take the weight of five hundred ſhekels of myrrh, &c. Exod. xxx. 23. 2 Sam. xiv. 26. it is ſaid of Abſalom's hair, that it weighed two hundred ſhekels. The ſame may be obſerved of the word talent, in Hebrew, kikkar; it is uſed to expreſs a conſiderable weight. [or value]

WEIGHT of the ſanctuary, or weight of the temple. Moſes ſpeaks of the weight of the ſanctuary. Exod. xxx. 13, 24. Levit. v. 5. Numb. iii. 50. vii. 19. xviii. 16, &c. when there was occaſion to expreſs a juſt, public, and determinate weight. Several learned men have pretended, that the weight of the ſanctuary was heavier than the common weight: others, on the contrary, think the common weights were heavier than thoſe of the ſanctuary. They are farther divided about the value and weight of the two ſhekels, and about the diſtinction between the ſhekel of the ſanctuary, and the public ſhekel; or the ſhekel of the king, and the common ſhekel. 2 Sam. xiv. 26. Ducentis ſiculis pondere publico. Heb. pondere regis. Some think the weights of the ſanctuary, and the king's weight, are put by way of oppoſition to the weight of foreign nations, as the Egyptians, the Canaanites, the Syrians. Others, that the king's weight, means the Babylonian weight; and the weight of the ſanctuary the Jewiſh weight: that till the captivity of Babylon, there was no variety among the weights of the Jews; that the only paſſage which mentions the king's weight, was either written, or corrected, ſince the captivity. Vide TALENT.

Our beſt critics maintain, that the diſtinction of the weight of the ſanctuary, and the public weight, is but imaginary, the only difference being, that the ſtandards were preſerved in the temple, or the town-houſe, and thoſe of merchants and citizens were derived from thence. This ſeems to us to have the greater certainty. We ſee by 1 Chron. xxiii. 29. that there was a prieſt in the temple, who had the weights and meaſures under his care. Moſes appoints, that all things valued by their price in ſilver, ſhould be rated by the weight of the ſanctuary. Levit. xxvii. 25. He mentions no difference between this ſhekel of twenty oboli, or twenty gerahs, and the common ſhekel. Ezekiel xlv. 12. ſpeaking of the ordinary weights and meaſures uſed in traffic among the Jews, ſays that the ſhekel weighed twenty oboli, or gerahs. It was therefore equal to the weight of the ſanctuary. Neither Joſephus, nor Philo, nor Jerom, nor any ancient author, ſpeaks of this pretended diſtinction between the weights of the temple, and thoſe in common uſe.

Beſides, the cuſtom of preſerving the ſtandards of weights and meaſures in temples, is not peculiar to the Hebrews. The Egyptians, as Clemens Alexandrinus informs us, had an officer in the college of prieſts, whoſe buſineſs it was to examine all ſorts of meaſures, and to take care of the originals. The Romans had the ſame cuſtom. Fannius, de Amphora;

> Amphora fit cubitis, quam ne violare liceret,
> Sacravêre Jovi Tarpeo in monte Quirites.

The

The emperor Juſtinian, novell. 128. cap. 15. decreed, that the ſtandards of weights and meaſures ſhould be kept in Chriſtian churches.

WEIGHT, or BURDEN, onus, in Hebrew, maſſa, is commonly uſed in the prophets for a diſaſtrous prophecy. The burden of Babylon, the burden of Nineveh, of Moab, of Egypt. The Jews aſking Jeremiah, captiouſly, what is the burden of the Lord? He anſwered them, you are that burden; you are as it were inſupportable to the Lord; he will throw you on the ground, and break you to pieces, and you ſhall become the reproach of the people. Jer. xxiii. 33—40.

The burden of the deſart of the ſea, Iſai. xxi. 1. A calamitous prophecy againſt Babylon, which ſtood on the Euphrates, and was watered as by a ſea; and which, from being great and populous, as it then was, would ſoon be reduced to a ſolitude.

The burden of the valley of viſion, Iſai. xxii. 1. A dreadful viſion againſt Jeruſalem, called by way of irony, The Valley of Viſion, though it ſtood on an eminence. It is called of Viſion, or of Moriah, becauſe it is thought to be on Mount Sion, or Moriah, that Abraham was about to ſacrifice Iſaac. Vide VISION.

The burden of the beaſts of the ſouth, Iſai. xxx. 6. The prophecy in which we find theſe words, plainly reſpects Judea. But we cannot perceive on what account this inſcription is found in this place. It may eaſily happen, that copiers ſupplied it, for it ſeems to make no ſenſe with the context; but, on the contrary, interrupts and ſuſpends it. One may thus read the text of Iſaiah, ver. 4, 5. The Jews ſent their ambaſſadors as far as Tanis and Hanes; but they were confounded when they ſaw that theſe people were not in a condition to aſſiſt them. (The burden of the beaſts of the ſouth.) They went, I ſay, into the land of trouble and anguiſh, from whence come the young and old lion, the viper and fiery flying ſerpent, they will carry their riches upon the ſhoulders of young aſſes, and their treaſures upon the bunches of camels, to a people that ſhall not profit them. [q. a marginal note?]

The ſtone of weight, or burden, mentioned Zechariah xii. 3. In that day will I make Jeruſalem a burdenſome ſtone for all people. All that burden themſelves with it ſhall be cut in pieces, though all the people of the earth be gathered together againſt it. I will make Jeruſalem as a ſtone of burden to all nations. All thoſe that would lift it ſhall be hurt by it. All nations around Jeruſalem had tried their ſtrength againſt it; the Aſſyrians, the Chaldeans, the Perſians, the Egyptians, &c. but all theſe had been hurt by the Jews. They have taken the city, it is true, but they paid dear for their victory by their loſſes. St. Jerom, in Zach. xii. obſerves, that in the cities and villages of Paleſtine, there was an old cuſtom, which continued even to his time, to have great and heavy round ſtones, which the young people lifted up as high as they could, by way of exerciſe, and to try their ſtrength. He aſſures us moreover, that in the citadel at Athens, near the ſtatue of Minerva, he had ſeen an iron ball of a very great weight, and which he could not move but with difficulty, with which they heretofore had uſed to try the ſtrength of the Athletæ, that their abilities might be known, and that they might not be too unequally matched. Many think, that the ſtone of Zoheleth, 1 Kings i. 9. was one of theſe ſtones of burden: and Eccleſiaſticus vi. 21. alludes to this cuſtom, when he ſays, She will lie upon him as a mighty ſtone of trial, and he will caſt her from him ere it be long.

The weight, or burden, of the day, Matth. xx. 12. expreſſes the labour and toil of the day, during the meridian heat.

A weight of glory, of which St. Paul ſpeaks, 2 Cor. iv. 17. is oppoſed to the lightneſs of the evils of this life. The troubles we endure are really of no more weight than a feather, or of no weight at all, if compared to the weight, or intenſeneſs, of that glory, which is to be hereafter as a compenſation for them. [Beſide this, the apoſtle alludes to the double meaning of the Hebrew word chabod, which ſignifies not only weight, but glory: Glory, i. e. ſplendour, is in this world, the lighteſt thing in nature: but in the other world it may be real, at once ſubſtantial and radiant; q. a weight of glory.]

WHALE, the greateſt of fiſhes known. Pliny, lib. xxxii. cap. 1. ſays, that whales have been ſeen of ſix hundred foot long, and three hundred and ſixty foot thick. And Solinus, cap. 52. writes, that there have been ſeen ſome of eight hundred foot long. Others have ſaid, that the whale could ſwallow up a ſhip with its rigging. Dionyſ. Perieget. ver. 603. Priſcian. Feſtus Avienus,

> Protenus hæc ipſas abſorbent fauce carinas,
> Involvuntque ſimul mox monſtra natantia nantes.

But theſe are fables, and extravagant exaggerations. Father Tertre ſays, that in more than twelve thouſand leagues that he had ſailed, he never ſaw any that ſeemed above fifty or ſixty foot long. We are aſſured, however, that in America there there are ſome ſo large, that they meaſure ninety or an hundred foot from head to tail. And it is owned, that the whales in the North Seas are larger than theſe on the coaſt of Guinea, or in the Mediterranean. [And might be much larger formerly, before the harpoon cut them off long before the natural term of their life.]

In Scripture there is often mention made of the cetus, or whale. But the Hebrew word תנים, thannim, tranſlated by whale, includes all large fiſhes, whether of rivers, or of the ſea. The leviathan, Job xl. 20. by which ſeveral interpreters underſtand the whale, rather ſignifies the crocodile. Laſtly, the fiſh that ſwallowed Jonah, was probably the carcharias, great ſhark, or ſea dog. See FISH, and FRAGMENTS, Nos. CXLV CXLVI. CCXVI.

The whale brings forth her young alive, as other perfect animals: one, or two at moſt; which it nouriſhes by the breaſt, with great care.

Whales have generally no teeth, but only beards, or whiſkers, in the mouth; of about a ſpan in breadth, and fifteen feet long, which end in fringes; theſe at top are ſet in the palate, and ranged according to their different magnitudes. Theſe beards extend, or contract, the cheeks of the creature, which are ſometimes ſo large, that they are able to contain the little whales newly born, when it blows a ſtorm, as Olaus pretends.

They are nouriſhed by a froth which they ſuck from the ſea; and by ſome little marine animals, as the ſea-flea, the ſea-ſpider, anchovies, ſea-weed [the meduſa. Lin.] Yet ſome ſpecies have teeth; and in their bellies have been found thirty or forty cod-fiſh.

WHEEL. Scripture frequently mentions, 1. the wheels of chariots of war, 2. of chariots uſed in threſhing corn, and, 3. the wheels of the chariot of the Lord, which appeared to Ezekiel, and to Daniel: theſe were of a wonderful magnitude, beauty, and ſplendor. Ezekiel ſay, that they were living and animated: full of eyes, or inlaid with precious ſtones and jewels, that gliſtered like eyes: and one wheel within another wheel. Whether the wheels are to be conceived of as one within another, as a ſmaller is within a a larger; or, that both were of the ſame bigneſs, and croſſing at right angles, ſo as to make a wheel that might move every way. See CHERUBIM, and FRAGMENT, No. CLII, page 119.

The violent and precipitate wheel of the wicked, is repreſented in Scripture, under the idea of a wheel that turns with great impetuoſity. Pſalm lxxxiii. 13. 1 Sam. xxv. 29. When the Pſalmiſt deſcribes the deſtruction of Pharaoh and his army, at their paſſage into the Red Sea, he ſays, that the arrows of the Lord, or his lightning, were darted forth, and that the voice of his thunder broke out, to overthrow the wheels of the Egyptians.

Solomon, deſcribing enigmatically the effects of old age, ſays, The wheel, ſhall be broken at the ciſtern. Eccleſ. xii. 6. This may be underſtood of the natural paſſage of the urine, and the organ of generation, which then loſeth its ſtrength. [Rather of the action of the heart and blood.] St. James ſays, iii. 6. Vulg. that the tongue ſets fire to the wheel, or courſe, of nature, or of life. Our life may be juſtly compared to a wheel, becauſe of its inconſtancy and volubility: and the tongue creates abundance of ſin and miſery in this mutable life.

Potter's Wheel, Jer. xviii. 13.

WICKED. Malus, Malignus. The wicked one, taken abſolutely, is generally put for the devil: Deliver us from the wicked [evil] one. Matth. vi. 13. Then cometh the wicked one, and catcheth away that which was ſown in his heart. Matth. xiii. 19. The wicked, in the plural number, ſignifies perverſe and ſinful men. The evil day, Epheſ. vi. 13. is the day of temptation, or trial; the day in which one is moſt in danger of doing evil. The evil eye, ſignifies jealouſy, envy, or ſordid nigardlineſs, being oppoſite to liberality and charity. [The evil eye is, perhaps, a grudging, or malign aſpect: but, certainly, in the Eaſt they believe the eye to have great powers of ſtriking the party looked on: and perhaps the phraſe alludes to this:—a miſchievous—malignant—injurious—direction of the eye,—q. EYE-SHOT: as our poets ſpeak "darting malignant fires."] An evil name, beati eritis cum ejecerint nomen veſtrum tanquam malum, &c. Happy are ye when they ſhall ſpeak evil of you, and your reputation ſhall be ill treated on my account.

WIDOW. Among the Hebrews, even before the law, a widow who had no children by her huſband, was to marry the brother of her deceaſed ſpouſe, in order to raiſe up children who might inherit his goods, and perpetuate his name and family. See LEVIRATE. We find the practice of this cuſtom before the law, in the perſon of Tamar, who married ſucceſſively Er and Onan, the ſons of Judah, and who was likewiſe to have married Selah, the third ſon of this patriarch, after the two former were dead without iſſue. Gen. xxxviii. 6—11. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXXX, page 38.

The law that appoints theſe marriages is Deut. xxv. 5, &c.

Two motives prevailed to the enacting of this law. The firſt was, the continuation of eſtates in the ſame family; and the other was, to perpetuate a man's name in Iſrael. It was looked on as a great misfortune for a man to die without an heir, or to ſee his inheritance paſs into another family. They had but little regard to the indecency there might ſeem to be, in making a brother-in-law to marry a ſiſter-in-law; though this in any other caſe was prohibited. Probably they might look on a marriage as not conſummated when there was no procreation of children. This law was not confined to brothers-in-law only, but was extended to more diſtant relations of the ſame line; as we ſee in the example of Ruth, who married Boaz after ſhe had been refuſed by a nearer kinſman.

WIDOWHOOD, as well as barrenneſs, was a kind of ſhame and reproach in Iſrael. Iſaiah liv. 4. ſays, Thou ſhalt forget the ſhame of thy youth, paſſed in celibacy and barrenneſs, and ſhalt not remember the reproach of thy widowhood any more. It was preſumed, that a woman of merit and reputation might have found a huſband, either in the family of her deceaſed huſband, if he died without children; or in ſome other family if he had left children. It is true, indeed, that a widow was commended, who, from affection to her firſt huſband, declined a ſecond marriage, and continued in mourning and widowhood, as was the caſe of Judith

It was looked on as the greateſt misfortune that could happen to a man, to die, and not be bewailed by his widow; i. e. without receiving the ſolemn honours of ſepulture, of which the tears and praiſes of the widow made a chief part. The wicked and his children ſhall die, ſays Job, and their widows ſhall not mourn for them. Job xxvii. 15. The Pſalmiſt, ſpeaking of the lamentable death of Hophni and Phineas, obſerves it as a great diſaſter, that they were not bewailed by their widows. Pſalm lxxviii. 64. Viduæ eorum non plorabantur, or rather, non plorabant, according to the Hebrew.

God frequently recommends to his people to be very careful in relieving the widow and orphan. Exod. xxii. 22. Deut. x. 18. xiv. 29. & paſſim. St. Paul would have us honour widows, that are widows indeed, and deſolate; 1 Tim. v. 3, &c. i. e. the biſhop ſhould have a great regard for them, and ſupply them in their neceſſity; for this is often ſignified by the verb to honour. God forbids his high-prieſt to marry a woman who is either a widow, or divorced. Levit. xxi. 14.

Formerly there were widows in the Chriſtian church, who, becauſe of their poverty, were placed on the liſt of perſons to be provided for at the expence of the church. There were others, who had certain employments in the church; as, to viſit ſick women, to aſſiſt women at baptiſm, and to do ſeveral things which decency would not permit the other ſex to do. St. Paul did not allow any woman to be choſe into this number, unleſs ſhe were threeſcore years old at leaſt. 1 Tim. v. 9. They muſt have been married but once; muſt produce good teſtimony of their good works; muſt have given good education to their children; muſt have exerciſed hoſpitality; waſhed the feet of the ſaints; and given ſuccour to the miſerable and afflicted. He forbids that young widows ſhould be admitted among theſe, [or, at leaſt, among ſuch as were on the church-liſt for maintenance.]

Scripture propoſes ſeveral examples of real widows, who lived in the practice of piety, in retirement, and humiliation. Such were Judith, Tabitha, Anna, the daughter of Phanuel, the mother of the ſeven Maccabees, the widow of Sarepta, who entertained and fed Elijah. Jeſus Chriſt reproves the Phariſees, becauſe, under pretence of long prayers, they devoured widow's houſes; either abuſing their ſimplicity and credulity, or flattering their paſſions, and fomenting their weak ſuperſtitions, [or, being intruſted with their worldly affairs, through the confidence unhappily placed in the external devotion of theſe ſectaries.]

WILL. Beſide the common acceptation of this word, to ſignify that faculty of willing, with which we are endued; i. e. of chuſing, deſiring, and loving; the word will is taken,

1. For the abſolute and immutable will of God, which nothing can withſtand: For who hath reſiſted his will? Rom. ix. 19. Gen. l. 19, 20. Iſai. xlvi. 10.
2. For a will not abſolute and immutable: as when Jeſus Chriſt deſired that the cup of his paſſion might paſs from him, if ſuch had been the will of God. Matth. xxvi. 39. It is not the will of God that the wicked ſhould periſh. Ezek. xviii. 23. Have I any pleaſure at all that the wicked ſhould die, ſaith the Lord God; and not that he ſhould return from his ways, and live? But if he will periſh, and will not be converted, God is not obliged to interpoſe, and to hinder him from periſhing, againſt his will.
3. Will is often taken for a will of ſign or token. It is the will of God that all men ſhould love and obey him, ſince this he has commanded: yet certain it is, that ſmall is the number of thoſe who diſcharge theſe duties. We muſt therefore affirm, that his will, in reſpect of thoſe who do not love and obey him, is a mere will of token, distinct from that will which is called the will of favour: this is analgous to a general will, whereas, the other is a special will.

4. Will is taken for love, approbation and complacency: Malac. i. 10. Non est mihi voluntas in vobis, I have no pleasure in you. Also, Thou shalt no more be termed forsaken, neither shall thy land any more be termed desolate; but thou shalt be called Hephzi-bah: sed vocaberis voluntas mea in ea. Isai. lxii. 4. [My delight is in her.]

5. Will is put for the proper will of man: Isai. lviii. 3. Wherefore have we fasted, say they, and thou seest not? Because it was in compliance to your own will and pleasure: Ecce in die jejunii vestri invenitur voluntas vestra. And Jesus, the son of Sirach, says, Go not after thy lusts, but refrain thyself from thine appetites: a voluntate tua avertere. Eccluf. xviii. 30. Simeon and Levi, to gratify their own will, their revenge, and cruelty, in their self-will they digged down a wall. Gen. xlix. 6.

6. To do the will of God is put for keeping his law, submitting to his orders, &c. Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is heaven. Matth. vii. 21. And Matth. xii. 50. Whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother.

WILLINGLY, Voluntary. Voluntarius is generally put for one who willingly undertakes to do a thing, i. e. of his own mere motion, only prompted by his personal zeal for the glory of God. Exod. xxxv. 5. Let every one offer voluntarily, and with a chearful mind, what he intends to offer to God. And Psalm cxix. 108. The vows which I have made willingly; or, the praises which I give thee, from the mere motion of my own heart. And Amos iv. 5. says, Vocate voluntarias oblationes: the alms collected by sound of trumpet, the voluntary offerings, the pacific sacrifices which were to be offered to the Lord. St. Paul says, the churches of Macedonia were liberal [willing] beyond their ability. 2 Cor. viii. 3. The Psalmist says, Psalm lxviii. 9. Pluviam voluntariam segregatis, Deus, hæreditati tuæ: thou hast appointed for thy people a voluntary, a liberal, an abundant rain. Psalm liv. 6. Voluntarie sacrificabo tibi: I will offer thee a thanksgiving, a pacific, a free-will sacrifice. See Lev. iii. 1, &c. St. Paul, Heb. x. 26. says, If we sin willingly—there remains no other sacrifice for sin. In the old law, sacrifices for the expiation of offences committed against the ceremonies of the law, were repeated as often as those offences were acknowledged. But under the new law, those who fall voluntarily and wilfully into great crimes, are not to expect that Jesus Christ will come to die for them again: he died but once, and is not to die any more. [nor any other succeeding mediator.] Those who fall into great crimes, it is true, may always hope for pardon, or may return and repent; but this remedy and this return are not easy. By those voluntary crimes mentioned by St. Paul, many understand final impenitence, hardness of heart, despair, or the sin against the Holy Ghost.

WILLOW, Salix, a very common tree, that grows in marshy places, the leaf of which is very like that of the olive. God, speaking of the feast of tabernacles, commands the Hebrews to take branches of the handsomest trees, particularly of the willows of the brook, and to bear them in their hands before the Lord, as a token of rejoicing. Levit. xxiii. 40. Heb. ערבי נחל salices torrentis. Ita interp. passim. LXX. ἰτέας καὶ ἄγνου κλάδους ἐν χειμάρρῳ. Willows, and branches of the agnus castus. Vide FRAGMENT, No. , page

WIND, Ventus. This is often called spiritus, and in some passages of Scripture opinions are divided, whether it signifies the wind, or the Holy Spirit. For example, Gen. i. 2. The spirit of God moved on the water. Some understand this of the Holy Spirit, others of a violent wind. And Isaiah xl. 7. The grass is dried up, because the spirit of the Lord hath blown upon it. But commonly the tenor of the discourse will distinguish, whether spiritus stands for the Holy Spirit, for the wind, or for the soul by which we are animated.

The Hebrews, as well as we, acknowledge four principal winds. Ezekiel xlii. 16, 17, 18. The east wind, רוח הקדים (1) kadim; the north wind, רוח הצפנ (2) tzaphon; the south wind, רוח הדרום (3) darom; and the west wind, or that from the Mediterranean sea, in Hebrew, רוח הים (4) hajam.

St. Jerom often translates the wind kadim, Gen. xli. 27. Exod. x. 13. (LXX. Νότου) which is the east-wind, by ventus-oriens, a burning wind. The south-wind is extremely scorching in Egypt, as well as the east-wind.

The north-wind was cold, as appears from Eccluf. xliii. 22. Frigidus ventus aquilo flavit, & gelavit crystallus. Solomon says, in his Proverbs, xxv. 23. רוח צפון תהולל גשם, that this wind disperses the clouds and the rain; but other interpreters translate, it produces rain.

The wind typhonicus, mentioned by St. Luke, Acts xxvii. 14. blows between the east and north. Euroaquilo, or Euroclidon, a squall, is a very dangerous gerous wind, of the nature of a whirl-wind, which falls ſuddenly on ſhips, makes them roll about, and ſometimes ſinks them. See Pliny, lib. ii. cap. 48.

WING, Ala. By the name wing, the Hebrews underſtand, not only the wings of birds, but alſo the lappet, ſkirt, or flap of a garment, the extremity of a country, the wings of an army; and, figuratively and metaphorically, protection, or defence. God ſays, that he has borne his people on the wings of eagles; Exod. xix. 4. See alſo Deut. xxxii. 11. i. e. he had brought them out of Egypt, as an eagle carries its young ones under their wings. The prophet begs of God to protect them under his wings. Pſalm xvii. 8. He ſays, that the children of men put their hopes in the protection of his wings. Pſalm xxxvi. 7. Ruth deſires of Boaz to ſtretch the wing of his garment over her. Ruth iii. 9. Expande pallium tuum, Heb. alam tuam. Jerem. ii. 34. In thy ſkirts [Heb. wings] is found the blood of the ſouls of the poor innocents. Iſaiah, ſpeaking of the army of the kings of Iſrael, and in Syria, who were coming into Judah, ſays, The ſtretching out of his wings ſhall fill the breadth of thy land, O Immanuel. Iſaiah viii. 8. The ſame prophet calls the ſiſtra of the Egyptians, cymbalum alarum, probably becauſe of the rings that played in the holes of the ſiſtrum; Iſaiah xviii. 1. but vide FRAGMENT, No. , page

He calls the utmoſt part of a country, the wing of the land, Iſai. xiv. We have heard the praiſes of the juſt, from the extremity of the earth; à finibus terræ; Heb. ab alis terræ. See Job xxxviii. 13. In Malachi iv. 2. the name of wings is given to the ſun-beams: or, rather, the ſun is repreſented as having wings, becauſe of the great rapidity of its courſe. Profane authors aſcribe wings to the animals that draw the chariot of Apollo: and to Mithras, who is the ſun. Hoſea, iv. 19. ſpeaking of the wind, deſcribes it as having wings; as does the Pſalmiſt, he walketh on the wings of the wind.

WINE. Several of the ancients were of opinion, that wine was not in uſe before the deluge, and that Noah was the firſt who introduced this liquor. If wine, ſay they, had been known before the flood, Abel would have made an offering of it to the Lord; and Noah would have been on his guard, againſt drinking of it to exceſs. Others maintain, that it is much more probable the firſt men ſhould have had the uſe of wine; which is a liquor ſo generally uſeful and agreeable, that it could not be unknown even to Adam. Jeſus Chriſt tells us, that the firſt men were ſurprized by the deluge while they were eating and drinking, which is commonly underſtood of ſuch as drink wine. We may ſay, that though Noah knew the intoxicating quality of wine, yet he might think, that the quantity he drank of it was not capable of cauſing the drunkenneſs in him that he afterwards found. Vide FRAGMENT, No. XIX, page 36.

Hardly any ſacrifices were made to the Lord, but they were accompanied by libations of wine. See Exod. xxix. 40. Numb. xv. 5, 7.

Vide VINES and GRAPE. There were many excellent vineyards in Paleſtine. Jacob ſays of his ſon Judah, He waſhed his garments in wine, and his cloaths in the blood of grapes. Geneſis xlix. 11. The uſe of wine was forbid to the prieſts during the time they were in the tabernacle, and employed in the ſervice of the altar. Levit. x. 9. This liquor was alſo forbid to the Nazarites, Numb. vi. 3. and whenever wine was forbid, all other intoxicating liquors were underſtood to be forbidden alſo. The Rechabites obſerved a ſtrict abſtinence from wine, in purſuance of the commands they had received from their father Rechab. Jer. xxxv.

In the ſtyle of the ſacred penmen, the wine, or the cup, often repreſents the anger of God: Thou haſt made us drink the wine of aſtoniſhment. Pſalm lx. 3. In the hand of the Lord there is a cup, and the wine is red; it is full of mixture, and he poureth out of the ſame. But the dregs thereof all the wicked ſhall wring them out, and drink them, Pſalm lxxv. 8. The Lord ſays to Jeremiah, xxv. 15. Take the wine-cup of this fury at my hand, and cauſe all the nations to whom I ſend thee, to drink it.

Wine was adminiſtered medically to ſuch as were in trouble and ſorrow. Prov. xxxi, 4, 5, 6. Give ſtrong drink unto him that is ready to periſh, and wine to thoſe that be of heavy hearts. The Rabbins tell us, Tract. Sanhedr. that they uſed to give wine and ſtrong liquors to thoſe who were condemned to die, at their execution, to ſtupify them, and to take off ſome part of the fear and ſenſe of their pain. There were certain charitable women at Jeruſalem, they tell us, who uſed to mix certain drugs with wine, to make it ſtronger, and more capable of abating the ſenſe of pain. It is thought ſuch a kind of mixture was that offered to Jeſus Chriſt to drink, before he was faſtened to the croſs. Mark xv. 23. And they gave him to drink wine mingled with myrrh; but he received it not.

We read in the Evangeliſts of three drinks offered to our Saviour, at his paſſion: St. Matthew ſays, xxvii. 33. that when they came to Calvary they gave him to drink wine mixt with gall; but when he had taſted it, he would not drink it. St. Mark ſays, xv. 22. that they offered him wine mixed with myrrh; but he would not drink of it. St. Matthew ſays, xxvii. 48. that Jeſus Chriſt being upon the croſs, a ſoldier filling a ſponge with vinegar, put it upon the end of a reed, and raiſed it to his mouth. Vide VINEGAR. This is entirely different from the two former. The buſineſs is, to reconcile Matthew and Mark, and to determine whether the wine mingled with gall, mentioned by Matthew, be the wine mixed with myrrh of Mark.

The text of St. Matthew xxvii. 33. Ὄξος μετὰ χολῆς μεμιγμένον. Ita Syr. Origen. Hieron. in ſeveral Greek copies, intimates, that they offered our Saviour vinegar mingled with gall. But many excellent manuſcripts, as well as the Vulgate, read wine, with St. Mark; and many of the ancients, both Greeks and Latins.

To reconcile theſe evangeliſts, ſome have advanced, that Matthew having wrote it was wine mixed with gall, that was offered to our Saviour; Mark intended to expreſs the bitterneſs of the gall by the word myrrh, which is a very bitter ingredient. Others have thought, that Matthew writing in Hebrew, uſed the word Roſch, which ſignifies poiſon, bitterneſs; and that St. Mark being willing to ſpecify what ſort of bitterneſs this was, rendered it myrrh. But the Greek interpreter of Matthew tranſlated it by gall, thinking this was the bitterneſs intended by Matthew.

Some have conceived that theſe two potions were offered our Saviour at different times; that the devout women who attended on him offered him myrrhed wine, to diminiſh his ſenſe of pain, whereas that of the ſoldiers was wine mingled with gall [q. was the firſt potion particularly prepared by friends, the ſecond common to ordinary criminals?]

Many think, that myrrh had almoſt the ſame effect in wine as incenſe; that it ſtupified the patient, cauſed a kind of intoxication, and took away the ſenſe of pain. They gave to their elephants wine in which incenſe had been mixed, to inebriate them, and take away their horror at ſhedding blood: ſays the third book of Maccabees. Apuleius, Metam. lib. viii. ſays, that a perſon had fortified himſelf againſt the violence of blows by taking a potion of myrrh: and Metam. lib. x. Sed obfirmatur myrrhæ præſumptione, nullis verberibus ac ne ipſi quidem ſuccubuit igni. Vide GALL.

WINE of Helbon. יין חלבון, Ezekiel xxvii. 18. ſpeaks of a kind of excellent wine, ſold at the fairs of Tyre: he calls it fat wine, Heb. wine of Helbon. This wine was well known to the ancients; they called it Chalibonium vinum. It was made at Damaſcus; the Perſians had planted vineyards there on purpoſe, ſays Poſidonius, quoted by Athenæus. Dipnoſoph. lib. 1. Vide & Strab. lib. xv. & Plutarch. de fortun. Alexand. This author ſays, that the kings of Perſia uſed no other wine for their common drink.

WINE of Libanus. Hoſea xiv. 7. ſpeaks of this wine: The ſcent thereof ſhall be as the wine of Libanon. The wines of thoſe ſides of Mount Libanus that had a good aſpect were heretofore much eſteemed. They commend that of Bibles; and even to this day the wines of Libanus are in repute. But ſome think, that wine of Libanus may ſignify a ſweet-ſcented wine, wine in which perfumes are mixed, or drugs, to give it a better flavour. Odoriferous wines were not unknown to the Hebrews. In Cant. viii. 2. mention is made of a medicated wine, Vinum conditum, wine mixed with perfumes. The book of Wiſdom, ii. 7. notices a precious ſort of wine, which probably was perfumed. Let us fill ourſelves with coſtly wine and ointments. Nectar was alſo a wine of the ſame nature. The Hebrew word נקטר Nectar, ſignifies Suffiri, ſuavi odore perfundi, to be perfumed.

The wines of Paleſtine being heady, they uſed to qualify them with water, that they might be drank without inconvenience, Prov. ix. 2, 5. She hath mingled her wine, ſhe hath alſo furniſhed her table. Come, eat of my bread, and drink of the wine which I have mingled. And Pſal. lxxv. 8. In the hand of the Lord there is a cup,—it is full of mixture. The prieſts of Bel ſaid to the king of Babylon, Bel. 11. "Sir, do you mingle the wine yourſelf, and ſet the meat upon the altar of Bel." Rev. xviii. 6. "In the cup of the whore, mingle as much again as ſhe has mingled for others." Fulgentius ſays, in the ſecond book of his Mythologics, that the wine of Sarepta, a city of Phœnicia, was ſo ſtrong, that the greateſt drinkers could hardly drink above a pint of it.

[I think it likely that this mingling of wine is rather two kinds of wine mingled together, to improve their flavour; as rough with ſmooth, overſweet wine with other of a weaker reliſh, &c. Thoſe who ſat long over wine, were too good judges to admit of water as an improvement. The cup, full of mixture, probably means ſome of the lees—to be drank off to the very dregs: as they did not keep their wine bottled, but in larger quantities, ſo when they drew it off, ſome mixture might accompany the clear liquor.]

WINE of aſtoniſhment, Pſalm lx. 3. יין תרעלה, may repreſent the cup of God's anger, with which he inebriates the wicked; or, rather, according to the Hebrew, the cup of the wine of affliction, impregnated with its lees: it might alſo be tranſ-lated,

lated, wine of trembling, that produces death, that poiſons, that ſtupifies, Pſalm lxxv. 8. The Septuagint tranſlate it, wine that ſtings inwardly, that cauſes affliction, or compunction: Aquila, wine of ſtupefaction: Symmachus, wine of agitation, or diſturbance.

WINE of the palm tree, called in the Vulgate, Sicera, Deut. xiv. 26, & paſſim. is made of the ſap of the palm-tree. It is common in the Eaſt.

WINE of libation, Deut. xxxii. 38. Eſth. xiv. 17. was the moſt excellent wine; poured on the victims in the temple of the Lord. Or, pure wine, becauſe in libations they uſed no mixtures.

The wicked eat the bread of impiety, and drink the wine of iniquity, Prov. iv. 17. they are maintained by ill-gotten goods; or, they abuſe the good things that God gives them; they offend him by their abuſe of the comforts of life.

The WINE of uprightneſs, Canticles i. 3. יין מישרים vii. 9. Prov. xxiii. 30. was good wine, true and excellent wine [NEAT wine; but vide the FRAGMENTS on SOLOMON'S SONG.] St. Jerom has tranſlated the Hebrew of the Proverbs, by Vinum quod ingreditur blandè, inſtead of Vinum rectitudinem, as the text. Horace has well expreſſed this thought,

——— generoſum & lene requiro,
Quod curas abigat, quod cum ſpe divite manet
In venas animumque meum.

HORAT. lib. i. EP. 15.

A feaſt of wine, is that in which wine abounds. See Eccluſ. xxxi. 41. xxxii. 7. xlix. 2. Or, a feſtival of ſolemnity, a banquet of invitation: for uſually they drank no wine at their ordinary meals. See Iſai. xxii. 13. xxiv. 9, 11.

Hoſea ix. 2. Vinum mentietur eis; their wine ſhall fail them, their vines ſhall not produce any wine.

The wine of the condemned, Amos ii. 8. may be underſtood of the wine given to condemned criminals; as Proverbs xxxi. 6. Diodorus Siculus, lib. i. p. 62. ſpeaks of a wine in Egypt, to diſpel ſorrow and to appeaſe anger. Homer ſays, in Egypt Helen learned the compoſition of Nepenthe, which procures forgetfulneſs of evils. But another interpretation may be commodiouſly given to this paſſage of Amos, ii. 8. יין ענושים, LXX. Οἶνον ἐν συνοφαντίων, they drink the wine, they make themſelves merry at the expence of thoſe whom they have unjuſtly condemned. The Septuagint ſay, they drink wine earned by their ſlanders. The Chaldee, the wine of rapine. [of fines, mulcts.]

New WINE, which is not to be put into old bottles, Matth. ix. 17. Mark ii. 22. Luke v. 37. the Holy Ghoſt, with which the apoſtles were to be repleniſhed after our Saviour's aſcenſion. Vide FRAGMENT, No. LVIII. BOTTLE.

WISDOM, ſapientia; in Greek Σοφία Sophia; in Hebrew חכמה, Chachemah. The Jews underſtand in a greater latitude the words wiſe, and wiſdom, than either the Greeks or Latins. With them,

1. Wiſdom ſignifies underſtanding, or the knowledge of things ſupernatural and divine. It occurs in this ſenſe in the Pſalms, &c. This wiſdom Solomon intreated of God with ſo much earneſtneſs, and God granted him with ſo much liberality. [SACRED UNDERSTANDING.]
2. WISDOM expreſſes quickneſs of invention, and dexterity in the execution of works, which require not ſo much ſtrength of body, as exertion of mind. God told Moſes, that he had filled Bezaleel and Aholiab, with wiſdom and underſtanding, and knowledge, to invent and perform ſeveral ſorts of work for the tabernacle. Exod. xxviii. 3. xxxi. 3. [INGENUITY.]
3. WISDOM is uſed for craft, cunning, and ſtratagem; whether good or evil. It is ſaid Exod. i. 10. that Pharaoh dealt wiſely with the Iſraelites, when he oppreſſed them in Egypt. It is obſerved 2 Sam. xiii. 3. of Jonadab, the friend of Ammon, and nephew of David, that he was very wiſe, i. e. very ſubtle and crafty. And Job ſays, v. 13. that God taketh the wiſe in their own craftineſs. And Solomon, Prov. xiv. 8. the wiſdom of the prudent is to underſtand his way. [SUBTLETY.]
4. WISDOM is taken for doctrine, learning, and experience, Job xii. 2, 12. With the ancient is wiſdom, and in length of days underſtanding; with him is wiſdom and ſtrength, he hath counſel and underſtanding. Job xv. 2. Should a wiſe man utter vain knowledge, and fill his belly with the eaſt wind? Or, ſhall he explain the cauſe and original of it? Job xxxviii. 37. Who can number the clouds in wiſdom? And Pſal. lviii. 5. the deaf adder will not hearken to the voice of the charmers, charming never ſo wiſely. Pharaoh ſet Joſeph over all his houſe, to teach his ſenators wiſdom. [SAGACITY.]
5. Scripture gives the name of wiſdom ſometimes to magicians, enchanters, fortune-tellers, ſoothſayers, and interpreters of dreams. [SCIENCE.]
6. WISDOM is put for the eternal Wiſdom, the Word, the Son of God. Prov. iii. 19. By Wiſdom God eſtabliſhed the heavens, and founded the earth; this Wiſdom the Lord poſſeſſed from everlaſting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was. Prov. viii. 22, 23. It exiſted before God created any thing, and was preſent with the Creator at his production of ſenſible beings. It was eſtabliſhed over all the creation, &c. See alſo alſo Wiſdom vii. 22, 26. viii. 1, 2, &c. xvi. 12, 26. ix. 1, 2. xviii. 15. and Eccleſiaſticus xxiv. 5, 6, 7, &c. where are magnificent commendations, not only of wiſdom as a virtue, but alſo as the Word, the only Son of God, begot before all worlds.

7. St. Paul, 1 Cor. i. 19, 20, 21, &c. ii. 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, &c. ſpeaks of the wiſdom of the fleſh, of the wiſdom of this world, of human wiſdom; as oppoſed to true wiſdom, to the wiſdom of Jeſus Chriſt, to the wiſdom of the Spirit. And St. James, iii. 14, 15, &c. ſpeaks of an earthly wiſdom, ſenſual and deviliſh, oppoſite to the wiſdom that is from above, which is firſt pure, then peaceable, gentle, and eaſy to be intreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocriſy. It diſſembles not, is not harſh, &c.

The Book of WISDOM, or, as the Greeks read, Ζοφία Σολομόνϛ, The wiſdom of Solomon, is quoted by ſome of the ancients under the Greek name Panaretos; q. a collection, or treaſury, of all virtue, or inſtructions to bring us to virtue. The principal end of the author of this work, is, to inſtruct kings, the great, the judges of the earth. To incline them the more effectually to the ſtudy of wiſdom, he borrows the name of Solomon; and propoſes him as their pattern: he ſhews them the methods of attaining wiſdom, and proves that the means are not out of their reach. He threatens the wicked with the judgments of God, ſhews their deſpair in another life, at ſeeing the happineſs of the juſt: proves the advantages men obtain by wiſdom; and gives the character not only of wiſdom, as a virtue, but alſo of the eternal and uncreated wiſdom. We find noble and great conceptions of the Deity in this book.

The original of this work is in Greek; and it does not appear that it was ever extant in Hebrew, notwithſtanding what ſome have thought. We find none of thoſe Hebraiſms, or Barbariſms, which are hardly avoidable by thoſe who tranſlate from the Hebrew. The author wrote Greek very well: he had read Plato, and the Greek poets. He even borrows expreſſions peculiar to the Greek poets, as Ambroſia, Wiſd. xix. 20. Gr. the river of forgetfulneſs, or Lethe, Wiſd. vii. 13. the kingdom of Pluto, or Hades, Wiſd. i. 14. &c. His ſtyle abounds with epithets, is ſwelling, poetical, obſcure, and figurative. The Jewiſh authors had ſome knowledge of him, and have quoted him; but what they cite from him is taken out of the Greek. He always quotes Scripture, according to the Septuagint, even when they depart from the Hebrew; which is a proof that this book was written originally in Greek.

The Latin tranſlation that we have of this book is not of St. Jerom. It is the ancient Vulgate, uſed by the church at the beginning, and made from the Greek long before Jerom, who Præf. in Lib. Salom. acknowledges, that he did not meddle with the tranſlation of this work. The tranſlator is very ancient, and keeps very cloſe to the text. But though he lived in an age, wherein the Latin tongue was in its purity, yet he often uſes words that are not uſed by the beſt authors in his ſenſe. So he puts Honeſtas for riches, honeſtus for a rich man, reſpectus, or Viſitatio, for the puniſhment of God on wicked men; ſupervacuitas, for vanity, or vain-glory; animalia ſupervacua for dangerous, or noxious, animals.

The author of this book is unknown. Some aſcribe it to Solomon, and imagine that he wrote it in Hebrew; and that it was afterwards tranſlated into Greek; that the original being loſt, the Greek has ſince been eſteemed as the original. They obſerve, that in this work Solomon ſhews himſelf, if not more clearly, at leaſt as conſpicuouſly, as in any other of his works that are not diſputed, that it is not unworthy of this wiſe prince; that the fathers often quoted it under his name; and that in the title it bears the name of Solomon. But if this book really belongs to this prince, how comes it that the Jews never admitted it as canonical? How comes it not to be found in the Hebrew? that no one has ever ſeen it in this language? that the tranſlator ſays nothing of it, and that the ſtyle ſhews no tokens of this pretended original? See Jerom, in Prolog. Galeatus.

St. Auſtin once thought, that the book of Wiſdom, and that of Eccleſiaſticus, were by the ſame author; but he ſoon diſcovered his miſtake: he does not declare himſelf concerning the author of the book of Wiſdom, but acknowledges, that learned men are of opinion it is not Solomon's; nor is it probable that it can belong to Jeſus the ſon of Sirach, the author of Eccleſiaſticus. St. Jerom ſays, that ſome of the ancients imputed it to Philo the Jew: nonnulli ſcriptorum veterum hunc eſſe Judæi Philonis affirmant: which words have afforded matter of diſpute. Some have thought, that Philo the Jew of Alexandria, whoſe works are extant, and who lived under the emperor Caius, was the author of the book of Wiſdom, Lyran. in Sap. Galatin. de arcan. Cath. Fid. lib. i. cap. 4. Ludov. Vives in Aug. de Civit, Dei. lib. xvii. cap. 20. Others look upon this opinion as an error. Jacob. Faber. Vien. Ep. apud Lorin. in Sap. Præf. cap. 2. others pretend, that the Philo mentioned by St. Jerom is more ancient than the Alexandrian Jew.

Driedo, lib. 1. de Eceleſ. Dogm. cap. 4. Michael. Medina de recta in decem fide, lib. vi. cap. 12. Genebr. ad An. 3860. Melch. Canus de locis Theol. lib. i. cap. 11.

And indeed, we hear of three Philo's. The firſt, (they ſay) lived under Ptolemy Philadelphus. The ſecond, is Philo of Biblos, cited by Euſebius and by Joſephus. The third is Philo the Jew, who lived in the time of the emperor Caius. The firſt Philo is obſcure, no author has mentioned him. The ſecond was a Pagan, who wrote the hiſtory of Phœnicia in Greek. Philo the Jew is well known. The book of Wiſdom could not be compoſed by the firſt; becauſe, probably, he never exiſted: nor by the ſecond, becauſe he was a Heathen: nor by the third; who was not ſo much as a Chriſtian, though he lived in a time of Chriſtianity. Beſides, the ſtyle of Philo and that of this writer are very different. Laſtly, we know none of the fathers, either before St. Jerom, or ſince, who have aſcribed this work to Philo; nor does St. Jerom himſelf aſcribe it to him.

Grotius, Præf. de Sapient. will have it, that this book was wrote by ſome Jew, (as he thinks) in Hebrew, after the time of Eſdras, and before the pontificate of the high-prieſt Simon. He thinks for this reaſon it was placed before Eccleſiaſticus. It was tranſlated, he ſays, by ſome Chriſtian author, who underſtood Greek well enough, but who took great licenſe in his tranſlation, not confining himſelf to the words of his original: he adds ſome ſtrokes, and ſome ſentiments derived from Chriſtianity. Hence it proceeds, that the univerſal judgment is taken notice of, the happineſs of the righteous, the puniſhment of the wicked, in a manner more diſtinct and expreſs than we obſerve generally in the books of the ancient Hebrews. An hypotheſis ſo ſingular required the confirmation of reaſons and arguments.

Cornelius à Lapide believes this book to have been written in Greek by a Jewiſh (author after the captivity of Babylon, and about the time of Ptolemy Philadelphus, king of Egypt) whom he even ſuſpects might be one of the ſeventy interpreters; for Ariſtæus relates, that this prince propoſed to each of theſe interpreters ſome queſtion concerning good government. This book, being an inſtruction for princes, might have been written on this occaſion. He adds, that the opinion which aſcribes it to Philo, might eaſily have obtained by the following equivocal terms. Solomon had two names, Solomon and Jedidiah; the latter ſignifies The Friend of God, and in Greek Philo, or Philos, ſignifies a friend. The Rabbins, when they quote Philo, call him Jedidiah. It was imagined, that becauſe the title of this book was The Wiſdom of Philo, that this ſignified Philo the Jew, whereas it ſtood for Solomon. This conjecture may be acknowledged as ingenious.

The Jews never acknowledged the book of Wiſdom as canonical: ſeveral of the fathers and churches rejected it from their canon, Athanaſ. in Synopſi. Epiphan. lib. de Ponderib. Menſur. Hieron. Prolog. Galeato & in Zach. viii. cap. 11. & in Ep. 115. Origen. in Pſal. li. Melito Ep. ad Oneſim. Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. iv. cap. 28. Gregor. Nazianz. Cyrill. Hieroſol. Laodicæna Synod. Athanaſ. Ep. Feſtali Damaſcen. lib. iv. cap. 18. de Fide orthodoxa, &c. Lyranus in Sapient. and Cajetan, in Eſther, ad finem, did not admit it as indiſputably canonical. But others of the ancient Fathers owned it, and quoted it, as holy Scripture. The ſacred authors of the New Teſtament have alluded to it. The councils of Carthage, A. D. 397; of Sardis, A. D. 347; of Conſtantinople, A. D. 692; of Toledo, A. D. 675; of Florence, A. D. 1438; and, laſtly, that of Trent, Seſſ. IV. received it into the liſt of canonical books.

The book of Wiſdom is aſcribed by the Muſſulmans to their Locman. They tell us, this famous writer was not a Nabi, or prophet, but only a Hakin, or wiſeman. The author of Wiſdom often puts The Word of God, for God himſelf; and I doubt not but that St. John the Evangeliſt had him in view. Philo has uſed it in the ſame ſenſe, which might eaſily have given occaſion to ſuſpect, that Philo was the author of the book of Wiſdom. Vide FRAGMENT, No. IX, p. 20.

WITNESS, he who gives teſtimony to any thing: thus it is ſaid, you are witneſs, a faithful witneſs, a falſe witneſs, God is witneſs, &c.

Witneſs, in Greek Μάρτυς or μάρτυρ, Martys, or Martyr, ſignifies he who gives teſtimony to the truth, though it be at the expence of his blood, his life, his eſtate, &c. Jeſus Chriſt is the faithful witneſs, Rev. i. 5. the martyr of truth and juſtice. God promiſes to give to his two witneſſes (which ſome think to be Enoch and Elijah) the ſpirit of prophecy, Rev. xi. 3. after which (ſays he) they ſhall be put to death. See TESTIMONY.

The law appoints, that two or three witneſſes ſhould be credited in matters of judicature; but not one witneſs only: Deut. xvii. 6, 7. When any one was condemned to die, the witneſſes were the firſt to begin the execution. They threw the firſt ſtone, for example, if the party were to be ſtoned. The law condemned a falſe witneſs to the ſame puniſhment as that he would have ſubjected jected his neighbour to, Deut. xix. 16, 17, 18, 19. Jeremiah ſays, that God is a judge, and witneſs; Jerem. xxvii. 23. i. e. he does not ſtay for any one to accuſe the wicked to him; he has no need of the teſtimony, or accuſation, of men, to know the demerit of the guilty: he accuſes them himſelf, he puniſhes them, he condemns them; he knows all their miſdemeanors, by his wiſdom, his juſtice, his infinite penetration.

Iſaiah lv. 4. gives the name of witneſs to the Meſſiah: Behold, I have given him for a witneſs to the people, a leader and commander to the people. God ſent him to give teſtimony to the truth, and to bring men into the ways of juſtice and ſalvation. Hoſea xi. 12. ſays, that when Ephraim deceived the Lord, and forſook his worſhip for that of the golden calf, Judah walked with his God as a faithful witneſs. The Jews tell us, Apud Hieron. in Oſee xii. that the tribe of Judah ſignalized their fidelity and courage, by entering firſt into the Red Sea; while the reſt of the tribes heſitated, and durſt not venture, though Moſes aſſured them of the protection and aſſiſtance of God. This action of Judah God intended to recompence, by ſettling the royal power in this tribe. Malachi iii. 5. threatens perjured perſons, calumniators, adulterers, and other wicked men, with the vengeance of the Lord, and ſays, the Lord ſhall be a ready [ſwift] witneſs againſt them: he is both judge and witneſs, as obſerved before. This is explained of the coming of the Meſſiah, or of the laſt judgment. Jeſus Chriſt was judge and witneſs againſt the hardened and incredulous Jews. See John xvi. 8.

The prophets are the witneſſes of our belief, and of the truth of our religion. St. Paul, Heb. xii. 1. calls them a cloud of witneſſes. The apoſtles are ſtill further witneſſes of the coming, the miſſion, and the doctrine of Chriſt. If Jeſus Chriſt is not riſen, ſays St. Paul, 1 Cor. xv. 15. then are we falſe witneſſes. We are witneſſes, ſays St. Peter, Acts x. 39, 41. of all he did in Judea: he has choſen a ſmall number of perſons to be witneſſes tc him: and when they took upon them to put another apoſtle in the place of Judas, Acts i. 22. they thought fit to appoint one who had been a witneſs of the reſurrection along with themſelves.

WOLF, Lupus; in Greek Λυκος, Lycos; in Hebrew, זאב Zeeb. A wild creature, very well known. The Scripture takes notice of theſe remarkable things reſpecting the wolf:

1. It lives upon rapine. 2. Is violent, cruel, and bloody. 3. Voracious and greedy. 4. Seeks its prey by night. 5. Is very ſharp-ſighted. 6. Is the great enemy of ſheep. That Benjamin ſhall ravine as a wolf. Gen. xlix. 27. Falſe teachers are wolves in ſheep's cloathing. Perſecutors of the church, and falſe paſtors, are alſo ravenous wolves.

The prophets ſpeak of the evening wolves. Jeremiah v. 6. A wolf of the evening ſhall ſpoil them. And Habakkuk i. 8. Their horſes are more fierce than the evening wolves. And Zephaniah iii. 3. Her judges are evening wolves. St. Jerom on Habakkuk obſerves, that towards evening wolves are more dangerous, as being more hungry. Inſtead of wolves of the evening, the Septuagint tranſlate it, wolves of Arabia; becauſe the Hebrew word Arab ſignifies both the evening and Arabia. Wolves indeed are common in Arabia, but they have nothing peculiar in that country; ſo that there can be no reaſon to prefer this tranſlation.

The Chaldee interpreters explain — Benjamin ſhall ravine as a wolf, of the altar of burnt offerings at Jeruſalem, which was in the tribe of Benjamin. Others, refer it to that violent ſeizure made by the children of Benjamin, of the young women that came to the tabernacle at Shiloh. Judg. xxi. 21. Others, refer it to Mordecai, or to Saul, who were of the tribe of Benjamin. Others, explain it of St. Paul, who was alſo of this tribe; and this interpretation has commonly prevailed among Chriſtian interpreters. Tertull. contr. Marcion. lib. v. cap. 1. Ambroſ. de benedic. Patriarch. cap. 12. Hieron. in Iſai. lib. iv. & in Oſee, lib. ii. Auguſtin. &c.

The wolf is a fierce creature, abiding in foreſts, ravenous, greedy, crafty, of exquiſite quickneſs of ſmell, having an head ſomething ſquare, and his hair inclined to grey. It is commonly ſaid, that what makes him ſo voracious is, that he has but one very large, ſhort gut, in which his food ſtays but a little time. But this is a popular miſtake: his guts are as long as other animals; or as a dog's, being himſelf a kind of wild dog. Dogs carried from Europe into New Spain, have degenerated into wolves.

Iſaiah xi. 6. lxv. 25. deſcribing the tranquil reign of the Meſſiah, ſays, The wolf ſhall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard ſhall lie down with the kid; and the calf, and the young lion, and the fatling together, and a little child ſhall lead them. Our Saviour, Matth. x. 16. ſays, that he ſends his apoſtles as ſheep among wolves. Luke x. 3. And indeed, both Jews and Pagans like ravenous and voracious wolves, perſecuted, and ſlew almoſt all the apoſtles and diſciples of our Saviour. But at laſt theſe ſame wolves themſelves became converts, verts, and docile as lambs: St. Paul, one of the moſt eager perſecutors of the church, was afterwards one of its moſt zealous defenders.

WOMB. The fruit of the womb is children: Gen. xxx. 2. And the Pſalmiſt, cxxvii. 3. Children are the bleſſing of marriage. Pſal. cxxxii. 11. I will give you a ſon of your own, to inherit your throne. Pſal. xxii. 10. Lord, thou art my God from my mother's womb.

WOMAN. The Lord having created all animals in pairs, male and female, and having brought them to Adam, in his review of them he could not obſerve any one like himſelf, or created as a companion for him, Gen. ii. 20. Wherefore it is thought, he ſupplicated God, to give him a companion and aſſiſtant as he had done to the animals. God, therefore, caſt him into a prodigious ſleep, and while he was ſleeping, took a rib from his ſide, of which he formed the woman. When Adam awoke, he perceived her, and ſaid, "this is bone of my bone, and fleſh of my fleſh; ſhe ſhall be called Man-eſs, becauſe ſhe was taken out of man." Wherefore a man ſhall forſake father and mother, and be united to his wife; and they two ſhall be but one fleſh; or, they ſhall be but one in two different bodies, becauſe of the production of children, which are derived from both.

Some writers have thought, that Adam was created of both ſexes; becauſe it is ſaid, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them: this he ſays on the ſixth day. And in the following chapter he relates the formation of the woman as above mentioned. It is therefore affirmed, that man was already formed male and female, before Eve was created. Others think, that the bodies of Adam and Eve were created on the ſixth day, but joined and faſtened ſideways to each other; that afterwards God ſent a deep ſleep on Adam, and then ſeparated the woman from him: and thus they explain thoſe words, He took one of his ribs, and cloſed up the fleſh inſtead thereof. The Hebrew may be thus tranſlated: he took one (woman) out of his ſide, and put fleſh in its place, Rabb. Samuel, Manaſſeh Ben-Iſrael, Maimonid. Eugubin. in Geneſ. in Coſmopæia. Others will have the man and the woman to have been created on the ſixth day, according to Gen. i. 27. and that what is related chap. ii. 20, &c. is only a recapitulation, or a ſupplement, to what had been before mentioned conciſely.

Some think, that the manner in which the creation of the woman is related by Moſes, ought to be underſtood metaphorically and allegorically, and not in a real and hiſtorical manner. It muſt be owned, that the relation of the ſacred penman ſeems to call for an explication more ſublime than that of the bare letter: but it is dangerous to weaken the literal truth of Scripture; and the fathers always explained this paſſage literally.

Some Rabbins think, that God had created for Adam a former wife, before Eve. See LILITH.

Profane authors relate of Prometheus, that he formed man of the mud of the earth, and ſtole fire from heaven to animate him. Jupiter, provoked at this theft, ordered Vulcan to form a woman alſo of the mud of the earth: this woman was called Pandora. Jupiter gave her a box, full of miſeries and diſeaſes, to give to Prometheus. Epimetheus, who took Pandora to wife, accepted the box from Pandora, and opened it: immediately the diſeaſes and misfortunes flew out, and ſpread themſelves over mankind. He haſtened to ſhut it up again, but it was too late: the evils were already gone; and at the bottom of the box there only remained HOPE. [This is underſtood to allude to the fall of man.]

Woman was created as a companion and aſſiſtant to man: equal to him in that authority and juriſdiction which God gave them over all other animals: but after the fall, God made her ſubject to the government of man, Gen. iii. 16. Thy deſire ſhall be to thy huſband, and he ſhall rule over thee. Beſide the duties preſcribed by the law, common to men and women, there were certain regulations peculiar to this ſex; as thoſe legal uncleanneſſes during the times of their ordinary infirmities, and thoſe that attended childbearing, &c. The law does not allow any action of the woman againſt the man; but it permits the huſband to divorce his wife, and to cauſe her to be ſtoned, if ſhe violate her conjugal vow: and when the tokens of virginity could not be found in them, their huſbands might put them away.

The Rabbins ſay, that whatſoever is forbid to men, in the negative precepts of the law, is alſo forbid to women; but as to the affirmative precepts, they are not bound to thoſe which require a fixed time for their performance; on account of the weakneſs and delicacy of the ſex, of their obedience to their huſbands, and of the ſervices they are obliged to perform for them. They ought to inform their huſbands of their monthly periods, that they may not approach them. Moreover, when they kneaded their bread, they were to make a little cake, which was formerly offered to the Lord, but at preſent is thrown into the fire. Laſtly, they were to light up a lamp in their houſes on the Friday evening, againſt the night of the Sabbath. Theſe the Rabbins call precepts of the women.

If a married woman made a vow, of whatever nature, ſhe was not bound by it, if her huſband forbad it the ſame day. But if he ſtaid till the next day before he contradicted it, or, knowing the thing, if he held his peace, he was then ſuppoſed to conſent to it, and the woman was obliged to perform her vow, Numb. xxx. 7, &c. See 1 Cor. vii. 2, &c. for the duties of women towards their huſbands. The apoſtle would have them ſubmiſſive; as to Chriſt, Epheſ. v. 22. He forbids them to ſpeak or teach in the church; or to appear there with their heads uncovered, or without veils, 1 Cor. xi. 5. xiv. 34. He does not allow a woman to teach, or to domineer over her huſband; he would have them continue in ſubmiſſion and ſilence. He adds, that the woman ſhall be ſaved in bearing and educating her children, if ſhe brings them up in faith, in charity, ſanctity, and a ſober life. See the Epiſtle to Titus, ii. 4, 5, and the firſt Epiſtle of St. Peter, iii. 1, 2, 3, where modeſty is recommended to them, and great care in avoiding ſuperfluous ornaments, and unneceſſary finery.

WOOD, Lignum. This term is often put for trees.

Ye ſhall not ſerve gods, the work of mens hands, wood and ſtone; that is, idols made of wood or ſtone, Deut. iv. 28.

Moſes ſweetened the waters in the deſart, by caſting into them ſome of the wood Alva. Exod. xv. 25. See ALVA.

Jeremiah xi. 19. (נשחיתה עץ בלחמו LXX. Ἐμβάλωμεν ξύλον εἰς ἄρτον αὐτοῦ. The Engliſh tranſlation reads it, Let us deſtroy the tree, with the fruit thereof,) ſpeaking of our Saviour's paſſion, deſcribes the rage of his enemies in theſe terms; Mittamus lignum in panem ejus, &c. "Let us caſt wood into his bread, let us deſtroy him from off the land of the living: and let his name be known there no longer." Several ſenſes are affixed to this paſſage. The Hebrew ſays, literally, "Let us corrupt wood in his bread:" Let us put poiſonous wood, let us grate ſome mortal root in his food, that may cauſe him to die, that may poiſon him. Louis de Dieu tranſlates it, Let us break wood on his fleſh. The Hebrew word that ſignifies bread, ſometimes alſo ſtands for fleſh. Glaſſius, Let us corrupt wood in his bread; or let us corrupt his bread in the wood; let us poiſon the kneading-trough, in which he kneads his bread. [this is not an Eaſtern idea.]

WOODS. There is often mention made in Scripture of woods or groves, wherein a thouſand infamous things were committed in honour of falſe deities; he ſacrificed and burnt incenſe on the high places, and on hills, and under every green tree; ſub ligno frondoſo.

WORD, in Heb. דבר Dabar; in Latin, Verbum, or Sermo; in Greek ρημα, Rhema, or λογος, Logos. In Scripture it is often put for thing or matter: as Exod. ii. 14. Surely this thing [Heb. word] is known, To morrow the Lord ſhall do this thing [Heb. word] in the land, Exod. ix. 5. I will do a thing [Heb. word] in Iſrael, at which both the ears of every one that heareth it ſhall tingle, 1 Sam. iii. 11. And the reſt of the acts of Solomon, Heb. words of Solomon, 1 Kings xi. 41.

Sometimes Scripture aſcribes to the word of God certain ſupernatural effects; or repreſents it as animated and active. So, He ſent his word and healed them. The book of Wiſdom aſcribes to the word of God the death of the firſt-born of Egypt, Wiſdom xviii. 15. xvi. 26. ix. 1. xvi. 12. the miraculous effects of manna; the creation of the world; the healing of thoſe who looked up to the brazen ſerpent. The centurion in the Goſpel ſays to our Saviour, Matth. viii. 8. Speak the word only, and my ſervant ſhall be healed. And Jeſus Chriſt ſays to the devil that tempted him, Matth. iv. 4. Man ſhall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Vide WORD, MEMRA.

WORD, Verbum. The word of God, is taken, either, 1. for that internal word heard by the prophets by their inſpiration from God, or 2. that which they heard externally, when God ſpoke to them; as when he ſpoke to Moſes, face to face, or as one friend ſpeaks to another, Ex. xxxiii. 11. or 3. for that word which the miniſters of God, the prieſts, the apoſtles, the ſervants of God, declare in his name to the people. When Ehud the judge of Iſrael came to Eglon king of Moab, he ſaid to him, Sir, I have a ſecret commiſſion to you from God, Judg. iii. 19, 20. or 4. For what is written in the ſacred books of the Old and New Teſtament.

WORD alſo ſignifies the command of God. Pſal. cvii. 20. He ſent forth his word, and healed them; he ſpake but one word, and health was reſtored to them: and Pſalm cxlvii. 18. He ſendeth out his word, and melteth them; i. e. the ice or hail: a word ſhall diſſolve them. Thus the good centurion ſaid to Jeſus Chriſt, Luke vii. 7. Wherefore neither thought I myſelf worthy to come unto thee; but ſay in a word, and my ſervant ſhall be healed.

The words of my ſins, the words of a lye, of iniquity, of ſongs; the words of knowledge, of underſtanding, of diſcipline, or conduct, may be be explained, either of ſins, of a lye, of knowledge, &c. or of diſcourſes uttered along with them.

Verbum regis, the orders of the king, Verbum malum, a ſcandal; Loquar verbis meis, I will tell my reaſons. Verbis tuis facite ſtateram; make a balance for your words; never ſpeak them before you have well weighed what you have to ſay: David praiſed the Moſt High by the words of his ſong; by pſalms, compoſed to his glory. The word of promiſes, the word of faith, the word of the croſs, the word of wiſdom, the word of life, the word of the truth of the goſpel; a form of ſound words, are expreſſions eaſily underſtood. Sometimes the term word is redundant, as in this paſſage: Poſuit in eis verba ſignorum ſuorum. God put his word of prodigies in them; which is only ſaying, he made them the depoſitaries of his power to perform miracles. Thus the word of promiſe only means promiſes. The word of the croſs is, that preaching which declares Chriſt crucified. The word of joy, is that which proclaims a life to come, and which gives life to the ſoul. The ſound word, is that oppoſed to vain, deceiving, dangerous lying diſcourſes of wicked men and heretics.

WORD is alſo conſecrated and appropriated, to ſignify the only Son of the Father, the uncreated Wiſdom, the ſecond perſon of the moſt Holy Trinity, equal and conſubſtantial to the Father. St. John the Evangeliſt, more expreſsly than any other, has opened to us the myſtery of the word of God, when he tells us, In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The ſame was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him, and without him was not any thing made that was made.

WORD, put for the Eternal Word, or the ſecond Perſon of the Trinity. The Chaldee paraphraſts, the moſt ancient Jewiſh writers extant, generally uſe the name MEMRA, or WORD, where Moſes puts the name Jehovah.

WORD, Memra. It is thought that under this term the authors of the Chaldee paraphraſes allude to the Son of God, the ſecond Perſon of the Trinity. Now, their teſtimony is ſo much the more conſiderable, as, having lived before, or at, the time of Jeſus Chriſt, they are irrefragable witneſſes of the ſentiments of their nation on this article; ſince their Targum, or explication, has always been, and ſtill is, in univerſal eſteem among the Jews. In the greater part of the paſſages where the ſacred name Jehovah occurs, theſe paraphraſts ſubſtitute the word Memra, ממרא דיי Verbum Dei, which ſignifies the WORD, and differs from Pitgama, which in Chaldee ſignifies diſcourſe. And as they aſcribe to Memra all the attributes of Deity, it is concluded from hence, that they believed the divinity of the Word.

In effect, according to them, it was Memra who created the world: who appeared to Abraham in the plain of Mamre; and to Jacob at Bethel. It was Memra to whom Jacob appealed to witneſs the covenant between him and Laban. Let the Word ſee between thee and me. The ſame Word appeared to Moſes at Sinai; gave the law to the Iſraelites; ſpoke face to face with that lawgiver; marched at the head of that people; enabled them to conquer nations, and was a conſuming fire to all who violated the law of the Lord. All theſe characters, where the paraphraſt uſes the word Memra, clearly denote Almighty God. This Word therefore was God, and the Hebrews were of this opinion, at the time that the Targum was compoſed.

This Memra anſwers to the Cachema, or Wiſdom mentioned by Solomon, Prov. iii. 9, 20. viii. 11, 12, &c. and by Jeſus the ſon of Sirach. Ecclus. i. ii. iii. &c.

The author of the book of Wiſdom, who lived before Jeſus Chriſt, expreſſes himſelf pretty much after the ſame manner. He ſays, that God created all things by his Word, Wiſ. ix. 1. Qui feciſti omnia Verbo tuo; that it is not what the earth produces that feeds man; but the Word of the Almighty that ſupports him, Wiſd. xvi. 26. Quoniam non nativitatis fructus paſcunt homines, ſed Sermo tuus hos, qui in te crediderint, conſervat. It was this Word that fed the Iſraelites in the Deſart: it was the ſame Word that healed them after the biting of the ſerpents: Wiſd. xvi. 12. Neque herba neque malagma ſanavit eos, ſed tuus Domine, Sermo qui ſanat omnia. It was the ſame Word who by his power deſtroyed the firſt-born of the Egyptians: Wiſd. xviii. 15. Exod. xii. 29, 30. Omnipotens Sermo tuus de cœlo à regalibus ſedibus durus debellator in mediam exterminis terram proſilivit, &c. Vide FRAGMENTS, No. IX. p. 22.

By the ſame Word Aaron ſtopped the impetuoſity of the fire that was kindled in the camp, and which threatened the deſtruction of all Iſrael: Wiſd. xviii. 22. See Numb. xvi. 46. Non in virtute corporis, ſed Verbo illum qui ſe vexabat ſubjecit, &c.

Philo, a famous Jew, who lived at the time of Jeſus Chriſt, and who much ſtudied Plato, makes uſe of almoſt the ſame manner of ſpeaking. He ſays, for example, that God created the world by his Word (LOGOS.) That the intelligible world is no other than the Word of God that created the world; that this inviſible Word is the true image of God. The Platoniſts, to expreſs the Creator of all things, ſometimes made uſe of the term Logos, which St. John alſo uſes to ſignify the Eternal Word. The Stoicks alſo made uſe of it againſt the Epicureans, who maintained, that all things were produced by chance, and without deſign: whereas the Platoniſts and the Stoicks pretended, that every thing was made by the Logos, i. e. the divine reaſon, or divine wiſdom. But it may be reaſonably doubted whether the Platoniſts, the Stoicks, and Philo, by this word Logos, meant the Word of God, or God himſelf, after the manner that we underſtand it.

This has perplexed thoſe who deny the divinity of the Word. To elude the authority of the Targum, Grotius has pretended, that, according to the Jews, God created a ſubaltern being, or ſecondary Deity, by whoſe miniſtry he made the world. But this Being who creates, whoever he be, muſt of neceſſity be God, ſince nothing can have this power but God, and this power the Targum aſcribes to Memra.

M. le Clerc ſays almoſt the ſame thing, writing on the firſt chapter of St. John. He maintains, that in all that Philo ſays of the Logos, he does not look on the Word as a diſtinct perſon, but makes an angel of it, and a principle inferior to the Deity. But though Philo might fail of due accuracy, in ſome paſſage wherein he diſcourſes of the Word, treating of a matter ſo ſublime and abſtruſe, we are not much to wonder at it; this inaccuracy ought not to be imputed to the Word itſelf. But we ſhould enquire whether St. John has not more accurately explained it in his goſpel, who was much better informed than Philo in the nature of the Memra. We may ſecurely rely on the authority of this divine writer, who had his inſtructions from the mouth of Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, and by the inſpiration of his Spirit.

St. John, in his Goſpel, in his firſt Epiſtle, and in his Revelations, has cleared up the nature of the divine Word. The councils have fixed the language of the church on this important point, and the church by its deciſions has manifeſted its doctrine, concerning the conſubſtantiality of the Word, his nature, his unity, and the divinity of his perſon.

WORK, Opus. This term has ſeveral ſignifications: Quod eſt opus veſtrum? ſaid Pharaoh to Joſeph's brethren: what is your profeſſion? by what do you get your livelihood? Gen. xlvi. 33. xlvii. 3. God reſted from his work, he ceaſed from producing new creatures, Gen. ii. 2. Opus Domini terribile; the terrible wonders that God performed in the midſt of his people, Exod. xxxiv. 10. Works in foundery, in wood, in embroidery; works of the perfumer, of the carpenter, &c. Levit. xix. 13. Work is alſo often put for the management of life: Nihil puerile geſſit in opere, Tob. i. 4. And, to reward them according to their works, Pſalm xxviii. 4.

Iſai. xxxii. 17. Peace ſhall be the work, or rather, the recompence of juſtice. And Pſal. cix. 20. Hoc opus eorum qui detrahunt mihi; ſuch ſhall be the puniſhment of my backbiters. And Iſaiah xl. 10. Ecce opus illius coram illo. He carries with him the recompence, and hire, of his labours. Habbak. iii. 17. Mentietur opus olivæ; the work of the olive ſhall lye. This tree ſhall not reward him who has cultivated it. 1 Macc. ii. 47. Proſperatum eſt opus in manibus eorum; the undertaking ſucceeded in their hands.

The Jews are often reproached with having worſhipped the works of their own hands; the idols which they themſelves had made. Iſai. ii. 8. The work of God, is ſometimes put for his vengeance: Let him make ſpeed, and haſten his work, that we may ſee it, Iſai. v. 19. And Iſai. xxvi. 12. Lord, thou wilt give us peace, for thou haſt done all that has happened to us; Thou alſo haſt wrought all our works in us: and Iſai. xxviii. 21. The Lord prepares to do his work, but it is a work which is ſtrange to him; he is going to labour, but this labour is very unwilling on his part. For the Lord ſhall riſe up, as in mount Perazim, he ſhall be wrath, as in the valley of Gibeon, that he may do his work, his ſtrange work, and bring to paſs his act, his ſtrange act.

Works of the law, in oppoſition to thoſe of grace, are the ceremonial works of the law of Moſes. Dead works, are ſins. The works of the fleſh are thoſe, whoſe principle is concupiſcence. Faith, without works is dead, James ii. 17. Faith not enlivened by charity, and void of good moral works, is a dead and uſeleſs faith.

WORLD, mundus; Greek, κοσμος, coſmos; in Hebrew, תבל, thebel. Sometimes this word is taken

1. For the univerſe, comprehending the heavens, earth, ſea; the elements; angels, men, animals; in a word, all created beings.
2. For the globe of the earth, the waters, and all things therein contained.
3. For the race of mankind. Thus Jeſus Chriſt ſays to his apoſtles, John viii. 12. I am the light of the world. And xvii. 25. O righteous Father, the the world hath not known thee. And, xv. 18. If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you.

4. For the lovers of this world, the good things of this world: John xv. 19. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but becauſe ye are not of the world, but I have choſen you out of the world; therefore the world hateth you. And St. Paul ſays, Galat. vi. 14. The world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world. And St. John ſays, 1 John ii. 15. Love not the world, nor the things that are in the world: if any man love the world, the love of the father is not in him.

Concerning the creation of the world, there are many queſtions propoſed, which we ſhall only touch upon. It is aſked, whether the whole maſs of matter was created at once? and whether all corporeal beings were ranged at the ſame time, or only in the ſpace of ſeven days, as Moſes deſcribes? Interpreters are of opinion, that God created all the matter of the univerſe, in an inſtant, by one ſimple act of his almighty will; but they are not agreed on the other queſtion. Some maintain, that ſenſible beings were not brought to their perfection, till after ſeven days. This is the opinion of the greater part of the fathers and interpreters, and is founded on Moſes's narration, who expreſſes it diſtinctly. Beſides, it cannot eaſily be conceived, that the chaos ſhould ſettle into order, till after an infinite variety of different motions, by which the parts of matter of unlike and incompatible qualities were ſeparated from one another, and till there ſhould be an union and coaleſcence of thoſe which were of a ſimilar nature; all which motions could not be performed till after a ſufficient ſpace of time.

Others, as Philo, Alleg. lib. i. & de Mundi opificio, p. 6, 41. Origen, contra Celſum, lib. vi. St. Auſtin, lib. iv. de Geneſ. ad Lit. cap. 18. & lib. xi. de Civit. cap. 7. & lib. xii. Confeſſ. cap. 29. &c. fearing conſequences contrary to the immutability and omnipotence of the Creator, from the opinion of a ſucceſſive creation, thought that nothing ſhould be inferred from Moſes's deſcription, but a mental ſucceſſion of order, and that he only repreſents the creation as performed in ſucceſſion of time, to accommodate himſelf to the apprehenſions of the vulgar, and to render his account more intelligible. The Wiſeman ſays, Eccluſ. xviii. 1. He that liveth for ever created all things in general, or together. Matter, being obedient to the commands of the Almighty, needed no preparation. This is moſt plauſibly advanced in ſupport of this laſt opinion. But the firſt ſeems the moſt probable; and has the greater number of followers.

It is enquired, at what ſeaſon of the year the world was created? The generality of the fathers think, it was created in the ſpring. So determined a council, ſaid to have been held in Paleſtine, by Theophilus of Alexandria, at the inſtances of pope Victor. Concil. Palæſt. apud Bedam, de ſex ætat. Mundi. The poets deſcribe the firſt days of the world, like thoſe of a fine ſpring ſeaſon. But a great number contend, that the world was created in autumn. They urge, 1. That the Hebrews, the Egyptians, and moſt of the Orientals, began their year in autumn; which cuſtom they had received from their anceſtors, and they from the firſt men, who would naturally begin their year from the time when the world began. 2. When God created man, and animals, he was to provide them with neceſſary nouriſhment. 3. Laſtly, there was fruit on the trees in the garden of Eden: We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden, ſays Eve. It was therefore autumn, in whatever place we ſuppoſe Adam to have been created. This opinion has been embraced by the moſt learned chronologiſts.

The ancient Hebrews had very different notions of the ſyſtem of the univerſe, and the diſpoſition of its parts, from modern philoſophers and aſtronomers. Their ſyſtem was ſimple, and accommodated to the apprehenſions of the vulgar; and Scripture propoſes it as a received opinion, to which it conforms its expreſſions, in order to be underſtood by the people, rather than as a confirmation and approbation of it, as of a doctrine requiring belief and ſubmiſſion. It leaves this kind of enquiries to the curioſity of philoſophers: This ſore travail hath God given to the ſons of men, to be exerciſed therewith. The Hebrews believed, that at the beginning of the creation God divided the waters into two parts, one of which ſunk into the deep, and made the ſea; the other was laid up above the firmament, where it ſupplies the rain, &c.

They thought the earth to be wholly impregnated and penetrated by the waters; that all fountains and rivers returned into the ſea, from whence they were ſupplied. They admitted of three heavens; 1. that wherein the birds fly, and the clouds are formed; 2. that in which the ſtars are ſet; 3. that wherein the majeſty of the Moſt High reſides; whither St. Paul was tranſported, and where he heard words unlawful to be uttered. 2 Cor. xii. 4.

Many difficulties are ſtarted concerning the duration

tion of the world. This duration may be conſidered either in reſpect of time paſt, or time future. The greater part of the ancient nations and kingdoms of which we have any accounts remaining, differ from each other concerning the duration of the world. The Chaldeans, the Egyptians, the Chineſe, the Greeks, the Hebrews, have different ways of computing the age of the world. Even the chronologers, who follow the Hebrew and the Vulgate, are not agreed among themſelves. The Hebrew text of the Jews, and that of the Samaritans differ; and the tranſlation of the Septuagint, is very different from the Hebrew in this reſpect. According to Uſher, whoſe computation is at preſent generally followed, from the beginning of the world to the birth of Chriſt, we reckon juſt four thouſand years. N. B. The common reckoning of Chriſt's birth, or A. D. is three years too late.

As to the duration of the world to its final termination, this is extremely doubtful, and uncertain. The Egyptians were of opinion, that after a revolution of 36,525 years, all the planets would be found on the ſame line, and that then the world would be renewed, either after a deluge, or a conflagration. They thought the world had already been renewed ſeveral times in ſuch a manner. This ſentiment was alſo common among the Greeks: but they were not agreed about the number of years of this great year. Some, as Ariſtarchus, aſſigned it 2484 years: others, as Aretes of Dynachium, 5552 years: Heraclitus and Linas, 10,800 years; others, 18,000; Dion, 80,881; Orpheus, 100,020 years; Caſſander, 3,600,000. Plato, and his ſchool, as alſo Origen, were perſuaded, that after a certain number of years there was a ſucceſſion of new worlds; which opinion St. Auſtin refutes.

The Jews had an ancient tradition, Gemar. Abodah, Zarah, cap. 1. received from Elijah, (not the prophet of that name, but another, who lived after the captivity of Babylon, and 154 years after the rebuilding of the ſecond temple) according to this tradition, the world was to continue 6000 years; 2000 in a ſtate of nature, before the law; 2000 under the law; and 2000 under the Meſſiah. This tradition was adopted by ſeveral of the fathers, as St. Cyprian, Lactantius, St. Ambroſe, Irenæus, Hilarius, Gaudentius, of Breſcia, the au[illegible] of the Orthodox Queſtions under the name of Juſtin, St. Jerom, Victorinus on the Revelations, Raban Maurus on Deuteronomy, Iſidore of Seville, and a great number of later writers. Vide apud Cornel. à Lapide, in Apoc. xx. 5. St. Auſtin ſeems pretty favourable to this opinion, in City of God, lib. xx. cap. 7; but, elſewhere, he inveighs with ſome vehemence againſt the temerity of thoſe who dare to affirm, that the world ſhould continue but ſix thouſand years; whereas they knew, that Jeſus Chriſt, in his goſpel, has declared, that the father alone has reſerved to himſelf the knowledge of the time of the laſt day. Matth. xxiv. 36. Vide & Acts i. 6, 7. According to this ſentiment, the world ought not to endure longer than about two hundred years more: from A. D. 1800.

Many have thought that the world was eternal; that it always exiſted, and always will exiſt. Many have maintained, that there have been ſeveral worlds, which have ſucceeded one another, and that the world has been renewed ſeveral times: that matter is eternal, but that in the extent of eternity God has given it an infinite variety of forms, which we call creation; that Moſes has given us the hiſtory of the laſt of theſe creations. That God did not exiſt before his work; for being eternal, and not capable of inactivity, he could not remain without action, nor leave matter to itſelf, without form or motion. This opinion has been eſpouſed by a great number both of Jews and Mahometans, as Averroes, Avicenna, Alfaraba, and others, who made profeſſion of following the philoſophy of Ariſtotle. Some Chriſtian commentators, as Grotius and Vatablus, have been of opinion, that the words of Moſes, In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth, may be underſtood, according to the Hebrew, Before God created the heaven and the earth, every thing was contained in the chaos. This would intimate the pre-exiſtence of matter, and even its eternity, before God had given it the form which it has retained ever ſince.

The queſtion concerning the antiquity of the world, was renewed in the time of Maimonides, in the twelfth century. Maimon. Moſe Nebochin, par. ii. cap. 13, 14, &c. But it ſeems, that even in the time of Solomon, there were free-thinkers that maintained it. Eccleſ. i. 9, 10, 11. The thing that hath been, it is that which ſhall be; and that which is done, is that which ſhall be done; and there is no new thing under the ſun. Is there any thing, whereof it may be ſaid, See, this is new? It hath been already of old time, which was before us. There is no remembrance of former things, neither ſhall there be any remembrance of things that are to come, with thoſe that ſhall come after. They that inſiſt on the eternity of the world never fail to quote the opinion of this prince, who was endued with ſo much wiſdom and underſtanding. Maimonides wrote on purpoſe to confute them, and the Hebrews reject as heretics, as excommunicated excommunicated perſons, and expelled out of Iſrael, thoſe who pretend to maintain, that matter is coeternal with God. True it is, that ſuch Jews as defend this ſentiment, endeavour to ſkreen themſelves, even by the authority of Maimonides himſelf, who, as they affirm, has not comprehended the creation of the world among the fundamental articles of the Jewiſh creed.

In the fifteenth century, Rabbin Samuel Sarſa endeavoured to reconcile the Pagan philoſophers with Moſes, on the ſubject of the creation of the world. Vide Menaſſeh Ben-Iſrael, de creatione, Prob. 3. He contended, that the world was created out of nothing, but was formed of preexiſtent matter, in a ſucceſſion of ſeveral days, as we read in Geneſis. But Sarſa was condemned to be burned alive. Capantou, a Spaniſh Rabbin, eagerly ſolicited his condemnation, and he was ſupported by a great number of doctors of that time, and of his own nation.

Yet the Jews tolerate thoſe who maintain, that before the world which we now inhabit, there was a former, which came to its period in the ſeventh millenary after its creation; and that its ſucceſſor ſhall in like manner determine. They ſupport this opinion by a proof of but little ſolidity: it is becauſe Moſes begins his account by the letter beth, which ſtands for two: this proceeds from the mint of the cabaliſts. Other doctors teach, that God created ſeven things before the univerſe: 1. the law, or wiſdom; 2. hell; 3. paradiſe; 4. the throne of his glory; 5. the ſanctuary; 6. the name of the Meſſiah; 7. repentance. All this is founded on paſſages of Scripture, underſtood prepoſterouſly, and in a remote ſenſe.

WORM, Vermis, Vermiculus. Scripture, to repreſent the meanneſs and weakneſs of human nature, compares it to a worm of the earth; becauſe nothing is weaker than this creature. Pſalm xxii. 6. I am a worm, and no man, a reproach of men, and deſpiſed of the people. Words which the Son of God applied to himſelf, to expreſs his ſtate of humiliation. Fear not, thou worm Jacob; ye Hebrews, humbled as worms of the earth, Iſaiah xli. 14.

The worm of the damned which dies not, and the fire which ever burns. See FIRE.

The expreſſion of a worm that gnaws and never dies, is taken from carrion expoſed to the birds of the air, and to worms and maggots; which is ſometimes conſumed by fire, to prevent the ſtench, and the corruption of the air: Vindicta carnis impii, ignis & vermis. Eccleſ. vii. 19.

No one doubts about the worms and the fire that conſume carrion and carcaſſes; but there are great diſputes about the nature of the worm that gnaws the damned. Origen thought, that this was only a metaphorical fire. St. Ambroſe expreſsly denies, that this worm is corporeal. He maintains, that it is only remorſe of conſcience, which gives the ſinner no reſpite: Neque vermis eſt corporalis——vermis eſt, eò quod animæ peccata mentem rei ſenſumque compungunt, & quædam exedunt viſcera conſcientiæ. St. Jerom, in Iſai. lxvi. acknowledges it as the opinion of many, that this worm conſiſts only in the gnawings of conſcience. Thomas Aquinas embraced this opinion, and has been followed by ſeveral of the ſchoolmen. Thom. in 4 Diſtinct. 50. q. 2. art. 3. ad 1 & 2.

But St. Auſtin, de Civit. lib. xxi. cap. 9. having carefully examined both theſe ſentiments, declares himſelf for that opinion which holds this worm is real and corporeal: Ergo tamen facilius eſt ut ad corpus dicam utrumque pertinere, quam neutrum. St. Chryſoſtom, Cyril of Alexandria, Theophylact, Proſper, in his third book of the Contemplative Life, Anſelm, Hugh of St. Victor, declare themſelves of this opinion. St. Bernard, in his Books of Conſideration, expreſſes himſelf in a manner favourable to each ſentiment. He obſerves plainly, that this worm is remorſe of conſcience; but, at the ſame time, he ſpeaks of its biting, and of its nouriſhment, as of a thing real and ſenſible. He ſays, ſpeaking of an evil conſcience; Hic eſt vermis qui non moritur, memoria præteritorum, ſemel injectus vel potius innatus, per peccatum, hæſit firmiter, nequaquam deinceps evellendus, nec ceſſat rodere conſcientiam, eâque paſtus, eſcâ utique inconſumptibili, perpetuat vitam. Horreo vermem mordacem, & mortem vivacem.

It muſt be confeſſed, that it is not eaſy to comprehend how a worm can act on a ſoul ſeparate from the body; but is it impoſſible for God to effect, that by a worm, immortal and inſatiable, the ſoul ſhould be afflicted and tormented? as it would be, if this worm was to act on a body to which it was united by the will of the Creator. The action of the body on the ſoul, which animates it, is not more immediate than what might be, by the will of God, the action of a worm on a ſoul, a worm always gnawing, always living, always greedy, and never ſatisfied.

WORM, Vermiculus, is taken for ſcarlet. Moſes often uſes this term in his enumeration of the ſtuffs and colours employed in the veils of the tabernacle. The Hebrew words, Exod. xxv. 4. תולעת שני tolahat ſhani, LXX. Φοινικῶν, Rubrum. Aqu. διὰΦανον, tranſlucens. Sym. διάβαινον, tranſparens, Vulg. coccum bis tinctum, or vermiculum; miculum; the Septuagint, a colour red as ſcarlet: properly ſignifies the worm coccus. Tolahat certainly ſignifies a worm; q. the worm called ſhani. Tolahat alone can only denote a worm, in general; but ſhani, alone, ſignifies a deep red colour. Though your ſins were as ſcarlet, (the ſhannim) yet they ſhould become as white as ſnow, ſays Iſaiah, i. 18. And the ſpouſe in the Canticles ſays to his ſpouſe, thy lips are like a thread of ſcarlet, of ſhani. Cant. iv. 3.

As the word ſhani may ſignify two, or double, Κοκον διπλᾶν, Jerom, in ſome paſſages has taken it for wool twice dyed, coccum bis tinctum: and the Septuagint, for a ſtuff of two threads; but it is better to underſtand it of the worm coccus, in Arabic, kermes; whence comes the word crimſon, becauſe they uſe theſe little worms to dye their colour.

The kermes, or coccus, is a ſmall round grain, or ſhell, membranous, thin, ſmooth, and ſhining; of a reddiſh brown colour, mixed with a whitiſh aſh-colour, about a quarter of an inch diameter, generally divided into two equal cavities, the greater of which is full of an almoſt infinite number of little oval eggs, very red, or vermillion colour; and the ſmaller cavity is full of a kind of liquor which is likewiſe red, and not very different from blood. This cod, or ſhell, is found on a kind of green oak, that grows only to the height of a ſhrub.

Theſe ſhrubs are found in Paleſtine, in Provence, in Languedoc, in Spain, in the iſle of Crete, and elſewhere. They remove theſe cods, or ſhells, from the leaves to which they are faſtened, and the worms, of which they are full, come out of the hole made by taking them from the leaf; they ſeparate theſe little animals from the ſhells by a ſieve, and put them together, by preſſing them lightly, and make them into balls the ſize of a pullet's egg. They were formerly much uſed for dying crimſon; but are not ſo much in uſe, ſince the diſcovery of cochineal. The origin of the kermes is from a kind of gnat, or worm, which bites the green oak, and makes there a kind of bliſter, or bladder, in which it lays its eggs; theſe become red; and if they have time, are hatched, and produce a prodigious quantity of little gnats of a red colour, which creeping about upon the ſhrub, that ſupplied the place of a matrix to them, they leave thereon againſt the year following the rudiments of thoſe grains or pods.

WRESTLING of Jacob. It is ſaid, Geneſis xxxii. 24. that when Jacob had made his people paſs over the brook Jabbok, he was left alone, and there wreſtled a man with him, until the breaking of the day. And when he ſaw that he prevailed not againſt him, he touched the hollow of his thigh; and the hollow of Jacob's thigh was out of joint, as he wreſtled with him. And he ſaid, Let me go, for the day breaketh: and he ſaid, I will not let thee go, except thou bleſs me. The angel bleſſed him, and changed his name to Iſrael; and Jacob called this place Peniel; q. the appearance [face] of God. Moſes gives the name of man to him who wreſtled with Jacob, but no doubt it was an angel: and the prophet Hoſea, xii. 4. affirms it; He had power over the angel, and prevailed. Several of the ancient fathers thought it was the Son of God, the ſecond perſon of the Holy Trinity, who appeared in this place. Juſtin. Dialog. cum Tryphone. Clem. Alex. lib. i. Pædag. Tertull. contra Praxeam. Hilar. lib. v. & xv. de Trinit. Athanaſ. Orat. 3. contra Arian, &c. Some of the Rabbins have pretended that it was the angel of Eſau, or rather the angel of the country of Eſau, who wreſtled with Jacob, to compel him to reſign the right of primogeniture, which he had obtained from Eſau.

As to the ſinew of Jacob's thigh, which was touched by the angel, it is thought the angel touched his thigh in that place, where the great bone enters the acetabulum of the os ſacrum. He touched him in the thickeſt and moſt fleſhy part of the thigh, and made the ſinews contract, which cauſed Jacob to be lame. Some ſay that he only halted for a few moments; others, that he halted till his arrival at Shechem; others ſay, that he was lame all his life. Vide SINEW.

It is enquired, whether this wreſtling of Jacob was a real event, or a viſion? Theodoret, Quæſt. 1. 92. in Deut. and the Rabbin Maimonides, in Moſe Nebochim. par. 2. cap. 42. were of opinion, that this paſſed only in his mind, and imagination. Jacob being ſtrongly poſſeſſed with the danger he was going to encounter, at meeting his brother Eſau, received this viſion of a man wreſtling with him; who, not being able to overcome him, ſays to him, you ſhall no longer be called Jacob but Iſrael; he that overpowers God: and, if you prevail in ſtruggling with God, or with an angel, much more will you prevail when you ſtrive only againſt a man; your brother Eſau. As a proof that this viſion was more than an ordinary dream, it ſeemed to him that the angel touched his thigh; and in effect, when he awoke, he found himſelf lame, probably by the force of his imagination.

But the general ſentiment, and that which is beſt founded, is, that this affair really happened to Jacob. The account of Moſes ſeems to admit of no other explication; and Jacob's infirmity, which was a conſequence of it, proves that this muſt be ſomething more than a dream.

XERXES, ſon of Darius ſon of Hyſtaſpes, and his ſucceſſor in the kingdom of Perſia, A.M. 3519, ante A. D. 485. He was ſon to Atoſſa, daughter of Cyrus, and Darius his father declared him king a little before his death. To him are applied theſe words of Daniel, ix. 2, 3, &c. Behold there ſhall ſtand up yet three kings in Perſia, (Cyrus, Cambyſes, and Darius ſon of Hyſtaſpes) and the fourth ſhall be far richer than they all. And by his ſtrength, through his riches, he ſhall ſtir up all againſt the realm of Grecia. In effect, when Xerxes had ſubdued the Egyptians, the Phœnicians, the iſle of Cyprus, Cilicia, Pamphylia, Piſidia, Lycia, Caria, Myſia, Troas, the Helleſpont, Bythinia, and Pontus, in the ſpace of three or four years; he ſent ambaſſadors into Greece, to demand earth and water, in token of their ſubmiſſion. Herodot. lib. vii. cap. 25, &c. This being refuſed, the year following, he attacked the Greeks by ſea and land, with a prodigious number of forces. It is well known from hiſtory how this great undertaking miſcarried. He returned to Suſa, and thence to Ecbatana. He was killed A. M. 3531, ante A. D. 473; his ſucceſſor was Artaxerxes ſurnamed Longimanus. Xerxes reigned only twelve years.

We are informed by Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xi. cap. 5. that this prince confirmed to the Jews all the privileges granted them by Darius the ſon of Hyſtaſpes, his father, and particularly, that which aſſigned to them the tribute of Samaria, for the charge of the ſacrifices offered in the temple of Jeruſalem.

In the ſecond year of his reign he marched againſt the Egyptians; Herodot. lib. vii. and having overcome them, he increaſed the yoke of their ſervitude. He gave the government of this kingdom to his brother Achemenes; and at the end of the year returned to Shuſhan.

Proud of the ſucceſs of this expedition, he reſolved on a war againſt the Grecians, at the inſtigation of Mardonius the ſon of Gobrias, who had married one of his ſiſters. Herodot. lib. vii. Joſephus thinks, that the Jews were ordered to march with him in this expedition. See SOLYMI.

X Y L

After his return from this famous and unfortunate expedition, Xerxes gave orders to demoliſh all the temples of the Grecian cities in Aſia, which was executed accordingly. Strabo. lib. xiv. Cicero de legib. lib. ii. Æſchyl. in Perſis. Herodot. lib. viii. (There was none ſpared but that of Diana at Epheſus, probably by reaſon of its magnificence.) He did the ſame in all places through which he paſſed. He was induced to do this by zeal for the religion of the Magi, in which Zoroaſter had inſtructed him, and had infuſed into him the utmoſt horror of idols and images. At his return, he paſſed through Babylon, where he deſtroyed idolatry and idols, from the ſame motive. Strab. lib. xvi. Herodot. lib. i. Diodor. lib. ii. Arrian. de Expedit. Alex. lib. vii. Thus the prophecies of Jeremiah were fulfilled, who ſays, l. 2. Babylon is taken, Bel is confounded, Merodach is broken in pieces, her idols are confounded, her images are broken in pieces. And chap. li. 44, 47, 52. I will puniſh Bel in Babylon, and I will bring forth out of his mouth that which he hath ſwallowed up. I will do judgment upon the graven images of Babylon.

XYLOPHORIA, a feaſt of the Hebrews, in which they brought wood into the temple with great ſolemnity, for the ſupport of the ſacred fire that was continually burning on the altar of burnt-ſacrifices. We do not find this feaſt mentioned in Scripture; but Joſephus ſpeaks of it, lib. ii. cap. xvii. de Bello.

Selden will have it that this proviſion was laid up in the month Ab, anſwering nearly to our July. Others place it in the month Elul, which anſwers to Auguſt. The Rabbins inform us, that they prepared with great care the wood that was to be burnt on the altar, that they made it very clean, and that they permitted no rottenneſs, corruption, or mouldineſs among it.

Y.

YEAR. The Hebrews had always years, of twelve months. But at the beginning, and in the time of Moſes, they were ſolar years, of twelve months each, having thirty days to the month; but the twelfth month had thirty-five days. We ſee by the reckoning of the days of the deluge, Gen. vii. that the Hebrew year conſiſted of three hundred and ſixty-five days. It is ſuppoſed that they had an intercalary month at the end of one hundred and twenty years; at which time the beginning of their year would be out of its place full thirty days, Vide Scaliger. de Emendat. Temporum, lib. iii. But it muſt be owned, that no mention is made in Scripture of the thirteenth month, or of any intercalation. It is probable that Moſes retained the order of the Egyptian year, ſince he himſelf came out of Egypt, was born there, had been inſtructed, and brought up there, and ſince the people of Iſrael had been long accuſtomed to this year. But the Egyptian year was ſolar, and conſiſted of twelve months of thirty days each, and had been ſo calculated for a very long time before.

After the time of Alexander the Great, and of the Grecians in Aſia, the Jews reckoned by lunar months, chiefly, in what related to religion, and to the feſtivals. Ecclus. xliii. 6. He made the moon alſo to ſerve in her ſeaſon, for a declaration of times, and a ſign to the world. From the moon is the ſign of feaſts, a light that decreaſeth in her perfection. St. John, Rev. xi. 2, 3. xii. 6, 14. xiii. 5. aſſigns but twelve hundred and ſixty days to three years and an half, i. e. 30 days to every month, and 360 days to a year. Maimonides tells us, that the years of the Jews were ſolar, and their months lunar; and Geminius, Iſagog. cap. 6. makes the ſame obſervation on the years of the Greeks: Univerſi Græci annos juxta ſolem, menſes verò & dies juxta lunam agebant. Since the compleating of the Talmud, they uſe years purely lunar; having alternately a full month of thirty days, and a defective month of twenty-nine days. To accommodate this lunar year to the courſe of the ſun, at the end of three years they intercalate a whole month after Adar: which intercalated month they call Ve-adar, i. e. ſecond Adar.

The Civil Year of the Hebrews has always begun at autumn, at the month Tizri, (i. e. September, and ſometimes enters October, according as the lunations happen.) But their ſacred years, by which the feſtivals, aſſemblies, and other religious acts, were regulated, begin in the ſpring at the month Niſan, (March, and ſometimes a part of April, according to the courſe of the moon.) Vide MONTHS.

Nothing is more equivocal among the ancients, than the term year. The year always has been, and ſtill is, a ſource of diſputes among the learned; on account of its duration, its beginning, or its end. Some think, that from the beginning of the world to the hundred and ſixtieth year of Enoch, they reckoned only by weeks: and that the angel Uriel revealed to Enoch the uſe of months, years, the revolutions of the ſtars, and the return of the ſeaſons. Some nations formerly made their year to conſiſt of one month, others of four, others of ſix, others of ten, others of twelve. Some have made one year of winter, another of ſummer. The beginning of the year was fixed ſometimes at autumn, ſometimes at ſpring, ſometimes at midwinter. Some uſed lunar months, others ſolar. Even the days have been differently divided: ſome beginning them at evening, others at morning, others at noon, others at midnight. With ſome the hours were equal, both in winter and ſummer; with others they were unequal. They counted twelve hours to the day, and twelve to the night. In ſummer the hours of the day were longer than thoſe of the night; on the contrary, in winter the hours of the night were longeſt. See HOUR, and FRAGMENT, No. CCLXII.

Formerly the Egyptians allowed but one month to their year, Cenſorin, lib. vii. cap. 38. then two, then four months, and, laſtly, twelve months, Cenſorin. de die Natali. King Piſon is ſaid to have given it a regular form of twelve months and and five days. But this regulation muſt have been very ancient, ſince Moſes, who had been educated in Egypt, knew no other year than that of twelve months. The Egyptians began it at the riſing of the dog-ſtar, Porphyr. de Nymphæ antro. or at the beginning of autumn: Plutarch de Iſide. For it appears that they varied in this, as well as in their months, beginning them ſometimes in the evening, ſometimes in the morning.

We know not the form of the ancient Chaldean year, becauſe their ancient hiſtory is unknown. They boaſted formerly of a prodigious antiquity, and pretended to have aſtronomical obſervations for 472,000 years, according to Diodorus Siculus, lib. 11, or 470,000 years, according to Cicero, lib. ii. de Divinat. or 720,000, according to Epigenes, quoted by Pliny, lib. vii. cap. 56. (The printed books read only 720; but the ſequel of the diſcourſe ſhews that it ought to be 720,000.) When Caliſthenes was at Babylon, and very inquiſitive to know the truth of this, he ſent word to Ariſtotle, (Vide Simplic. lib. iii. de Cœlo,) that he could find no obſervations more than 1903 years old: which brings us nearly to the time of the building of Babylon. We are aſſured, that they began their day at ſun-riſe, in honour of their principal Deity, the ſun.

The Grecians at the beginning had no fixed years. Several people of Greece made their year of four months, Cenſorin. de die Natali. Thoſe of Arcadia firſt made it of one month; afterwards of three months: thoſe of Caria and Acarnania made it ſometimes of one month, ſometimes of ſix. But from the time of Homer it appears to have been ſettled at twelve months. The ancient year of the Athenians was fixed at three hundred and ſixty days. Plin. lib. xxxiv. cap. 6. It was afterwards extended to three hundred and ſixty-five days. They began it at the vernal equinox: their days were reckoned from evening to evening, and the year was divided into four ſeaſons, ſpring, ſummer, autumn, and winter. At the time of Homer they did not uſe the word hours, according to our manner of ſpeaking. The word hour in this poet ſignifies the Seaſons, Cenſorin, cap. 19. It was Anaximenes and Anaximander who received from the Babylonians the way of reckoning by hours, Laertius ex Phavorino.

Among the Latins, Romulus's year conſiſted of ten months. Ovid. Faſt. as well as that of the Albans. It had three hundred days; began in March, and ended in December. Tarquin is ſaid to have added to it the two months of January and February, Junius apud Cenſorin. As to the civil year, the beginning was in January; becauſe then the ſun approaches us; as Ovid ſays, but the ſacred year, they continued to begin in March.

Principium capiunt Phœbus & annus idem.

The people of Lavinium made their years of thirteen months, or 374 days. Thoſe of Umbria made it conſiſt of fourteen months. The Albans allotted thirty-ſix days to the month of March: twelve to May; twenty-eight to Auguſt; ſixteen to September; thoſe of Tuſculum appointed thirty-ſix days to July, and thirty-two to October. Thoſe of Aricia made it conſiſt of thirty-nine days. Neither the Romans, nor any other people of Italy, reckoned by weeks, as did the Orientals; but they had three terms for reckoning the days of every month. The kalends were always the firſt day of the month. In the months of March, May, July, and October, the ſix firſt days belonged to the nones. The other months of the year had but four days before the nones. From the nones to the ides were always eight days. What remained after the ides was reckoned according to its diſtance from the following kalends.

The Hebrews always reckoned by weeks, as a memorial of the creation of the world in ſeven days. They had weeks of ſeven years each, at the term of which was the ſabbatical year: alſo weeks of ſeven times ſeven years, terminated by the year of jubilee; and finally, weeks of ſeven days.

The day was reckoned among them from evening to evening, both in their ſacred and civil accounts. Moſes makes no diſtinction in this reſpect between feſtival days and other days. The feaſts began, Exod. xii. 6. בין הערבים Vulg. ad veſperum. Heb. inter duas veſperas, i. e. between the declining and ſetting of the ſun. After the Jews were in ſubjection to the Greeks, and then to the Romans, they were obliged to conform to their cuſtoms, to maintain order, by beginning their day at midnight, or in the morning, and by diſtributing the day into twelve unequal hours, as alſo the night. This uſage is plainly expreſſed in St. Matthew, xx. 3, 4. and St. John, xi. 9. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CCLXIII, p. 167.

YESTERDAY, is uſed to denote all time paſt, even at a diſtance; as to-day denotes time preſent, but of a larger extent than the very day on which one ſpeaks: Exod. xxi. 29. If the ox was wont to puſh with his horn in time paſt;

Heb. yeſterday. And it came to paſs, when all that knew him before time ſaw; Heb. yeſterday; whereas thou cameſt but yeſterday, 2 Sam. xv. 20. or lately. Jeſus Chriſt, the ſame yeſterday, and to-day, and for ever. Heb. xiii. 8. His doctrine, like his perſon, admits of no variation, his truths are invariable. With him there are neither yeſterday, nor to-morrow, but a continued to-day. Job ſays, viii. 9. We are but of yeſterday, and know nothing; becauſe our days upon earth are a ſhadow.

[YOKE. It appears that yokes were of two kinds, as two words are uſed to denote them in the Hebrew: one refers to ſuch yokes as were put upon the necks of cattle, and in which they laboured: ſo Numb. xix. 2. the heifer which had not borne a yoke; the ſame Deut. xxi. 3. This yoke we preſume may be ſeen in our Plate of Threſhing, FRAGMENT, No. XLVIII. The ſubjects of Solomon complain that he had made his yoke heavy to them, 1 Kings xii. 10. and they uſe the ſame word: — But Jeremiah, xxvii. 2. made him bonds and yokes of another conſtruction, and fitted to the human neck; which he expreſſes by another word; moſt probably, they were ſuch as ſlaves were uſed to wear, when at labour; however, they were the ſign of bondage. We read of yokes of iron, Deut. xxviii. 48. Jer. xxviii. 13. The ceremonies of the Moſaic ritual are called a yoke, Acts xv. 10. Gal. v. 1. as alſo tyrannical authority: but Chriſt ſays, his yoke is eaſy, and his burthen is light, Matth. xi. 29.]

[YOKE FELLOW, Phil. iv. 3. The apoſtle in this paſſage intreats a perſon whom he calls true yoke-fellow:—ſome underſtand the word Syzigus, here rendered yoke-fellow, as a proper name, as if he had ſaid, My koneſt Syzigus—(your name ſignifies yoke-fellow, and we have been yoke-fellows in the glorious cauſe of Chriſtianity) but others think it only implies the latter idea, of aſſociation.—Married perſons are ſpoken of as drawing in the ſame yoke, 2 Cor. vi. 14. Be not unequally yoked with unbelievers: it is probable the apoſtle alludes to Deut. xxii. 10. where it is forbid, to plough with an ox and an aſs, in the ſame yoke. See 1 Tim. vi. 1. Lam. iii. 27.]

[YOUNG. This word is applied not only to children, or perſons little advanced in life, but alſo to perſons long ſince arrived to years of maturity: ſo Benjamin is called a child, when above thirty years of age, Gen. xliv. 20. and Timothy is adviſed to let no man deſpiſe his youth, and to flee youthful luſts, when he could not be leſs advanced in life, but probably was more; having been in the miniſtry twelve or fourteen years. Vide alſo 1 Sam. ix. 2. xxx. 17. So we find ſoldiers are called young men, 2 Sam. ii. 14. Let the young men ariſe and play before us,—meaning ſtrong, able, active, vivacious men; and the ſame is its meaning, Iſaiah xl. 30. Even the youth, the vigorous, the robuſt, ſhall faint and be weary—perhaps, alſo, Prov. vii. 7. the STOUT] Hippocrates ſays, a man is young till twenty-eight; but Varro, (and I think, Ariſtotle) extends youth to thirty-five.

A. M. 3869, ante A. D. 145. Diodorus Siculus, lib. xxxii. gives the name of Diocles to this Zabdiel. Profane hiſtorians tell this ſtory with ſome variation. They ſay that the generals of Alexander Balas, providing for their own ſecurity and intereſt, when their maſter retired into Cilicia, they treated privately with Demetrius Nicator, ſon-in-law of Ptolemy Philometor, and treacherouſly ſlew Alexander, ſending his head to Ptolemy by Zabdiel, whom we have now mentioned, Polyb. Diodor. apud Uſſer. ad A. M. 3859.

ZABIANS, צביים tſabiim. Theſe are ſaid to be ancient Chaldeans, addicted to aſtrology, and to the worſhip of the ſtars; and whoſe chief employment was, to form Taliſmans under certain aſpects of the planets. It is doubted whether the Zabians were a particular people, or a ſect of philoſophers; and whether their name denotes their religion, their country, or ſituation. On this matter there are five or ſix different opinions, vide Spencer de Legib. Hebr. ritual. lib. ii. cap. 1. de Zabiis. Some think the name Zabians comes from Zaba, or rather Saba, ſon of Cuſh; or from Zabah, an army, becauſe they worſhipped the hoſt of heaven; or from the Arabic Tzabin, which ſignifies the eaſt-wind, becauſe theſe people were Chaldeans, and known by the name of Orientals. Spencer believes the beſt etymology is that of Scaliger, Epiſt. lib. i. Ep. 62. who thinks, that Zabiim ſignifies Orientals, or Chaldeans; he thinks alſo this name ought not to be confined to the Chaldeans, but to be extended to all who followed their principles; as the Egyptians, the Nabatheans, the Canaanites, Syrians, &c. So that the name Zabian would denote a ſect ſpread far and wide throughout the Eaſt.

What was the religion, and philoſophy, of the Zabians? Some think it was the moſt ancient religion of the world. Some place the origin of it under Seth, the ſon of Adam; others under Noah; others under Nahor, the father of Terah, and grandfather of Abraham. Maimonides, More Nevoch. lib. iii. thinks, that Abraham followed the religion and principles of the Zabians, while he was in Chaldea. One of their chief articles of religion was, the worſhip of the ſtars, and a kind of magic; which makes Spencer ſay, they were Pagans, and that their religion, ſo much of it as was known to the Jewiſh and Arabian authors, was only a corruption of Judaiſm, and borrowed in many things from the ancient Chaldeans, the Jews, Platoniſts, and Gnoſtics: and that a mixture of theſe compoſed their religion. He adds, that the name of Zabians, and even their religion itſelf, as now profeſſed, is very modern, and not earlier than Mahomet; ſince neither their name, nor religion, occurs in any ancient author, Greek or Latin, nor in any work written before the Koran.

Hyde, in his Account of the Religion of the Perſians, has endeavoured to prove, that the ancient Zabians were no Gentiles; that Shem and Elam were the firſt authors of their religion; that if afterwards it became burthened with any ſuperſtitions, Abraham reformed it, and ſupported its reformation againſt Nimrod, who perſecuted it: that Zoroaſter came afterwards, and re-eſtabliſhed the worſhip of the true God, which Abraham had taught before. True it is, that the ancient Perſians, or Zabians, maintained a continual fire on their altars, and in their temples; but the ſame might be ſeen at Jeruſalem on the altar of that temple, where the prieſts took care that the fire never went out. They ſeemed to worſhip the ſun; but he thinks this was only a ſecondary worſhip, and ſubordinate to that of the true God. The remains of the ancient Perſians in the Eaſt, conſtantly affirm to thoſe who enquire of them, that this reſpect to the ſun is only a reſpect of civility, ſuch as is paid to kings, and their officers.

It is ſaid that the religion of the Zabians is the moſt ancient in the world, after that of Adam and the patriarchs.

The unity of God, and the neceſſity of a Mediator, was an original perſuaſion, throughout the race of mankind. See Prideaux Connect. p. 1. lib. iii. and the authors whom he quotes. The unity of the Godhead is diſcoverable by the light of nature; our need of a Mediator to obtain acceſs to the ſupreme being, is a conſequence of our degeneracy. But ſome men having no knowledge of him, or having loſt what had been revealed to Adam of the qualities of the Mediator, they had recourſe to mediators of their own chooſing, through whom they might addreſs the ſupreme God. This was the firſt ſtep towards idolatry. Then, obſerving nothing in nature of greater perfection than the ſtars, in which they imagined that certain intelligences reſided, which animated and governed thoſe vaſt bodies; they thought that none could be fitter for the office of Mediatorſhip between God and themſelves. And becauſe the planets, of all the celeſtial bodies, were neareſt to the earth, and ſeemed to have the greateſt influence over it, they aſcribed to them the chief place among theſe mediators, and upon that account made them the objects of their worſhip. [We may probably inveſtigate this in another work.]

Such was the origin of idolatry. Firſt they ſet up tents, or chapels, to theſe powers: then they repreſented them by ſtatues and images. Theſe images at firſt were only regarded as ſacred habitations, wherein the intelligences reſided: and thoſe who worſhipped one of them, only paid it a relative adoration, with reſpect to the planet to which it belonged Afterwards, they proceeded to make ſtatues, in which they imagined that after their conſecration theſe intelligences were as much preſent by their influence, as in the planets themſelves, and that prayers addreſſed to theſe were as effectual, as if addreſſed to the others. This was the origin of the worſhip of ſtatues or images.

They were inveſted with the names of the planets they repreſented: as Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Apollo, Mercury, Venus, and Diana. Theſe were what the ancients called the great gods. Afterwards an opinion prevailed, that the ſouls of good men, after their ſeparation from the body, might ſerve as mediators and interceſſors between God and man; whence they deified many whom they thought to have been juſt and good men: by which the number of deities was greatly increaſed.

This religion took its riſe among the Chaldeans: their knowledge in aſtronomy contributed to incline them to it. This obliged Abraham to abandon Chaldea. From Chaldea this worſhip ſpread through the Eaſt, from thence into Egypt, from Egypt into Greece, and among the nations of the Weſt. The firſt authors of this ſuperſtition were known in the Eaſt by the name of Zabians, or Sabbeans. Maimon. Moreh. Nebochim, Pocock. Specimen. Hiſtor. Arab. Thom. Hyde, Hiſt. Relig. veter. Perſarum.

The remains of this ancient ſect are ſtill ſubſiſting in the Eaſt by the name of Sabbeans, which they pretend to have received from Sabius the ſon of Seth.

Seth. They have ſtill among them a book which they aſcribe to Seth, which contains the doctrine of their ſect.

To this ſect of the Sabbeans was diametrically oppoſed that of the Magi; who held images and idols in abhorrence, and worſhipped God only by fire. They began in Perſia, and ſpread to the Indies, where they ſtill ſubſiſt. They acknowledge two principles, one of good, the other of evil. See MAGI.

To return to the Zabians; as the ſyſtem we have now propoſed concerning their origin and progreſs, is founded neither on matter of fact, nor on accounts of ancient hiſtorians, nor on the credit of any authentic monuments; we think ourſelves obliged to acquaint the reader, that all this is an hypotheſis, probable, indeed, but of ſmall aſſurance.

Zabians, or Sabbeans, is not the name of a particular nation, but of a religion known in the Eaſt, and of thoſe who profeſs it. It is not very clear in what the religion of the Zabians principally conſiſts. The Orientals themſelves are not very conſiſtent on this ſubject. But it is certain, that this religion is one of the three, to which Mahomet gave his protection, and a kind of approbation, in his Koran. Theſe three religions are, Judaiſm, Chriſtianity, and Zabiiſm; becauſe they either have, or pretended to have, books compoſed by thoſe patriarchs and prophets, who are acknowledged by Mahomet and the Muſſulmen.

According to Houſſain Vaez, in his Perſian paraphraſe on the Koran, the Zabians have ſeveral obſervances derived from Judaiſm, Chriſtianity, and Mahometaniſm. They honour angels with a religious worſhip: they read the Pſalms of David: they pray, turning towards the ſouth, and ſometimes towards the north. Some think they have the ſame principles as the Sadducees.

They have alſo a book, ſays M. d'Herbelot, Bibl. Orient. Art. Sabi. which they aſcribe to Adam, and which is as their bible; the characters of which are very particular, but the language is almoſt entirely Chaldean. They have a great veneration for John the Baptiſt, whoſe diſciples they profeſs to be. They uſe a kind of baptiſm, whence ſome travellers give them the name of Chriſtians of St. John. Their language is almoſt all Syrian or Chaldee.

Ben-Schunab, a Perſian author, calls the Zabians Sirians, or Syrians. According to him they are deſcended from the moſt ancient nation of the world, and uſe even to this day, at leaſt in their books, the language of Adam and his children; and they have received their religion and their law from Seth and Enoch; whoſe books they pretend to have, which are full of moral inſtructions, recommending the practice of virtue, and abhorrence of vice. They pray to God ſeven times a day, with intenſe application. They faſt during the whole courſe of a moon, from ſun-riſe to ſun-ſet, without eating or drinking. This faſt always concludes at the ſummer equinox.

They honour the temple of Mecca, and have a great reſpect for the pyramids of Egypt, for they think that Sabi, ſon of Edon, or Enoch, is buried under the third of them. But their chief pilgrimage is to a place near Haram, (the ancient Charræ, or Haran) in Meſopotamia, which ſome think to be the place of Abraham's birth; and it certainly is the place from whence he departed with his family for the land of Canaan. Some inſiſt, that the Zabians reſpect this place, becauſe of Sabi the ſon of Mari, who lived in Abraham's time; and from whom they derive their origin, and perhaps their religion, with more probability, than from Sabi the ſon of Enoch, who lived before the deluge.

Ben-hazem ſays, that the religion of the Zabians is not only the firſt, and the moſt ancient, but was the moſt general (if not the only) religion of the world till the time of Abraham, from whom the other religions are deſcended. And in their hiſtories the Arabians commonly ſay, that the ancient Perſians, Chaldeans, Aſſyrians, Grecians, Egyptians and Indians, were all Zabians, before they embraced Judaiſm, Chriſtianity, or Mahometaniſm; and the Oriental Chriſtians make no difficulty to affirm, that Conſtantine the Great quitted the religion of the Zabians, for that of the Chriſtians.

Some confound the Zabians with the Magians, or Guebres, or Gaures, the worſhippers of fire in Perſia; but thoſe who are more correct carefully diſtinguiſh them.

We do not find the name of Zabians in Scripture; and the reaſon that we mention them, is, becauſe the Rabbins and commentators often ſpeak of them; pretending that Moſes had them in view, in ſeveral of his ceremonial laws, either to contradict, or to rectify the cuſtoms and ceremonies of the Zabians. See Spencer, de Legibus Hebræorum Ritualibus, lib. iii.

[The Druids of Britain had many principles and practices in common with the Zabians; and with the ancient patriarchal religion. The reader of Britiſh hiſtory will improve this hint.]

ZABINA, זבינא, ζαβεννα, that runs now; from זוב zub, to run or flow, and נא na, now: otherwiſe, that buys; from the Chaldee זבן zaban.

ZABUD, זבוד, portion, or endowed; from זבה zabad, a dowry.

ZACCAI, זכי, Ζαχαια, pure, clean; from זכך zacac; according to the Syriac, juſt, or juſtified.

ZACCAI, or Zachai. His children returned from Babylon, to the number of ſeven hundred and ſixty. Ezra ii. 9.

ZACCHEUS, Ζακχαῖος See ZACCAI.

I. ZACCHEUS. Judas Maccabæus left Simon, Joſeph and Zaccheus, to beſiege the ſons of Bean, in two towers, 2 Macc. x. 19. 1 Macc. v. 4, 5. A. M. 3840, ante A. D. 164. But Simon's people being bribed with money, permitted ſome to eſcape. Judas put theſe traitors to death. It is not plain that Joſeph, Simon, or Zaccheus, had any ſhare in this treachery.

II. ZACCHEUS, chief of the Publicans; i. e. farmer-general of the revenue, Luke xix. 1, 2, 3, &c. A. D. 33, a little before the death of our Saviour. When Jeſus Chriſt paſſed through Jericho, Zaccheus greatly deſired to ſee him, but could not, becauſe of the multitude, and becauſe he was low of ſtature. He therefore ran before, and climbed up into a ſycamore-tree. When Jeſus came to that place, he lifted up his eyes, and ſaid to him, Zaccheus, make haſte and come down, for to-day I muſt abide at thy houſe. Zaccheus immediately came down, and received him with much joy. Thoſe who ſaw this murmured, and ſaid within themſelves, he is gone to be a gueſt with a man, a ſinner! In the mean time Zaccheus ſaid to Jeſus, Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor; and if I have taken any thing from any man by falſe accuſation, I reſtore him four-fold. The Roman laws condemned Publicans, when convicted of extortion, to make reſtitution to four times the value.

[Notwithſtanding the general diſrepute of Publicans or tax gatherers, Zaccheus could not have acquired all his property by injuſtice; if one eighth part of it would have enabled him to make four-fold reſtitution: indeed he ſeems rather to ſay, that he had not wronged any, by his uſe of the particle IF.]

Jeſus Chriſt anſwered him, This day is ſalvation come to this houſe, foraſmuch as he alſo is a ſon of Abraham. This is all that Scripture informs us of Zaccheus the Publican. Some have thought, that he was a Gentile before his converſion; but the opinion of commentators is, that he was a Jew: for many of this nation exerciſed the employment of a Publican. Clemens Alexandrinus ſays, Stromat. lib. iv. many did not diſtinguiſh Zaccheus from St. Matthew, pretending he was advanced to the apoſtleſhip after the death of Judas. Others have affirmed, that St. Peter ordained him biſhop of Cæſarea in Paleſtine, Conſtit. Clem. lib. vii. cap. 46. Recognit. lib. iii. cap. 65, 74. Ruſin. Præfat. Recognit. Vide & Chryſolog. homil. de Zachæo. But it is probable they confounded him with another Zaccheus, biſhop of this church in the ſecond century. Prædeſtinat. Serm. cap. 11, 13.

III. ZACCHUR, a Levite, of the family of Merari, 1 Chron. xxiv. 27.

IV. ZACCHUR, a Levite and ſinger, ſon of Aſaph, 1 Chron. xxv. 2.

V. ZACCHUR, or Zabbud, ſon of Bigvai or Imri; he returned from the captivity of Babylon, with his brother Uſhai, and ſeventy of their family, [Zabbud] Ezra viii. 14. Nehem. iii. 2.

ZACHARIAH, זכריה, memory of the Lord, or male of the Lord; from זכר zacar, memory, or male, and יה jah, the Lord.

I. ZACHARIAH, Zacharias, or Zechariah; of Reuben, prince of one of the families of this tribe, 1 Chron. v. 7.

II. ZACHARIAH, king of Iſrael; he ſucceeded his father Jeroboam II. A. M. 3220, ante A. D. 784. He reigned but ſix months, and did evil in the ſight of the Lord, 2 Kings xiv. 29. Shallum the ſon of Jabeſh conſpired againſt him, killed him in public, and reigned in his ſtead. Thus was fulfilled what the Lord had foretold to Jehu; that his children ſhould ſit on the throne of Iſrael to the fourth generation. 2 Kings xv. 8—11.

III. ZACHARIAH, ſon of Meſhelemiah, a porter of the tabernacle. He was of the race of Korah, 1 Chron. ix. 21.

IV. ZACHARIAH, a Levite and doctor of the law: one ſent by king Jehoſhaphat throughout Judah to inſtruct the people, 2 Chron. xvii. 7. A. M. 3092, ante A. D. 912.

V. ZACHARIAH, ſon of Jehoiada, high-prieſt of the Jews; probably the Azariah of 1 Chron. vi. 10, 11. He was put to death by order of Joaſh, A. M. 3164, ante A. D. 840. Scripture obſerves, 2 Chron. xxiv. 20, 21, 22. Joaſh the king remembered not the kindneſs which Jehoiada, father of Zachariah, had done to him, but ſlew his ſon: and when he died, he ſaid, The Lord look on it, and require require it. The year following God ſent the army of Syria againſt Judah, which entered Jeruſalem, ſlew the princes of the people, and ſent a great booty to Damaſcus.

St. Jerom, in Matth. xxiii. followed by a great number of commentators, believed that this Zachariah, the ſon of Jehoiada, was the ſame of whom our Saviour ſpeaks, Matth. xxiii. 34, 35. I ſend unto you prophets, and wiſe men, and ſcribes; and ſome of them ye ſhall kill and crucify,.. that on you may come all the righteous blood ſhed on the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel, unto the blood of Zacharias, ſon of Barachias, whom ye ſlew between the temple and the altar. The difference of names of theſe fathers Jehoiada, and Barachiah, does not move St. Jerom, or thoſe who follow him: they obſerve, 1. That in the Hebrew Goſpel of St. Matthew, uſed by the Nazarenes, was read Jehoiada, not Barachiah. 2. That among the Hebrews nothing was more uſual than to have two names. Examples of this are common in Scripture; and it is very eaſy to imagine, that the ſame perſon might be called Barachiah and Jehoiada.

To this opinion three things are objected: 1. That Zachariah, ſon of Barachiah, according to the intention of Jeſus Chriſt, ſeems to have been the laſt of the prophets, or juſt, ſlain by the Jews, as Abel was the firſt of the juſt who ſuffered a violent death. 2. That Zachariah the ſon of Jehoiada was ſtoned in the court of the houſe of God; whereas Zachariah, the ſon of Barachiah, was killed between the temple and the altar. 3. That though it be true that the Hebrews had often two names, it is hardly to be thought that Jeſus Chriſt would here omit the name of Jehoiada, which was ſo well known, and ſubſtitute that of Barachiah, which was not ſo familiar. Vide ZACHARIAH, No. XII. We rather incline to believe, that our Saviour points out Zachariah the ſon of Baruch.

VI. ZACHARIAH, the eleventh of the leſſer prophets. He was ſon of Barachiah, and grandſon of Iddo. He returned from Babylon with Zerubbabel, and begun to propheſy in the ſecond year of Darius, ſon of Hyſtaſpes, A. M. 3484, ante A. D. 520, in the eighth month of the holy year, and two months after Haggai. Theſe two prophets, with united zeal, encouraged the people to reſume the work of the temple, which had been diſcontinued for ſome years, Ezra v. 1. The time, and place, of birth of Zachariah are unknown. Some think him to have been born at Babylon, during the captivity: others think, at Jeruſalem, before Judah and Benjamin were carried away. Some maintain that he was a prieſt; others, that he was no prieſt. Many ſay he was the ſon of Iddo; others, with much more reaſon, that he was ſon of Barachiah, and grandſon of Iddo, Zech. i. 1.

He has been confounded with a Zachariah ſon of Barachiah, cotemporary with Iſaiah viii. 2. and, with Zachariah the father of John the Baptiſt; which opinion is plainly incongruous. He has been thought to be the Zachariah, ſon of Barachiah, whom our Saviour mentions, as killed between the temple and the altar; though no ſuch thing is any where ſaid of this prophet. At the foot of mount Olivet, they ſhew a tomb which they pretend belongs to the prophet Zachariah. Dorotheus maintains, that he was buried in a place called Bethariah, an hundred and fifty furlongs from Jeruſalem.

St. Epiphanius aſcribes to him ſome prophecies compoſed while he was at Babylon: which foretold the birth of Jeſus, or Joſhua, the ſon of Joſedech, and of Zerubbabel, ſon of Salathiel, or Shealthiel; and he declared to Cyrus the victory he ſhould obtain over Crœſus and Aſtyages, and that this prince ſhould ſet up at Jeruſalem the public exerciſe of religion. But we make ſmall account of ſuch particulars, which are not in Scripture.

Zachariah begins his prophecy with an exhortation to the people, to be converted to the Lord, and not to imitate the ſtubbornneſs of their fathers.

In the fourth year of Darius, A. M. 3486, ante A. D. 518, on the fourth day of the ninth month, the prophet was conſulted by Sherezer, Regem-melech, and others, whether they ought to continue to faſt on the fifth month, as they had hitherto done, ſince the ruin of the temple? He anſwered, that theſe faſts were of their own invention; that what God chiefly required of them, was piety and juſtice; and that, finally, their days of faſting ſhould be ſoon changed into days of joy and thankſgiving.

He foretels, in a very expreſs manner, the coming of Jeſus Chriſt, a Saviour, poor, and ſitting on an aſs, and a colt the ſoal of an aſs. In the eleventh chapter he ſpeaks of the war of the Romans againſt the Jews, of the breach of the covenant between God and his people; of thirty pieces of ſilver given for a recompence to the ſhepherd; of three ſhepherds put to death in one month, &c.

Zachary is the longeſt and the moſt obſcure of all the twelve minor prophets, ſays Jerom, Præfat. in lib. i. Zach. His ſtyle is interrupted and without connection. His prophecies concerning the Meſſiah are more particular and expreſs than thoſe of the other prophets. Some modern critics, tics, as Mede, lib. iv. Epiſt. 31, and Hammond, in Matth. have been of opinion, that chap. ix. x. xi. of this prophet were written by Jeremiah; becauſe in Matthew xxvii. 9, 10. under the name of Jeremiah we find quoted Zach. xi. 12. and as the aforeſaid chapters make but one continued diſcourſe, they concluded from hence, that all three belonged to Jeremiah. But it is much more natural to ſuppoſe, that the name of Jeremiah, by ſome unlucky miſtake, has ſlipped into the text of St. Matthew.

The prophet Zachariah foretold in a very punctual manner the ſiege of Babylon by Darius, ſon of Hyſtaſpes. This prince laid ſiege to that rebellious city at the beginning of the fifth year of his reign, and reduced it at the end of twenty months. Zachariah, a little before the time of her fall, writes thus to the Jews, that were ſtill in Babylon; Ho, ho, come forth, and flee from the land of the north, ſaith the Lord; for I have ſpread you abroad as the four winds of the heaven, ſaith the Lord. Deliver thyſelf, O Sion, that dwelleſt with the daughter of Babylon. For thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, after the glory hath he ſent me unto the nations which ſpoiled you, for he that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of his eye. For, behold, I will ſhake mine hand upon them, and they ſhall be ſpoil to their ſervants; and ye ſhall know that the Lord of hoſts hath ſent me, Zech. ii. 6, 7, 9. There is great probability that the Jews obeyed theſe admonitions, and retired from Babylon into their own country, or, at leaſt, withdrew into a place of ſecurity. Vide BABYLON.

The Mahometans do not diſtinguiſh between the prophet Zachary, and Zachary the father of John the Baptiſt, D'Herbelot, Bibl. Orient. p. 922. Some of them make him to be deſcended from David; others from Levi.

VII. ZACHARIAH, ſon of Barachiah, or Jeberechiah, mentioned Iſaiah viii. 2. According to St. Jerom, in loc. this is the prophet mentioned 2 Chron. xxvi. 5. under the reign of Hezekiah, or rather under the reign of Azariah or Uzziah. And he ſought God in the days of Zachariah, who had underſtanding in the viſions of God. This Zachariah might live to the reign of Ahaz, A. M. 3262, when the Lord ſaid to Iſaiah, Take thee a great roll, and write in it ... And I took unto me faithful witneſſes to record, Uriah the prieſt, and Zachariah, the ſon of Jeberechiah. Theſe two perſons might give teſtimony, that at ſuch a time he had foretold that he ſhould have a ſon, and that before this ſon ſhould be able to call his father or mother, Reſin and Pekah, the two enemies of Judah, ſhould be utterly deſtroyed. Vide ALMAH.

VIII. ZACHARIAH, father of Abi, or Abijah, mother of king Hezekiah, 2 Kings xviii. 2. 2 Chron. xxix. 1.

IX. ZACHARIAH, a Levite, of the race of Aſaph, 2 Chron. xxix. 13.

X. ZACHARIAH, the father of Joſeph, under the Maccabees, 1 Macc. v. 18, 56.

XI. ZACHARIAH, a prieſt of the family of Abia, father of John the Baptiſt, and huſband to Elizabeth, Luke i. 5, 12, &c. This is what we are told in the goſpel: Zacharias and Elizabeth were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameleſs. And they had no child, becauſe that Elizabeth was barren, and they both were now well ſtricken in years. But A. M. 3999, about fifteen months before the birth of Jeſus Chriſt, as Zachariah was waiting his week, and performing the functions of prieſt in the temple, according to the cuſtom of the prieſt's office, his lot was to burn incenſe when he went into the temple of the Lord, on the altar of gold in the holy place. And there appeared unto him an angel of the Lord, ſtanding on the right ſide of the altar of incenſe. And when Zacharias ſaw him, he was troubled, and fear fell upon him. But the angel ſaid unto him, Fear not, Zacharias, for thy prayer is heard, and thy wife Elizabeth ſhall bear thee a ſon, and thou ſhalt call his name John. And Zacharias ſaid unto the angel; whereby ſhall I know this? for I am an old man, and my wife well ſtricken in years. And the angel anſwering, ſaid unto him, I am Gabriel that ſtand in the preſence of God, and am ſent to ſpeak unto thee, and to ſhew thee theſe glad tidings. And behold, thou ſhalt be dumb, and not able to ſpeak, until the day that theſe things ſhall be performed, becauſe thou believedſt not my words, which yet ſhall be fulfilled in their ſeaſon.

The people were waiting till Zachariah came forth out of the holy place; and they were ſurprized at his long delay. But when he came out he was not able to ſpeak; by his making ſigns to them, they found that he had ſeen a viſion, and was become dumb. When the days of his miniſtry were compleated, i. e. at the end of about a week, he returned to his own houſe: and his wife Elizabeth conceived a ſon, of whom ſhe was happily delivered in its due time. Her neighbours and kinsfolks aſſembled to congratulate her on this occaſion; and on the eighth day they circumciſed the child, calling his name Zachariah, after the name of his father: but Elizabeth then interpoſed, and ſaid, No; his name is John. They then deſired a token from his father, how he would have him named; he, making ſigns for a tablet, wrote on it, his name is John, which was a cauſe of admiration to all preſent.

At this inſtant his mouth was opened, his tongue was looſed, and he ſpake, praiſing God. And Zachariah, being filled with the Holy Ghoſt, propheſied, by a canticle, which St. Luke has preſerved, chap. ii.

St. Ambroſe, lib. i. in Luc. Ita Beda, Theophyl. Strab. Brug. in Luc. St. Auſtin, in Joan. Homil. 49. St. Chryſoſtom, and ſeveral others, have thought that Zachariah was high prieſt, on a falſe ſuppoſition, that the offering of incenſe was reſerved to the high-prieſt: but it appears from St. Luke himſelf, that he was an ordinary prieſt, of the family, or courſe, of Abia; and it is certain beſides, that the ordinary prieſts went every day into the ſanctum. The Protevangelium of St. James, and the ſpurious Goſpel of the Nativity of the Virgin affirm, or at leaſt ſuppoſe, that Zachariah, the father of John the Baptiſt, was high-prieſt: but the authority of ſuch pieces is very inconſiderable.

The ſame Protevangelium of St. James inſinuates, that when Herod cauſed the young John Baptiſt to be ſearched for, in order to put him to death with the other children of Bethlehem, and not being able to find him, becauſe his mother Elizabeth had ſent him into the wilderneſs; the king ſent to Zachary, who was then attending on his miniſtry at the altar, to enquire of him where his ſon was. Zachariah ſent word, that he knew nothing of him. Herod ſent the ſoldiers back, with orders to kill him, if he would not diſcover where his ſon was. Zachariah ſtill proteſted to them with an oath, that he knew nothing of him, whereupon they killed him between the porch and the altar, in the incloſure that ſurrounded the altar of burnt-ſacrifices. Neither the prieſts, nor the other Iſraelites, knew when he was killed; and one of the prieſts finding he ſtayed too long, entered into the temple, found him dead, and his blood congealed on the ground. At the ſame time he heard a voice, ſaying, Zachariah has been put to death, and his blood ſhall not be wiped out till his revenger comes.

It was doubtleſs on this foundation, that many of the ancients thought, Zachariah, the father of John the Baptiſt, to be that Zachariah, ſon of Barachiah, whoſe blood was ſhed between the temple and the altar. Origen. in Matth. xxvi. Petr. Alex. cap. xiii. Baſil. lib. i. Homil. 25. Nyſſen, tom. iii. Homil. de Natal. Chriſt. Epiphan. de vita & morte Prophet. Theophylact, &c. Tertullian, Scorpiac, cap. 8. ſpeaks of the blood of Zachariah, the marks of which were ſtill viſible on the pavement of the temple. Theſe marks were pretended to be yet viſible alſo in the time of St. Jerom, who gave but little credit to them, as plainly appears by his commentary on St. Matthew, xxiii. 35. Vide, ſi placet, & Athanaſ. tom. ii. p. 697.

The Greeks honour Zachariah September 5, as a prieſt, a prophet, and a martyr. Uſuard, Ado, and other Latins, honour him as a prophet on November 5. The Roman martyrology joins Elizabeth with him.

XII. ZACHARIAH, ſon of Baruch, was a great enemy to all injuſtice and evil, and the greateſt aſſertor of the liberty of his country. Joſeph. de Bello, lib. iv. cap. 19. in Græco, ſeu lib. v. cap. 1. in Lat. The zealots, though reſolved to deſtroy him, as a great oppoſer of their deſigns, and very rich and powerful, yet would obſerve ſome ſort of formality in his condemnation: they convened ſeventy judges of the moſt conſiderable people, to compoſe a kind of tribunal, or ſanhedrim, where they made Zachariah the ſon of Baruch appear before them, and accuſed him of a deſign to deliver up the city to the Romans. But of this conſpiracy they could produce neither proofs, nor tokens.

Zachariah ſeeing his accuſers reſolved on his deſtruction, and that he could by no means eſcape; inſtead of being diſcouraged by the danger, he was more than ordinarily animated. And having briefly confuted the accuſations of his enemies, he began to lay open their iniquity, and to ſhew their proceedings to diſturb the public tranquillity. At this, the zealots were incenſed with rage, and could hardly contain themſelves. but thinking it beſt to hold out to the end, that they might give his trial ſome appearance of juſtice, they ſuffered the ſeventy judges to pronounce their ſentence. This they did by unanimouſly acquitting Zachariah.

The zealots cried out with rage and fury, and two of thoſe wretches flying on Zachariah, killed him in the midſt of the temple, inſulting his dead body with theſe words, "Receive now this abſolution that we give thee, which is much more ſafe than the other." Then they threw his body into the valley below the temple. This happened A.D. 67, three years before the taking of Jeruſalem.

Many learned commentators, as Grotius, Hammond, Louis de Dieu, Conſtantine l'Emper. Janſen on St. Matthew, have thought, that this was the Zachariah, ſon of Barachiah, mentioned by Jeſus Chriſt, Matth. xxiii. 35. They ſay, that Chriſt ſpoke in the manner of the prophets; uſing the time paſt inſtead of the future.

It is objected againſt this opinion, firſt, that our Saviour denounces to the Jews, that they ſhall bear bear the puniſhment of the death of theſe juſt men. But God does not puniſh a crime before it is committed. The Jews to whom he ſpake not knowing this Zacharias, and being ignorant of his death, which was yet future, it would be impertinent to menace them on that account. Secondly, Zachariah the ſon of Baruch, killed by the zealots, was a Jew, and according to all appearances, an unbelieving Jew. Joſephus ſays not one word that inſinuates he had embraced Chriſtianity. The old eccleſiaſtical writers did not own him as ſuch. The zealots that ſlew him had no regard to his religion, but to his great riches. They were afraid that by his great intereſt he might drive them away, and therefore accuſed him of keeping correſpondence with the Romans. If Zacharias had been a Chriſtian, it is not probable that he would have been in the city A. D. 67.

Theſe reaſons, however, are thus replied to. It is allowed, that men cannot ordinarily be threatened for crimes not yet committed; but it is no rare thing to obſerve in the prophets, the deſtruction of a city, the calamity of a people, the death of a prince foretold, as if their crimes were already come to their full meaſure, although their puniſhment be ſtill at a diſtance. It is true indeed, that neither Joſephus, nor any other ancient writer has ſaid, that Zachariah was a Chriſtian; neither have they ſaid the contrary. Joſephus ſpeaks of St. James the Minor ſlain by Amanus as a Jew. At that time Chriſtians were looked on as a ſect of Jews. And though the Chriſtians of Jeruſalem might have begun to withdraw themſelves to Pella, about A. D. 66, four years before the ſiege; yet it was time enough to do it in the year 67, two years before the city was inveſted.

In the valley of Jehoſhaphat, over-againſt Jeruſalem, is to be ſeen a monument, ſaid to be the tomb of Zachariah. It is cut in a rock; has four pillars on each ſide, which bear upon their capitals a roof riſing to a point, and which makes a kind of pyramid. This monument is ſquare, and is fourſcore feet in circumference. There is a little window behind, through which there are ſeen within only a few ſtones one upon another. Vide margin to the MAP of JERUSALEM.

[Though CALMET ſeems to acquieſce in referring prophetically to this Zachariah, yet I think it worth while to obſerve that righteous Abel is the firſt martyr to truth and piety recorded in the Old Teſtament, Gen. iv. 8. and that Zachariah is the laſt perſon mentioned as ſlain on account of his reproving the wickedneſs of his times, 2 Chr. xxiv. 20, 21. Is not this reference then equal to—all the righteous men mentioned in Scripture — all whom your ancient hiſtory records—from the firſt to the laſt of them ?]

M. 2944, ante A. D. 1056. 1 Sam. xxii. 17, 18. While Zadok performed the functions of the prieſthood with Saul, Ahimelech performed it with David; ſo that till the reign of Solomon there were two high-prieſts in Iſrael; Zadok of the race of Eleazar, and Ahimelech of the race of Ithamar. 2 Sam. viii. 17.

When David was forced to quit Jeruſalem on account of the rebellion of his ſon Abſalom, Zadok and Abiathar would have accompanied him with the ark of the Lord. 2 Sam. xv. 24. But David would not permit them. To Zadok, he ſaid, O ſeer, return into the city with Ahimaaſh your ſon, and let Abiathar and his ſon Jonathan return alſo. I will conceal myſelf in the country, till you ſend me news of what paſſes. Zadok and Abiathar returned therefore to Jeruſalem; but their two ſons Ahimaaſh and Jonathan hid themſelves near the fountain of Rogel; and when Huſhai the friend of David had defeated the counſel of Achitophel, they communicated this to David.

After the defeat of Abſalom, David ſent word to Zadok and Abiathar, to perſuade the elders of Judah to ſhew their zeal for the king, by making haſte to come and invite his return into his metropolis. 2 Sam. xix. 11, 12.

The high-prieſt Zadok did not engage in the party of Adonijah, who aſpired at the kingdom to the excluſion of Solomon; 1 Kings i. 5—10, &c. and David ſent Zadok with Nathan, and the chief officers of his court, to give the royal unction to Solomon, and to proclaim him king inſtead of his father.

After the death of David, Solomon excluded Abiathar from the high-prieſthood, becauſe he had eſpouſed the party of Adonijah, and made Zadok high-prieſt alone. 1 Kings ii. 35. It is not very well known when he died; but his ſucceſſor was his ſon Ahimaaſh, who enjoyed the high-prieſthood under Rehoboam.

II. ZADOK, ſon of Ahitub, and father of Shallum, high-high-prieſt of the Jews: under the reign of Jotham, king of Judah.

ZAIR, or Seira. The ſame as the country, or mountain, of Seir, inhabited by the Idumeans, 2 Kings viii. 21. So Joram went over to Zair, and ſmote the Edomites, צעירה Zeira, inſtead of שעיר Zeir, according to the rules of the Hebrew language, inſinuates a motion towards Zeir, or Zair. The Hebrew reads Zeira; but we think it to be a fault, and that it ſhould be read Seira. [q. a local pronunciation?]

ZALAPH, צלף, ſhadow, or tingling of the ear, or ſmiling; from צלל tzalal, ſhadow, &c. and the Chaldee צלף tzalaph, to break.

ZALMONAH, לצלמנה, the ſhade, or ſound of the number; from צלל tſalal, ſhade, &c. and מנה manah, number: otherwiſe, your image, or picture; from צלם tſelem, image, picture, and the pronoun נה, yours, or ours.

ZALMONAH, or Salmona, or Selmona, an encampment of Iſrael in the deſart. Numb. xxxiii. 41. Some think that here Moſes ſet up the brazen ſerpent. See PUNON.

ZAMZUMMIM, Zomzomim, or Zumin; ancient giants who dwelt beyond Jordan, in the country afterwards inhabited by the Ammonites, Deut. ii. 20.

ZANOAH, זנוח, ζανῶ, forgetfulneſs, or deſertion; from זנח zanach: otherwiſe, this reſt, this conſolation; from the pronoun זה ze, this or that, and נוח nuach, reſt, or נחם nacham, conſolation.

ZANOAH, or Zanoe, ſon of Jekuthiel. 1 Chron. iv. 18. But I rather think that Zanoah was a city, built or inhabited, by Jekuthiel and his poſterity.

ZAPHNATH-PAANEAH, or Pſeuthopaneck. LXX. Gen. xli. 45. Ψευθοφανεχ. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. ii. cap. 3. Ψονθομφαννηχον. Thus the Septuagint, and after them Joſephus, expreſs the name that Pharoah gave Joſeph. Moſes ſays, he called him צפנת פענח Zaphath-paaneah, which St. Jerom tranſlated by Salvatorem mundi; but the greater part of interpreters by one that diſcovers hidden things.

ZAPHON, צפון, that is hidden, or that obſerves; from שוף ſhuph: otherwiſe, the north; from צפון tſaphon.

ZAPHON, Saphon, or Sophan; a city of Gad, Joſh. xiii. 27.

ZARAH, צרעה, leproſy, or ſcab; from צרע tſarah. A city, Joſhua xix. 41.

ZARAH, ſon of Judah and Tamar. When his mother was delivering of him, and his brother, Zarah preſented his hand, and the midwife tied a red ribbon about it, ſaying, this will be the firſt-born. But this child with-drawing his hand, his brother was born firſt, and was called Pharez. Gen. xxxviii. 28, 29. Zarah had five ſons, Ethan, Zimri, Heman, Calcol, and Dara.

ZARA, a city of Moab. Joſephus ſays, Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 23. that Alexander Jannæus took this city.

ZARAITE, זרחי, my eaſt, my brightneſs. 1 Chron. xxvii. 11.

ZARED, זרד, ſtrange deſcent, or power; from רדד radad, to deſcend, to put under, or רדה radah, power, and זר zar, ſtrange.

ZARED, or Zered, a brook beyond Jordan, on the frontier of Moab. It falls into the Dead Sea. Numb. xxi. 12. Deut. ii. 13, 14.

ZAREPHATH, or Sarepta, צרפתה, ambuſh of the mouth; from צרר tzarar, to lie in ambuſh, and פת path, mouth, mouthful: otherwiſe, crucible, in which metals are melted; from צרף tzaraph, to melt, to purify.

ZAREPHATH, or Sarepta, a city of the Sidonians, between Tyre and Sidon, in Phœnicia, on the coaſt of the Mediterranean Sea. Pliny and Stephanus call it Sarapta; the Arabians, Tzarphaud; Joſephus, and the Greeks, Sarephta, or Saraphta; the Jews, Zarphat. The Arabian geographer Scherif-ibn-Edris places it twenty miles from Tyre, and ten from Sidon. Sidon is to the north, and Tyre to the ſouth. It was remarkable for being the reſidence of the prophet Elijah, with a poor woman here, during a famine in the land of Iſrael. 1 Kings xvii. 9, 10. In the time of St. Jerom, and a good while after, they uſed to ſhew the place where the prophet dwelt, which was a little tower. Afterwards they built a church in the ſame place, in the midſt of the city. The wine of Sarepta was not unknown to the ancients; vide WINE:

- - - - - - - - - Et dulcia Bacchi
Munera, quæ Sarepta ferax, quæ Gaza creârat.
CORIPP. lib. iii.

- - - - - - - - - Sarepta
Lucida perſpicuis certantia vina lapillis.
FORTUNAT. de vita S. Martini.

At this time Sarepta is only a ſmall village, ſtanding on a hill, about fifteen hundred paces from the ſea. Some have thought, that the name Zarephath, or Sarepta, came from the metals, or glaſs, that were melted in this place; for Zaraph in Hebrew ſignifies to melt metals, or ſuch other ſubſtances. It was from the city of Sarepta, that Jupiter, in the ſhape of a bull, ran away with Europa.

ZARESH-SHAHAR, צרת־השחר, σὰρθ καισιορ, poſition, or plan of the morning: from צורה tſurah, to put, and שחר ſhachar, the morning: otherwiſe, link of ambuſhes, or figure of blackneſs; from צרר tſarar, to join or lay ambuſhes, or from צור tzur, to figure, and שחר ſhachar, blackneſs; or from יצר jatzar, to form, and שחר ſhachar, the morning: that is, the formation of the morning.

ZARESH-SHAHAR, or Sarat-aſar, a city of Reuben, beyond Jordan, Joſh. xiii. 19.

ZATTHU, זתוא, σαθθοία, ζαθαὰ, olive, or olive-tree; from זית zith.

ZATTHU, or Zethu: one who renewed and ſigned the covenant with the Lord, after the return from Babylon, Nehem. x. 14.

ZATTU, from the ſame root as ZATTHU.

ZATTU, or Zethua, returned from Babylon with nine hundred and forty perſons of his family. He is very probably the ſame as Zatthu, in the foregoing article. Ezra ii. 8.

ZAZA, זזא, beaſt; from זז ziz; or univerſal, or that gliſters; according to the Syriac, that draws back.

ZAZA, or Ziza, ſon of Jonathan, of the race of Jerahmeel, ſon of Hezron, of Judah. 1 Chron. ii. 33.

ZEAL, in Latin, zelus; in Hebrew, קנא kanah. It is taken,

1. For the eagerneſs with which we purſue any thing. I have been very jealous (or zealous) for the Lord God of hoſts; 1 Kings xix. 10, 14. I burn with zeal for his honour. Phinehas was zealous for his God, and made an atonement for the children of Iſrael. Numb. xxv. 13. Judith ſays, that Simeon and his brethren were filled with the zeal of the Lord, to revenge the injury that had been done to their ſiſter. Judith ix. 4.

2. Zeal is put for anger, 2 Kings xix. 31. The zeal of the Lord of hoſts ſhall do this; i. e. his anger: Pſalm lxxix. 5. How long, Lord, wilt thou be angry? for ever? ſhall thy jealouſy, or zeal, burn like fire? The whole land ſhall be devoured by the fire of his jealouſy, or zeal. Zeph. i. 18 iii. 8.

3. Zeal is alſo put for jealouſy, Prov. vi. 34. Jealouſy, or zeal, is the rage of a man, therefore he will not ſpare in the day of vengeance. The jealouſy of an huſband in fury will not forgive. Zech. i. 14. viii. 2. Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, I was jealous for Zion with great jealouſy, and I was jealous for her with great fury.

4. Zeal is put for envy, Pſalm xxxvii. 1. Fret not thyſelf becauſe of evil doers, neither be thou (zealous or) envious againſt the workers of iniquity: envy not their appearance of happineſs. 1 Cor. iii. 3. For whereas there is among you envying (Vulg. zelus) and ſtrife, are ye not carnal, and walk as men? See alſo James iii. 16. Bitter envying and ſtrife, James iii. 14. (Zelus amarus, Vulg.) is oppoſed to the zeal of charity, which, as the apoſtle ſays, 1 Cor. xiii. 4, 5. ſuffereth long, is kind, and envieth not. But blind and falſe zeal, and zeal of bitterneſs, is full of contention and animoſity.

ZEAL, or the JUDGMENT of ZEAL. Among the Hebrews this name was given to the action of an Iſraelite, who being tranſported with zeal, without awaiting the ſentence of the judges, and without obſerving the common forms of juſtice, put to death ſome Jew, whom he detected in the open and ſcandalous violation of ſome important point of the law; or, in uttering blaſphemy againſt the name of God, or, againſt his temple, or his people. In ſuch caſes it was allowed to any Iſraelite to purſue him, and to put him to death. In like manner, if the prieſts in the temple ſhould ſee any of their brethren performing his functions in a ſtate of uncleanneſs, they were authorized by cuſtom to drag him out of the holy place, out of the court, and to knock him on the head with clubs. Miſhna, tit. Sanhedr. cap. 9. Gemar. Babylon. & Jeroſol. ibidem. But, that this liberty might not be abuſed, it was neceſſary that the crime ſhould be committed in the preſence of ten Iſraelites at leaſt; and that he who committed it muſt perſevere in it, and not withdraw when warned of it, and remonſtrated with for it. For if he deſiſted from his crime, they were not allowed to kill him, till he had been condemned judicially.

They founded this right on a tradition which they pretended to have received from Moſes, and on the the example of Phinehas, who, tranſported by an holy zeal, pierced, at one blow, Zimri, and Cozbi. Numb. xxv. 7, 8. Animated by this, Matthias, the father of the Maccabees, ſlew Apelles, whom the king of Syria had ſent to Modin, to compel the Jews to ſacrifice. 1 Macc. ii. 24. By the ſame cuſtom, the Jews of Egypt took vengeance upon three hundred of their brethren, who had apoſtatized; 3 Macc. cap. ult. Laſtly, we may ſay, that through the ſame zeal our Saviour drove out of the temple the money-changers, the bankers, and thoſe who ſold doves and other animals. Matth. xxi. 12. John ii. 14, 15. The Evangeliſt obſerves, that on this occaſion the apoſtles called to mind thoſe words of Pſalm lxix. 9. The zeal of thine houſe hath eaten me up. See Grotius, De Jure Belli & Pacis, lib. ii. cap. 20. ſect. 1. Selden. De Jure Nat. & Gent. lib. iv. cap. 4, 5.

The idol of zeal, Ezek. viii. 3, 5. סמל הקנאה המקנה was Adonis, called the idol of jealouſy, becauſe he was beloved by Venus; and therefore Mars, provoked with jealouſy, ſent a wild boar againſt him, which killed him. In purſuing the diſcourſe of Ezekiel, we ſee that the ſame idol which at the fifth verſe is called the idol of jealouſy, is called Thammuz at the fourteenth verſe. Vide TAMMUZ. St. Jerom, who is followed by ſeveral commentators, thinks that the idol of jealouſy is Baal, which was ſet up in the temple by king Manaſſeh, but was taken away by Joſiah. Others think, that under the name image of jealouſy, i. e. that excites to jealouſy, the prophet meant all ſorts of idols, which provoke the anger of God, againſt their worſhippers.

The ear of zeal hears all things: auris zeli audit omnia. God is, as it were, a jealous huſband, who hearkens to every thing, even to the prophane diſcourſes of the wicked.

Nolite zelare mortem in errore vitæ veſtræ: forbear to ſeek death with ſo much eagerneſs; ſhew not ſo much zeal for your own deſtruction. Otherwiſe, accuſe not death; charge not your misfortune upon it. The verb zelare, is ſometimes put for taking vengeance. Phinehas was tranſported with zeal againſt the offenders, he took up weapons to put them to death. Numb. xxv. 11. Saul put the Gibeonites to death with an unſeaſonable zeal, to revenge the trick they had put upon Iſrael: Valuit Saul percutere eos zelo, quaſi pro filiis Iſrael & Juda. 2 Sam. xxi. 2. The book of Wiſdom, v. 18. repreſents the Lord as arming himſelf with zeal againſt his enemies; i. e. as going to take vengeance on their maliciouſneſs. Iſaiah, xi. 13. ſays, that Ephraim ſhall no longer make war againſt Judah, and that theſe two kingdoms ſhall live together in peace: Auferetur zelus Ephraim, & hoſtes Juda peribunt; Ephraim non æmulabitur Judam, & Juda non pugnabit contra Ephraim. Where we ſee that zelari and æmulari are put as ſynonymous terms with hoſtis and pugnare. Ezekiel ſays, xxxix. 25. that the Lord ſhall revenge the affront done to his name: aſſumant zelum pro nomine ſancto meo.

In Deuteronomy xxxii. 21. God ſays, that the ungrateful and faithleſs Iſraelites would move him to jealouſy, or zeal, by worſhipping gods that are no gods; and I, ſays the Lord, will provoke their zeal and jealouſy, by loving another (people) which is no people. I will vex them, by ſubſtituting in their ſtead a fooliſh nation; as a huſband, moved with jealouſy againſt an unfaithful ſpouſe, who has abandoned herſelf to unworthy lovers, in contempt of himſelf who is infinitely more deſerving affection. He threatens to divorce her, to reject her, and to take into her place another people, which does not deſerve the name of a people, to excite in her, by this compariſon, a ſpirit of zeal and jealouſy, of vexation and anguiſh. This was accompliſhed in the reprobation of the people of the Jews, and the call of the Gentiles to the Chriſtian religion. 1 Peter ii. 9.

ZEALOTS. Vide ZELOTS.

ZEBADIAH, זבדיה, portion of the Lord, or the Lord is my portion; from זבד zabad, a portion, and יה jah, the Lord.

II. ZEBADIAH, ſon of Elpaal, 1 Chr. viii. 16, 17.

III. ZEBADIAH, ſon of Jehoram, of the city of Gedor: one who adhered to David, while perſecuted by Saul, 1 Chron. xii. 7.

IV. ZEBADIAH, a Levite, ſon of Meſhelemiah, a porter of the temple, 1 Chron. xxvi. 2.

V. ZEBADIAH, ſon of Michael; he returned from the captivity of Babylon with fourſcore men. Ezra viii. 8.

ZEBAH, זבח, victim, ſacrifice, immolation; from זבח zabach.

ZEBAH, a prince of the Midianites, whom Gideon himſelf ſlew. See the hiſtory, Judg. viii. 5, 21. Pſalm lxxxiii. 11. A. M. 2753, ante A. D. 1251.

ZEBAIM, הצביים, Vulg. Sabaim, kid, antelope, or beauties; from צבי zabi: otherwiſe, armies: from צבא zaba. Nehem. vii. 59.

I. ZEBEDEE, ſon of Aſaph, and father of Micah. He was an excellent muſician of the temple, Nehem. xi. 17. [Zabdi, Eng. Tr.]

II. ZEBEDEE, father of the apoſtles James, and John the Evangeliſt. We know nothing that can be relied on, concerning the perſon, or actions, of Zebedee; but only that he was a fiſherman by profeſſion, that his wife was called Salome, and that his two ſons left him to follow our Saviour. See Matth. iv. 21.

ZEBOIM, צבים, deer, goats, &c. tinging, dyeing; from צבע, to ſtain.

ZEBOIM, or Seboim, one of the four cities of Pentapolis, conſumed by fire from heaven, Gen. xix. 24. Euſebius and St. Jerom ſpeak of Zeboim, in locis Sodoma & Adama, as of a city extant in their time, on the weſtern ſhore of the Dead Sea. Therefore after the time of Lot and Abraham, a city muſt have been rebuilt near where Zeboim was before. The valley of Zeboim is mentioned 1 Sam. 13, 18. alſo ZEBOIM, a city of Benjamin, Nehem. xi. 34.

ZEBUDAH, זבודה, ζαβȣδὰ, endowed; from זבד zabad.

ZEBUDAH, or Zebida, mother of Jehoiakim, king of Judah. She was daughter of Pedaiah, of Rumah, 2 Kings xxiii. 36.

ZEBUL, זבל, habitation; from זבל zabal.

ZEBUL, made governor of the city of Shechem by Abimelech, the ſon of Gideon, Judg. ix. 28. A. M. 2771, ante A. D. 1233. Gaal the ſon of Ebed having prevailed with the Shechemites to revolt, Zebul ſent intelligence of it to Abimelech, who marching all night, appeared next morning on the hills near Shechem. Gaal going out of the city, ſaid to Zebul, See, a great multitude coming down the mountains. Zebul anſwered him, You miſtake the ſhadows of the hills for men. But as the troops of Abimelech advanced, Zebul ſaid to Gaal, Where is now that confidence with which you boaſted, who is Abimelech, that we ſhould be his ſubjects? Go now and fight them. He did ſo, but was ſoon overcome by Abimelech.

ZEBULUN, זבלוני, from the verb זבד zabad, to endow: otherwiſe, dwelling, habitation; from זבל zabal.

I. ZEBULUN, or Zabulon, the ſixth ſon of Jacob and Leah, Gen. xxx. 20. He was born in Meſopotamia, about A. M. 2256, ante A. D. 1748. His ſons were Sered, Elon, and Jahleel, Gen. xlvi. 14. Moſes acquaints us with no particulars of his life: but Jacob, in his laſt bleſſing, ſaid of Zebulun, Gen. xlix. 13. Zebulun ſhall dwell at the haven of the ſea, and he ſhall be for a haven of ſhips, and his border ſhall be unto Zidon. His portion extended along the coaſt of the Mediterranean ſea, one end of it bordering on this ſea, and the other on the ſea of Tiberias, vide Joſh. xix. 10, &c. In the laſt words of Moſes, he joins Zebulun and Iſſachar together; ſaying, Deut. xxxiii. 18. Rejoice, Zebulon in thy going out, and Iſſachar in thy tents. They ſhall call the people unto the mountain, there they ſhall offer ſacrifices of righteouſneſs. For they ſhall ſuck of the abundance of the ſeas, and of treaſures hid in the ſands. Meaning, that theſe two tribes being at the greateſt diſtance north, ſhould come together to the temple at Jeruſalem, to the holy mountain, and ſhould bring with them ſuch of the other tribes as dwelt in their way; and that being ſituated on the coaſt of the Mediterranean ſea, they ſhould apply themſelves to trade and navigation, and to the melting of metals and glaſs, denoted by thoſe words, Treaſures hid in the ſand. The river Belus, whoſe ſand was very fit for making glaſs, was in this tribe. Vide GLASS.

When the tribe of Zebulun left Egypt, it had for its chief Eliab the ſon of Elon, and comprehended 57,400 men able to bear arms, Numb. i. 9, 30. In another review thirty-nine years afterwards, this tribe amounted to 60,500 men, of age to bear arms, Numb. xxvi. 26, 27, A. M. 2553, ante A. D. 1451. The tribes of Zebulun and Naphthali diſtinguiſhed themſelves in the war of Barak and Deborah againſt Siſera, the general of the armies of Jabin, Judg. iv. 5, 6, 10. v. 4, 18. It is thought theſe tribes were the firſt carried into captivity beyond the Euphrates, by Pul and Tiglath-pilneſer, kings of Aſſyria, 1 Chron. v. 26. They had alſo the advantage of hearing and ſeeing Jeſus Chriſt in their country, oftener and longer than any other of the tribes, Iſai. ix. 1. Matth. iv. 13, 15. Vide Hieron & alios in Iſai. ix.

The Teſtament of the twelve Patriarchs, an ancient, though apocryphal book, ſays that when Zebulun was at the point of death, being an hundred and fourteen years old, thirty-two years after the death of Joſeph, he made his ſons come to him, and declared to them, that he had no ſhare in the crime of his brethren, when they ſold Joſeph: but did every thing in his power to divert them from that reſolution. After which he prophecies of ſucceeding events too plainly to be genuine.

II. ZEBULUN, a city of Aſher, Joſh. xix. 27. but, probably afterwards yielded to Zebulun, from whence it took its name. It was not far from Ptolemais, ſince Joſephus, de Bell. lib. iii. cap. 2. makes the length of lower Galilee to be from Tiberias to Ptolemais. It had the name of Zabulon andrôn given it, or Zebulun of men, probably becauſe of its great populouſneſs, de Bell. lib. ii.

cap. 22. When Ceſtius entered it, he gave the plunder of it to his ſoldiers, and then burned it, though he admired the beauty of it; for its houſes were built like thoſe of Tyre, Sidon, and Berytus, lib. ii. cap. 22. p. 817. de Bell. Elon, the judge of Iſrael, was of the tribe of Zebulun, and was buried in this city, Judg. xii. 12.

ZECHARIAH. See ZACHARIAH.

ZEDAD, צדדה, or Sedada, his ſide; from צד tzad: or his hunting, or his ambuſh; from צדה tzadah, and the pronoun ה ah, his.

ZEDAD, or Sedada, a city of Syria, in the moſt northern part of the Land of Promiſe. See Numb. xxxiv. 8. Ezek. xlvii. 15.

ZEDEKIAH, צדקיהו, the Lord is my juſtice, or the juſtice of the Lord; from צדק tzadak, juſt, and יה jah, the Lord.

I. ZEDEKIAH, or Sedecias, or Mattaniah, the laſt king of Judah, before the captivity of Babylon. He was the ſon of Joſiah, and uncle to Jeconiah his predeceſſor, 2 Kings xxiv. 17, 19. When Nebuchadnezzar took Jeruſalem, he carried Jeconiah to Babylon, with his wives, children, officers, and the beſt artificers in Judea, and put in his place his uncle Mattaniah, whoſe name he changed to Zedekiah, and made him promiſe, with an oath, that he would continue in fidelity to him, A. M. 3405, ante A. D. 599. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 13. Ezek. xvii. 12, 14, 18. He was twenty-one years old when he began to reign at Jeruſalem, and he reigned there eleven years. He did evil in the ſight of the Lord, committing the ſame crimes as Jehoiakim, 2 Kings xxiv. 18, 19, 20. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 11, 12, 13. He regarded not the menaces of the prophet Jeremiah, from the Lord; but hardened his heart. The princes of the people, and the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, imitated his impiety, and abandoned themſelves to all the abominations of the Gentiles.

In the firſt year of his reign Zedekiah ſent to Babylon Elaſah, the ſon of Shaphan, and Gemariah the ſon of Hilkiah, probably to carry his tribute to Nebuchadnezzar. By theſe meſſengers Jeremiah ſent a letter to the captives at Babylon, Jer. xxix. 1, 2—23. Four years afterwards, either Zedekiah went thither himſelf, or at leaſt he ſent thither; for the Hebrew text may admit either of theſe interpretations, Jeremiah li. 59. Baruch. i. 1. Jer. xxxii. 12. See SERAIAH VII. The chief deſign of this deputation was to intreat Nebuchadnezzar to return the ſacred veſſels of the temple, Baruch i. 8. In the ninth year of his reign, he revolted againſt Nebuchadnezzar, 2 Kings xxv. 1, 2, 3. It was a ſabbatical year, in which the people ſhould ſet their ſlaves at liberty, according to the law, Exod. xxi. 2. Deut. xv. 1, 2, 12. Jer. xxxiv. 8, 9, 10. Then king Nebuchadnezzar marched his army againſt Zedekiah, and took all the fortified places of his kingdom, except Lachiſh, Azekah, and Jeruſalem.

He ſat down before Jeruſalem on the tenth day of the tenth month of the holy year, (which anſwers to our January). Some time afterwards Pharaoh Hophrah, king of Egypt, marched to aſſiſt Zedekiah, Jer. xxxvii. 3, 4, 5, 10. Nebuchadnezzar left Jeruſalem, and went to meet him, defeated him, and obliged him to return into Egypt; after which he reſumed the ſiege of Jeruſalem. In the mean while, the people of Jeruſalem, as if freed from the fear of Nebuchadnezzar, retook the ſlaves whom they had ſet at liberty, which drew upon them great reproaches and threatenings from Jeremiah, xxxiv. 11—22. During the ſiege, Zedekiah often conſulted Jeremiah, who adviſed him to ſurrender, and pronounced the greateſt woes againſt him, if he ſhould perſiſt in his rebellion: Jerem. xxxvii. 3—10. xxi. But this unfortunate prince had neither patience to hear, nor reſolution to follow, good counſels. In the eleventh year of Zedekiah, on the ninth day of the fourth month, (July,) Jeruſalem was taken, 2 Kings xxv. 2, 3, 4. Jerem. xxxix. 2, 3. lii. 5, 6, 7. Zedekiah, and his people, endeavoured to eſcape by favour of the night, but the Chaldean troops purſuing them, they were overtaken in the plain of Jericho. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CCXXIV. p. 109.

He was taken, and carried to Nebuchadnezzar, then at Riblah, a city of Syria. The king of Chaldea reproaching him with his perfidy, cauſed all his children to be ſlain before his face, and his eyes to be put out; then loading him with chains of braſs, he ordered him to be ſent to Babylon, 2 Kings xxv. 4—7. Jer. xxxii. 4—7. lii. 4—11. Thus were accompliſhed two prophecies, which ſeemed contradictory; one of Jeremiah, who ſaid, that Zedekiah ſhould ſee, and yet not ſee Nebuchadnezzar with his eyes, Jer. xxxii. 4, 5. xxxiv. 3. and the other of Ezekiel, xii. 13. which intimated, that he ſhould not ſee Babylon, though he ſhould die there. The year of his death is not known. The Rabbins (Tradit. Hebr. in Lib. Reg. & Paralip. ſub nomine Hieronym.) ſay he died of grief: becauſe, having been invited to a feaſt by Nebuchadnezzar, Zedekiah was there made drunk, and in his drunkenneſs committed ſeveral indecent actions. But theſe traditions are of no authority, and learned men are agreed that they have no right to bear the name of St. Jerom. Jeremiah had aſſured him, Jer. xxxiv. 4, 5. that he ſhould die in peace, that his body ſhould be burned, as thoſe of the kings of Judah uſually uſually were; and that they ſhould mourn for him, ſaying, alas, my Lord!

The Rabbins ſay, that at the obſequies of Zedekiah they cried out, alas! king Zedekiah is dead, who has drank up the dregs of all ages; i. e. who has ſuffered the puniſhment due to all his predeceſſors. They ſay alſo, that he made his eſcape from Jeruſalem by a ſubterraneous paſſage, which led from the king's palace to the plains of Jericho; but that a hind following him without, and going juſt the ſame pace above ground as the king went under ground, and the Chaldeans following the hind, they came upon the king at unawares, juſt as he came out of his ſubterraneous paſſage. Joſephus, de Bell. lib. vii. cap. 4. relates, that Zedekiah, to ſave the city and the temple, went into voluntary exile and captivity: but this is to diſguiſe the truth: Zedekiah's flight was not a voluntary act to ſave his country. He reigned eleven years at Jeruſalem; and after him the kingdom of Judah was entirely ſuppreſſed.

II. ZEDEKIAH, ſecond ſon of king Jehoiakim, 1 Chron. iii. 16.

III. ZEDEKIAH, ſon of Chenaanah; a falſe prophet of Samaria, 1 Kings xxii. 11, 24. who put iron horns on his head, and ſaid to Ahab, king of Iſrael. Thus ſaith the Lord, you ſhall beat Syria, and toſs it up into the air with theſe horns. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXIV. p. 21. The prophet Micaiah, the ſon of Imlah, being ſent for, and denouncing the direct contrary, Zedekiah came near him, and giving him a blow on the face, ſaid to him, Which way went the Spirit of the Lord from me, to do thus to you? Micaiah anſwered, You will ſee that, when you ſhall be obliged to hide yourſelf in an inward chamber. Vide FRAGMENT, No. XXV. p. 48. It is not ſaid what became of Zedekiah; but all the prophecies of Micaiah proved true. See MICAIAH.

IV. ZEDEKIAH, ſon of Maaſeiah, a falſe prophet, who always oppoſed Jeremiah. Againſt him, and againſt Ahab the ſon of Kolaiah, Jeremiah pronounced a terrible prophecy: Jer. xxix. 21, 22. Of them ſhall be taken up a curſe by all the captivity of Judah which are in Babylon, ſaying, The Lord make thee like Zedekiah, and like Ahab, whom the king of Babylon roaſted in the fire, &c. The Rabbins, Rabb. Hieronym. in Jer. xxix. Raban. Hugo. Thom. Salian. with ſome commentators, are of opinion, that they were the two elders who attempted the chaſtity of Suſanna. But this opinion is not probable.

V. ZEDEKIAH, ſon of Aſadias, and father of Maaſeiah, grandfather of Baruch, Baruch i. 1.

ZEDEKIEL, צדקיאל, juſtice of God.

ZEDEKIEL. The name of an angel of the firſt order. The Jews make him preceptor of Abraham. See Fabricius, tom. i. p. 4. Apoc. Vet. T.

ZEEB, זאב, wolf; from זאב zeeb.

ZEEB, or Zeb, a prince of Midian. He was found in a wine-preſs, and ſlain by the Ephraimites, who ſent his head to Gideon beyond Jordan, whither they purſued their enemies, Judg. vii. 25. A. M. 2753, ante A. D. 1251.

ZELAH, צלע, ſide, or that halts: otherwiſe, calm, pacific.

ZELAH, or Sela, a city of Benjamin, Joſh. xviii. 28. We read in the Hebrew of 2 Sam. xxi. 14. that Saul was buried at Zelah, in the tomb of his father Kiſh.

ZELEK, צלק, the ſhadow, or the noiſe of him that licks, that laps, or ſtrikes; from צלל tzalal, to be in the ſhade, or tingling of the ear, and לקק lakak, to lick or lap: according to the Chaldee, that roaſts or burns, or that ſtrikes; from צלה tſalah, to roaſt: according to the Arabic, that makes a noiſe; from צלק tſalak.

ZELEK, or Selec, an Ammonite; one of David's heroes, 2 Sam. xxiii. 37. 1 Chron. xi. 39.

ZELOPHEHAD, צל־פחד, the ſhade, or tingling of fear; from צלל tzalal, ſhadow, &c. and from פחד pachad, fear: otherwiſe, the fear of ſubmerſion, or of being burnt; from the ſame פחד pachad, and צלה tſalah, to burn; or from צלל tzalal, to be plunged, or ſunk.

ZELOPHEHAD, or Salphaad, ſon of Hepher, of Manaſſeh. He died, leaving no ſons, but five daughters, Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah, who received their portion in the Land of Promiſe, Numb. xxvi. 33. xxvii. 1.

ZELOTES, Ζηλωτὴς, jealous, or full of zeal; from the Greek ζῆλος, zeal, jealouſy.

ZELOTES. See SIMON ZELOTES.

ZELOTS, or Zealots. This name was given to certain Jews who roſe in Judea about A. D. 66, four or five years before the taking of Jeruſalem by the Romans. They were called zealots from that furious and mad zeal they pretended for the liberty of their country. They were alſo called Sicarii, or aſſaſſins, becauſe of the frequent butcheries they committed with their ſhort daggers, called in Latin, Sica. We think them to be the ſame as the Herodians, Matth. xxii. 16. Mark iii. 6. xii. 13. See HERODIANS and GALILEANS. All theſe kinds of people were followers of Judas the Galilean. See JUDAS GAULONITES, and Joſephus Antiq. lib. xviii. See alſo ZEAL.

ZEMARAIM,

ZEMARAIM, צמרים, wool; from צמר tſamar: otherwiſe, ſap, or ſuccour; from צמרת tſamereth.

ZEMARAIM, or Samaraim, a city of Benjamin, near Bethel, Joſh. xviii. 22. See alſo 2 Chron. xiii. 4. according to the Hebrew, the Mount of Zemaraim.

ZEMARAIM, Semeron, or Shomeron. The name of the mountain of Shemer, 2 Chron. xiii. 4.

ZEMARITE, צמרי, σαμαραῖος, or Samaræus, wool, or ſap, or ſuccour. Septuag. Trees.

ZEMARITE, Samaræus. The tenth ſon of Canaan; father of the Zemarites, who, we think, inhabited Simyra, a city of Phœnicia, near Orthoſia. The two Chaldee paraphraſes, and St. Jerom, ſay they dwelt at Emeſa in Syria. Some have imagined that they gave name to the mountain of Shomeron, on which Samaria was afterwards built, 1 Kings xvi. 24. But they did not obſerve the difference between the names שמרונים Shomeronim, the Samaritans, and צמריים Zomerim, the Zemarites. Gen. x. 18.

ZEMIRA, זמירה, from זמר zamar, to ſing; or זמיר zamir, vine, branch.

ZEMIRA, or Zamira, ſon of Becher of Benjamin, 1 Chron. vii. 8.

ZENAN, צנן, σενὰμ, coldneſs; from the Chaldee צנן tſanan: otherwiſe, buckler, arms.

ZENAN, or Sanan, a city of Judah, Joſh. xv. 37.

ZENAS, Ζηνᾶς, living; from the Greek ζῆν, to live.

ZENAS, a doctor of the law, and diſciple of St. Paul, Tit. iii. 13. Ζηνᾶν τὸν νομικὸν. Vulg. Zenam legis peritum; [Zenas the lawyer. Eng. Tr.] Legis peritus, in this place, is the ſame as Scriba. or a doctor of the law. See Matth. xxii. 35. Luke vii. 30. x. 25. xi. 45, &c. We know nothing of him, but that he was an apoſtolical man, well inſtructed in the Jewiſh law, and eſteemed by St. Paul. This apoſtle informs Titus, that he wiſhes to ſee Zenas at Nicopolis, as alſo Apelles; and that he ſhould take care that nothing might be wanting to them for this journey. Dorotheus, biſhop of Tyre, makes him biſhop of Dioſpolis in Paleſtine.

ZEPHANIAH, צפניה, the Lord is my ſecret, or the ſecret of the Lord, or the north of the Lord; from צפן tſaphan, to hide, or ſaphon, the north, and יה jah, the Lord.

I. ZEPHANIAH, or Sophonias, ſon of Maaſeiah; called, 2 Kings xxv. 18. the ſecond prieſt, while the high-prieſt Seraiah performed the functions of the high-prieſthood, and was the firſt prieſt. It is thought Zephaniah was his deputy, to diſcharge the duty when the high-prieſt was ſick, or when any other accident hindered him from performing his office. After the taking of Jeruſalem by the Chaldeans, Seraiah and Zephaniah were taken and ſent to Nebuchadnezzar at Riblah, who cauſed them to be put to death; A. M. 3416, ante A. D. 588. Zephaniah was ſent more than once by Zedekiah, to conſult Jeremiah, xxi. 1. xxxvii. 3. I know not whether Joſiah and Hen, Zech. vi. 10, 14. were ſons of this Zephaniah, or of ſome other.

II. ZEPHANIAH, a Levite, of the family of Kohath, 1 Chron. vi. 36.

III. ZEPHANIAH, ſon of Cuſhi, and grandſon of Gedaliah; was of the tribe of Simeon, according to Epiphanius, and of mount Sarabata, a place not mentioned in Scripture. The Jews are of opinion, that the anceſtors of Zephaniah, recited at the beginning of his prophecy, were all prophets themſelves. Some have pretended, without any foundation, that he was of an illuſtrious family. We have no exact knowledge, either of his actions, or the time of his death. He lived under king Joſiah, who began to reign A. M. 3363, ante A. D. 641. The deſcription that Zephaniah gives of the diſorders of Judah, leads us to judge, that he propheſied before the eighteenth year of Joſiah; i. e. before this prince had reformed the abuſes and corruptions of his dominions, 2 Kings xxii. 3, 10, 12. Beſides, he foretels the deſtruction of Nineveh, Zeph. ii. 13. which could not fall out before the ſixteenth year of Joſiah, by allowing, with Beroſus, twenty-one years to the reign of Nabopolaſſar over the Chaldeans. Therefore we muſt neceſſarily place the beginning of Zephaniah's prophecy early in the reign of Joſiah.

The firſt chapter of this prophet is a general threatening againſt all the people whom the Lord had appointed to ſlaughter; againſt Judah; againſt thoſe who leap over the threſhold; meaning the Philiſtines. (See 1 Sam. v. 5. Therefore neither the prieſts of Dagon, nor any that come into Dagon's houſe, tread on the threſhold of Dagon in Aſhdod, unto this day.) In the ſecond chapter he inveighs againſt Moab, Ammon, Cuſh, the Phœnicians and Aſſyrians. He foretels the fall of Nineveh, which happened A. M. 3378. The third chapter contains invectives and threatenings againſt Jeruſalem; but afterwards gives comfortable aſſurances of a return from the captivity, and of a flouriſhing condition.

ZEPHATH, צפת, which beholds, that attends, that covers; from צפה tſaphah: otherwiſe, honey-comb; from צוף tzuph.

ZEPHATH, or Sephaat, a city of Simeon, Judg. i. 17. probably the ſame as Zephattah, near Mareſhah, in the ſouth of Judah, 2 Chron. xiv. 10. It was called Hormah, or Anathema, after the victory victory obtained by Iſrael over the king of Arad, Numb. xxi. 3. Judg. i. 17.

ZEPHATHAH, צפתה. See ZEPHATH.

ZEPHATHAH, or Sephata. The valley of Zephathah near Mareſhah, is mentioned, 2 Chron. xiv. 10. Perhaps this vale was near the city of Zephath, or Hormah: or, perhaps, it ſhould be read Shephalah, inſtead of Zephathath. See SEPHALA.

ZEPHI, צפי, σεπφθή, that ſees and obſerves, or that expects, or covers; from צפה tzaphah.

ZEPHI, Zepho, or Sephi, third ſon of Eliphaz, ſon of Eſau, 1 Chron. i. 36. Gen. xxxvi. 15.

ZEPHO, צפו, the ſame as Zephi.

ZEPHON, צפיון, Vulg. Sephion, that beholds; from צפה tſaphah: or the north; from צפון tſaphon: or that is hid; from צפן tſaphan: otherwiſe, the north that is hid. Vide BAALZEPHON.

ZEPHON, or Sephron, ſon of Gad, chief of a family. Numb. xxvi. 15.

ZER, צר, τύρος, anguiſh, pain, tribulation; from צור tzur, to oppreſs: otherwiſe, ſtone, rock, fortreſs; from the ſame. Vide TYRE.

ZER, or Ser, a city of Naphtali, Joſh. xix. 35.

ZERA, זרה, eaſt, or brightneſs; from זרח zarach, to ariſe, or ſun-riſing.

ZERA, or Zara, of Bozrah, ſon of Reuel, and grandſon of Eſau, and father of Jobad, Gen. xxxvi. 13, 17, 33.

I. ZERAH, or Zara, ſon of Simeon, and grandſon of Jacob, father of a family, Numb. xxvi. 13.

II. ZERAH, king of Ethiopia, or, rather, of Cuſh, in Arabia Petrea, on the Red Sea, and bordering on Egypt, 2 Chron. xiv. 9, 10, &c. A. M. 3063, ante A. D. 941. This prince came to attack Aſa, king of Judah, with an army of a million of foot, and three hundred chariots of war. Advancing to Mareſhah, Aſa went out to meet him, and ſet his army in battle array in the valley of Zephathah, near Mareſhah. He called upon the Lord, who caſt terror and conſternation into the hearts of the Ethiopians, and made them run away. Aſa and his army purſued them to Gerar, plundered their cities, and brought back a great booty. Vide ASA.

ZERAHIAH, זרחיה, eaſt, or brightneſs of the Lord; from זרח zarach, &c. and יה jah, the Lord.

ZERAHIAH, or Zaraias, ſon of the high-prieſt Uzzi, and father of Meraioth. See 1 Chron. vi. 6.

ZEREDA, צרדה, ambuſh, change of dominion, or deſcent; from צרר tſarar, to tye, &c. and רדה radah, to rule, or ירד jarad, deſcent: otherwiſe, plan of power.

ZEREDA, or Sareda, a city of Ephraim, the place of nativity of Jeroboam, the ſon of Nebat, 1 Kings xi. 26. Perhaps the ſame as Zeradatha, or Zarthan.

ZEREDATHAH, צרדתה. See ZEREDA.

ZEREDATHAH, otherwiſe called Zarthan, a city of Ephraim, in which were caſt the great works of braſs that Hiram made for Solomon's temple, 2 Chron. iv. 17. 1 Kings vii. 46. The waters of Jordan flowed up as high as Zarthan, or Zaretan, when the Hebrews paſſed this river, under Joſhua, Joſh. iii. 16.

ZERESH, זרש, ζωσάρα, a name that is a ſtranger to the holy language. Miſery, ſtranger, ſtrange or diſperſed inheritance: from ירש jaraſh, miſery, or heritage, and זר zer, ſtranger, or diſperſed: otherwiſe, crown of inheritance, or of miſery, from the ſame זר zer, crown, or circle, and ירש jaraſh, inheritance, or miſery.

ZERESH, or Zares, the wife of Haman, who adviſed the deſtruction of Mordecai, Eſth. v. 10, 14.

ZERETH, זרת. See ZUR. Otherwiſe, formed, made; from יצר jatzar.

ZERETH, an Hebrew meaſure; in length half a cubit, or $10\frac{1}{4}$ inches. St. Jerom tranſlates it by Palmus, 1 Sam. xvii. 4. The high-prieſt's breaſt-plate was a Zereth, or half a cubit ſquare, Exod. xxviii. 16. and xxxix. 9. Iſaiah ſeems to ſay, that in reſpect of God the heavens are but a zereth [a SPAN] in length; Iſai. xl. 12. But in this paſſage zereth rather denotes the hand extended.

ZERI, צרי, ſqueeſing, bonds, pains; from צרר tzarar: otherwiſe, roſin, treacle; from צרה tſarah: otherwiſe, ſtone; from צור tſur.

ZERI, or Sori, or Iſri, ſon of Jeduthun. His family was the fourth among the twenty-four families of the Levites, which attended in the temple, 1 Chron. xxv. 3, 11.

ZEROR, צרור, σαρὰρ, boot, or that ſtraitens, that binds, that keeps tight; from צרר tzarar: otherwiſe, a ſtone; from צרור tzeror.

ZERUAH, צרועה, leprous, or waſp, or hornet; from צרע tzerah.

ZERUBBABEL, זרבבל, baniſhed, or a ſtranger at Babylon; from זר zer, a ſtranger, and בבל babel: or diſperſion of confuſion; from זר zar, to diſperſe, and babel, confuſion.

ZERUBBABEL, or Zorobabel, ſon of Salathiel, of the royal race of David. St. Matthew, i. 12. and Chronicles, 1 Chr. iii. 17, 19. make Jeconiah, king of Judah, to be father to Salathiel; but they do not agree as to the father of Zerubbabel. The Chronicles ſay Pedaiah was father of Zerubbabel; but St. Matthew, St. Luke, Eſdras, and Haggai, conſtantly make Salathiel his father. We muſt therefore take the name of ſon in the ſenſe of grandſon, and ſay that Salathiel having educated educated Zerubbabel, he was always afterwards looked upon as his father. Some think that Zerubbabel had alſo the name of Sheſhbazzar, and that he has this name in Ezra, i. 8. See SHESHBAZZAR. Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xi. cap. 4. and the firſt book of Eſdras, deſcribe Zerubbabel as one of the three famous body-guards of Darius, ſon of Hyſtaſpes. In a diſpute, which of four things was moſt powerful, the king, women, wine, or the truth? Zerubbabel maintained it was the truth, and obtained the victory. But this ſtory muſt be regarded as very apocryphal. Zerubbabel returned to Jeruſalem long before the reign of Darius the ſon of Hyſtaſpes. He returned at the beginning of the reign of Cyrus, A. M. 3468, ante A. D. 536, fifteen years before Darius.

Cyrus committed to his care the ſacred veſſels of the temple with which he returned to Jeruſalem, Ezra i. 11. He is always named firſt, as being the chief of the Jews that returned to their own country, Ezra ii. 2. iii. 8. v. 2. He laid the foundations of the temple, Ezra iii. 8, 9. Zech. iv. 9, &c. and reſtored the worſhip of the Lord, and the uſual ſacrifices. When the Samaritans offered to aſſiſt in rebuilding the temple, Zerubbabel and the principal men of Judah refuſed them this honour, ſince Cyrus had granted his commiſſion to the Jews only, Ezra iv. 2, 3.

When this work was diſcontinued, the prophets Haggai and Zechariah encouraged Zerubbabel and the other Jews to reſume the work; which they did, in the ſecond year of Darius, ſon of Hyſtaſpes, A. M. 3485, ante A. D. 519. Hag. i. 1. ii. 3. Zech. iv. 6, 7. Ezra v. 1, 2, 3. When the Lord ſhewed the prophet Zechariah two olive-trees, near the golden candleſtick with ſeven branches, the angel that was ſent to explain this viſion, informed the prophet, that theſe two olive-trees, which ſupplied oil to the great candleſtick, were the prince Zerubbabel, and Joſhua the high-prieſt, ſon of Joſedech. Scripture ſays nothing of the death of Zerubbabel, but it informs us, 1 Chron. iii. 19. that he left ſeven ſons and one daughter. Theſe were, Meſhullam, Hananiah, and Shelomith their ſiſter; Haſhubah, Ohel, Berechiah, Haſadiah, and Juſhab-heſed. St. Matthew, i. 13. makes the name of one of his ſons to be Abiud; and St. Luke, iii. 27. makes it Rheſa. Conſequently, one of the ſons of Zerubbabel above enumerated muſt have had more than one name.

Some would make a diſtinction of two Zerubbabels, the ſecond of which was ſon of Pedaiah, mentioned 1 Chron. iii. 19. But we think it needleſs to have recourſe to this ſolution of the difficulty; and that it is ſufficient to ſay, that Pedaiah was ſon to Salathiel, and father to Zerubbabel; and that Scripture gives generally to Zerubbabel the name of the ſon of Salathiel, only becauſe Salathiel, his grandfather, was the more eminent, and perhaps had adopted and educated him. Vide FRAGMENT, No. 329, &c.

Others, to reconcile the firſt book of Eſdras with ſacred hiſtory, pretend, that Zerubbabel might have dwelt at Jeruſalem ſeventeen years, from the firſt year of Cyrus to the ſecond of Darius, ſon of Hyſtaſpes, and then might return to Babylon, where he was in the office of a guard to Darius. But nothing obliges us to receive as true, the improbable ſtory of Darius's three life-guard men, which evidently includes ſeveral marks of fiction and impoſture.

ZERUIAH, צרויה, σαρβία, or Sarvia, pain, or tribulation, chains of the Lord; from צרר tſarar: otherwiſe, placing; from צורה tſurah: otherwiſe, figure: from צור tzur, and יה jah, the Lord.

ZERUIAH, or Sarvia, ſiſter of David; and mother of Joab, Abiſhai, and Aſahel, 2 Sam. ii. 18. 1 Chron. ii. 16.

ZETHAN, זיתן, olive, or olive-tree; from זית zaith.

IV. ZIA, ſon of Haſupha, of the race of the Nethinim, Ezra ii. 43.

ZIBA, ציבא, army, fight, ſtrength, ſtag; from צבא tzaba.

ZIBA, or Siba, a ſervant to Saul, 2 Sam. ix. 2, 3, &c. King David having reſolved to ſhew kindneſs to ſome deſcendants of Saul, for the ſake of Jonathan, he aſked Ziba, if there was any remaining of his houſe? Ziba mentioned one of Jonathan's ſons, named Mephiboſheth, who was lame, and dwelt at the houſe of Machir, at Lo-debar. David ſent for him, and gave him the privilege of his table all the reſt of his life. He ſaid to Ziba, I have given to Mephiboſheth all that belonged to Saul; therefore make the beſt of his eſtate, that your maſter may have a ſufficient ſubſiſtance. Ziba replied, My Lord, your ſervant will obey your commands; and Mephiboſheth ſhall be ſerved at my table, when he ſhall pleaſe to be there, as one of the king's ſons. Now Ziba had fifteen ſons, and twenty ſervants, who were employed to attend Mephiboſheth, and to make the beſt of his eſtate. But Mephiboſheth ate at the king's table, though he dwelt with Ziba.

Some years after, 2 Sam. xvi. 1, 2, &c. when David was expelled from Jeruſalem by his ſon Abſalom, Ziba went to meet David, with two aſſes loaded with proviſions. The king aſked him, what do you mean by theſe? Ziba anſwered, the aſſes are to mount ſome of the king's officers, and the proviſions are for thoſe that attend you. David then aſked him, Where is Mephiboſheth? Ziba replied, he continues at Jeruſalem, ſaying, the houſe of Iſrael will now reſtore me to the kingdom of my father. The king then ſaid to Ziba, I will give you all that belongs to Mephiboſheth.

After the defeat of Abſalom, Ziba came to meet the king, with his fifteen ſons and twenty ſervants. Mephiboſheth alſo came to meet the king, and in ſuch a plight as ſufficiently ſhewed his trouble for the king's abſence. For from the time of David's flight, he had neither waſhed his feet nor trimmed his beard, nor taken any care of his dreſs. David aſked him, Mephiboſheth, why did you not go with me, but ſtay at Jeruſalem? Mephiboſheth replied, My lord, my ſervant Ziba deceived me: for being, as you know, lame of my feet, I bid him prepare me an aſs, to follow you; but, inſtead of that, he went himſelf, to accuſe me falſly. The king interrupted him, and ſaid, ſay no more: What I have determined ſhall ſtand; you and Ziba divide the eſtate. David did not think proper to make a ſtricter ſcrutiny into this matter, perhaps out of conſideration for Mephiboſheth. For it is hardly to be ſuppoſed that David would have confirmed Ziba in the poſſeſſion of half Saul's eſtate, if he had thought him guilty of calumny, and diſobedience to his maſter. It is therefore believed, that David made up to Mephiboſheth the moiety of his eſtate given to Ziba.

He cut off the whole family of his maſter, not ſparing any of his relations or friends; whereby was fulfilled the word of the Lord, denounced to Baaſha, the father of Elah, by the prophet Jehu. Zimri reigned but ſeven days; for the army of Iſrael, then beſieging Gibbethon, a city of the Philiſtines, made their general Omri king, and came and beſieged Zimri in the city of Tirzah. Zimri, ſeeing the city on the point of being taken, burnt himſelf in the palace, with all its riches.

This cannot be the Zin, or Sennah, of Numbers, or Joſhua; but may it not be that of Ezra? See SIN.

ZINA, זינא, ζιζὰ, Vulgate, Ziza, fornication, proſtitution: from זנה zanah: otherwiſe, according to the Syriac, inn; from זן zun, or from זונה zunah: otherwiſe, arms.

Scripture generally puts mount Zion for the place where the temple of the Lord ſtood; but ſtrictly it ſtood rather on mount Moriah, which was one of the hills of which mount Zion was compoſed, 2 Chr. iii. 1. Mr. Reland pretends, that mount Zion was to the ſouth of Jeruſalem, and not to the north. The reader may ſee his reaſons. Reland Palæſt. tom. ii. p. 847, 848. Vide the MAP of JERUSALEM.

III. ZIPH, a city of Judah, Joſh. xv. 24. St. Jerom ſays, that in his time they ſhewed the village of Ziph, eight miles from Hebron eaſtward. David kept himſelf concealed for ſome time in the wilderneſs of Ziph, 1 Sam. xxiii. 14, 15.

IV. ZIPH. There was another city called Ziph, near Maon and Carmel of Judah, Joſh. xv. 55.

ZIPPORAH, שִׁפּוֹרָה, beauty, trumpet; from שָׁפַר ſhaphar.

ZIPPORAH, or Sephora, daughter of Jethro, and wife of Moſes, and mother of Eliezer and Gerſhom. When Moſes fled from Egypt, Exod. ii. 16, 17, 18, &c. he withdrew into Midian; where, having ſtood up in defence of the daughters of Jethro, prieſt, or prince, of Midian, againſt ſhepherds who would have hindered them from watering their flocks; Jethro took him into his houſe, and gave him his daughter Zipporah in marriage, by whom he had two ſons, Eliezer and Gerſhom.

Several years after, Exod. iv. 20, 21, 22, &c. A. M. 2513, ante A. D. 1491. when Moſes, in obedience to the commands of the Lord, was returning into Egypt, with Zipporah and his two ſons; when they were in an inn, an angel of the Lord was about to put him to death: (it is not clearly expreſſed in the text, whether it was Moſes, or his ſon Eliezer, whom the angel was about to put to death.) Upon which, Zipporah took a ſharp ſtone, and having circumciſed her ſon, ſhe laid hold of the feet of Moſes, ſaying, you are a bloody huſband unto me: after which the angel quitted Moſes, (or Eliezer) and Zipporah, with her two ſons, went back to her father Jethro.

Some time after this, when Moſes had brought the people of Iſrael out of Egypt, to the camp of Sinai, Exod. xviii. 2. A. M. 2514, ante A. D. 1490. Jethro came to meet Moſes, and brought with him Zipporah and her two ſons, whom Moſes received with joy. See JETHRO and MOSES. Scripture tells us no other particulars reſpecting Zipporah; except, that a quarrel aroſe about her, between Moſes, Aaron, and Miriam. Numb. xii. 1, 2, &c. in which Zipporah ſeems not to have been concerned.

The Rabbins tell us, that Jethro at firſt had Moſes clapt into priſon, with intention of ſending him back to Pharoah; but that Zipporah falling in love with Moſes, procured his liberty. Jethro then conſented that Moſes ſhould have Zipporah in marriage, if he could pull up a twig of ſaphir that was planted in his garden. Vide SAPHIR. Moſes did it, inſtantly, and obtained Zipporah for his wife. This twig of ſaphir was, they ſay, inſcribed with the ſacred name Jehovah; and was the ſame that Moſes afterwards uſed as a wand.

The ſame authors tell us, that the murmuring of Aaron and Miriam, above mentioned, was becauſe Moſes had ſeparated himſelf from his wife. Some think, that the wife, who gave occaſion to this murmuring, was not Zipporah the daughter of Jethro, but Tharbis, daughter of the king of Ethiopia, whom Moſes had forſaken. Others will have it, that Aaron and Miriam were uneaſy, becauſe Moſes had married Zipporah, who was a ſtranger, fearing that ſuch an example would be attended with evil conſequences in Iſrael. They called her Cuſhite, or Ethiopian, becauſe Midian was either in the land of Cuſh, or very near it. Habakkuk, iii. 7. ſeems to put Cuſhan, or Cuſh, as ſynonymous to Midian. Others, with more reaſon, are of opinion, that Zipporah herſelf had given occaſion to this quarrel, by valuing herſelf on the favours God vouchſafed to Moſes. The anſwer of Moſes and Miriam ſeems to inſinuate ſomething like this, Hath the Lord indeed ſpoken only by Moſes? Hath he not alſo ſpoken by us?

ZIPHRON, זִפְרוֹן, according to the Hebrew and Syriac, falſeneſs of the ſong, or falſe joy: otherwiſe, whiſtling; from זָפַר zaphar.

ZOAR, Zoara, Segor, or Bela; a city of Pentapolis, on the ſouthern extremity of the Dead-ſea. It was intended, as the other five cities, to be conſumed by fire from heaven; but at the interceſſion of Lot, it was preſerved, Gen. xiv. 2. It was called Bela before; but when Lot deſired of the angel that he might take refuge in it, and often inſiſted on the ſmallneſs of this city, it had the name Zoar, צער tzoar. LXX. Ζώαρα, vel Σηγώρ. which in Hebrew ſignifies ſmall, or little. See BELA. The Romans kept a garriſon at Zoar, or Segor. Hieronym. Onomaſt. in Bala. St. Jerom obſerves, Quæſt. Hebr. in Geneſ. xiv. & xix. 30. that the name of Bela was given to this city, becauſe as ſoon as Lot was gone out of it, it was ſwallowed up by an earthquake. Bela in Hebrew ſignifies to ſwallow up. Theodoret, Queſt. in Gen. mentions the ſame tradition. Jerom alſo tells us, that the Hebrews think Zoar bears alſo the name of Shaliſha, 1 Sam. ix. 4. and that of the heifer of three years old, Vitula conternans, Iſai. xv. 5. They pretend that this city has often been demoliſhed by earthquakes.

ZOBEBAH, צבבה, the army, or the fight is in her; from צבא tzaba: otherwiſe, the tumour, the ſwelling is in her; from צבה tzabah, and the prepoſition ב beth, in, and the pronoun ה a, her.

ZOHELETH. The ſtone of Zoheleth was near the fountain Rogel, or En-rogel, juſt under the walls of Jeruſalem. 1 Kings i. 9. The Rabbins tell us, that this ſtone ſerved as an exerciſe to the young men, who tried their ſtrength by throwing it, or rather rolling it, or lifting it. Others think it was uſeful to the fullers, or whitſters, to beat their cloaths upon, after they had waſhed them. [or both, perhaps.]

ZOHETH, זוחת, to ſeparate, from זחח, zachach: otherwiſe, he that fears, or is bruiſed; from זו zu, this, or that, and חתת chathah, to bruiſe, to aſtoniſh: or, according to the Syriac, that deſcends.

ZOHETH, ſon of Iſhi, of Simeon, 1 Chron. iv. 20.

ZOLEIKA, daughter of Pharaoh, and wife of Potiphar. The irregular paſſion of this woman for Joſeph, is ſufficiently known. Vide JOSEPH.

ZOPHAH, צופה, decree that binds; from צוה tſiva, decree, or precept, and פח pach, bond: otherwiſe, the precept of the blowing; from the ſame tſiva, and פוח puach, to blow. Theſe etymologies are forced, and there is reaſon to believe, that the text is corrupted.

ZOPHAH, or Supha, ſon of Helem, of Aſher. Zophah was the father of Suah, Harnepher, Shual, &c. 1 Chron. vii. 35, 36.

ZOPHAR, or Sophar, the Naamathite, a friend of Job, Job ii. 11. The Seventy call him Sophar, king of the Mineans; the interpreter of Origen makes him king of the Nomades. We cannot tell whether Naamah be the name of his country, or of his father.

ZOPHIM, צופים, thoſe that behold, that attend: from צפה tſaphah, to behold, to attend: otherwiſe, that float, that cover, or honey-comb; from צוף tſuph.

ZOPHIM, or Sophim. This is the plural of Zoph, or Zuph, a deſcendant of Kohath, of the race of the Levites, 1 Chron. vi. 26. The deſcendants of Zoph, i. e. the Zophim, dwelt at Ramath, the country of Samuel; whence it had the name of Ramath of the Zophim; which denomination was extended to all the diſtrict, thence called the land of Zuph, 1 Sam. ix. 5.

ZORAH, צרעה, leproſy, or ſcab; from צרע tſarah.

II. ZORAH, a city of Dan, and the birth-place of Samſon, Judg. xvi. 31. on the frontier of Dan, and of Judah, not far from Eſhtaol. Euſebius, in Sara, & in Sorec, places it ten miles from Eleutheropolis, towards Nicopolis, not far from Kaphar-ſorek. I think the Zorites, 1 Chron. ii. 54. and the Zorathites, 1 Chron. iv. 2. were inhabitants of Zorah.

ZOREAH, or Sarea, a city of Judah, Joſh. xv. 33.

ZORITES, and Zorathites. See ZORAH.

ZOROASTER. I ſhould not ſpeak of this famous man here, had not he been confounded with Abraham; and if Scripture had not mentioned, tioned the Chamanim, or temples conſecrated to fire; which was the principal object of worſhip among the diſciples of Zoroaſter.

The learned are much divided as to the time of Zoroaſter. The Orientals generally call him Zerdaſht, or Zaradaſht, or Zerdouſt. The Book of the Philoſopher Giamaſb, D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 930. ſays, that in the year 1300 after the deluge, Zoroaſter began to appear, and to inſtruct men in the worſhip and adoration of fire. That after his death, Kiſtab, the ſon of Lahoraſh, who reigned in Perſia, embraced his religion, and continued firmly attached to it.

Under the reign of this prince lived the great philoſopher Giamaſb, ſurnamed the Magian, who in his book of the great conjunctions, ſays, that during the great conjunction of the planets, 1300 years after the deluge, in the month Schebat, under the reign of Feridoun, king of Perſia, of the firſt dynaſty; God ſent the prophet Zerdaſche, or Zoroaſter.

He ſays a little farther; after Zoroaſter, and ſince the building of the Pyræa, or fire temples, happened the ſecond conjunction, called a very great one, and then came out of the mountains of the third climate a perſon named The Maſter of the Virgin, (meaning Moſes) who founded another religion differing from that of Zoroaſter. This is the oldeſt account we have of Zoroaſter. The book of Giamaſb is not ſuppoſititious, no more than another aſcribed to Zoroaſter himſelf, which bears the name of Keſab-al-Kenarat. This obſerves, as well as the firſt, that the maſter of the virgin, (or Moſes) appeared under the ſecond great conjunction of the planets; and they agree in this with the ſentiments of the ancient Perſians, who all contend that Zoroaſter was more ancient than Moſes.

Upon this ſuppoſition, Zoroaſter muſt have appeared thirteen hundred years after the deluge; i. e. according to our chronology, A. M. 2956, ante A. D. 1048. conſequently, a great while AFTER Moſes, who came out of Egypt A. M. 2513, ante A. D. 1491. Thus the chronology of the Perſians muſt be erroneous, who will have Zoroaſter to be much more ancient than Moſes, and yet place him 1300 years after the deluge. It muſt therefore be admitted, that he did not begin to appear till the reign of David over Iſrael.

The Magians of Perſia, D'Herbelot. p. 931. to procure the greater authority to their doctrine, maintain that their maſter Zoroaſter is the ſame as the patriarch Abraham; who having been caſt into a burning furnace by the order of Nimrod, was miraculouſly delivered from thence. The ſight of this miracle converted a great number of perſons, and drew after Abraham, (whom now they called Abraham Zerdaſcht, i. e. Abraham a Friend of Fire) an infinite number of followers, who were eaſily perſuaded by him to pay their adoration to fire. It was, therefore, in Meſopotamia and Chaldea, that the firſt Pyræa, or temples of fire, were ſet up.

But this opinion is ſtill leſs ſupportable than the former, on many accounts. Firſt, from chronology: Nimrod was born ſoon after the deluge; for the Scripture repreſents him as building cities, and founding a great monarchy, quickly after the raiſing of the tower of Babel. Therefore, if we place his birth about A. M. 1660, four or five years after the deluge, he muſt be 423 years old at the time when Abraham came out of the city of Ur, to go into the land of Canaan; but it would be a rare example of longevity, to find any born after the deluge arrive to ſuch an age.

But, if we grant that Nimrod might have known and perſecuted Abraham; what proof is there that he ordered him to be caſt into the fire, and that he came out ſafe and ſound? It is true, the Jews and Orientals affirm this; but on what foundation?—becauſe Scripture ſays, he came out of Ur: Ur is the Hebrew word for fire,—therefore he came out of a fiery furnace. Would Moſes have related a fact of ſuch conſequence in ſo ſlight and ſuperficial a manner? The very way in which he relates this, does it not prove that Ur denotes a city? Gen. xi. 28, 31. And Haran died before his father Terah, in the land of his nativity, in Ur of the Chaldees. And afterwards, And Terah took Abram his ſon, and Lot the ſon of Haran, his ſon's ſon, and Sarai his daughter-in-law, his ſon Abram's wife; and they went forth with them from Ur of the Chaldees, to go into the land of Canaan. And Gen. xv. 7. I am the Lord that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees. Do not all theſe paſſages concur to prove, that Ur is the name of a city; for who ever ſuppoſed, that Terah, Abram, Lot, and Sarai were all thrown into a fire by the Chaldeans? Indeed St. Jerom has tranſlated Nehemiah ix. 7. by, Thou broughteſt Abram forth out of the fire of the Chaldees, becauſe he thought proper to render Ur in a literal manner: but in his Hebrew Queſtions he treats all that as a fable, which the Jews had advanced of Abraham's being delivered out of the fire.

It would be doing an injury to religion, and to the piety of Abraham, to imagine, that he could have eſtabliſhed, or promoted, the worſhip of fire. It does not appear from his hiſtory, in Geneſis, Geneſis, that he ever paid any particular honour to this element, or recommended to his children any devotion towards it. The ancient Iſraelites always had this worſhip in abhorrence, as well as the worſhip of other creatures.

Other Oriental authors, D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 931. make Zoroaſter to have lived long after Abraham. Kendomir, in the Life of Kiſchſtab, ſon of Lahoraſb, ſays, that Zoroaſter having learned by the rules of aſtrology, that a great prophet was to be born; would perſuade the world that he himſelf was that prophet. To ſucceed in this he often raiſed the devil, who appeared to him in the midſt of fire, and communicated a kind of luminous brightneſs to him. This ſplendor in which he appeared from time to time, and the boldneſs with which he affirmed himſelf to be a meſſenger from God, procured him credit. He compoſed a book called Zend, which contained his doctrine, and what the devil had inſtructed him in, out of the fire, being transformed into an angel of light. The ſame author ſays, that thoſe who will not allow Zoroaſter to be ſo old as this, will have him to have learned out of the books of the Hebrews, that after Moſes there was to come another great prophet, deſcribed by Balaam under the image of a ſtar, and a light; and that he undertook to paſs himſelf upon the world as this light.

The Tarik Montekeb teaches, that Zoroaſter was a diſciple of the prophets Elijah and Eliſha, and of the Rechabites, from whom he learned the ſecret of the prophecies of the Jews; but, corrupting them by a mixture of his own particular fancies, he compoſed from thence his Book of Life. He was the firſt, ſays the ſame author, who ſtarted the doctrine of two principles of good and evil; and that the name of Megiouſch, or Magians, given to his diſciples, is a word corrupted from the Perſian Meikouſch, which ſignifies bitter-ſweet, becauſe of his two oppoſite principles of good and evil.

According to the two Perſian authors before quoted, Zoroaſter was cotemporary with Kiſchtaſb, ſon of Lahoraſb, the fifth king of Perſia of the dynaſty of the Caianians; this prince eſpouſed the doctrine of this impoſtor, cauſed it to be embraced by all his ſubjects, and built Pyræa throughout Perſia. But king Kiſchtaſb is the ſame as Hyſtaſpes, or Darius, ſon of Hyſtaſpes, of the Greeks, and, conſequently, Zoroaſter could not live till after the captivity of Babylon. Others make him cotemporary with Jeremiah, Daniel, and Ezra, and his father Lahoraſb cotemporary with Nebuchadnezzar and Belſhazzar. This brings down Zoroaſter very much below the time of Abraham.

The Oriental Chriſtians, apud Abulpharag. 5 Dynaſtic. make Zoroaſter to have been cotemporary with Cambyſes. Some of them make him a native of Media, and others of Aſſyria, and will have him to have been a diſciple of Elijah, probably becauſe this prophet was taken up in a fiery chariot, and made fire to deſcend on thoſe who were ſent to apprehend him, and again, on the victims offered to the Lord on mount Carmel. Moreover, it is ſaid by Abulfarage, that Zoroaſter foretold to his followers the coming of the Meſſiah, informed them that a new ſtar ſhould appear at his birth; that this Meſſiah was to be born of a virgin, and that they ſhould have early information of it, when they ſhould not fail to go to offer him their preſents. To this the Magi were obedient, who went to worſhip Jeſus Chriſt at Bethlehem. The anachroniſm is very apparent, that makes Zoroaſter to have lived at the ſame time as Cambyſes and Elijah, who lived at periods very diſtant from each other. Cambyſes died A. M. 3483, and Elijah was taken away about A. M. 3108.

Ebn-Batrick, otherwiſe Eutychius, patriarch of Alexandria, thinks that Zoroaſter was cotemporary with Smerdis, the ſucceſſor of Cambyſes, predeceſſor to Darius, ſon of Hyſtapſes, and that he lived under Thamurah, king of Perſia, of the firſt dynaſty of the Piſchdadians. The author of Tarik Montekeb ſeems to think that Zoroaſter was the ſame as Smerdis now mentioned, and chief of the ſect of the Guebres, whom the Magians placed on the throne. For the Perſian name of Mi-khouſch, which is an abridgment of Mickgouſch, very well deſcribes the ſtate of Smerdis, who had his ears cut off.

Ben-ſchunah pretends, that Zoroaſter was a diſciple of Eſdras, and that this prophet curſed him, becauſed he maintained opinions contrary to Judaiſm. That to puniſh him for his impiety, God ſtruck him with a leproſy, as he had done Gehazi: and that on this account being drove away from Jeruſalem, he withdrew into Perſia, where he became the head of a new religion. The Perſians were then Zabians; he taught them the worſhip of fire, and made a mixture of Zabiiſm and Magiſm, of which he was the inventor. Hence it is, that many confound the Zabians with the Magians.

Other Perſian authors ſay, that Zoroaſter was among thoſe who undertook to build the tower of Babel. Others confound him with Dohac, one of the kings of Perſia of the firſt dynaſty of the Piſchdadians; others make him to deſcend from from Manougeher, king of Perſia, of the ſame dynaſty; ſo little are the Perſians agreed about the age of this their famous prophet.

Many authors, both ancient and modern, among the Orientals, will have Zoroaſter to have been, not the inventor, but the reformer of Magiſm. And indeed we read in the hiſtories of the moſt ancient kings of Perſia, that the worſhip of fire had commenced even from the times of Cavimarrath [Caimuras?] founder of this great monarchy of the Perſians, according to the Orientals, or, rather, of the Aſſyrians, according to the Greeks and Latins. But, according to them, this was the original of their worſhip: Caiumarrath having loſt his ſon Siamek, who was aſſaſſinated by robbers, he cauſed a great funeral pile to be erected and burnt on the place where he was buried. His ſubjects, in emulation, lighted up alſo great fires through all Perſia, to ſhew their concern for the loſs of this young prince. Theſe fires by degrees became the object of their worſhip, and the foundation of their religion.

Let us now come to Greek authors. Eudoxus, apud Plin. lib. xxx. cap. 1. places Zoroaſter ſix thouſand years before the death of Plato. Ariſtotle does the ſame. Hermodorus, apud Diogen. Laert. in Proem. Hermippus, apud Plin. lib. xxx. cap. 1. and Plutarch, de Iſide & Oſiride, will have him to have lived five thouſand years before the Trojan war. But Xanthus the Lydian, Diogen. Laert. in Proem. and another anonymous author, followed by Suidas, in voce Ζοροάστης, are contented to place him, one of them five hundred years before the ſiege of Troy, and the other ſix hundred before the expedition of Cyrus againſt Greece. This laſt opinion is that of Xanthus the Lydian, whom Suidas ſuppoſes to have lived under the reign of Darius the ſon of Hyſtaſpes, and whoſe teſtimony would be much more weighty than it is, if we were ſure, that the writings which went under his name were really his. But Athenæus, lib. xii. acquaints us, that the works which bear his name were compoſed by a Greek called Dionyſius Scythobrachion, who lived a little before Julius Cæſar.

Juſtin ſays, lib. i. cap. 1. that Zoroaſter was king of Bactriana, and cotemporary with Ninus, king of Aſſyria; that he invented the magical art, and was very ſkilful in aſtronomy, and in the knowledge of antiquity; that Ninus made war upon him, conquered and killed him. Pliny, lib. xxx. cap. 1. acknowledges two Zoroaſters: one very ancient, who lived, as he ſays, ſeveral thouſand years before the magical ſects of Moſes, of Jamnes, and of Jotapus. This Zoroaſter was of Perſia, and is ſuppoſed to be the moſt ancient inventor of magic. The other was of Proconeſſus, and lived but a little before Oſtanes, who followed erxes in his expedition againſt Greece. It is plainly impoſſible to reconcile, either the Oriental authors with each other, or the Greek and Latin authors among themſelves, or with the Orientals; not even by admitting two Zoroaſters, or as many as you pleaſe.

John Caſſian, Petrus Comeſtor, the ſpurious Beroſus, father Kircher, father Scipio Sgambati, and ſome others, have thought that Ham was the ſame as Zoroaſter, the inventor of magic. The author of the Recognitions under the name of St. Clement, thinks him to have been Mizraim, the ſon of Ham. The author of the Paſchal Chronicle has followed this opinion. Gregory of Tours has confounded Zoroaſter with Cuſh, the ſon of Ham. He who has given us the pretended writings of St. Clement confounds him with Nimrod; Franciſcus Patricius with Japheth. The goſpel of the Infancy of Jeſus Chriſt informs us, that the Magi who came to worſhip Chriſt at Bethlehem, had notice of his birth from their maſter Zoroaſter. And George Hornius has pretended that Zoroaſter was the ſame as Balaam, mentioned by Moſes. It muſt be owned as very difficult to make a judicious and ſecure choice among this variety of opinions; to reconcile them would be impoſſible. The greateſt proof of uncertainty in hiſtorical facts, is diverſity of opinions, which cannot be greater in any thing than in the ſubject before us.

If we ſhould endeavour to trace the original of fire-worſhip, we ſhould ſoon find ourſelves ſurrounded by new perplexities. For Moſes, according to the ſentiments of ſeveral learned men, has ſpoke of the Pyræa, in Levit. xxvi. 30. חמנים, under the word chamanim. Iſaiah, xxvii. 9. uſes the ſame word chamanim; he likewiſe threatens the infidel Jews to overthrow their groves, and their chamanim. Vide CHAMANIM.

Some are of opinion, that the chamanim of 2 Kings xxiii. 5. in Hoſea x. 5. and in Zephaniah i. 4. כמרים camarim, are prieſts of the Magi, who kept up the ſacred fire in the Pyræa. The word chamanim ſignifies black or ſooty. King Joſiah, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 4. deſtroyed the altars of Baal, and overturned the chamanim, which were above, or over them. Vide CHAMARIM.

Some think that the perpetual fire which Moſes ordered to be kept up on the altar of the Lord, Levit. vi. 9, 12. was an imitation of the fire of the Magi, and a condeſcenſion of Moſes to the weakneſs of the Hebrews, who had been long accuſtomed to thoſe fires kept up in the temples of of the Pagans. Theophraſtus, apud Euſeb. Præpar. lib. i. cap. 9. puts the cuſtom of keeping a continual fire in the temples, among the moſt ancient practices of religion. Ammianus Marcellinus, lib. xxiii. ſays, that the Magi pretended the fire of their temples deſcended from heaven. They always carried fire before the kings of Perſia. It cannot be ſaid that Zoroaſter and the Magians had borrowed this from the Jews, ſince Moſes ſo early mentioned the chamanim.

If therefore Zoroaſter be the firſt author of the worſhip of fire, he muſt be acknowledged as more ancient than Moſes. If he be only the reformer or reſtorer of it, he may be placed ſome time after Cyrus; and if there have been ſeveral men under the name Zoroaſter, this will allow a greater ſcope for a variety of opinions concerning his perſon. But it ſeems plain to us, that the Zoroaſter who appeared in Aſia a little after Cyrus, and who formed the religion of the Magi, was a mere Pagan; that he paid an impious worſhip to the heavenly bodies, to fire, and to the two principles, one of which was ſubordinate to the other; and that this ancient religion was very different from that of the modern Guebres, or Gaures, who call themſelves diſciples of Zoroaſter, and who worſhip fire; but with the ancient religion of their maſter they have mingled other opinions, taken from the Jews and Chriſtians.

Dr. Hyde, who had ſtudied the old religion of the Perſians, pretends that Zoroaſter was the greateſt impoſtor that ever appeared, except Mahomet. This laſt was utterly ignorant, and could neither write nor read; whereas Zoroaſter, according to him, was verſed in all the ſciences of the Orientals, and eſpecially in the religion of the Jews, and in the books of the Old Teſtament, which makes him think he was originally a Jew, and born in the Holy Land. He imagines him to have been a diſciple of the prophet Daniel, and that he reſolved alſo to raiſe himſelf up into a prophet, and to endeavour by that to arrive at the ſame good fortune. He did not found any new religion; he only undertook to reform that of the Magians, which for ſeveral ages had been the prevailing religion of the Medes and Perſians.

But it appears that Dr. Hyde had been pre-poſſeſſed in favour of the diſciples of Zoroaſter; and had not enough diſtinguiſhed between the creed of the ancient Magians, and that of the modern Guebres, or Gaures. He pretends, that the old Perſians had juſt notions of the deity, and that they admitted but of one God; that indeed they received two principles, but one of them was uncreated, and the other created: that the worſhip they paid to the ſun was merely civil. But the ancient authors who have ſpoken of the religion of the Perſians, are unanimouſly agreed, that they adored the ſun and fire, under the name of Mithras.

The Guebres hold, for example, that there is a ſovereign, independent being; ſelf-exiſtent from all eternity. That under this being there are two angels, one of light, the author of good, and the other of darkneſs, the author of evil. That theſe two angels have formed all things that exiſt, from a mixture of light and darkneſs. Anciently, the Magians built their temples uncovered, on the tops of mountains, and other eminences, in the open air, which they conſecrated to fire. But as their ſacred fire was often extinguiſhed by rain, ſtorms, and tempeſts, they built temples over theſe altars. Before and around theſe fires they exerciſed their acts of religion. The ancients are univerſally agreed, that they paid them the higheſt degree of adoration: but thoſe of the preſent day conſtantly deny that they worſhip the fire, but God only, under the ſymbol of fire. They always approach theſe fires on the weſtern ſide, ſo that they have their faces turned towards the ſunriſing and the fire.

The prophet Iſaiah, xlv. 5, 6, 7. ſeems to have had in view the error of the Magi concerning the two principles, when he ſays, I am the Lord, and there is none elſe; there is no God beſides me. I girded thee, though thou haſt not known me. That they may know, from the riſing of the ſun, and from the weſt, that there is none beſides me; I am the Lord, and there is none elſe. I form the light, and create darkneſs; I make peace, and create evil. I, the Lord, do all theſe things. The God of Iſrael addreſſes theſe words to Cyrus, king of Perſia. Ezekiel, viii. 16. ſpeaking of theſe idolaters, ſays, At the door of the temple of the Lord, between the porch and the altar, were about five-and-twenty men, with their backs towards the temple of the Lord, and their faces towards the eaſt; and they worſhipped the ſun towards the eaſt. This is a manifeſt alluſion to the worſhip of the Magians, the diſciples of Zoroaſter.

This impoſtor feigned, that he had brought a ſacred fire from heaven, and had depoſited it on the altar of the firſt temple that he cauſed to be built in the city of Xiz, in Media, from whence it was propagated into all the other temples which obſerved the rites of the Magians. And ſuch was the reſpect of the prieſts for this pretended ſacred fire, that they watched it night and day, to keep it in, and never blowed it, either with their mouth, or with bellows, for fear of profaning it, on pain of death. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXXVIII. and Plate. They carried this ſuperſtition ſo far, that the prieſts could not approach this fire, without a linen cloth before their mouths, leſt their breath ſhould pollute it. Hence alſo, when they performed their ceremonies, they rather muttered between their teeth, than pronounced their prayers in an intelligible and articulate manner.

From Media, Zoroaſter paſſed into Bactriana, where he fixed his abode in the city of Balch; from thence he proceeded into the Indies, and became ſkilful in the ſciences ſtudied there. He returned to Balch, which lies upon the river Oxus, on the confines of Perſia, the Indies, and Cowareſman, where he built the chief of his temples, and ordered all his followers to make their pilgrimages. But after Perſia was ravaged by the Mahometans in the ſeventh century, the Archimagus fixed his reſidence at Kerman; and the temple of this place is not in leſs repute than that of Balch was formerly.

The Magians have at this day a book, which they pretend was compoſed by Zoroaſter, in a cave whither he retired; it was wrote in twelve volumes, each of which contained an hundred ſkins of vellum. This book is called Zendaveſta; by contraction Zend. This word literally ſignifies light-fire, and might with us ſtand for a tinder-box. The firſt part of this book contains their liturgy, which they now uſe in their temples. The reſt treats of other matters of their religion. The Magians have the ſame reſpect for this book as we have for our bible: it is wrote in old language, and in the old Perſian or Chaldee characters. Dr. Hyde offered to publiſh this work, with a Latin tranſlation, if he could have been aſſiſted in defraying the expences of his edition. But for want of this aſſiſtance, his project was never put in execution.

In this book we find many things taken out of the Old Teſtament; and a great part of the Pſalms of David. Zoroaſter names Adam and Eve as the firſt of mankind. He gives the hiſtory of the creation, very like that of Moſes, but whereas Moſes ſays that God created the world in ſix days, Zoroaſter will have it to have been created at ſix different times, each made up of a certain number of days, which in all amount to three hundred and ſixty-five days, i. e. a year. He alſo ſpeaks of Abraham, of Joſeph, of Moſes, and of Solomon, in the ſame manner as Scripture. He calls his book the book of Abraham, and his religion the religion of Abraham. He gives the the ſame laws as Moſes, concerning clean and unclean animals; the payment of tythes to the prieſts; the care neceſſary to avoid all kinds of pollution, both internal and external; the manner of being purified after them; the continuation of the prieſthood in the ſame tribe; the ordination of an high-prieſt. The reſt of this book contains the hiſtory of the life and prophecies of the author; and exhortations to virtue. His morality is pure, excepting that he looks on inceſt as indifferent.

All theſe marks prove inconteſtably, that Zoroaſter was after Moſes; and other particulars, which the Guebres relate of the author of their ſect, taken from the hiſtory of Jeſus Chriſt, prove that they have mingled their old ſuperſtitions with ſome truths of the Chriſtian religion; and with ſome Chriſtian uſages, which, however, they have altered and corrupted in ſeveral manners. They ſay, for example, that the mother of the prophet, their maſter, found herſelf with child after a viſit ſhe had received from an angel; that the aſtrologers knew by their art, that the ſon ſhe ſhould bring into the world would be a prophet, who would form a new ſect. They gave notice of it to Neubrom, or Nimrod, who then reigned. This prince gave orders, that all the women with child in his empire ſhould be put to death. This order was executed; but the pregnancy of the prophet's mother not being diſcovered, ſhe was ſaved. The child was happily brought into the world, and was called Ebrahim-Zer-Atcuſcht. The king being informed of his birth, had him brought into his preſence, and drawing his ſabre, intended to kill him with his own hand; but his arm was inſtantly dried up, and withered. He cauſed a great fire to be lighted, and had the infant thrown into it: but it repoſed there, as if on a bed of roſes. After ſeveral other miracles, the prophet diſappeared, and was taken up, according to ſome, both body and ſoul, into heaven; according to others, he was laid on an iron couch, and carried away by angels.

After that Ebraim-Zer-Atcuſcht was entered into paradiſe, God ſent to his diſciples, by his means, ſeven books, which contained the true religion; after them, ſeven others, of the explication of dreams; then ſeven others, of phyſic. When Alexander became maſter of the Eaſt, he had the ſeven firſt burnt, becauſe no body underſtood the the language in which they were written, and kept the other fourteen for his own uſe. After the death of this conqueror, the Gaures reſtored, as far as their memories enabled them, the ſeven books that had been burnt, and made them into one large volume, which they ſtill preſerve; though they do not underſtand the language of it, nor even the character; which is different from the Arabic, the Perſian, or the Indian. This is what we are told of it by certain modern travellers, who were not ſo well informed concerning the character and language of the books of Zoroaſter, as the authors we have quoted before.

The Guebres, or Gaures, have ſtill a reſpect for fire; they ſtill keep it with great care, and diſtribute it every month among their ſect. They call it heavenly fire, and ſwear by this element, but they do not worſhip it. They acknowledge only one God, the creator of heaven and earth. They waſh their children, after their birth, with warm water; while the Magus, or Gazi, repeats a prayer. When they are married, a Gazi rubs the foreheads of the married couple with a certain water, over which the Gazi has ſaid prayers. They believe the general reſurrection, and think that before that time all nations will unite into one religion; which will be that of their prophet. Every Gaur may have five wives; but one of theſe has the ſuperiority over the reſt.

The greater part of thoſe who have written about Pythagoras, will have him to have been a diſciple of Zoroaſter at Babylon; and that he derived from him that great knowledge which afterwards made him ſo famous in the Weſt. This is what is ſaid by Apuleius, Florid. 2. Jamblicus, vita Pythagor. cap. 4. Porphyry, vita Pythagor. and Clemens Alexandrianus, Strom. 1. The Zabratus, or Zaratus, of Porphyry, and the Nazaratus of Clemens, are Zoroaſter. When Cambyſes conquered Egypt, he there found Pythagoras travelling; he took him priſoner, and, with other captives, ſent him to Babylon. There he became acquainted with Zoroaſter, or Zabratus, who was there at that time. Porphyr. vita Pythag. p. 185. Edit. Cantabrig. Zabratus purified him from all the defilements of his former life, inſtructed him in ſuch things as a virtuous man ſhould be poſſeſſed of; taught him the ſecrets of nature, and the principles of the univerſe. The reader may ſee, under the article of EZEKIEL, that ſome have thought Pythagoras was acquainted with this prophet, and that it was he whom the ancients intended by the name of Nazaratus, or Zaratus.

I. ZUR, or Sur, a prince of Midian, father of Cozbi, who, with Zimri, was killed by Phinehas, Numb. xxv. 15. Zur was put to death with the other princes of Midian, Numb. xxxi. 8.

II. ZUR, ſon of Jehiel and Maachah, of Benjamin, inhabitants of the city of Gibeon, 1 Chron. xi. 36. viii. 30.

ZURIEL, צוריאל, ſtone, ſtrength, rock of God, or God is my ſtrength; from צור tzur, and אל el, God.

ZURIEL, the name of an angel, known only in the books of the Jews, and in the apocryphal writings. The Hebrews ſay, he is one of thoſe who always ſee the face of God, and whom he ſends on his moſt important meſſages. I imagine Zuriel, or Suriel, to be the ſame as Uriel. See URIEL.

II. ZURIEL, ſon of Abihail, chief of the families of the Mahlites and the Muſhites, Numb. iii. 33, 35.

ZURISHADDAI, צורישדי, the Almighty is my rock, my ſtrength; from צור tſur, and שדי ſhaddai, All mighty.

ZURISHADDAI, or Suriſaddai, father of Shelumiel. This Shelumiel was chief of the tribe of Simeon at the Exodus. Numb. i. 6.

ZUZIM, זוזים, ἔθνη ἰσχυρὰ, poſts of a door; from זז zuz: otherwiſe, ſplendor, beauty; from זז ziz: otherwiſe, revolters, according to the Syriac.

ZUZIM; certain giants who dwelt beyond Jordan, and who were conquered by Chedorlaomer and his allies, A.M. 2079, ante 1225. Gen. xiv. 5. St. Jerom ſays, that the Hebrews read, they they were conquered at Hem: but the preſent Hebrew ſays at Ham. The ſituation of this place is unknown; if it be a place. The Vulgate, and the Septuagint, ſay, they were conquered with the Rephaim in Aſhteroth-Karnaim. The Chaldee and the Septuagint have taken Zuzim in the ſenſe of an appellative, for ſtout and valiant men. We conjecture the Zuzim to be the Zamzummim of Deut. ii. 20. Severus, biſhop of Zuzuma, under the metropolis of Boſtra, occurs among thoſe who ſubſcribed to the firſt council of Nice.

I ſaid, I will water my BEST GARDEN,
And will water abundantly my garden-bed:
And, lo, my brook became a river,
And my river became a ſea.
I will therefore make DOCTRINE to ſhine as the morning,
And will ſend forth her light afar off.
BEHOLD, I HAVE NOT LABOURED FOR MYSELF ONLY,
BUT FOR ALL THEM WHO SEEK WISDOM.

. . . . . .

Bleſſed is he who ſhall be exerciſed in theſe things;
And he who layeth them up in his heart ſhall become wiſe.
The light of the LORD ſhall lead him,
Who giveth wiſdom to the godly.
BLESSED BE THE LORD FOR EVER.
AMEN. AMEN.

THE CALENDAR OF THE JEWS.

THE year of the Hebrews is compoſed of twelve lunar months, of which the firſt has thirty days, and the ſecond twenty-nine; and ſo of the reſt ſucceſſively, and alternately. The year begins in autumn, as to the civil year; and in the ſpring, as to the ſacred year. The Jews had calendars anciently, wherein were noted, all the feaſts, all the faſts, and all the days on which they celebrated the memory of any great events that had happened to the Nation, Zech. viii. 19. Eſth. viii. 6. in Græco. Theſe ancient calendars are ſometimes quoted in the Talmud, Miſna Tract. Taanith. n. 8; but the Rabbins acknowledge that they are not now in being. Vide Maimon. & Bartenora, in eum locum. Thoſe that we have now, whether printed, or in manuſcript, are not very ancient. Vide Genebrar. Bibliot. Rabbinic. p. 319. Buxtorf. Levit. Talmudic. p. 1046. Bartolocci, Bibl. Rabbinic. t. ii. p. 550. Lamy's Introduction to the Scripture; & Plantav. Iſagog. Rabbin. ad finem, vol. iii. That which paſſes for the oldeſt, is Megillath Thaanith, the volume of affliction; which contains the days of feaſting and faſting heretofore in uſe among the Jews; but which are not now obſerved, and are not found now in the common calendars. We ſhall ſet down the chief hiſtorical events, taken as well from this volume Thaanith, as from other calendars.

TIZRI.

The firſt month of the civil year; the ſeventh month of the ſacred year. It has 30 days, and anſwers to the moon of September.

Day 1. NEW-MOON. Beginning of the civil year.

The feaſt of Trumpets. Levit. xxiii. 34. Numb. xxix. 1, 2.

3. Faſt for the death of Gedaliah. 2 Kings, xxv. 25. Jerem. xli. 2.

The ſame day, the abolition of written contracts. The wicked kings having forbid the Iſraelites to pronounce the name of God; when they were reſtored to liberty, the Aſmoneans or Maccabees ordained, that the name of God ſhould be written in contracts after this manner: In ſuch a year of the high-prieſt N, who is the miniſter of the moſt high God, &c. The Judges to whom theſe kinds of writings were preſented, decreed they ſhould be ſatisfied; ſaying, for example, on ſuch a day ſuch a debtor ſhall pay ſuch a ſum, according to his promiſe, after which the ſchedule ſhall be torn. But it was found, that the name of God was taken away out of the writing; and thus the whole became uſeleſs and ineffectual. For which reaſon they aboliſhed all theſe written contracts, and appointed a feſtival-day in memory of it. Megil. Taanith. c. 7.

5. The death of twenty Iſraelites. The Rabbi Akiba, ſon of Joſeph, dies in priſon.

7. A faſt, becauſe of the worſhipping the golden calf, and of the ſentence that God pronounced againſt the Iſraelites, in conſequence of that crime. Exod. xxxii. 6, 7, 8, 34.

10. A faſt of expiation. Levit. xxiii. 19, &c.

15. The feaſt of tabernacles, with its octave. Levit. xxiii. 34.

21. Hoſanna-Rabba. The ſeventh day of the feaſt of tabernacles, or the feaſt of branches.

22. The octave of the feaſt of tabernacles.

23. The rejoicing for the law, a ſolemnity in memory of the covenant that the Lord made with the Hebrews, in giving them the law by the mediation of Moſes.

On this ſame day, the dedication of Solomon's temple, 1 Kings, viii. 65, 66.

30. The firſt new-moon of the month Marchſevan.

N. B. The Jews, for fear of miſtaking, always keep two days for the new-moon.

MARCHSEVAN.

The ſecond month of the civil year; the eighth month of the ſacred year. It has but twenty-nine days, and anſwers to the moon of October.

Day 1. THE ſecond new-moon; or, firſt day of the month.

W. Blackader, Printer, Took's Court, Chancery Lane, London.

6. A faſt, becauſe Nebuchadnezzar put out the eyes of Zedekiah, after he had ſlain his children before his face. 2 Kings, xxv. 7. Jerem. lii. 10.

19. A faſt on Monday and Tueſday, and the Monday following, to expiate the faults committed on occaſion of the feaſt of tabernacles. Vid. Calendar, à Bartoloccio editum.

23. A feaſt, or memorial of the ſtones of the altar, profaned by the Greeks; which were laid in expectation of a prophet, who could declare what uſe they might be applied to. 1 Macc. iv. 46. Megillath. c. 8.

25. A feaſt in memory of ſome places poſſeſſed by the Cuthites; which the Iſraelites recovered at their return from the captivity.

26. A diſpute of Rabbin Jochanan, ſon of Zachai, againſt the Sadducees, who pretended that the loaves of the firſt-fruits, (Levit. xxiii. 17, 18.) were not to be offered on the altar, but to be eaten hot. Megillat. c. 9.

29. Firſt new-moon of the month Ciſleu.

CISLEU.

The third month of the civil year; the ninth month of the ſacred year. It has thirty days; and anſwers to our moon of November.

Day 1. NEW-MOON, or the firſt day of the month.

2. Prayers for rain. Calendar. Bartolocci.

3. A feaſt in memory of the idols which the Aſmoneans threw out of the courts, where the Gentiles had placed them. Megil. Taanith.

6. A faſt in memory of the book of Jeremiah, torn and burnt by Jehoiakim. Jerem. xxxvi. 23.

7. A feaſt in memory of the death of Herod the Great, ſon of Antipater, who was always an enemy to the ſages. Megillat. c. 11.

21. The feaſt of mount Gerizim. The Jews relate that when their high-prieſt Simon, with his prieſts, went out to meet Alexander the Great, the Cutheans or Samaritans went alſo, and deſired this prince to give them the temple of Jeruſalem, and to ſell them a part of mount Moriah. Which requeſt Alexander granted. But the high-prieſt of the Jews afterwards preſenting himſelf, and Alexander aſking him what he deſired? Simon intreated him not to ſuffer the Samaritans to deſtroy the temple. The king replied to him, that he delivered that people into his hands, and he might do what he pleaſed with them. Then the high-prieſt, and inhabitants of Jeruſalem, took the Samaritans, bored a hole through their heels, and tying them to their horſes tails, dragged them along to mount Gerizim, which they plowed and ſowed with tares; juſt as the Samaritans had intended to do to the temple of Jeruſalem. In memory of this event, they inſtituted this feſtival.

25. The dedication, or renewing of the temple, profaned by order of Antiochus Epiphanes, and purified by Judas Maccabeus. 1 Macc. iv. 52. 2 Macc. ii. 16. John x, 22. This feaſt is kept with its octave. Joſephus ſays, that in his time it was called the feaſt of lights; perhaps, ſays he, becauſe this good fortune, of reſtoring the temple to its ancient uſe, appeared to the Jews as a new day. Antiq. l. 12. c. 11. p. 416. But the Jewiſh authors give another reaſon for the name of lights. They tell us, that when they were employed in cleanſing the temple, after it had been profaned by the Greeks, they found there only one ſmall phial of oil, ſealed up by the high-prieſt, and which would hardly ſuffice to keep in the lamps for ſo much as one night; but God permitted that it ſhould laſt for ſeveral days, till they had time to make more: in memory of which, the Jews light up ſeveral lamps in their ſynagogues, and at the doors of their houſes. See Selden, de Syned. l. 3. c. 13. Others will have it, (as the Scholaſtical Hiſtory, Thomas Aquinus, cardinal Hughes, in 1 Macc. iv. 52.) that the appellation of the feaſt of lights, proceeded from hence, that fire from heaven gave light to the wood which was upon the altar of burnt-offerings, as related, 2 Macc. i. 22.

Some will have this feaſt of the dedication to be inſtituted in memory of Judith. Vide Sigon. lib. iii. c. 18. de Republ. Hebr. But it is doubted whether it ought to be underſtood of Judith, the daughter of Merari, who killed Holofernes; or of another Judith, daughter of Mattathias, and ſiſter of Judas Maccabeus, who ſlew Nicanor, as they tell us. Vide Ganz, Zemach David. Millenar. 4. an. 622. & apud Selden. de Synedriis, lib. iii. c. 13. n. 11. This laſt Judith is known only in the writings of the Rabbins, and is not mentioned either in Maccabees, or in Joſephus. But there is great likelihood that the Jews have altered the Greek hiſtory of Judith, to place it in the time of Judas Maccabeus.

A prayer for rain. Then began their time of ſowing in Judea.

30. Firſt new-moon of the month Tebeth.

TEBETH.

The fourth month of the civil; the tenth month of the eccleſiaſtical year. It has twenty-nine days, and anſwers to the moon of December.

4. or 5. A faſt in memory of the death of the elders, who ſucceeded Joſhua. Judg. ii. 10.

15. The beginning of the year of trees, i. e. they then begin to count the four years, during which the trees were judged unclean, from the time of their planting. Levit. xix. 23, 24, 25. Some place the beginning of theſe four years on the firſt day of the month.

22. A feaſt in memory of the death of one called Niſkalenus, who had ordered the placing images or figures in the temple, which was forbid by the law: but he died, and his orders were not executed. The Jews place this under the high-prieſt Simon the Juſt. Is not known who this Niſkalenus was. Megill. c. 11.

23. A faſt for the war of the ten tribes againſt that of Benjamin. Judg. xx.

They alſo call to remembrance the idol of Micah. Judg. xviii.

12. A feaſt in memory of the death of two proſelytes, Hollianus and Pipus his brother, that one Tyrinus or Turianus would have compelled to break the law, in the city of Laodicea; but they choſe rather to die, than to do any thing contrary to the law. Selden de Synedr. l. 3. c. 13. ex Megill. Taanith.

13. Eſther's faſt; probably in memory of that, Eſth. iv. 16. Geneb. Bartolocci.

A feaſt in memory of the death of Nicanor, an enemy of the Jews. 1 Macc. vii. 44. 2 Macc. xv. 30, &c. Some of the Hebrews will have it, that Nicanor was killed by Judith, the ſiſter of Judas Maccabeus.

14. The firſt Purim, or leſſer feaſt of lots. Eſth. ix. 21. The Jews in the provinces ceaſed from the ſlaughter of their enemies on Niſan 14. and on that day made great rejoicing. But the Jews of Shuſhan continued the ſlaughter till the 15th. Therefore Mordecai ſettled the feaſt of lots on the 14th, and 15th, of this month.

15. The great feaſt of Purim, or lots; or the ſecond Purim. Theſe three days, the 13th, 14th, and 15th, are commonly called the days of Mordecai, though the feaſt for the death of Nicanor has no relation either to Eſther, or to Mordecai.

The collectors of the half-ſhekel, paid by every Iſraelite, Exod. xxx. 13. received it on Adar 15, in the cities; and on the 25th in the temple. Talmud. Tract. Shekalim.

17. The deliverance of the ſages of Iſrael, who flying from the perſecution of Alexander Janneus, king of the Jews, retired into the city of Koſlik in Arabia; but finding themſelves in danger of being ſacrificed by the Gentiles, who were the inhabitants of the place, eſcaped by night. Megillat Taanith.

20. A feaſt in memory of the rain obtained from God, by one called Onias Hammagel, during a great drought in the time of Alexander Janneus. Megillat Taanith.

23. The dedication of the temple of Zerubbabel, Ezr. vi. 16. The day is not known. Some put it on the 16th, the calendar of Sigonius puts it on the 23d.

29. Firſt new-moon of the month Niſan.

On this day every one provided himſelf a lamb or a kid, to celebrate the following paſſover.

14. On the evening of the 14th they killed the paſchal lamb; they began to uſe leavened bread, and ceaſed from all ſervile labour.

15. The ſolemnity of the paſſover, with its octave. The firſt day of unleavened bread; a day of reſt. They ate none but unleavened bread during eight days.

16. On the ſecond day of the feaſt they offered the barley which they had provided the evening before, as the firſt fruits of the harveſt. After that time it was allowed to put the ſickle to the corn.

A feaſt in memory of the puniſhment inflicted on the wicked Iſraelites, whoſe inſolence could not be otherwiſe reſtrained, than by putting them to death; for then Judea was in the poſſeſſion of the Gentiles. They allowed theſe wicked Iſraelites three days to reform; but as they ſhewed no tokens of repentance, they were condemned to death. Megillat Taanith.

This

Year of the World.		Year before Chriſt.
2513	This ſame night the Iſraelites celebrated the firſt paſſover; and Pharaoh expelled them from Egypt.	1487
	Iſrael departs from Rameſes: from thence to Succoth; from Succoth to Etham: From Etham they turned ſouth, and encamped at Pi-hahiroth, between Migdol and the ſea, over againſt Baal-zephon.
	Pharaoh purſues Iſrael with his army, and overtakes them at Pi-hahiroth: God gives the Hebrews a pillar of cloud, to guide and protect them. The waters divided. Iſrael goes through on dry ground. The Egyptians drowned; 21ſt of the firſt month.
	Moſes, having paſſed the ſea, is now in the wilderneſs of Etham; after marching three days in the deſart, Iſrael arrives at Marah, where Moſes ſweetens the water. From Marah they come to Elim. From Elim to the Red-Sea; then into the deſart of Sin, where God ſends Manna: from thence to Dophcah, Aluſh, and Rephidim, where Moſes gives them water from a rock.
	About this place the Amalekites ſlay thoſe who could not keep up with the body of Iſrael. Moſes ſends Joſhua againſt them; while he himſelf goes to a mountain, and lifts up his hands in prayer.
	On the third day of the third month, after their departure from Egypt, Iſrael comes to the foot of mount Sinai; where they encamped above a year.
	Moſes goes up the mountain; God offers a covenant to Iſrael.
	Moſes comes down from the mountain, and reports to the people what the Lord had propoſed. The people anſwer, that they were ready to enter into this covenant.
	Moſes again aſcends the mountain, and God orders him to bid the people prepare themſelves for two days to receive his law.
	On the third day the glory of God appears on the mountain; with the ſound of a trumpet, and of thunder. Moſes brings the people to the foot of mount Sinai; he alone goes up the mountain. God directs him to forbid the people to aſcend, leſt they ſhould be put to death. Moſes goes down and declares to the people the orders of God. He then aſcends again, and God gives him the Decalogue.
	He comes down again, and propoſes to the people what he had received from the Lord. The people conſent, and covenant with the Lord on the terms propoſed.
	Moſes goes again up the mountain; God gives him ſeveral judiciary precepts of civil polity. At his return he erects twelve altars at the foot of the mountain, cauſes victims to be ſacrificed to ratify the covenant, and ſprinkles with the blood of the ſacrifices the book that contained the conditions of the covenant. He alſo ſprinkles the people, who promiſe to be faithful to the Lord.
	Moſes, Aaron, Nadab, Abihu, and ſeventy elders of Iſrael, go up the mountain, and ſee the glory of the Lord. They come down the ſame day; but Moſes, and his ſervant Joſhua, ſtay there ſix days longer. The ſeventh day the Lord calls Moſes, and during forty days ſhews him all that concerned his tabernacle, the ceremonies of ſacrifice, and other things.
	After theſe forty days, God gives Moſes the Decalogue, written on two tables of ſtone; and bids him make haſte down, becauſe Iſrael had made a golden calf, and was worſhipping it.
	Moſes comes down, and finding the people dancing about their golden calf, he throws the tables of ſtone on the ground and breaks them. Coming into the camp, he takes the calf and deſtroys it; ſlays by the ſword of the Levites, twenty-three thouſand Iſraelites, who had worſhipped this idol.
	The day following Moſes again goes up the mountain, and by his intreaties, obtains from God, that he would pardon his people. God orders him to prepare new tables for the law; and promiſes not to forſake Iſrael.
	Moſes comes down and prepares new tables; goes up again the day following, God ſhews him his glory. He continues again forty days and forty nights on the mountain, and God writes again his law upon the tables of ſtone.
	After forty days he comes down, not knowing that his face ſhines with glory. He puts a veil over his face, ſpeaks to the people, and propoſes to erect a tabernacle to the Lord; to accompliſh this, he taxes each Iſraelite, at half a ſhekel. This occaſions a numbering of the people, who amount to 603550 men. He appoints Bezaleel and Aholiab to overſee the work of the tabernacle.
2514	The raiſing of the tabernacle, and its parts	1486

	A second numbering of the people, the first day of the second month.
	The consecration of the tabernacle, the altars and the priests; the fifth day of the second month.
	The Levites numbered by themselves: they are consecrated to the service of the tabernacle, instead of the first-born of Israel.
	On the eighth day after the consecration of the tabernacle, the princes of the tribes, each on his day, offer their presents to the tabernacle.
	Jethro comes to the camp, a few days before the departure of Israel from Sinai.
	On the twentieth day of the second month, (May,) the Israelites decamp from Sinai, and come to Tabarah, or burning; from thence to Kibroth-hattaavah, or the graves of lust, three days journey from mount Sinai.
	Eldad and Medad prophesy in the camp. Numb. xi. 26, 27.
	Quails sent. Numb. xi. 31, 32.

	Israel comes to Rithmah, in the wilderness of Paran; thence to Kadesh-barnea; from whence they send twelve chosen men, one out of each tribe, to examine the land of Canaan.
	After forty days these men return to Kadesh-barnea, and exasperate the people, saying that this country devoured its inhabitants, and that they were not able to conquer it. Caleb and Joshua withstand them; the people mutiny: God swears that none of the murmurers should enter the land; but be consumed in the desart. The people resolve on entering Canaan; but are repelled by the Amalekites and the Canaanites.
2515	The people continue a good while at Kadesh-barnea. From hence they go toward the Red-Sea.	1485

3222	Jeroboam II. dies, Zachariah his ſon ſucceeds him; reigns 6 months; perhaps, 10 years. The chronology of this reign is perplexed. 2 Kings, xv. 8, 12. places the death of Zachariah in the 38th year of Uzziah, allowing him a reign of but 6 months. Yet, reckoning what time remains to the end of the kingdom of Iſrael, we muſt either admit an interregnum of 9 or 11 years, between Jeroboam II. and Zachariah, as Uſher does; or, we muſt ſuppoſe Jeroboam II. reigned 51 years; or, that his reign did not begin till 3191, and ended in 3232, which is the year of the death of Zachariah.	778

The Jewiſh Cubit, according to our author, was equal to Engliſh meaſure, 1 foot $9\frac{894}{1000}$ inches, or $1\frac{8245}{10000}$ foot, on ſuppoſition that the Paris foot is to the Engliſh foot in the proportion of 1068 to 1000, i. e. almoſt 22 of our inches, or 21,894 inches, which is very little more than 21,888 inches, which Dr. Arbuthnot aſſigns in his tables, after the Biſhops Cumberland and Hooper; which is the preſent cubit of Cairo, according to Mr. Greaves.

The Stadium, or furlong, was the eighth part of a mile, or mille paſſus; equal to 125 geometrical paces; or 667½ feet Engliſh.

The mile was 8 Stadia, or furlongs, or 1000 geometrical paces; and 3 of theſe miles were a league, or an hour's journey. The mile will be 5340 Engliſh feet. We have reduced the feet to Engliſh miles, ſuppoſing the mile to be 8 furlongs, the furlong 132 paces, the pace 5 feet.

The Pareſang conſiſted of 30 Stadia, or 3750 geometrical paces; 3 miles, 6 furlongs, 45 paces, Engliſh.

Meaſures

Measures of CAPACITY of the Hebrews, compared with Engliſh Meaſures.

The Bath, Epha, or Metretes, contains 60 Engliſh wine pints, and almoſt an half.

The Côr, or Chomer, contained 10 Baths, near 605 pints, Engliſh meaſure.

The Lethech was half the Chomer, 302 Engliſh pints, and almoſt one half.

The Seah, or Satum, was a third part of the Bath, a little more than 20 Engliſh pints.

The Gomor, Omer, or Aſſaron, was the tenth part of the Epha, or ſomething more than 6 Engliſh pints.

The Cab was the ſixth part of the Seah, or Satum, or the eighteenth part of the Ephah; ſomething above $3\frac{9}{25}$ Engliſh pints.

The Log, or Rebah, is a fourth part of the Cab, or a little more than $\frac{21}{25}$ of an Engliſh pint.

The Nebel contained 3 Baths, or almoſt $181\frac{1}{2}$ Engliſh pints.

The Hin was the half Seah, or half Satum of the Hebrews, and contained the ſixth part of the Bath, a little more than 10 Engliſh pints.

The half Hin was a little above 5 Engliſh pints.

The Betzah, or egg, which the Rabbins ſometimes uſe in their meaſures, was the ſixth part of the Log, and therefore was very little above $\frac{7}{50}$ of the Engliſh pint.

SUPPLEMENTARY

ADDENDA & CORRIGENDA

TO

CALMET's DICTIONARY OF THE HOLY BIBLE.

BY THE EDITOR.

ABEL-BETH-MAACHAH, 1 Kings xv. 20. 2 Kings xv. 29. a town called Abel of the houſe of Maachah. Vide MAACHAH.

The following [ ] addition made to the Second Edition, is reprinted here for the advantage of thoſe readers who purchaſed the firſt Edition.

ABRAHAM, ad fin. [It is impoſſible for us to aſcertain what ancient writings Mahomet might uſe in compiling his Koran (for that parts of it are ſo compiled, admits of no diſpute); it ſeems not improbable that many fictitious, and other fancy-embelliſhed hiſtories (like thoſe of the ſpurious goſpels of our Lord Jeſus) might be in circulation in Mahomet's time, of which Abraham was the hero; and that out of theſe he ſelected; but whether the worſt parts, or the beſt parts, we cannot tell. I wiſh, however, we could trace enough to aſcertain the ideas annexed in that country to the "riſing of the ſtar," ſaid to occur at the birth of Abraham; perhaps it might explain the prophecy of Balaam (Numb. xxiv. 17) or might elucidate the ready apprehenſion of the eaſtern Magi, who, when they, in the eaſt, ſaw a certain ſtar riſe in a certain manner, and in a certain portion, &c. of the heavens, they inferred, that a remarkable child was born: indeed no leſs than the King of Judea; and they journeyed many miles to viſit him. How came the riſing of a ſtar thus connected in idea with the birth of a child? was the idea ancient? and what might be its origin?] This alludes to the birth of Abraham being expected, and reported to Nimrod, as the eaſterns ſay, by the Magi at his court. The ſame is ſaid in reſpect to the king of Egypt at the birth of Moſes: we read alſo of a king who dreamed that immenſe ſplendor, from the pregnant womb of his daughter, illumined his kingdom. The claſſic reader will recollect inſtances of other ſtars connected with great men, as the ſtar Venus with Julius Cæſar, in Virgil and Ovid. I wiſh ſome capable critic would ſelect thoſe inſtances of ſtars which alluded to the birth of heroes, and royal infants, perhaps, they would contribute to account wherefore the Magi expected the birth of the king of the Jews, becauſe they had ſeen a particular ſtar in the heavens. If theſe reports reſpecting Abraham may obtain any credit, the idea is much anterior to Balaam, conſequently that prophet rather took up and applied current language, than was himſelf the origin of it: and the Magi of Matthew, if they had ever heard of Balaam's prophecy, of which we have no proof, yet might be determined by a perſuaſion intirely independent of that prediction, or of its author's vaticination.

ACHMETA. This word in our tranſlation denotes a place, Ezra vi. 2. "There was found at Achmeta a roll,"—ſome tranſlators ſuppoſe it means the office, or rather, the book-caſe-cloſets wherein the official rolls of the government were kept; and this ſeems very plauſible. Others, ſuppoſe that Achmeta is the ſame with Ecbatana, the royal city, where, in the palace, the rolls were kept. This agrees with the Vulgate, which reads Ecbatanis, and 1 Eſdras, vi. 22. Apoc. alſo Joſeph. Antiq, lib. xi. cap. 4. Perhaps it was a part of the palace known by this name.

ADMAH, one of the cities involved in the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah: its king is mentioned Gen. xiv. 2. and it is alluded to as ſuffering under its puniſhment, Deut. xxix. 23. and Hoſea xi. 8.

ADULLAM, עדלם, their teſtimony, their prey, or their ornament; the name of a cave to which David eſcaped from Achiſh, 1 Sam. xxii. 1. 2 Sam. xxiii. 13. The prophet Micah, i. 15. ſeems ſeems to uſe a kind of play on this word "he ſhall come unto (the ornament) Adullam, the glory (ornament) of Iſrael."

ADULTERY, THE WOMAN TAKEN IN. The law was, that the culprit ſhould be brought before the council, where, if condemned, the whole audience, council included, were to ſtone him. By bringing this woman to Jeſus, the Jews were guilty, 1. of partiality, as they ought to have brought the adulterer alſo; 2. They deſired Jeſus to take on himſelf the office of the council, which would have been aſſuming political power; and have endangered his life: this plot he retorts on themſelves, by ſaying, "Do you, on your own propoſals, aſſume that conduct which you know the council would purſue in ſuch a caſe; conſider her as ipſo facto condemned by the circumſtances in which ſhe was apprehended, therefore, do you caſt ſtones at her, as the council would caſt ſtones at a perſon ſo condemned." This they declined, being aware of its tendency; and they ſhrunk from that to which they had urged Jeſus. To this his words ſeem more particularly to allude, "Let him who is without ſin—not moral guilt, but political offence—he who can be innocent in aſſuming that power which is legally lodged elſewhere, let him act the judge, and ſtone her." And ſo, ſpeaking to the woman, "has nobody condemned thee—actively ſhewn his condemnation of thee—by ſtoning thee?—Neither do I condemn thee;—I do not expreſs my condemnation of thee by ſtoning thee. Go, and ſin no more.

ADVOCATE, 1 John ii. 1. the original word is paracleton, which denotes an interceſſor, a counſel—counſellor—one who may plead for another. This word ſeems to reſemble our word counſel—ſignifying, 1. advice, inſtruction, admonition, guidance—hence applied to the Holy Spirit, John xiv. 16. alſo, 2. a counſel, or perſon who acts legally in our ſtead, to promote the ſucceſs of our ſuit, or petition. "If any man ſin, we have a counſel before the Father's bar to plead on our behalf.

AMMAH, אמה, the mother: a family, race, or nation. We read 2 Sam. ii. 24. that Abner was purſued to the hill Ammah—but ſome think the words ſhould be read "to Gibboath-Ammah—which is over againſt Giah, going down to the wilderneſs of Gibeon." It might be a place on a hill. I ſuſpect, however, that this word Ammah, might be rendered mother in the ſame ſenſe as we read Ezek. xxi. 21. "The king of Babylon ſtood at the mother of the way"—i. e. where two ways originated, or parted off.—So this might be "the mother hill," and perhaps, [ſeveral roads might part off hereabouts] there might be ſeveral hills adjacent, of which this was the higheſt, like the MAM Tor, Mother Hill, of Devonſhire.

AMMI, עמי, my people. The prophet Hoſea, ii. 1. adviſes the Iſraelites to uſe the names and appellations of the moſt tender affection—"ſay to your brothers, my people—Ammi, and to your ſiſters—Rachamah, the beloved: Plead with your mother," &c. win upon her mind by recalling her maternal tenderneſs, &c. He concludes this chapter by ſaying, "I will belove not-beloved, and will call not-my people "my people;" and he ſhall call me "My God." This refers to chap. i. 6, 9. where the prophet had named a daughter, Lo-Rachamah NOT-BELOVED, and a ſon, Lo-Ammi NOT-MY-PEOPLE. It is neceſſary to bear in mind this play of words, in order to diſcover the alluſion in theſe two paſſages.

AMMON-NO. "It is plain, all that the Scripture mentions about Ammon-No, applies to Dioſpolis on the other ſide the river. Ammon-No, and Dioſpolis, though they were on different ſides of the river, were conſidered as one city, through which the Nile flowed, dividing it into two parts. This is plain from prophane hiſtory, as well as from the prophet Nahum, iii. 8. who deſcribes it very exactly, if in place of the word ſea was ſubſtituted river, as it ought to be." BRUCE'S TRAVELS, Vol. I. p. 396.

ANOINTING. "In Yemen, the anointing the body is believed to ſtrengthen and protect it from the heat of the ſun, by which the inhabitants of this province, as they wear ſo little clothing, are very liable to ſuffer. Oil, by cloſing up the pores of the ſkin, is ſuppoſed to prevent that too copious tranſpiration which enfeebles the frame. Perhaps, too, theſe Arabians think a gliſtering ſkin a beauty. When the intenſe heat comes in, they always anoint their bodies with oil. At Sana, all the Jews, and many of the Mahometans, have their bodies anointed whenever they find themſelves indiſpoſed." NIEBUHR, Vol. II. p. 274. Eng. Edit. This, in ſome degree, explains the direction of the apoſtle James to anoint the ſick with oil in the name of the Lord: i. e. to do that ſolemnly for the purpoſe of healing, which was often done medically: and accordingly, we find Solomon in many places of his Proverbs, ſpeaking of adminiſtering ointment—which rejoices the heart,—which may be a healing medicine to thy navel, &c. Vide UNCTION.

APPII-FORUM, and the Three Taverns. The Three Taverns were nearer to Rome than Appii Forum, Forum, as Cicero intimates, who going from Rome "ab Appii Foro, horâ quartâ dederam aliam paulò ante à tribus Tabernis," a little before he came to the Forum of Appius he arrived at the Three Taverns, ſo that probably the chief number of Chriſtians waited for the apoſtle Paul at a place of refreſhment, while ſome of their number went forward to meet him, and to acquaint him with their expectation of ſeeing him among them, for which they reſpectfully waited his coming.

ARK OF NOAH. This veſſel was in its proportions, pretty near thoſe of the human figure, ſo that it reſembled a dead body laid out for burial: 300 cubits in length is ſix times its breadth, 50 cubits; and ten times its heigth, 30 cubits. Now the body of a man lying on the water, flat, will float without any exertion, ſo far as to keep the mouth above water, and the noſe free for the purpoſe of breathing. It ſhould ſeem therefore, that ſimilar proportions might ſuit a veſſel whoſe purpoſe was floating:—and I do not know whether we have not been betrayed into erroneous conceptions of the ſtructure of the ark, by ſuppoſing it to paſs from one place to another, to be driven by ſtorms, &c. whereas, it is not impoſſible that it might be as if at anchor all the time, and that the ſurges were not greater than thoſe we now are acquainted with, as fifteen cubits, or twenty-two feet of water, could hardly form ſuch a high ſea as ſome have imagined.

ASS, of BALAAM. ADDITIONAL REMARKS.

There is yet to be conſidered whether the aſs uttered ſounds, which by the power of the angel, then preſent, were conveyed to Balaam as combined into diſtinct words, though not ſuch when they quitted the aſs's mouth: ſo that in this caſe the miracle lay in the words: or, whether the miracle lay in the ears of Balaam, who heard as combined into articulate words, ſounds which the aſs uttered without conſciouſneſs of her ſpeaking, or any verbal ſenſe meant, or underſtood by her, the aſs, beyond her ordinary braying, or what ſhe had been accuſtomed to expreſs in her former complaints.

I think we may aſſume as facts, (1) that Balaam was accuſtomed to augury and preſages; (2.) that on this occaſion he would notice any event capable of ſuch interpretation, as preſages uſually were ſuppoſed to be capable of. (3.) That he was deeply intent on the iſſue of his journey. (4.) That the whole of his conduct towards Balak was calculated to repreſent himſelf as an extraordinary perſonage. (5.) That the behaviour of the aſs did actually PREFIGURE that of Balaam in the three particulars of it recorded. Firſt the aſs turned aſide, and went into the field; for which ſhe was ſmitten: So Balaam the firſt time of his perverſe attempt to curſe Iſrael, was as it were ſmitten, reproved, 1. by God, 2. by Balak. The ſecond time the aſs was more harſhly treated for hurting Balaam's foot againſt the wall; ſo Balaam, for his ſecond attempt was no doubt ſufficiently mortified. Thirdly the aſs, ſeeing inevitable danger fell down, and was ſmitten ſeverely; ſo Balaam, the third time was overruled by God, and not without hazard of his life from the anger of Balak. Nevertheleſs, as Balaam had no ſword in his hand, though he wiſhed for one, with which to ſlay his aſs, ſo Balak had no power to deſtroy Balaam, notwithſtanding his fury. In ſhort, as the aſs was oppoſed by the angel, but was driven forward by Balaam, ſo Balaam was oppoſed by God, but was driven forward by Balak, againſt his better knowledge. Were we ſure that Balaam wrote this ſtory, and that Moſes copied his narrative, as the Rabbins affirm, vide BALAAM, this view of the ſubject would remove the difficulties which have been raiſed about it. It might then be entitled "a ſpecimen of Balaam's augury."

Is there not a ſimilar inſertion in the Moſaic narrative, Numb. xxi. 27?

ASYLUM. "The temple of Diana at Epheſus had the largeſt aſylum, or place of refuge, that ever we read of, belonging to any temple. Strabo tells us (lib. xiv. cap. 441,) Alexander the Great extended it to a whole ſtadium all round it, or one hundred and twenty-five geometrical paces. Mithridates ſtretched it to the diſtance an arrow could fly, ſhot from the corner of the top of the temple, which is ſomething farther. Mark Antony enlarged it ſtill, and took into it part of the city. The ill conſequences of ſuch an immunity appeared preſently, to be, in effect, the putting the city intirely in the power of villains, and robbers. Auguſtus took away that enlargement which Mark Antony had made to it. But Tiberius, at laſt, ſeeing the manifeſt abuſe of theſe aſylums, aboliſhed them all without exception." MONTFAUCON, Antiq. Expl. Vol. I. Supp.

ATONEMENT. I conceive we have loſt the true import of this word in our language, by our preſent manner of pronouncing it. When it was the cuſtom to pronounce the word one as own—then the word atonement, was reſolvable into its parts AT-ONE-MENT, or, the means of being at one, i. e. reconciled, united, combined in fellowſhip: and this ſeems to be preciſely its idea, Rom. v. 11. "being (to God) reconciled—or at-one-ed, we ſhall be ſaved by his (Chriſt's) life, by whom we have received the at-one-ment," or means of reconciliation. Here, it appears, the word atonement does not mean a ranſom, price, or purchaſe paid to the receiver, but a reſtoration of accordance. Perhaps this is the beſt idea we can affix to the term expiation, or atonement under the Moſaic law. The ſacrifices, &c. were the appointed means for reſtoring fellowſhip and accord between God and the nation of Iſrael; in other words, they were the appointed means of rendering God propitious, capable of holding (i. e. diſpoſed to hold) communion with the people; and I am not ſure that in Job xxxiii. 24. where our tranſlators have placed in the text—ranſom, and in the margin atonement, that they had not better have inſerted the marginated word; " deliver him from going down to the pit of death, for I have accepted an atonement for his life," therefore his youth ſhall return—his fleſh become fairer than a child's, &c.

To juſtify theſe ideas, read Numb. xvi. 46. go quickly make reconciliation, for wrath is gone out: Lev. xvi. 10. Aaron ſhall make reconciliation for himſelf and his houſe: Lev. iv. 20. et al. the prieſt ſhall make reconciliation for him, and he ſhall be forgiven. 2 Sam. xxi. 3. David ſaid to the Gibeonites, wherewith ſhall I make the reconciliation, that ye may bleſs the inheritance of the Lord—i. e. that ye may be at one with the people of Iſrael. Eng. Tr. reads atonement.

It may be proper here to remark on the Ilaſterion, or mercy ſeat, which was anciently in the temple: if we read reconciliation-reſidence, ſeat, or lid of the ark, perhaps we ſhould come the neareſt to the true idea; for it was not a ſeat from whence was diſpenſed mercy only, but ſometimes oracles, and thoſe were occaſionally threatenings, i. e. until reconciliation was made: but it was the ſtation of a perſon underſtood to be there conſtantly preſent, where he might be reconciled to thoſe who entreated him: this was the place for thoſe who wiſhed for reconciliation to apply to for it; and this reconciliation-ſeat was itſelf at-one-ed with the people, &c. when the blood of at-one-ment was ſprinkled upon it, on the great day of expiation. The apoſtle declares, Rom. iii. 25. that God hath ſet forth Jeſus Chriſt to be an ilaſterion, a reconciliation-reſidence, through faith in his blood, i. e. as God was underſtood to be conſtantly on the mercy-ſeat of old there to be at-one-ed, ſo is he now in Chriſt, who is his reſidence for the ſame purpoſe of at-one-ment.

AVEN, vide BETH-AVEN.

AXE. This is a well-known inſtrument of iron, uſed for the purpoſe of cutting down trees, &c. but this inſtrument is alſo alluded to in Scripture figuratively, for a perſon or power, who as a cutting inſtrument in the hand of God is uſed to cut off the branches and boughs, and even ſometimes to cut down the tree itſelf; ſo that if ſinners be compared to trees in a foreſt, he who ſmiteth them is compared to an axe, Iſa. x. 15, &c. This is more eſpecially apparent in the proverbial phraſeology uſed by John the Baptiſt, Matt. iii. 10. Luke iii. 9. " The axe is laid to the root of the trees"—approaching puniſhment, deſtruction, is near. I preſume we riſque little in referring this ultimately to the Roman power and armies, which as an axe was moſt vehemently exerted againſt the very exiſtence of the Jewiſh polity and ſtate. On the whole, this ſimile may be taken 1. as addreſſed to each individual tree, i. e. ſinner; 2. to the nation and people of the Jews, to which the plural form of the word " trees" inclines me. Vide Judges, ix. 8, &c. BALAAM, ad fin. ADD, The reaſon why Balaam calls Jehovah "my God," I conceive might be, becauſe he was of the poſterity of Shem, which patriarch maintained the worſhip of the Lord, not only in his own perſon, but among his deſcendants, no doubt, with all his influence: ſo that while the poſterity of Ham fell into idolatry, and the poſterity of Japhet were ſettled at a diſtance, in Europe, the Shemites maintained the worſhip of Jehovah, and knew the holineſs of his nature. This appears in the profligate advice which Balaam gives Balak, to ſeduce the Iſraelites to tranſgreſs againſt Jehovah, with the holineſs of whoſe nature the perverted prophet ſeems to have been extremely well acquainted.

BALDNESS, is a natural effect of old age, in which period of life the hair of the head wanting nouriſhment, falls off, and leaves the head naked. Baldneſs was uſed as a token of mourning, it is threatened to the voluptuous daughters of Iſrael, inſtead of well ſet hair, Iſaiah iii. 4. BIBLE, AND TRANSLATIONS OF, AND ESPECIALLY OF THE PRESENT ENGLISH TRANSLATION.

AS it is of the utmoſt importance to every profeſſor of that religion which is founded on the bible, that the bible itſelf ſhould not only be well underſtood by him, but that its authority as a work communicated by inſpiration from heaven ſhould be well aſcertained, and moreover, that the authenticity of ſuch copies of it, as are now procureable, and the correctneſs of thoſe tranſlations from ſuch copies, as are uſually read and appealed to by us ſhould be eſtabliſhed, we have thought it might be proper to offer an enquiry of ſome length into theſe latter particulars, not leſs for the uſe of the biblical ſtudent, than for the ſatisfaction of general readers.

Of the AUTHORITY of the bible, as received by inſpiration from God, we ſhall at preſent ſay nothing, preſuming it is fully admitted by the reader; and being aware that the neceſſary proofs requiſite to do this ſubject tolerable juſtice, would extend theſe ſummary hints to an inconvenient length.

As to the authenticity of ſuch copies of the bible as are now procurable, we refer the reader in the firſt place, to the articles BIBLE, MASSORA, POINTS, VERSIONS, &c. in the Dictionary.

OF THE ORIGINAL WRITERS OF THE BIBLE.

It is very credible, that the patriarch Abraham, to go no higher into antiquity, poſſeſſed and brought away, what information the books, or records, of his original country could communicate. For my own part, I do not know that I ſhould ſay any thing improbable, if I conſidered Noah himſelf as practiſing the art of writing; but, as great doubts have been entertained, whether this art be more ancient than the intercourſe of Moſes with the Divinity on Mount Horeb, I am unwilling to be thought too ſanguine, or too overweening, on this ſubject.

I think the remarks ſuggeſted in FRAGMENT, No. CCLXVI. "On the nature of Seals," are determinate for the nature of the ſeal of Judah, Gen. xxxviii. that it contained his name, or appropriate mark, engraved on it. I aſſume this as fact. But, I think I diſcern traces of a ſtill more early employment of this noble art, in the days of Abraham. We read, Gen. xxiv. 17. a paſſage, which has all the air of an abridgement of a title deed, or conveyance of an eſtate: which indeed is its import "And the 1. field of Ephron, 2. which was in Machpelah, 3. which was before Mamre, 4. the field, 5. and the cave which was therein, 6. and all the trees in the field, 7. that were in all the borders thereof round about, 8. were made ſure to Abraham, 9. for a poſſeſſion, 10. in the preſence of the children of Heth, 11. before all that went in at the gate of his city." A modern attorney would deſire no more than the introduction of a few phraſes, to make a deed of many ſkins from this paſſage; and the whole hiſtory of this purchaſe and payment, ſtrikes me, as being not only according to the local uſages of the country, in the preſent day, but alſo ſo minutely deſcribed, that I ſcarce think it would have been ſo amply, and even punctiliouſly, inſerted into an epitomiſed hiſtory of the times, had not the original laid before the writer; who, finding himſelf able to communicate this ancient document to his readers, embraced with pleaſure the opportunity of abridging it.

If this be admitted as an inſtance of the art of writing, and of ſuch an art being practiſed in the days of Abraham, we may juſtly conſider, whether that patriarch could be the firſt poſſeſſor of it? I think not: and if, as the Rabbins ſay, Abraham himſelf learned of Shem, and, they ſay decidedly, that "Iſaac went to Shem's ſchool," I think we may heſitate before we deny the poſſibility, at leaſt, that Shem had preſerved a hiſtory of former events, which hiſtory he communicated to Abraham, from whence it deſcended to Iſaac, to Jacob, to Levi, to Moſes. I have ſometimes gone ſo far as to ſuppoſe I diſcerned a difference of ſtyle between the early parts of the book of Geneſis, and the original writings of Moſes; but I ſay no more on this ſubject. I merely mention this by the bye.

I do not ſee that any injury is done to the juſt arguments on behalf of the inſpiration of Scripture, if we ſuppoſe, that Shem wrote the early hiſtory of the world; that Abraham wrote what concerned himſelf; Jacob what concerned himſelf, &c. and that, at length, Moſes compiled, arranged, and edited, a copy of the holy works extant in his time. We ſhall ſee that a proceedure perfectly analogous to this, was conducted by Ezra in after times; on whoſe edition of holy Scripture our faith now reſts, as it reſts in like manner on the prior edition of Moſes, if he was the editor of ſome parts; or, on his authority, if he was the writer of the whole.

Accepting Moſes as the writer of the Pentateuch, we may nevertheleſs conſider Joſhua as adding ſome ſmall matters to it, ſuch as the hiſtory of the death of Moſes, &c. and Ezra in later times, as adding ſome other ſmall matters to it, ſuch as, various minor obſervations, changes of names which had happened during a lapſe of many ages, particular directions where ſuch or ſuch objects were ſituated, &c. for the benefit of his readers; and let me ſay for the benefit of remote poſterity.

When we come to the days of Moſes, we have clear evidence of written documents being compoſed, purpoſely, to deliver down to poſterity the hiſtory of paſt events. Moſes not only was willing to write, but he is ſpecifically directed to write, by way of record, and to take ſpecial care for the preſervation of thoſe records, by placing them in the moſt ſacred of the national repoſitories; and under the immediate care of thoſe moſt intimately concerned in their preſervation.

We find this cuſtom of compoſing PUBLIC RECORDS, was continued in after ages in Iſrael; under the Judges, under the Kings, and when the ſchiſm took place between Iſrael and Judah, EACH of thoſe kingdoms preſerved copies of the writings eſteemed ſacred, whether hiſtorical, or devotional. We have, indeed, reaſon to be thankful that beſide the Jewiſh copy of the Pentateuch, the Samaritans have preſerved their copy alſo, which if it be, as many learned men ſuppoſe, written in the truly ancient Hebrew character, is ſo much the more valuable, as it has had leſs riſque and leſs occaſion of error, than a copy tranſcribed into another dialect.

But this is not the only uſe which I think ſhould be made of this circumſtance: we ought to recollect the natural effects of party, in matters of religion, eſpecially when heightened by political rancour; we may be ſure that the Samaritans would ſuffer no alterations to be made in their copies by any authority from the Jewiſh governors; and the Jews, we well know, would have hardly received even a palpable truth from "that fooliſh people which dwelt in Samaria"

Wherefore, when we find the copies preſerved by theſe two people GENERALLY correſpondent, and differing only in ſome few minor matters, we ought to admire the providence of God, which has thus "made even the wrath of man to praiſe him," by tranſmitting more than one copy of this leading portion of holy writ, in a manner more certain, and leſs liable to doubt, or colluſion, or equivocation, than if a ſingle copy had come through the hands of one ſet of friends only, or had been preſerved only by thoſe whoſe unſupported teſtimony might have been ſuſpected of undue partiality, or of improper bias.

We find the kings of Judah attentive to the arrangement of their ſacred code in after ages; David, no doubt authenticated the books of the prophet Samuel, and we read that Hezekiah employed ſeveral perſons to collect and arrange the Proverbs of Solomon, and even to add to them, others which that prince had left behind him. It is uſually underſtood, that the Pſalms, Proverbs, and Eccleſiaſtes, were added under Hezekiah; alſo the book of Job, perhaps, though others think Iſaiah. (Vide CABBALA, SUPP.)

The prophecies of Jeremiah were public; many of them were read to all the people, and before the king, ſo that copies could not be rare: the ſame may be ſaid of moſt of the minor prophets; and in ſhort, of all that were near to the days of Nehemiah, and Ezra.

It is very natural to ſuppoſe that thoſe chiefs of the Jewiſh people, after their return from captivity, would do their utmoſt to collect, preſerve, and maintain the dignity of, all the writings of their ſacred code; and indeed, excepting the prophet Malachi, we may confidently conſider Ezra, as not only collecting, but collating, the copies of former writings, and compoſing additions to the hiſtorical narrations; not in the books themſelves, withheld perhaps by their prior ſanctity, but in that ſeparate hiſtory which we call the Chronicles.

Here we ought to make a pauſe; becauſe here our faith reſts on Ezra's edition: and I doubt not that this "ſcribe, well inſtructed in the law," had not only divine guidance, but good reaſons too, for what he did, and for his manner of doing it.

I ſuſpect that we have ſo many inſtances of Ezra's modeſty, as we have marginal readings in our Hebrew bibles; which in all amount to 840. Theſe occur in various places of the works extant before Ezra: but there are none in the prophet Malachi, who has been ſuppoſed to be Ezra himſelf; if ſo, the reaſon for this exemption from various readings is evident.

From the time of Ezra, the Hebrew canon was eſteemed as concluded; but between the times of Ezra and Chriſt, the books of the Jews became objects of enquiry to neighbouring nations; and tranſlations of them during this interval, being undertaken by thoſe whoſe language we alſo ſtudy, theſe tranſlations become very important to us: who by their means have additional ſanction to the articles of our enquiry, and additional means of anſwering the purpoſes to which our enquiry is directed.

TRANSLATIONS OF THE HEBREW SCRIPTURES.

The firſt tranſlation in order of time, and indeed in point of importance to us, is that Greek verſion uſually called the SEVENTY or SEPTUAGINT: as we have little to add to the account given of it in the Dictionary, we refer the reader to the article.

The CHALDEE tranſlations come next in order: they are not ſo much tranſlations, as paraphraſes: Vide TARGUM, JONATHAN, VERSION, &c.

The SYRIAC tranſlation, has been, by ſome, referred to the time of Solomon; by others to the time of Abgarus, king of Edeſſa; this is certainly more probable; but is not univerſally admitted. It unqueſtionably is ancient; and Dr. Prideaux thinks, it was made within the firſt century of A. D. and that it is the beſt of all tranſlations.

LATIN tranſlations do not date before the introduction of Chriſtianity into Rome. Vide VULGATE.

. . . . . .

We are now to add to our conſideration, beſide the Hebrew copies of the Old Teſtament, the ſeveral books which compoſe the New Teſtament; theſe were ſtudied, copied, and tranſlated, together with the Hebrew Scriptures, by Chriſtians, while the Jews ſtudied and copied only thoſe which contained the principles of their ancient ſyſtem.

JEWISH LABOURS ON HEBREW COPIES.

The attention of the Jews was by no means confined to writing copies of the holy Word; they made almoſt incredible exertions to preſerve the genuineneſs and integrity of the text.

This produced what has been termed the Maſora, the moſt ſtupendous monument in the whole hiſtory of literature, of minute and perſevering labour. The perſons employed in it, and who afterwards received from it the name of Maſorites, were Jewiſh literati, who flouriſhed after the commencement of the Chriſtian æra. With a reverential, not to ſay ſuperſtitious, attention, of which hiſtory does not furniſh an inſtance, to be urged in compariſon with it, they counted all the verſes, words, and letters, of all the twenty-four books of the Old Teſtament, and of each of thoſe twenty-four books, and of every ſection of each book, and of all its ſubdiviſions. "The matter of the Maſſora," ſays Mr. Lewis, in his Origines Hebrææ, vol. iv. p. 156. "conſiſts in critical remarks upon the verſes, words, letters, and vowel points of the Hebrew text. The Maſſorets were the firſt who diſtinguiſhed the books and ſections of books into verſes, and marked the number of the verſes, and of the words and letters in each verſe; the verſes, where they thought there was ſomething forgot; the words, which they believed to be changed; the letters, which they thought ſuperfluous; the repetitions of the ſame verſes; the different readings; the words which are redundant or defective; the number of times that the ſame word is found in the beginning, middle, or end of a verſe; the different ſignifications of the ſame word; the agreement or conjunction of one word with another; the number of words that are printed above; which letters are pronounced, and which are turned upſide down; and ſuch as hang perpendicular; they took the number of each: it was they, in ſhort, who invented the vowel points, the accents, and made divers critical remarks upon the punctuation, and abundance of other things of equal importance.

"A great part of the labour of theſe Jewiſh doctors conſiſted in counting the letters of the Hebrew text; and the letter ג Nun in the word Gehon, is in the Talmud obſerved to be in the very middle of the Pentateuch. Father Simon gives an account of a manuſcript copy, which he ſaw, where that part of the Maſſora that belonged to the letters, was to this purpoſe. There are twelve parſcioths, or great ſections, in Geneſis; there are forty-three leſſer ſections, called ſedarim, or orders: there are one thouſand five hundred and thirty-four verſes, twenty thouſand ſeven hundred and thirteen words, ſeventy-eight thouſand one hundred letters; and the midſt of the book conſiſts in theſe words, Ve al harbeka tihieh, in chap. xxvii. ver. 40. There are five points (theſe are points made on the top of ſome letters mentioned by St. Jerom). Exodus has eleven parſcioths, thirty-three ſedarim, one thouſand two hundred and nine verſes, ſixty-three thouſand four hundred and ſixty-ſeven letters; and theſe words, Elohim lo tekallel, in chap. xxii. ver. 27. are in the very middle of this book. There are in Leviticus ten parſcioths, twenty-five ſedarim, eight hundred and fifty-nine verſes, eleven thouſand nine hundred and two words, forty-four thouſand nine hundred and eighty-nine letters; and theſe words, Vehannogia bibeſar, in chap. xv. ver. 7. are the middle words. There are in Numbers ten parſcioths, thirty-three ſedarim, one thouſand two hundred and eighty-eight verſes, ſixteen thouſand ſeven hundred and ſeven words, ſixty-two thouſand five hundred and twenty-nine letters; and theſe words, Ve haia-is aſher ebehar, in chap. xvii. ver. 20. are the middle words. There are in Deuteronomy ten parſcioths, thirty-one ſedarim, ninety thouſand and fifty-five verſes, ſixteen thouſand three hundred and ninety-four words, fifty-four thouſand eight hundred and ninety-two letters; and the middle words of this book are, Ve aſcita alpi hadavar, in chap. xvii. ver. 10."

Such is the celebrated Maſora of the Jews. Originally it did not accompany the text. Afterwards the greateſt part of it was written in the margin. To bring it into the margin, it was neceſſary to abridge the work itſelf. This abridgment was called the Maſora Parva. Being found too ſhort, a more copious abridgment of it was inſerted. This, in contradiſtinction from the other Maſora, was called the Maſora ſora Magna. The omitted parts were added at the end of the text, and this was called the Maſora Finalis.

In the Jewiſh manuſcripts and printed editions, a word is often found with a ſmall circle annexed to it, or with an aſteriſk over it, and a word written in the margin of the ſame line. The former is called the Kethibh, the latter the Keri. In theſe, much myſtery has been diſcovered by the Maſorites. The prevailing opinion is, that they are partly various readings, collected from the time of Eſdras, and partly critical obſervations, or, as they have been called, inſinuations, of the Maſorites, to ſubſtitute proper or regular for improper and irregular words, and ſometimes decent for indecent expreſſions, in the text.

As to the vowel points, which CALMET has conſidered as maſoretical, the reader may ſee ſufficient information under that article in the Dictionary.

OF THE PRESENT STATE OF THE HEBREW MANUSCRIPTS.

No extenſive collation of the Hebrew manuſcripts of the ſacred text was made till the preſent century. This was owing, in a great meaſure, to a notion which had prevailed of the integrity of the ſacred text, in conſequence of its ſuppoſed preſervation from error, by the wonder-working Maſora. In the annals of literature, there is not, perhaps, a more ſtriking inſtance of the little ſafety there is, in truſting, without examination, to received opinions, than the general acquieſcence of the learned in this opinion. The Rabbins boldly aſſerted, and the Chriſtians implicitly believed, that the Hebrew text was free from error, and that, in all the manuſcripts of it, not an inſtance of a various reading of importance could be produced. The firſt, who combated this notion in the form of regular attack, was Ludovicus Capellus. From the differences he obſerved between the Hebrew text and the verſion of the Seventy, and between the Hebrew Pentateuch and the Samaritan Pentateuch; from the manifeſt and palpable corruptions he thought he ſaw in the text itſelf; and from the many reaſons which made him ſuppoſe the vowel points and the Maſora were both a modern and an uſeleſs invention, he was led to queſtion the general integrity of the text; and even his enemies allowed, that, in his attack upon it, he diſcovered extreme learning and ingenuity. Still, however, he admitted the uniformity of the manuſcripts. When this was urged againſt him by Buxtorf, he had little to reply. At length (what ſhould have been done before any thing had been ſaid or written on the ſubject), the manuſcripts themſelves were examined, and innumerable various readings in them were diſcovered. From this time biblical criticiſm on the ſacred text took a new turn. Manuſcripts were collated; were examined with attention, their various readings were diſcuſſed with freedom, and their reſpective merits aſcertained by the rules of criticiſm. The celebrated collation of Dr. Kennicott was begun in the year 1760. He undertook to collate all the manuſcripts of the ſacred text in England and in Ireland; and, while he ſhould be employed in this (which he ſuppoſed might be about ten years), to collate, as far as the expence would admit, all the Hebrew manuſcripts of importance, in foreign countries. The firſt volume was printed in 1776; the ſecond in 1780. Dr. Kennicott himſelf collated two hundred and fifty manuſcripts. Under his direction, and at his expence, Mr. Bruns collated about three hundred and fifty: ſo that the whole number of manuſcripts collated, on this occaſion, was nearly ſix hundred. It appears, that, in his opinion, fifty-one of the manuſcripts collated for his edition were from 600 to 800, and that one hundred and ſeventy-four were from 480 to 580 years old. Four quarto volumes of various readings have ſince been publiſhed by De Roſſi of Parma, from more than four hundred manuſcripts; ſome of which are ſaid to be of the ſeventh or eighth century, as well as from a conſiderable number of rare and unnoticed editions, under the title of Variæ Lectiones Veteris Teſtamenti, ex immenſâ manuſcriptorum editorumque codicum congerie, hauſtæ et examinatæ,—Parma, 1786. The conſequence of theſe extenſive collations has been, to raiſe a general opinion among the learned, 1ſt, that all manuſcript copies of the Hebrew Scriptures now extant may, in ſome ſort, be called Maſoritic copies, becauſe none of them have intirely eſcaped the rude hands of the Maſorites: 2dly, that the moſt valuable manuſcripts, generally ſpeaking, are thoſe which are oldeſt, written at firſt without points or accents, containing the greateſt number of real vowels, or matres lectionis, exhibiting marks of an accurate tranſcriber, and conforming moſt to the ancient verſions, and, with regard to the Pentateuch, conforming moſt to the Samaritan exemplar, and the Greek uninterpolated verſion: 3dly, that the Maſoritic copies often diſagree, and that, the further back they go, the greater is their diſagreement from the preſent printed copy: fourthly, that the ſynagogue rolls diſagree the leaſt from the printed copies, ſo that they are of little value in aſcer-

taining the text. From all this they conclude, that the ſureſt ſources of emendation, are a collation of manuſcripts and parallel places; a compariſon of the text with the ancient verſions, and of theſe with one another; grammatical analogy; and, where all theſe fail, even conjectural criticiſm. However, the ancient opinions have ſome advocates. Theſe do not go ſo far as to aſſert, that a collation of Hebrew manuſcripts is perfectly uſeleſs; but they think it may be prized higher than it deſerves: that, when manuſcripts of an earlier date than the Maſora are ſought for, it ſhould not be forgot, that the Maſorites had thoſe manuſcripts, when they ſettled the text; and what hopes can there be, they aſk, that at the cloſe of the eighteenth century, after the Hebrew has long ceaſed to be a ſpoken language, a Chriſtian, ſo much of whoſe time is employed in other purſuits, and diſtracted by other cares, can make a better uſe of thoſe manuſcripts than was actually made of them, by the Maſoritic literati, whoſe whole time, whoſe every thought, from their earlieſt years to their lateſt age, was devoted to that one object; who lived among the people, and almoſt in the country, where the events recorded by them, happened,—who ſaw with their own eyes the manners they deſcribe, and daily and hourly ſpoke and heard a language kindred to that in which they are written? But, if there muſt be a collation of manuſcripts, then, ſay they, no manuſcript written by any other than a Jew, or wanting any one of the Jewiſh marks of authenticity, ſhould be taken into account: and, trying the queſtion of the integrity of the text by theſe, which they call, the only authentic manuſcripts, no queſtion, they aſſert, will remain of the perfect integrity, and perfect freedom from corruption, of the preſent text. Where it can be ſhewn, that the text of the Maſora is corrupt, the genuineneſs of the bible reading may be doubted: but where there is no reaſon to impeach the Maſora, the text, as they aſſert, is fixed beyond controverſy.

OF THE PRINTED HEBREW BIBLES.

Thoſe printed editions which appear to deſerve particular attention, are, that of Soncino, in 1488, from its being the firſt printed edition of the whole bible; the edition at Breſcia, in 1494, from its being the edition uſed by Luther, in his tranſlation; a third was printed in 1517, without the name of any place. Theſe three editions are called the Soncinates, being printed by Jews, of a family which came originally from Germany, and eſtabliſhed themſelves at Soncino, a town in Lombardy, between Cremona and Breſcia. They were the firſt Hebrew printers. Bomberg's edition was printed five times, and is diſtinguiſhed by the beauty of the type; but, not being divided into chapters and verſes, is unfit for general uſe. The firſt of his editions was printed in 1518, the laſt in 1545: they were all printed at Venice, and are all in 4to. Robert Stephens's 16mo edition is moſt elegantly printed. It is in ſeven volumes, and was printed at Paris 1544—1546. He had before printed a 4to edition at Paris, in four volumes, 1539—1544. The celebrated edition of Athias, a Jew printer at Amſterdam, was publiſhed in that city, firſt in 1661, and afterwards in 1667: it is remarkable for being the firſt edition in Hebrew, in which the verſes are numbered. It was beautifully reprinted by Everardhus Vander Hooght, in two volumes 8vo, 1705. This edition has the general reputation of great accuracy. Some have called its accuracy in queſtion; but the elegance of the type, the beauty of the paper, and the fine gloſſy blackneſs of the ink, cannot be denied. His text was adopted by Dr. Kennicott, in his edition. The Plantinian editions have conſiderable merit for their neatneſs and accuracy. The edition of Nunes Torres, with the notes of Raſchè, was begun in 1700, was printed in 1705, and was the favourite edition of the Jews. Moſt of the former editions were ſurpaſſed by that of Michaelis in 1720. A critical edition was publiſhed by Raphael Chajim Baſila, a Jew at Mantua, in four parts, 1742—1744.

The moſt celebrated edition of the Hebrew with a Latin tranſlation, was that of Sebaſtian Munſter. The firſt volume of the firſt edition was printed in 1534, the ſecond volume in 1535; the ſecond edition was printed in 1546. It was the firſt Latin tranſlation by any of the ſeparatiſts from the ſee of Rome. Santes Pagninus was the firſt of the Catholics who made an intirely new Latin verſion. It was publiſhed at Lyons, in 1528, and has often been republiſhed. That it is an accurate and faithful tranſlation, all acknowledge,—that the Latinity is barbarous, cannot be denied; but, as it was the author's plan, to frame a verbal tranſlation, in the ſtricteſt and moſt literal ſenſe of that word, its ſuppoſed barbariſm was unavoidable, and cannot, therefore, be imputed to it, as a fault. The celebrated edition of the Rev. Charles Francis Houbigant, of the oratory, was publiſhed in four volumes folio, with a Latin verſion and prolegomena, at Paris, in 1753. The prolegomena and the Latin verſion have been printed ſeparately. The merit of this edition is celebrated by all, who are not advocates advocates for the Maſora. By them it is ſpoken of in the harſheſt terms. Several manuſcripts were occaſionally conſulted by the author: but it is evident, that he did not collate any one manuſcript throughout. Prior to Houbigant's edition, was that of Reineccius, at Leipſic, in 1725, reprinted there in 1739. A new edition of it was printed in 1793, under the inſpection of Dr. Doederlein, and Profeſſor Meiſner. It contains the moſt important of the various readings collected by Dr. Kennicott and De Roſſi, printed under the text. For the purpoſe of common uſe, it is an excellent edition, and ſupplies the want of the ſplendid but expenſive editions and collations, of Houbigant, Kennicott, and De Roſſi.

Thoſe who extend their biblical reſearches into Rabbiniſm, are recommended by the learned in this branch of biblical literature, to the Biblia Rabbinica of Rabbi Moſes, publiſhed at Amſterdam, in four volumes folio, in 1724—1727, which intirely ſuperſeded the Biblia Rabbinica of Bomberg and Buxtorf. The purchaſers of it ſhould ſee, that the copy offered to them contains the treatiſe of the Rabbi Abdias Sporno, de Scopo Legis, which, in the copies deſigned for ſale to Chriſtians, is generally omitted.

The reader will perceive, that the Hebrew language, though loſt as a ſpoken language among the Jews, yet has been cultivated among them by their men of learning: while the Chriſtians, under all the diſadvantages of receiving the principles of this language from Jewiſh inſtructors, have laboured with great aſſiduity, in acquiring a competent acquaintance with it, and even a deep knowledge of its powers. They have alſo been the firſt to collate MSS. and to apply general learning to ſacred literature: both theſe principles are honorable to their ſkill and induſtry; but both may be carried too far, if they ſhould be ſubſtituted for accurate underſtanding of the holy language itſelf, and correct attention to its peculiarities, properties, and idioms.

But while I recommend ſtrongly the cloſeſt attention to the Hebrew language itſelf, I admit frankly, that very great light has been obtained from its ſiſter dialects, of which the Chaldee is one, and the Arabic is another, which cannot be too highly prized. The Jews deſpiſe this Arabic dialect, but the diſadvantage of deſpiſing it is to themſelves.

The reader may now form a tolerable idea of the ſtate of the Hebrew Scriptures, the Old Teſtament: we are next to direct our attention to the Scriptures of the New Teſtament, which are written in Greek.

OF THE PRESENT STATE OF THE GREEK MANUSCRIPTS.

The Greek manuſcripts, according to Wetſtein's account, are written either on parchment (or vellum) or on paper. The parchment or vellum is either purple-coloured, or of its natural colour; and either thin or thick. The paper is either ſilken, or of the common ſort; and its ſuperficies is either glazed, or of the ordinary roughneſs. The letters are either capital (generally called uncial), or ſmall. The capital letters are either unadorned and ſimple, and the ſtrokes of them very thin and ſtraight; or they are of a thicker kind, uneven and angulous. Some of them are ſupported on ſomething like a baſe, others are ornamented, or rather burthened, with a top. Letters of the firſt deſcription are of the kind generally found on the ancient monuments of Greece; thoſe of the laſt reſemble the paintings of half barbarous times. Manuſcripts, therefore, written in the firſt kind of letter, are generally ſuppoſed to be of the ſixth century, at the lateſt; thoſe written in the ſecond kind of letter are generally ſuppoſed to be of the tenth century. The manuſcripts written in the ſmall letters are of a ſtill later age. But the Greek manuſcripts, copied by the Latins, after the reign of Charlemagne, are in another kind of alphabet; the α, the ε, and the γ, in them, are inflected, in the form of the letters of the Latin alphabet. Even in the earlieſt manuſcripts ſome words are abbreviated. At the beginning of a new book, the four or five firſt lines are often written in vermilion. There are very few manuſcripts of the entire New Teſtament. The greater part contain the goſpels only; very few have the Apocalypſe.

The curious and extenſive collations, which have been made of manuſcripts within this century, have ſhewn, that certain manuſcripts have an affinity to each other, and that their text is diſtinguiſhed from others by characteriſtic marks. This has enabled the writers on this ſubject to arrange them under certain general claſſes. They have obſerved, that, as different countries had different verſions, according to their reſpective languages, their manuſcripts naturally reſembled their reſpective verſions, as the verſions, generally ſpeaking, were made from the manuſcripts in common uſe. Purſuing this idea, they have ſuppoſed four principal exemplars: 1ſt, the weſtern exemplar, or that uſed in the countries where the Latin language was ſpoken;—with this, the Latin verſions coincide: 2d. the Alexandrine exemplar;—with this, the quotations of Origen coincide: 3d, the Edeſſene exemplar, from from which the Syriac verſion was made: and 4th, the Byzantine or Conſtantinopolitan exemplar: the greateſt number of manuſcripts written by the monks on mount Athos, the Moſcow manuſcripts, the Sclavonian or Ruſſian verſions, and the quotations of St. Chryſoſtom and Theophylact, biſhop of Bulgaria, are referrible to this edition. The readings of this exemplar are remarkably different from thoſe of the other exemplars; between which, a ſtriking coincidence appears. A reading ſupported by all three of them is ſuppoſed to be of the very higheſt authority; yet the true reading is ſometimes found only in the fourth.

From the coincidence obſerved between many Greek manuſcripts and the Vulgate, or ſome other Latin tranſlation, a ſuſpicion aroſe in the minds of ſeveral writers of eminence, that the Greek text had been aſſimilated throughout, to the Latin. This ſeems to have been firſt ſuggeſted by Eraſmus; but it does not appear that he ſuppoſed the alterations were made before the fifteenth century: ſo that the charge of Latinizing the manuſcripts did not, in his notion of it, extend to the original writers of the manuſcript, or as they are called, the writers a primâ manu, but affected only the ſubſequent interpolators, or, as they are called, the writers a ſecundâ manu. Father Simon and Mill adopted and extended this accuſation; and it was urged by Wetſtein with his uſual vehemence and ability; ſo that it came to be generally received. Bengel expreſſed ſome doubts of it; and Semler formally called it in queſtion. He was followed by Grieſbach and Woide; and finally brought over Michaelis; who, in the firſt edition of his Introduction to the New Teſtament, had taken part with the accuſers; but, in the fourth edition of the ſame work, with a candour, of which there are too few examples, he declared himſelf perſuaded, that the charge was unfounded, and totally abandoned his firſt opinion.

Beſides the manuſcripts which contain whole books of the New Teſtament, other manuſcripts have been conſulted; among theſe are the Lectionaria, or collections of detached parts of the New Teſtament, appointed to be read in the public ſervice of the church. Theſe are diſtinguiſhed into the Evangeliſtarium, or leſſons from the goſpels; and the Apoſtolos, or leſſons from the acts and epiſtles. The quotations from the New Teſtament, in the works of the ancients, have alſo been conſulted.

PRINCIPAL GREEK MANUSCRIPTS NOW EXTANT.

Theſe are the Codex Alexandrinus, in the Britiſh Muſeum, the Codex Cantabrigienſis, or Codex Bezæ, and the Codex Vaticanus. The Codex Alexandrinus conſiſts of four volumes; the three firſt of them contain the Old Teſtament; the fourth, the New Teſtament, together with the firſt epiſtle of St. Clement to the Corinthians, and a fragment of the ſecond. The Codex Cantabrigienſis, or the Codex Bezæ, is a Greek and Latin manuſcript of the four goſpels, and the Acts of the apoſtles. The Codex Vaticanus contained, originally, the whole Greek bible. The reſpective ages of theſe venerable manuſcripts have been a ſubject of great controverſy, and have employed the ingenuity and learning of ſeveral biblical writers of great renown. After a profound inveſtigation of the ſubject, Dr. Woide fixes the age of the Codex Alexandrinus between the middle and the end of the fourth century; after a ſimilar inveſtigation, Dr. Kipling fixes the age of the Codex Cantabrigienſis, or the Codex Bezæ, at the ſecond century: but Mr. Herbert Marſh, in his notes to Michaelis, vol. ii. p. 708—715, ſeems to prove demonſtratively, that it was not written earlier than the fifth century. Montfaucon and Blanchini refer the Codex Vaticanus to the fifth century. In 1786, a fac-ſimile edition of the New Teſtament in the Codex Alexandrinus was publiſhed in London, at the expence of the Univerſity of Oxford, by Dr. Woide. In 1793, a fac-ſimile edition of the Codex Cantabrigienſis, or the Codex Bezæ, was publiſhed at Cambridge, at the expence of the Univerſity, by Dr. Kipling. Theſe editions exhibit their reſpective prototypes, page for page, line for line, word for word, contraction for contraction, raſure for raſure, to a degree of ſimilarity hardly credible. The types were caſt for the purpoſe, in alphabets of various forms, that they might be varied with the manuſcript, and repreſent it more exactly.

POLYGLOTT EDITIONS OF THE BIBLE.

The reader is referred to the article POLYGLOTT in the Dictionary, for ſome information on this ſubject: to which we ſhall only add the following.

The firſt Polyglott is that of Complutum or Alcala. It is divided into ſix parts, and compriſed in four volumes folio. It has the Hebrew, Latin, and Greek, in three diſtinct columns; the Chaldee paraphraſe, with a Latin interpretation, is at the bottom of the page, and the margin is filled with the Hebrew and Chaldee radicals: the fourth volume contains the Greek Teſtament, with no other tranſlation than the Latin. It was begun in 1502, the impreſſion was printed off in 1517, and it was publiſhed in 1522. The expence of the the work, which amounted (it is ſaid) to fifty thouſand ducats, was wholly paid by Cardinal Ximenes, of Spain.

It is certain, that Cardinal Ximenes ſpared no expence in collecting manuſcripts; but, whether he had any that were truly valuable, has been much doubted. In 1784, when Profeſſor Birch was engaged in his edition of the bible, Profeſſor Moldenhawer went to Alcala, for the purpoſe of diſcovering the manuſcripts uſed in the Ximenian Polyglot. After much inquiry, he diſcovered, that, about thirty-five years before, they had been ſold to a rocket-maker, of the name of Toryo; and the receipt given to him for his purchaſe was produced!!! The Complutenſian Polyglot was followed and excelled by the Polyglot of Antwerp, printed in that city in 1569—1572, in eight volumes folio, under the direction of Arias Montanus. It contains, beſides the whole of the Complutenſian edition, a Chaldee paraphraſe on part of the Old Teſtament, which Cardinal Ximenes, having particular reaſons for not publiſhing it, had depoſited in the Theological library at Complutum. The New Teſtament has the Syriac verſion, and the Latin tranſlation of Santes Pagninus, as reformed by Arias Montanus. Leſs beautiful, but more accurate, and comprehending more than any of the three preceding Polyglots, is the Polyglot of London, printed in 1653 — 1657, in ſix volumes, to which the Lexicon Heptaglotton of Caſtell, in two volumes folio, is uſually added. Dr. Bryan Walton, afterwards biſhop of Cheſter, was the editor of it. Twelve copies of it were printed on large paper: one, of great beauty, is in the library of St. Paul's cathedral; another was in that of the Count de Lauraguais; another is in the library of St. John's College at Cambridge. It was publiſhed by ſubſcription, and is ſaid to be the firſt book printed in that manner in England. Dr. Walton had leave from the Protector to import his paper duty free.

GREEK EDITIONS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

The firſt in point of time, was that of Eraſmus, with a new Latin tranſlation. He publiſhed five editions of it, in 1516, 1519, 1522, 1527, and 1535. The edition of 1519 is moſt eſteemed.

The next edition of the New Teſtament in Greek, is that inſerted in the Complutenſian Polyglot. The learned agree in wiſhing the editors had deſcribed, or, at leaſt, ſpecified the manuſcripts they made uſe of. The editors ſpeak highly of them; but this was, when the number of known manuſcripts was ſmall, and manuſcript criticiſm was in its infancy; ſo that, without impeaching either their candour or their judgment, their aſſertions, in this reſpect, muſt be underſtood with much limitation. It has been charged on them, that they ſometimes altered the Greek text, without the authority of a ſingle manuſcript, to make it conform to the Latin. Againſt this charge they have been defended by Goeze, and, to a certain extent, by Grieſbach.

The editions of Robert Stephens are next to be conſidered. For exquiſite beauty and delicacy of type, elegance and proper diſpoſition of contractions, ſmoothneſs and ſoftneſs of paper, liquid clearneſs of ink, and evenneſs of lines and letters, they have never been ſurpaſſed, and, in the opinion of many, never equalled. There are four editions of them publiſhed by himſelf, in 1546, 1549, 1550, and 1551. His ſon publiſhed a fifth edition in 1569. The third of theſe is in folio, and has the readings of ſixteen manuſcripts, in the margin. The two firſt are in 16mo, and of thoſe, the firſt (that in 1546) is the moſt correct.

The firſt edition of Beza was printed in 1565; he principally follows in it the third edition of Robert Stephens. He printed other editions in 1582, 1589, 1598. They do not contain, every where, the ſame text. In his choice of readings he is accuſed of being influenced by his Calviniſm.

The celebrated edition of the Elzevirs was firſt printed at Leyden, in 1624. It was printed from the third edition of Robert Stephens: where it varies from that edition, it follows, generally, the edition of Beza. By this edition, the text, which had fluctuated in the preceding editions, acquired a conſiſtency. It was generally followed in all the ſubſequent editions. It has deſervedly, therefore, obtained the appellation of Editio recepta. The editors of it are unknown.

EDITIONS WITH VARIOUS READINGS.

The celebrated edition of the Rev. John Mill was publiſhed at Oxford in 1707, after an aſſiduous labour of thirty years. He ſurvived the publication of it only fourteen days. He inſerted in his edition all the collections of various readings, which had been made before his time; he collated ſeveral original editions; procured extracts from Greek manuſcripts, which had never been collated; and, in many inſtances, added readings from the ancient verſions, and from the quotations of them in the works of the ancient fathers. The whole of the various readings collected by him, are ſaid, without any improbability, to to amount to thirty thouſand. He has enriched his work with moſt learned prolegomena, and a clear and accurate deſcription of his manuſcripts. He took the third edition of Stephens for his text.

The edition of John Albert Bengel, abbot of Alſpirſpack, in the duchy of Wurtemberg, was publiſhed in 1734. He prefixed to it his "Introductio in Criſin Novi Teſtamenti;" and ſubjoined to it his "Apparatus Criticus & Epilogus." He altered the text, where he thought it might be improved; but, except in the Apocalypſe, he ſtudiouſly avoided inſerting in the text any reading, which was not in ſome printed edition. Under the text he placed ſome ſelect readings, reſerving the whole collection of various readings, and his own ſentiments upon them, for his Apparatus Criticus. He expreſſed his opinion of theſe marginal readings by the Greek letters, α, β, γ, δ, and ε. α denotes, that he held the reading to be genuine; β, that he thought its genuineneſs was not abſolutely certain, but that the reading appeared to him preferable to that in the text; γ, that the reading in the margin was of equal value with the reading in the text; δ, that the marginal reading ſeemed of leſs value; and ε, that he thought it ſpurious.

All former editions of the Greek Teſtament were ſurpaſſed by that of John James Wetſtein; it was publiſhed in two volumes folio, in 1751, at Amſterdam. He adopted for his text the editio recepta of the Elzevirs. His collection of various readings far ſurpaſſes that of Mill or Bengel. His notes are particularly valuable, for the copious extracts he has made from the Rabbinical writers. Theſe greatly ſerve to explain the idiom and turn of expreſſion uſed by the Apoſtolic writers and Evangeliſts.

Dr. John James Grieſbach, whoſe edition of the New Teſtament was firſt publiſhed in 1775—1777, in two volumes octavo, at Halle. In the year 1796, the firſt volume was reprinted, under the patronage, and at the expence of his Grace the Duke of Grafton. It has extracts from two hundred manuſcripts, in addition to thoſe quoted in the former edition. He has collated all the Latin verſions publiſhed by Sabatier and Blanchini. His object is to give a ſelect and choice collection of the various readings, produced by Mill, Bengel, and Wetſtein, and of his own extracts, omitting all ſuch as are trifling in themſelves, ſupported by little authority, or evidently only errata.

There are many other reſpectable editions of the Greek Teſtament; but thoſe we have mentioned are confeſſedly the principal. The edition by Eraſmus, with a ſlight intermixture of the edition in the Complutenſian Polyglot, are the principal editions, from which almoſt all the ſubſequent editions have been taken.

For notice of Latin tranſlations, vide VULGATE in the Dictionary.

Every perſon, to whom the ſacred writings are dear, muſt wiſh them edited in the moſt perfect manner. It would reflect diſgrace on the learned of the Chriſtian world, that any Pagan author ſhould be publiſhed in a more perfect manner than the word of God.

An Engliſhman muſt view with pleaſure the uſeful and magnificent exertions of his countrymen in this reſpect. Biſhop Walton's Polyglot ranks firſt in that noble and coſtly claſs of publications; foreign countries can ſhew nothing equal to Dr. Kennicott's edition of the bible, or ſimilar either to Dr. Woide's edition of the Codex Alexandrinus, or Dr. Kipling's edition of the Codex Bezæ: and, in the whole republic of letters, nothing is now ſo impatiently expected, as the completion of Dr. Holmes's edition of the Septuagint, of which the books of Geneſis and of Exodus are publiſhed.

Where the word of God is concerned, the greateſt moderation ſhould be uſed: and care ſhould be taken, that the aſſertions made, are expreſſed accurately, and in ſuch terms as prevent improper concluſions being drawn from them. Where the number of the various readings is mentioned before perſons, to whom the ſubject is new, or in any work likely to have a general circulation, it ſhould be added, that their importance is rather of a literary than a religious kind; and that, whether conſidered collectively or individually, they do not affect the genuineneſs of the text, or the ſubſtance of its hiſtory or doctrine. The improvements, which propoſed alterations are thought to make, ſhould not be exaggerated; it ſhould be remarked, that alterations of that deſcription are confeſſedly few; and that none of them affect the goſpel as a hiſtory, as a rule of faith, or as a body of morality. Conjectural emendations ſhould almoſt always be reſiſted.

We proceed now to a ſubject more particularly intereſting to us as Britons, which is, the hiſtory of our national tranſlations; this has already engaged the attention of the learned, by whoſe labours we ſhall profit on this ſubject, as we have done on the foregoing.

ENGLISH TRANSLATIONS OF THE BIBLE.

It would be very difficult to aſcertain every Engliſh tranſlator, or when the Scriptures were firſt tranſlated into the language of this country:—— that the Saxons read the bible in their own language, is an opinion well authenticated; ſome parts parts at leaſt having been tranſlated by Adelm, biſhop of Sherborne, Eadfrid (or Ecbert) biſhop of Lindisferne, the venerable Bede, and king Alfred. Ælfric, abbot of Malmeſbury, tranſlated the Pentateuch, Judges, and Job, which were printed at Oxford in the year 1699. (Le Long, Calmet. Lewis's Hiſtory of the Engliſh Tranſlation, p. 6.) And the four goſpels were printed from an ancient Saxon MS. now in the Bodleian Library. (Lewis, p. 4.) in 1571, under the care of the martyrologiſt John Fox, aſſiſted and encouraged by Matthew Parker, archbiſhop of Canterbury. The title is, "The Goſpels of the Fower Evangeliſts, tranſlated in the olde Saxons tyme out of Latin, into the vulgare toung of the Saxons, and now publiſhed for teſtimonie of the ſame. At London by John Daye, dwelling ouer Alderſgate 1571 Cum privilegio regiæ majeſtatis per decennium." And ſeveral parts of the Scriptures had been from time to time tranſlated by different perſons; proofs of which, if not the very tranſlations themſelves, exiſt in different libraries of this kingdom. In particular, in the year 1349, the Pſalms, tranſlated by Richard Rolle, an hermit of Hampole in Yorkſhire: and in the Harleian, and the king's libraries, are ſpecimens of other and different verſions; and ſoon afterwards John Wiclif tranſlated the New Teſtament. Lewis, p. 12, &c.

John Wiclif was born about the beginning of the fourteenth century, at Wiclif in Yorkſhire. Being bred to learning, he was ſent to Queen's College, Oxford, and admitted a commoner; but ſoon after removed to Merton College, where he was a probationer, but not a fellow. Biograph. Britan. vol. vii. In 1356, he is ſaid to have written a tract "Of the Laſt Age:" in which he expoſed the many corrupt ways uſed to obtain eccleſiaſtical benefices He gained conſiderable reputation by defending the intereſt of the Univerſity againſt the encroachments of the begging friars; and was choſen warden of Baliol-Hall, and preſented to the rectory of Fylingham in Lincolnſhire, which he afterwards exchanged for that of Lotegarſhall. December 14, 1365, he was nominated warden of Canterbury College, incorporated into Chriſt Church in Oxford, by archbiſhop Iſlip the founder; but at the death of the archbiſhop, he with three ſecular fellows were, in 1367, ejected from thence, and on appeal the ſentence was confirmed by the Pope's bull in 1370. After his ejectment, he read lectures in divinity in that Univerſity with ſuch applauſe, that almoſt every thing he ſaid was received as an oracle. In 1374, king Edward III. nominated him, with the biſhop of Bangor and others, to be his ambaſſador to treat with the Pope's nuncios concerning the proviſions of eccleſiaſtical benefices here in England, claimed by the Pope, and long complained of by our parliaments as very injurious to the rights of the Engliſh church. As a reward for his faithfulneſs in executing this commiſſion, which was held at Bruges. (Biograph. Britan.) the king gave him the prebend of Auſt, in the collegiate church of Weſtbury, in the county of Gloceſter, and then in the dioceſe of Worceſter, [Gloceſter was elevated into a biſhopric by king Henry VIII.] with the rectory of Lutterworth in Leiceſterſhire. But having ſhewed himſelf a defender of the king's ſupremacy, and freely expoſed the artifices and encroachments of the papal power, nineteen articles of accuſation were extracted from his lectures and ſermons, and tranſmitted to the Pope, (Gregory XI.) who, on the 21ſt of May 1377, diſpatched to Simon Sudbury, archbiſhop of Canterbury, and William Courtney, biſhop of London, three bulls; by the firſt of which, theſe prelates were directed to cauſe John Wiclif to be apprehended, impriſoned and put in irons: this gave the Doctor a great deal of trouble, and would, in all probability, have ended in his death, if he had not been protected by the Duke of Lancaſter, uncle to Richard II. who was then king. It ſeems that about this time he ſet about tranſlating the whole bible in Engliſh from the Latin; probably, not being ſufficiently ſkilled in Hebrew and Greek to tranſlate from the original tongues. In 1383, he was ſeized with a palſy, which however did not prevent his attending the duties of his function till the 28th of December 1384, when he was again attacked, and died the 31ſt of the ſame month. There are ſeveral copies of this tranſlation of the New Teſtament in different libraries, both public and private, though with ſome degree of variation. Lewis, p. 29. In the year 1731, the New Teſtament was printed in folio, under the care of the Rev. John Lewis, miniſter of Margate, and chaplain to Lord Malton, with a gloſſary.

In the year 1526, William Tyndal printed the firſt edition of his New Teſtament.

William Tyndal, or Tindale, or Tyndall, otherwiſe Hitchins, was born ſomewhere in Wales; and being bred to learning, was placed in Magdalen-Hall, in Oxford, where now remains an original picture of him. Here he took his degrees, and read lectures privately in divinity to ſeveral of the ſtudents of that hall, and fellows of the adjoining college. His manners and converſation, ſays Fox, in his Acts and Monuments, were ſuch, that all who knew him reputed and eſteemed him to be a man of moſt virtuous diſpoſition, and life unſpotted. Wood ſays, he was expelled for his Lutheran tenets; and whether he took any degree in that Univerſity does not appear. Hiſt. Univ. Oxon.

From Oxford he removed to Cambridge, whence, after ſome ſtay, he went to Little Sodbury in Gloceſterſhire, where he was entertained in the family of Sir John Welch, as tutor to his children. But being ſuſpected of hereſy by the neighbouring clergy, with whom he had ſometimes diſputes about religion, and being by them threatened and perſecuted in the eccleſiaſtical courts, he, with the conſent of Sir John, left the family, and went to London, where he for ſome time preached in the church of St. Dunſtan's in the weſt. Here he obtained the recommendation of Sir Henry Guildford, maſter of the horſe, to Dr. Cuthbert Tonſtal, biſhop of London, to whom he preſented an oration of Iſocrates, tranſlated by himſelf out of the Greek, with an epiſtle to the biſhop which he wrote by the advice of Sir Henry. But the biſhop's anſwer was, that his houſe was full; that he had more than he could provide for; and adviſed him to ſeek out in London, where he could not fail of employment. Not being able to obtain any, he was ſupported by Mr. Humphry Monmouth, a draper and alderman of London, a favourer of Luther's opinions; with whom he abode half a year, behaving in the moſt ſober and temperate manner; ſtudying night and day, and bending his thoughts towards the tranſlation of the New Teſtament into Engliſh. But being ſenſible of the hazard he would run by printing it in England, he reſolved to go into Germany, as a place of greater ſecurity and more liberty. And this he was better enabled to do by the aſſiſtance of his friend Mr. Monmouth, who gave him an annuity of ten pounds a year, then a ſufficient maintenance for a ſingle man, and as much as Tyndal deſired. At his firſt leaving England, he went as far as Saxony, where he conferred with Luther, and other eminent reformers. From thence he returned, and ſettled at Antwerp, where was at that time a conſiderable factory of Engliſh merchants, many of which were zealous profeſſors of Luther's doctrine. Here he immediately ſet himſelf about his favourite work, the Engliſh tranſlation of the New Teſtament, in which he had the aſſiſtance of John Fry, (or Frith) and a friar named William Roye, who wrote for him, and helped him to compare the texts together; and in the year 1526, it was printed in octavo without a name, with an epiſtle at the end, wherein he deſired them that were learned to amend if ought were found amiſs. This edition is very ſcarce: for ſoon after its firſt appearance, the biſhop of London, being at Antwerp, deſired Auguſtus Packington, an Engliſh merchant, to buy up all the copies that remained unſold; and on the biſhop's return, they with many other books were burned at Paul's Croſs, ſays Fox. This, Dr. Jortin, in his life of Eraſmus, thinks was done by the biſhop to ſerve Tyndal; however that be, the ſale of theſe copies put a good ſum of money into Tyndal's pocket, and enabled him to prepare another edition for the preſs more correct than the former, which however was not printed till 1534, he being probably hindered by his avocations as clerk to the Engliſh merchants, in which capacity he was received on his firſt going to Antwerp. Fuller's Eccleſ. Hiſt. Lewis. Biog. Brit.

From the firſt edition five thouſand copies were re-printed by the Dutch printers in 1527, 1528, and in 1530; but all theſe editions are repreſented to be exceedingly incorrect. In 1534, the Dutch printed a fifth edition, corrected by George Joye, who not only corrected the typographical errors, but ventured to alter, and amend as he thought, the tranſlation; and ſoon after the ſecond edition by Tyndal himſelf appeared, in which he complains of Joye's foreſtalling him, and altering his tranſlation.

George Joye, who corrected the Dutch edition of Tyndal's New Teſtament in 1534, (for this he was paid, according to his own account, three ſtivers, or 4½d. per ſheet, receiving only fourteen ſhillings Flemiſh for the whole. Lewis.) was an Engliſh refugee, born in Bedfordſhire, and educated in Peter-houſe, Cambridge, where he took his degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1512, and that of Maſter in 1527, in which year alſo he was admitted fellow; but being accuſed of hereſy, he fled to Straſburg. He publiſhed a tranſlation of Iſaiah in 1531; the Pſalter, and Jeremiah with the ſong of Moſes, in 1534. In the reign of king Edward VI. he returned to England, and died in his native country in the year 1553.

Beſides purchaſing the copies of Tyndal at Antwerp, other means were tried: orders and monitions were iſſued by the archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the biſhop of London, to bring in all the New Teſtaments tranſlated into the vulgar tongue, that they might be burned, and to prohibit the reading of them.

His brother John Tyndal was proſecuted, and ſentenced to do penance: his patron, alderman Monmouth, was impriſoned, and almoſt ruined.

In 1553, king Henry VIII. ordered all the books containing ſeveral errors, &c. with the tranſla-

tion of the Scriptures corrupted by Will. Tyndal, as well in the Old Teſtament as in the New, to be utterly expelled, rejected, and put away out of the hands of his people, and not to go abroad among his ſubjects: a proclamation was iſſued to the ſame purpoſe.

Tyndal's tranſlation of the Pentateuch was printed at Marlborough in Heſſe the year before, and that of Jonah this year. Some are of opinion theſe were all he tranſlated, and Fox mentions no more; but Hall and Bale, his contemporaries, ſay, that he likewiſe tranſlated Joſhua, &c. to Nehemiah; which, unleſs Matthew's be ſo far a new tranſlation, is moſt probable. Fuller preſumes, that he tranſlated the Old Teſtament out of the Latin, as his friends allowed him not to have any ſkill in Hebrew: but in this he might be miſtaken. He finiſhed his tranſlation of the Pentateuch in the year 1528; but going by ſea to Hamburgh, he ſuffered ſhipwreck, with the loſs of all his books, papers, &c. ſo that he was obliged to begin the whole again. Fox. Lewis.

Tyndal himſelf, in a letter to John Frith, written January 1583, ſays, "I call God to recorde againſt the day we ſhall appear before our Lord Jeſus, to give a reckoning of our doings, that I never altered one ſyllable of God's word againſt my conſcience; nor would do this day, if all that is in earth, whether it be honour, pleaſure, or riches, might be given me. Moreover, I take God to witneſs to my conſcience, that I deſire of God to myſelf in this world, no more than that without which I cannot keep his laws."

It appears however that the king, in purſuance of his own ſettled judgment, thinking a great deal of good might come of people's reading the New Teſtament with reverence, and following of it, commanded the biſhops to call to them the beſt learned of the two Univerſities, and to cauſe a new tranſlation to be made, that the people ſhould not be ignorant of God's law: but nothing being done, the people ſtill read and ſtudied Tyndal's; therefore, according to the policy of the times, it was determined to get rid of ſo dangerous an heretic; and the king and council employed one Henry Phillips, who inſinuated himſelf into the acquaintance of Mr. Tyndal, and Mr. Thomas Pointz, an Engliſh merchant, at whoſe houſe he lodged: and at a favourable opportunity he got the procurator-general of the emperor's court to ſeize on Tyndal, by whom he was brought to Vilvorden or Filforde, about 18 miles from Antwerp; and after being impriſoned a year and an half, notwithſtanding letters in his favour from ſecretary Cromwell and others to the Court at Bruſſels, he was tried, and none of his reaſons in his defence being admitted, he was condemned by virtue of the emperor's decree made in the aſſembly at Augſburgh in the year 1536. His friend Mr. Pointz alſo was for ſome time kept in priſon, but afterwards made his eſcape. Being brought to the place of execution, he was firſt ſtrangled, calling out in his laſt moments, "Lord, open the king of England's eyes!" and then was burned. Thus died William Tyndal, with this teſtimony to his character given him by the emperor's procurator or attorney-general, though his adverſary, that he was "Homo doctus, pius, et bonus;" which Fox tranſlates, a learned, good, and godly man: and others who converſed with him in the caſtle, reported of him, that "if he were not a good Chriſten man, they could not tell whom to truſt." Fox. Biog. Brit. Fuller's Ch. Hiſt. and Eng. Worth.

The firſt Engliſh bible, or complete tranſlation of the Scriptures printed, was that by Myles Coverdale, the firſt edition of which bears date 1535, dedicated to king Henry VIII. This edition is printed in folio, and the title, ornamented with an emblematical border cut in wood, is

"Biblia, the Bible; that is, the Holy Scripture of the Olde and New Teſtament, faithfully and newly tranſlated out of Douche and Latyn into Engliſhe. M.D.XXXV."

"St. Paul, 2 Theſſ. iii. Praie for us, that the word of God maie have free paſſage and be glorified, &c."

"St. Paul, Coloſſ. iii. Let the word of Chriſt dwell in you plenteouſly in all wiſdom, &c."

"Joſue i. Let not the boke of this lawe departe out of thy mouth, but exerciſe thyſelfe therein day and night." A copy is in the Britiſh Muſeum.

In Biſhop Coverdale's bible we meet with the following judicious remark, which ſhews the very reſpectable knowledge and temper of that great man. "Now whereas the moſt famous interpreters of all geve ſondrye judgmentes on the texte (ſo far as it is done by the ſpiryte of knowlege in the Holye Gooſte) methynke no man ſhoulde be offended thereat, for they referre theyr doynges in mekenes to the ſpiryte of trueth in the congregation of God: and ſure I am, that there commethe more knowlege and underſtondinge of the Scripture by their ſondrye tranſlacions, than by all the gloſes of our ſophiſticall doctours. For that one interpreteth ſomthynge obſcurely in one place, the ſame tranſlateth another (or els he himſelfe) more manifeſtly by a more playne vocable of the ſame meaning in another place."

More than common care ſeems to have been taken by Myles Coverdale in the language of his tranſlation:

tion: we have ſome, but they are very few, inſtances of barbariſm, and none which are not authoriſed by the pureſt writers of the times in which he wrote. To him and other tranſlators of the Scriptures, eſpecially of the preſent bible by the authority of king James, our language owes perhaps more than to all the authors who have written ſince: and even though ſome of the expreſſions may appear uncouth, their fewneſs renders them not offenſive; they are never vulgar, they preſerve their ancient ſimplicity pure and undefiled, and in their circumſtance and connection perhaps but ſeldom could be exchanged for the better: nor will this opinion be condemned when it is conſidered, that that elegant writer and learned prelate biſhop Lowth has conſtantly uſed the words where he has not differed from the tranſlation; and whenever amendments have been intended in the language of the Scriptures, if we have gained any thing in elegance, we have almoſt aſſuredly loſt in dignity.

Myles Coverdale was born in Yorkſhire, in the reign of king Richard III. or beginning of king Henry VII. about the year 1484, and being educated in the Romiſh religion, became an Auguſtine monk. But afterwards embracing the reformation, he entered into holy orders. He ſeems little noticed during the reign of Henry VIII.; but ſoon after the acceſſion of Edward VI. he was one of the firſt, upon the revival of the church of England, together with Dr. Robert Barnes, that taught the purity of the goſpel, and dedicated himſelf to the ſervice of religion; and in the year 1551 was, on the deceaſe of Dr. John Harman, conſecrated biſhop of Exeter; being promoted for his ſingular knowledge in divinity, and his unblemiſhed character: "Propter ſingularem ſacrarum literarum doctrinam, moreſque probatiſſimos." Wood's Hiſt. Univ. Oxon.

Under the change of religion in queen Mary's reign, our biſhop was like others ejected from his ſee, and thrown into priſon; but M. Machæbæus ſuperintendant in Denmark, and related to Coverdale's wife, obtained of Chriſtian, king of Denmark, who alſo had ſome knowledge of him, having ſeen him at his court in Henry VIII's time, to intercede with queen Mary in his behalf; which he did with ſuch perſeverance, that after ſome conſiderable time, and not without difficulty, he was releaſed, and permitted to go into baniſhment. Two letters written by Chriſtian to queen Mary on this occaſion, are preſerved by Fox in his Acts and Monuments.

Coverdale took up his reſidence principally at Geneva, where he engaged with ſome proteſtant refugees in a new verſion of the Scriptures from the Hebrew and Greek languages with notes, called from the place, The Geneva Bible; and after the death of queen Mary, when the affairs in religion took a different turn, he came back to England, but not immediately, probably becauſe the tranſlation was not then finiſhed; and (ſays the author of his life in the Biographia Brit.) refuſed to be reſtored to his biſhopric; but this is hardly reconcileable with the ſtate of his poverty and complaints related by Mr. Strype, who ſays,

"Old Myles Coverdale, D. D. formerly biſhop of Exon, and an exile, famous for tranſlating the bible into Engliſh in the reign of king Henry the Eighth, and other good ſervices to religion, had been hitherto without any place of preferment, living privately in and about London, and often preaching in the churches there. For this very reverend man, that had ſo well deſerved of religion, our biſhop had a great concern; and it troubled him much to ſee ſuch a one as it were caſt by, without that notice taken of him that was due; and once cried out about it, "I cannot excuſe us biſhops;" but ſomewhat, he ſaid, he had to ſpeak for himſelf, that he had offered him divers things, which nevertheleſs he thought not meet to accept of. This man, notwithſtanding his great years, had gotten the plague this year, and recovered, as though God had ſome more work for him to do in the church before his death. Grindal acquaints the ſecretary herewith: telling him, that ſurely it was not well, that father Coverdale, as he ſtiled him, Qui ante nos omnes fuit in Chriſto; i. e. who was in Chriſt before us all; ſhould now be in his age without ſtay of living. And therefore, Landaff being void, he recommended him to the ſecretary for that ſee, if any competency of living might be made of it, after it had been ſo ſpoiled and ſtripped by the laſt incumbent: putting him in mind here, that it would be well, if any means might be found, that things wickedly alienated from that ſee might be reſtored. But, I ſuppoſe, Coverdale cared not now to enter upon the charge of a biſhopric, conſidering his own age, and his want of ſtrength, and activity, required to execute ſuch an office. But in fine, in the month of February, our biſhop collated Coverdale to the pariſh of S. Magnus, at the bridge foot; and withal, ſued to the ſecretary to obtain the favour of the queen to releaſe him his firſt-fruits, which came to ſixty pounds and upwards. And the venerable man pleaded himſelf for this favour to be ſhewn him, for theſe reaſons, viz. that he had been deſtitute ever ſince ſince his biſhopric had been taken away from him; (which was upon the death of king Edward) and that he never had penſion, annuity, or ſtipend of it, for ten years now paſt. And that he was unable either to pay the firſt-fruits, or long to enjoy the ſame living; not able to live over a year, and going upon his grave. And laſtly, adding theſe words, that if poor old Myles might be thus provided for, he ſhould think this enough to be as good as a feaſt. And he enjoyed his requeſt.

The contents of his letter to the archbiſhop, which will ſet forth his preſent condition, were,

"That it would pleaſe him to join with the biſhop of London in ſuit for him to the queen, that, in favourable conſideration how deſtitute he had been of a competent living in the realm, ever ſince his biſhopric was violently taken away from him; I being, ſaid he, compelled to reſign, and how I never had penſion, annuity, or ſtipend of it, theſe ten years and upwards; how unable alſo I am to pay the firſt-fruits, or long to enjoy the ſaid benefice, going upon my grave, as they ſay, and not like to live another year; her majeſty, at the contemplation of ſuch reverend, honourable, and worthy ſuitors, will moſt graciouſly grant me her warrant and diſcharge for the firſt-fruits of the ſaid benefice. And as I am bold moſt humbly to crave your Grace's help herein, ſo am I fully perſuaded, God willing, to ſhew myſelf again as thankful, and in my vocation, during my ſhort time, as fruitful, and as quiet as I can.

"MYL. COV. quond. Exon."

"29th Jan. New Year."

It is to be obſerved, that many of the firſt reformers had a great objection to the eccleſiaſtical habits, and to almoſt every kind of ceremony; holding them remnants of popery. The refugees, who ſettled at Geneva, were particularly tenacious in this reſpect. The expreſſion, as quiet as I can, ſeems to imply that ſuch objections had been made by Coverdale, and ſome arguments uſed to prevail on him to conform; to which not conſenting, his other merits might not be ſufficient to his re-eſtabliſhment in the church.

"He wrote alſo in the beginning of February to Cecyl the ſecretary, to the ſame import, to be a means for him to the queen, to grant him the firſt-fruits of the ſaid S. Magnus, which the biſhop of London had gently granted him the paſtoral office and benefice of. That heretofore (he praiſed God for it) his honour had ever been his ſpecial help and ſuccour in all his rightful ſuits. And that, if now (that poor old Myles might be provided for) it would pleaſe him to obtain this for him, he ſhould think this enough to be as good as a feaſt. And ſo beſeeching him to take this his boldneſs in good part, he committed him and all his to the gracious protection of the Almighty.

"MYL. COV. quond. Exon."

"From London, 6th Feb.

Coverdale wrote a month or ſix weeks after to the archbiſhop again, ſignifying that the Lord Robert Dudley ſent him a meſſage, that the queen had granted him his firſt-fruits. He lived little more than two years after, and died aged 81, living, as he promiſed the archbiſhop, quiet, though not coming up to the uniformity required, which had occaſioned ſo much unquietneſs in others: and perhaps relinquiſhing his pariſh before his death. For he was buried not at S. Magnus, but S. Bartholomew.

At the convocation, 1536, probably, the clergy agreed upon a petition to the king, that he would be graciouſly pleaſed to grant unto the laity the reading of the bible in the Engliſh tongue; and that a new tranſlation might be made for that purpoſe; and ſoon after were iſſued injunctions to the clergy by the authority of the king's highneſſe, the ſeventh article of which commands,

"That every perſon or proprietary of any pariſh church within this realm, at this great feaſt of St. Peter ad vincula, [Aug. 1.] next coming, provide a boke of the whole bible, both in Latin and alſo in Engliſh, and lay the ſame in the quire for every man that will look thereon: and ſhall diſcourage no man from the reading any part of the bible, either in Latin or Engliſh; but rather comfort, exhort, and admoniſh every man to read the ſame, as the very word of God, and the ſpiritual food of man's ſoul; whereby they may better know their duties to God, to the ſovereign lord the king, and their neighbour: ever gentilly and charitably exhorting them, that uſing a ſober and modeſt behaviour in the reading and inquiſition of the true ſenſe of the ſame, they do in no wiſe ſtifly or eagerly contend or ſtrive one with another about the ſame, but refer the declaration of thoſe places that be in controverſy to the judgment of them that be learned."

The firſt edition of Matthew's bible generally known was printed in the year 1537. The title is, in an emblematical frontiſpiece cut in wood, "The Byble, which is all the Holy Scripture: in which are contained, the Olde and Newe Teſtament, truly and purely tranſlated into Engliſh by Thomas Matthew."

"Eſaye

" Set forth with the king's moſt gracious lycence."

At the end.

" ¶ The Ende of the Newe Teſtament of the whole Byble."

" ¶ To the honour and praiſe of God was this byble prynted and fyneſhed in the yere of our Lorde God, a. M.D.XXXVII."

The name of Thomas Matthew is ſaid to have been fictious, and uſed by the real editor John Rogers from motives of prudence or fear; for although no clamour was raiſed againſt Myles Coverdale for his tranſlation, the name of Tyndal was exceedingly odious to the clergy; and much trouble might reaſonably have been expected from an acknowledged republication of his tranſlation.

" None will deny, ſays Fuller, but that many faults needing amendment are found in the [Tyndal's] tranſlation, which is no wonder to thoſe who conſider; firſt, ſuch an undertaking was not the taſk for a man, but men. Secondly, no great deſign is invented and perfected at once. Thirdly, Tyndal, being an exile, wanted many neceſſary accommodations. Fourthly, his ſkill in Hebrew was not conſiderable; yea, generally learning in languages was then but in the infancie thereof. Fifthly, our Engliſh tongue was not improved to that expreſſiveneſs, whereat at this day it is arrived. However, what he undertook, was to be admired as glorious; what he performed, to be commended as profitable; wherein he failed, is to be excuſed as pardonable, and to be ſcored on the account rather of that age, than of the author himſelf. Yea, Tyndal's pains were uſeful, had his tranſlation done no other good than to help towards the making of a better; our laſt tranſlators having in expreſſe charge from king James to conſult the tranſlation of Tyndal."

Matthew's bible is compoſed partly from Tyndal's and partly from Coverdale's tranſlations, with ſome alterations; taking Tyndal's New Teſtament, and ſuch parts of the Old as were tranſlated by him, except that the prophecy of Jonah is of Coverdale's tranſlation; neither is Tyndal's prologue prefixed to Jonah, or any other prologue inſerted, except to the Romans, in that which is ſuppoſed to be the firſt edition. Sundry alterations are made from Coverdale, and ſome have been of opinion, that it was a new work undertaken by Coverdale, Tyndal, and Rogers, and that the latter tranſlated the Apocrypha; but Mr. Lewis thinks that Coverdale had none to aſſiſt him in his tranſlation, and that he was not concerned in that called Matthew's, but only John Rogers, who made a few alterations, but not a new tranſlation.

John Rogers was a native of Lancaſhire, and educated at Cambridge, where he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1525. From thence he was the ſame year choſen junior canon in Cardinal Wolſey's College (now Chriſt church) in Oxford, but on the publication of the ſix articles, he fled to Germany, and was appointed chaplain to the merchants at Antwerp, in whoſe ſervice he reſided ſome years. Here falling into company, and converſing with Tyndal, and Coverdale, (ſays Fox) he joined with them in that painful and moſt profitable labour of tranſlating the bible into the Engliſh tongue, [which is entitled, The tranſlation of Thomas Matthew] married, and renounced popery. He was afterwards choſen paſtor of a congregation of Proteſtants at Wittemberg in Saxony, having attained a knowledge of the language. In the reign of king Edw. VI. he came back to England, and was preferred to the vicarage of St. Sepulcre's in London. Biſhop Ridley likewiſe gave him a prebend in the church of St. Paul's, and the Dean and Chapter choſe him to be reader of the divinity leſſon there. Thus he continued till the reign of queen Mary, when preaching a ſermon at St. Paul's, warning the people to guard againſt popery, he was called before the council, and ſoon after tried and condemned as an heretic. He was the firſt martyr who ſuffered in that reign, being burned at Smithfield, Feb. 4, 1555.

Archbiſhop Cranmer's bible was printed in the year 1539, though perhaps firſt propoſed in convocation ſix years before, but had at that time proved abortive; and now publiſhed with a prologue by the archbiſhop. In this bible, the tranſlations of Coverdale and Matthew ſeem to be reviſed and corrected. The Pſalms are thoſe now uſed in the Liturgy.

In the year 1538, Grafton and Whitchurch had obtained permiſſion of king Henry VIII. to print the bible at Paris; but when the work was nearly finiſhed, by an order of the inquiſition dated the 17th of December the ſame year, the printers were inhibited under canonical pains to proceed; and the whole impreſſion of two thouſand five hundred copies was ſeized and confiſcated; but by the encouragement of the Lord Cromwell, ſome Engliſhmen returned to Paris, recovered the preſſes, types, &c. and brought them to London, where the work was reſumed, and a bible was finiſhed in 1539; the title of which is,

" ¶ The

" ¶ The Byble in Engliſhe, that is to ſaye, the content of all the Holy Scripture both of the Old and New Teſtament, truly tranſlated after the veryte of the Hebrew and Greke textes, by the dylygent ſtudye of dyverſe excellent learned men, expert in the forſayde tonges.

" ¶ Prynted by Richard Grafton and Edward Whitchurch. Cum privilegio ad imprimendum ſolum. 1539."

This was called Cranmer's bible, on account of the preface, or prologue, which was written by the archbiſhop.

Thomas Cranmer was born at Arſlacton in Nottinghamſhire, in the year 1489. He was educated at Cambridge, admitted a fellow of Jeſus College, and made one of the examiners of thoſe who took degrees in divinity. By marrying he loſt his fellowſhip; but his wife dying within a year, he was reinſtated. The occaſion of his preferment was his opinion concerning the king's divorce, " That it might be decided from the Scriptures, by learned men in England, as well as at Rome:" in conſequence of which Mr. Cranmer was ſent for to court, and made king's chaplain; and writing in favour of the divorce, he was promoted to the archdeaconry of Taunton. In 1530, being ſent to Italy, Germany, and France, to diſcuſs the king's marriage, the pope conſtituted him his plenipotentiary throughout England, Ireland, and Wales. In 1532, he married again; and on the death of archbiſhop Warham, was promoted to the ſee of Canterbury, and conſecrated in 1533. In 1545-6, he procured a repeal of the ſix articles, the eſtabliſhment of the communion in both kinds, and a public liturgy, &c. Upon king Edward's death he appeared for lady Jane Gray, for which he was ſummoned before queen Mary's council, and committed to the Tower. In the enſuing parliament he was attainted, and found guilty of high treaſon. His treaſon being pardoned, he was next tried at Oxford as an heretic, and burned on the 21ſt of March 1555-6, in the 67th year of his age.

There are ſeveral editions of archbiſhop Cranmer's bible; in particular, one in 1541, under the care of Tonſtal, biſhop of Durham, and Heath, biſhop of Rocheſter; and another, printed at Roan at the charge of Richard Carmarden, 1556.

In November 1539, the king appointed lord Cromwell to take eſpecial care and charge, that no manner of perſon or perſons within this his realm ſhall enterpriſe, attempt, or ſet in hand to print any bible in the Engliſh tongue of any manner of volume, during the ſpace of five years next enſuing the date thereof, but only ſuch as ſhall be deputed, aſſigned, and admitted by the ſaid lord Cromwell; and it is not improbable but this might have been done in favour of Taverner's bible, which appeared at this time: Bale calls it, Sacrorum recognitio, ſeu potius verſio nova; but Mr. Lewis ſays, that it is neither a bare reviſal, nor a correct edition of the Engliſh bible: nor yet ſtrictly a new verſion, but between both; it is what may be called, a correction of Matthew's bible, wherever the editor thought it needful. He takes in great part of Matthew's marginal notes, but omits ſeveral, and inſerts others of his own.

Richard Taverner was born at Briſley in Norfolk in the year 1505, and firſt entered at Bene't-college in Cambridge: after a year and half ſpent in academical ſtudies, he was choſen one of the junior canons of Chriſt-church (then Cardinal-college) in Oxford, where he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts, 1529. From thence he went to Staire-Inn, otherwiſe called Strond-Inn, deſtroyed for the purpoſe of building Somerſet-Houſe, to ſtudy the law, and from thence to the Inner Temple; where, it is ſaid, his way was to quote the law in Greek when he read any thing thereof. In 1534, he went to Court, being taken into the ſervice of Sir Thomas Cromwell; and in 1537, was made one of the ſignet in ordinary: in which ſituation he made this recognition of the bible, which was authoriſed to be read in churches.

After Lord Cromwell's death in 1540, he was committed priſoner to the Tower for publiſhing the bible; but he was ſoon acquitted, and reſtored to the king's favour, and to his place at Court, in which he continued till the acceſſion of queen Mary; from which time till her death, he retired to his ſeat called Norbiton-Hall, in Surry. He was afterwards a great favourite of queen Elizabeth, and received from her the honour of knighthood. He died at Woodeaton in Oxfordſhire, in July 1575.

The title of Taverner's bible is,

" The Moſt Sacred Bible, which is the Holy Scripture, conteyning the Old and New Teſtament, tranſlated into Engliſh, and newly recogniſed with great diligence after moſt faythful exemplars, by Rychard Taverner.

" Harken thou heaven, and thou earth gyve eare: for the Lorde ſpeaketh. Eſaie i.

" Prynted at London in Fleteſtrete at the ſygne of the ſonne, by John Byddell, for Thomas Barthlet.

M.D.XXXIX."

In the convocation held February 6, 1542, the archbiſhop in the king's name required the biſhops and clergy to reviſe the tranſlation of the Scriptures; and for that purpoſe different parts of the New Teſtament were put into the hands of ſeveral biſhops for their peruſal: the Archbiſhop took the goſpel of St. Matthew; Mark was given to LONGLAND, biſhop of Lincoln; Luke, to GARDINER, biſhop of Wincheſter; John, to GOODRICH, biſhop of Ely; Acts, to HEATH, biſhop of Rocheſter; Romans, to SAMSON, biſhop of Chicheſter; I. and II. Corinthians, to CAPON, biſhop of Sarum; Epheſians, Philippians, and Coloſſians, to BARLOW, biſhop of St. David's; I. and II. Theſſalonians, to BELL, biſhop of Worceſter; Timothy, Titus, and Philemon, to PARFEW, biſhop of St. Aſaph; I. and II. Peter, to HOLGATE, biſhop of Landaff; Hebrews, to SKIP, biſhop of Hereford; James, the three epiſtles of John, and Jude, to THYRLEBY, biſhop of Weſtminſter; and the Revelation, to WAKEMAN, biſhop of Gloceſter, and CHAMBERS, biſhop of Peterborough.

Many objections were raiſed on various pretences, and biſhop Gardiner read a liſt of ninety-nine Latin words, which he ſaid would not admit of being tranſlated into Engliſh. By this the archbiſhop found that this motion of tranſlation would come to nothing. And a determination of the king's to wreſt the work from the biſhops, and place it in the hands of the Univerſities, ſeems to have had a ſimilar fate: for the next year an act was paſſed which condemned all Tyndal's tranſlation as crafty, falſe, and untrue; and enacted, that all books of the Old and New Teſtament of his tranſlation ſhould by the authority of this act be aboliſhed, extinguiſhed, and forbidden to be kept and uſed in this realm or elſewhere in his majeſty's dominions. But it was provided, "That the bibles and New Teſtaments in Engliſh, not being of Tyndal's tranſlations, ſhould ſtand in force, and not be compriſed in this abolition or act. Nevertheleſſe, if there ſhould be found in anie ſuch bibles or New Teſtamentes anie annotations or preambles, that then the owners of them ſhould cut or blot the ſame in ſuch wiſe as they cannot be perceived or read, on pain of loſing or forfeiting for every bible, &c. 40s. Provided, that this article ſhould not extend to the blotting, &c. any quotations or ſummaries of chapters in any bibles."

It was likewiſe enacted, "That no manner of perſon or perſons, after the firſte day of October then next enſuing, ſhould take upon him or them to read, &c. openly to other in any church or open aſſembly, within any of the king's dominions, the bible or any part of the Scripture in Engliſh, unleſſe he was ſo appointed thereunto by the king, or by any ordinarie, &c. on pain of ſuffering a month's impriſonment. Provided, that the chauncellor of England, capitaines of the warres, the king's juſtices, the recorders of any city, borough, or town, the ſpeaker of the Parliament, &c. which heretofore have been accuſtomed to declare or teache any good, vertuous, or godly exhortations in anie aſſemblies, may uſe any part of the bible or holie Scriptures as they have been wont; and that every nobleman, and gentleman, being a houſholder, may read, or cauſe to be read by any of his familie, ſervants in his houſe, orchardes, or garden, and to his own familie, anie text of the bible or New Teſtament: and alſo every merchant-man, being a houſholder, and any other perſons other than women, prentiſes, &c. might read to themſelves privately the bible, &c. But no woman, (except noblewomen and gentlewomen, who might read to themſelves alone, and not to others, any texts of the bible, &c.) nor artificers, prentiſes, journeymen, ſerving-men, of the degrees of yomen or under, huſbandmen, nor labourers, were to read the bible or New Teſtament in Engliſhe to himſelf or any other privately or openly, upon paine of one month's impriſonment." Lewis, p. 149.

Grafton was called to account for printing Matthew's bible 1537, and examined as to the great bible, what notes he intended to ſet to it; to which he replied, "that he added none to the bible he printed, when he perceived the king and the clergy not willing to have any." Yet he was confined a priſoner in the Fleet ſix weeks, and then releaſed on being bound in a bond of 300l. neither to imprint or ſell any more Engliſh bibles till the king and clergy ſhould agree upon a tranſlation.

And again another act was paſſed July 8, 1546, whereby the having and reading Tyndal's and Coverdale's tranſlations was prohibited, as well as the uſe of any other than what was allowed by act of Parliament. Thus matters continued ſo long as king Henry lived; but, on the acceſſion of his ſon Edward VI. they took another turn; the reformation was encouraged, and the acts which prohibited the tranſlation of the Scriptures were repealed. Injunctions were iſſued, and ſent into every part of the kingdom, among other things enjoining, that within three months a bible of the larger volume in Engliſh, and within twelve months Eraſmus's Paraphraſe on the Goſpels, be provided, and conveniently placed in the churches for the people to read in.

COMMON PRAYER.

The ſame year alſo, 1549, was printed the Book of Common Prayer, compiled by Cranmer, archbiſhop of Canterbury; Day, biſhop of Chicheſter; Goodrich, biſhop of Ely; Skip, biſhop of Hereford; Holbeach, biſhop of Lincoln; Ridley, biſhop of Rocheſter; Thyrleby, biſhop of Wincheſter; Dr. May, dean of St. Paul's; Dr. Taylor, dean of Lincoln; Dr. Haines, dean of Exeter; Dr. Robertſon, dean of Durham; Dr. Redman, maſter of Trinity-College, Cambridge; and Dr. Cox, almoner to the king.

The title: "The booke of the Common Praier and adminiſtracion of the Sacramentes, and other rites and ceremonies of the Churche: after the uſe of the Church of Englande.

" Londini, in officina Richardi Grafton regij impreſſoris, cum privilegio ad imprimendum ſolum.

" Anno Domini MDXLIX, Menſe Martij.

DIVISION INTO VERSES.

On the death of Edward, when Mary came to the crown, many of the reformed fled into divers parts of Germany: and ſome of them who reſided at Geneva, ſetting about a new tranſlation of the Scriptures, in the year 1557 the New Teſtament was printed at Geneva by Conrade Badius, and is ſaid to be the firſt in Engliſh divided into verſes.

Whatever the antiquity of the Hebrew vowel points may be, the diviſion of verſes in the Old Teſtament is antecedent to the diſcovery of printing, or any manuſcripts that are known to exiſt; but in the Greek manuſcripts of the New Teſtament there is no diſtinction of verſes, and when they were firſt uſed by printers is perhaps not very accurately aſcertained.

Robert Stephens is thought to have been the author or inventor of verſes in the New Teſtament, which (ſays his ſon in the preface to his Concordance) he performed in a journey on horſeback [inter equitandum] from Paris to Lyons.

Father Calmet ſays, "the firſt diviſion of the New Teſtament was made by Robert Stephens in 1551, and of the whole bible in 1555." Michaelis ſays, "verſes were firſt uſed in the New Teſtament by Robert Stephens in 1551, and in the Old Teſtament by Hugo de St. Claro, a Dominican monk, in the twelfth century." But a Latin bible, tranſlated by Sanctus Pagninus, and printed at Lyons in the year 1527 or 1528, before Robert Stephens had printed any bible, on his own account, at leaſt, is divided, the verſes being numbered in the margin, and diſtinguiſhed in the text by paragraphical marks, both in the Old and New Teſtament, and in the Apocrypha. The New Teſtament is indeed made into fewer diviſions. St. Matthew's goſpel, in this edition, is divided into 576 verſes (the firſt chapter containing forty-nine, each of the preſent genealogical verſes making three) while the preſent diviſion amounts to 1071. The goſpel of St. Mark is as 257 to 678. In the Old Teſtament the difference is ſmall; in Geneſis only twenty-two verſes. Father Calmet notes this bible, but not the diviſion of verſes. In the title page the date is 1528, but the imprint at the end is, "Veteris ac novi inſtrumenti nova tranſlatio per Reverendum ſacræ Theolo. docto. Sanctem Pagninum Lucen. nuper edita, explicit. Impreſſa eſt autem Lugduni per Antonium du Ry. calcographum diligentiſſimum impenſis Franciſci Turchi, et Dominicj Berticinium Lucenſium, et Iacobi de Giuntis bibliopolæ civis Florentini. Anno Domini 1527, Die vero xxix Januarii." Is there not then reaſon to conclude, that Robert Stephens had ſeen this bible, foreſaw the utility of verſes, imitated, and improved thereon? The great advantage of ſuch a diviſion is allowed by all to whom the uſe of a concordance is known.

PUNCTUATION OF THE BIBLE.

The punctuation of the bible is a modern invention. In the ancient manuſcripts no marks are found, except a point and a blank ſpace. The comma was invented in the eighth century; the ſemicolon in the ninth; the other ſtops were introduced afterwards. The ſpirits and the accents are not earlier, in the opinion of moſt writers, than the ſeventh century.

CONCORDANCE TO THE BIBLE.

The firſt Engliſh concordance that we read of is that of Marbeck, printed in the year 1550, by Richard Grafton, compiled, as it ſeems, from the great bible, i. e. archbiſhop Cranmer's bible.

John Marbeck was an organiſt in Windſor choir, and much befriended by biſhop Gardiner. He was accuſed and condemned on the ſtatute of the Six Articles, but pardoned.

Another edition of the Geneva Teſtament was printed in 1560, in which year the whole bible was alſo printed at Geneva by Rowland Harle, or Hall, in quarto. The perſons who tranſlated the Geneva bible, are ſuppoſed to have been Coverdale, Goodman, Gilby, Whittingham, Samſon, and Cole; to which ſome add Knox, Bodleigh, and Pullain. The principal were, Coverdale, Whittingham, and Gilby, who did not return to England till the whole was finiſhed in 1560.

Chriſtopher Goodman was born in Cheſhire, and after a grammatical education ſent to Brazen-noſe-college at Oxford. In 1544 he took his Maſter of Arts degree, and in 1547 he was choſen one of the ſenior ſtudents of Chriſt-church, and profeſſor of divinity, (whether of the Margaret lectures or of thoſe founded by Henry VIII. does not appear) but quitted his preferment, and went abroad on Mary's coming to the crown, firſt to Francfort; but afterwards he removed to Geneva, with Whittingham and other diſſentients, on account of ſome eccleſiaſtical diſputes, where he abode till the reign of queen Elizabeth, when he returned to England, and died at Cheſter in the year 1602.

Anthony Gilby was likewiſe a refugee.

SINGING PSALMS.

William Whittingham was a Cheſhire man, and educated at the ſame college with Chriſtopher Goodman: in 1545 he was elected Fellow of All Souls, and two years after a ſenior ſtudent of Chriſt-church. He went abroad at the death of Edward VI. and returning in the reign of queen Elizabeth, he was made dean of Dunholme, (Durham) in 1563. He was one of thoſe who aſſiſted with Sternhold and Hopkins in tranſlating the Pſalms into metre, and his are diſtinguiſhed by the initials W. W. Thomas Norton, of Sharpenhaule, or Sharpenhoe in Bedfordſhire, was another of the tranſlators. Wood's Athenæ.

The firſt edition of Sternhold's pſalms was probably in 1552. But before this the Pſalms in metre were printed 1549, ſaid to be tranſlated by John Keeper; and another verſion by Robert Crowley, the ſame year.

Thomas Sampſon born about the year 1517, was educated at Oxford; and renouncing popery, he was ordained by Dr. Ridley, biſhop of London. In 1551, he was collated by the archbiſhop of Canterbury to the living of All Hallows, Bread-ſtreet, which he reſigned in 1553, being, it is ſaid, promoted to the deanery of Chicheſter. In the reign of queen Mary, being married, (his wife was the niece of Hugh Latimer) he left the kingdom, and retired to Geneva; but on the acceſſion of queen Elizabeth, returning to England, in 1561 he was promoted to the deanery of Chriſt-church, Oxford, of which dignity he was deprived in 1564, for not wearing the habits then enjoined. The queen offered him the biſhopric of Norwich, which he refuſed, for no other reaſon but his averſeneſs from the ceremonies and habits of the church. Wood's Athenæ.

Thomas Cole was during the reign of queen Mary a refugee at Geneva; but returning into England in the next reign, he was collated to the archdeaconry of Eſſex in January 1559, by Grindal, biſhop of London, and had the rectory of High-Ongar in Eſſex given him.

That which was done in the Geneva bible was as follows:—

" 1. Becauſe ſome tranſlations read after one ſort, and ſome after another, they noted in the margin the diverſities of ſpeech, and reading, eſpecially according to the Hebrew.

" 2. Where the Hebrew ſpeech ſeemed hardly to agree with ours, they noted in the margin, uſing that which was more intelligible.

" 3. Though many of the Hebrew names were altered from the old text, and reſtored to the true writing, and firſt original, yet in the uſual names, little was changed, for fear of troubling the ſimple readers.

" 4. Whereas the neceſſity of the ſentence required any thing to be added, whether verb, or other word, they put it in the text with another kind of letter, that it might eaſily be diſcerned from the common letter of the text.

" 5. As touching the diviſion of the verſes, they followed the Hebrew examples, adding the number to each verſe.

" 6. The principal matters were noted; and the arguments, both for each book, and for each chapter.

" 7. They ſet over the head of every page, ſome notable word, or ſentence, for the help of memory.

" 8. They ſet brief annotations upon all the hard places, as well for the underſtanding of obſcure words, as for declaration of the text. And for this purpoſe they diligently read the beſt commentaries; and had much conference with godly and learned brethren.

" 9. They ſet forth with figures certain places in the books of Moſes, of the Kings, and Ezekiel; which ſeemed ſo dark, that by no other deſcription they could be made eaſy to the reader.

" 10. They added certain maps of coſmography, of divers places and countries, partly deſcribed, and partly by occaſion touched, both in the Old and New Teſtament.

" 11. They adjoined two profitable tables: the one of interpretations of Hebrew names, and the other containing all the chief and principal matters of the whole bible.

But in the year 1565 the bible was preparing for a ſecond impreſſion. As this bible had been ſet forth before by a joint company of men, (the name of one whereof, and I think the chief undertaker, was John Bodleigh) ſo about the beginning of March they had finiſhed a careful review and correction of this tranſlation, in order to the reprinting it. Bodleigh had applied himſelf to the the queen's ſecretary Cecyl, for the renewing of his privilege, with longer term of years than was at firſt granted them, for the new printing of this bible, that had been by him and his aſſociates before publiſhed. But the ſecretary ſuſpended giving his furtherance, until he had heard the advice of the archbiſhop, and biſhop of London. Whereupon Bodleigh repaired unto them, and ſignified the charge he and the reſt had been at, by the laſt impreſſion, and by the late review, deſiring their letter to the ſecretary. The ſecretary, I ſuppoſe, might make ſome ſcruple at the encouragement of this new impreſſion; becauſe the biſhops had intended themſelves ſpeedily to publiſh a fair and accurate Engliſh tranſlation. But both the archbiſhop and biſhop willingly gave their letters to the ſecretary in Bodleigh's behalf: writing to him, that they thought ſo well of the firſt impreſſion, and the review of thoſe who had ſince travailed therein, that they wiſhed it would pleaſe him to be a means, that twelve years longer term might be by ſpecial privilege granted him in conſideration of the charges by him and his aſſociates in the firſt impreſſion, and the review ſithence ſuſtained. And that though one other ſpecial bible for the churches were meant by them to be ſet forth, as convenient time and leiſure hereafter might permit; yet ſhould it nothing hinder, but rather do much good, to have diverſity of tranſlations and readings. And, that if the licenſe hereafter to be made went ſimply forth, without proviſo of their overſight, as they thought it might ſo paſs well enough; yet they told the ſecretary, they would take ſuch order with the party, in writing [under his hand] that no impreſſion ſhould paſs but by their direction, conſent, and advice. This was writ from Lambeth, ſigned by the archbiſhop, and biſhop of London, March 9. Strype.

The reign of queen Mary was too unfavourable for any tranſlation of the Scriptures to be printed in England; and except the Geneva Teſtament before mentioned, we meet with nothing but a quarto primer, Latin and Engliſh, after the uſe of Sarum, with the piſtles and goſpels in Engliſh, printed by John Kingſton and Henry Sutton, 1557.

In the firſt parliament of queen Elizabeth, held January 1558, an act paſſed for reſtoring to the crown the ancient juriſdiction over the ſtate eccleſiaſtical and ſpiritual; and another for the uniformity of common prayer, and ſervice in the church, &c. The queen alſo appointed a royal viſitation, and gave her injunctions, as well to the clergy as laity, by which it was ordered, as in the reign of Edward VI. that they ſhould, at the charge of the pariſh, within three months, provide one book of the whole bible of the largeſt volume in Engliſh: and within twelve months the Paraphraſe of Eraſmus.

The following year the liturgy was reviewed, and altered in ſome paſſages; and being preſented to Parliament, was by them received and eſtabliſhed. The perſons employed were, according to Fuller, Maſter Whitehead, once chaplain to queen Ann Boleyn; Parker, archbiſhop of Canterbury; Grindal, biſhop of London; Cox, biſhop of Ely; Pilkington, biſhop of Durham; Dr. May, dean of St. Paul's; and Sir Thomas Smith, principal ſecretary of ſtate. And ſoon after a deſign was formed to make a new tranſlation of the Scriptures, under the direction of archbiſhop Parker; which however was not printed before the year 1568, when it firſt appeared in folio: this is called The Biſhops' Bible.

" The work was divided into ſeveral parcels, and aſſigned to men of learning and character, picked out for the purpoſe. Moſt of the diviſions are marked with great initial letters, ſignifying either the titles or names of the perſons employed. WILLIAM ALLY, biſhop of Exeter, had the Pentateuch for his proportion; and at the end there ſtands the capital letters W. E. Joſhua, Judges, Ruth, and the two books of Samuel, were given to RICHARD DAVIES, preferred to the ſee of St. David's when YOUNG was tranſlated to York; it is marked R. M. The four books of Kings, and Chronicles, were aſſigned to EDWIN SANDYS, then biſhop of Worceſter. The books of Ezra, Nehemiah, Eſther, and Job, were done by one whoſe name is marked A. P. C. which probably might ſtand for ANDREW PERSON, one of the archbiſhop's chaplains, and prebendary of Canterbury. The book of Pſalms is ſigned with T. B.; whether this was THOMAS BENTHAM, biſhop of Coventry, or THOMAS BEACON, prebendary of Canterbury, is ſomewhat uncertain, but moſt probably the latter. The Proverbs were tranſlated by one who ſubſcribes A. P. C. the C. ſtands at ſome diſtance, probably to diſtinguiſh the perſon from the former A. P. C. Eccleſiaſtes, and Solomon's Song, are marked with A. P. E. for ANDREAS PERNE Elienſis. Eſaiah, Jeremy, and Lamentations, were done by ROBERT HORN, biſhop of Wincheſter. as may be conjectured from the letters R. W. Ezekiel, and Daniel, were tranſlated by T. C. L. which is ſuppoſed to ſtand for BENTHAM, biſhop of Litchfield. Hoſea, Joel, and ſo forward through all the minor prophets, is ſigned E. L. and was done by EDMUND GRINDAL, DAL, biſhop of London. The Apocrypha, as it is ſaid, was tranſlated by PARKHURST, biſhop of Norwich; the capitals ſubjoined are T. N. Biſhop Burnet relates, BARLOW, biſhop of Chicheſter, began with Eſdras, and tranſlated to the book of Wiſdom. The four goſpels, the Acts of the Apoſtles, and the epiſtle to the Romans, were given to COX, biſhop of Ely; the capitals are R. E. for Ricardus Elienſis. The firſt epiſtle to the Corinthians is ſubſcribed G. G. which probably may ſtand for GABRIEL GOODMAN, then dean of Weſtminſter. The remainder of the New Teſtament has no capitals ſubjoined. Archbiſhop PARKER had the main direction of this affair, reviewed the performance, and, it may be, gave the finiſhing hand. He employed ſeveral critics in the Hebrew and Greek languages to review the old tranſlation, and compare it with the original. One LAWRENCE, an eminent Grecian, was made uſe of to examine the verſion of the New Teſtament. He ſeems to have been well qualified for this undertaking, managed with great exactneſs, and made ſeveral animadverſions upon the performances of Beza and Eraſmus in this way." Coll. Eccl. Hiſt.

The biſhop of Worceſter, who was well ſkilled in the oriental languages, when he had finiſhed his part, ſent it to the archbiſhop, with his letter, dated Worceſter, February 6, 1565.

My duty remembered: according to your Grace's letter of inſtruction, I have peruſed the book you ſent me, and with good diligence: having alſo, in conference with ſome other, conſidered of the ſame, in ſuch ſort, I truſt, as your Grace will not miſlike of. I have ſent up with it my clerk, whoſe hand I uſed in writing forth corrections and marginal notes. When it ſhall pleaſe your Grace to ſet over the book to be viewed by ſome one of your chaplains, my ſaid clerk ſhall attend a day or two, to make it plain unto him how my notes are to be placed. In mine opinion, your Grace ſhall do well to make the whole bible to be diligently ſurveyed by ſome well learned, before it be put to print; and alſo to have ſkilful and diligent correctors at the printing of it. That it may be done in ſuch perfection, that the adverſaries can have no occaſion to quarrel with it. Which thing will require a time; ſed ſat cito, ſi ſat bene. The ſetters forth of this our common tranſlation followed Munſter too much, who doubtleſs was a very negligent man in his doings, and often ſwerved very much from the Hebrew. Thus, truſting that your Grace will take in good part my trifles, wherein wanted no good will, I commend the ſame to the grace of Almighty God. From my houſe at Worceſter. Your Grace's in Chriſt at commandment.

"EDW. WIGORN."

And in another letter the ſame pious biſhop puts the archbiſhop in mind of this great work to proceed earneſtly forward in it:—

Your Grace (ſaid he) ſhould much benefit the church in haſtening forward the bible, which you have in hand: thoſe that we have, be not only falſe printed, but alſo give great offence to many by reaſon of the depravity in reading."

To Gueſt biſhop of Rocheſter, the archbiſhop ſent the book of Pſalms to reviſe; and he ſent it back again with his notes and advertiſements, as the biſhop of Worceſter had done. In his letter to the archbiſhop, he ſaid, 'He had not altered the tranſlation, but where it gave occaſion of an error. As at the firſt Pſalm, at the beginning, I turn the preterperfect tenſe into the preſent tenſe, becauſe the ſenſe is too harſh in the preterperfect tenſe. Where in the New Teſtament one piece of a pſalm is reported, I tranſlate it in the Pſalms according to the tranſlation thereof in the New Teſtament, for the avoiding of the offence that may riſe to the people upon divers tranſlations. Where two great letters be joined together, or where one great letter is twice put, it ſignifieth that both the ſentences of the words be expounded together.'

" To Parkhurſt biſhop of Norwich, the archbiſhop ſent another part of the bible, to make his notes and advertiſements upon, who wrote back to the archbiſhop, 'That he would travail therein with ſuch diligence and expedition as he might.'

" Davies biſhop of St. David's had another portion; and he wrote to the archbiſhop, 'That he was in hand with that part of the bible he ſent him.' And again, not long after the year 1566, he wrote the archbiſhop, That he would finiſh it with as much ſpeed as he could; and that he beſtowed for his performance of the ſame all ſuch time as he could ſpare.'

" This biſhop was now very buſy in tranſlating the bible into Welch, together with William Saliſbury, biſhop of Man, a man very learned in the Britiſh antiquities.

" This buſineſs in correcting the former tranſlation of the bible went forward the next year 1566.

" Cox, biſhop of Ely, who ſeems to have had another part of the holy Scripture committed to him, in a letter dated May 3, 1566, had theſe words concerning this noble work: 'I truſt your Grace is well forward with the bible by this time. I perceive the greateſt burthen will lie upon upon your neck, touching care and travail. I would wiſh that ſuch uſual words as we Engliſh people be acquainted with, might ſtill remain in their form and ſound, ſo far as the Hebrew will well bear; inkhorn terms to be avoided. The tranſlation of the verbs in the Pſalms to be uſed uniformly in one tenſe, &c. And if ye tranſlate bonitas, or miſericordia, to uſe it likewiſe in all places of the Pſalms, &c. God ſend this good travail a bleſſed ſucceſs.'

" We ſhall hear more of the archbiſhop Parker's care and pains in this tranſlation, under the years 1568, 1569, and 1572, when it ſeems firſt to have been printed in the largeſt folio, according to Doctor Fulk, in his Defence of the Engliſh Tranſlation againſt Gregory Martin, where he ſpeaks of the bible reviſed by divers biſhops to be firſt printed in the large volume and authoriſed for the churches." Strype's Life of Archbiſhop Parker, p. 208.

There is a peculiarity obſervable in the Pſalms of this tranſlation, for which there ſeems no apparent reaſon; viz. the word אלהים is tranſlated LORD, and יהוה is tranſlated GOD; contrary to general, if not (otherwiſe) univerſal cuſtom. It is not unlikely, that this circumſtance prevented the Biſhops' Pſalms being read in the church ſervice, in which the pſalms of archbiſhop Cranmer's bible were uſed, and are continued to this day. Cranmer's pſalms are often printed in the Biſhops' bibles, and ſometimes in the Geneva, either by themſelves, or with the proper pſalms of thoſe tranſlations in oppoſite columns.

Matthew Parker was born at Norwich in the year 1504, and was ſent by his mother (his father dying when he was but twelve years old) to the Univerſity of Cambridge. He was firſt a bible clerk in Corpus Chriſti College, and afterwards a fellow. His firſt preferment was the deanery of Stoke, which he obtained by the favour of queen Ann Boleyn, to whom he was chaplain. At her death king Henry VIII. appointed him chaplain to himſelf, in which capacity he alſo ſerved his ſon Edward VI. By the former he was promoted to a prebend of Ely, and the maſterſhip of Corpus Chriſti, (by the election of the fellows, at the command of the king.) Edward VI. gave him the deanery of Lincoln, with the prebend of Coldingham; which preferments he enjoyed till the reign of queen Mary, in which, for being married, he was deprived, and lived poorly during her reign. On the acceſſion of queen Elizabeth, the ſee of Canterbury being vacant by the death of Cardinal Pole, he was thought the propereſt man for that high place and preferment, and conſecrated December 17, 1559, and held the ſame fifteen years and five months, dying May 17, 1575, in the ſeventy-ſecond year of his age.

A tranſlation of the New Teſtament by Laurence Tomſon, who was under-ſecretary to Sir Francis Walſingham, was printed in 1576. This was afterwards reprinted frequently in the Geneva bible, inſtead of the former tranſlation.

Theſe labours of the Proteſtants had their effect on the Catholics; who, as they would not uſe the verſions of thoſe whom they thought heretics, yet were aſhamed of having no verſion of Scripture for uſe, ſet themſelves to tranſlate, ſo far as they lawfully might.

In the year 1582, was printed the New Teſtament, tranſlated by the Engliſh college at Rheimes; and twenty-ſeven years after, in 1609, appeared the firſt volume, and in 1610, the ſecond volume of the Old Teſtament and Apocrypha, printed at Doway, and thence called The Doway Bible. Both theſe have been reprinted ſeveral times; but an edition in five volumes 12mo, 1750, is much improved in point of language, eſpecially from the Doway, which is in many inſtances very obſcure. The tranſlators were William Allen, Henry Holland, George Martin, and Richard Briſtol. The notes by Dr. Worthington. Le Long ſays, the New Teſtament was principally tranſlated by William Raynold, or Reynolds.

Dr. William Allen was born in Lancaſhire, and educated at Oriel College, Oxford. In the reign of queen Mary, he was principal of St. Mary-Hall, and canon of York; but on the acceſſion of queen Elizabeth, he went to Lovain, was made canon of Cambray and Rheimes, and in 1587 he was promoted by Pope Pius V. to be cardinal prieſt of St. Martin's, and archbiſhop of Mechlin: he died at Rome in 1594, and was buried in the Engliſh ſchool.

Gregory Martin was born at Macfield near Winchelſea in Suſſex, and educated at St. John's College, Oxford, as one of the original ſcholars placed there by the founder Sir Thomas White in 1557, where he took the degree of Maſter of Arts in 1564. Quitting Oxford, he was taken into the family of the Duke of Norfolk as tutor to his ſon. Being a papiſt, he went to Doway; where applying himſelf to the ſtudy of divinity, he was made licentiate in that faculty in 1575, and not long after going to Rheimes, he was choſen divinity profeſſor to that Univerſity; and died in 1592.

Henry Holland was a Worceſterſhire man, and fellow of St. John's in Oxford; from whence he went to Doway, where he took the degree of bachelor of divinity, and the order of prieſthood. He was living in 1611.

to

Richard Briſtol, or Briſtow, was born in the city of Worceſter, commenced Maſter of Arts at Oxford in 1562, was afterwards fellow of Exeter, and in 1569 he left the college and the kingdom. Going to Lovain, he abjured the Proteſtant religion, and became acquainted with Dr. Allen; who made him the firſt moderator or prefect of the divinity ſtudie, at Doway, and afterwards committed to his care his new ſeminary at Rheimes, where he lived two years, and then coming to England for his health, died in 1582.

Thomas Worthington, a native of Lancaſhire, and well-deſcended, after taking the degree of Bachelor of Arts at Oxford about 1570, went to the college of Doway, and ſome years after was tranſlated thence to Rheimes: a little before the intended Spaniſh invaſion, he came over to England, was taken up for a ſpy, and committed priſoner to the Tower, yet eſcaped with his life. Returning to Doway, he reviewed and publiſhed the Engliſh tranſlation of the Old Teſtament above-mentioned, which had been made at Rheimes ſome years before, He commenced D. D. at Triers, and was made preſident of the Engliſh college at Rheimes. He was alive in 1611.

At a convocation in the year 1603, ſoon after the acceſſion of James I. complaints were made that many and great faults exiſted in the tranſlation authoriſed to be read; and Fuller ſays, one of the beſt things produced by the Hampton-Court conference was a reſolution in his Majeſty for a new tranſlation of the bible; and to this purpoſe the king writes thus to the archbiſhops and biſhops:—

"Right truſty and well-beloved, we greet you well. Whereas we have appointed certain learned men, to the number of four and fifty, for the tranſlation of the bible, and that in this number divers of them have either no eccleſiaſtical preferment at all, or elſe ſo very ſmall, that the ſame is far unmeet for men of their defence. And yet we of ourſelf in any convenient time cannot well remedy it. Therefore we do hereby require you, That preſently you write in our name, as well to the archbiſhop of York, as to the reſt of the biſhops of the province of Canterbury, ſignifying unto them, that we do well and ſtraightly charge every one of them, as alſo the other biſhops of the province of York, as they tender our good favour towards them, that (all excuſes ſet apart) when any prebend or parſonage being rated in our book of taxations, the prebend to twenty pounds at the leaſt, and the parſonage to the like ſum and upwards, ſhall next upon any occaſion happen to be void, and to be either of their patronage or gift, or the like parſonages ſo void to be of the patronage and gift of any perſon whatſoever, they do make ſtay thereof, and admit none unto it, until certifying us of the avoidance of it, and of the name of the patron, (if it be not of their own gift) that we may commend for the ſame ſome ſuch of the learned men as we ſhall think fit to be preferred to it; not doubting of the biſhops' readineſs to ſatisfy us herein, or that any of the laity, when we ſhall in time move them to ſo good and religious an act, will be unwilling to give us the like due contentment and ſatisfaction: we ourſelf having taken the ſame order for ſuch prebends and benefices as ſhall be void in our gift, what we write to you of other, you muſt apply to yourſelves, as alſo not forget to move the ſaid archbiſhop, and all the biſhops, with their deans and chapters of both provinces, as touching the other point to be imparted by you unto them. Furthermore, we require you to move all our biſhops to inform themſelves of all ſuch learned men within their ſeveral dioceſes, as having eſpecial ſkill in the Hebrew and Greek tongues, have taken pains in their private ſtudies of the Scriptures, for the clearing of any obſcurities, either in the Hebrew, or in the Greek, or touching any difficulties, or miſtakings in the former Engliſh tranſlations, which we have now commanded to be thoroughly viewed and amended; and thereupon to write unto them, earneſtly charging them, and ſignifying our pleaſure therein, that they ſend ſuch their obſervations, either to Mr. Livelie, our Hebrew reader in Cambridge; or to Dr. Harding, our Hebrew reader in Oxford; or to Dr. Andrews, dean of Weſtminſter; to be imparted to the reſt of their ſeveral companies; that ſo our ſaid intended tranſlation may have the help and furtherance of all our principal learned men within this our kingdom. Given under our ſignet, at our palace of Weſtminſter, the two and twentieth day of July, in the ſecond year of our reign of England, France, and Ireland; and of Scotland the thirty-ſeventh."

This letter being written about three years before, it is probable ſeven of the perſons nominated for this performance died in the interval, or that ſo many might have been employed in reviſing the tranſlation; for Fuller's liſt of the tranſlators amounts but to forty-ſeven. To which his Lordſhip replied, 'That to be ſure, if he had not ſignified ſo much unto them already, it was his Majeſty's pleaſure, that beſides the learned perſons employed with them for the Hebrew and Greek, there ſhould be three or fower of the moſt eminent and grave divines of their Univerſity, aſſigned by the vice-chancellor upon conference with the reſt of the heads, to be overſeers of the tranſlations, as well Hebrew as Greek, for the better obſervation of the rules appointed by his Highneſs, and eſpecially concerning the third and fourth rule: and that when they had agreed upon the perſons for this purpoſe, he prayed them to ſend him word thereof.'

" This letter is inſcribed, 'To the right worſhipful Dr. Cowell, vice-chancellor,' and dated at Fulham the 30th of Auguſt 1604; and to it is added by way of poſtſcript, "that at the verie writing thereof, a learned epiſtle was delivered unto him of Mr. Broughton, which though it was of an old date, yet he thought good to ſend it unto them, that Mr. Lively and the reſt might have the peruſal of it, if they had not before ſeen it.' This letter ſeems to be that before mentioned to the learned nobility of England, touching tranſlating the bible, or elſe that to king James, written on occaſion of this tranſlation being ordered by him, as is before-mentioned.

" The biſhop of London, at the ſame time that he wrote to the vice-chancellor, &c. at Cambridge, ſent letters to the ſeveral biſhops, with copies of the king's letter before mentioned. A copy of one of theſe to the biſhop of Norwich, which immediately follows the king's letter, runs thus: 'Your lordſhip maie ſee how carefull his Majeſtie is for the provideing of lyvings for theis learned men. I doubt not therefore but your lordſhip will have that due regarde of his Majeſtie's requeſt herein as is fitt and meete, and that yow will take ſutche order with your chancellor, regiſter, and ſutche your lordſhip's officers who ſhall have intelligence of the premiſſes, as alſo with the deane and chapter of your cathedralle church, whom his Majeſtie likewiſe requireth to be putt in mynde of his pleaſure therein, not forgettinge the latter parte of his Majeſtie's letter towchinge the informinge of yourſelfe of the fitteſt linguiſt within your dioces for to performe and ſpeedily to returne that which his Majeſtie is ſo carefulle to have faithfully performed. I could wiſh your lordſhip would for my diſcharge returne me in ſome few lynes the tyme of the receipte of theis letters, that I may diſchardge that dutie which his Majeſtie by theis his letters hath layed upon me. And ſoe I bidd your lordſhip right hartely farewell. From Fulham, this 31ſt of July 1604. Your lordſhip's loving friend and brother,'

'RICHARD LONDON.

'Delibat. apud Ludham, 16 Auguſti 1604.

'His Majeſtie's meaning is, that twoe lyvings ſhould be ſtayed, one of your owne, and one of a lay patron's.'

" In his Majeſty's letter was a clauſe, that R. L. and the archbiſhops of both provinces, ſhould not forget to move the deans and chapters as towchinge the other pointes to be imparted otherwiſe wiſe by them unto the ſaid deans," &c. This in another letter to the biſhop of Norwich, wrote at the ſame time with the other, his lordſhip tells him is referred to his relation. And this he ſaid it was. 'There are manie as your lordſhip perceyveth, who are to be imployed in this tranſlatinge of the bible, and ſundry of them muſt of neceſſitie have their chardges borne, which his Majeſtie was very ready of his moſt princely diſpoſition to have borne, but ſome of my lords, as things now goe, did howlde it inconvenient. Whereuppon it was left to me to move all my brethren, the biſhopps, and likewiſe every ſeverall deane and chapter, to contribute toward this worke. According therefore to my dutie, I hartely pray your Lordſhip not onely to thinke your ſelfe what is meete for yow to give for this purpoſe, but likewiſe to acquaint your deane and chapter not onely with the ſaid clauſe of his Majeſtie's letter, but likewiſe with the meaninge of it, that they may agree upon ſutche a ſomme as they meane to contribute. I doe not thinke, that a thouſand marks will finiſhe the work to be imployed as is aforeſayd; whereof your lordſhip with youre deane and chapter having due conſideracion, I muſt require yow in his Majeſtie's name, accordinge to his good pleaſure in that behalfe, that aſſoon as poſſibly yow can, yow ſend me word what ſhall be expected from yow and youre ſaid deane and chapter. For I am to acquaint his Majeſtie with every man's liberality towards this moſt godly worke. And thus not doubtinge of your eſpeciall care for the accompliſhment of the premeſſes, and deſyringe your lordſhip to note the date to me of your receipt of this letter, I commit your lordſhip unto the tuicion of Almightie God. From Fulham this 31ſt of July 1604.'

'Delibat. apud Ludham, 16 Auguſti 1604.'

" What ſucceſs theſe laſt letters met with does not appear; but it ſeems as if they had but a very cold reception. The two Univerſities, we have ſeen, were before ordered to entertain in their colleges ſuch as came out of the country thither on this occaſion, without any charge unto them, &c. Accordingly, the writer of John Bois's life in MS. who was rector of Boxworth near Cambridge, tells us, that part of the Apocrypha was allotted to him, and that all the time he was about his own part, his diet was given him at St. John's, where he abode all the week till Saturday night, and then went home to diſcharge his cure, and returned thence on Monday morning; and that when he had finiſhed his own part, at the earneſt requeſt of him to whom it was aſſigned, he undertook a ſecond, and then was in commons at another college. As for thoſe who were appointed to meet at Weſtminſter, they ſeem, for the moſt part, to be very well provided for. What then was to be done with the thouſand marks which were to be raiſed, by way of contribution, on the biſhops, and deans, and chapters?

" However this be, almoſt three years it ſeems were ſpent in this ſervice, the entering on which was, perhaps, ſomewhat delayed by Mr. Edward Lively's death. At the end thereof, the writer of Mr. Bois's life tells us, the whole work being finiſhed, and three copies of the whole bible ſent to London, viz. one from Cambridge, a ſecond from Oxford, and a third from Weſtminſter; a new choice was to be made of two out of each company, ſix in all, to review the whole work and poliſh it, and extract one out of all the three copies, to be committed to the preſs. For the diſpatch of this buſineſs, Mr. Andrew Downes, fellow of St. John's-college, and the king's Greek profeſſor at Cambridge, and the aboveſaid Mr. John Bois, were ſent for up to London out of the Cambridge company; where, meeting their four fellow-labourers, they went daily to Stationer's-hall, and in three quarters of a year fulfilled their taſque. All which time they received thirty pounds each of them by the week from the company of ſtationers, though before they had nothing; which ſeems a confirmation of what was before obſerved, that the propoſal of raiſing one thouſand marks on the biſhops, &c. was rejected by them. Laſt of all, Bilſon, biſhop of Wincheſter, and Dr. Myles Smith, who from the very beginning had been very active in this affair, again reviewed the whole work, and prefixed arguments to the ſeveral books: and Dr. Smith, who for his indefatigable pains taken in this work was ſoon after the printing of it deſervedly made biſhop of Glouceſter, was ordered to write a preface to it, the ſame which is now printed in the folio editions of this bible; the firſt of which was, I think, at London, A. D. 1611. Much the ſame account of the manner of making and finiſhing this tranſlation was given afterwards by the Engliſh divines at Dort, in a paper which they delivered to the Synod, Nov. 20, 1618, only with this difference, that in this paper the tranſlators are ſaid to be divided into ſix companies, conſiſting of ſeven or eight each, or about forty-eight in all; and that out of theſe, twelve ſelect men met together to review and correct the whole work."

This tranſlation was firſt printed in the year 1611, (ſo ſays Fuller, but Dr. Durell ſays 1612), on a black type. The title-page to the Old Teſtament is a copper-plate, with an emblematical border, engraved by Boel. The title of the New Teſtament is in a border cut in wood, with the heads of the Twelve Apoſtles, tents of the Tribes, &c. It has been a matter of doubt, and an object of no ſmall enquiry, to aſcertain the exact date of this edition. The ſcarcity of title-pages began the doubts, which were ſtill ſtrengthened by the total want of the folio dated 1612, and the date 1613 frequently found to the letter-preſs title of the Old Teſtament, with a wooden border, in the ſame bible where the date to the New Teſtament is 1611.

We can only account for this by ſuppoſing, what is very reaſonable, that the copper-plate was ſoon worn out, and abſolutely unfit to afford half the number neceſſary to ſupply the churches throughout the kingdom. As many therefore as could be, were wrought off and publiſhed, probably enough to ſupply the ſale till the year 1613; when a new title-page is placed to this very impreſſion, and likewiſe to another folio printed on a black type of a different ſize. But the title-page of the New Teſtament being letter-preſs, and the border engraved on wood, would ſerve for as numerous an impreſſion as the reſt of the bible, and conſequently the whole number was wrought off at once to ſerve for the whole edition. But a new title-page being abſolutely neceſſary to the Old, was probably dated, according to the time of printing, in 1613. The engraved titles are ſcarce: we have heard of four, namely, at the Britiſh Muſeum, at the Bodleian, in the poſſeſſion of the Rev. Mr. Harper at the Britiſh Muſeum, and in the poſſeſſion of Mr. Denyer. The firſt is much damaged, the date of the laſt ſeems to have ſuffered ſome kind of eraſement, but the other two are perfectly fair, and beautiful engravings.

In 1612, a quarto edition was printed on Roman type, with an engraved title copied from the folio by Jaſper Iſac.

At the beginning of the preſent century, we read in Le Long an account related ſeemingly with good credit, that Athias, the celebrated Jew printer at Amſterdam, printed an edition of the Engliſh bible, (probably the Old Teſtament only, and for the uſe of the Jews) during the whole impreſſion of which he did not, for the ſheets in ſucceſſion, diſtribute the types, but kept the whole forms ſtanding; and that of this impreſſion Athias himſelf boaſted he had ſold more than a million of copies.

We have now ſeen what difficulties the tranſlation of the bible had to ſtruggle with, before it could be accompliſhed: the perſeverance of its friends is entitled to our moſt grateful acknowledgments.

MARGINAL REFERENCES.

In the year 1664, John Canne publiſhed a bible of the preſent tranſlation in octavo, with many marginal references. Mr. Blayney examined theſe for his edition of the Oxford bible in 1769. John Canne was a leader of the Engliſh Browniſts at Amſterdam, by whom he was choſen paſtor at the death of Dr. Ainſworth.

In 1677, a bible was printed by Hayes at Cambridge, with many references added to the firſt edition; and in 1678, a bible alſo was printed at Cambridge with ſtill more references, the labour of Dr. Scattergood, rector of Wilwick and Elverton in Northamptonſhire, and one of the compilers of the Critici Sacri. Probably the former of 1677 might likewiſe have been by his care. According to Le Long, this bible was reprinted at London in octavo 1679; at Oxford in folio 1680; at Oxford in folio and quarto with Uſher's chronology 1682; at London in octavo 1683; at Cambridge in quarto 1683; at Oxford in folio 1684; at London in 12mo. 1684; at Oxford — 1686; at Oxford in folio 1688; and at London in 12mo. 1717; but as to the Oxford edition of 1680, there is certainly a miſtake, unleſs there be two folio editions of that year, for the copies in the Britiſh Muſeum and the Bodleian libraries moſt certainly do not contain Dr. Scattergood's marginal references.

In the year 1699, a new edition of the Royal Bible in quarto was printed at London, with a great addition of parallel texts and a new chronological index, by Dr. Teniſon, archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Dr. Lloyd biſhop of Worceſter, which has been many times reprinted in folio and quarto.

It is not to be underſtood that archbiſhop Teniſon and biſhop Lloyd were at all concerned in the printing or editing of this bible, further than ſending to the printers the additional parallels and new tables, having no ſuperintendance of the preſs: and this is but juſtice to their memory to declare; for the firſt edition was ſo full of typographical errors, that a complaint was exhibited againſt the printers by the clergy of the Lower Houſe of Convocation.

The gradual increaſe of parallels from the firſt edition, by different editors, will appear by the following ſcale:

Mr.

Mr. Purver's tranſlation of the bible was publiſhed in 1764, in two volumes folio.

Anthony Purver was one of the people called Quakers, and born at Up-Huſborne, near Andover in Hampſhire, of very poor parents. He was apprenticed to a ſhoemaker in the ſame place, and followed that buſineſs for ſome years; while he was apprentice, journeyman, and maſter, it was his conſtant cuſtom to ſtudy the Latin, Greek, and Oriental languages; but he never took much pains in his Engliſh, confining his reading in that language chiefly to old authors. He kept a ſchool ſome time in his native place; and about the year 1740 went and ſettled, as a ſchool-maſter, at Frenchay near Briſtol, and continued there, and at Fiſh-ponds in Stapleton, for about twenty years; when he removed to Andover, where he died about the year 1777 or 1778.

The object of his inſatiable purſuit after the Dead Languages was, a deſire of underſtanding the Scriptures in the original; and after he was tolerably verſed in the Hebrew, he formed a reſolution of tranſlating the whole bible; which, as it ſeems, was at firſt intended to have been printed in occaſional numbers: for in the year 1746, that eminent phyſician the late Dr. Fothergill wrote a letter to the Gentleman's Magazine, in which he ſtrongly recommends him as the author of a work then publiſhing, which was to be continued in numbers if it met with encouragement; being a tranſlation of the Scriptures, under the title of "Opus ſacra in Biblia elaboratum." Dr. Fothergill in his letter, after ſpeaking in high terms of his learning, ſays, "As to his perſonal character, he is a man of great ſimplicity of manners, regular conduct, and a modeſt reſerve; he is ſteadily attentive to truth, hates falſhood, and has an unconquerable averſion to vice; and to crown the portrait, he is not only greatly benevolent to mankind, but has a lively ſenſe of the divine attributes, and a profound reverence of, and ſubmiſſion to, the Supreme Being." Mr. Purver is not named: but that it is applicable to him, we are obliged to Mr. Joſeph Fry of Briſtol, as well as for other circumſtances relating to this extraordinary man.

The mode of publication in numbers ſeems to have been unſucceſsful, and in all probability ſoon dropped: yet it did not prevent his going on with his tranſlation; which, after thirty years, he finiſhed; but was unable to publiſh it, nor could he meet with a bookſeller who would run the hazard of aſſiſting him: at length Dr. Fothergill ſtood his friend, gave him a thouſand pounds for the copy, and publiſhed it at his own expence.

Mr. Purver afterwards reviſed the whole, and made conſiderable alterations and corrections for a ſecond edition, which, however, has not yet taken place; but the MS. remains in the poſſeſſion of his grandſon John Purver Bell.

. . . . . .

Thus we have endeavoured to ſet before the reader ſuch a hiſtory of the bible as may anſwer moſt of the principal queſtions uſually aſked on the ſubject.—The length of this article muſt be juſtified by its importance. There are many collateral enquiries which might be entered into, but a hint of them is ſufficient.

Let us admire the providence of God which firſt cauſed the preſervation of TWO copies, the Samaritan and the Jewiſh; then TRANSLATIONS into ſeveral languages, which may be regarded as ſo many copies, and eſpecially the Greek tranſlation, becauſe we have many helps among our claſſical ſtudies for acquiring a competent intimacy with this language. Nor let us cloſe without acknowledging our moſt weighty obligations to our predeceſſors in Britain; whoſe labours have tranſmitted their names with immortal honour. To ſay that their tranſlation is free from faults, would be to deſcribe them rather as angels than men: nevertheleſs, let no one deſpiſe their performance, till he has qualified himſelf to undertake ſuch another,—and then, two pages of tranſlation, attempted by himſelf, will make him fully ſenſible of the advantages we receive from thoſe who have ſuſtained that labour before us.—But, after acknowledging that much has been done, we muſt alſo admit that much remains to be done; and we take this opportunity of ſuggeſting a few brief hints on the ſubject.

It is not to be denied, that a tranſlation of holy Scripture, if undertaken by authority in the preſent day, would have many advantages over thoſe which attended king James's tranſlation. The ſtate of knowledge is much improved, by the labours of many learned men, in the ſucceeding interval of time; and, without determining whether religious knowledge be improved, or injured, by what variations in opinion have been ſince introduced, we are certain that geographical knowledge is much more correct, as well as extenſive; that the knowledge of natural hiſtory, and natural philoſophy, of the cuſtoms, manners, modes of thinking, and turns of expreſſion, among the Orientals, and many other requiſites, are better underſtood at preſent than they were formerly, and theſe are always of conſequence, and occaſionally, are of the utmoſt importance, in many paſſages of Scripture. The principles of general ſcience, alſo, are more widely diffuſed than they formerly formerly were among ſtudents profeſſedly attached to divinity; and I beg leave to obſerve, with confidence, that knowledge limited to divinity, or the principles which lead to ſalvation, though drawn from the bible itſelf, and however indiſpenſable, abſolutely indiſpenſable it may be, yet it is not ſufficient to enable any one to underſtand, ſo far as correctly to tranſlate, the bible, which furniſhes it. I ſay, correctly to tranſlate, becauſe, though the chief, and to us, every way the moſt important intention of the bible is, to make men wiſe to ſalvation, yet there are in it, and connected with it, ſo many collateral circumſtances, ſo many incidents, obſervations, and notices, of various kinds, that if theſe be neglected, or ill-performed, or miſunderſtood, we not only injure Scripture by ſuch miſtakes, but we perhaps put a ſtumbling-block in the way of thoſe more enlightened readers, who, when they obſerve theſe errors, may be too apt to reject the whole on their account; and by detecting blemiſhes, which need little beyond inſpection to be detected, they may conceive that contempt of the ſacred writings, which under a more favourable, and correct verſion, would never have entered their minds.

We ought alſo to remark that our language has undergone ſome changes in the courſe of two centuries, which have varied it from being preciſely the ſame as when our tranſlators wrote. Many words which were then polite, and elegant, are now vulgar, to ſay the leaſt, and ſome perhaps we might juſtly call groſs, if not obſcene. Now, if the Jews themſelves, thoſe ſuperſtitious venerators of the letter of Scripture, yet think it proper to ſubſtitute other words in their readings for thoſe of this nature in the text, would there be any imputation on thoſe tranſlators who ſhould venture to imitate this decency? Other words, alſo, which were, more or leſs, equivocal or ambiguous, in the days of king James, are now ſettled to a deciſive and certain meaning; if that meaning be what our tranſlators had in view, no harm enſues; but if it be an application contrary to their intention, the fault lies not in the tranſlators, but in the language. And this is more noticeable ſtill, in thoſe words which have changed their import, and are now uſed in a contrary meaning from what our forefathers annexed to them.

I cannot refrain from complaining alſo, of the ſlovenly manner in which the preſs has been conducted in all our public editions; what ſhould be printed as poetry is ſet as proſe; what ſhould be marked as a quotation, or a ſpeech, reads like common narration; and this, if the nature of the original language allowed of ſudden and rapid tranſitions without falſification or confuſion, yet in a tranſlation, is very often, the cauſe of great apparent perplexity. And this perplexity is occaſionally encreaſed by improper diviſions of chapters and verſes.

It is much more eaſy to notice theſe, and other ſources of imperfection, in our public verſion, than it is to prevent them, or to provide againſt their recurrence in any tranſlation which may hereafter be made. Whether the difficulty of removing them entirely be ſufficient to juſtify the ſuſpenſion of every attempt to correct them, we do not determine. Undoubtedly, the preſent verſion is ſufficient to all purpoſes of piety; and the obſervations we have made refer rather to the finiſhing of the ſuperſtructure, than to the foundation of ſuch an edifice: or rather, perhaps, to the removal of ſome gothic protuberances, which diſfigure the appearance of the performance, and which are cumberſome, at leaſt, and unpleaſant to beholders, if they be not dangerous to the ſtability of the building.

We ought not to paſs without applauſe, the labours of thoſe learned men who, by tranſlating portions of Scripture, have greatly facilitated the undertaking of a verſion entirely new, and complete, whenever that ſhall be thought proper to be done. In fact, it ſeems to be one previous ſtep neceſſary to the ſucceſs of ſo extenſive a deſign, that every part of the ſacred volume ſhould be critically examined, carefully rendered, and its true meaning given by individual ſtudy, before a general reviſion of the whole ſhould be commanded and adopted; becauſe, ſuch verſions being ſubmitted to the opinion of capable judges long before the text is definitively ſettled, and being ſubject to the inveſtigation and correction of numerous readers, among the public at large, their merits are more likely to be fairly appreciated, than by a ſmaller number of judges, though ſuch may be very competent, or on the ſpur of an occaſion, when the impatience of the public may prevail over ſedate deliberation.

We have thrown out theſe hints, by way of ſhewing the magnitude of the ſubject; far from meaning to diſcourage even the humbleſt endeavours which may have the illuſtration of Scripture for their object, we rejoice when any exertions are made to accompliſh that deſirable purpoſe; and though all may not be eminently ſucceſsful, yet as each may contain ſomething valuable, and may prove advantageous to the whole, and to the general promotion of biblical learning, ing, we are tempted to accommodate the words of Moſes, "Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets."

One word more—a very correct and extenſive acquaintance with the Engliſh language itſelf, is a quality by no means to be omitted in a tranſlator: we wiſh this were ſtrictly attended to, as then the choice of words among many which appear ſynonimous, or which ſeem equally to expreſs the import of the original, would be not only more copious, but more ſignificant, more harmonious, and more dignified.

BIRTH, is taken for the natural deſcent of offſpring from its parent: figuratively, it imports an entire change of principles, manners, and conduct. Vide REGENERATION.

BLEMISHES were of various kinds on men, or on animals. Blemiſhes, or perſonal deformities on men, excluded prieſts from performing their ſacred functions: and on animals, excluded them from being offered on the altar, &c. Vide Lev. xxii. 20, 21, &c. xxiv. 19, 20. Deut. xv. 21.

BLESS, BLESSING: this action is referred to God, and to man. Without any doubt, the inferior is bleſſed by the ſuperior. When God bleſſes, he beſtows that virtue, that efficacy, which renders his bleſſing effectual. His bleſſings are either temporal or ſpiritual; bodily or mental; but in every thing they are productive of that which they import: whereas, the bleſſings of men are only good wiſhes, and as it were, a peculiar kind of prayer for the welfare of the ſubject of them. God's bleſſings extend into the future life, but no gift of one man to another, as of a parent to his child, can exceed the limits of the preſent ſtate.

Bleſſing was an act of thankſgiving to God for his mercies, rather, for that ſpecial mercy which, at the time, occaſioned the act of bleſſing; as for food, for which thanks were rendered to God—or for any other good.

Thoſe prophetic predictions of the ancient patriarchs, which we uſually call bleſſings, are much rather, hints of what ſhould be the character, diſpoſition, or circumſtances of thoſe to whom they referred. They were, probably, grounded in ſome degree, on obſervations made reſpecting the temper and conduct of the party himſelf who immediately received them. So, if Benjamin was himſelf ravenous, ſharp, wolf-like, warlike, and predatory—his deſcendants might be expected to partake of his nature: and ſo of others. But often the ſpirit of prophecy prompted the mind of the ſpeaker (or writer, perhaps) to utter ſentiments differently to be fulfilled. So, when Jacob ſays of Simeon and Levi, I will diſperſe them in Jacob, and ſcatter them in Iſrael; ſince he meant this diſperſion by way of degradation, and puniſhment, it is not likely that he foreſaw, that one tribe ſhould furniſh men of letters—writers, in the future kingdom of his deſcendants; that the other ſhould be inveſted with the prieſthood, and thereby both be allotted into various diſtricts, and cities: yet the fact was ſo, and providence accompliſhed his prediction, in a manner, which, I hardly think, occurred to the mind of the dying patriarch.

When Iſaac foretold the different natures and properties of the countries which ſhould be poſſeſſed by Jacob and by Eſau, he did not confer on the perſons of his ſons any real poſſeſſion, he merely as it were divided to them by will the places of the future habitations of their poſterity.

Bleſſing is ſometimes put for ſalutation—for conſecration—for the promiſe of a future good—for the reception of a good—for a gift or preſent—for praiſe—for alms—for adoration—for a man's bleſſing himſelf: in ſhort it implies a felicity, either expected, promiſed, or beſtowed. The manner of bleſſing is appointed in the Moſaic ritual, by lifting up of hands. Our Lord lifted up his hands, and bleſſed his diſciples. I ſuppoſe this action was conſtant on this ſubject.

BOAZ, pillar, vide JACHIN, in it (or of him) is ſtrength.

BODY, is taken for the actual thing mentioned, as of a man, conſiſting of fleſh, blood, bones, &c. for the apparent perſon; for the chief part of a perſon, as of a body, diſtinct from its limbs, or members: for the ſubſtance as diſtinct from the ſhadow; for the fleſh as oppoſite to the (renewed) mind. Body is alſo taken for a whole aſſembly or body of perſons. "This is my body"—i. e. figuratively, by repreſentation. Body of ſin, ſinful body; body of death, dying body: body of Chriſt, his human nature, the body prepared for his habitation: alſo, his church, the body of Chriſtians, &c.

BOND, Bondage, vide SLAVES, SLAVERY, in the Dictionary.

BOOKS, eaten. "Inſomuch that the Turks ſaid frequently and juſtly of them, that other nations had their learning in their books, but the Tartars HAD EATEN THEIR BOOKS, and had their wiſdom in their breaſts, from whence they could draw it out as they had occaſion, as divine oracles." Buſbequius Trav. p. 245. Eng. Tr. This may lead us to the true idea of the prophets, &c. when when they mention the eating of books preſented to them: i. e. that the knowledge they had received ſhould be communicated to others, from time to time, as wanted: they were treaſurers (not for themſelves but for others) of wiſdom and knowledge.

BOOTHS, ſlight conſtructions of huts, vide FRAGMENT, No. CCVI. p. 26.

BOOZ. Though CALMET has ſtated a ſolution of the difficulty ariſing from the great age of Boaz, &c. (vide Booz) yet, I think, I prefer that of Dr. Allix, vide Whitby on Matt. i. 4.

The Targum on Ruth ſays, that Salmon is ſtiled Salmon the Juſt; his works and the works of his children were very excellent: Boaz was a righteous perſon, by whoſe righteouſneſs the people of Iſrael were delivered from the hands of their enemies, &c. There were but 366 years from the firſt of Joſhua to the birth of David—for from the Exodus to the temple were 480 years: add to 366 the forty years wandering in the wilderneſs, the life of David ſeventy years, and four years of Solomon—the total is 480 years. He therefore ſuppoſes that Salmon might beget Boaz when he was 96 years old; Booz begat Obed, when he was 90 years old; Obed at 90 begat Jeſſe; and Jeſſe at 85 begat David.

We know that long life often deſcends in a family: old Parr had a ſon who lived to be very old: and what is no leſs remarkable, old men of ſuch families have had children very late in life, as after the age of an hundred years, of which old Parr himſelf is one example.

BRACELETS, ornamental chains, made of wire, or claſps, made of various metals, always meant to adorn the part on which they were worn. Vide the plates of Arabian Dreſſes, FRAGMENTS, No. LX. and PERISCELIDES in the Dictionary for a ſimilar decoration to the legs.

BRIDE. Vide the FRAGMENTS on Solomon's Song, No. 2 Y, 345, &c.

BUCKLER, vide ARMS, uſed by the Hebrews. It was a defenſive piece of armour of the nature of a ſhield. It is ſpoken figuratively of God, 2 Sam. xxii. 31. Pſalm xviii. 2, 30. Prov. ii. 7. of the truth of God, Pſalm xci. 4.

CABBALA. The following cabbala is added leſs with deſign of explaining the nature of this myſtical ſcience, than for the ſake of the information it contains with reſpect to ſome of the ſacred books. The reader will reflect on the variety of knowledge neceſſary, fully to illuſtrate the Scriptures.

Among a heap of inſignificant things in the Talmud, an old tradition of ſome moment is here and there preſerved.

"The Talmudiſts," (ſays Mercier, one of the beſt Hebræans of his time, and who was very converſant with theſe books) "in Bava bathra, chap. i. are of opinion, that Hezekiah and his company wrote the books denoted by the ſymbolical word ימשק JiMShoK, viz. Iſaiah, Proverbs, Song of Songs, and Eccleſiaſtes—Into which opinion they ſeem to have been led by what is ſaid Prov. xxv. 1. "Theſe are alſo proverbs of Solomon, which the men of Hezekiah king of Judah copied out."

Every letter in the word IMSK or Jimſhok (as they pronounce it with the points) is put to mark out a particular book, the title whereof begun with that letter, viz. as it is here explained, Iſaiah, Meſhalim, Shirhaſhirim, and Koheleth; the Hebrew names of the four books, Iſaiah, Proverbs, Song of Songs, and Eccleſiaſtes.

Theſe Talmudical doctors then had an obſcure tradition delivered down to them of ſomething done in Hezekiah's time relating to theſe books of Scripture. But they evidently miſtook the meaning of it, if they ſuppoſed the books to have been written by Hezekiah and his men; inſtead of being then collected, and reviſed, or ſolemnly approved, and added to the ſacred canon. For this, no doubt, was the truth of the caſe; and ſuch a tradition might have been conveyed down from remote times, in the very ſymbol here ſpecified. For it appears that the uſe of theſe ſymbols was very ancient with this people.

The uſe of theſe ſymbols then being very ancient, if the firſt letter in this word Jimſhok ſtand for Iſaiah, it ſeems to intimate to us the part which this great prophet had in the reviſing and fixing the authority of theſe books of Solomon.

But I confeſs, it appears more probable to me, that the book of Job might be here meant by the firſt letter of the word Jimſhok.

I have ſaid, that שילה (Gen. xlix. 10.) in old Jacob's celebrated prophecy of the Meſſiah, ſhould be pronounced Shilah, and ſignifies her child. And I am ſtill of opinion that this is the moſt probable meaning of the word. And ſo ſays D. Kimchi, the completeſt maſter of the Hebrew language, perhaps, of all the Rabbins. Both Jews and Chriſtians acknowledge the Meſſiah to be here intended: but how to explain the name, is the difficulty. [Vide FRAGMENT, 2 M. 335.]

The Chaldee paraphraſt, Onkelos, certainly took it for one of thoſe ſymbolical words that are made up of initial letters: for he explains it of the Meſſiah, de dellah hi malcutha, whoſe is the kingdom: which turned into Hebrew will be thus, exactly anſwering to the word SHILAH, ש-יש-לו-המלוכה, She-Jeſh-Lo-Hammelucah. Literally, Qui eſt ei regnum, who to him is the kingdom. For this is the uſual turn of the Hebrew phraſe.

The interpretation here given of the word may be near as old as the firſt uſe of the Chaldee paraphraſing; which commenced of courſe ſoon after the return from the Babyloniſh captivity.

That it was older than the Septuagint tranſlation, ſeems plain from hence; that theſe tranſlators give it to us curtailed, omitting the laſt word hammelucah; for fear, perhaps, that living in Egypt and amongſt their Gentile maſters; the word kingdom might create a jealouſy that would turn to their diſadvantage. At leaſt this is the beſt reaſon that I can think of, why they ſhould turn the word Shilah by ᾧ ἀπόκειται, cui repoſitum eſt, or τὰ ἀποκείμενα αὐτῷ, quæ repoſita ſunt ei; anſwering to She-Lo, or She-Ieſh-Lo: leaving the thing itſelf (viz. hammelucah, the kingdom) to be underſtood, or to remain a ſecret with themſelves." Peters on Job. Preface.

For another inſtance of Cabala, vide MACCABEES.

CALEB EPHRATAH, a town, as it ſhould ſeem, 1 Chron. ii. 24. perhaps the name Ephratah might be an addition to more places than one. Vide EPHRAIM and EPHRATAH.

CANDACE. "There is a tradition at Chendi, that a woman whose name was Hendaqué, once governed all that country, whence we might imagine that this was part of the kingdom of Candace; for writing this name in Greek letters, it will come to no other than Hendaqué, the native or mistress of Chendi, or Chandi. However this may be, Chendi was once a town of great resort. The caravans of Sennaar, Egypt, Suakem, and Kordofan, all were in use to rendezvous here, especially since the Arabs have cut off the road by Dongola, and the desert of Bahiouda; and though it be not now a place of great plenty, yet every thing here is at a cheaper rate and better than at Sennaar; we must except the article fuel, for wood is much dearer here than in any part of Atbara; the people all burn camel's dung. Indeed, were it not for dressing victuals, fire in a place so hot as this would be a nuisance. It was so sultry in the end of August and beginning of September, that many people dropped down with heat, both in the town and villages round it; but it is now said to be much cooler, though the thermometer at noon was once so high as 119°." BRUCE'S TRAVELS, Vol. IV. p. 529.

CAPHTOR, CAPHTORIM. CALMET has said that the Philistines came from Crete, and that Crete was Caphtor. That the Philistines and the Cretans were the same people, I believe; but I think, certainly, Crete was peopled from Philistia: for this we have the evidence of Herodotus and Pausanias, who say the Cretans received their worship from Syria. (Vide No. CCXVII. p. 81, 82) And how an island not larger than Crete should people a coast so extensive as Syria, requires explanation. CALMET says, "Gaza in Palestine went by the name of Minoa, from Minos, king of Crete:" read, Menueh, from the Hindu histories, and this is explained. What then is the etymology of Caphtor? This word, I conceive, must be properly divided to be understood, כפת CAPOT, and תר TUR. Càpot is the Hindu name for a dove, and tur is the Hebrew name for a dove—these words in each language were in process of time slurred together, so that the stranger name, and the Hebrew name became united; but separately they signify the same thing. Capotesi, or the deity in the shape of a dove, was worshipped throughout this country, (vide No. CCLXIX, et al.) and this very name adds another to our proofs of that worship.

"CASTOR and POLLUX were sea-gods, and invoked by sailors; nay, the lights which were sometimes hung out on their ships were called Castor and Pollux. An inscription in Gruter (1016) proves that seamen implored Castor and Pollux in dangers at sea. The sense of it is this: "C. Valerius Agillus, and his associates, having made a vow to Castor and Pollux, and arrived safe through the many perils of shipwreck, willingly performed what they had vowed." MORT. Antiq. Expl. Supp. Vol. I. Vide Jonah i. 16.

CHALCOL, who nourishes all.

CHALCOL, was a famous wise man in the time of Solomon; but Solomon was wiser than he was. 1 Kings iv. 31. says Ethan, Heman, Chalcol, and Darda, were sons of Mahol; but 1 Chron. ii. 6. says Zimri, Ethan, Heman, Calcol, Dara [דרע for דרדע] were sons of Zerah.

CHAMBER, vide the FRAGMENTS on HOUSE.

CHARITY, should be understood not of gifts to the poor, though that be one of the external actions of charity, but for that internal principle from whence outward (good) actions proceed: love, kindness, affection, sympathy. The bases of charity are love to God, and good-will to men; these principles will regulate the mind to complacency, forgiveness, meekness, and a desire to promote the welfare of others. Charity sees dubious things in the most favourable point of view; and never makes the worst of bad things. Charity is not wearied out by disappointed hopes, nor overwhelmed by too plausible fears; charity is not contented with vacant wishes only, but uses endeavours, and exertions to accomplish its benevolent purposes. Charity is not confined to a family, to a tribe, to a nation, but it embraces all mankind. Charity is rewarded in this world in some degree, but in the world to come it may justly expect the most gracious remuneration.

CHOICE young man, 1 Sam. ix. 2. The addition young in our version is superfluous, the word rendered choice, may signify the prime, most excellent: or according to our manner of speaking the FLOWER of its kind, which is very agreeable to the Hebrew root, which signifies to look at with admiration, as persons do at elegant flowers. The same idea may be attached to it in other places, as 1 Sam. xxvi. 2, "having three thousand of the flower of Israel with him," 2 Sam. x. 9. "and he chose of all the flower of Israel." Psalm lxxviii. 13. "and smote down the flower of Israel." This term is still retained in the East: CHARDIN tells us, that he was called in his Persian letter "the Flower of Merchants"—on which he observes, "The term which I have translated Flower of Merchants, signifies exquisite, choice, elected, or most excellent. The Persians use it commonly as an epithet for all sorts and conditions of men; great lords, Foreign ministers, miniſters, merchants; and bring it down even to tradeſmen." TRAVELS, p. 220.

Our Engliſh word flower, expreſſes this idea very well.

CILICIA, a country in the ſouth-eaſt part of Aſia Minor, between lat. 36° and 40° on the coaſt of the Mediterranean ſea. The capital city was Tarſus, where St. Paul was born, Acts xxi. 39. This country was originally peopled by Tarſhiſh, the grandſon of Japhet. It became a Roman province. The apoſtle planted a Chriſtian church in this country, to which probably his connections at Tarſus might contribute, Acts ix. 30. xi. 25. This church exiſted till the beginning of the eighth century, when the country became ſubject to the Saracens, and afterwards to the Turks, who ſtill hold it.

COCKATRICE. Vide SERPENT.

COLONY. This word does not always imply that any conſiderable body of citizens from Rome had left their native city, and had founded a new town in a place where there had been none, as our own colonies in America were founded. No doubt, but this might be the firſt riſe of Roman colonies; and many of their troops after they were diſmiſſed from military ſervice, were ſettled in diſtant towns. Nevertheleſs, many cities were favoured with the character of colonies, whereby they became entitled to the privileges of Roman citizens, and were conſidered as being in a manner Romans, in reward for ſervices which they had rendered to the government of Rome, to the emperors, &c. Vide No. CCLXXIII.

CONVERSION, a turning from one ſtate, manner of life, courſe of conduct, or principles, to another. In the goſpel it means a change of mind, ſpirit, and behaviour. So the apoſtles are adviſed to forſake the haughty, ambitious, and worldly views of men to become like children, to entertain child-like ſentiments, Matt. xviii. 3. Sinners are converted, when they turn from ſin to God, Pſalm li. 13. when they forſake their old courſes, and practice holineſs in heart and life. "When thou art converted ſtrengthen thy brethren," when thou art changed from thy feebleneſs of mind to ſentiments of greater fortitude, to feelings of ſtronger faith, and more devout aſſurance, then ſtrengthen thoſe who may be ready to ſink into deſpondency, error, faint-heartedneſs, or apoſtacy, and endeavour to prevent the prevalence of thoſe evils over their minds.

CREATE. As it is admitted that the Hebrew word bara, rendered to create, does not neceſſarily import creation out of nothing, I wonder I have never ſeen our Engliſh word to compoſe uſed as tranſlating it; in which caſe we ſhould read, "In the beginning, or, in the firſt place, God compoſed the whole heavens, and the whole earth: but the earth was ſhapeleſs and vacant, and darkneſs overwhelmed the ſurface of the deep." The power of the verb bara, is to bring into order, to regulate. I think our word compoſe expreſſes that and ſomewhat more, as I doubt not, the Hebrew word does.

CUBIT. "Freret, D'anville, and M. Bailli have proved, that the Egyptian cubit being invariably twenty-four digits, is equal to twenty and a half French inches; and the preſent cubit, called Draa maſri, is preciſely divided into twenty-four digits, and contains twenty and a half French inches. I have meaſured ſeveral of them with a pied de Roi (ſtandard foot) of copper, but I found that all varied from one to three lines, (or tenths of an inch). The Draa Stambouli is of twenty-eight digits, or twenty-four inches, wanting one line. VOLNEY'S TRAVELS, Vol. I. p. 38. E. Ed.

CUSH. "It is a tradition among the Abyſſinians, which they ſay they have had from time immemorial, and which is equally received among the Jews and Chriſtians, that almoſt immediately after the flood, Cuſh, grandſon of Noah, with his family, paſſing through Atbara from the low country of Egypt, then without inhabitants, came to the ridge of mountains which ſtill ſeparates the flat country of Atbara from the more mountainous highland of Abyſſinia.

Their tradition ſays, that, terrified by the late dreadful event of the flood, ſtill recent in their minds, and apprehenſive of being again involved in a ſimilar calamity, they choſe for their habitation caves in the ſides of theſe mountains, rather than truſt themſelves again on the plain. It is more than probable, that, ſoon after their arrival, meeting here with the tropical rains, which for duration ſtill exceed the days that occaſioned the flood, and obſerving, that going through Atbara, that part of Nubia between the Nile and the Aſtaboras, afterwards called Meroë, from a dry climate at firſt, they had after fallen in with rains, and as thoſe rains increaſed in proportion to their advancing ſouthward, they choſe to ſtop at the firſt mountains, where the country was fertile and pleaſant, rather than proceed farther at the riſk of involving themſelves, perhaps in a land of floods, that might prove as fatal to their poſterity as that of Noah had been to their anceſtors. Page 376.

While improvements were going on proſperouſly in the central and northern territory of the deſcendants deſcendants of Cuſh, their brethren to the ſouth were not idle, they had extended themſelves parallel to the Arabian gulf; which was in all times called Saba, or Azabo, both which ſignify ſouth, [queen of the ſouth, Matt. xii. 42. Sabeans, Iſaiah xlv. 14. Joel iii. 8.] not becauſe Saba was ſouth of Jeruſalem, but becauſe it was on the ſouth coaſt of the Arabian gulf, and from Arabia and Egypt was the firſt land to the ſouthward which bounded the African continent, then richer more important and better known, than the reſt of the world.

By that acquiſition they enjoyed all the perfumes and aromatics in the eaſt, myrrh, and frankincenſe, and caſſia; all which grow ſpontaneouſly in that ſtripe of ground, from the bay of Bilur weſt of Azab, to cape Gardefan, and then ſouthward up in the Indian ocean, to near the coaſt of Melinda, where there is cinnamon, but of an inferior kind.

The mountains which the Agaazi inhabit, are called Habab, from whence it comes that they themſelves have got that name. Habab in their language, and in Arabic, likewiſe ſignifies a ſerpent, and this I ſuppoſe explains that hiſtorical fable in the book of Axum, which ſays a ſerpent conquered the province of Tigré, and reigned there.

Cuſh is Ethiopia, and Cuſhite is Ethiopian; many Ethiopians are white—many Cuſhites are negroes, black. BRUCE'S TRAVELS, Vol. I. pages 376, 381, 397, 409.

D.

DAMNATION. This word is uſed among us to expreſs a total loſs of the ſoul; or a ſtate of ſuffering under ſpiritual puniſhment: but this is not its proper import in all places, and the uſe of this word is in ſome paſſages of our tranſlation extremely unfortunate. We read, John v. 29. of the "reſurrection to damnation." Mark iii. 29. of "eternal damnation." Matt. xxiii. 33. of "the damnation of hell." In theſe inſtances the ſtronger ſenſe of the word is proper: but Matt. xxiii. 14. we read of the "greater damnation," which evidently implies a leſſer damnation: and Rom. xiii. 2. "whoſoever reſiſteth.. ſhall receive damnation" — read condemnation. 1 Cor. xi. 29. he who eateth and drinketh... in receiving the holy ſacrament unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation—read condemnation, judgment; this conduct is highly reprehenſible. 1 Tim. v. 12. younger widows will marry: having damnation—read condemnation, or judgment, becauſe they caſt off their firſt faith. Rom. xiv. 23. "He that doubteth is damned—read ſelf-condemned if he eat" fleſh, or any thing elſe which may offend a weak brother—but eternal damnation cannot be the penalty of doing an action, which, though lawful in itſelf, may offend an uninſtructed fellow Chriſtian.

DAUGHTER. This word has an equal extent of ſignification with other names of relation, as mother, ſiſter, &c. of the female ſex; and as ſon, father, brother, &c. of the male ſex. In fact, being a noun expreſſing ſimilitude no leſs than kindred, it is uſed in reference to many ſubjects, which are not properly the offſpring of that perſon, or that thing, of which they are ſaid to be daughters. Vide FATHER, BROTHER, CHILDREN, &c. The following are ſenſes in which the word daughter is uſed in Scripture.

1. Female offſpring, by natural birth, Gen. vi. 1. xxiv. 23. et al. freq.
2. Grand-daughter; ſo the ſervant of Abraham calls Rebekah "my maſter's brother's daughter;" whereas ſhe was daughter of Bethuel, ſon of Nahor, as appears from verſe 24. conſequently grand-daughter to Nahor, brother of Abraham, Gen. xxiv. 48.
3. Remote deſcendants, of the ſame family, or tribe, but ſeparated by many ages: "daughter of Heth," of his poſterity: daughters of Canaan, of Moab, of Ammon; and Luke, i. 5. ſays Elizabeth was of the "daughters of Aaron," i. e. of his deſcendants.
4. Daughter by nation. Dinah went out to ſee the young women of Shechem, called the daughters of the land, Gen. xxxiv. 1. Vide Deut. xxiii. 17. Numb. xxv. 1. Judg. xiv. 1.
5. Daughter, by reference to the human ſpecies; young women, of whatever nation: Gen. xxx. 13. the daughters — young women—the ſex—ſhall congratulate me—call me bleſſed. Vide Prov. xxxi. 29. Cant. ii. 2.
6. Daughter, by perſonification, of a people, or city, &c. whence daughter of Jeruſalem, of Zion, of Babylon, Iſaiah xlvii. 1, 5, 8. of Edom, Lam. iv. 21 of Egypt, Jer. xlvi. 11, 14.
7. Daughter, by law; ſo Naomi calls Ruth her daughter, Ruth iii. 1. and this is common in all nations, to call a ſon's wife daughter; but Boaz calls Ruth "daughter" by courteſy, as expreſſing kindneſs, affability, affection, from a ſenior to a junior in age, from a ſuperior to an inferior by ſtation, Ruth iii. 10, 11.
8. Daughter by adoption, as Eſther was to Mordecai, Eſther ii, 7. and as God promiſes his people, by his grace, 2 Cor. vi. 18.
9. In reference to diſpoſition and conduct, as we have "ſons of Belial," ſo we have "daughters of Belial," i. e. a woman of an unreſtrainable conduct, uncontroulable, 1 Sam. i. 16. Vide BELIAL.
10. In reference to age, as we have "a ſon of ſo many years," ſo we have "daughter of ninety years," i. e. a woman of that age, Gen. xvii. 17. and the ſame is ſaid of a female beaſt, Lev. xiv. 10.
11. The female offſpring of a bird, Iſaiah xiii. 21. "the daughter of the owl," —the hiana, the Oſtrich, vide FRAGMENT, No. CXLIV, p. 93.
12. The branches, which are, as it were, the offſpring of a tree, Gen. xliv. 22. the branches—daughters—of Joſeph, compared to a tree, ſpread over a wall.

13. Towns, or villages, around a mother city, i. e. probably originating from it, or ſupported by it: ſo Tyre is called the daughter of Zidon, Iſaiah xxiii. 12. ſo we read of Gath AMMAH, i. e. Gath the mother town; of a town being a mother in Iſrael, &c. Vide Numb. xxi. 25, 32. Joſh. xv. 45. 2 Chron. xiii. 19. Pſalm xlviii. 12. 2 Sam. xx. 19.

The ſtate of daughters, i. e. young women, in the Eaſt, their employments, duties, &c. may be gathered from various parts of Scripture; and ſeems to have borne but little reſemblance to the ſtate of young women of reſpectable parentage among ourſelves. So Rebekah drew and fetched water, Rachel kept ſheep, as did the daughters of Jethro, though Jethro was a prieſt, or prince, of Midian. They ſuperintended and performed domeſtic ſervices for the family; Tamar, though a king's daughter, baked bread; and the ſame of others. We have the ſame occupations for the daughters of princes in the ancient poets, of which Homer is an unqueſtionable evidence.

DEACONESSES, ADD. Theſe perſons appear to be the ſame as thoſe whom Pliny in his famous letter to Trajan (Epiſt. 97) ſtyles "Ancillis, quæ MINISTRÆ dicebantur" — female attendants called aſſiſtants, miniſters, or ſervants. It appears, then, that theſe were cuſtomary officers throughout the churches; and when the fury of perſecution fell on Chriſtians, theſe were among the firſt to ſuffer: the moſt cruel of tortures were inflicted on them, not ſparing even extreme old age. Vide SUICER, Theſaurus, Deaconeſs: Lardner, Teſt. vol. ii. p. 42.

DEAD. "The corruption of dead bodies has the moſt deſtructive effects upon the health in hot countries; more ſo than in more temperate climates. It was therefore neceſſary to ſecure the inhabitants from its noxious influence, by increaſing, through religious motives, their natural averſion to dead carcaſes. Mahomet, and ſome other founders of ſects, have for this reaſon affixed ideas of ſpiritual impurity to the act of touching a dead body. Some Muſſulmans require great purification to cleanſe a man thus defiled; and ſeparate him for ſome time from ſociety. The Arabians are leſs rigid; when a perſon of this nation has had the misfortune to touch a carcaſe, he waſhes himſelf carefully, and, when no mark of external impurities remains, he then returns to the ordinary intercourſe of life." NIEBUHR'S TRAVELS, Vol. II. p. 251, Eng. Edit.

DEBT, DEBTOR, an obligation which muſt be diſcharged by the party bound ſo to do. This may be either ſpecial or general: ſpecial obligations are where the party has contracted to do ſomething in return for a ſervice received: general obligations are thoſe to which a man is bound, by his ſituation as a man, as a member of civil ſociety, as a member of Chriſtian ſociety, or &c. Matth. xxiii. 16. whoſo ſhall ſwear by the gold of the temple—by the gift on the altar—is a debtor; is bound by his oath; is obliged to diſcharge his vow, or &c. Rom. i. 14. I am debtor to the Greeks and barbarians; under obligations to perſons of all nations, &c. Gal. v. 3. he is a debtor—is bound—to do the whole law. Men may be debtors to human juſtice, or to divine juſtice: for penalties, or for obedience.

DECREE, a determination, or appointment, judicial, civil, eccleſiaſtical, or divine. Judicial decrees ſhould determine litigation and controverſy between man and man; civil decrees refer to the purpoſes of ſociety; eccleſiaſtical decrees are appointments for the promotion of piety; all theſe may be well-intended but may err; the divine appointments never err, being founded on truth, judgment, perfect wiſdom and perfect knowledge.

DEFILE. Many were thoſe blemiſhes of perſon and conduct which, under the law, were eſteemed defilements: ſome were voluntary, ſome involuntary; ſome originated with the party, others were received by him; ſome were inevitable, being the effect of nature itſelf, others aroſe from perſonal tranſgreſſion; but under the goſpel, defilements are thoſe of the heart, of the mind, the temper, the conduct; moral uncleanneſſes are as numerous, and as much prohibited as ever, but ceremonial uncleanneſſes are ſuperſeded, as religious rites; though many of them claim attention as uſages of health, decency, and civility. Vide Matt. xv. 18. Gen. xlix. 4. Rom. i. 24. James iii. 6. Ezek. xliii. 8. See alſo many paſſages in Leviticus and Numbers. Vide BLEMISH, Supp. Vide alſo PURIFICATION.

DEGREES. Vide DIAL, and FRAGMENTS, No. II. CII. CCLXIII.

DEGREES, Pſalms of, vide PSALM, ad fin. The reader has ſeen many opinions on this title.—Is there room for another? Were theſe pſalms ſung during the time of ſacrifice, while the fleſh, &c. was conſuming on the altar, and while the ſmoke and fume of it aſcended toward heaven? Their title as Pſalms of Aſcent, ſeems not inimical to this ſuppoſition; eſpecially when we recollect that ſacrifices in Hebrew are called by this word. עלה OLEH, an aſcent; עלות OLUT, burnt ſacrifices; מעלות MOLUT, of degrees.

DOG. In Prov. vii. 22. we have a paſſage which perhaps is capable of a ſenſe very different from what what it has as it ſtands in our tranſlation. Solomon ſays, the unwary youth follows the lewd woman

> " As an ox goeth to the ſlaughter;
> As a fool to the correction of the ſtocks;
> Till a dart ſtrike through his liver,
> As a bird haſteth to the ſnare,
> And knoweth not that it is for his life."

Obſerve,

1. The words in the Hebrew are tranſpoſed " as the ſtocks to the correction of a fool."
2. Whoſe liver does the dart ſtrike through? the fool's? when going to the ſtocks? or when already in them? or
3. Is the connection thus? " he goeth after her.. till a dart ſtrike him."
4. The word oces עכס does not properly ſignify the ſtocks, as a place of puniſhment; but a tinkling ornament for the legs (vide PERISCELIDES) as in Iſaiah iii. 18. Hence Symmachus tranſlates, σκιρτῶν ἐπὶ δεσμῶν ἄφρων. The LXX. with whom agree Chald. Syr. and Arab, και ὡσπερ κύων ἐπὶ δεσμὸς, ἢ ὡς ἔλαφος τοξευμαὶι πεπληγως εις το ἧπαρ. As a dog goes to bonds; or as a ſtag, till a dart ſtrike through his liver.

Without entering into any conjectural conſideration of how the LXX. read in their copies, which appear to have had a letter or two different from our preſent copies, I think it clear that we ought to have here four ſimilies drawn from animals, every one of which is fatal in its iſſue: but, " the correction of the ſtocks" is not fatal, and the fool going to the ſtocks, is very like making the unwiſe youth a ſimile to himſelf. The paſſage, I think, requires this arrangement.

He goeth after her—directly—ſtraightway, as,

1. An ox goes to the ſlaughter-houſe;
2. As a dog goes to the tying up—halter-place;
3. As a ſtag goes to the place (where the hunters await his coming that they may ſhoot arrows, &c. at him)—of ſhooting through his liver;
4. As a bird haſteth to the ſnare;
5. But, no one of theſe creatures is aware that the place it is going to is deſtruction to its life.

Obſerve, the progreſs of this motion. " With her much fair ſpeech ſhe cauſed the youth to yield aſſent; with her flattery ſhe forced him—he goes after her at firſt, ſlowly,

1. As the heavy ox goes to the ſlaughter-houſe; he is even reluctant, but he goes—then ſhe ſeduces him to quicken his pace, and he proceeds more briſkly. As 2, a dog which is going to be hanged, and is already tied with the cord about his neck, yet is led by that cord, to the place of hanging, [the reader perceives the Hebrew word is taken generally, for ſhackles, manacles, bonds of any kind] As 3, a ſtag bounds with great ſwiftneſs towards the place where he is to be ſurrounded with the toils, and expoſed as a mark to the darts, &c. of the hunters: 4. As a bird flying with great rapidity, ſwifter even than the ſtag. This introduction of the dog produces an arrangement, and a climax in the paſſage, and ſhews its ſenſe and beauty clearly. It removes the fool, who ſeems to have no buſineſs here, and having the authority of the LXX. Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic verſions, is, I think, intitled to attention, as being very probably the true aſſimilation of the paſſage.

N. B. All the creatures alluded to expect gratification—but find their deaths where they are going.

DOMINION. Vide RULE.

DOUBLE, the counterpart to a quantity, to a ſpace, to a meaſure, &c. which is propoſed as the exemplar. Double money—the ſame value as before, and an equal value added to it, Gen. xliii. 12, 15. If a ſtolen ox, or ſheep be found—the thief ſhall reſtore double, i. e. two oxen, or two ſheep. For the right underſtanding of Iſaiah xl. 1. " She hath received from God double for all her ſins"—read, the counterpart—that which fits, the commenſurate quantity, or extent, or number, &c. of her ſins: that which is adequate, all things conſidered, as a diſpenſation of puniſhment. This paſſage does not mean—twice as much as was deſerved—double what was juſt; but, the fair, commenſurate, adequate, retribution. The ſame is the meaning of this phraſe in other places, Iſaiah lxi. 7. Jer. xvi. 18. xvii. 18. Zech. ix. 8.

The following [ ] addition made to the Second Edition, is reprinted here for the advantage of thoſe readers who purchaſed the firſt Edition.

[DREAMS. The ſubject of dreams is among the moſt curious which belong to human nature, and one which, to underſtand thoroughly, demands no mean ſkill in the affections, diſpoſitions, ſympathies, and agitations of the human mind. We ſhall not attempt to inveſtigate the ſubject here: we ſhall ſimply ſtate the conviction, that while the body reſts, and is aſleep, there is a ſomewhat diſtinct from the body which is extremely active, volatile, ſenſible; which ſees without employing the organ of ſight, hears without employing the organ of hearing, and performs a thouſand actions with all the appearance of reality without the intermediation of the bodily agents.—What is this power? this ſomewhat, controlled yet uncontrollable, dependent yet independent, retained by the tenement of clay, yet winging its devious courſe to regions, to events, and to actions, of which the tabernacle of the body is utterly unconſcious?

I could wiſh to verify the diſtinction between viſions and dreams: for which purpoſe I do not recollect more appropriate inſtances than thoſe which are furniſhed by the book of Job. The viſion is thus deſcribed, chap. iv.

" Now an occurrence was ſecretly — partially— brought to me, and mine ear received a little thereof. In thoughts from—(ב) diſtinct from viſions of the night when deep ſleep falleth on man,

" Fear ſeiz'd my ſoul, the hand of horror ſtrook
My ſhuddering fleſh, and every member ſhook:
A rapid wind with ruſhing fury paſs'd
So near, ſo loud, blaſt whirling after blaſt,
That my hairs ſtarted at each ſtiff'ning pore,
And ſtood erect."———— SCOTT.

then a ſpirit paſſed before my face, it ſtood ſtill but I could not diſcern the form thereof: an image was before mine eyes—and I heard a voice"—i. e. his ſenſes were in exerciſe, but the image was too fine, too aerial for his complete diſcernment of it—his bodily organs were not deficient, but the ſubject was beyond their powers. I ſuppoſe, too, the prophets had additional, or ſuperior powers, beſtowed on them pro tempore, when they were enabled to behold viſions. Whereas, a dream is deſcribed chap. xxxiii. 15. as happening " in (בּ) ſleep, in a viſion of the night, in deep ſleep falling on man, in ſlumberings on the bed."

Perhaps it is neither eaſy nor neceſſary, to diſtinguiſh always, when the word dream is uſed, whether it may not denote a viſion—but it ſhould ſeem likely that when the interference of an angel is mentioned, as giving counſel, and advice, or direction, that more than a mere dream is implied; as, to Jacob, Gen. xxxi. 11. to Joſeph, Matthew i. 20. ii. 13, 19.]

[DREAMER, is uſed as a word of reproach; of Joſeph by his brethren, Gen. xxxvii. 19. of Shemaiah, Jer. xxix. 24. vide chap. xxvii. 9. and Jude, verſe 8. See alſo Iſaiah lvi. 10.]

DUNGHILL. We have been favoured with the following extract by the reſpectable writer of FRAGMENT, No. LXXXIII. This ſitting on a dunghill, will remind the reader of Job's conduct under his malady; and we have ſeveral alluſions in Scripture to rolling in duſt, &c. as Micah i. 10. Lam. iii. 16, &c.

" We are informed by Plutarch, that the Syrians were affected with a particular diſeaſe characterized by violent pain of the bones, ulcerations over the whole body, ſwelling of the feet and abdomen, and a waſting of the liver. This malady was in general referred to the anger of the gods: but was ſuppoſed to be more eſpecially inflicted by the Syrian goddeſs, on thoſe who had eaten ſome kinds of fiſh deemed ſacred to her. [Vide ASKELON.]

In order to appeaſe the offended divinity, the perſons affected with the above diſorder were taught by the prieſts to put on ſackcloth, or old tattered garments, and to ſit on a dunghill; or to roll themſelves naked in the dirt, as a ſign of humiliation, and contrition for their offence. R. W."

EAR-RINGS. We have a paſſage, Gen. xxxiv. 4. which has been ſuppoſed capable of different ſenſes; Jacob ordered his houſhold to give up the "ſtrange gods which were in their hands, and all their ear-rings which were in their ears": —i. e. ſay ſome, in the ears of the ſtrange gods; while others, with more propriety ſay, in the ears of the perſons of Jacob's family. To determine this queſtion, I ſhall offer an inſtance of ear-rings, which I am ſure the patriarch Jacob would have buried as deep underground, as he would any other inſtrument of ſuperſtition: it is from MONTFAUCON, Ant. Expl. Vol. III. Supp.

"There was diſcovered at Porto, when I was at Rome, in a vault under ground, which was made for the family Cæſennia, two large ſtatues; one, of a man dreſſed like a ſenator, the other of a woman, in a Roman habit, with two gold pendants in her ears; one with the figure of Jupiter on it, the other with that of Juno: and alſo the ſtatue of a little child, their ſon. Aulus Cæſennius Hermea cauſed theſe ſtatues to be made for himſelf and his wife; as the inſcription informs us, which was found near them."

EASTER, Acts xii. 4. It is little to the honour of our tranſlation that this word occurs in it; it ſhould have been Paſſover; which feaſt of the Jews we well know. Eaſter is a word of Saxon origin; and imports a goddeſs of the Saxons, in honour of whom ſacrifices being annually offered about the paſſover time of the year, [ſpring] the name became attached to the Chriſtian feſtival of the reſurrection, which happened at the time of the paſſover; from hence we ſay Eaſter-day, Eaſter-Sunday, but very improperly, as we do by no means refer the feſtival then kept to the goddeſs Eaſter, of the ancient Saxons.

ED, Witneſs. The name given to the altar erected by the two tribes and half who were ſettled beyond Jordan: it was probably a copy of that among the Hebrews their brethren, and it was built to witneſs to poſterity the intereſt of theſe tribes in the altar common to all the deſcendants of Iſrael.

EDEN: "Aden, in the eaſtern dialects, is preciſely the ſame word as Eden, which we apply to the garden of paradiſe: it has two ſenſes according to a ſlight difference in its pronunciation; its firſt meaning is a ſettled abode, its ſecond delight, ſoftneſs, or tranquillity: the word Eden had, probably, one of theſe ſenſes in the ſacred text, though we uſe it as a proper name." Sir Wm. JONES's Works, p. 528, Vol. IV.

This import of the name juſtifies the tranſlation of the Vulgate: ſo that probably, it had this double acceptation in weſtern Aſia alſo: but the idea of "ſettled abode" i. e. for Adam, ought by no means to be excluded.

EL-BETH-EL, the God of Bethel. The name given by Jacob to an altar which he built, Gen. xxxv. 7. It ſtood, probably, in the very ſpot where he had formerly ſeen the prophetic dream of the ladder, chap. xxviii. 22.

EL-ELOHE-ISRAEL, God the God of Iſrael. The name of an altar built by Jacob, in a piece of ground which he bought of Hamor, Shechem's father, Gen. xxxiii. 20. From the article SALEM in the Dictionary we learn, that there was a Salem, or Shalem, near Jeruſalem; was this on the mount Moriah of Abraham? the Salem of Melchizedec?

CONJECTURES ON THE HISTORY OF ELIJAH, FED BY RAVENS.

Mr. PENNANT, in his Britiſh Zoology, p. 163, has the following remark in his account of the eagle. "Smith, in his Hiſtory of Kerry [in Ireland] relates, that a poor man in that county got a comfortable ſubſiſtence for his family, during a ſummer of famine, out of an eagle's neſt, by robbing the eaglets of the food the old ones brought them, whoſe attendance he protracted beyond the natural time, by clipping the wings, and retarding the flight of the young."

Many have been the conjectures (ſome of them ſufficiently wild) of writers on the ſubject of Elijah fed by ravens; or, as it is in the original, by OREBIM. "I have commanded the orebim to feed thee by the brook Cherith, ſays God. 1. Theſe orebim were angels, metamorphoſed into ravens, ſay ſome: 2. They were merchants, ſay others, who think they diſcover a ſimilar term taken in this ſenſe, Ezek. xxvii. 27. But Bochart ſufficiently refutes this conjecture; as God would not then have ſaid I have commanded the orebim, but the merchants of ſuch a place, to feed thee. 3. They were Arabs, ſay ſome. 4. They were inhabitants of Araba, or Arabo, a a town; or of Oreb, Judges vii. 25. Iſaiah x. 26. but Oreb was a rock only. And whence did the orebim get their fleſh and bread? 1. from the table of king Ahab, ſay ſome; 2. from ſome of the 7000 who had not bowed to Baal; 3. from off the altar; 4. and Mr. Baſnage thinks, the ſafeſt way is, to ſay that God created it on purpoſe: ſurely, if ſo, he might as well have placed it within reach of the prophet, and ſaved the ravens the trouble of porterage.

We ought to conſider 1. that Ahab ſought Elijah with avidity, and took an oath of EVERY people, no doubt, alſo in his dominions, that he was not concealed among its inhabitants; his ſituation therefore required the utmoſt privacy, even to ſolitude. 2. That when the brook Cherith was dried up the prophet was obliged to quit his aſylum, which he needed not to have done, had a people been his ſuppliers, for they could have brought him water as well as food.

Let us now ſuppoſe for a moment, that Elijah was concealed in ſome (rocky or) mountainous ſpot, where paſſengers never ſtrayed; and that here a number of voracious birds had built their neſts on the trees which grew around it, or on projections of rocks, &c. Theſe flying every day to procure food for their young, the prophet availed himſelf of a part of what they brought, and while they, obeying the dictates of nature, deſigned only to provide for their offſpring, divine providence directed them to provide at the ſame time for the wants of Elijah; ſo that what he gathered, whether from their neſts, what they dropped, or brought to him, or occaſionally from both means, was enough for his daily ſupport. And the orebim furniſhed him bread, OR fleſh in the morning, and bread, OR fleſh, in the evening. But, I rather think, there being a good many of them, ſome might furniſh bread, and others fleſh; and vice verſa, at different times: ſo that a little from each made up his ſolitary, but ſatisfactory meal. To ſuch ſtraits was the exiled prophet driven! and ſuch was the dependance of this zealous man of God!

Obſerve, theſe birds were not eagles: eagles do not eat bread, though they eat raw fleſh; eagles would have torn his eyes out, or would have killed him, naturally ſpeaking; neither were they vultures; but they were birds who fed their young with bread, or with fleſh, or with both; whence aroſe the neceſſity for their bringing it home to their neſt, and the certainty of the prophet's finding it thereabouts; they might ſupply their own hunger abroad, but their neſtlings demanded their care at home: moreover, if a poor man—in a ſummer of famine—the very caſe of Elijah—could get a comfortable ſubſiſtence for his family from a ſingle neſt of eaglets, the prophet, being alone, might pick up an ample ſupply from a numerous colony of orebim; and yet leave enough for his caterers and their brood.

I think, if I recollect rightly, the poor man who robbed the eaglets, uſed to hide himſelf among the trees, till he ſaw the old eagles had depoſited their prey, and were departed in ſearch of more; then he advanced to the neſt, and made free with what he found there; whether Elijah acted in the ſame manner, I do not know, but, we ſee that he is not the only one who has been nouriſhed by birds, and that too according to their nature; for which purpoſe birds of prey, not domeſtic fowl, were the moſt proper.

As to God's commanding the ravens—it is a mode of ſpeech uſed where vocal commands were not employed.

How long did Elijah continue at the brook Cherith? the original ſignifies only "to the end of days:" ſix months, ſay the moſt conſiderate interpreters; which, perhaps, though too long for a breeding ſeaſon, yet is not inconſiſtent with our ſtatement.

After all, perhaps theſe orebim were not ſtrictly ravens, but rooks, which are birds of the ſame kind, and at firſt ſight of the ſame form, nature, and manners, but on cloſer examination ſhew conſiderable differences. 1. The rook is the corvus (vulgarly underſtood to be the crow) of Virgil, ſays Mr. PENNANT,

E paſtu decedens agmine magno
Corvorum increpuit denſis exercitus alis.

A very natural deſcription of the return of theſe birds to their neſts in the evening. 2. The rook only, of this kind of birds, is gregarious; the true raven flies only in pairs; and one pair has been known to keep a whole iſland as a territory to themſelves; but rookeries, we know, among ourſelves, ourſelves, contain ſometimes a great number of birds. 3. The rook is a harmleſs bird, lives upon inſects, not upon carrion, as does the raven, and the crow: but in a time of ſcarcity would naturally prey where it could, and be not only more active, but much more bold than uſual: however, this renders it leſs of an unclean bird than the others are. N. B. The Talmud diſtinguiſhes three ſorts of ravens, but I do not know that either is the rook.

Among us rooks begin to build in March. Query, 1. Was the time of their young being ready for flight delayed by the famine, &c. in the days of Elijah? 2. What birds in the Eaſt are beſt known as moſt likely to have been employed on this occaſion? that are 1. gregarious; 2. not carrion eaters; but, 3. feed on bread, or on fleſh; or on other clean food.

In Abyſſinia, Mr. BRUCE mentions certain birds of the eagle kind as extremely bold: and one, which he ſhot, while taking a piece of meat out of a boiling pot.

I rather think, that corvus, and oreb alſo, expreſſes the whole claſs of theſe birds, ravens, rooks, crows, &c. for ſo we have in Horace,

Non paſces in cruce corvos, thou ſhalt not hang on a croſs and feed ravens, or crows, which are carrion eaters: ſo we have a vulgar expreſſion among ourſelves, ſpeaking of a perſon likely to die, "he will give the crow a pudding." That oreb denotes a claſs of birds appears from Levit. xi. 15. Deut. xiv. 14. where they are declared unclean, "EVERY oreb [raven, Eng. Tr.] after its kind."

ELISHA. It is uſually ſaid, that the children from Bethel who mocked Eliſha, were deſtroyed by two bears; and CALMET with others, tells us the "two bears DEVOURED two and forty children." Is this credible? Surely one child had been meat enough for one bear; or forty-two children for a ſcore of thoſe animals. Happily our own tranſlation keeps clear of this error, and renders "two ſhe-bears TARE theſe children," i. e. not limb from limb; not, "to death, with blood, and groans and tears," but ſcratched, clawed, wounded, tare them, as the Hebrew root (בקע) ſignifies, to cleave, to ſeparate adjoining parts, to divide, in ſhort, to tear more or leſs, for all might not be equally guilty.

I notice this inſtance, in proof of how far popular repreſentation may miſlead men of learning, when they are not very attentive; and of the neceſſity for conſtant watchfulneſs againſt failings, and conſtant candour towards them, even in the beſt intentioned writers.

ENOCH. Mr. BRUCE was the firſt who brought into Europe authentic copies of the books of Enoch; parts of them have been tranſlated, but a general ſummary of them may ſatisfy the reader, and this we ſhall give in that traveller's own words:

"Here we may obſerve by the way, that Jude's appealing to the apocryphal books did by no means import, that either he believed or warranted the truth of them. But it was an argument a fortiori, which our Saviour himſelf often makes uſe of, and amounts to no more than this, "You," ſays he to the Jews, "deny certain facts, which muſt be from prejudice, becauſe you have them allowed in your own books, and believe them there." And a very ſtrong and fair way of arguing it is, but this is by no means any allowance that they are true. In the ſame manner, "You," ſays Jude, "do not believe the coming of Chriſt and a latter judgment; yet your ancient Enoch, whom you ſuppoſe was the ſeventh from Adam, tells you this plainly, and in ſo many words long ago." And indeed the quotation is, word for word the ſame, in the ſecond chapter of the book.

"All that is material to know further concerning the book of Enoch is, that it is a gnoſtic book, containing the age of the Emims, Anakims, and Egregores, ſuppoſed deſcendants of the ſons of God, when they fell in love with the daughters of men, and had ſons who were giants. Theſe giants do not ſeem to have been ſo charitable to the ſons and daughters of men, as their fathers had been. For, firſt, they began to eat all the beaſts of the earth, they then fell on the birds and fiſhes, and ate them alſo; their hunger being not yet ſatisfied, they ate all the corn, all men's labour, all the trees and buſhes; and not content yet, they fell to eating the men themſelves." BRUCE'S TRAVELS, Vol. I. p. 449.

Is it utterly impoſſible that Enoch really did leave ſome prophecies behind him, which were unmercifully interpolated in later ages? May theſe books contain ſome truths, but loaded with paraphraſes, comments, and exceſſive imaginations of ſubſequent elucidators, and targumiſts?

ENSIGN, a military token, or mark to be followed, a ſtandard. Vide ARMOUR, Plate I. No. CCXVIII. p. 88. It is probable this may come before us again, elſewhere. The ancient Jewiſh enſigns were long poles, at the end of which were a kind of chafing-diſhes made of iron bars, which held a fire, whoſe light, ſhape, &c. denoted the party they belonged to. Vide AI, ad fin. God ſays he would lift up an enſign, Iſaiah v. 26. Chriſt was "an enſign to the Gentiles; to him the Gentiles ſhall repair," Iſaiah xi. 10. The brazen ſerpent was lifted up on an enſign pole, and to this Chriſt compares his own "lifting up," John iii. 14. when, ſays he, "I will draw all men to me," John xii. 32.

ENVY, a malignant diſpoſition, or ſtate of mind, which grudges at the welfare of others, and would willingly deprive them of their advantages. Rachel envied the fertility of Leah, Gen. xxx. 1. Joſeph was envied by his brethren, Gen. xxxvii. 11. Envy ſlayeth the ſilly, Job v. 2. is rottenneſs to the bones, Prov. xiv. 30. in ſhort, it defiles, deſtroys, pines away, conſumes both ſoul and body; and is the very characteriſtic of Satan, through whoſe envy of human happineſs death entered the world.

EPISTLE, a letter written from one party to another. This term is eminently applied to thoſe letters in the New Teſtament, which were written by the apoſtles, on various occaſions, to direct the conduct of Chriſtian churches.

It is not to be ſuppoſed that every note, or memorandum, written by the hands of the apoſtles, or by their direction, was inſpired, or was deſerving of preſervation to diſtant ages: but, thoſe only were preſerved by Providence, from which uſeful directions had been drawn, and might hereafter be drawn, by believers, as from a perpetual directory for faith and practice.

In reading an epiſtle, we ought to conſider the occaſion of it, the circumſtances of the parties to whom it was addreſſed, the time when written, the general ſcope and deſign of it, as well as the intention of particular arguments and paſſages. We ought alſo to note the ſtyle and manner of the writer, his mode of expreſſion, &c.

The epiſtles afford many and moſt powerful evidences for the truth of Chriſtianity; they appeal to a great number of extraordinary facts; and allude to principles, and opinions, as admitted, or as prevailing, or as oppoſed, among thoſe to whom they are addreſſed. They mention a conderable number of perſons, deſcribe their ſituations in life, hint at their connections with the churches, and by ſometimes addreſſing them, ſometimes recommending them by name, they connect their teſtimony with that of the writer of the epiſtle; and often, no doubt, they gave a proportionate ſhare of influence to thoſe individuals.

Beſide this, it is every way likely, that the individuals mentioned in the epiſtles, would carefully procure copies of theſe writings, would give them all the authority, and all the notoriety in their power, would communicate them to other churches, and in ſhort, would become vouchers for their authenticity, &c. &c.

We in the preſent day, who poſſeſs theſe inſtructive documents, may learn from them many things for our advantage and for our conduct; how to avoid thoſe evils which had formerly injured the profeſſors of true religion; and how to rectify thoſe errors and abuſes to which time and incident often give riſe, or to whoſe ſpread and prevalence, particular occurrences or conjunctures are favourable. Vide BIBLE, CANON, &c.

ESEK, contention. The name of a well dug by the patriarch Iſaac, Gen. xxvi. 20.

ESPOUSE, ESPOUSALS. This was a ceremony of betrothing, or coming under obligation for the purpoſe of marriage; and was a mutual agreement between the two parties, which uſually preceded the marriage ſome conſiderable time. For the form of it, vide MARRIAGE, and I. MARY.

The reader will do well carefully to attend to the diſtinction between eſpouſals and marriage, as eſpouſals in the eaſt are ſometimes contracted years before the parties cohabit: and ſometimes in very early youth. This cuſtom is alluded to figuratively, as between God and his people, Jer. ii. 2. to whom he was a huſband, Jer xxi. 32. and the apoſtle ſays he acted as a kind of aſſiſtant (pronuba) on this occaſion. "I have eſpouſed you to Chriſt," 2 Cor. xi. 2. have drawn up the writings, ſettled the agreements, given pledges, &c. of that union. See Iſaiah liv. 5. Matth. xxv. 6. Rev. xix.

ESSENES. I have often wondered that Chriſtian divines make no uſe in their diſcourſes of the character, manners, and principles of the Jewiſh ſect of the Eſſenes; becauſe they are not explicitly mentioned in the goſpels, they are uſually diſregarded.

But I would query, whether John the Baptiſt was not educated in this community? Obſerve 1. that his father and mother being of great age at the time of his birth, it is probable they did not live till their ſon arrived at maturity. 2. The community of the Eſſenes was a probable place for John to retire to; and his firſt appearance as a preacher being in the deſert, ſeems to hint at his beginning near to thoſe parts where he was beſt known. 3. It does not appear that John went regularly up to Jeruſalem, (and we find the Eſſenes did not go thither) ſo that he might, ſtrictly ſpeaking, have no perſonal knowledge of Jeſus; as he has been uſually underſtood to declare. 4. His manners, as neither eating nor drinking,

i. e. freely, but being of a reſerved courſe of conduct, are perfectly agreeable to thoſe of the Eſſenes; and 5. his continual abode in the country, not entering the principal cities, agrees with their cuſtoms; 6. they baptized; 7. they lived near the Jordan; 8. they fed on dates, and other fruit; and in many other reſpects they ſeem to have agreed with the character of John, as we find it deſcribed or implied in the goſpels.

Alſo, the Eſſenes are deſcribed as "having all things in common," no one of them claiming perſonal property in goods, but referring them to the whole community; this then, takes away the ſingularity of the primitive church, of which we are told, "no one ſaid that aught which he poſſeſſed was his own, but they had all things in common." That is to ſay, theſe firſt converts imitated the Eſſenes, a ſect well known among them; they were in the city, what the Eſſenes were in the deſert.

I ſuppoſe too, that the officers called deacons, reſembled ſuch as were appointed among this ſect; "the ſteward, who diſtributes to every one what he wants." This alſo ſets the behaviour of Ananias and Sapphira in a ſtrong light; ſince certainly they knew perfectly well the cuſtom of this ſect, and had like them made a profeſſion of renouncing riches. Obſerve, "the Eſſenes took no proviſions on their journies;" ſo the diſciples, Mark vi. 8. Luke ix. 3. "they were hoſpitable;" vide Rom. xii. 13. 1 Tim. iii. 2. Titus i. 8. 1 Peter iv. 9. "they did not marry;" perhaps the fear that this principle ſhould be extended too far, ought to be taken into our conſideration, when we examine the grounds of ſome of the apoſtle's advice, 1 Cor. vii. Heb. xiii. 14. 1 Tim. iv. 3.

In ſhort, I adviſe the reader to peruſe with attention the article ESSENES and THERAPEUTÆ, with theſe ideas in his mind; and I think he will agree with me, that this ſect deſerves much more conſideration than it uſually receives.

ETHIOPIA. The following are the ſentiments of Mr. BRUCE, Travels, Vol. I. p. 407, &c. We give them to the reader, as thoſe of a traveller well acquainted with the manners of the nations he deſcribes:

"The tranſlator, 2 Chron. xiv. 9, calls Zerah an Ethiopian, which ſhould either mean, he dwelt in Arabia, as he really did, and this gave him no advantage, or elſe, that he was a ſtranger, who originally came from the country above Egypt; either way, it would have been impoſſible during his whole life-time, to have collected a million of men, one of the greateſt armies that ever ſtood on the face of the earth; nor could he have fed them, though they had ate the whole trees that grew in his country, nor could he have given every hundredth man one drink of water in a day, from all the wells he had in his country.

"Here, then, is an obvious triumph for infidelity, becauſe, as I have ſaid, no ſupernatural means are pretended. But had it been tranſlated, that Zerah was a black-moor, a Cuſhite-negro, and prince of the Cuſhites, who were carriers in the Iſthmus, an Ethiopian ſhepherd, then the wonder ceaſes. Twenty camels, employed to carry couriers upon them, might have procured that number of men to meet in a ſhort ſpace of time; and, as Zerah was the aggreſſor, he had time to chooſe when he ſhould attack his enemy; every one of theſe ſhepherds carrying with them their proviſion of flour and water, as is their invariable cuſtom, might have fought with Aſa at Gerar; without eating a loaf of Zerah's bread, or drinking a pint of his water.

"The next paſſage I ſhall mention is Iſaiah, chap. xlv. ver. 14. "The labour of Egypt, and merchandize of Ethiopia, and of the Sabeans, men of ſtature, ſhall come over to thee, and they ſhall be thine." Here the ſeveral nations are diſtinctly and ſeverally mentioned in their places, but the whole meaning of the paſſage would have been loſt, had not the ſituations of theſe nations been perfectly known; or, had not the Sabeans been mentioned ſeparately, for both the Sabeans and the Cuſhites were certainly Ethiopians. Now the meaning of the verſe is, that the fruit of the agriculture of Egypt, which is wheat; the commodities of the negro, gold, ſilver, ivory, and perfumes; would be brought by the Sabean ſhepherds, their carriers, and a nation of great power, who ſhall join themſelves with you.

"Again Ezekiel ſays, chap. xxx. 8, 9, "And they ſhall know that I am the Lord, when I have ſet a fire in Egypt, and all her helpers ſhall be deſtroyed." "In that day ſhall meſſengers go forth from me in ſhips, to make the careleſs Ethiopians afraid." Now, Nebuchadnezzar was to deſtroy Egypt, Ezek. chap. xxix. ver. 10. from the frontiers of Paleſtine to the mountains above Atbara, where the Cuſhite dwelt. Between this and Egypt is a great deſert; the country beyond it and on both ſides was poſſeſſed by half a million of men. The Cuſhite, or negro merchant, was ſecure under theſe circumſtances from any inſult by land: as they were open to the ſea, and had no defender, meſſengers, therefore, in ſhips, or a fleet, had eaſy acceſs to them, to alarm and keep them at home, that they did not fall into danger by marching into Egypt againſt Nebuchadnezzar, or interrupting the ſervice upon which God had ſent him. But this does not appear from from tranſlating Cuſh, Ethiopian; the neareſt Ethiopian to Nebuchadnezzar, the moſt powerful and capable of oppoſing him, were the Ethiopian ſhepherds of the Thebaid, and theſe were not acceſſible to ſhips; and the ſhepherds, ſo poſted near to the ſcene of deſtruction to be committed by Nebuchadnezzar were enemies to the Cuſhites living in towns, and they had repeatedly themſelves deſtroyed them, and therefore had no temptation to be other than ſpectators." So far Mr. BRUCE. For ſome further ideas reſpecting theſe people, ſee the FRAGMENTS on the xviiith chapter of Iſaiah. No. 322, 460, and GAMMADIM.

ETHNARCHS. It ſeems that the Jews after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem preſerved a ſort of monarchy till the beginning of the fifth century. They had in Paleſtine an ethnarch, or chief of their nation, who, by the toleration of the Romans, was inveſted with great power. He ſtyled himſelf alſo patriarch. His place was hereditary, and deſcended from father to ſon. All the ſynagogues of the eaſt and weſt paid him tribute, under the pretence of contributing to the ſupport of the Rabbins, who applied themſelves in Judea to the ſtudy of the law. Thoſe whom he commiſſioned to levy this tax were apoſtles or envoys. Theſe patriarchs, who had made themſelves very odious by their extortions and rapines, did not exiſt in 429. See M. Tillemont's Hiſtoire du temps, tom. i. La Bleterie.

EUROCLYDON, a dangerous wind in the Levant, or eaſtern part of the Mediterranean ſea, Acts xxvii. 14. It is uſually ſaid that this wind blows from the north eaſt; but perhaps it is what our ſeamen call a Levanter, which is confined to no point of the compaſs, but by veering to all points is attended with great danger.

EZEKIEL. In anſwer to the rabbinical remark that this prophet ſeems to contradict Moſes—which diſpoſed the Sanhedrim to reject the prophecies of Ezekiel from the canon, obſerve, that Moſes himſelf ſays the very ſame thing, Deut. xxiv. 16. "The fathers ſhall not be put to death for the children, neither ſhall the children be put to death for the fathers: every man ſhall be put to death for his own ſin." For the viſitation of divine juſtice on the third and fourth generation, vide FRAGMENT, 2 R. 340.

The following are the ſentiments of a correſpondent on

EZEKIEL'S VISION.

"I wiſh the writer upon Ezekiel's viſion of the wheels, (No. CLII. p. 119) had inſerted his opinion upon the deſign of it as underſtood by the prophet, To me it appears to be intended to deſcribe the formidableneſs of the Babylonian army, and the dreadful effects that would take place in conſequence thereof; both to the people that remained in the land, and to the city and temple. This opinion I ground on what was one principal deſign of the prophet's peculiar buſineſs to that people, which was to remonſtrate with them on account of their great national wickedneſs, and to aſſure them that if they did not repent and obey the law of God, he would moſt certainly puniſh them; as repreſented by him, and alſo by Jeremiah, his contemporary. This viſion appeared to him firſt in the fifth year of the reign of Jehoiakim, and again not long after, as chap. iii. 12, 13, 14, 22, 23, at which times he received further inſtructions what he was to ſay to them.

"About one year and an half after, as chap. viii. 1—4, xi. 22, 23, it appeared to him again; when farther communications were made to him reſpecting the people and city of Jeruſalem, and is continued to the end of the tenth chapter; in which is repreſented the ſins of the people, and the deſtruction of the inhabitants. Fifteen years from its firſt appearance to the prophet, he ſaw it again, as though at Jeruſalem, xliii. 1—5.

"The terribleneſs of the Babylonian army, and the deſolation that it would make among the people and city, are in ſtrong language deſcribed in theſe paſſages: Jer. iv. 6—9. vi. 22—26. xv. 13, 14. xxiii. 19, 20. Ezek. xxiii. 22—34. Habakkuk i. 5—11.

FOLLY. The character of fool, and the attribute folly, ſeems to be uſed in the Proverbs in more than one ſenſe: ſometimes it ſeems to mean lack of underſtanding, and ſometimes perverſeneſs of will; I find in the Gentoo laws a ſpecies of folly, which, thinking it may illuſtrate ſome of the applications of this term in Scripture, I ſhall ſubmit to the reader's conſideration.

"Among the qualities required for the proper execution of public buſineſs, mention is made, "That a man muſt be able to keep in ſubjection his luſt, his anger, his avarice, his folly, and his pride." Theſe vices are ſometimes denominated in the Shanſcrit under the general term Opadhee, a word which occurs in the quoted ſpecimen of the comment upon the King Beid. The folly there ſpecified is not to be underſtood in the uſual ſenſe of the word in the European idiom, as a negative quality, or the mere want of ſenſe, but as a kind of obſtinately ſtupid lethargy, or perverſe abſence of mind, in which the will is not altogether paſſive: it ſeems to be a weakneſs peculiar to Aſia; for we cannot find a term by which to expreſs the preciſe idea in the European languages; it operates ſomewhat like the violent impulſe of fear, under which men will utter falſehoods totally incompatible with each other, and utterly contrary to their own opinion, knowledge, and conviction; and it may be added alſo, their inclination and intention. A very remarkable inſtance of this temporary frenzy happened lately in the ſupreme court of judicature at Calcutta, where a man (not an idiot) ſwore upon a trial, that he was no kind of relation to his own brother, who was then in court, and who had conſtantly ſupported him from his infancy; and that he lived in a houſe by himſelf, for which he paid the rent from his own pocket; when it was proved that he was not worth a rupee, and when the perſon in whoſe houſe he had always reſided ſtood at the bar cloſe to him.

Whenever the word folly included among the vices above-mentioned, occurs in the caſe, it muſt always be underſtood to carry the meaning here deſcribed. Another conjecture, and that exceedingly acute and ingenious, has been ſtarted upon this folly, that it may mean the deception which a man permits to be impoſed on his judgment by his paſſions, as acts of rapacity and avarice are often committed by men who aſcribe them to prudence, and a juſt aſſertion of their own right; malice and rancour paſs for juſtice, and brutality for ſpirit. This opinion, when thoroughly examined, will very nearly tally with the former; for all the paſſions as well as fear, have an equal efficacy to diſturb and diſtort the mind: but to account for the folly here ſpoken of, as being the offſpring of the paſſions, inſtead of drawing a parallel between it and the impulſes of thoſe paſſions, we muſt ſuppoſe the impulſe to act with infinitely more violence upon an Aſiatic mind, than we can ever have ſeen exemplified in Europe. It is, however, ſomething like the madneſs ſo inimitably delineated in the hero of Cervantes, ſenſible enough upon ſome occaſions, and at the ſame time completely wild, and unconſcious of itſelf upon others; and that too originally produced by an effect of the will, though in the end overpowering and ſuperſeding its functions." HALHED's Gentoo Laws, Preface.

FOLLY AND WISDOM COMPANIONISED.

Proverbs, chapter ix.

It is many years ſince my mind ſuggeſted, that a companioniſed picture of wiſdom and folly was included in the deſcriptions given us in this chapter. I mean, that the former verſes of the chapter contain a deſcription of Wiſdom, perſonified; of her actions, conduct, and behaviour; and that from verſe 13 to 18 contains a deſcription of Folly, in like manner perſonified; who imitates the actions, conduct, and behaviour of Wiſdom, and ſo cloſely does ſhe mimic them, that a perſon void of underſtanding would as readily readily and as ſtrongly be perſuaded to follow the falſe, and impoſitious goddeſs, Folly, as to obey the true, and genuine power of Wiſdom, divine Wiſdom herſelf. That ſuch perſonification is common in the Proverbs, and in Eccleſiaſtes, is evident to every reader.

I am not without hopes, that this idea may open the way alſo to a true conſtruction, and correction of a paſſage, which, as it ſtands at preſent, is obſcure; and ſome think is damaged: the LXX. read verſe 13, A fooliſh and brazen faced woman, ενδεης ψωμ8 γινεται, ſhe becomes to want a piece of bread: ſhe has no ſhame; the Chaldee reads, ſhe has no goodneſs. Some have ſuppoſed that the word פתיות petajut, ſimplicity, is redundant; but if any word is redundant, I ſhould as willingly ſuppoſe it was the firſt word, "a woman," in which caſe, as the nouns are of the feminine gender, and imply a woman, without that diſtinctive deſcription, the import of the paſſage would ſtand thus:———

"Simplicity is fooliſh and clamorous, or,—Folly is clamorous — ſimplicity itſelf, i. e. extremely ſimple, and drives away knowledge, of any valuable kind, from her. Yet ſhe ſits at the door of her houſe, and imitates the actions of Wiſdom, as appears by comparing theſe two perſonages together.

WISDOM.

Wiſdom hath builded her houſe,
She hath hewn out her numerous ornamental pillars,
She hath killed her beaſts,
She hath mingled her wine;
She hath furniſhed her table;
She hath ſent forth her maidens;
She crieth on the higheſt places of the city,
"Whoſo is ſimple, let him turn in hither:"
To him who wanteth underſtanding, ſhe ſaith,
"Come eat of my bread,
"And drink of the wine I have mingled,
"Forſake the fooliſh and live,
"And go in the way of underſtanding;
"For by me thy days ſhall be multiplied,
"And the years of thy life ſhall be many."

FOLLY.

Fooliſh and clamorous is Simplicity;
And ſhe repels all knowledge from her.
She ſitteth at the door of her houſe,
On a throne in the high places of the city,
To call paſſengers who go right on their ways:
Saying,

"Whoſo is ſimple, let him turn in hither:"
To him who wanteth underſtanding ſhe ſaith,
"Stolen waters are ſweet;
"And bread eaten in ſecret is pleaſant."
She invites him to her houſe,
But he is not aware that the dead are there,
That her gueſts are in the depths of the grave.

Thus we ſee Folly aſſumes the addreſs of Wiſdom, and invites the ſame perſons; but, the counſel ſhe gives detects her, being very different from that of real Wiſdom. The conſequences of following the counſels of theſe contraſted perſonages, are very ſtrongly marked, and are altogether oppoſite; one tending to prolonged life, the other to premature diſſolution.

FURY is attributed to divinity, only metaphorically, or ſpeaking after the manner of men: i. e. God's providential, &c. actions, are ſuch as would be performed by a man when he is in a ſtate of fury. So that when God is ſaid to pour out his fury on a perſon, or a people, it is a figurative expreſſion for diſpenſing afflictive providences: but we muſt be careful not to attribute human infirmities, paſſions, to the Deity.

GERAH,

GERAH, the leaſt piece or ſegment of money among the Hebrews, 20 of which made a ſhekel, Exod. xxx. 13.

GERIZIM. I ſuſpect that both the Jewiſh and Samaritan copies of the Pentateuch, after all the debates on account of them, are correct, in their ſeemingly oppoſite readings of Gerizim and Ebal:—for we have only to reflect, that the Hebrew particle uſed, is taken with a latitude, and that the perſon ſpeaking did not ſtand ON theſe mountains, ſtrictly, but AT them, i. e. in the valley between them: now, I ſubmit, whether a perſon pronouncing a bleſſing from any part where he ſtands, does not bleſs that part oppoſite to him, rather than that whereon he ſtands: if ſo, then a number might ſtand AT, adjacent to, againſt Ebal, to bleſs, as the Jewiſh copies ſay, but their bleſſing would be directed to Gerizim, ſo that Gerizim would be the mount of bleſſings, as the Samaritan copies ſay. In fact, I preſume the altar, &c. ſtood in the valley between both mountains, and not on the upper parts of either. Vide Deut. xi. 29.

GIANTS. It depends on the length at which the Hebrew cubit is taken, whether the height of Goliath ſhould be eſtimated at ten feet ſeven inches, as CALMET has done; or at nine feet ſix inches, for which Mr. PARKHURST contends, who founds his calculation on the eſtimated meaſure of a cubit, as deduced from Joſephus. The latter height is, no doubt, ſufficiently tall.

There have been ſo few well proportioned, able bodied men of this immenſe magnitude, that the wonder at the weight of Goliath's armour is greatly increaſed, on conſideration. Such perſons as have had the misfortune, ſhall I call it?—to be exceſſively tall above others have uſually been of weakly body, often of diſproportioned, or diſeaſed limbs, or of ſtill more weakly minds: but that Goliath ſhould be able to wear his armour, and to carry it on his perſon, implies a ſtrength of body no leſs wonderful than his extraordinary dimenſions.

In proof, however, that the dimenſions of Goliath, though extraordinary, are not incredible, we ſhall offer an inſtance, or two, ſelected from the beſt authorities:

" The talleſt man that hath been ſeen in our age was one named Gabara, who in the days of Claudius the late emperor, was brought out of Arabia: he was nine feet nine inches high. Plin. lib. vii. cap. 16. p. 165. Solin. cap. 5. p. 188.

" Maximinus the emperor was eight feet and a half in height: he was a Thracian, barbarous, cruel, and hated of all men; he uſed the bracelet or armlet of his wife as a ring for his thumb, and his ſhoe was longer by a foot than that of another man. Zuing, vol. ii. lib. ii. p. 276. Capitolin,

" There were in the time of Auguſtus Cæſar two perſons, called Iduſio and Secundilla, each of them was ten feet high, and ſomewhat more: their bodies after their death were kept and preſerved for a wonder in a ſepulchre within the Saluſtian gardens. Vide Kornman. de Mirac. Vivor. 25 Plin. lib. vii. xvi. p. 165. Solin. cap. 5. p. 187.

" Vitellius ſent Darius, the ſon of Artabanus, an hoſtage to Rome, with divers preſents, among which there was a man ſeven cubits, or ten feet two inches high, a Jew born; he was named Eleazar, and was called a giant by reaſon of his greatneſs." Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 6. cap. 5. § 5. Edit. Hudſon.

Merula, who ſucceeded Juſtus Lipſius as profeſſor of hiſtory in the univerſity of Leyden, aſſerts, that A. D. 1583, he himſelf ſaw in France, a Fleming, who exceeded nine feet in height. Coſmograph. Part. i. lib. iii. cap. 14. Leigh. Analecta Cæſar. Rom. p. 265.

Becanus ſaw a man near ten feet high, and a woman full ten feet high. Wond. Nat. & Art. Vol. ii. p. 268. Vide Phil. Tranſ. No. 260.

We remember to have ſeen in London, Bamford, a hatter by trade, who lived near Temple Bar, who meaſured eight feet, and ſix or eight inches, yet wilfully loſt four inches of his ſtature, by a habit of ſtooping, which he had contracted: and we know that O'Brien, lately exhibited under the name of " the Iriſh Giant," meaſured eight feet ſix or eight inches, while living, and, I think, two or three inches more when dead.

GOLD, a yellow metal, the heavieſt, pureſt, moſt ductile, and ſhining, and on theſe accounts the moſt valuable, of metals. Of all the metals, gold is moſt frequently found native; and is indeed very rarely found in a ſtate of ore; i. e. diveſted of its metallic forms by its particles being penetrated by, and intimately mixed with, ſulphur, and in the few inſtances in which it is found thus, it never conſtitutes a peculiar ore, but is found intermixed among ores of other metals; and moſt frequently among thoſe of ſilver, or thoſe ores in which, though of ſome other metal, yet there is a large quantity of ſilver, in which the gold lies in its ſtate of ore. Native gold, though free from the penetrating ſulphurs which reduce metals to ores, is yet very ſeldom found pure; but has almoſt conſtantly an admixture of ſilver with it, and very frequently of copper.

per. Native gold is ſometimes found in pure maſſes of conſiderable ſize; many having been found of more than a pound weight: theſe maſſes are met with in gold mines, and are called aurum Obryzum, Obrizium, but they are very rare; ſuch, however, have been ſometimes found in the German mines. Its common appearance, in its more looſe ſtate, is in form of what is called gold duſt: this is native gold in ſmaller maſſes, uſually indeed very ſmall, mixed among the ſand of rivers. This is found in many parts of the world, but the greateſt quantity of it is from Guinea. By all the trials that have been made, gold ſeems the moſt ſimple of all ſubſtances. It is wholly incapable of ruſt, and is not ſonorous when ſtruck. It requires a ſtrong fire to melt it, remaining unaltered in the degree of heat that fuſes tin or lead, but running with a leſs vehement one than is neceſſary to the fuſing of iron, or copper. Gold occurs throughout the Scripture; and the uſe of that metal among the ancient Hebrews, in its native and mixed ſtate, and for the ſeveral purpoſes wherein it is in uſe at preſent, was common. The ark of the covenant was overlaid with pure gold; the mercy ſeat, the veſſels and utenſils belonging to the tabernacle were of gold, as were thoſe alſo of the houſe of the Lord; and the drinking veſſels of king Solomon; they made chains, bracelets, and other ornaments of gold, coins and medals, crowns of gold, &c. The mines whence Solomon had the greateſt part of his gold were thoſe of Ophir. See OPHIR.

GOSPEL, the word goſpel is Saxon, q. God's ſpell, good news, glad tidings [news from God?]: the ſame is the import of Euangelia in the Greek.

There have been a variety of opinions reſpecting the time, and the order, of the four goſpels; but, I think, the plan on which each of thoſe books is written, has hitherto not been ſufficiently aſcertained.

I ſhall venture a few thoughts on the goſpel of Matthew, which may have their effect in ſolving ſome difficulties of chronology, &c.

I ſuppoſe that Matthew wrote his goſpel the earlieſt of any—but I think it is not one continued, or orderly, narrative, but is divided into twelve books, analogous, perhaps, to the twelve tribes of Iſrael, or to the twelve apoſtles, &c. I divide theſe books in the following manner:

1. Introduction, containing tranſactions previous to the public appearance of John the Baptiſt, and ſeparated from it by an interval of thirty years, chap. i. ii.
2. The appearance and miniſtry of John the Baptiſt, and the inauguration of Jeſus into his office, chap. iii. iv. 22.
3. A ſpecimen of Jeſus Chriſt's manner of teaching, and of the doctrines he taught, &c. in Galilee, chap. iv. 23. v. vi. vii.
4. Miracles performed by Jeſus; in Capernaum, principally, chap. viii. 35.—ix. 34.
5. Progreſs of Jeſus; he commiſſions his diſciples to perform miracles, chap. ix. 35—x. xi. 12.
6. A collection of the parables of Jeſus, chap. xiii. xiv. xv.
7. Jeſus in Judea beyond Jordan, chap. xix. xx.
8. Jeſus at Jeruſalem; his conduct there, chap. xxi. xxii. xxiii.
9. Jeſus foretels the deſtruction of the temple, &c. chap. xxiv. 1—xxv. 46.
10. Conſpiracy againſt Jeſus: his actions previous to being arreſted, chap. xxvi. 1—56.
11. Arreſt and crucifixion of Jeſus, chap. xxvi. 57—xxvii. 66.
12. Hiſtory of the reſurrection of Jeſus, chap. xxviii.

Now, if this diviſion of Matthew be admiſſible, it removes at once all the chronological difficulties which embarraſs commentators, to reconcile Matthew with Luke; ſince Matthew aſſociates ſimilar facts into one book, while Luke propoſes "an orderly hiſtory" according to the courſe of events: the different plans of theſe writers then, led them to different arrangements: this alſo gives the reaſon why Luke might compoſe for himſelf, and for others, an orderly hiſtory; which Matthew's, however correct, was not. It relieves Mark from the charge of having copied Matthew; and in ſhort, it diſturbs nothing in this evangeliſt, it merely propoſes proper diviſions of his work, which the preſent chapterings have confuſed.

St. MARK'S GOSPEL I conſider as a collection of facts, gathered by this evangeliſt from the lips of St. Peter, as well from his private diſcourſe, as from his public preachings: for this we have the teſtimony of antiquity. Now, it is not very likely that theſe facts ſhould be arranged by this evangeliſt preciſely in chronological order; it would anſwer his purpoſe ſufficiently, if they were accurately related, though but looſely connected in reſpect to the times when they occurred.

It remains that we conſider St. LUKE'S GOSPEL as the moſt regular in arrangement, according to the order of facts; and we ought to reflect with gratitude on the pains taken by St. Luke to acquire acquire ſuch a knowledge of the ſeries of goſpel events, as that which his hiſtory preſents to us. In fact, this hiſtorian in his goſpel, no leſs than in his Acts of the Apoſtles, gives manifeſt proof of a liberal and cultivated mind, of ardent reſearches after truth, no doubt for his own ſatisfaction, and I am ſure for the ſatisfaction of after ages.

St. JOHN'S GOSPEL is univerſally allowed to be ſupplementary to the others, it abounds more in diſcourſes than in hiſtories.

We may juſt hint at the opportunities enjoyed by the writers of the goſpels, as witneſſes of what they record. St. Matthew was one of the twelve who attended on Jeſus: but, were the whole twelve always with Jeſus? I think not; for 1. they are called "the twelve" when not only Judas was away from them, but alſo Thomas, ſo that they were at moſt but ten perſons. 2. It being occaſionally remarked, that the twelve were with Jeſus, it ſhould ſeem that at other times ſome of them might be abſent. Now this gives a reaſon, why different apoſtles relate different facts,—that is to ſay, each relates what each perſonally beheld. The raiſing of Lazarus, for inſtance, is recorded by John, who ſaw that fact; but Matthew, who omits that hiſtory, might poſſibly be abſent; on the other hand, Matthew relates ſeveral hiſtories which he ſaw, but from which John might be abſent. I mean to infer, that the evangeliſts relate what they ſaw with their own eyes, and what they had the evidences of their ſenſes for; "that their hands had handled," and that they had the moſt convincing proofs of what they aſſert.

GRANDFATHER, GRANDMOTHER, the progenitors of the immediate parents of the perſons ſpoken of. In the Hebrew theſe are very often taken as immediate parents, and are called father or mother. It is evident that this relation divides into paternal and maternal progenitors.

HABERGEON, Exod. xxviii. 32. xxxix. 23. This is underſtood to be a part of armour of defence; whether a ſuit of armour, or a coat of mail: it is therefore unhappily ranked in our tranſlation with ſword, and dart, which are weapons of attack, Job xli. 26.

HACHILAH, my hope is in her, or my hook is in her.

HACHILAH, was a mountain about ten miles ſouth of Jericho, where David concealed himſelf from Saul, 1 Sam. xxiii. 19. In after ages Jonathan Maccabæus built here the caſtle of Maſſada, vide MASSADA.

HAIL! as a ſalutation, imports a wiſh for the welfare of the perſon addreſſed. It is now ſeldom, or never, uſed among us; but was frequent among our Saxon anceſtors, and imported, as much as, "joy to you;" &c. as a compliment of congratulation.

HAIL, ſtones of. Hail, no doubt, is congealed—frozen—drops of rain; rain formed into ice by the power of cold in the upper regions of the atmoſphere. It probably falls from clouds which float pretty high in the air, and the drops coaleſcing in their fall, are formed into maſſes ſmaller, or larger, as circumſtances may combine them. Hail, among us, is moſt frequent in ſummer; probably, becauſe the upper regions of the air are then coldeſt, and the vapours drawn from the earth, being then warmeſt, when they are cooling, or are chilled, they proceed to the ſtate of being frozen with greater rapidity than other vapours which have not been ſo warm; moreover, their warmth tends to mount them higher in the atmoſphere, as they are thereby raiſed with proportionately greater force, and this elevation places them in regions where cold is in greater activity than it is in lower regions.

Hail, was among the plagues of Egypt, Exod. ix. 24. and that hail, though uncommon, is not abſolutely unknown in Egypt, we have the teſtimony of VOLNEY, who mentions a hail ſtorm, as croſſing over from Mount Sinai into that country.

Hail was the mean made uſe of by God, for defeating the army of the kings of Canaan, Joſh. x. 11. God's judgments are likened to a hail-ſtorm, Iſaiah xxviii. 2; but the moſt tremendous hail mentioned in Scripture, or in any writer, is that alluded to Rev. xvi. 21. "every ſtone about the weight of a talent"—how prodigious is this deſcription! in compariſon with which all accounts of hail-ſtones, and hail-ſtorms, are diminutive. We have, in the Philoſophical Tranſactions, mention of hail as large as pullets' eggs: but what is this to the weight of a talent!

HALLOW to, vide SAINT, SANCTIFICATION.

HALT, to go lame on the feet, or legs. Many perſons who were halt were cured by our Lord. To halt between two opinions, 1 Kings xviii. 21, ſhould perhaps be—to ſtagger from one to the other, repeatedly; but ſome ſay, it is an alluſion to birds who hop from ſpray to ſpray, forwards and backwards.

HART. See DEER.

HAWK, a bird of prey, of which there are many kinds: is very quick-ſighted, ravenous, and bold. It was declared unclean by the law, Lev. xi. 16. Deut. xiv. 15. Vide KITE.

HEAR, HEARING. This word is taken in ſeveral ſenſes in Scripture. In its obvious and literal acceptation, it denotes the exerciſe of that bodily ſenſe of hearing of which the ear is the organ: to receive information by the ear, 2 Sam. xv. 10. and, as hearing is a ſenſe by which inſtruction is conveyed to the mind, and the mind is excited to attention, and to obedience, ſo the ideas of attention, and obedience, alſo, are grafted on the expreſſion, or ſenſe, of hearing. God is ſaid, ſpeaking after the manner of men, to hear prayer, i. e. to attend to it, and to comply with requeſts made in it. So Pſalm cxvi. 1.

"I love the Lord becauſe he hath heard—hath attended to—hath complied with—the voice of my ſupplication;" and on the contrary, God is ſaid—not to hear, i. e. not to comply with—the requeſts, of ſinners, John ix. 31.

Men are ſaid to hear, when they attend to, or comply with, the requeſts of each other, or when they obey the commands of God. "He who is of God, heareth — obeyeth — practiſeth God's word," John viii. 47. "My ſheep hear my voice,"—and ſhew their attention to it, by following me, John x. 27. and Matth. xvii. 5. "This is my beloved ſon, hear him;" where there ſeems to be an alluſion to Deut. xviii. 15, 18, 19. "The Lord ſhall raiſe up unto you a prophet, him ſhall ye hear"; which paſſage is alſo expreſsly applied, Acts iii. 22. What other ſenſes may be attached to the word hear ſeem to riſe out of the foregoing, and may be referred to the ſame ideas. To hear, ſignifies to judge, to ſettle a matter, 2 Sam. xv. 3. "Thy matters—words—pleadings are good and right, but there is no man deputed by the king to hear thee;"—the king by office ſhould hear and do juſtice between man and man in his own perſon, but David holds every thing under his own cognizance, though he is able to do juſtice to only a ſmall part of thoſe who want it, and he will not delegate his power to any one who might in his ſtead diſtribute equity. The caution to take heed how we hear, or what we hear, as it includes in it, application, acceptation, and practice, was never more neceſſary than in the preſent day among ourſelves: never was the neceſſity greater for appealing "to the law and to the teſtimony."

HEATH, a well known ſhrub, that grows on barren moors, it knows not when good cometh, doth not flouriſh in the ſpring, but towards the end of ſummer. Men are likened to it, Jer. xvii. 6. It likewiſe repreſents men in a deſtitute and concealed condition, Jer. xlviii. 6.

HEATHEN, or the people of the earth at large: thoſe who are not of the family of Iſrael to whom pertained the law, and the ſacred oracles, and the covenants of promiſe, and the deſcent of the Meſſiah, &c. As it was cuſtomary with poliſhed nations to call all others barbarians, ſo it was cuſtomary with the Jews to call all other nations heathen; and to conſider them as totally void of any knowledge of God, whereas, we ought in fact, to remember that in early ages mankind had generally much the ſame knowledge of God, that it was not till after ſome time that the promiſe of the Meſſiah was reſtricted to a particular family, and that a particular nation was favoured with peculiar privileges: we ought alſo, to remember that many perſons among thoſe called heathen nations, had the true knowledge of God, and were perhaps no leſs acceptable as worſhippers, to him, than the Jews were, who to much information, and knowledge of their duty, made oftentimes but a very ungracious and ungrateful return.

It muſt be owned, nevertheleſs, that generally ſpeaking the heathen were ſunk into groſs idolatry, had adopted many impure modes of worſhip, were utterly averſe from obedience to the holineſs of God, and in ſhort, exhibited the depravity of the human race in its moſt ſhocking form. Nevertheleſs, from men thus depraved God appointed a people to ſhew forth his praiſe, to be his memorials of mercy, and to glorify his grace, through the Meſſiah, who, though he was by deſcent, of the Jewiſh nation, yet was the Meſſiah, the anointed, the choſen, the conſecrated on the behalf of all mankind, the heathen, as well as the Jews; for God will juſtify the heathen through faith, while the Jews ſhall be puniſhed for their unbelief. Vide GENTILES.

How long the heathen retained the true worſhip of God, to what degree, how their attention and obedience to him was depraved, and whether they have now any expectation of a Meſſiah who ſhould be their deliverer from ſin, and their victim to mediate peace for them before God, may perhaps engage our enquiries elſewhere.

HEIFER, Hebr. ix. 13. When the red heifer was burned without the camp, its aſhes were gathered and preſerved in a clean place without the camp. Part of them were occaſionally put into water, with which every one who had contracted any legal defilement was to be ſprinkled; or he was to be cut off from the congregation. It was a water of ſeparation: it is no where ſaid in the Scriptures, that that water was uſed on the grand day of expiation, if we except this of the apoſtle. But ſince it is called the water of purification, (Numb. xix. 9) and was always uſed when any particular perſon ſtood in need of cleanſing, we have great reaſon to think it was uſed alſo on that ſolemn day when the main body of the people were cleanſed. By A. H.

HEIR, a perſon who ſucceeds by right of inheritance to an eſtate, property, &c. but the principles of heirſhip in the Eaſt differ from what are common among us; ſo that children do not wait (always) till their parents are dead, before they receive their portions: hence when Chriſt is called, heir of all things, it does not imply the death of any former poſſeſſor of all things; and when when ſaints are called heirs of the promiſe of righteouſneſs, of the kingdom, of the world, of God, joint heirs with Chriſt, it implies merely participants in ſuch or ſuch advantages, but no deceaſe of any party in poſſeſſion would be underſtood by thoſe to whom theſe paſſages were addreſſed, though among ourſelves there is no actual heirſhip till the parent, or &c. be departed. Vide INHERITANCE.

HORNET, a kind of large waſp, which has a powerful ſting. We learn from Deut. vii. 20. and Joſh. xxiv. 12. that the Lord drove out the Canaanites before Iſrael by means of this inſect. A friend has ſuggeſted, that poſſibly this hornet was the zimb of Ethiopia, before which neither man nor beaſt can ſubſiſt; without affirming this, I think it likely that the account of the zimb in FRAGMENTS, Nos. LVI. CCLXXXVI, may illuſtrate the manner in which the Canaanites were expelled the country; and if this was one of the plagues of Egypt, as I have ſuppoſed, I ſee no reaſon why it ſhould not be in the hand of Providence, a very effectual plague on Canaan. N. B. The Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, would eſcape the violence of this creature.

HOSANNA, PROCESSION. Mr. HARMER, vol. iii. p. 37, has a thought, that in our Lord's triumphal entry into Jeruſalem, "the people ſcattered roſe leaves in the way as he went." However, to ſay no more, though roſe leaves might be attainable at that early ſeaſon, yet roſe trees hardly grew in the public way, and beſides, this does not give any reaſon of the exclamations hoſanna, nor does it appear to be connected with them. But, I find in Mr. DAVID LEVI's "Lingua Sacra" under the atticle (ערב) oreb, the following information, extracted from the Talmud. "The willow (uſed in the Feaſt of Tabernacles) is of the foundation of the prophets: i. e. the prophets inſtructed the people in the proper form and manner thereof, as it was delivered by tradition; and which, having been forgot, was reſtored by the prophets. Hence we meet in Rabbinical Hebrew, with the phraſe "the precept of the willow, on HOSANNA THE GREAT." This is the ſeventh day of the Feaſt of Tabernacles, when each perſon has (carries) a branch of willow, and in the prayer of the day, frequently makes uſe of the word HOSHANA! i. e. ſave we beſeech thee, from whence the willows uſed at that time are called the Hoſhanuth"—hoſannas. If this be correct, we ſee that the people applied to our Lord, a cuſtom with which they were well acquainted, and which indeed formed an annual ceremony. Obſerve, that the evangeliſts Matthew xxi. 8. Mark xi. 8. do not ſay what kind of trees were cut down by the people, but, "they cut down branches from the trees (ſupply willow trees, if you pleaſe, if in ſeaſon, or) ſuch as were neareſt at hand, to anſwer the purpoſe of them, and ſtrewed theſe branches in the way [or were they palm-leaves, or branches? Matthew uſes the word κλαδας, a branch of any kind, but Mark στιβαδας, frondes, perhaps directly meaning palm branches. John ſays, xii. 13. that "much people hearing that Jeſus was coming to Jeruſalem, went out of Jeruſalem—doubtleſs to meet him, carrying τα βαια, branches of palm trees.]

The people, therefore, as they were uſed to do on Hoſanna the great, formed a proceſſion; and thoſe before cried, Hoſanna! bleſſed is the king of Iſrael who cometh in the name of the Lord. Peace in heaven! Glory in the higheſt! to which the followers behind anſwered, Bleſſed be the kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord! Hoſanna in the higheſt! [i. e. the great Hoſanna] as we have been uſed to ſhout at our Feaſt of Tabernacles.

Does not this hiſtory appear now to be a clearer reference of the Feaſt of Tabernacles to the Meſſiah than heretofore? a reference that was in ſome degree wanted. And are not the ſhouts of the multitude ſtrong indications of what they ſo earneſtly looked for—a king to deliver them from their preſent bondage? Did the prophets hint at ſuch a king, to be expected, when they appointed the willows of the great Hoſanna? Is this the covert meaning of the rulers of the ſynagogue, "heareſt thou what theſe children ſay?

in alluſion to a king we expect; which they refer to thee." And is this the import of our Lord's anſwer, "yea; did you never hear the remark, that children will tell the truth when men will not; that when men are afraid, or incredulous, the mouths of babes and ſucklings may ſtrongly proclaim due and proper praiſe"? Was our Lord's action of driving the intruding dealers from the temple an act of royalty? which on this occaſion he thought proper to exert, and to which thoſe concerned thought proper at this time to ſubmit.

HUSBAND, a married man; the head of a family, who is the HOUSE-BAND, or band which connects the whole family, and keeps it together.

A man who is betrothed, but not actually married, was eſteemed a huſband, Matth. i. 16, 20. Luke ii. 5. A man lately married was privileged from going out to war, Deut. xx. 7. xxiv. 5. yet we have in Homer, &c. inſtances of young men ſlain, whoſe brides waited for them at home; or who had plighted their troths to their ſpouſes, but, were never more to ſee them! whoſe fate the poet laments.

A huſband is deſcribed as the head of the wife, and as having controul over her conduct, ſo as to ſuperſede her vows, &c. Numb. xxx. 6, 7, 8. As the guide of his wife's youth, Prov. ii. 17. Sarah called her huſband Abraham lord, and this title was continued long after, Hoſea ii. 16, [Baali, my lord.] The apoſtle Peter ſeems to recommend this title as implying great reſpect, as well as affection, 1 Peter ii. 6. Perhaps it was rather uſed in public than in private.

HUSBANDMAN, one whoſe profeſſion and labour it is to cultivate the earth. This is the moſt noble and moſt ancient of all profeſſions: it was begun by Adam, reſumed by Noah, and has been always the moſt comfortable ſtate of human life.

God is compared to a huſbandman, John xv. 1. Ye are God's huſbandry, ſays the apoſtle, 1 Cor. iii. 9. and the ſimile of land carefully cultivated, or of a vineyard carefully dreſſed, is often uſed in the ſacred writings. The art of huſbandry is from God, ſays the prophet Iſaiah, xxviii. 24—28. and the various operations of it are each in their ſeaſon. The ſowing of ſeed, the waiting for harveſt, the ingathering when ready, the ſtoring up in granaries, and the uſe of the products of the earth, afford many points of compariſon, of apt figures, and ſimilitudes in Scripture. The courſe of huſbandry in the Eaſt differs from that among us, and requires much allowance for the difference. Vide THRESHING, No. XLVIII, and the CALENDAR of PALESTINE, FRAGMENTS, No. 7 ℣. 454. p. 137.

HUZZAB, molten, a queen of the Aſſyrians: perhaps rather the image of a deity, in the character of a dove (vide DOVE) whoſe followers ſhould coo like doves, as they went in proceſſion. Nahum ii. 7. Vide Nos. CCLXVIII. CCLXIX. p. 180.

JAKEH, father of Agur, Prov. xxx. 1. but ſome think that Jakeh is put for obedience, and that Agur was "ſon of obedience," in the Hebrew phraſeology, i. e. was diſpoſed to obey. Vide AGUR.

JAREB, revenger.

JAREB, king of Aſſyria, by whom the ten tribes were carried captive, Hoſea v. 13. x. 6. But, is this the name of a king, or of an idol? 1. We know that the kings who carried away Iſrael were named Tiglath-pileſer, and Salmaneſer; was Jareb a ſecond name to either of theſe? 2. It was very cuſtomary among the heathen to call their idols kings: vide FRAGMENT, No. CCLXXXII, in which caſe the name would ſignify the avenging king, or king of puniſhment, the Jupiter horkios of the Greeks, vide FRAGMENT, No. CCLXXVII. ad fin.

II. JABESH, father of Shallum, 2 Kings xv. 10.

JAEL, a kid, or one who aſcends.

JAEL, the wife of Heber the Kenite, who received and ſlew Siſera when he fled before the Iſraelites under Barak, Judges iv. For what cauſe this woman violated the ſacred rights of hoſpitality, by murdering her ſleeping gueſt, does not appear. Scripture hints at the relation of this family to Moſes by Hobab, and no doubt but Hobab, and this family, had received many advantages by means of Iſrael, for ſo Moſes promiſed, "we will ſurely do thee good." Nevertheleſs, we muſt conſider the ſacred nature of the women's tent in the Eaſt, (vide FRAGMENT, No. XXV, page 48.) and that the victorious army would not have intruded there; we muſt alſo conſider the implied pledge of ſecurity in the food ſhe had given to Siſera, which in the Eaſt is a pledge of ſome ſolemnity, (vide FRAGMENTS, No. CXXX, p. 52.) The action of this woman ſeems to need, at leaſt, an apology. The Rabbins, by way of ſuch apology tell us, that the words "at her feet he bowed, he fell," &c. chap. v. 27. imply that he attempted rudeneſs to her, and that to reſiſt ſuch violation, ſhe had recourſe to "the workman's hammer." But it ſhould be remembered that a fugitive as Siſera was, would have had little inclination for ſuch an adventure at ſuch a time; and it appears clearly that fatigue and ſleep overpowered him. It is probable, 1. that Jael had felt the ſeverity of the late oppreſſion of Iſrael by Siſera; 2. that ſhe was actuated by motives of patriotiſm, and gratitude toward Iſrael; 3. the general character of Siſera might be ſo atrocious, that at any rate his death was deſirable. We ſee an inſtance of a conduct much the ſame in its principles, in the caſe of Judith, whoſe concern for the deliverance of her people led her to the employment of artifice to accompliſh her purpoſes.

JASHER, Book of, vide BIBLE.

JAVELIN, a kind of long dart, or thin ſpear, thrown as a miſſile weapon at the enemy.

IDLE, IDLENESS. This word is capable of at leaſt two ſenſes; 1. of an inevitable vacation from employment, or want of being ſet to work; ſo we read Matth. xx. 3, 6, "Why ſtand ye here all the day idle?"—The anſwer is very ſufficient; we are willing to work, but "no man hath hired us." 2. Of a criminal inattention to work, labour, duty, &c. when it ought to be diſcharged, Exod. v. 8, 17. Prov. xix. 15. and this idleneſs is a great evil, ſo we read 1 Tim. v. 13. "they learn to be idle, and not only idle but tatlers, and buſy bodies," &c. N. B. The remedy for ſuch idleneſs is, "let them not eat," 2 Theſſ. iii. 10.

This leads us to the true import of our Lord's words, Matth. xii. 36 "men ſhall give account for every idle word:" meaning that emptineſs which tends to injury, that pernicious diſcourſe which is not only void of advantage, but which is diſadvantageous, hurtful, and pernicious. The Rabbins have a proverb, that "the Spirit of God never reſides in a light head, nor with idle words;" i. e. unſeemly diſcourſe baniſhes the Holy Spirit. They ſay alſo, "Againſt idle diſcourſe a man muſt ſtop his ears," as they do at hearing of blaſphemy. In ſhort, vain words, lies, follies, are what is meant by idle words. The LXX uſe this Greek word to tranſlate the Hebrew word which ſignifies lying, Exod. v. 9. Hoſea xii. 1. Micah i. 14. Hab. ii. 3. Zeph. iii. 13: and the Latins employ the word uſeleſs to the ſame purport. Velleius Paterculus, lib. ii. ſays, the aſſaſſination of Clodius was a uſeleſs example, exemplo inutili, facto ſalutari. Cicero and Livy call a pernicious citizen, Civem inutilem; to which we may add Horace:

Vel nos in mare proximum
Gemmas et lapides aurum et inutile,
Summi materiam mali,
Mittamus.

CARM. lib. iii. Ode 24.

In the ſenſe of idle as a relaxation from labour, the beſt of men have their idle words; in the ſenſe of idle, as vain, pernicious, offenſive, the worſt of men only, indulge and practiſe idle diſcourſe.

IDOLS, we have reaſon to think, that many more idols are mentioned in Scripture than have been ſuppoſed. The true nature of thoſe which are mentioned, may employ a more conſiderable inveſtigation than is convenient in this place. A complete liſt of them is a deſideratum.

JEGAR SAHADUTHA, the heap of witneſs.

This name was given by Laban to a heap, or circle of ſtones, (vide FRAGMENT, No. CXLVI, p. 167,) which was erected by him and Jacob, in witneſs of an agreement made between them, Gen. xxxi. 47, &c. This term is Chaldee, and it is uſually ſaid, that it proves that the Chaldee language was already different from the Hebrew, or why ſhould Laban vary the appellation? it might be ſo; but, we ſhould remember that Jacob gave two names to this place "Galeed, and Mizpah;" might not Laban do the ſame? varying the term, as Mizpah differs from Galeed: for it does not appear that when ſpeaking afterwards Laban uſes the Chaldee words, Jegar ſahadutha; but "this (gal) heap be witneſs, and this (mizpah) pillar be witneſs."

JEHOASH, vide JOASH IV.

JEHONADAB, vide JONADAB.

JEHOVAH JIREH, JEHOVAH will ſee, or will ſee to it, or will provide for it. But it ſhould be obſerved, that moſt modern interpreters have taken this word paſſively "ſhall be ſeen," and the LXX alſo, have taken this word paſſively in verſe 15. I incline to think, that Abraham uſed this expreſſion, and gave this name to this place, in ſuch a manner that at this day, i. e. in after ages, as at the time when this hiſtory was compoſed, it became uſual to ſay, In this very identical mountain Jehovah ſhall appear—be ſeen: this is the ſpot where we expect his appearance. Conſider the building of the temple of Solomon cloſe adjacent, which "the Lord had choſen to put his name there," Deut. xii. 5. 1 Kings xiv. 21. 2 Chron. xii. 13. And the crucifixion of Jeſus, perhaps on this very ſpot. I apprehend that many ſuch titles looked not only toward paſt facts, but toward future expectations.

JEHOVAH NISSI, Jehovah my banner.

The principles of this expreſſion have been examined in FRAGMENTS, No. CCXVIII. p. 90. does this appellation alſo look backward, Jehovah has been my banner; and forward, Jehovah ſhall be my banner, or ſtandard? Exod. xvii. 15.

JEHOVAH SHALOM, Jehovah of peace, Judg. vi. 24. Gideon gave this name to an altar which he built in a place where an angel of Jehovah had appeared to him, and had ſaluted him by ſaying, "Peace be to thee." Now I think this name ſhould be taken 1. to Jehovah of peace, i. e. taking peace for general welfare, to the divine protector. 2. As the words are uſually rendered, Jehovah ſhall ſend peace, i. e. we may hope for proſperity under the auſpices, &c. of Jehovah; and I ſuppoſe the phraſe became a kind of proverbial ſaying uſed in after ages, as probably was the caſe with all theſe remarkable titles, which are come down to us; for what has been the cauſe of their preſervation when ſo many thouſand other titles have periſhed?

JEHOVAH SHAMMAH, JEHOVAH is there: or rather, the ſettlement, ſtation, reſidence of Jehovah, i. e. God's town; Jehovah's town. This name the prophet Ezekiel gives to a future holy city, which he deſcribes in the cloſe of his prophecy, chap. xlviii. 35.

JEHOVAH TZIDEKENU. JEHOVAH our righteouſneſs, Jer. xxiii. 6. xxxiii. 16. In the firſt of theſe paſſages we read of a branch, a king, called the Lord our Righteouſneſs; in the ſecond paſſage we read, "This is the name wherewith ſhe [i. e. Jeruſalem] ſhall be called the Lord our Righteouſneſs." Now, the impropriety of calling a female, ſhe, by the name of the Lord, maſculine, is apparent; and the words is the name are ſupplied in this place, in our tranſlation; but the word name is in the original in the former paſſage: where the words are, and this his name is which they ſhall call him, Jehovah our righteouſneſs: but in the latter paſſage, and this he ſhall call to her, Jehovah our righteouſneſs: which perhaps ought to be ſupplied, and this [proſperity] becauſe he ſhall proclaim to her (לה) or for, about, over, before her, Jehovah our righteouſneſs.

JESHURUN, upright, or righteous. See what we have ſaid on the book of JASHER, article BIBLE.

The verſions differ in their ideas of this word, ſome rendering it, the juſt, or upright; others the the beloved, others exchange it for Iſrael, and others taking it as a diminutive, render it "little Iſrael." I am not ſatisfied with either. The upright, or righteous, ſeems contradictory to the charge of "waxing fat, and kicking."—This ingratitude belongs not to the upright. Neither is it likely that little Iſrael ſhould be uſed as a word of endearment to the perſon, &c. guilty of this miſbehaviour; nor that Iſrael in its little ſtate would thus behave, ſince this is the effect of being pampered. I think, indeed, it rather expreſſes fullneſs, completeneſs, a ſtate of ſleekneſs: ſo we read, chap. xxxiii. 5. Moſes was king in Jeſhurun—ſay, the full congregation, the whole body, when the heads of the people, and the tribes of Iſrael were aſſembled together; he was ſuperior over them all: coincidently, the ſleek, the full-fed,—the plump, he whoſe ſides were made even, ſmooth—ſtraight, (as the word denotes) by fatneſs—he kicked, &c. the idea of made ſtraight, by fatneſs, in contrariety from a lean, ſunk in, ſtarved carcaſe, &c. appears to me plauſible; and the idea of the full body of Iſrael ſeems to be applicable where this word occurs, Deut. xxxiii. 26. Iſaiah xliv. 2.

JEWELS. Valuables, whether for ſtore, or for apparel. This word does not mean jewellery works, gems, &c. but whatever is ſtored up as being of ſuperior eſtimation. God calls his people jewels, Mal. iii. 17. the lips of knowledge are a jewel, Prov. xx. 15.

IGNORANCE is taken in Scripture in ſeveral ſenſes, as, 1. for want of knowledge or information, when the ſubject in queſtion was truly unknown, Lev. iv. 13. ſo Jonathan was ignorant of his father Saul's oath, 1 Sam. xiv. 27. Vide 2 Sam. xv. 12. 2. For want of knowing better, or not rightly diſcerning, when the ſubject was known, Lev. iv. 2, 3, 22. Numb. xv. 25. Heb. v. 12, 13. i. e. for miſtake after having conſidered the ſubject: erring by incorrect judgment.

Ignorance is ſometimes ſimple, ſometimes wilful: ignorance of the power of God, while ſurrounded by the works of God; ignorance of the will of God, while favoured by the word of God, are inexcuſeable.

IMMORTALITY. God is abſolutely immortal; he cannot die: angels are immortal, but God who made them, can terminate their being: man is immortal in part, i. e. in his ſoul, but his body dies: creatures are not immortal, they die wholly: thus the principle of immortality is differently communicated, according to the will of the communicator, who can cauſe any creature to become immortal, by prolonging its life; can confer immortality on the body of man, together with his ſoul; and who maintains angels in immortality by maintaining them in holineſs. Holineſs is the root of immortality, but only God is abſolutely holy, as only God is abſolutely immortal.

INHERITANCE, a portion which appertains to another, after ſome particular event. As the principles of inheritance differ in the Eaſt from what are eſtabliſhed among ourſelves, we ſhall inſert ſome of them. The reader will obſerve, that there is no need of the death of the parent, before the children poſſeſs their inheritance. Vide HEIR.

"The rights of inheritance, in the ſecond chapter, are laid down with the utmoſt preciſion, and with the ſtricteſt attention to the natural claim of the inheritor in the ſeveral degrees of affinity. A man is herein conſidered but as tenant for life in his own property; and, as all opportunity of diſtributing his effects by will, after his death, is precluded, hardly any mention is made of ſuch kind of bequeſt. By theſe ordinances alſo, he is hindered from diſpoſſeſſing his children of his property in favour of aliens, and from making a blind and partial allotment in behalf of a favourite child, to the prejudice of the reſt; by which the weakneſs of parental affection, or of a miſguided mind in its dotage, is admirably remedied. Theſe laws alſo ſtrongly elucidate the ſtory of the Prodigal Son in the Scriptures, ſince it appears from hence to have been an immemorial cuſtom in the Eaſt for ſons to demand their portion of inheritance during their father's life-time, and that the parent, however aware of the diſſipated inclinations of his child, could not legally refuſe to comply with the application.

"If all the ſons go at once in a body to their father, jointly requeſting their reſpective ſhares of his fortune; in that caſe, the father ſhall give equal ſhares of the property earned by himſelf, to the ſon incapable of getting his own living; to the ſon who hath been particularly dutiful to him, and to the ſon who hath a very large family, and alſo to the other ſons who do not lie under any of theſe three circumſtances; in this caſe, he ſhall not have power to give to any one of them more or leſs than to the others.

"If a father has occupied any glebe belonging to his father, that was not before occupied, he ſhall not have power to divide it among his ſons in unequal ſhares, as in the caſe of property earned by himſelf." Halhed's GENTOO LAWS, page 53.

INTERCESSION, an intreaty uſed by a perſon toward another: whether this perſon ſolicits on his own account, or on the account of another. Man intercedes with man ſometimes to procure an advantage to himſelf; ſometimes he is mediator to benefit another, ſometimes he may be ſaid to intercede for another, when he puts words into the ſuppliant's mouth, and directs and prompts him him to ſay, what otherwiſe he would be unable to ſay. The interceſſion of Chriſt on behalf of ſinners, Rom. viii. 34. 1 John ii. 1. and the interceſſion of the Holy Spirit, Rom. viii. 26. are eaſily illuſtrated by this adaptation of the term.

INTERPRETATION, a converſion of a difficult ſubject, expreſſion, &c. into one more eaſy. As of a dream from its ſymbols to plain matter of fact, as Pharaoh's dream, &c. of an obſcure ſaying, apothegm, or precept, into familiar, and cuſtomary expreſſions; of a foreign language, into a national, and popular idiom. The neceſſity of reading the Scriptures in our own tongue may be clearly inferred from the conduct of the writers of the goſpels, who often interpret words of peculiar import, titles, phraſes, and idioms, for the benefit of their readers — obſerving, "which being interpreted is, ſo or ſo."

JONAH's TOMB, at Nineveh: "a little more upon land on the ſame ſide, is the tomb of Jonas in the moſque of a village, but I went not thither becauſe of the exceſſive heat: for two hours after ſun-riſing there is no poſſibility of ſtirring abroad, till at leaſt two hours after it is ſet; the walls beſides are ſo hot, that half a foot from them one feels the heat, as if it were of a hot iron; and therefore during the ſummer all ſleep in the night time upon terraſſes in the open air, both men and women; and the laſt of July I obſerved in my thermometer expoſed to the ſun, ſeven and thirty degrees of heat [of Reaumur, I ſuppoſe.] In ſhort, the heat in Meſopotamia is certainly exceſſive; and though (when I travelled there) I wore upon my head a great black handkerchief, like a woman's hood, that I might ſee through (becauſe the Turks commonly uſe the handkerchief upon the road) nevertheleſs, I had many times my forehead ſcorched: that is to ſay, it became all over red, after which it ſwelled exceedingly, and then the ſkin came off: my hands were alſo continually ſcorched. Some alſo in the caravan had their eyes daily ſcorched; and the remedy for it is a powder made of ſugar and long pepper beat ſmall; which being well mixed, is put into a purſe, or rather a long narrow bag, and when there is occaſion for it, they take a ſkewer like a bodkin of wood, ſo long as to reach to the bottom of the bag, and having taken it out full of that powder, draw it betwixt the eye and eye-lid, where it leaves all the powder that ſtuck to it; and this muſt be done to each eye ſeverally." THEVENOT's TRAVELS, p. 53. [Query, was this the origin of the uſe of Stibium for the eyes, ſo that what was at firſt a remedy, afterwards became a faſhion?]

The reader will obſerve the exceſſive heat at Nineveh, and its application to the hiſtory of Jonah.

JOSHUA, ADD. Procopius mentions, that two pillars were ſtanding in his time on the coaſt of Mauritania, oppoſite Gibraltar, upon which were inſcriptions in the Phœnician tongue: "We are Canaanites, flying from the face of Joſhua, the ſon of Nun, the robber." Procop. de bello. Vand. lib. ii. cap. 10. A Mooriſh author, Ibn el Raquique ſays, this inſcription was on a ſtone on a mountain at Carthage. Marmol. lib. i. cap. 25.

JUSTIFICATION, implies that the party has been, or is, charged with ſome matter of complaint againſt him, from which he vindicates himſelf, or is vindicated, by another, either by producing proofs of his innocence, or of his having ſuffered the penalty of that tranſgreſſion formerly, (autrefois acquit, of our lawyers) or referring to ſome other perſon who has allegations on his behalf, which will be effectual to his juſtification.

Juſtification then, is a law term, uſed in ancient times, and greatly analogous to our term acquitted. When ſinners are charged with their ſins before God, they cannot in any degree prove their innocence, ſince they are accuſed of only bona fide crimes: they cannot ſay they have been formerly acquitted, in any other ſenſe than by reference to an expected pardon through God's grace, and his propoſals of mercy; though ſome ſins are evidently puniſhed in this life, all are not, as is equally evident; but the allegations which may be offered by a mediator-party, remain in full force. When an Iſraelite had tranſgreſſed againſt any divine law, he acknowledged his tranſgreſſion, brought his ſacrifice to the altar, confeſſed over it his fault, and the ſacrifice being offered, he had complied with the appointments of the law; ſo that ſhould he be afterwards charged with that crime, he might plead autrefois acquit: but ſacrifices were not in their nature capable of making abſolute reconciliation between God and man; they could only refer to a nobler blood, which ſhould accompliſh that perfectly which they did imperfectly, ſhould effectually vindicate the guilty from the conſequences of their guilt, and ſhould juſtify, when appealed to, from accuſations of conſcience, of the world, of human laws, or of the divine law, through the gracious acceptance of the Divine law-giver.

LANGUAGE. Among ſubjects of enquiry on this article, it may be worth while to hint at the preſent ſtate of thoſe Eaſtern languages to which our attention is directed, on account of their connection with the ſacred writings. Whether a perſon reſident among thoſe remains of the ancient languages, which are now ſpoken in their native regions, might obtain any more accurate knowledge of Scripture expreſſions, than we can otherwiſe procure, is not eaſy to determine.

The following extracts from NIEBUHR, will ſhew the fate of a language, when thoſe who ſpeak it are captives under foreigners of another tongue; yet that ſome remains of it may ſurvive the general wreck, is not incredible, and ſuch an account, together with the manner in which it is ſtill preſerved by thoſe who ſpeak it, we have ſubjoined from the ſame author.

"Many people living under the dominion of the Arabians and Turks, have loſt the uſe of their mother tongue. The Greeks and Armenians ſettled in Egypt and Syria ſpeak Arabic; and the ſervices of their public worſhip are performed in two languages at once. In Natolia, theſe nations ſpeak their own languages in ſeveral different dialects. The Turkiſh officers ſometimes extend their deſpotiſm to the language of their ſubjects. A Pacha of Kayſar, who could not endure to hear the Greek language ſpoken, forbad the Greeks in his Pachalic, under pain of death, to uſe any language but the Turkiſh. Since that prohibition was iſſued, the Chriſtians of Kayſar and Angora have continued to ſpeak the Turkiſh, and at preſent do not even underſtand their original language." NIEBUHR, Vol. II. p. 259.

"In Syria and Paleſtine, indeed, no language is to be heard but the Arabic; and yet the Syriac is not abſolutely a dead language, but is ſtill ſpoken in ſeveral villages in the pachalic of Damaſcus. In many places, in the neighbourhood of Merden and Moſul, the Chriſtians ſtill ſpeak the Chaldæan language; and the inhabitants of the villages who do not frequent towns, never hear any other than their mother tongue. The Chriſtians born in the cities of Merden and Moſul, although they ſpeak Arabic, write in the Chaldæan characters, juſt as the Maronites write their Arabic in Syriac letters, and the Greeks the Turkiſh in Greek letters."

It may not be amiſs to obſerve, that many dialects even now ſpoken, may be traced to one common language, which, as the primitive ſtock, was the original of all. Sir W. JONES has demonſtrated, that THREE great branches of language are ſufficient to account for all the varieties now extant: and it forms a very ſtrong, as well as a new, argument in favour of the Moſaic hiſtory of the early poſt-diluvian ages. But, if we allow a fourth branch, we ſhould do no violence to the narration of Moſes. It is now, we may ſuppoſe, though I heſitate ſomewhat in the ſuppoſition, impoſſible to combine, or to aſcertain, what words remaining in either, or in all, of the three branches, ſhould be conſidered as belonging to the firſt language; but, by way of ſhewing how words may ſometimes be traced into different dialects, to which at firſt they may appear to have little relation, I ſhall add the following note from a popular work.

Numberleſs inſtances of this might be given, but our limits will permit us to produce only a very few. In the Shanſcrit, or ancient language of the Gentoos, OUR ſignifies a day: (See Halhed's preface to the code of Gentoo laws). In other eaſtern languages, the ſame word was uſed to denote both light and fire. Thus in the Chaldee, UR is fire; in the Egyptian, OR is the ſun or light, (Plut. de Oſir. et Iſid.): in the Hebrew, AUR is light: in Greek, αυρ (aer) is the air, often light: in Latin AURA is the air, from the Æolic Greek; and in Iriſh it is AEAR. From the very ſame original we have the Greek πυρ (pur), and the Engliſh fire. In Hebrew, OR ſignifies to raiſe, lift up one's ſelf, or be raiſed: hence plainly are derived the Greek ορω (oro), to raiſe, excite, and the Latin ORIOR to ariſe; whence ORIENS the eaſt, and Eng. orient, oriental; alſo Lat. origo, and

Eng. origin, originate, &c. The word KHUNT in Shanſcrit, ſignifies a ſmall territory, which is retained in Κυνθος (Kunthos), Kent, Canton, Cantabria. The word KHAN, KIN, CEAN, GAN, GEN, GIN, is of the ſame kind, and pervades Aſia and Europe from the Ganges to the Garrone. The word LIGHT Engliſh, LUCHT Flemiſh, LUX Roman, and λυχος (Lycos,) Greek has been traced to Egypt. ARETZ, AREK, ERECH, HERTHA, EARTH, and ERDE, are all one word from Paleſtine and Chaldee to Britain and Germany. The Chaldeans turned the Hebrew word SHUR or SHOR, which ſignifies an ox, into THOR, as likewiſe did the Phenicians. (See Plut. Vit. Syll.) hence the Greek ταυρος, the Latin taurus, the French taureau, and the Italian and Spaniſh toro. The Hebrew word BIT or BEITH, which ſignifies cavity, capacity, the concave or inſide of any place, has ſpread itſelf far and wide, ſtill retaining nearly the original ſignification; in the Perſian language it is BAD, BED, BHAD, and ſignifies a houſe or abode. In all the dialects of the Gothic tongue, BODE ſignifies the ſame thing; hence the Engliſh, abide, abode, booth, boat, [bed]; the French batteau. In all theſe inſtances there is a ſtriking reſemblance in ſound as well as in ſenſe between the derived and the primitive words; but this is not always the caſe, even when of the legitimacy of the derivation no doubt can be entertained."

The variety of tongues, the copiouſneſs of ſome, and the narrowneſs of others, furniſhes no good objection to the divine origin of language in general; for whether language was at firſt revealed from heaven, or in a courſe of ages invented by men, a multitude of dialects would inevitably ariſe as ſoon as the human race was ſeparated into a number of diſtinct and independent nations, diſtant from each other.

To apply this to our object, in illuſtrating Scripture, we may juſtly ſuppoſe, 1. That the ancient Hebrew language retained a conſiderable proportion of original words, and expreſſions, or modes of expreſſion. 2. That ſome of theſe may occur in Heb. Scripture. 3. That the ſiſter dialects to the Hebrew, as the Chaldee, the Arabic, &c. may have alſo retained many original words; and when theſe words are the ſame as thoſe retained by the Hebrew, an adequate knowledge of theſe languages muſt contribute eſſentially to the underſtanding of paſſages where ſuch words occur in the Hebrew writings. And this is the more remarkable, and even fortunate, where ſuch words happen to occur but once in Holy Scripture; when they have, as we may ſay, neither friend nor brother in the Holy language, the advantage we may receive from their relations, in foreign, but kindred dialects, becomes invaluable.

LEAD, is a very heavy metal ſufficiently well known. The mode of purifying this metal from the droſs which is mixed with it, by ſubjecting it to a fierce flame, and melting off its ſcoria, furniſhes ſeveral modes of alluſion in Scripture to God's purifying or puniſhing his people.

The prophet Ezekiel, xxii. 18, 20. compares the Jews to lead becauſe of their guilt, and droſs, from which they muſt be purged as by fire. Mention is made of a talent of lead, Zech. v. 7, 8, which I ſuppoſe was of a figure and ſize, as well known as any of our weights in ordinary uſe: ſo that though weights are uſually called in Hebrew ſtones, yet, perhaps, they had ſome of metal alſo, as this talent of lead for inſtance.

LEGS. Legs are properly thoſe limbs of an animal, which are the inſtruments of motion from place to place; yet to ſhew the omnipotence of God, and that he is not confined to one mode of action, many creatures have no legs, yet they move, (and ſome ſwiftly too) witneſs ſerpents, worms, ſnails, &c. and various kinds of fiſhes, who paſs from one place to another, yet have not even the rudiments of legs. N. B. LINNÆUS claſſes ſome kinds of fiſhes by the ſituation of their fins, which he conſiders as anſwering the purpoſes of legs, or feet, to land animals.

But, beſide being the inſtruments of motion, the legs of the human frame are the ſupporters of the body, and great means of ſtrength they are, when in health, firm, ſtable, ſecure: as ſuch Scripture often alludes to them, Pſalm cxlvii. 10. Leg is ſometimes uſed in modeſty, in the ſame manner as foot, vide FOOT, and FRAGMENT, No CLII, p. 124.

LEPROSY. I think it is Peters, who writing on Job, ſuppoſed he diſcovered an alluſion to the riotous juſtice of a mob, in chap. xxxi. 22.

> If I have lifted up my arm againſt the fatherleſs
> When I ſaw my help in the gate,
> Then let mine arm fall from my ſhoulder blade,
> And mine arm be broken from the bone.

i. e. "May I be pulled in pieces by the multitude." Whether the following diſeaſe may rather be hinted at, as a viſitation from heaven, I do not determine; but, if a leproſy can corrode the joints joints of the wriſts, why not alſo the joints of the elbow, and of the ſhoulder? and as a ſpecies of leproſy ſo terrible as this, could hardly eſcape being attributed to divine infliction, as other ſpecies were, it ſeems to be poſſible, at leaſt, that Job may mean to ſay, "though human power cannot puniſh me, yet may divine omnipotence diſmember me by the moſt inveterate of diſeaſes."

To add no further remarks: we can hardly fail of obſerving the character, and terror in conſequence of this diſeaſe: how dreadful is the leproſy in Scripture! how juſtly dreadful, when ſo fatal, and ſo hopeleſs of cure!

"The negroes are ſubject to a leproſy of the very worſt kind; it appears at the beginning, in ſcurfy ſpots upon different parts of the body; which finally ſettle upon the hands or feet, where the ſkin becomes withered, and cracks in many places. At length, the ends of the fingers ſwell and ulcerate; the diſcharge is acrid and fetid; the nails drop off, and the bones of the fingers become carious, and ſeparate at the joints. In this manner the diſeaſe continues to ſpread, frequently until the patient loſes all his fingers and toes. Even the hands and feet are ſometimes deſtroyed by this inveterate malady, to which the negroes give the name of batta-jou, incurable." MUNGO PARK's Travels in Africa, p. 276.

LOVE, is a natural paſſion of the human mind, given to man for the moſt important purpoſes. It is denominated from its object, as

1. Divine love, love to God, love to divine things, to whatever relates to God, is appointed, or approved by him. Love generally is excited in the mind by a ſenſe of ſome good, in the object beloved; wherefore, as all good is ſupremely excellent in God, God is entitled to our ſupreme affection.
2. Brotherly love, is an affection ariſing from a ſenſe of participation in certain enjoyments, or &c. of which both parties are conſcious. In a family brothers love each other, becauſe they are conſcious of their mutual relation, of enjoying the ſame family advantages, privileges, &c. the kind regards of the ſame parents, &c. to which may be added the effect of thoſe innumerable ſervices, beneficent offices, &c. which are continually rendered by them one to another.
3. Chriſtian brotherly love, is aſſimilated to the ſentiments and feelings of the former: it is a ſympathy prompted by a ſenſe of communion in the ſame hopes, the ſame fears, the benevolence of the ſame parent, and the general and particular ſympathies connected with the principles of piety, the union of the Chriſtian ſyſtem, and the reciprocal kindneſſes of truly renewed minds, toward each other.

Love is alſo parental, filial, conjugal, ſpiritual, human, &c.

It is the excellence of the Chriſtian ſyſtem, that it ennobles this paſſion of the mind, regulates it, directs it to proper objects, moderates it within due bounds, and finding this principle in the human mind, it does not baniſh but encourage it, does not depreſs but exalt it, does not abate but promote it: love is conducted by piety to proper objects, is animated by the nobleſt expectations, and is trained up for perpetual exerciſe in a world where it ſhall be perfectly purified, perfectly extended, and perfectly rewarded.

LOVE-FEAST, vide AGAPÆ.

The hiſtory of the agapæ among the primitive Chriſtians is ſo cloſely connected with the manners, cuſtoms, and opinions of times and places, that to treat it ſatisfactorily would lead us too far: but there ſeems reaſon to conclude, that the ſocial intercourſe of early believers might lead them to diſcover many excellencies in each other, which might contribute to juſtify and to promote the obſervations of heathen ſtrangers, "See how theſe Chriſtians love!" Whether the revival of this rite be a duty, we do not affirm: but that it might be, under proper management, and conduct, a great advantage to piety, even in the preſent day, we need not doubt.

LOW, is taken for ſtation in life, for diſpoſition of mind, for national depreſſion, &c.

As poverty of ſtation is not poverty of ſpirit, ſo lowlineſs of ſituation is not lowlineſs of mind, neither is it always connected with it. We ſee daily many whoſe manners, and whoſe ſituations are low, yet the natural haughtineſs of the human mind reigns in them with abſolute uncontroul. Nevertheleſs, it is a great bleſſing which ſometimes attends the diſpenſations of Providence, when they abaſe a perſon in this world, that they bring him into a more ſuitable diſpoſition of mind, a more lowly habit of thought and conduct, than when his proſperity was at its height. So that if he have occaſion to regret the loſs of temporal good things, he may have much greater reaſon to rejoice in the acquiſition of mental and ſpiritual advantages. Vide HUMILITY, and the addition.

LOWER PARTS of the earth. Theſe are, 1. the valleys which diverſify the face of the globe, and which are evidently lower than the hills, which alſo contribute to that diverſity of appearance, Iſaiah xliv. 23.

2. The grave, which being dug deep into the earth, or into rocks, &c. is the lower part of the earth which is uſually opened to the ſons of men; this is ſometimes called the deep, or abyſs, and indeed it is ſecluded from our cognizance, till we are called to viſit "that bourne from whence no traveller returns." Pſalm lxiii. 9. Eph. iv. 9.

3. As to the phraſe "lower parts of the earth," in reference to the mother's womb, I confeſs I do not underſtand it: perhaps there is a mark of aſſimilation ב dropped, perhaps the word includes the idea of a compreſſed, condenſed, particle, an atom of earth. "When I was made in ſecret, when I was compacted, connected, compoſed, put together, as it were, in a minute particle of clay, an atom of earth," as the fœtus is in the embrio, the chick in the egg; quaſi animalcula in ſemine, &c. But will the words bear this ſenſe? Pſalm cxxxix. 15. or is there here any reference to the firſt formation of man from the duſt of the earth? Gen. ii. 7. It does not appear neceſſary to take the Hebrew word rendered "lower parts" as expreſſing any extremely deep, or centrical parts, in reference to the general globe of the earth: as the grave is not very deep, in fact, yet is called the lower parts of the earth, Pſalm lxiii. 9. Eph. iv. 9. and even the ſuperficies of the earth is thus called in reference to valleys, Iſaiah xliv. 23. ſo the ſuperficial duſt of the earth, whereof man was made, being taken from the moiſt valley not from high hills, from a loamy ſoil not from granite rocks, may be underſtood by the phraſe "lower parts of the earth." If this may be accepted, then the Pſalmiſt may ſay, "The formation of my body, and its various members was not without thy knowledge, when I was made in the ſecret womb, and variouſly compacted together, as wonderfully now, by natural generation, as man was at firſt compacted from the duſt of the earth:" or, otherwiſe, "as a wonderful microcoſm, a world—a human world, with all its various ſecret combinations, and interior conſtructions, as wonderful as the compoſition of the globe itſelf!"

MAATH, Luke iii. 26. one of our Saviour's anceſtors.

MAD, MADNESS. Inſanity, or deprivation of reaſon: delirium without fever. Our Lord cured by his word, ſeveral who were deprived of the exerciſe of their rational powers: and the circumſtances of their hiſtories prove, that there could neither be miſtake nor colluſion reſpecting them. How far madneſs may be allied to, or connected with, demoniacal poſſeſſion, is a very intricate inquiry, and whether in the preſent day evil ſpirits may not take advantage from the diſtemperature of the bodily frame, to augment the evils endured by the patient, is more than I wiſh to affirm. What may be is probably very different on moſt inquiries from what we can prove really is.

MADNESS, David's, 1 Sam. xxi. 13. Some perſons have ſuppoſed that this was not a feigned madneſs in David, but a real epilepſy, or falling ſickneſs, with which he was afflicted; and it muſt be owned the LXX. uſe words which look ſtrongly to this ſenſe. It is urged in ſupport of this opinion, that the troubles which David underwent, might very naturally weaken his conſtitutional ſtrength; and that the force he ſuffered in being obliged to ſeek ſhelter in a foreign court, would diſturb his imagination in the higheſt degree. We do not determine this queſtion; we only ſtate it.

The epithet mad, is applied to ſeveral deſcriptions of perſons in Scripture; as 1. to one deprived of reaſon, Acts xxvi. 24. 1 Cor. xiv. 23. 2. To one whoſe reaſon is depraved, and over-ruled by the fury of his angry paſſions, Acts xxvi. 11. 3. To one whoſe mind is perplexed and bewildered, ſo diſturbed that he acts in an uncertain, extravagant, irregular manner, Deut. xxviii. 34. Eccl. vii. 7. 4. To one who is infatuated by the vehemence of his deſires after idols, and vanities, Jer. l. 38.—or 5. after folly, deceit, and falſehood, Hoſea ix. 7.

MAGOR-MISSABIB, fear round about. A name of the allegorical kind, given to Paſhur, Jer. xx. 3.

MAHER-SHALAL-HASH-BAZ, making ſpeed to the ſpoil, he haſteneth to the prey.

MAHER-SHALAL-HASH-BAZ, the name of one of the ſons of the prophet Iſaiah. This is an inſtance of an allegorical name, or a name of alluſion, given to a perſon by way of prediction. The prophet obſerves, that his children were for ſigns and wonders, and this name is one proof of the truth of that obſervation. Whether this was the only name of this child, or whether in future life he might not be called by another appellation, Scripture does not inform us. See the hiſtory, Iſaiah viii. 1—3.

MAIMED, implies the loſs of a limb or member: I ſuppoſe the abſolute loſs of it, not a loſs of its uſe, by a contraction, or diminution, or ſhriveling, only. And this total loſs is clearly the import of the original word, "If thine hand or foot offend thee cut them off, and caſt them from thee—enter into life maimed—rather than having two hands, &c. Matth. xviii. 8. I wiſh the rather to obſerve this, as I would aſk, what we ſhould think of a perſon who could reſtore a loſt limb, could cauſe to grow, as it were, from the ſhoulder or from the elbow a loſt arm, or from the knee a loſt leg? Perhaps it is not always that we are ſenſible of the full import of this word, when we read the hiſtory of the miraculous cures performed by our Lord.

MANEH, vide MINA.

MARBLE, a ſtone of a fine grain, and beautiful appearance, which takes a very brilliant poliſh. Marble could not be unknown to the ancients, who ſtudied the art of architecture: but the variety of marbles is ſo great, that it is not very eaſy to aſcertain any one kind by its denomination. David prepared marble, i. e. a brilliant ſtone, in abundance, for building the temple, 1 Chron. xxix. 2. Vide Eſth. i. 6. Cant. v. 15. and the FRAGMENTS on "Solomon's Song," 7 O, 452. The paſſage in Eſther greatly wants elucidation.

The MARK, or goal, where the prizes were diſplayed, and diſtributed to competitors in the public games, (Olympic, &c.) Phil. iii. 14. may eaſily be underſtood by the prizes at our own races, &c.

MARK, St. To the hiſtory of St. Mark the evangeliſt, and of the copy of his goſpel ſaid to be preſerved at Venice, we may add the account given by the Venetians of the theft of his body from Alexandria in Egypt, A. D. 829, by Buono and Ruſtico, who brought it away in a trading veſſel. The Doge Giuſtiniano placed it in the chapel of his palace; the ſaint was declared protector of Venice; and churches were built to his honour. But after a while his body was loſt, till after 265 years it was diſcovered again by a miracle, concealed in a pillar. After ſo long an interval, it wanted indeed a miracle to aſcertain the identity of this body, together with ſome little explanation of its reaſons for chuſing ſuch a place of repoſe, and by what means it accompliſhed its purpoſe.

MARKET. The market or forum, in the cities of antiquity, was different from the market in our Engliſh towns, where fleſh meat, &c. is uſually ſold. When we read, Acts xvii. 17. of the apoſtle Paul diſputing with philoſophers in the "market" at Athens, we are tempted to wonder what kind of philoſophers theſe market-folks could be, or why theſe diſputants could not engage in a place fitter for inveſtigation, and diſcuſſion, of abſtruſe and difficult ſubjects. So when Paul and Silas having expelled the pythonic ſpirit, Acts xvi. 19. were haled to the market-place, and accuſed to the juſtices of the peace, we are not aware of the fitneſs of the market for ſuch a tribunal. But, thoſe converſant with the manners of antiquity know, that the forum uſually was a public market, on one ſide only, or during one part of the day only; and that temples, theatres, courts of juſtice, and other public buildings, occupied the other ſides of the area. In ſhort, the forums were ſumptuous ſquares, ſurrounded by decorations, &c. of many various kinds. Here the philoſophers met, here they taught, here laws were promulgated, and here devotions, as well as amuſements, occupied the populace.

The neareſt approach to an ancient forum, that I recollect in England, is Covent-garden market; where we have the market in the middle, a church at one end, a theatre at one corner, and a fitting magiſtrate cloſe adjacent; if we add a ſchool for philoſophical inſtruction, or divinity lectures, we have pretty nearly the compoſition of an ancient forum or market-place. This removes intirely the ſeeming incongruity between diſcourſes and diſputations on the principles of Theology and Chriſtianity, and thoſe avocations which we uſually aſſign to a market place.

On the ſame principle, when the Phariſees deſired ſalutations in the market-places, Mark xii. 38, it was not (merely) from the country people who brought their productions for ſale, but, as they loved to be admired by religious people at the ſynagogues, temple, &c. ſo they did to be ſaluted by perſons of conſequence, judges, magiſtrates, dignitaries of various kinds, in the forum, in order to keep up their importance in the eyes of the people, and to maintain their influence over them, &c. &c.

MARS'HILL. Our tranſlators have intirely ſpoiled the narration of the hiſtorian, Acts xvii. 19, 22. by rendering "they took Paul, and brought him unto Areopagus . . . then Paul ſtood in the midſt of Mars' hill." Now as Mars' hill is the name Areopagus tranſlated, and as both Areopagus and Mars' hill ſignify the ſame place, no doubt but the ſame name ought to have been preſerved in both verſes, in which caſe, the information would have ſtood thus: "They took Paul, and brought him before the court of Areopagites, or the court which ſat on Areopagus . . . and Paul ſtood in the midſt before the court of the Areopagites, and ſaid, "Ye chief men of Athens," &c. Vide AREOPAGUS. The propriety of the apoſtle's diſcourſe is greatly illuſtrated by conſidering the important character of his auditors.

MARTYR, properly denotes a witneſs, in eccleſiaſtical hiſtory,—a witneſs, by the ſhedding of his blood, in confeſſing or teſtifying the truth; and thus is diſtinguiſhed from confeſſors, properly ſo called, who underwent great afflictions for their confeſſion of the truth, yet without ſuffering death; which confeſſion every Chriſtian is bound to make, out of regard to the truth, Matt. x. 32, 33. The term martyr occurs only thrice in the New Teſtament, Acts xxii. 20. Rev. ii. 13. xvii. 6.

MAZZAROTH, מזרות, Job xxxviii. 32. Our margin ſuppoſes this word to denote the twelve ſigns of the Zodiac; which appears to have been the ſentiment of Chryſoſtom long ago. Some think the root is אזר, to gird, whence ſays Caſtellus the girdle, or belt, of the conſtellations, אזור המזרות. Whether this was known ſo early as the days of Job, under the notion of a girdle, may be queſtioned. The zodiac, or animal-pictured girdle, girdle, is a broad circle in the heavens, comprehending all ſuch ſtars as lie in the path of the ſun and moon. As theſe luminaries appear to proceed throughout this circle, annually, ſo different parts of it progreſſively receive them every month, and this progreſſion ſeems to be what is meant by "bringing forth mazzaroth in his ſeaſon." q. d. "Canſt thou by thy power cauſe the revolutions of the heavenly bodies in the zodiac, and the ſeaſons of ſummer and winter, which enſue on their progreſs into their regular annual, or monthly, ſituations?"

MEEKNESS, a calm ſerene temper of mind, not eaſily ruffled or provoked; that ſuffers injuries without deſire of revenge, and quietly acquieſces in the diſpenſations and will of God, Col. iii. 12. This temper of mind is admirably fitted to diſcover, to conſider, and to entertain truth, Jam. i. 21.

MEMBER, properly denotes any part of the natural body, 1 Cor. xii. 12—26. Figuratively, ſenſual affections, like a body conſiſting of many members, Rom. vii. 23. alſo, true believers, members of Chriſt's myſtical body, as forming one ſociety or body, of which Chriſt is the head, Eph. iv. 25.

MENI. "As the worſhip of Diana Luna, or the moon, was very famous among the Greeks and Romans, ſo was that of the god Lunus in the Eaſt. There are a great many monuments of him; he was named MEN (Μην) in Greek, and honoured by this name in Phrygia, where there was a place, according to Athenæus, (lib. iii. p. 47) called Μηνὸς κώμη, "The Street of MEN;" i. e. the god Lunus: Men alſo ſignifies a month in Greek; and there was a temple of Men, or Lunus, in this place. We ſee alſo the god Men, or Lunus, on ſeveral medals of the towns of Lydia, Piſidia, and Phrygia. On a medal of Antiochus, ſtruck in Piſidia, the god Lunus hath a ſpear in one hand, and holds a victory in the other, and hath a cock, the ſymbol of the riſing ſun, at his feet. Spartian, in the Life of Caracalla, ſays, that prince came to Carhæ [Charran in S. S.] on his birth-day, in honour to the god Lunus. He adds further, that the people of Carhæ did ſtill ſay, what hath been formerly written by learned authors, that, "they who call the moon by a feminine word, and conſider her as a woman, will be always addicted to women, and ſubject to their command; but thoſe who think the moon to be a male god, will have the dominion over women, and ſuffer nothing by their intrigues;" hence he concludes, that it comes to paſs, that the Greeks and Egyptians, though they name the moon by a word of the feminine gender, in common diſcourſe, yet in their myſteries they call him a male god. If nothing more were requiſite to keep peace in families, and make wives ſubject to their huſbands, but calling the moon Lunus, inſtead of Luna, a great many huſbands would make this their conſtant practice, and be very thankful for the poſſeſſion of this Taliſman. MIND, the underſtanding, or judgment; that principle which diſtinguiſhes the differences of things: lawful or unlawful, good or evil, 2 Cor. iii. 14. Tit. i. 15. This principle is ſometimes ſuppoſed to be ſeated, or rather, perhaps, to exerciſe itſelf in the heart, Gen. xxvi. 35. Deut. xviii. 6. or, in the memory, Pſalm xxxi. 12. Iſa. xlvi. 8. or, in the imagination, or will. Theſe ramifications are all referable to the exerciſe of the underſtanding in theſe departments of the intellectual faculties.

MINGLED PEOPLE, vide FRAGMENTS, No. 2 B. 325.

MINISTER, one who attends, or waits on, another; ſo we find Eliſha was the miniſter of Elijah, and did him ſervices of various kinds, 2 Kings iii. 11. Vide FRAGMENTS, No. CXII. p. 19. So Joſhua was the ſervant of Moſes, Exod. xxiv. 13. xxxiii. 11. And theſe perſons did not by any means feel themſelves degraded by their ſtations, but they ſucceeded to the offices of their maſters. In like manner, John Mark was miniſter to Paul and Barnabas, Acts xiii. 5. Chriſt is called a miniſter of the true i. e. the heavenly ſanctuary.

The miniſter of the ſynagogue, Luke iv. 20. his office was, to keep the book of the law, to obſerve that thoſe who read in it read correctly, &c. The Rabbins ſay, he was the ſame as the angel of the church, or overſeer. LIGHTFOOT ſays, Baal Aruch expounds the chazan, or miniſter of the congregation, by Sheliach hatzibbor, or angel of the congregation; and from this common platform and conſtitution of the ſynagogue, we may obſerve the apoſtle's expreſſion of ſome elders ruling, and labouring in word and doctrine; others in the general affairs of the ſynagogue. Alluſions to the officers of the Jewiſh ſynagogue are often introduced by the writers of the New Teſtament, and perhaps are hardly intelligible to us. Vide Vitringa, De Synog. Jud.

Miniſters were ſervants, yet ſervants not menial, but honourable; thoſe who diſpenſe the word, and and conduct the ſervice of God, thoſe who diſpenſe the laws, and promote the welfare of the community, the holy angels who in obedience to the divine commands protect, preſerve, ſuccour, and benefit the godly, are all miniſters, beneficial miniſters to thoſe who are under their charge. Vide Heb. viii. 2. Exod. xxx. 10. Lev. xvi. 15. 1 Cor. iv. 1. Rom. xiii. 6. Pſalm civ. 4.

MIZAR, little, Pſalm xlii. 6.

MOLECH, vide MOLOCH.

MOTE. Vide EYE.

MOTH, an inſect which flies by night; there are many kinds of moths, and as ſome of them are particularly attached to woollen cloth, which they eat, &c. they are alluded to in S. S. under that deſcription. Job iv. 19. xiii. 28. James v. 2. Iſaiah l. 9.

MOUNTAINS, were ſometimes retired to as places of ſecurity. I think the following hiſtory from Mr. BRUCE, is pretty ſimilar to that of Samſon, Judges xv. 8—13.

Emana Chriſtos had retired to a high mountain in Gojam, called Melca Amba, where he continued. Soon after Af Chriſtos by forced marches ſurrounded Melca Amba, where Emana Chriſtos was, and had aſſembled a number of troops. The mountain had neither water in it nor food for ſuch a number of men, nor had Emana Chriſtos forces enough to riſk a battle with an officer of the known experience of Af Chriſtos, who had choſen the ground at his full leiſure, and with complete knowledge of it.

Three days the army within the mountain held out without complaining; but, in the evening of the third day, ſome monks and hermits came to Af Chriſtos to remonſtrate, that there were ſeveral convents and villages in the mountain, alſo ſmall ſprings, and barley enough to anſwer the neceſſities of the ordinary inhabitants, but not enough for ſuch an additional number which had taken forcible poſſeſſion of the wells, and drank up all the water, to the immediate danger of the whole inhabitants periſhing with thirſt.

To this Af Chriſtos anſwered, that the reducing the mountain, and the taking Emana Chriſtos, was what was given him in commiſſion by the king, to attain which end he would carefully improve all the means in his power. He was ſorry, indeed, for the diſtreſs of the convents in the mountain, but could not help it; nor would he ſuffer one of them to remove or come down into the plain, nor would he diſcontinue blockading the mountain while Emana Chriſtos was there and alive. No other alternative, therefore, remained but the delivering up Emana Chriſtos. His army would have fought for him againſt a common enemy, but againſt thirſt their ſhields and ſwords were uſeleſs."

Is it abſolutely certain that Samſon dwelt alone on the rock Etam? had he no ſervants, or &c.?

NAAMAN. In FRAGMENTS, No. CIII. we hinted at the uſe which poſſibly Naaman intended to make of the earth which he carried away from the land of Iſrael: CALMET thinks he meant to form, as it were, a place whereon to erect an altar to the true God, and Mr. HARMER, from Chardin's MS. hints at the ſame motive, Vol. II. p. 491. A friend has communicated another idea. Vide 2 Kings v. 17.

" It is plain that his intention was to build an altar with this earth, to the God of Iſrael. By this requeſt he expreſſed a deſire to build an altar in Syria formed of that holy ground, as he conceived it, to which God had aſſigned the bleſſing of his peculiar preſence, that he might daily teſtify his gratitude for the great mercy which he had received, that he might declare openly his renunciation of idolatry, and that he might keep a ſort of communication, by ſimilitude of worſhip, with the people who inhabited the land where Eliſha dwelt who had ſo miraculouſly cured him." A. H.

NAIL. Few things are more perplexing to diſtant ſtrangers than thoſe which are of daily occurrence in their own country: their very familiarity renders them apparently beneath the notice of obſervers, where they are practiſed, who therefore ſeldom report them; but where they are not practiced, ſimple as they are in themſelves, they contribute an ample ſhare of perplexity, to thoſe who wiſh to underſtand what they read.

Our tranſlation renders by one word nail, what the original employs two words to denote; and by this difference of name ſhould moſt probably mean two diſtinct kinds of things.

1. The nail of Jael's tent with which ſhe killed Siſera is called, יתד ITaD; this we may ſuppoſe was formed for penetrating the ground, or other hard ſubſtances, when driven by ſufficient force; as with a hammer, &c. this idea is that of ſtrength. I ſuppoſe too, the idea is that of ſtrength in Iſaiah, xxii. 23. " I will faſten him as a nail, (itad) in a ſure place," i. e. he ſhall be ſtrong enough to ſupport whatever ſhall be ſuſpended upon him.

This leads us to underſtand the alluſion of the prophet Zechariah, x. 4. " The Lord hath made his flock (Judah) who are naturally timid, as martial as a horſe trained to battle; yea, out of Judah ſhall come the chief for the corner, (vide FRAGMENTS, No. XII. p. 25.) who ſhall be a hero; out of Judah ſhall come the ſtrong nail (itad) who ſhall ſupport whatever is requiſite in point of ſtrength; out of him ſhall come the battle-bow, whoſe powers are augmented by additional vigour (vide Nos. CCXXI. p. 105, and 8 M. 473.) out of him ſhall come the general regulator (the commander in chief, perhaps) at once:" meaning, I ſuppoſe, different ranks of men, (the lower claſs, the nail, humble but ſtrong; a ſuperior claſs, the battle-bow) who in their various ſtations ſhould compoſe a formidable army.

I add Chardin's account of the manner of faſtening nails in the Eaſt: " They do not drive with an hammer the nails that are put into the eaſtern walls; the walls are too hard, being of brick; or if they are of clay, they are too mouldering; but they fix them in the brick-work as they are building. They are large nails, with ſquare heads like dice, well made, the ends bent ſo as to make them cramp irons. They commonly place them at the windows and doors, in order to hang upon them, when they like, veils and curtains." HARMER, Vol. I. p. 191.

2. But we have another word for nails, which, I preſume to think, implies ornament rather than ſtrength, or, at leaſt, a kind of dignified ſtability. So we read 2 Chron. iii. 9. " the weight of the nails, מסמרות MeseMeRUTH, was fifty ſhekels of gold." Theſe nails then, being of gold, were uſed to adorn the holy place, no leſs than to faſten any part of it. We have the ſame word though varied, 1 Chron. xxii. 3. David prepared iron in abundance for the nails (מסמרים MeseMeRIM) deſigned to ornament, no doubt, the leaves of the doors of the ſanctuary entrances—for had it been only to faſten theſe doors, what need of ſo great a quantity?

Obſerve, how Ezra employs his ſimile, chap. ix. 8.

" the Lord leaves us a remnant to eſcape, to give us a nail, not an ornamental nail, not a golden nail, but, an itad, a nail of ſupport, in his holy place" — can any thing be leſs arrogant, &c. than ſuch a nail?

But the idea of Eccl. xii. 11. ſeems to be the reverſe of this: " the words (ſayings) of the wiſe are as goads—ſharp, piercing, penetrating, ſtimulating, when taken each one by itſelf, but when combined they are like ornamental nails (meſemeruth) planted [this word is very expreſſive here] in a regular order, and diſpoſed in ſymmetrical rows, as thoſe were in the holy place, &c. or thoſe in the doors of the ſanctuary, &c.

This gives us alſo the true import of the expreſſion, Iſaiah xli. 7. " the image is ready for joining together (literally, to joining good is this) i. e. the junctures fit accurately to each other, now fix them to each other; and he ſtrengthens it, by driving in ornamental nails, nails of the beſt kind, (meſemerim) that it ſhould not ſtart, be ſeparated, fall to pieces." Which is very different, I believe, from the uſual notion of the paſſage. But this ſenſe is ſupported by a ſimilar paſſage, Jer. x. 4. " They deck the image with ſilver, and with gold; with ornamental nails (meſemeruth)"—[I ſuppoſe the following is the meaning of the latter words of this verſe, by adopting the marginal reading of them]—and with piercings; they bind it tightly together, compact it, brace it up, and add to the whole (phuk) a delicate coat of paint, for complete decoration:" as we know was cuſtomary in early antiquity.

NATION, all the inhabitants of a particular country, Deut. iv. 34. a country or kingdom, Exod. xxxiv. 10. Rev. vii. 9. countrymen, natives of the ſame ſtock, Acts xxvi. 4. the father, head, and original of a nation or people, Gen. xxv. 23. the Heathen or Gentiles, Iſa. lv. 5. Vide HEATHEN.

NATURAL HISTORY, and NATURAL PHILOSOPHY of the ſacred Scriptures, are ſeldom thought of ſo much conſequence by us, as they may juſtly claim. If " an undevout aſtronomer is mad," as Dr. Young ſays, ſo is an undevout naturaliſt, nay perhaps the moſt devout of pious perſons have been the greateſt adepts in the ſtudy of nature: witneſs the Pſalmiſt, " When I conſider the heavens, the works of thy fingers, the ſtars, the ſun, moon, &c. Lord, what is man, that thou viſiteſt him!" &c. We may ſee the ſame diſpoſition in the ſagacious Solomon, and many alluſions of our Lord are utterly unintelligible without acquaintance with nature, and nature's works. Let the truly honourable ROBERT BOYLE, RAY, DERHAM, &c. in modern ages ſtand as examples of the connection between piety, and true philoſophy.

But there is another view in which natural philoſophy, for inſtance, illuſtrates Scripture:—Conſider the hiſtory of the creation in Geneſis; it is beſt underſtood by thoſe who are beſt acquainted with the diſcoveries of ſcience; the order of the creation, the dependances, and conſequences, the attachments and connections of the various ſucceſſions of parts, the mutualities of the whole, are not only perfectly agreeable to modern diſcoveries, but modern diſcoveries furniſh many reaſons, which were formerly unknown, for that very order, which is preſented to us in holy writ: ſo that thoſe objections which heretofore were thought embarraſſing are now converted into coincidences.

Moſes appears alſo in the character of a natural hiſtorian, in his diſtinctions of food, and his ſeparations of animals. There can be no reaſonable doubt that one of the cauſes of ſuch diſtinctions was, the nature, and properties of animals. I think it alſo very likely, that a tranſgreſſion of this principle was the loſs of innocence, even in Adam; I mean, that the forbidden fruit was in itſelf of deleterious properties, ſo that when, as in Paradiſe, man fed on vegetable productions, (as fruits,) yet there was one, which was unclean to him, by reaſon not only of divine appointment, but of its own malignant nature; and ſo, when mankind fed on animals, ſome were unclean as food, by reaſon not only of divine appointment, but of their own ferocious nature. If this be juſt, an acquaintance with the principles of natural hiſtory muſt have been of conſiderable importance; and we find ſome of a very general nature in Moſes, whoſe claſſification of certain kinds of creatures, and whoſe rules for determining the fitneſſes of others, appear to be the reſult of, or at leaſt, to coincide remarkably with, the principles of natural ſcience. But we ought to remark, that Moſes wrote for a certain part of the earth, for a certain people, a people fixed in a determinate ſituation; he therefore did not want thoſe extenſive ſyſtems which embrace the whole world; the Linnæan ſyſtem, as at preſent received, would have been uſeleſs, or inapplicable to his purpoſes: nevertheleſs the leading diſtinctions of it as found in nature are found alſo in Moſes, and he claſſes his beaſts, his birds, his fiſhes, and his inſects, by parts which at that time, and in that country, were more correct, and certainly better known, than we can now, and in theſe climates, readily ſuppoſe.

It is remarkable that our naturaliſts exclaim, and with reaſon, againſt the natural hiſtory, philoſophy, botany, &c. of the Bible, as it appears in our public verſion of the Scriptures; and yet few or none of them have attempted to improve it: what effect our future labours on theſe articles may have, we muſt leave to time to diſcover, and to the bleſſing of providence to promote.

NAVIGATION, as an art, was probably firſt taught by God to Noah, when he directed the building of the ark; and from this firſt great conſtruction of a marine veſſel, mankind were emboldened to conſtruct others, ſome of which may not only vie with, but exceed in dimenſions, even that comprehenſive ſtructure which ſaved mankind.

Navigation was little attended to among the Hebrews till the days of their kings; Solomon had a fleet; but he had not ſailors equal to the management of it; we may ſuppoſe from their want of habit. Moſes mentions nothing of navigation, and David it ſhould ſeem rather acquired his great wealth by land-commerce, than by ſea-voyages. It might be a fit enquiry, what aſſiſtances the wiſdom of Solomon contributed to his fleet and officers, on the great ocean. We know that Judæa had ports on the Mediterranean, as Joppa, &c. but probably the coaſt during the days of the judges was in the hands of the Philiſtines to the excluſion of Hebrew mariners; (as Tyre and Sidon, we know, were not under the authority of the Jewiſh princes,) and this accounts by what means the Philiſtines, on ſo narrow a ſlip of land, could become powerful, and could occaſionally furniſh immenſe armies, becauſe they could receive reinforcements by ſea, from wherever their connections extended. In later ages the Greeks and Romans invaded Syria by ſea, and the intercourſe between Judea and Rome was direct: as we learn from the voyage of St. Paul, &c.

There were alſo many boats, and leſſer veſſels employed in navigating the lakes, or ſmall ſeas, as the Hebrews called them, which are in the holy land; and there muſt have been ſome embarkations on the Jordan, as at it's paſſes, but the whole of theſe were trifling, and it appears that though Providence taught navigation to mankind, yet it was not the deſign of Providence that the choſen people, and the depoſitaries of the Meſſiah, ſhould have been other than a ſettled, a local nation, attached to one country, to which country, and even to certain of its towns, peculiar privileges were attributed in prophecy, and divine appointment. Though Jews were ſettled in many nations, yet they do not appear to have practiſed maritime occupations; but traffic and commerce, and brokerage.

NAUM, the ſame as Nahum, an anceſtor of Jeſus Chriſt, Luke iii. 25.

NETHANEEL, vide NATHANIEL. Several perſons of this name are mentioned in the Old Teſtament.

NILE, in addition to what information the reader will find under this article in the Dictionary, we ſhall offer an extract or two from later travellers into Egypt.

"There are three remarkable appearances attending the inundation of the Nile; every morning in Abyſſinia is clear, and the ſun ſhines; about nine, a ſmall cloud, not above four feet broad, appears in the eaſt, whirling violently round, as if upon an axis, but, arrived near the zenith, it firſt abates its motion, then loſes its form, and extends itſelf greatly, and ſeems to call up vapours from all oppoſite quarters. Theſe clouds having attained nearly the ſame height, ruſh againſt each other with great violence, and put me always in mind of Eliſha foretelling rain on Mount Carmel. The air, impelled before the heavieſt maſs, or ſwifteſt mover, makes an impreſſion of its own form in the collection of clouds oppoſite, and the moment it has taken poſſeſſion of the ſpace made to receive it, the moſt violent thunder poſſible to be conceived inſtantly follows, with rain; after ſome hours the ſky again clears with a wind at north, and is always diſagreeably cold when the thermometer is below 63°. BRUCE'S TRAVELS, Vol. III. p. 666.

"Some deſcriptions of Egypt would lead us to think, that the Nile, when it ſwells, lays the whole province under water. The lands adjoining immediately to the banks of the river are indeed laid under water, but the natural inequality of the ground hinders it from overflowing the interior country. A great part of the lands would therefore remain barren, were not canals and reſervoirs formed to receive water from the river, when at its greateſt height, which is thus conveyed every where through the fields, and reſerved for watering them, when occaſion requires." NIEBUHR'S TRAVELS, Vol. I. p. 87, Eng. edit.

"It is to be remarked, that though this water becomes thick, by waſhing the clayey ſoil over which it paſſes, it appears, when drank, as light and limpid as the cleareſt; the Egyptians themſelves believe it nouriſhing, and ſay, whoever drinks of their river will never remove to any great diſtance from its banks.

"The divine honours which the ancient Egyptians paid to the Nile, and for which the plenty it occaſions may be ſome juſtification, are, in a manner, ſtill preſerved under the Mahometans; they give give this river the title of Moſt Holy, they likewiſe honour its increaſe with all the ceremonies practiſed by Pagan antiquity." BARON DU TOTT, Vol. II. p. 24, part 4.

" This mud, likewiſe, is only waſhed off by the Nile from its two banks, with the clayey part of which it becomes loaded. Its lightneſs, together with the motion of the waters, keep the particles ſuſpended, till, at length, the ſandy part ſinks down, and appears in heaps, after a decreaſe of the inundation, Theſe the induſtry of the huſbandman turns to his advantage, tempering the dryneſs of the ſands with pigeon's dung, and the ſeeds of water melons, which he ſows in it, and gathers an abundant harveſt, before the returning floods again deſtroy theſe fields, and form others in their ſtead." BARON DU TOTT, Vol. II. p. 31.

" The Egyptians ſtill retain a religious veneration for the Nile: they called it holy, bleſſed, ſacred; and, on the appearance of the new waters, that is, on the opening of the canals, mothers are ſeen plunging their children into the ſtream, from a belief that theſe waters have a purifying and divine virtue, ſuch as the ancients attributed to every river.

" For ſix months of the year the water of this river is ſo thick, that it muſt have time to ſettle before it can be drank: and during the three months which precede the inundation, reduced to an inconſiderable depth, it grows heated, becomes green, fœtid, and full of worms, and it is neceſſary to have recourſe to that which has been before drawn and preſerved in ciſterns. At all times, people of delicacy take care to perfume it, and cool it by evaporation.

" Bitter almonds are made uſe of to purify the water, with which the veſſel is rubbed, and the water then becomes really light and good.

" Earthen veſſels unglazed, are kept carefully in every apartment, from whence the water continually tranſpires. This tranſpiration produces the more coolneſs, in proportion as it is more conſiderable; for which reaſon, thoſe veſſels are often ſuſpended in paſſages where there are currents of air, and under the ſhade of trees. In ſeveral parts of Syria they drink the water which has tranſpired; in Egypt they drink that which remains; beſide, in no country is ſo much water uſed. The firſt thing an Egyptian does on entering a houſe, is to lay hold of the kolla (the pitcher of water) and take a hearty draught of it, and, thanks to their perpetual perſpiration, they feel no inconvenience from the practice." VOLNEY'S TRAVELS, Vol. I. p. 19.

NOBLE, a perſon diſtinguiſhed by dignity. Nobility is not hereditary in the eaſt; nevertheleſs, the pride of deſcent from noble parentage is not unknown there. The Jews conſidered themſelves as noble, being deſcended from Abraham, &c.

Nobles ſignifies the chiefs, heads of tribes, or of families, &c. ſo we read of the nobles of Judah, Neh. vi. 17. the nobles of Iſrael, Exod. xxiv. 11. Numb. xxi. 18.

Noble is given as a title of office, like " your excellency" among us, to Felix, Acts xxiv. 3.

Noble is uſed to ſignify a liberal, candid, generous diſpoſition of mind, the Bereans were more noble, than thoſe of Theſſalonica, and therefore ſearched the Scriptures daily, &c. but ſome think this alſo refers to their birth, they were of ſuperior rank, had greater advantages, and were more given to liberal ſtudies.

NOBLEMAN, John iv. 46. This was probably an officer of king Herod's court, and of conſiderable diſtinction; not an hereditary nobleman. The word βασιλικος ſignifies a ſervant of the king, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions render it. Many have conjectured that this nobleman, or royal ſervant, was Chuza, Herod's ſteward, whoſe wife is thought to have been converted on this occaſion, and afterwards to have become an attendant on Jeſus, Luke viii. 3.

NOON. The middle time of the day, when the ſun is higheſt in his daily courſe: in modern language when he is direct ſouth, on the meridian of any place, 1 Kings xviii. 27. Pſalm lv. 17. This time of the day being the brighteſt, is made a ſubject of compariſon in ſeveral places of ſacred Scripture. Vide Job v. 14. Pſalm xxxvii. 6. The apoſtle Paul ſays, the brightneſs in which he beheld the Lord Jeſus, was ſuperior to that of the ſun at noon, Acts xxvi. 13.

NORTH. As it was cuſtomary for the Hebrews to conſider the cardinal points of the heavens in reference to a man whoſe face was turned toward the eaſt, the north was conſequently to his left hand.

The north wind diſſipates rain, Prov. xxv. 23. this muſt depend on the ſituation of a place; as in different places the ſame wind has different effects.

O.

OAK

OAK. The religious veneration paid to this tree, by the original natives of this iſland in the time of the Druids, is well known to every reader of Britiſh hiſtory. We have reaſon to think that this veneration was brought from the eaſt; and that the Druids did little more than transfer the ſentiments they had received in Oriental countries. It ſhould appear that the patriarch Abraham reſided under an oak, or a grove of oaks, which our tranſlators render the plain of Mamre; and that he planted a grove of this tree. In fact, ſince in hot countries nothing is more deſirable than ſhade, nothing more refreſhing than the ſhade of a tree, we may eaſily ſuppoſe the inhabitants would reſort to

> Where'er the oak's thick branches ſpread,
> A deeper darker ſhade.

Oaks, and groves of oaks, were eſteemed proper places for religious ſervices, altars were ſet up under them, Joſh. xxiv. 26. and probably in the eaſt as well as in the weſt, many affairs were tranſacted, or treated of, under their ſhade.

It was common among the Hebrews to ſit under oaks, Judg. vii. 11. 1 Kings xiii. 14. Jacob buried idolatrous images under an oak, Gen. xxxv. 4. Deborah, Rebekah's nurſe, was buried under an oak, xxxv. 8. Vide 1 Chr. x. 12. Abimelech was made king under an oak, Judges ix. 6. idolatry was practiſed under oaks, Iſaiah x. 29. lvii. 5. Hoſea iv. 13. idols were made of oaks, Iſaiah xliv. 14.

There are ſeveral kinds of oaks in the eaſt; as Tournefort obſerves: one of which he calls "the faireſt ſpecies of oak in the world:" he deſcribes it as growing in the iſle of Zia, vol. ii. p. 16. he ſays alſo, vol. iii. p. 268. in Anatolia "Beſide the common oaks, and that which bears the Velanede, we ſaw ſeveral other kinds in the valleys." And it is very reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that more than one kind is mentioned in Scripture.

Aleh אלה is a ſpecies of oak, which occurs frequently; alun אלון is another ſpecies: the Chaldee ailun איל, ſeems alſo to be a ſpecies of oak, Dan. iv. 7, &c. Aſhal אשל alſo appears to be an oak, 1 Sam. xxxi. 13. compare 1 Chron. x. 12. This is the tree which Abraham planted, Gen. xxi. 33. This word is rendered grove in our verſion, but probably it was a kind of oak, of which a number was planted together.

The famous oracle of Dodona ſtood among oaks, the oak was ſacred to Jupiter, who often on medals, &c. wears an oaken garland: ſacra Jovi Quercus: the aſylum of Romulus at Rome ſtood between two ſacred groves of oaks, Dion. Halic. lib. ii. cap. 15.

OAT

OATH. We ought to remember that anciently an oath was adminiſtered by the judge, who ſtood up, and adjured the party who was to be ſworn: to this mode of adminiſtering an oath Moſes alludes, when he ſays, Lev. v. 1. "if a perſon ſin, hearing the voice of ſwearing, i. e of adjuration, being called on to witneſs, whether he hath ſeen or known of the tranſaction then in judgment, &c. And this I take to be the true import of Prov. xxix. 24. "Whoſo is partner, accomplice, even after the fact—with a thief, hateth his own ſoul: he heareth the voice of curſing, i. e. adjuration by the judge, when inquiry is making after the truth of a fact, but does not diſcover his knowledge of the matter: conſequently he is guilty of perjury. Vide THIEF. Vide 1 Kings viii. 31. 2 Chron. vi. 22.

In this manner our Lord was adjured by Caiaphas, Matth. xxvi. 63. Jeſus had remained ſilent under his examination, when Caiaphas riſing up, ſaid, "I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be the Chriſt, &c." To this oath thus ſolemnly adminiſtered, Jeſus confeſſed a good confeſſion. That the high prieſts had this power, vide Exod. xxii. 11. Lev. v. 1. Prov. xxix. 24 xxx. 9. Probably they might thus interfere only on occaſions of ſome moment; and when the moſt ſolemn kind of oath was neceſſary.

An oath is a ſolemn appeal to God, as an all-ſeeing witneſs, and an almighty avenger, if what we ſay is falſe, Heb. vi 16. it is an act of religious worſhip; whence God requires it to be done in his name, Deut. x. 2. and points out the manner in which it ought to be done, and the duty of the perſon who ſwears, Pſal. xv. 4. and xxiv. 4. Jer. iv. 2. An oath in itſelf is not unlawful, either as it is a religious act, or as God is called upon to witneſs.

God himſelf is repreſented as confirming his promiſes by oath, Heb. vi. 13. and thus conforming himſelf to what is uſually lawful to be done among men, ver. 16, 17. The oaths forbidden, Matth. v. 34, 35. Jam. v. 12. refer only to the vicious practices of the Jews; otherwiſe Paul would have acted againſt the command of Chriſt, Rom. i. 9. 2 Cor. i. 23. Neither atheiſts nor Epicureans, who deny, the former the being, the latter the providence of God, can take an oath adminiſtered, and be bound by it, from the very form of an oath, which declares the omniſcience and vindictive juſtice of God. That perſon is obliged to take an oath, whoſe duty requires him to profeſs the truth. As we are bound to manifeſt every poſſible degree of reverence towards God, the greateſt care is to be taken that we ſwear neither raſhly nor negligently in making promiſes: to neglect performance is perjury: unleſs the promiſe be contrary to the law of nature; in which caſe no oath is binding. A perſon is guilty of perjury, who takes an oath in a ſenſe different from that in which it is tendered: ſuch ſimulation and diſſimulation is called mental reſervation; which is contrary to the law of nature, becauſe a violation of duty. To ſwear by a creature is ſimply unlawful, from the nature of an oath, which implies omniſcience and omnipotence, perfections incompetent to any creature. Oaths are either aſſertory, in which we affirm ſomething as true, as in the caſe of bearing teſtimony; or promiſſory, in virtue of which we promiſe ſomething, Gen. xxix. 3. Joſh. ix. 15. The former regards the preſent, the latter the future time.

We find Joſeph uſing an extraordinary kind of oath, as it appears to us, Gen. xlii. 15. "As Pharaoh liveth," or by the life of Pharaoh. This cuſtom of ſwearing by the king ſtill continues in the eaſt: Mr. Hanway ſays, the moſt ſacred oath among the Perſians is "by the king's head," Trav. Vol. I. p. 313. and among other inſtances of it, we read in the Travels of the Ambaſſadors, p. 204, "There were but ſixty horſes for ninety-four perſons. The mehemander, (or conductor) ſwore by the head of the king (which is the greateſt oath among the Perſians) that he could not poſſibly find any more." And Thevenot ſays, Trav. p. 97, part ii. "his ſubjects never look upon him but with fear and trembling, and they have ſuch reſpect for him, and pay ſo blind an obedience to all his orders, that how unjuſt ſoever his commands might be, they perform them, though againſt law both of God and nature. Nay, if they ſwear by the king's head, their oath is more authentic and of greater credit, than if they ſwore by all that is moſt ſacred in heaven and upon earth.

Theſe inſtances ſeem allied to that very common oath in Scripture, "as the Lord liveth:" and it ſhould ſeem, that as this oath could not be taken without naming the name of God, which the later Jews regarded as a profanation, that they gradually introduced the cuſtom of ſwearing (not judicially) by ſacred things, as the temple, the gold of the temple, the altar, &c. all which our Lord forbids, and refers oaths to the great object of ſwearing, God; or if the ſubject in debate was too trivial to call upon God about, then ſwear not at all—uſe no ſubterfuge, no leſſer oath, but either affirm or deny ſimply.

Our Lord further ſays, thou ſhalt not ſwear by thy head, as ſome we ſee are accuſtomed to do by the king's head. The apoſtle Paul obſerves, "men verily ſwear by a greater than themſelves;" as thoſe no doubt underſtood they did, who ſware by the king.

Grievous curſes are promulgated againſt falſe ſwearers, and falſe oaths are among the greateſt abominations before both God and man.

That a perſon ſwear lawfully, he muſt ſwear by the moſt high God, ſince only the moſt high God can judge of the ſincerity of his affirmation, which is the eſſence of his oath: to ſwear by any perſon or thing who is not omniſcient to know, and omnipotent to remunerate, is to trifle with an oath. 2. The veracity of the oath is its eſſence: to preſerve this veracity we ſhould ſwear only upon due deliberation, only on actual knowledge, only agreeably to juſtice and equity: openly, candidly, with due circumſpection, and if neceſſary, with due enquiry and explanation. 3. The end of an oath is to glorify God, by acknowledging his attributes of holineſs, juſtice, truth, knowledge, &c. and to appeaſe man, by determining controverſy, clearing the innocent, ſatisfying our brethren, and diſcharging our own conſciences: and an oath ſhould be "an end of all ſtrife!"

OFFENCE, vide SCANDAL.

Offence may be either active or paſſive; we may give offence by our conduct, or we may receive offence by the conduct of others. We ſhould be very careful to avoid giving juſt cauſe of offence, that we may not prove to be impediments to others others in their reception of the truth, in their progreſs in ſanctification, in their peace of mind, or in their general courſe toward heaven. We ſhould rather deny ourſelves in ſome things, than by exerciſing our liberty to the utmoſt, give uneaſineſs to Chriſtians weaker in mind, or weaker in the faith, than ourſelves. Vide 1 Cor. x. 32. On the other hand, we ſhould not take offence without ample cauſe, but endeavour by our exerciſe of charity, and perhaps by our increaſe of knowledge, to think favourablyof what is dubious, as well as honourably of what is laudable.

It was foretold of the Meſſiah, that he ſhould be a ſtone of ſtumbling, and a rock of offence. Perhaps predictions of this kind are among the moſt valuable which Providence has preſerved to us: as we ſee by them, that we ought not to be diſcouraged becauſe the Jews, the natural people of the Meſſiah, rejected him, and ſtill reject him, ſince their very offence, the offence they take at his humiliation, death, &c. is in perfect conformity to, and fulfilment of, thoſe prophecies, which foretold that however they might profeſs to wiſh for him, yet when he came they would overlook him.

OINTMENT, vide PERFUMES.

As perfumes are ſeldom made up among us in the form of ointment, but rather in that of eſſences, while ointments are rather of a medicinal nature, we do not always ſee the whole beauty of thoſe compariſons wherein ointments are mentioned. "Dead flies, though but ſmall inſects, cauſe the ointment of the apothecary—it ſhould be—the fragrant unguent of the perfumer—to emit a fœtid vapour; ſo does a minute proportion of folly, or perverſeneſs, overcome—prevail above—overpower—wiſdom and glory. Eccl. x. 1.

There is another paſſage where ointment is mentioned, which I have always thought ſufficiently ſtrange: I am not ſure that the following is the true ſenſe of the paſſage, but it may lead to it, Prov. xxvii. 15. A continual dropping in a very rainy day, and a woman of fineries—delighting in fine clothes, are alike; (or as LXX. drive a man out of his houſe:) Whoſo hides—confines—conceals—her from ſight, confines the wind—ſpirit: i. e. it is a very troubleſome undertaking: (And, or) but, the fatneſs—abundance—accumulation—of his right hand—his labours—exertions, ſhall be emphatically glory: i.e. if he can ſtop her expences, he ſhall acquire ſubſtantial wealth and honour.

It is evident that our tranſlators, like others, were perplexed by the expreſſions in this paſſage; and perhaps to enquire what is the ointment of the right hand by which they have rendered it, would only increaſe their perplexity.

We read of ointments for the head, Eccl. ix. 8. our own pomatums, ſome of which are pretty ſtrongly eſſenced may, I ſuppoſe, inform us of the nature of theſe, as being their repreſentatives in this country.

Ointments, and oils, were always uſed in warm countries after bathing: and as oil was the firſt recipient of fragrance, probably, from herbs, &c. ſteeped in it, many kinds of unguents not made of oil (olive oil) nevertheleſs retained that appellation.

OLD, OLD AGE, is promiſed as a bleſſing by God, to thoſe who are obedient to his commands, and it is probable that Providence did, (and does) watch over and prolong the lives of eminently pious men. It was formerly thought a great bleſſing to come to the grave in a good old age, or as a ſhock of corn fully ripe; and though "they are not to be heard, which feign that the old fathers did look only for tranſitory promiſes," yet I think we may venture to ſay they did on various occaſions expect peculiar mercies from God even in this life, and their expectations were not diſappointed.

Old age was entitled to peculiar honour, and no doubt, when men lived to the age of ſeveral hundred years, the wiſdom they muſt needs have acquired, the influence they muſt needs poſſeſs over the younger part of the community, muſt have been greater than they are among ourſelves. Very venerable muſt have been the appearance, the perſonal appearance, of a patriarch of three or four hundred years, or even of half that age, in the eyes of his family, and of his deſcendants, whether immediate or remote.

There is ſome difficulty in St. Paul's deſcription of himſelf, as Paul the aged, Philemon 9. if that epiſtle was written as is ſuppoſed, A. D. 63. for ſince he is called young at the death of Stephen, about A. D. 34, he was then under 30 years of age, how much we cannot tell; but we can hardly ſuppoſe he would call himſelf old till 60, unleſs indeed, the fatigues and ſufferings he had undergone had enfeebled him, and made him old, as it were, before his time: the apoſtle therefore ſeems to uſe the word old with a latitude, and certainly ſome perſons are older at 58 or 59, than others are at 64 or 65, which difference of years is the whole, however St. Paul's age be calculated.

Old man, is applied figuratively to the ſtate of men by nature, and Chriſtians are reminded to put off the old man, the body of ſin, corrupt principles, &c.

&c. with his deeds; to renounce all further influence from the old, the primitive Adam, by whom they were brought into a degraded, depraved, fallen ſtate, and to put on the new man, to imitate, and exemplify the Lord from heaven; to be renewed in the ſpirit, and diſpoſition of their minds.

As we hope to receive at the reſurrection bodies free from thoſe diſeaſes, imperfections, and decays, which now incommode them, and to enjoy in the upper world a ſtate free from the evils of this, ſo ſhould we be preparing by holineſs, by rectitude, by renovation of our thoughts, words, and actions for the delights of that happy world, wherein entereth nothing that defileth, and where every perfection ſhall be perpetual, and never know old age.

Old is ſpoken of what is decaying, Iſaiah l. 9. Heb. viii. 13. of what has been deſtroyed, 2 Pet. ii. 5. of former times, Lam. i. 7.

OMEGA, Ω, the laſt letter of the Greek alphabet: Alpha A, and Omega Ω, therefore includes both the firſt and the laſt. Vide ALPHA.

OPPRESSION, is the ſpoiling or taking away of men's goods or eſtates by conſtraint, terror, or force, without having any right thereto; working upon the ignorance, weakneſs, or fearfulneſs of the oppreſſed. Men are guilty of oppreſſion, when they offer any violence to men's bodies, eſtates, or conſciences; when they cruſh or overburden others, as the Egyptians did the Hebrews, Exod. iii. 9.

OPPRESSOR, vide DOVE, and FRAGMENTS, No. CCLXIX.

ORATOR, vide TERTULLUS.

The office of this man was pretty near the ſame as that of counſel among ourſelves; i. e. a perſon hired to ſpeak on the behalf of thoſe who employed him, to ſet forth in the ſtrongeſt poſſible terms, the nature of what they might urge did not they ſubſtitute him. Whether this man was attorney-general for the province, does not appear, but by his name he probably was a Roman. The oration of Tertullus is worth conſidering; eſpecially the flattery of its opening.

ORDINANCE, an inſtitution eſtabliſhed by lawful authority. Religious ordinances muſt be inſtituted by the great inſtitutor of religion, or they are not binding: but minor regulations are not properly ordinances. Ordinances once eſtabliſhed are not to be varied by human caprice, or mutability. The original ordinance, ſeems to have been ſacrifice, of which praiſe and prayer, naturally made a part. Circumciſion was an ordinance appointed to Abraham: and ſo of other ordinances under the goſpel diſpenſation.

Human ordinances eſtabliſhed by national laws, may be varied by other laws, becauſe the inconveniences ariſing from them can only be determined by experience: yet Chriſtians are bound to ſubmit to theſe inſtitutions, when they do not infringe on thoſe eſtabliſhed by divine authority, not only from the conſideration, that if every individual was to oppoſe national inſtitutions, no ſociety could ſubſiſt; but by the tenor of Scripture itſelf. Nevertheleſs, Chriſtianity does not interfere with political rights, but leaves individuals, as well as nations, in full enjoyment of whatever advantages the conſtitution of a country is adapted to communicate.

The courſe of nature is the ordinance of God; and every planet obeys that impulſe which the divine Governor has impreſſed on it, Jer. xxxi. 36.

ORGAN, vide HUGGAB, Muſical Inſtruments, Plate I. No. 4. FRAGMENTS, No. CCXXXI, page 128—130.

The organs at preſent uſed in our churches, are comparatively a late invention: the earlieſt known being ſent to Pepin, king of France, but that was, no doubt, very different from their preſent ſtructure and combination. Their uſe in churches, as at preſent, has been probably about 800 years.

PALACES, reſidences of the great, the noble, the royal; conſtructed in a ſtyle, and ornamented in a manner becoming the dignity of the reſident.

PARDON, a remiſſion of the puniſhment due to guilt. God extends mercy as his darling attribute, and mercy delighteth in pardoning. God is ſaid to multiply pardons, to be ready to pardon, to pardon for his name's ſake, &c. Various ſimilies are uſed to denote the nature of pardon, as, to take away iniquity, to cover ſin, to blot out ſin, to caſt ſins behind the back, not to remember them, &c. Man is liable to recollect tranſgreſſions, after having pardoned them, but God pardons effectively, and completely. The Goſpel furniſhes the nobleſt motive to us to pardon others; "even as God for Chriſt's ſake hath pardoned us."

PARLOUR, that room in a houſe where the maſter or his family cuſtomarily ſpeak with their gueſts: whether the word rendered parlour has always this import in the Hebrew, may be doubted.

PARBAR, a gate of the temple, 1 Chron. xxvi. 18. 2 Kings xxiii. 11. For the probable ſituation of it, vide FRAGMENT, No. CCXLII. p. 45, 147. In the Plate it is marked I.

PASTOR, the ſhepherd who watches, defends, feeds, heals, &c. a flock, whether his own, or that committed to his charge.

Miniſters of God's holy word are ſhepherds, Jer. xvii. 6. Eph. iv. 11. 1 Peter v. 1—4. Vide Ezek. xxxiv. 1, &c. Kings are called in Homer "ſhepherds of men," &c. and governors are alluded to under that character, Jer. x. 21. xii. 10. See an inſtance, 2 Sam. vii. 8. "I took thee (David) from following ſheep, to be ruler over my people Iſrael, &c.

PATH, the general courſe of any moving body: ſo we ſay the path of the ſun in the heavens; and to this the Wiſe man compares the path of the juſt, which is, ſays he, like day-break, it encreaſes in light and ſplendor till perfect day; it may be obſcure, feeble, dim, at firſt, but afterward it ſhines in full brilliancy.

The courſe of a man's conduct and general behaviour is called the path in which he walks, by a very eaſy metaphor: and as when a man walks from place to place in the dark, he may be glad of a light to aſſiſt in directing his ſteps, ſo the word of God is a light to guide thoſe, who otherwiſe might wander, in their courſe of piety and duty.

Wicked men, and wicked women, are ſaid to have paths, and theſe are full of ſnares. To make ſtraight paths for the Lord, vide FRAGMENT, No. CLXXI. p. 171. The clouds are called the paths of God, Pſalm. lxv. 11. The diſpenſations of God are his paths, Pſalm xxv. 10. The precepts of God are paths, Pſalm xvii. 5. lxv. 4. The phænomena of nature, or general conduct of the world, are paths of God, Pſalm lxxvii. 19. Iſaiah xliii. 16. to theſe depths, which are beyond human inſpection, the courſe of God in his providence is likened; if his paths are obſcure in nature, ſo they may be in Providence, and in grace too: may he ſhew us, with increaſing clearneſs, "the path of life!"

PATRA, vide PATARA.

PAVILION. This word uſually gives us the idea of a kind of edifice, ſmall but handſome; it is therefore unhappily uſed in 1 Kings xx. 12, 16. "Benhadad, &c. were drinking in pavilions:" the ſuttling booths of the army—is much more likely to be a proper deſcription of theſe places of intemperance. This Benhadad muſt have been a man of an unworthy ſpirit: a braggadocio, as appears by his inconſiderate orders; a drunkard, as appears from his hiſtory; and a coward, as appears from his hiding place. Vide FRAGMENT, No. XXV. p. 48.

PEN, vide CALAMUS SCRIPTORIUS, and FRAGMENTS, Nos. LXXIII, LXXIV, p. 127.

PENNY, a Roman coin, equal in value to ſevenpence three farthings ſterling. As this was a ſingle coin, perhaps we ſhould do well in tranſlating to hint at a coin of our own, as near to it in value as poſſible—ſay for inſtance, a ſix-pence, or ſhilling:—read now the paſſages—"When the Lord of the vineyard had agreed with the labourers for ſix-pence (or a ſhilling) a day"—"Shew me the tribute money—and they ſhewed him a ſix-pence (or ſhilling)" "two hundred ſhilling's worth of bread is not enough for this multitude"—the good Samaritan took out two ſhillings and gave them to the keeper of the kane. Something like this is abſolutely neceſſary in Rev. vi. 6. "a ſmall meaſure (or pint) of wheat for a ſhilling"—As the paſſage now ſtands it indicates great plenty to an Engliſh reader: whereas, it really is deſcriptive of a moſt diſtreſſing ſcarcity Let this article ſtand in proof of the propriety of being acquainted with the minutia in Scripture: for who ſees any hint at a famine in "a meaſure of wheat for a penny?"

PERDITION, ſon of, the character of Judas, John xvii. 12. Vide CHILDREN, FATHER, SON, Supp. It is alſo the denomination of Antichriſt, 2 Theſſ. ii. 3.

PETRA, the ancient metropolis of Arabia, is now called Beder Hunein; ſays Mr. BRUCE, Vol. V. p. 17.

PI. Mr. BRUCE tells us, "The Arabs call the narrow paſſes in the mountains Fum, as the Hebrews did Pi—the mouth. Fum el Beder, is the mouth of Beder; Fum el Terfowey, the paſſage, or mouth of Terfowey: Pi, or Phi-Hhiroth, the mouth of the valley cut through with ravines." Vide FRAGMENTS, No. XXXIX. p. 68.

PILGRIM, ſhould, I believe, denote one who is going forward to viſit a holy place, with a view to pay his moſt ſolemn devotions there. Whether pilgrimages are as ancient as the days of Jacob, we cannot now enquire (vide FRAGMENT, No. XXXIX, p. 66, for a conjecture that they might be as old as Moſes) but, if they were, it gives a very expreſſive ſenſe to the words of that good old man, who calls the years of his life "the days of his pilgrimage," and is perfectly conſiſtent with the apoſtle's obſervation, that the ancient patriarchs "confeſſed they were ſtrangers and pilgrims on earth," Heb. xi. 13.

PLEDGE, a ſecurity or aſſurance given for the performance of a contract entered into. When a man of veracity pledges his word, his poſitive affirmation is an aſſurance that he will fulfil what he has promiſed. But as the word of every man is not always to be truſted to, in matters of importance, it becomes neceſſary that a valuable article of ſome kind ſhould be depoſited, as a bond on his part. So Judah gave pledges to Tamar, Gen. xxxviii. 17. Under the law the taking of pledges was regulated: the milſtone was not to be taken in pledge, Deut. xxiv. 6. nor was the perſon taking a pledge to go into the houſe to fetch it, verſe 10. nor to detain neceſſary raiment after ſun-ſet, verſe 12, nor was the widow's raiment to be taken in pledge, verſe 17. How mild, how benevolent, are theſe directions! and we find ſome reproached that they take their brother's pledge, Job xxii. 6, that they take the widow's ox in pledge, xxiv. 3, 9. that they do not reſtore the pledge, (as the law directed, Deut. xxiv. 18.) Ezek. xviii. 7, 12. xxxiii. 15. To underſtand Amos ii. 8. "They lay themſelves down on clothes laid to pledge, by every altar." Obſerve how galling this muſt be to the owners, to ſee carpets, &c. uſed in ſuch idolatry, carried abroad, laid under idolatrouſly ſacred trees, &c. What inſolence in the lender, who held theſe pledges! what mortification to the borrower, who had delivered them! to ſee them 1. publiſhed, and 2. profaned. Vide HARMER, Vol. iv. p. 377.

POLLUTE. It would be neceſſary to rehearſe a conſiderable part of the Hindoo inſtitutions, to do juſtice to an enquiry into many particulars of pollution noticed in the Moſaic ritual. Theſe ſyſtems illuſtrate each other.

The altar of God was polluted by being wrought into any other form, than the natural figure of the ſtones. This rule ſeems to have been obſerved among our Druids, though not without exception. Joſiah polluted the altar at Bethel, by burning the bones of dead men upon it, 2 Kings xxiii. 16. Blood was a pollution to a place, where it was ſhed; idolatry polluted thoſe who practiſed it, the exerciſe of callings lawful on other days, polluted the Sabbath, every ſin polluted the ſinner, but ſome more groſsly than others.

POTTER. The ſimilitude of the potter's power over the clay which he faſhions, is uſed more than once in Scripture; and is uſed alſo in other authors, To underſtand this alluſion fully we muſt ſee a potter at work.

POTTER'S WHEELS, ſo renders our tranſlation; the original is "upon the ſtones." Dr. BLAYNEY, ſays the appellation "the ſtones," will appear very proper, if we conſider this machine as conſiſting of a pair of circular ſtones placed one upon another like millſtones, of which the lower was immoveable, but the upper one turned upon the foot of a ſpindle, or axis, and had motion communicated to it by the feet of the potter ſitting at his work, as may be learned from Eccluſ. xxxviii. 29. Upon the top of this upper ſtone, which was flat, the clay was placed, which the potter, having given the ſtone the due velocity, formed into ſhape with his hands." Note on Jer. xviii. 3. I will endeavour to procure a plate of this ſubject; which will determine the conſtruction of this inſtrument, better than any verbal deſcription.

POTSHERD, a broken fragment, or piece, of an earthen veſſel, not a brittle pot, only, but a piece of a pot, a pot already broken, Iſaiah xlv. 9.

POWER, the ability of performing a thing. It is in a ſovereign degree, an attribute of deity, God is all-powerful. It means ſometimes a right, privilege, or dignity, John i. 12. ſometimes abſolute authority, Matth. ix. 6. ſometimes the exertion, or act, of power, as of the Holy Spirit, Eph. i. 19. of angels, &c. or of human governments, magiſtrates, &c. Rom. xiii. 1. and perhaps it generally includes the idea of dignity, ſuperiority. So, the body is ſown in weakneſs, but raiſed in power, dignity, honour. For the power which a woman ought to have on her head, 1 Cor. xi. 10. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CLXI, p. 158. and Plate of Eaſtern Veils.

PRESBYTER, from the Greek word ſignifying an old man, or elder.

It is every way natural that perſons advanced in life ſhould form the council of that ſociety to which they belong. Hence the aldermen, (elder-men) of our towns, hence the elders of the Jewiſh cities, hence the elders of their ſynagogues, and hence the elders of the Chriſtian communities. What were the duties of the preſbyters among the primitive Chriſtians, has been diſputed. It is however certain, that both the apoſtles Peter and Paul, rank themſelves as elders, i. e. preſbyters.

PRESENT, for the nature and neceſſity of preſents in the eaſt, vide FRAGMENTS, Nos. CX, CXI, p. 17.

PRAISE, is one of the nobleſt acts of worſhip, and one which ſeems to be a direct, ſimple, unadulterated dictate of nature; inſomuch that I have often wondered how any poſſeſſed of rational powers can omit this delightful duty. If prayer, to which praiſe is the counterpart, can be neglected, if a ſenſe of wants, neceſſities, tranſgreſſions, and dangers, may not be ſufficiently ſtrong, to excite prayer, yet it is ſurely very ungrateful, to take no notice of the benefits we have enjoyed, or are enjoying: what we are in the actual poſſeſſion of, ought at leaſt ſo far to affect us, as to render us grateful to that hand which beſtows them, that hand which might beſtow far different diſtributions to us. What character is ſo odious among men as that of the ungrateful? What ſo common in reſpect to God? Thoſe who deny the being of God, may, to be ſure, withhold thanks for mercies received, but that any who acknowledge the divine attributes ſhould be thus inſenſible is aſtoniſhing!

PROPHECY. The following thoughts have appeared in another work; but as we preſume to think the principle of them is juſt, we ſhall extract them, as an inſtance of a manner which may be uſeful on other occaſions alſo: we have already alluded to the ſubject in FRAGMENTS, No. CXLVII, p. 109. CLI, p. 116—119.

"Certainly there is a Power which governs the world; which raiſes one family to the throne, and one nation to the ſupremacy; then, when this has anſwered the purpoſes for which it was exalted, transfers the ſceptre of rule to a ſtranger, and produces from obſcurity into ſplendor, and reputation, another perſon, or another people, maintains THIS alſo during its appointed time, and when that time is expired, ſuffers it gradually to decay: or directs a new ambition to wreſt from its enfeebled hand, and its palſied head, the enſigns of royalty, and the tokens of dignity.

Is it ſaid, "Kingdoms riſe and fall by accident: if no ſuperior power interfered, would not their changes be juſt the ſame?" It is ſufficient for us, without adverting to what might be, to anſwer by what is: and this ſubject deſerves attention. We have lately ſeen infidel writers criticiſe books they had not read—(or had read years ago,—and ſo criticiſe by memory—or had read them them ſo ſuperficially, as ſcarcely amounts to a reading)—and then, retail unfounded obſervations and dogmatical remarks, on what they ſhould (by way of anſwer) be intreated firſt to underſtand.

"Now, we ſuppoſe, that if we find certain events predicted, long before they happened,—if they be ſo clearly deſcribed, that, when completed, the deſcription determinately applies to the ſubject;—if they be related by perſons intirely unconcerned in the event, and expecting to be removed from the ſtage of life long before the event takes place, then we can demonſtrate that ſome power ſuperior to humanity has been pleaſed to impart ſo much of its deſigns, and counſels, as are referred to in ſuch predictions. And where is the unfitneſs of this? may not a king, if he pleaſe, acquaint a perſon with his intention, that after ſuch an one has been governor of a province for ſo many years, he deſigns to ſend ſuch another to be governor after him? or, that after A has held ſuch an office during his appointed time, B ſhall ſucceed him? if this be nothing ſtartling, or uncommon, in human concerns, let us ſee how this ſimple idea applies to the divine government of the world. One clear inſtance may juſtify this ſtatement: and this inſtance we ſhall ſelect from the prophet Daniel, becauſe its coincidence with hiſtory is unqueſtionable; but other ſubjects are capable of the ſame enumerative demonſtration: I ſay demonſtration, for who could foreſee ſuch contingencies?

Theſe events are prefigured by different emblems, though to the ſame purpoſe, in other parts of this prophet.

RACE, RUNNING. The alluſions in the writings of St. Paul, to the races and games eſtabliſhed in Greece, require ſome acquaintance with the nature and laws of thoſe inſtitutions to render ſuch alluſions intelligible.

By way of illuſtrating ſome expreſſions of the apoſtle, I ſhall add to what may be found in the Dictionary, under the article ATHLETA, a ſpecimen of the regulations, &c. attending the public games. The apoſtle ſays, 1 Cor. ix. 24. Know ye not that they who run in a race, run all, but one (only) receiveth the prize? ſo run that ye may obtain. And every man who ſtriveth is temperate, &c. alſo 2 Tim. ii. 5. if a man ſtrive for maſteries, yet is he not crowned except he ſtrive lawfully. See alſo Heb. xii. 1. Gal. v. 7, &c.

"Such as obtained victories in any of theſe games, eſpecially the Olympic, were univerſally honoured, nay, almoſt adored: at their return home they rode in a triumphal chariot into the city, the walls being broken down to give them entrance; which was done (as Plutarch is of opinion) to ſignify, that walls are of ſmall uſe to a city that is inhabited by men of courage and ability to defend it. At Sparta they had an honourable poſt in the army, being placed near the king's perſon. At ſome places they had preſents made to them by their native city, were honoured with firſt places at all ſhews and games, and ever after maintained at the public charge. Cicero reports, that a victory in the Olympic games was not much leſs honourable than a triumph at Rome. Happy was that man thought, that could but obtain a ſingle victory: if any perſon merited repeated rewards, he was thought to have attained to the utmoſt felicity that human nature is capable of: but if he came off conqueror in all the exerciſes, he was elevated above the condition of men, and his actions ſtiled wonderful victories. Nor did their honours terminate in themſelves, but were extended to all about them; the city that gave them birth and education was eſteemed more honourable and auguſt; happy were their relations, and thrice happy their parents. It is a remarkable ſtory, which Plutarch relates of a Spartan, who meeting Diagoras, that had himſelf been crowned in the Olympian games, and ſeen his ſons and grand-children victors, embraced him and ſaid, Die Diagoras, for thou canſt not be a god. By the laws of Solon a hundred drachms were allowed from the public treaſury to every Athenian, who obtained a prize in the Iſthmian games; and five hundred drachms to ſuch as were victors in the Olympian. Afterwards the latter of theſe had their maintenance in the Prytaneum, or public hall of Athens.

The Pentathlon, Πένταθλον, or Quinquertium, conſiſted of the five exerciſes contained in this verſe.

Αλμα, ποδωκείην, δίσκον, ἄκοντα, πάλην.

i. e. Leaping, Running, Throwing, Darting, and Wreſtling. Inſtead of darting, ſome mention boxing, and others ſpeak of other exerciſes different from thoſe, which have been mentioned. For πένταθλον ſeems to have been a common name for any five ſorts of exerciſe performed at the ſame time. In all of them there were ſome cuſtoms that deſerve our obſervation.

romos Δρόμος, exerciſe of running, was in great eſteem among the ancient Grecians, inſomuch, that ſuch as prepared themſelves for it, thought it worth their while to uſe means to burn or parch their ſpleen, becauſe it was believed to be an hindrance to them, and retard them in their courſe. Homer tells us, that ſwiftneſs is one of the moſt excellent endowments a man can be bleſſed withal.

Οὐ μεν γὰρ μεῖζον κλέος ἀνέρος ὄφρα κεν ἦσιν.
Η ὅ, τι ποσσίν τε ῥέξει, καὶ χερσὶν ἐῇσιν.

No greater honour e're has been attain'd,
Than what ſtrong hands, or nimble feet have gain'd.

Indeed all thoſe exerciſes, that conduced to fit men for war, were more eſpecially valued: now ſwiftneſs was looked upon as an excellent qualification in a warrior, both becauſe it ſerves for a ſudden aſſault and onſet, and likewiſe for a nimble retreat; and therefore it is not to be wondered that the conſtant character which Homer gives of Achilles is, that he was πόδας ὠκὺς, or ſwift of foot: and in the holy Scripture, David, in his poetical lamentation over thoſe two great captains, Saul and Jonathan, takes particular notice of this warlike quality of theirs; they were, (ſays he) ſwifter than eagles, ſtronger than lions.

All ſuch as deſigned to contend were obliged to repair to the public gymnaſium, at Elis, ten months before the ſolemnity, where they prepared themſelves by continual exerciſes; we are told indeed by Phavorinus, that the preparatory exerciſes were only performed thirty days before the games; but this muſt be underſtood of the performance of the whole and entire exerciſes in the ſame manner they were practiſed at the games, which ſeems to have been only enjoined in the laſt month, whereas the nine antecedent months were ſpent in more light and eaſy preparations. No man, that had omitted to preſent himſelf in this manner, was allowed to put in for any of the prizes; nor were the accuſtomed rewards of victory given to ſuch perſons, if by any means they inſinuated themſelves, and overcame their antagoniſts: nor would any apology, though ſeemingly ever ſo reaſonable, ſerve to excuſe their abſence. In the CCVIIIth Olympiad Apollonius was rejected, and not ſuffered to contend, becauſe he had not preſented himſelf in due time, though he was detained by contrary winds in the iſlands called Cyclades; and the crown was given to Heraclides without performing any exerciſe, becauſe no juſt and duly qualified adverſary appeared to oppoſe him. No perſon that was himſelf a notorious criminal, or nearly related to any ſuch, was permitted to contend. Farther, to prevent underhand dealings, if any perſon was convicted of bribing his adverſary, a ſevere fine was laid upon him: nor was this alone thought a ſufficient guard againſt evil and diſhonourable contracts and unjuſt practices, but the contenders were obliged to ſwear, they had ſpent ten whole months in preparatory exerciſes: and farther yet, both they, their fathers and brethren took a ſolemn oath, that they would not, by any ſiniſter or unlawful means, endeavour to ſtop the fair and juſt proceedings of the games. POTTER's Antiq. Græc.

The rewards (the crown) in the games have been thus rendered into Engliſh by Mr. Addiſon from the Greek. Anc. Med. Dial. II.

Greece in four games thy martial youth were train'd;
For heroes two, and two for Gods ordain'd:
Jove bade the olive round his victor wave;
Phœbus to his an apple-garland gave;
The pine, Palæmon; nor with leſs renown,
Archemorus conferr'd the parſley crown.

Compare with theſe fading vegetable crowns, that immortal life which the Goſpel offers as a prize to the victor, in order to underſtand the apoſtle's compariſon, 1 Cor. ix. 25. 1 Peter v. 4.

N. B. No ſlave was allowed to contend in the games; but all were freemen; and indeed, uſually, were perſons of ſome conſideration in life.

RAGE, vide ANGER.

RAINBOW, the enquiry is too long for this place whether there was any rainbow before the deluge? But we know that after the deluge the rainbow was, as it were, deified, perſonified as the meſſenger of the gods, as the ſubject (daughter) of wonder, as the glory of the heavens, &c.

The rainbow is now a natural phenomenon, whoſe principles were firſt ſuſpected by Antonio de Dominis, but were demonſtrated by Sir Iſaac Newton, whoſe theory of light and colours, very happily coincided with the ſplendid exhibition of this divine "bow in the clouds."

RANSOM, vide REDEEMER.

A price paid to recover a perſon or thing, from one who detains that perſon or thing in captivity. Hence priſoners of war are ſaid to be ranſomed, when they are liberated in exchange for a valuable conſideration: hence captives taken as ſlaves, by the piratical ſtates of Barbary, &c. are ſaid to be ranſomed when they are bought from thoſe who hold them in ſlavery. Whatever is ſubſtituted, or exchanged, in compenſation for the party, is his ranſom; but in Scripture, I apprehend the word ranſom is more extenſively taken; hence a man is ſaid to ranſom his life, Exod. xxi. 30. to ſubſtitute a ſum of money inſtead of his life, vide chap. xxx. 12. Job xxxvi. 18. Pſalm xlix. 7. and I apprehend that ſome kinds of ſacrifices are to be regarded, as ranſoms, in ſome reſpects, i. e. as ſubſtitutes for the offerer. In like manner Chriſt is ſaid to give himſelf a ranſom for all, 1 Tim. ii. 6. Matth. xx. 28. Mark x. 45. i. e. to be a ſubſtitute for them, by bearing ſufferings in their ſtead, and undergoing that penalty which would otherwiſe attach on them. Vide Rom. iii. 24. viii. 23. 1 Cor. i. 30. Epheſ. i. 7. iv. 30. Heb. ix. 15.

RAZOR, an inſtrument for ſhaving the hair from the face, head, &c. The Pſalmiſt compares the tongue of Doeg (Pſalm lii. 2.) to a ſharp razor, ſtarting aſide from what ſhould be its true operation to a bloody purpoſe and effect. The prophet threatens to ſhave, i. e. to ſcrape with violence, to deſpoil very cloſely, to leave nothing untouched, with a hired razor, i. e. by a perſon who will be paid, a power who fights for plunder, the cities and provinces of Judah, &c. every part of them; the hair of the head, the hair of the beard, and the hair of the feet, or pubes. Iſa. vii. 20. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CLII. p. 124.

Shaving was a ſign of mourning, (vide SHAVING) but ſhaving by a ſtranger, a foreigner, an enemy, was a ſign of captivity, and very likely it alludes to a cuſtom of the heathen prieſts, who (at leaſt thoſe of Egypt, as Herodotus teſtifies) ſhaved themſelves every day, or two, all over, as well the body, as the head and beard: if this was alſo a cuſtom among the Babylonians, as is very credible, then the uſage of this metaphor is clear.

In reference to this "ſhaving by a razor that is hired," I think it likely that there is an implication of contempt, as well as ſuffering, included in it, as the office of a Barber ambulant has ſeldom been eſteemed of any dignity, either in the eaſt or in the weſt. That the alluſion is not unknown at preſent in Aſia, appears from a ſong, whoſe verſification, if none of the beſt, yet was popular, "being bawled about the ſtreets of Aleppo, after the retreat of Nadir Shah from Mouſul, in the year 1743.

> Tahmas, where is he! where is he!
> An iron mace between his ſhoulders;
> May a razor ſhave his beard!
> And a ſword cut off his head!
> Tahmas, where is he! where is he!"
>
> RUSSELL'S Aleppo, Note V. Vol. II. p. 393.

As Nadir had failed of his purpoſe, is not contempt likely to be vented by his enemies, in this ballad?

REAP, REAPING, is ſuch a natural employment in agriculture, that it is eaſily formed into a metaphorical action, at once expreſſive, and eaſily underſtood. To cut down corn, to gather fruits, when come to maturity, to receive the natural effects, or conſequences, or rewards, of good or bad actions, have many points of ſimilitude, which are readily comprehended by all.

RECONCILE, vide EXPIATION, Dictionary, and ATONEMENT, Supplement.

RED. For red horſes, i. e. horſes dyed red, vide FRAGMENT, No. , p. . For deep red colour, vide PURPLE.

REGION. I apprehend that in ſundry places of our tranſlation, this word would be a proper ſubſtitute for "all the earth," as the circumſtances alluded to do not juſtify the reference to the whole habitable globe. Pſalm xlv. 16. "Thy children, whom thou mayeſt make princes in all the earth"—i. e. the cities, &c. round about; in the neighbouring region. Luke xxiii. 44. darkneſs over all the earth—not over the whole globe, but the region round about. Jer. li. 49, "As Babylon hath cauſed the ſlain of Iſrael to fall, ſo at Babylon ſhall fall the ſlain of all the earth," of the region round about that capital, gathered into it, to defend it. The ſame in ſome places where the word world is uſed.

REGISTER, means ſometimes a roll containing the genealogy of perſons and their families, Ezra ii. 62. Nehem. vii. 5, 64. Regiſter for the purpoſe of taxation, Luke ii. 15. Vide FRAGMENTS, No. LXIV, page 113.

REVERENCE, a reſpectful, ſubmiſſive diſpoſition of mind, ariſing from affection, and eſteem, from a ſenſe of ſuperiority in the perſon reverenced. Hence children reverence their fathers, even when their fathers correct them by ſtripes, Heb. xii. 9. hence ſubjects reverence their ſovereign, 2 Sam. ix. 6. hence wives reverence their huſbands, Eph. v. 33. and hence all ought to reverence God. We reverence the name of God, the houſe of God, the worſhip of God, &c. we reverence the attributes of God, the commands, diſpenſations, &c. of God, and we ought to demonſtrate our reverence by overt acts, ſuch as are ſuitable and becoming to time, place, and circumſtance; for though a man may reverence God in his heart, yet unleſs he behave reverently, and give proofs of his reverence by demeanour, conduct, and obedience, he will not eaſily perſuade his fellow mortals, that his boſom is the reſidence of this divine, this heavenly diſpoſition: for, in fact, a reverence for God is not one of thoſe lights, which burn under a buſhel, but one of thoſe whoſe ſprightly luſtre illuminates wherever it is admitted.

Perhaps, in ſtrictneſs, reverence is the internal diſpoſition of the mind, Φοβον, Rom. xiii. 7. and honour, τειμη, is the external expreſſion of that diſpoſition.

REWARD, a recompence, requital, retribution, for ſome ſervice done; the fruit and benefit of labour. Is of ſeveral kinds:—as mental; the reward of a good action is enjoyed in reflection, ſatisfaction, a ſenſe of having been uſeful, &c. —or pecuniary; profitable, ſuch as is due to labourers for their work, 1 Tim. v. 18. Job vii. 2. a gift, or acquiſition to counterbalance an injury, Prov. xxi. 14. xxii. 4. Rewards are not always conferred by Providence on good men, in this life, but their reward is in heaven, Matt. v. 12. Luke vi. 23. The eſſence of reward being ſatisfaction, a reward given freely, a reward prompted by grace and favour, is, a donation not claimable by the party who receives it on account of his own merit, but beſtowed in kindneſs by the giver, and therefore, though in ſtrictneſs it is not reward for work done, yet it is no leſs a remuneration, and is at once a gift, and a ſatisfaction.

tion. "Raphelius has ſhewn, ſays Dr. Doddridge, that μισθον not only ſignifies a reward of debt, but alſo a gift of favour; and that the phraſe μισθον δορεαν occurs in Herodotus: ſo that a reward of grace, or favour, is a claſſical as well as theological expreſſion." Note on Rom. iv. 4.

RIGHTEOUS, RIGHTEOUSNESS, is taken in ſeveral ſenſes in Scripture.

1. For abſolute perfection of rectitude and holineſs, in which ſenſe it is applied to God, who always obſerves the very ſtrictneſs of equity, as well from the juſtice of his own nature, as in regard to his creatures, Job xxxvi. 2. John xvii. 25.
2. The truth and faithfulneſs of God, in performing his promiſes, the rectitude by which he is governed in making, and in fulfilling his promiſes.
3. The righteouſneſs of Chriſt, the righteouſneſs acceptable to God, the manner of becoming righteous in the ſight of God, are other acceptations of the word.
4. Righteous is ſpoken comparatively of men. No man is abſolutely righteous; but he who practiſeth uprightneſs, juſtice, equity, integrity in his conduct, behaviour, dealings, &c. compared with his fellow men is righteous. Whoever in his courſe of life "walks in all the ordinances and commandments of the Lord, blameleſs," is ſo far righteous. Hence ſome perſons in Scripture are called righteous, as Noah, Gen. vii. 1—9. i. e. a man of integrity, and holy manners. So Abraham ſuppoſes (Gen. xviii. 23.) there might be fifty righteous in Sodom, men who were not profligates like the Sodomites in general; and this ſenſe is frequent in the Pſalms, &c. Alms are called righteouſneſs, Matth. vi. 1.

Righteouſneſs in the New Teſtament is applied to God; to Jeſus Chriſt the righteous, 1 John ii. 1. and to men: but as men have, at beſt, but a broken, damaged, and imperfect righteouſneſs, this word is applied to men in a very limited and qualified ſenſe; and alſo with reſpect to a better righteouſneſs than merely human; that obtained by faith, that freely beſtowed by God, and as beſtowed, ſo received through Chriſt.

Righteouſneſs denotes the ordinances of God, Matth. iii. 15. xxi. 32.

Righteouſneſs is ſometimes much the ſame as holineſs, Acts x. 35. Eph. v. 9. The righteouſneſs of the Phariſees, which was in their own eyes excellent, was preciſe to ſuperſtition, yet was imperfect and worthleſs before God, Luke xviii. 9. Matth. ix. 13. To acknowledge as righteous, to pronounce righteous, i. e. to acquit. Vide JUSTIFICATION.

SABBATH, changed to Sunday. I think it not amiſs to add, that we are informed by Euſebius, Hiſt. Eccl. lib. iv. cap. 23. that from the beginning the Chriſtians did aſſemble on the firſt day of the week, called by them the Lord's Day, for the purpoſes of religious worſhip, "to read the Scriptures, to preach, and to celebrate the Lord's Supper:" and Juſtin Martyr, Apol. 2. obſerves, "that on the Lord's Day, all Chriſtians in the city, or country, meet together, becauſe that is the day of our Lord's reſurrection, and then we read the writings of the apoſtles and prophets; this being done, the Preſident makes an oration to the aſſembly, to exhort them to imitate, and to practice the things they have heard; then we all join in prayer, and after that we celebrate the Sacrament. Then they who are able, and willing, give what they think proper, and what is thus collected is laid up in the hands of the Preſident, who diſtributes it to orphans and widows, and other neceſſitous Chriſtians, as their wants require." Vide 1 Cor. xvi. 20. A very honorable conduct, and worſhip! would to God it was more prevalent among us; with the ſpirit and piety of primitive Chriſtianity!

SEER, vide PROPHET.

SEED, the prolific principle of future life; taken in Scripture for poſterity, whether of man, beaſt, trees, &c. all of which are ſaid to be ſown, and to fructify, as the means of a ſucceeding generation, Jer. xxxi. 27. Hence ſeed is ſpoken of an individual, as of Seth, in the ſtead of Abel, Gen. iv. 25. et al freq. and of the whole line of deſcent; as, ſeed of Abraham, of Jacob, &c. the ſeed-royal, &c. much in the ſame acceptation as CHILDREN.

SHA

The ſeed of Abraham, denotes not only thoſe who deſcend from him, by natural iſſue, but thoſe who imitate his character, Rom. iv. 16. and hence the Meſſiah is ſaid to ſee his ſeed, though in fact Jeſus left no children by deſcent, but by grace (converſion) only, Iſaiah liii. 10. This is reſtricted alſo to one chief, or principal ſeed, one who by excellence is THE ſeed: as, the ſeed of the woman, Gen. iii. 15. Gal. iii. 16. the ſeed of Abraham, the ſeed of David, meaning the moſt excellent deſcendant of the woman, of Abraham, of David. Or, underſtand by the ſeed of the woman the offspring of the female ſex, only; which was verified in the ſupernatural conception of Jeſus, Matth. i. 18, &c. Luke i. 26, &c. and of which the birth of Abraham's ſeed (Iſaac) was a figure.

Seed is taken figuratively for the word of God, Luke viii. 5. 1 Peter i. 23. for a diſpoſition becoming a divine origin, 1 John iii. 9. for truly pious perſons, Matth. xiii. 38.

SHADOW, the privation of light, by an object interpoſed between a luminary and the ſurface on which the ſhadow appears.

For the retrogradation of the ſhadow on the dial of Ahaz, vide FRAGMENTS, Nos. II. CII. &c.

A ſhadow falling on a plane follows the courſe of the body which cauſes it, and hence it is often extremely ſwift: as that of a bird flying, which very rapidly indeed inſtantly appears, and diſappears from obſervation: human life is compared to this, 1 Chron. xxix. 15.

As the ſhadow of a man, &c. when it falls on the ground, is of different lengths at different times of the day, and as the time of the day was originally eſtimated by this, the firſt ſun-dial, ſo it is very natural that the hireling who wiſhed his day of labour ended, ſhould deſire the ſhadow, Job vii. 2. meaning, the long ſhadow falling on the ground, and iſſuing in the ſhadow of night itſelf. Indeed it ſeems to have been the cuſtom in later ages, to eſtimate the time of the day by the length of the ſhadow: for ſo we have in Ariſtophanes, Concion. "When the letter of the alphabet denoted the ſhadow to be ten feet long, it was time to think of dreſſing and going to ſupper," i. e. the ſun began to grow low, for twelve feet was the full length of the ſhadow. Vide Pſalm cii. 11. Jer. vi. 4.

Shadow is alſo taken for unſubſtantial, ſo Job ſays, my members are a ſhadow, xvii. 7. i. e. they are diminiſhed to a total, or comparative, privation of ſubſtance. Hence the Moſaic œconomy is called a ſhadow, a very obſcure repreſentation of thoſe things which in the goſpel are clearly revealed to us. But it is thought that this word, Heb. x. 1. alludes to the ſketch of an artiſt or painter, who firſt forms on his canvas the mere outlines of his ſubject, a juſt viſible, but rough, ſlight, haſty repreſentation, of what is afterwards to be finiſhed correctly and carefully. To this is very ſtrongly oppoſed the complete image, the beautiful ſtatue exhibited in the goſpel; yet this ſtatue, be it remembered, is not living, not animated; the full perfection of life, motion, ſenſibility, and happineſs, is reſerved for the world of bliſs and glory; the celeſtial ſtate.

Shadow is taken for the obſcurity of night, for the total abſence of light in a night obſcured by clouds, &c. pitch-darkneſs: and hence "the ſhadow of death;" intenſe darkneſs: to which add the horror which naturally attends the tomb, and the unexplored regions of death: the valley of the ſhadow of death; glooms and diſmal terrors, fatal terrors, without intermiſſion.

Shadow is alſo taken in a ſenſe directly contrary to the foregoing, becauſe in countries near the tropics every ſpot expoſed to the burning heat of the ſun is dangerous to health, therefore nothing is more acceptable than ſhade, nothing is more refreſhing, or more ſalutary: hence the ſhadow of a great rock is deſirable in a land of wearineſs, Iſaiah xxxii. 10. hence ſhadow ſignifies protection, Iſaiah xxx. 2. Vide Dan. iv. 12. Hoſea iv. 13. hence the ſhadow of wings in a bird is protection alſo, and hence the ſhadow, i. e. protection of God, Pſalm xvii. 8. lxiii. 7. xci. 1. Iſaiah xlix. 2.

SHAME, a baſhfulneſs ariſing from a ſenſe of guilt; an affliction of mind, occaſioned by a ſenſe of impropriety: whether of conduct or appearance. This is the natural conſequence of proper reflection on paſt miſconduct; on turpitude of any kind. Shame in this ſenſe is an expreſſion of uneaſineſs.

Shame is alſo an expreſſion of contempt from others, a charge of miſconduct, of impropriety, from ſome who endeavour to bring to ſhame, to render aſhamed the ſubject of their charge; whether ſuch charge be true or falſe.

Shame denotes an idol; a thing which will make aſhamed thoſe who truſt in it; and of which they ought to be aſhamed even while they worſhip it.

Shame expreſſes the private parts of the perſon, thoſe which it is an impropriety to expoſe: the ſame in effect as nakedneſs.

He who reproveth a ſcorner, getteth to himſelf ſhame, Prov. ix. 7. or calumny; a retort neither courteous nor civil, but abuſe and diſgrace.

Shame ſhall be the promotion of fools, Prov. iii. 35. the very oppoſite, the contraſt to that glory which is beſtowed on the wiſe.

SHEAR-JASHUB, the remnant ſhall return, an allegorical name given by the prophet Iſaiah to one of his ſons: q. had he another name of a more common nature?

SHEPHERD, a keeper of ſheep. Vide PASTOR, Supplement. This moſt ancient occupation furniſhes many alluſions in ancient writers, as well ſacred as profane.

SHIP, SHIPMEN, meant by the word ſhip, ſhip's officers, &c. Vide FRAGMENTS, No. CXVII, p. 83. Vide NAVIGATION, Supplement.

SIMPLE, is capable of a good, a bad, or an indifferent meaning. Simplicity of mind is integrity, innocence of intention, &c. Rom. xvi. 19. honeſty, candour, xii. 8. Weak ſimplicity, on the contrary is credulous, eaſily impoſed on, eaſily deluded, Prov. xix. 15. xxii. 3. The ſimple believe every word—report—rumour: the ſimple paſs on and are puniſhed.

Wiſdom invites the ſimple, the uninformed, the unſtudied, to learn of her, to partake of her refreſhments, and to be revived by her delicacies, Prov. ix. 4. vide alſo Pſalm xix. 7. cxvi. 6. Ezek. xlv. 20. 2 Cor. i. 12. xi. 3.

SIN, SINNER. There is a paſſage, Eccl. ix. 13, &c. which I think is capable of a much clearer ſenſe than it receives in our tranſlation.

> There was a little city, and few men within it;
> And there came a great king againſt it, and beſieged it,
> And built great bulwarks againſt it:
> Now there was found in it a poor wiſe man;
> And he by his wiſdom delivered the city;
> Yet no man remembered that ſame poor man.
> Then ſaid I, Wiſdom is better than ſtrength:
> Nevertheleſs the poor man's wiſdom is deſpiſed,
> And his words are not heard.——But,
> The words of the wiſe are heard in quiet
> More than the cry (bawlings) of him who ruleth among fools:
> Wiſdom is better than weapons of war;
> But one ſinner deſtroyeth much good.

I rather think we ſhould underſtand it thus;

> Excellent is Wiſdom above vaſes of approach;---of cloſe inſpection;
> But one defect, (flaw, in ſuch a vaſe), ruins the whole extent of excellence: much good.

The

The compariſon is, that of a beautiful vaſe, which ſeen cloſe, and carefully inſpected, is handſome in its proportions, ornaments, &c. but, when the flawed ſide is turned to the eye, you cry immediately, "it is imperfect"—and diſmiſs it with diſdain: ſo the wiſdom of this poor man was admired on all ſides, till his poverty was expoſed; and then, his former merits were all ſuperſeded in an inſtant. Nobody recollected this ſame poor man.

To juſtify this verſion, obſerve cali (כלי) is a general word for a receptacle, a comprehender, a vaſe, whether it contain any eſſence, &c. or not; and kereb (קרב) ſignifies to come cloſe to, to cauſe to draw near, i. e. for the purpoſe (among others) of cloſe inſpection. Inſtead of one ſinner, ſome verſions read one ſin, and this is more correct, omitting the points, i. e. one imperfection, one defect, one failing (as poverty is a defect, not a crime in a perſon) ruins "the much good" the whole remaining extent of the moſt beautiful ſuperficies.

I believe matter of fact will juſtify this ſimile; and in point of expreſſion it ſeems to be admirable. That it was cuſtomary to place ſuch vaſes in palaces, vide the Alhambra. Span. Roy. Soc. Swinburne, &c.

N. B. If the rendering of our verſion be retained, cali, weapons of war, yet we muſt read ſin or failing inſtead of ſinner, in order to juſtify the compariſon intended by the writer.

SINGING, has always been a part of public worſhip. From the earlieſt ages muſic was conſecrated to devotion, and as vocal muſic was undoubtedly prior to inſtrumental, we need not heſitate in regarding the melody of the voice as being an original accompaniment of ſacred ſervice. It was continued under the Moſaic ritual, was regulated by David, was practiſed by the primitive Chriſtians, and is with great propriety retained among us: but whether it be duly cultivated among us, we do not here determine.

SLANDER, an evil report not juſtly founded; or rumoured without fair authority, to the diſadvantage of another. This is a much greater ſin, and more oppoſed to the true charities of Chriſtianity, than many by their unregulated diſcourſes ſeem to be aware of.

SLIME, Gen. xi. 3. a bitumenous production, which is procured from pits in the earth, out of which it iſſues, often in conſiderable quantities. The ſlime procured by the builders of Babel, was from a town now called Hit, or Ait, ſome miles above Babylon on the river Euphrates. The ſlime, i. e. bitumen, which was uſed in building the walls of Babel, is very apparent at this day.

Slime pits, were pits yielding bitumen, probably of the ſame nature as the former, Gen. xiv. 10.

SMOKE the exhalation from matter in a ſtate of combuſtion; but in our tranſlation ſhould ſometimes mean vapour, or ſteam, i. e. a condenſed miſt, rather than ſmoke. So Pſalm xviii. 8. the anger of God is deſcribed as ſeated in his noſe [vide NOSE, NOSTRILS] there went up a ſmoke out of his noſtrils—not a ſmoke ſtrictly, but that kind of exhalation, of vapour, which ariſes from heated breathing—ſuch is the ſimile, for only as a ſimile can it be taken. Judgments are likened to ſmoke, i. e. miſt, clouds, fogs, &c. ſpreading over a country, Iſaiah xiv. 31. and in other places a thick vapour is probably intended rather than ſmoke, Job xli. 40. Iſaiah vi. 4. Rev. xv. 8.

SON, vide CHILDREN, FATHER, DAUGHTER, (Suppl.) This word is uſed in ſeveral ſenſes both in the Old and in the New Teſtament.

1. A ſon the immediate offſpring of his parents.
2. A grandſon: ſo Laban is called the ſon of Nahor, Gen. xxix. 5. whereas Laban was his grandſon, being the ſon of Bethuel, Gen. xxiv. 29. and Mephiboſheth is called the ſon of Saul, though he was the ſon of Jonathan, ſon of Saul, 2 Sam. xix. 24.
3. Remote deſcendants, ſo we have the ſons of Iſrael, &c. many ages after the primitive anceſtor.
4. Son in law. There is a ſon born to Naomi, Ruth iv. 17.
5. Son by adoption, as Ephraim and Manaſſeh, to to Jacob, Gen. xlviii. Vide ADOPTION, FRAGMENTS, No. CCCXXIX, &c.
6. Son by nation, ſons of the Eaſt, i. e. natives of that country, 1 Kings iv. 30. Job i. 3, &c.
7. Son by reference to the human ſpecies: as ſons of Adam, ſons of men, &c. Youths, young men, Prov. vii. 7.
8. Son by education, i. e. a diſciple; Eli calls Samuel his ſon, 1 Sam. iii. 6. Solomon calls his diſciple his ſon, in the Proverbs often; and we read of the ſons of the prophets, 1 Kings xx. 35. et al. i. e. thoſe under a courſe of inſtruction for miniſterial ſervice, &c. in pretty near which ſenſe a convert is called ſon, 1 Tim. i. 2. Titus i. 4. Philem. 10. 1 Cor. iv. 15. 1 Peter, v. 13.
9. Son by diſpoſition and conduct, as ſons of Belial, Judges xix. 22. 1 Sam. ii. 12. unreſtrainable perſons: Sons of the mighty, Pſalm xxix. 1. heroes; Sons of the band, 2 Chron. xxv. 13. ſoldiers, rank and file. Sons of the ſorcereſs, who practice ſorcery, Iſaiah lvii. 3.
10. In reference to age; ſon of one year, Exod. xii. 5. i. e. one year old; ſon of ſixty years; &c. the ſame in reference to a beaſt, Micah vi. 6.

11. The

11. The male offspring of a beaſt, Lev. i. 5, 14, &c.

12. Sons of oil, Zech. iii. 14. the branches of the olive tree, filled with fruit, &c. Son of oil, Iſaiah v. 1. a hill producing abundance of olive-trees, oil, &c.

13. A production, or offspring, as it were, from any parent: ſons of the burning coal, i. e. ſparks, which iſſue from burning wood, Job v. 7. Son of the bow, i. e. an arrow, Job iv. 19. an arrow iſſues from a bow; but an arrow may alſo iſſue from a quiver, therefore ſon of the quiver, Lam. iii. 13. Son of the floor, threſhed corn, Iſaiah xxi. 10.

14. Son of beating, i. e. deſerving beating, Deut. xxv. 3. Son of death, i. e. deſerving death, 2 Sam. xii. 3. Son of perdition, i. e. deſerving perdition, John xvii. 12.

15. SON OF GOD, by excellence above all, Jeſus the ſon of God, Mark i. 1. Luke i. 15. John i. 34. Rom. i. 4. Heb. iv. 14. Rev. ii. 18. Son of God, by immediate creation, Adam, Luke iii. 18.

16. Sons of God, the angels, Job i. 6. xxxviii. 7. perhaps ſo called in reſpect to their poſſeſſion of power delegated from God; his deputies, his vicegerents, and in that ſenſe, among others, his offſpring. Vide Dan. iii. 25.

17. Sons of God, genuine Chriſtians, truly pious perſons: perhaps alſo ſo called in reference to their poſſeſſion of principles communicated from God, by the Holy Spirit, which, correcting every evil bias, and ſubduing every perverſe propenſity, gradually aſſimilates the party to the temper, diſpoſition, conduct, &c. called the image, likeneſs, or reſemblance of God. Believers are ſons of God, John i. 12. the harmleſs are ſons of God, Phil. ii. 15. vide Rom. viii. 14. 1 John iii. 1.

18. Sons of God. I apprehend that the paſſage, Gen. vi. 2. which ſays, "the ſons of God ſaw the daughters of men," in fact refers only to the grandees, the ſuperior ranks of life, according to the ideas of eaſtern dignity, not to ſay, tyranny—ſo that the ſenſe is, that polygamy, or the inſtitutions of ſeraglios, &c. introduced, extended and conſummated the evils of life, thoſe violences which one claſs of men ſuffered from another: the ſons of God, the magiſtrates (vide ELOHIM, GOD,) the ſovereigns who ſhould have done juſtice, were themſelves patrons of injuſtice, and were purloiners inſtead of protectors.

19. Son of Man. Ezekiel is thus called in many places of his prophecy, and Daniel uſes the ſame phraſe, chap. vii. 13. N. B. Theſe two prophets wrote in Chaldea, and it is probable that this is a Chaldæan expreſſion, and that our Lord adopted it, in coincidence with their prophecies, eſpecially thoſe of Daniel: but it might be alſo a Syriaciſm, in which language our Lord diſcourſed. Some think it is equivalent to ſon of Eve, i. e. the great offſpring of the human race, or conſtitution, the progeny of humanity.

20. Sons of this world, Luke xvi. 8. thoſe who by their overweening attention to the things of this world, demonſtrate their principles to be derived from the world: i. e. worldly-minded perſons. Sons of diſobedience, Eph. ii. 2. v. 6. perſons whoſe conduct proves that they are ſons of Belial, of unreſtrainableneſs—ſons of libertiniſm.

SNOW is frozen vapour, whoſe particles uniting in their deſcent from the higher regions of the air, are formed into flakes by the time they reach the earth. Being extremely white, ſnow forms an object of compariſon in Scripture frequently.

The expreſſion, Prov. xxv. 15. "as the cold of ſnow in the time of harveſt, ſo is a faithful meſſenger to them who ſend him; for he refreſheth the ſoul of his maſters"—ſeems to refer to the cooling effect of ſnow upon the wines drank in the Eaſt; or to what in Italy is termed al-freſco, i. e. ſnow put into water to cool it, previous to its being drank, which is eſteemed extremely refreſhing. This takes away the contradiction of this paſſage with chap. xxvi. 1. As ſnow, i. e. a fall of ſnow, in ſummer, is unnatural, and ill-timed, ſo honour is not ſeemly for a fool: but is quite out of character, out of ſeaſon.

ON THE WEIGHT OF THE TALENT.

THE following thought of Mr. BRUCE ſeems to me to be worth inquiring into; i. e. that the talents appropriated to different commodities might be of different weights; and if a talent could be diſcovered, which, at the mine, was of leſs weight than the talent of Judea, perhaps we might be juſtified in eſtimating the riches in gold of David, or of Solomon, by the weight of that talent.

"David took poſſeſſion of two ports, Eloth and Ezion-gaber, [1 Kings, chap. ix. ver. 26. 2 Chron. chap. viii. ver. 17]. from which he carried on the trade to Ophir and Tarſhiſh, to a very great extent, to the day of his death. We are ſtruck with aſtoniſhment, when we reflect upon the ſum that prince received in ſo ſhort a time from theſe mines of Ophir. For what is ſaid to be given by king David, [1 Chron. chap. xxii. ver. 14, 15, 19. chap. xxix. ver. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. three thouſand Hebrew talents of gold, reduced to our money is, twenty-one millions, ſix hundred thouſand pounds ſterling] and his princes, for the building of the temple of Jeruſalem, exceeds in value eight hundred millions of our money, if the talent there ſpoken of is a Hebrew talent. [The value of a Hebrew talent appears from Exodus, xxxviii. 25, 26. For 603,550 perſons being taxed at half a ſkekel each, they muſt have paid in the whole 301,774; now that ſum is ſaid to amount to 100 talents, 775 ſhekels only; deduct the two latter ſums, and there will remain 300,000, which divided by 100, will leave 3000 ſhekels for each of theſe talents,] and not a weight of the ſame denomination, the value of which was leſs, and peculiarly reſerved for and uſed in the traffic of theſe precious metals gold and ſilver. It was probably an African or Indian weight, proper to the ſame mine, whence was gotten the gold, appropriated to fine commodities only, as is the caſe with our ounce troy different from the avoirdupois.

THANKSGIVING, the act of acknowledging the mercies of God. Vide PRAISE. Sup. There were various manners under the Old Teſtament of offering thankſgiving: ſometimes it was public, ſometimes in the family, or perſonal connections. It was ſometimes accompanied by ſacrifice, 2 Chron. xxix. 31. and peace offerings, or offerings of pure devotion, ariſing from the ſentiments of gratitude in the offerer's own mind, Lev. vii. 12, 15. Pſalm cvii. 23. cxvi. 7. It is uſually connected with praiſe, joy, gladneſs, and the voice of melody, Iſaiah li. 3. or, as Nehem. xi. 17. with ſinging, and with honour, Rev. vii. 12. but this does not hinder it being ſometimes united with ſupplication, Phil. iv. 6. and with prayer, 1 Tim. ii. 3. Nehem. xi. 17. For thankſgiving, we have the example of good men in all ages, and of Chriſt our Lord: and whoever poſſeſſes any good without giving thanks for it, deprives him who beſtows that good of his glory, ſets a bad example before others, and is guilty of what will ſeverely pain himſelf, when he comes in his turn to experience ingratitude. Let him only withhold thankſgiving, who has no enjoyments for which to give thanks.

THIEF. I wiſh to correct an inadvertence which I had inſerted under this article in the Dictionary. I believe the error lies in miſ-tranſlating the word rendered deſpiſe, "men do not deſpiſe a thief," but we ſhould rather render overlook—or paſs over the action of a thief, and then the ſentiment will ſtand thus: "Men do not overlook the purloining of a thief, but bring him to puniſhment for his action, though he ſteal when urged by hunger, and to ſatisfy his craving appetite... But whoſo committeth adultery with a woman, has no ſuch extremity to plead, he is guilty, not to ſave his life, but on the contrary, he deſtroyeth his own perſon, by exciting the jealouſy of the injured huſband, who will not ſpare, nor be pacified," &c. This antitheſis makes the ſenſe of the paſſage clear and vigorous.

THIRST, is a painful natural ſenſation, occaſioned by the abſence of moiſtening liquors in the ſtomach: the ſeat of this pain is uſually in the throat.

Thirſt being a vehement deſire, is ſometimes uſed in Scripture in a moral ſenſe, for a mental deſire; as Jer. ii. 25. "Withhold thy throat from thirſt; but thou ſaidſt, I have loved ſtrangers, and after them I will go." In other words, I deſire the commiſſion of ſin—I thirſt for criminal indulgencies. And Matth. v. 6. "Bleſſed are they who hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſs"—Pſalm xlii. 2. "My ſoul thirſteth for God:" and we ſee the ſame figure employed in the diſcourſe of our Lord with the woman of Samaria; "whoſoever drinketh of the water which I ſhall give him ſhall never thirſt," &c. which the woman miſtook of natural water from ſome peculiar ſpring.

THOUGHT, to take thought: when our tranſlation was made this word included in it the ſenſe of anxiety, carefulneſs, apprehenſion; ſo that when we are directed to "take no thought for the morrow," the meaning was—no anxiety, no ſolicitude; the ſame when we are told to take no thought for our life, or living, Matth. vi. 8. for raiment, Luke xii. 26. Which of you by taking thought, by anxiety, by ſolicitude, can add one cubit to his ſtature, or his age? verſe 25.

Thoughts, generally imply reaſonings, meditations, reflections, the operations of conſcience, and the plans to which the mind alone is privy, or to which it gives entertainment, &c.

THUMMIM, vide URIM.

THUNDER, is a repercuſſion of the air ſet in motion among the clouds, by means of the lightning or electric flaſhes. As this is the loudeſt natural noiſe mankind are acquainted with, it was, like many other ſurpriſing things, expreſſed by an addition of the name of God: ſo we have "fair to God," extremely beautiful; "great cities of God," extremely great cities; "trees of God," extremely tall trees: and hence thunder is called "the voice of God;" i. e. the prodigious ſound, noiſe, or report: "voices of God," Heb. Exod. ix. 28. mighty thunderings. Pſalm xxix. 3, 4. the voice of the Lord breaketh the cedars; divideth the flames of fire; &c. the Pſalmiſt tells us, verſe 3. he means thunder.

THUNDER-BOLT, is certainly a great rarity; what uſually does the miſchief which is attributed to a thunderbolt, is the lightning which accompanies thunder; nevertheleſs, as this notion of a bolt has been common, our tranſlators have not refuſed to uſe this word. And the Pſalmiſt ſeems to adopt the popular phraſeology, Pſalm lxxviii. 48. The thunder-bolt was wielded by Jupiter among the ancients; and the idea that he ſtruck with it thoſe who deſerved puniſhment, &c. was prevalent. Some nations adored the thunder-bolt; it appears on medals, &c. as a mark of ſovereignty and ſupremacy.

TIN. "The ancient kingdom of Dunmonium, which ſignifies hills of tin mines, and takes its name from thence, may with great propriety claim a diſtinction in the annals of metallurgy; but more eminently ought that part of it called Cornwall to be diſtinguiſhed, as having, perhaps, yielded more tin in one year, than Devonſhire has done in half a century. I may yet proceed, and infer, how ſuper-eminently this little province of Great-Britain deſerves to be ranked amongſt the firſt principles of this iſland, as a nation and people, whoſe very name, according to the ancient authority of Bochart, and the later opinion of Boerhaave, is derived from Bratanack, which, in the Phœnician language, ſignifies the Land of Tin.

"Tyre and Sidon were ſituate in Phœnicia, a part of the ancient Paleſtine; and were the firſt maritime powers that we read of, either in ſacred or profane hiſtory. Tyre (the grand ſea-port and mart of Phœnicia) was taken and intirely demoliſhed by Nebuchadnezzar, in the thirty-ſecond year of his reign, and in the year 573 before Chriſt; ſo that the lateſt date of their trading here, cannot be leſs than four and twenty centuries ſince. I believe it is agreed by all writers, that they were the firſt who uſed to frequent this iſland for commerce; that they traded upon the weſtern coaſts of Cornwall, full ſix hundred years before the coming of our Saviour; and that their navigation to it was for the ſake of our tin. They conſidered this traffic as a point of ſuch conſequence, that they erected forts and caſtles on our coaſts for the protection and preſervation of their commerce; and a great number of the proper names of men and places in Cornwall, are plainly derived from the Syriac tongue."

"Tin, in its mineral ſtate, being totally unknown to all other countries but our own, affords ample reaſon to aſſert, that we ſupplied all the markets of Europe and Aſia with that commodity in early ages. Accordingly, we read of tin in Judah, ſo long back as the reigns of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah; (Iſa. i. 25.) and alſo in the writings of Homer, who flouriſhed 907 years before Chriſt:

"In hiſſing flames, huge ſilver bars are roll'd,
And ſtubborn braſs, and tin, and ſolid gold.
A darker metal mixt intrench'd the place,
And pales of glittering tin th' encloſure grace."

POPE's HOM. ILIAD, lib. xviii.

"The mine of Huel-Cock in the pariſh of St. Juſt, is wrought eighty fathoms in length, under the ſea, beyond low water mark; and the ſea, in ſome places, is but three fathoms over the back of the workings; inſomuch, that the tinners underneath hear the break, flux, ebb, and reflux of every wave, which, upon the beach overhead, may be ſaid to have had the run of the Atlantic ocean for many hundred leagues; and, conſequently, are amazingly powerful and boiſterous. They alſo hear the rumbling noiſe of every nodule and fragment of rock, which are continually rolling upon the ſubmarine ſtratum; which, altogether, make a kind of thundering roar, that will ſurpriſe and fearfully engage the attention of the curious ſtranger. Add to this, that ſeveral parts of the Lode, which were richer than others, have been very indiſcreetly hulked and worked within four feet of the ſea; whereby, in violent ſtormy weather, the noiſe overhead has been ſo tremendous, that the workmen have many times deſerted their labour under the greateſt fear, leſt the ſea might break in upon them. This proximity of the ſea over the workmen, without their being incommoded by the ſalt water, is more wonderful than the account which Dr. Stukley gives, of his deſcending into a coal pit at Whitehaven one hundred and fifty fathoms deep, till he came under the very bed of the ocean, where ſhips were ſailing over his head; being at that time, deeper under-ground by the perpendicular, than any part of the ocean between England and Ireland. In his caſe, there is a vaſt thickneſs of ſtrata between the mine and the ſea; but, at Huel-Cock, they have only a cruſt between, at moſt; and though, in one place, they have barely four feet of ſtratum to preſerve them from the raging ſea, yet they have rarely more than a little dribble of ſalt water, which they occaſionally ſtop with oakum or clay, inſerted in the crannies through which it iſſues. In a lead mine in Perran Zabuloe, formerly wrought under the ſea, they were ſometimes ſenſible of a capillary ſtream of ſalt-water, which they likewiſe prevented by the ſame means, whenever they perceived it." PRYCE on Mines. Compare the deſcription of mining, in Job.

TORTOISE, teſtudo. This is a claſs of animals, which is ſtrongly allied to the reptile kinds. Tortoiſes are amphibious; yet there are ſome ſpecies which more particularly affect the ſea, or water, as others do the land. The ſea-tortoiſe is generally called turtle; but thoſe kinds which are eaten under that denomination, were unknown to the ancients. This animal might probably be known to Moſes, as beſide thoſe land tortoiſes which are found in the Eaſt, in Greece, &c. ſome of the larger kinds of ſea turtle have been found and killed at the mouth of the Nile. Nevertheleſs, the Hebrew choled, which our tranſlators render tortoiſe, Lev. xi. 29. is by ſome rendered land crocodile, by others green-frog:—it is an unclean animal: but the choled ſeems to be ſtrangely inſerted between the mouſe and the ferret; it ſhould ſeem rather to mean the weaſel, which accordingly the LXX. ſo render, and the Vulgate muſtela.

TRANCE, ſeems to mean in Scripture language a rapture of mind, an extaſy; in what it might differ from a viſion, is not eaſy to ſay, unleſs that during the time of a viſion, the ſenſes of the perſon who beheld it were awake and active; whereas, during a trance the bodily ſenſes were ſuſpended. St. Paul was in a trance when rapt up into the third heaven, and he could not tell whether he was in the body or out of the body; certainly this implies a temporary abſence of the exerciſe of the bodily ſenſes, at leaſt. The LXX. render by the word ecſtacy, what the Hebrew expreſſes by a deep, or dead ſleep. Adam might be in a trance when Eve was formed from his ſide; Balaam was in a trance when he ſaw the viſions of the Almighty: Daniel and St. John appear to have been in trances, and to have had their mental ideas greatly enlarged, invigorated, and extended, in order to receive thoſe communications which were about to be made to them. Whether immediate communications of ſupernatural information from ſupernatural perſonages and powers, might not always be too powerful (unleſs expreſsly prevented) for the conſtitution of the body, ſo as to produce a trance, aſtoniſhment, ecſtacy, or temporary kind of approach even to death, by the ſuſpenſion of the faculties of the perſon, may deſerve conſideration.

TRENCH, vide FRAGMENTS, No. CCXXI, p. 104, &c.

TRENCHES are a kind of ditches cut into the earth, for the purpoſe of draining and receiving the water from adjacent parts. Somewhat of this kind was the trench cut by Elijah, to contain the water which he ordered to be poured on his ſacrifice, 1 Kings xviii. 32. and which, when filled with water, was intirely exhauſted by the fire of the Lord which conſumed the ſacrifice.

TRENCHES, the, this is a military term, and deſcribes one part of the approaches to a fortified town, in the preſent day: was anciently uſed to ſurround a town, to encloſe the beſieged, and to ſecure the beſiegers againſt attacks from the town. Trenches could not be cut in a rock, and I ſuſpect, that when our Lord tells

Jeruſalem,

Jeruſalem, Luke xix. 43. "Thy enemies ſhall caſt a trench about thee," he foretold what the Jews would barely credit; perhaps what they conſidered as impoſſible: yet the providence of God has ſo ordered it, that we have clear evidence to this fact, in Joſephus, who ſays, that Titus exhorting his ſoldiers, they ſurrounded Jeruſalem with a wall in the ſpace of three days: contrary to the general opinion, which ſuppoſed it was impoſſible. This circumvallation prevented any eſcape from the city, and any ſuccour going into it. Such being the nature of trenches, we are led to ſuppoſe that our tranſlators have not uſed this word correctly, in 1 Sam. xxvi. 5. "Saul was ſleeping within the trench;" for a trench was both too laborious, and too tedious, to be cut around every place where the camp lodged for a night. The margin therefore hints at a ring of carriages, and ſo Buxtorf interprets the word: it ſeems, however, more likely that it means a circular encampment, in the midſt of which ſtood the tent of Saul; or a circular guard which ſurrounded the royal tent, as Mr. Harmer ſuppoſes. I doubt, however, from the deſcription given us of the tent of Nadir Shah, whether it may not mean a circular ſkreen, with paſſages, which ſurrounding the royal tent, kept off, from paſſing into that tent, all perſons but thoſe to whom the guards gave regular admiſſion.

TRESPASS, is an offence committed, a hurt, or a wrong done to a neighbour; it partakes of the nature of an error, or ſlip, rather than of deliberate and groſs ſin; the delinquent who had treſpaſſed, was of courſe bound to make ſatisfaction, but an offering or oblation was allowed him, whereby to reconcile himſelf to the divine Governor, Lev. v. 6. and verſe 15. If a perſon ſin through ignorance or inadvertency. For treſpaſs-money, vide 2 Kings xii. 16.

It deſerves notice, that whoever does not forgive the treſpaſſes of a fellow man againſt himſelf, is not to expect that his Father who is in heaven will forgive his treſpaſſes; if he will not forgive ſmaller offences, but harbours a bitter diſpoſition, wherewith can he propitiate, when God not only withholds forgiveneſs for his leſſer crimes, but alſo charges him with the accumulated guilt of his great tranſgreſſions? May this thought promote in us a forgiving ſpirit, a ſpirit of moderation, and charity toward our neighbours!

TRIBULATION, expreſſes in our verſion pretty much the ſame as trouble, or trial; importing afflictive diſpenſations either by way of puniſhment, or by way of experiment. For tribulation by way of puniſhment, ſee Judges x. 14. Matth. xxiv. 21, 29. Rom. ii. 9. 2 Theſſ. i. 6. for tribulation by way of trial, ſee John xvi. 33. Rom. v. 2. 2 Theſſ. i. 4.

TROGYLLIUM, a promontory of Mycale, near Samos, Acts xx. 15.

TROOP, vide GAD.

TRUTH, veritas, is that accurate correſpondence of a ſubject, with what is related of it, or expected from it, which fully juſtifies the relation; or a preciſe conformity of a deſcription, an aſſertion, a propoſition, &c. to its ſubject. In Scripture language, eminently, God is truth; i. e. in him is no fallacy, deception, perverſeneſs, &c. of any kind. Jeſus Chriſt is the truth, the true way to God, the true repreſentative, image, character of the Father; the Holy Ghoſt is the ſpirit of truth, who communicates truth, who maintains the truth in believers, and believers in the truth; and who hates falſehood and lyes, even to the death of the tranſgreſſor, Pſalm xxxi. 5. John xiv. 6, 17. Acts v. 3, &c.

Good men maintain truth, they ſpeak the truth, they practice truth; i. e. they are careful that their words, actions, and ſentiments correſpond with what is correct, accurate, and upright.

Truth as a ſubſtance is oppoſed to typical repreſentations as ſhadows; the law was given by Moſes, but grace and truth came by Jeſus Chriſt.

Every man ſhould ſpeak truth to his neighbour; i. e. honeſtly, ſincerely, with integrity. Truth on the part of God is often united with kindneſs, mercy, goodneſs, &c. becauſe fidelity to promiſes being one great branch of truth, and goodneſs, mercy, &c. being implied in the divine promiſes, when God beſtowed any ſpecial good, he did but ſhew himſelf faithful, true, fulfilling the deſires, or acting for the advantage, of thoſe whoſe confided in him, and his word. But ſometimes the ſeverity of God is his truth, Pſalm xl. 10. Rom. iii. 21. Truth is judicial, in reference to a verdict given, Prov. xx. 28. judicious, Rom. i. 25. conſtant, Rom. iii. 7. upright, 1 Cor. v. 8. The love of the truth is among the nobleſt characters of the Chriſtian, and as genuine piety, wherever it prevails, will baniſh falſehood, ſo we find a real love of truth, the compariſon of a man's conduct with the regulations of truth, and a conformity to thoſe regulations, are always among the moſt deſirable, the moſt favourable, and the moſt deciſive proofs of genuine religion; which being itſelf a ſyſtem of truth, delights in nothing more than in truth, whether of heart, diſcourſe or conduct.

WALK, WALKING. This word in the Hebrew, ſignifies not merely to proceed or advance, but to proceed with increaſed velocity: it ſignifies to ſwell out louder a muſical note or voice—a creſcendo: and ſo in going to augment rapidity of progreſs. Under this idea examine Iſaiah xl. 31. the youths ſhall faint, &c. but they who wait on the Lord ſhall renew ſtrength; ſhall mount up with wings as eagles; they ſhall run and not be weary, they ſhall walk—ſhall increaſe their ſwiftneſs—augment their velocity—and not faint. The paſſage requires ſome ſuch idea, ſince walking after running is an anti-climax, and we may therefore believe was not the prophet's meaning.

To walk, ſignifies the conduct of life, the general courſe of a party, his deportment, demeanour, &c. To worſhip God truly, is to walk before the Lord; Enoch walked with God, increaſed in piety toward him; ſo did Noah: God promiſes to walk with his people, and his people deſire his influence, that they may walk in his ſtatutes.

The phraſe is uſed of the tongue, which walketh through the earth: i. e. whoſe cavillings, cenſures, &c. roam without controul, or reſpect of perſons, or things. The peſtilence is ſaid to walk in darkneſs: it advances its ravages by night as well as by day. God is ſaid to walk on the wings of the wind; and the heart of man to walk after deteſtable things. Bleſſed is he who walketh not in the counſel of the ungodly.

To walk in darkneſs, 1 John i. 6, 7. is to be miſled by error: to walk in the light, is to be well informed; to walk by faith, is to expect the things promiſed or threatened, and to behave accordingly; to walk after the fleſh, is to gratify fleſhly appetites; to walk after the ſpirit, is to purſue ſpiritual objects, to cultivate ſpiritual affections, to be ſpiritually minded, which is life and peace.

WAGES, reward for ſervice performed, anciently taken in kind. Vide FRAGMENTS, Nos. LXXXV. and C. 303. The wages of the hireling was to be paid punctually in the evening; it ſhall not abide with thee all night, Lev. xix. 13. Vide Mal. iii 5. The wages, the reward, the deſerved retribution of ſin is death, Rom. vi. 23.

WAGGONS, the form and conſtruction of the ancient waggons of Egypt, Gen. xiv. 19, 27. and wherein they differed from chariots may occupy us elſewhere.

WATCH. This word is taken, 1. for a period of time; 2. for the duty of watchfulneſs; as Watchman is taken for 1. a military centinel; 2. for a perſon who proclaims the paſſage of time; 3. for a guard of a city. Vide FRAGMENTS, Nos. CCLXIII, CCLXIV, page 167.

WAVE-OFFERING, was diſtinguiſhed from the heave-offering, in that it was waved to right and left by the party, before the Lord, at the time it was offered; whereas the heave-offering was lifted up, and then let down again. Why this particular action was appointed, may rather be conjectured than determined. We read of the wave-breaſt, Numb. vi. 26. the wave-ſhoulder, Lev. vii. 30. viii. 29. ix. 21. x. 15. the wave-ſheaf, Lev. xxiii. 12. The jealouſy-offering alſo was waved, Numb. v. 25. a whole lamb was waved, Lev. xiv. 21.

WEST, in Judea, was toward the great ſea, or Mediterranean; or to a perſon looking eaſt it was behind him.

WHEAT, is a kind of corn well known. It has been juſtly obſerved by the ancients as well as moderns, that as this is the principal and moſt valuable kind of grain for the ſervice of man, ſo it will grow in almoſt any part of the world: it grows well not only in temperate climates, but in the hot and the cold climates alſo; and in places where it is not native, but is introduced and cultivated by freſh ſettlers, it ſucceeds as well as where it has been common: Wheat ſown in America, north or ſouth, produces as large crops as when ſown in Europe. I do not preſume to ſay to what extent this property of wheat might enter into our Lord's compariſon of himſelf to this grain; but the "much fruit" of the ſimile ſhould not be reſtrained to that age, or to that country, wherein our Lord was native.

It is underſtood, alſo, that there is a peculiar propriety in the idea of a grain of wheat dying, i. e. being wholly exhauſted, when in the ground, in Jeruſalem, Luke xix. 43. order to its fertility. In whatever manner other grains fructify, a grain of wheat, it is ſaid, is diſſolved into a kind of pulp, without which diſſolution "it brings forth no fruit."

WIFE, vide WOMAN, HUSBAND. Suppl. WIDOW.

WILDERNESS, vide DESART.

WITCHCRAFT, inchantments, conjurors. There were, (and are ſtill) in the Eaſt, many kinds of practices, whereby an inſight into futurity was attempted by thoſe who profeſſed them. Moſes prohibits them, and Saul ſlew thoſe who ſtudied them. In the goſpel hiſtory we find thoſe who uſed curious arts. There is no doubt but that the diſtinctions of theſe arts are expreſſed in Scripture, and probably they are allied to what Niebuhr tells us are now current in Arabia.

WOE, is uſed in our tranſlation where a ſomewhat ſofter expreſſion would be at leaſt equally proper. "Woe to ſuch an one!" is a kind of threat, or imprecation, which imports a wiſhing of ſome calamity, whether natural or judicial, to befall a perſon: but this is not always the meaning which ſhould be affixed to the word. We have the expreſſion, "woe is me," i. e. alas, for my ſufferings! and "Woe to the women with child, and thoſe who give ſuck," &c. i. e. alas for their ſufferings, in times of diſtreſs! It is alſo more agreeable to the gentle character of the compaſſionate Jeſus, to conſider him as lamenting the ſufferings of any, whether perſon, or city, &c. than as denouncing them; ſince his character of Judge formed no part of his miſſion. If, then, we ſhould read, "Alas, for thee Chorazin! Alas, for thee Bethſaida!" we ſhould do no injuſtice to the general ſentiments of the place, or to the perſon ſpeaking. This, however, is not the ſenſe in which woe is to be always taken; as when we read of woe to thoſe who build houſes by unrighteouſneſs, and cities by blood; of thoſe who are rebellious againſt God, &c. &c. in numerous paſſages, eſpecially of the Old Teſtament. The import of this word, then, is in ſome degree qualified by the application of it: where it applies to enormity, it may be taken as a threatening, a malediction; but in the words of our Lord, and where the ſubject is not extremely bad, a kind of lamentatory application of it ſeems to be juſtified by its connection.

WONDER, is an occurrence or thing, which ſo ſtrongly engages our notice, and attention, by its ſurprizing greatneſs, rarity, or other properties, that our minds are ſtruck by it into aſtoniſhment. Wonder is alſo pretty much ſynonimous with ſign, "if a prophet give thee a ſign, or a wonder, ſays Moſes, Deut. xiii. 1. and if the ſign or wonder come to paſs, &c. Iſaiah ſays, he and his children are for ſigns and wonders, chap. viii. 18. i. e. they were for ſigns—indications of—alluſions to—prefigurations of—things future, that ſhould certainly take place; and they were to excite notice, attention, and conſideration in beholders; to cauſe wonder in them.

WONDER alſo ſignifies the act of wondering, as reſulting from the obſervation of ſome thing extraordinary, or beyond what we are accuſtomed to behold.

WORMWOOD, abſinthium. This plant grows wild about dunghills, and on dry waſte grounds. It flowers in ſummer; the leaves have a ſtrong offenſive ſmell, and a very bitter nauſeous taſte; the flowers are equally bitter, but leſs nauſeous. The bitterneſs of this plant is mentioned in ſeveral compariſons in Scripture.

WORSHIP OF GOD (cultus Dei), amounts to the ſame with what we otherwiſe call religion. This worſhip conſiſts in paying a due reſpect, veneration, and homage to the Deity, under a certain expectation of reward. And this internal reſpect, &c. is to be ſhewn and teſtified by external acts; as prayers, [ſacrifices, formerly] thankſgivings, &c.

Worſhip may be taken as 1. internal; or 2. external: 1. private; or 2. public: 1. perſonal; or 2. ſocial: 1. active or paſſive; for there is a worſhip of God in ſentiment, in ſubmiſſion to his will, in a deſire of obedience, &c. which is not active, but which becomes a habit of mind, and which indeed forms the mind to a devout diſpoſition for active worſhip.

The ſchool-divines divide worſhip into divers kinds, viz. latria, that rendered to God; and idololatria, that rendered to idols or images. To which the Romaniſts add, dulia, that rendered to ſaints; and hyperdulia, that to the Virgin. Some theological writers have obſerved, that the Greek word προσκυνεω, to worſhip, is not deſcriptive only of the honour which is appropriated to God, but is indifferently uſed to ſignify the honour and reſpect which are paid to ſuperiors of all kinds in heaven or on earth. Accordingly, they have diſtinguiſhed between civil and religious worſhip. Vide ADORATION.

That it is the duty of man to worſhip his Maker, has been ſufficiently proved under other articles. It is not indeed eaſily to be conceived, how any one who has tolerably juſt notions of the attributes and providence of God, can poſſibly neglect the duty of private worſhip; and if we admit, that public worſhip does not ſeem to be enjoined in that ſyſtem which is called the religion gion of nature, yet it is moſt expreſsly commanded by the religion of Chriſt, and will be regularly performed by every one who reflects on its great utility, or who enjoys its benefits.

As the illiterate vulgar cannot form to themſelves correct notions of the divine providence and attributes, it is obvious, that without the inſtitution of public worſhip, they would never think of worſhipping God at all, unleſs perhaps occaſionally, when under the preſſure of ſome ſevere calamity; but occaſional worſhip, the offspring of compulſion, could have little of the reſigned ſpirit of true devotion. Ignorant, however, as the loweſt of the vulgar are, and neceſſarily muſt be, it cannot be denied, that in moſt Chriſtian countries, perhaps in all, they are more accurately acquainted with the firſt principles of religion, and the laws of morality, than even the leaders of barbarous nations. This ſuperiority is doubtleſs owing in ſome meaſure to their acceſs to the ſacred Scriptures, but much more, we are perſuaded, to the inſtruction which they receive in the aſſemblies which they frequent for public worſhip. If this be admitted, public worſhip may be eaſily proved to be the duty of every individual of the community: for were thoſe, who may be ſuppoſed to ſtand in no need either of the contagion of ſociety to kindle their own devotion, or of the preaching of a clergyman to inſtruct them in the doctrines and precepts of the goſpel, to "forſake, on theſe accounts, the aſſembling themſelves together, as the manner of ſome is," religious aſſemblies and public worſhip would very quickly fall into univerſal diſuſe. Man is prone to imitation; and every order in ſociety is ambitious of treading in the footſteps of the order immediately above it. Were the wiſe and the good, therefore, permitted to abſent themſelves from the aſſemblies inſtituted for the public worſhip of the Creator and Redeemer of the world, others would quickly follow their example; impelled to it not only by this univerſal propenſity, but by the additional motive of wiſhing to appear both to the world and to themſelves as wiſe and as good as their privileged neighbours. The conſequence is obvious: one man would ſtay from church with the ſerious intention perhaps of employing the Lord's day in private devotion and religious ſtudy; another, following his example, would abſent himſelf upon the ſame pretence, but would in reality waſte the day in dozing indolence or in ſecret ſenſuality. For theſe and other reaſons which might be eaſily aſſigned, no ſincere Chriſtian will think himſelf at liberty to diſpute a practice enjoined by the inſpired preachers of his religion, ſanctified by the example and conduct of Chriſt himſelf, coeval with his inſtitutions, and retained by every ſect into which Chriſtianity has been unhappily divided.

Worſhip may be in ſome ſenſe, conſidered as a promulgation of the laws which are to regulate perſonal conduct to the greateſt advantage: now, if it were an Act of Parliament (or other ſtatute law, in other countries) which was in queſtion, could it admit of debate, whether he who though unable himſelf to read the law, yet attends often where the law is read, or he who never attends at ſuch public reading, yet is incapable of reading it himſelf,—I ſay, were it aſked which of theſe perſons is moſt likely to conform his conduct to the regulations required for his individual advantage, and for the general welfare, could it admit of debate? Thoſe who do not attend public worſhip forget that they withhold a teſtimony of their adherence to God, while they deprive themſelves of whatever information, and knowledge, ſatisfaction and comfort, complacency and enjoyment, the exerciſe of divine worſhip is adapted to produce.

MANNER OF RECKONING YEARS.

IN ſome parts of the Eaſt, (particularly in Japan, ſays BARON THUNBERG,) the year ending on a certain day, any portion of the foregoing year is taken for a whole year: ſo that, ſuppoſing a child to be born in the laſt week of our December, it would be reckoned one year old, on the firſt day of January. This ſounds like a ſtrange ſoleciſm to us: a child not a week old, not a month old, is yet a year old! becauſe born in the old year.

If this mode of computation obtained among the Hebrews, the principle may eaſily account for thoſe anachroniſms of ſingle years, or parts of years taken for whole ones, which occur in ſacred writ, and which have been noticed by PRIDEAUX and others. I ſhall now merely hint at a paſſage or two, which are not commonly ſeen in this light.

1 Sam. xiii. 1. "a ſon of one year was Saul in his kingdom; and two years he reigned over Iſrael," i. e. ſay he was crowned in June; he was conſequently one year old as king, on the firſt of January following, though he had only reigned ſix months; the ſon of a year: but, after this ſo following firſt of January he was in the ſecond year of his reign, although according to our computation, the firſt year of his reign wanted ſome months of being completed: in this, his ſecond year, he choſe three thouſand military, &c. guards. This paſſage has been noticed as a difficulty: may I now preſume we perceive the reaſon of this remarkable conſtruction of phraſeology?

On the ſame principle, I would account for the phraſe (απο διετης) uſed to denote the age of the infants ſlaughtered at Bethlehem, Matth. ii. 16. "from two years old, and under." If this be not a contradiction, it comes pretty near one.

This difficulty has been ſtrongly felt by the learned: ſome infants two years old, others two months, others two weeks: equally ſlain! Surely thoſe born ſo long before could not poſſibly be included. This is regulated at once, by the idea that they were all of nearly equal age, being recently born, ſome before the cloſe of the old year, others ſince the beginning of the new year. Now thoſe born before the cloſe of the old year, though only a few months, or weeks would be reckoned not only one year old, but alſo in their ſecond year, as the expreſſion implies; and thoſe born ſince the beginning of the year, would be well deſcribed by the phraſe "and under:" i. e. under one year old;—Some two years old, though not twelve months, (perhaps in fact not ſix months) old; others under one year old, yet born ſome months; and therefore a very trifle younger, than thoſe before deſcribed: "according to the time which he had diligently enquired of the wiſe men"—in their ſecond year, and under.

The influence of this remark on the calculation of the birth of our Lord, as being at a certain time before the death of Herod, is conſiderable: it leſſens too the number of infants ſlain by his order; and draws a ſtrong diſtinction between thoſe appointed to death, and thoſe who eſcaped; and it ſhortens the time elapſed between the appearance of the ſtar to the Magi, and their viſit to Jeruſalem, if I am not miſtaken, full one half, of what ſome have allowed for it.

This principle eaſes all the difficulties which concern the half years of ſeveral princes of Judah and Iſrael: in which the latter half of the deceaſed king's laſt year, has hitherto been ſuppoſed to be added to the former half of his ſucceſſor's firſt year.

The further conſideration of this ſubject, as it is likely to come under our notice again in PRIDEAUX, is for the preſent poſtponed. Nevertheleſs, I cannot but obſerve how this mode of calculation clears the phraſe "three days," &c. where it occurs, reckoning as the firſt day whatever ſmall portion of it was included, even if only a quarter of it, and the ſame as the third day, ſo that a few hours paſs for a whole day in this caſe, as a few months or weeks paſs for a whole year, in the other caſe.

After all the calculations employed to acquaint us, whether the century ended, or begun, with the year 1800, has this very neceſſary principle been employed in its proper place? and under its due importance? I only hint this, not meaning to engage in the controverſy, nor deſirous to render any one of my readers older than juſtice and chronology will fairly approve.
